[L] The Reformed have given Jeremy Ferrier a very odious character.] He relates himſelf that he underwent two violent perſecutions, the one before he was a Roman Catholic, the other after he had renounced the Reformed Religion (39). The firſt was the pelting to which he was expoſed, the plundering of his houſe, &c. The ſecond conſiſted in a ſhower of invectives, which were poured out upon him in the books that were publiſhed againſt him (40). They laid to his charge, that he had been the King's Penſioner, and a traitor to the Churches; that he had ſet the Aſſemblies at variance amongſt themſelves, ſowed diſcords amongſt the Great, and quarrels amongſt the Nobility; that he would continue at Nimes with a deſign to ruin the Churches; that he had received gratifications from their Majeſties for ſecret ſervices; that he had made ſure of ſeveral means to deſtroy and exterminate the Churches: that he had aſſerted abominable propoſitions againſt the Myſtery of Chriſt's Incarnation; and that he had deſerved to be driven out of the Synagogue as a ſon of Belial. You may ſee the ſubſtance of the charge brought againſt Ferrier in the Hiſtory of the Edict of Nantes, volume the ſecond, page 124. Here follows what we find concerning him in page 395 of the firſt volume of the ſame Hiſtory. "He perplexed every thing in the "political aſſemblies in which he was preſent: for "which reaſon the Synod forbad him to meddle any "more with them. He brought himſelf into trouble "in his own Church, and in his own Province, ſo "that he was baniſhed from them; and being tired "with the functions of a Miniſter, he procured to "himſelf the place of Counſellor in the Preſidial of "Nimes,

(39) Preface to his Traité de l'Antechriſt.

(40) Of ſeveral books publiſhed againſt him, he ſays he read but two, the one written by S. Ceſari, the other by the Synod of Lower Languedoc.

could not well avoid it. Cardinal du Perron made a very ſmart reflection concerning the excuſes which he pretended the Proteſtants alledged on account of the riot at Nimes [M].

FERRIER

" Nimes, though he had promiſed at Paris that he " would continue performing the functions of a Mi- " niſter in ſome other place. He was afterwards de- " poſed as a deſerter, and laſtly he abjured his Reli- " gion, and died a few years after (41), as much " hated by the people, as he had been beloved in the be- " ginning of his life. He was covetous, deceitful, am- " bitious, inconſtant, an intermedler, without judg- " ment, and incapable of the intrigues in which he " imprudently engaged himſelf. But he had courage, " a lively genius, a fiery imagination, he ſpoke with " the utmoſt eaſe, had a commanding voice, and ſuch a " vehement way of delivery, that he perſuaded his " hearers againſt their will, and did not leave them at " liberty to contradict him. This is the reaſon why " the multitude which is eaſily dazzled by theſe qua- " lities, were always on his ſide; and he often carried " his point, even in the Synods, againſt Chauve, who " was his competitor. This Chauve had much more " honeſty and judgment; he was a man of the moſt " agreeable gravity, which made him be very much " conſidered in the aſſemblies. But the fire and mettle " of the former prevailed over the moderation and " temper of the latter; and Ferrier's ſprightlineſs dark- " ened Chauve's ſound judgment."

(41) I have obſerved above, againſt Moreri, that he lived thirteen years after his abjuration. The Author, whom I quote, has acknowledged it in his 2d vol. pag. 125. Ferrier lived ſtill a great while, ſays he, after the riot at Nimes.

How much hot-brained perſons are liable to judge raſhly.

I have no reaſon to doubt but this character is very faithfully drawn; but I ſhall obſerve in general, and without making any application, that it is an eaſy matter in ſome circumſtances for one to paſs for a falſe brother, though he be none: he need only conſider things in another light, than thoſe vehement men who have a very extenſive and catching imagination. Theſe men do but little know other people, and do not much better know themſelves. They fancy moſt part of the time that they act only in favour of Religion, when they do it out of paſſion and pride; they reliſh nothing but bold attempts, which they think proper to ſupport the credit and worldly intereſt of their party, this they call being zealous for the cauſe of God. This might be excuſed: but they are ſometimes guilty of a very great injuſtice againſt their Neighbours; they imagine that it is impoſſible to be of a different opinion from theirs, without being a traitor; and yet there are circumſtances in which a man may be firmly perſuaded, that even the worldly intereſt of the party requires, that they ſhould not be ſo inflexible. What will theſe men of a fiery temper do in ſuch a caſe? Why, they endeavour with all their power to render the pacifick men ſuſpicious, and then they who dread to be ſuſpected, will follow the tide, and they who continue to ſtrive againſt it, run the danger of ſuffering all the misfortunes that attend the compelle exire. Thus it happens, that in a pretty numerous aſſembly, two or three violent men will be ſufficient to make a reſolution paſs: they need only make the peaceful men dread that they ſhall be rendered odious to the party, and ſuſpected of a baſe prevarication. What would not a man do to avoid an imputation which will render all his labours and talents uſeleſs?

As this reflection may happen to give offence to ſome perſons, I ſhall ſupport it with the teſtimony of a very zealous Writer. He owns, that there have been ſome very honeſt men, who loved their Religion, and believed the pure Goſpel, who yet did not ſcruple to receive penſions from the Court, becauſe they conſidered them rather as a reward for their zeal in promoting the publick tranquillity, than as a bribe to make them do any thing againſt the intereſt of their Churches. And, to ſpeak ſincerely, continues he, in thoſe places, when a paſſionate and inconſiderate people might eaſily be determined to ſome bold and ſeditious attempt, it was neceſſary for the Paſtors to be prudent and moderate, that by their diſcourſes and by their examples they might inſpire their flocks with the ſame ſentiments. But yet it would have been more honourable to do it from a ſenſe of juſtice, without receiving any favours from the Court, than to accept of thoſe ſuſpicious rewards, which might render their integrity and honeſty doubtful. Du Moulin had often been tempted by perſons, whom the Court ſent to him, and who offered him large penſions, without requiring any thing from him, but that he would perſuade the people to be quiet and obedient. He anſwered conſtantly, that this was a duty, of which he would acquit himſelf all his life-time; but that he would have the honour of doing it of his own accord, and from a principle of conſcience, and not as being bribed to do it: ſo that he never accepted any of the offers that were made him. It would have been ſomething very noble, if all thoſe, that had been expoſed to the like temptation, had repelled it with the ſame greatneſs of ſoul (42). It is impoſſible to ſay any thing more ſenſible or more exact. Du Moulin's conduct ſhould have been that of all his brethren. None of them ought to have received a reward for doing what their duty required of them. But however it be, we ſee here the condemnation of thoſe raſh and bold men, who being carried away by the violence of their temper, were always ready to defame as falſe brethren, as traitors, as prevaricators, all thoſe that preached up patience and ſubmiſſion. The Author owns, that ſeveral honeſt men, who loved their Religion, were Penſioners of the Court of France, without having the leaſt deſign of doing any thing againſt the intereſt of the Churches, and without any other view but that of receiving a reward, which they thought was due to the care they ſhould take to oppoſe the ſchemes of the warlike minds. Much more muſt he confeſs, that they, who preached up patience, without receiving any favour from the Court, might be honeſt men. As for thoſe Miſſionaries, who on account of thoſe penſions would pretend ſo ſay maliciouſly and odiouſly, that the Religious Wars had reduced the French Monarchy to the ſame condition, from which Lewis IXth had delivered it (43), they do not deſerve to be heard. Henry IVth, and Lewis XIIIth did not want to bribe mediators to procure a peace between them and their Proteſtant ſubjects, in order to avoid a Religious War. If they had cauſed the Edicts to be obſerved, the maintaining the public tranquillity would not have coſt them one farthing. I beg Monſieur Jurieu's pardon for not agreeing with him in the confeſſion he makes, that in Lewis XIIIth's time the party of the Huguenots undermined the ſupreme authority: Cardinal de Richlieu, ſays he (44), took from them the cities that had been granted to them for their ſecurity; but it was from a political wiſdom, rather than from any zeal for Religion. He ſaw that this was Imperium in Imperio, a State within the State, and that theſe cities were the ſheltering-places of all the rebels and malecontents.

(42) Hiſtoire de l'edit. de Nantes, pag. 101.

(43) It has been ſaid of him, that he made the Kings of France abſolute; and ſome Miſſionaries aſſert, that Cardinal de Richelieu finding that they were become again dependent, delivered them from that dependency by the taking of La Rochelle.

(44) Politique du Clergé, p. m. 20.

[M] Cardinal du Perron made a very ſmart reflection concerning the excuſes . . on account of the riot at Nimes.]

" The Reformed have wrote a Book to excuſe their " violent proceedings againſt Ferrier, and they make " uſe of paſſages from the Fathers, and amongſt o- " thers, from St. Bernard, in order to ſhew, that they " had a right to proceed as they have done, ſince Fer- " rier was excommunicated, and that a Judge, who is " excommunicated, is ipſo facto ſuſpended. He ſaid " after this in a bantering way, St. Bernard ſpoke of " Excommunication as he ought to have done; but " St. Bernard uſed to ſay Maſs every day. They " know very well how to make an advantage of our " Laws, when they think they have them on their " ſide; otherwiſe, they will not ſo much as hear them " mentioned; which is a downright injuſtice in them. " If they thought themſelves powerful enough, and " that by excommunication they could uſurp the " Kingdom, and depoſe the King, I do not know " what they might not do (45)." This is an inſtance of the injuſtice, which Sects that are tolerated are wont to ſuffer: they are always ſuſpected of bad deſigns; it is always thought, that if it were in their power to change the Government, they would do it, and that they condemn the doctrine of Perſecution, and the extent of Excommunication only as long as they cannot exert thoſe powers themſelves at their pleaſure.

(45) Perroniana, under the word Ferrier, pag. m. 141.

FERRIER (JOHN) a French Jeſuit, and a native of Rouergue, ſucceeded Father Annat in the poſt of Confeſſor to the King of France in the year 1670. He was born in the year 1614, and turned a Jeſuit in the year 1632. He had taught Philoſophy four years, Divinity twelve years, and Ethicks two years. He had been Principal of the College of Toulouſe, and had acquitted himſelf very well of that employment (a). It was not doubted but the Jeſuits looked upon him as a very able man, ſince they deſigned to make him the King's Confeſſor. Several perſons have been of opinion that he was much more proper for buſineſs and intrigues than Father Annat. He died in the Convent of the Jeſuits at Paris October the 29th 1674 (b). He publiſhed ſeveral books [A], and was one of the beſt antagoniſts of Janſenius's followers. His Theſis concerning Probability made a great noiſe. He maintained it at Toulouſe the 8th and the 11th of June 1659. See Thomas Anglus in his Monumetham excantatus, pag. 51, 52. See alſo the Remark [B] of the Article MAIMBOURG.

(a) Southwell, Bibl. Script. Soc. Jeſu, pag. 449.

(b) Idem, ibid.

[A] He publiſhed ſome Books.] A Latin Anſwer to Father Baron's objections againſt the Scientia media. This Book is intitled, Reſponſio ad Objectiones Vincentianas, and was printed at Toulouſe in the year 1668, 8vo. Father Ferrier deſigned to publiſh a Body of Divinity, but only the firſt volume of it has been printed, which treats de Deo uno juxta Sancti Auguſtini & Sancti Thomæ principia; i. e. "Of the Unity of God accord-" ing to St. Auguſtin and St. Thomas's principles." His other works are written in French, and relate for the moſt part to Janſeniſm. He wrote two Letters againſt Monſieur Arnauld, and he gave an account of all that paſſed in the year 1653, concerning the affair of Janſeniſm (1). I muſt not omit, that according to the Bibliographer of the Jeſuits, he wrote a Book concerning the Immortality of the Soul in the year 1660, and another on the Beauty of Jeſus Chriſt in the year 1657; but Father Southwell is in the wrong to aſcribe theſe two works to him; he ought to have aſcribed them to John Ferrier, a Jeſuit of Guienne, with whom Balſac was acquainted (2).

(1) Taken from F. Southwell, Bibl. Scrip. Soc. Jeſu, pag. 449.

(2) See the Journal de Trevoux, Novemb. 1704, pag. 1860, of the edition printed in France.

FERVAUX (JOHN) is the true Author of the Annals of Bavaria, which have been publiſhed under the name of John Adlfreitterus [A]. He was a native of Lorrain. This is all that I can ſay of him at preſent.

[A] He is the true Author of the Annals of Bavaria, which have been publiſhed under the name of John Adlfreitterus.] Here is my voucher. Joh. Adlfreitterus, (vel ſi mavis Joh. Fervaux, Lotharingus, in cujus nomine ob certas cauſas Annales illos prudentiores apparere noluerunt) in præfatione ad lectorem Tomi primi Annalium Boicæ Gentis, minimè ſibi ait &c (1). i. e. "John "Adlfreitterus, (or, if you pleaſe, John Fervaux, of "Lorrain, in whoſe name ſome prudent perſons would "not have theſe Annals to be publiſhed, for certain "reaſons) ſays in the Preface to the firſt volume of the "Annals of Bavaria, that &c."

(1) Chriſtoph. Arnoldus de Vita Marci Velſeri, pag. 46.

FERUS (a) (JOHN) Superior of the Gray-Friars at Mentz, was one of the moſt celebrated Preachers of the ſeventeenth Century. He wrote ſeveral Commentaries on the Bible, by which it appears not only that he was learned, but alſo that he was not of thoſe obſtinate Monks who will not ſwerve a jot from their opinions, nor conſent to reform the leaſt abuſe. There are few Roman Catholic Writers that are more eſteemed by the Proteſtants than he is [A]. It is becauſe he wrote with moderation about the Controverſies which were on foot in Germany, and becauſe in ſome things he favoured the opinions of the Reformers (b) [B]. He was attacked upon that ſubject by a Spaniſh Dominican Friar;

(a) This is a name turned into Latin. This Monk's true name was Wild, a German word which ſignifies the ſame thing as in our language, and in French Sauvage. This is the reaſon why Moreri mentions him, under the word Sauvage.

(b) See Thuanus, lib. 13. pag. 271.

[A] There are few Roman Catholic Writers, that are more eſteemed by the Proteſtants than he is.] Here follow Bucholcer's words (1). Fuit Vir doctiſſimus, ejuſque ſcripta non ſolum apud Catholicos, ſed etiam apud Evangelicos quoſdam in ſummo habentur precio. Quenſtedt a Lutheran Author quotes theſe words without finding fault with them. He quotes ſome other words, which I ſhall tranſcribe for my reader's inſtruction. Johannes Ferus, alias Wild, Franciſcanus, Eccleſiaſtes Moguntinus, vir doctus & eloquentia ſingulari præditus. Scripſit Latino & culto ſermone pias & eruditas lucubrationes (ſcil. Annotationes in Pentateuchum, in Job, Eccleſiaſten, Threnos, Jonam, Matthæum, Johannem, Acta Apoſtolorum, Epiſtolam ad Romanos) in quibus tam veterum, quam recentium Expoſitorum Labores veluti in compendium redegit, teſte Sixto Senenſe Lib. IV. Bibl. S. (2). i. e. "John Ferus, otherwiſe, Wild, a Franciſcan Friar, "and a Preacher at Mentz, was a learned man, endowed with great eloquence. He wrote in Latin, "and in a very elegant ſtyle pious and learned Commentaries (namely, Annotations on the Pentateuch, "on the Books of Job, Eccleſiaſtes, the Lamentati-"ons, Jonah, the Goſpels of St. Matthew and St. "John, the Acts of the Apoſtles, and the Epiſtle to "the Romans) in which he has abridged in a manner, "the works of the Commentators both ancient and "modern, as Sixtus Senenſis aſſerts." Do not imagine, that Quenſtedt has given a compleat Catalogue of Ferus's works. He wrote ſeveral other Books. Conſult the Catalogue of Oxford, and Monſieur Teiſſier, in page 85 of the firſt volume of his Additions to the Elogies taken from Thuanus.

(1) In Indice Chronolog. ad ann. 1554.

(2) Quenſtedt, de Patr. Viror. illuſtr. pag. 244, 245.

[B] In ſome things he favoured the opinions of the Reformers.] They laboured to make man ſenſible of his corruption, and of the neceſſity he is under of having recourſe to God's mercy, without relying in the leaſt on his good works. This ſenſe runs through all their forms of prayer; and this agrees ſo little with the maxims of the Church of Rome, that the Miſſionaries in France have a thouſand and a thouſand times argued upon this topic againſt the Common-Prayers of the Proteſtants. But here follows what Monſieur Drelincourt anſwered them; he ſhewed them amongſt other obſervations (3), That John Ferus had compoſed ſome prayers which abound with thoſe ſentiments, that they condemned. Monſieur Colomiés (4) quotes a paſſage from Ferus (5) which I ſhall tranſcribe from him. "How many things are there, which the Saints have "eſtabliſhed with a good intention, and which we "ſee at preſent altered partly into abuſes, and partly "into ſuperſtition? As for inſtance, the feſtivals, the "ceremonies, the images, the maſs, the monaſteries, "&c. None of theſe things have been eſtabliſhed at "firſt, as they are uſed at preſent: And yet our Gi-"deons are ſilent, they do not remove the abuſes, they "do not remove the ſuperſtitions." He ſays in another place (6), that they, who deſire to have a beautiful Edition of Ferus's Commentary on St. John, muſt enquire after the Edition of Louvain 1569, which ought to be preferred before all the others; for beſides that it is in folio, it has a Dedication from that pious and eloquent Friar to Sebaſtian Archbiſhop of Mentz, which is wanting in the other Editions. In this Dedication Ferus owns ſincerely, that he has made uſe in ſome places of the Commentaries

(3) See the firſt of the nine Dialogues contre les Miſſionaires ſur le Service des Egliſes Reformées, pag. 12, &c.

(4) Colomiés, Rome Proteſtante, pag. 59.

(5) He takes it from the Commentary, in Lib. Judicum, cap. 8.

(6) Biblioth. Choiſie, pag. 78.

Friar [C]; but his cauſe met with aſſertors in the ſame country. They have found no other means to make him paſs for a good Papiſt, than by ſuppoſing, that the Heretics had added ſeveral things to his writings, which were not in the original [D]. This honeſt Friar died September the 8th 1554 (c). He was not far from the opinion of the Anabaptiſts, with regard to the bearing of arms [E]. Salmero has been his plagiary [F].

(c) Thuanus, ibid.

of Brentius and Oecolampadius, who were Proteſtants; but, adds he, Ea tantum tranſtuli, quæ bona Eccleſiaſticæque doctrinæ conſona videbantur, & quæ viri illi non in ſchiſmate, ſed in Catholica Eccleſia didicerant. i. e. "I have borrowed only what appeared good to "me, and agreeable to the doctrine of the Church, "and what theſe men had not learnt in their ſchiſm, "but in the Catholick Church."

[C] He was attacked by a Spaniſh Dominican Friar.] The celebrated Dominicus a Soto publiſhed a Book (7), which he intitled, Annotationes in Commentarios Joannis Feri Moguntinenſis, ſupra Evangelium Joannis; i. e. "Remarks on John Ferus's Commentary upon the "Goſpel of St. John:" He dedicated it to Ferdinando Valdes, Inquiſitor General. He charged Ferus with teaching the Lutheran doctrine in 67 pages of his Commentary on St. John. If Ferus did not anſwer, it was not for the reaſon, which Nicholas Antonio hints (8): it was becauſe he was dead, and not becauſe he owned the charge from the bottom of his heart, or becauſe he would pretend not to be acquainted with what Soto had publiſhed. But he met with a perſon who took up his cauſe in the very country, where he was attacked. Michael Medina, a learned Franciſcan Friar, publiſhed a Book (9) intitled, Apologia Joannis Feri in qua ſeptem & ſexaginta loca Commentariorum in Joannem, quæ antea Dominicus Soto Segovienſis Lutherana traduxerat, ex ſancta Scriptura Sanctorumque doctrina reſtituuntur. i. e. "A Vindication of John Fe-"rus, in which the ſixty ſeven paſſages in his Com-"mentary on St. John, which Dominicus Soto of Se-"govia had formerly cenſured as favouring of Luthe-"raniſm, are proved to agree with the holy Scripture, "and with the doctrine of the Saints." This vindication was condemned by the Congregation of the Index (10), and the Author was obliged to give an account of his Faith (11). Whence we may infer that Ferus's orthodoxy ſeemed very doubtful to the Inquiſitors, not to ſay ſomething worſe.

(7) At Salamanca, in the year 1554.

(8) Fero ipſo ſeu perſuaſo, ſeu diſſimulante. Nic. Ant. Bibliot. Script. Hiſpan. tom. 1. pag. 257.

(9) At Alcalade-Henares, in Latin Complutum, in the year 1558.

(10) Nic. Ant. Biblioth. Hiſpan. tom. 2. pag. 112.

(11) Aliquando quod Joannem Ferum ſuæ ſectæ Franciſcanæ ſodalem ab impetu Dominici Soti apologetico libro defendiſſet, cauſam religionis dixit, in qua tamen ſuam innocentiam probavit. N. Ant. Bibl. Hiſp. tom. 2. pag. 111.

[D] It was ſuppoſed, that the hereticks had added ſeveral things to his writings, which were not in the original.] The ſame Medina, with the aſſiſtance of ſome others, cut off from Ferus's Commentary on St. Matthew, all that he thought proper, and cauſed it to be reprinted at Alcala-de-Henares in the year 1562. He ſuppoſed that the paſſages which they were obliged to ſuppreſs, had crept into the work through the artifice of the Sectaries after the Author's death. Purgavit etiam, ne id ignores, lector, Michael noſter ejuſdem Feri Sermones, ſeu Commentaria in Matthæum, quæ inedita ab eo relicta hæreticorum inter manus tabis quidquam contraxerant: quod & agnovit Sixtus Senenſis lib. VI. Bibliothecæ Sanctæ annotatione LXXII. Operas autem cum Medina Rodericus Vadillus Benedictinus, & Petrus Carolus Prior Ucleſienſis Ordinis Sancti Jacobi reſtituendis his mancipaverunt, Complutique edi correctiora curaverunt anno 1662, in 4*to.* The Catalogue of Oxford mentions, 1. Ferus's Commentary on the Goſpel of St. John, and of the firſt Epiſtle of the ſame Apoſtle; it mentions, I ſay, that Commentary, corrected by Michael Medina, and printed at Alcala-de-Henares (12). 2. It mentions an Engliſh Book (13), the Writers of which complain, that they of the Church of Rome falſified the Authors they publiſhed, and as an inſtance of this, they quote Ferus's Commentary on the 1ſt Epiſtle of S. John.

(12) In the year 1569, and in the year 1578.

(13) Printed at London in the year 1606, and written by W. Craſhaw.

[E] He was not far from the opinion of the Anabaptiſts, with regard to the bearing of Arms.] I have read this in Grotius, in a paſſage where he obſerves, that a great many virtuous men conſidering how many cruelties were committed in the war, were of opinion, that a good Chriſtian ought never to bear arms. Cujus immunitatis conſpectu multi homines minime mali eo venerunt, ut Chriſtiano, cujus diſciplina in omnibus hominibus diligendis præcipue conſiſtit, omnia arma interdicerent: ad quos accedere interdum videntur & Joannes Ferus & Eraſmus noſtras (14), viri pacis & eccleſiaſticæ & civilis amantiſſimi (15).

(14) See alſo the remark [U] in the article ERASMUS.

(15) Grotius in Prolegomenis de Jure Belli & Pacis, num. 29.

[F] Salmero has been his Plagiary.] He has been at leaſt charged with it by John Gerhard, a famous Lutheran Doctor. Salmeron, ſays he (16), ex fontibus Feri areolas ſuas ita irrigavit, ut pagellas integras in Commentarios ſuos ex eo tranſtulerit. i. e. "Salmero "has ſo well known how to adorn his writings by "thoſe of Ferus, that he often tranſcribes whole "pages from him." Thomaſius ſaid nothing of this, at which I wonder; but it did not eſcape the notice of another compiler of Plagiariſm (17).

(16) Confeſs. Cathol. Part 1. General. pag. 23. apud Quenſtedt, de Patr. Vir. illuſtr. pag. 245.

(17) Joh. Albertus Faber, in Decade Decadum, num. 70.

FEUARDENT (FRANCIS) a famous Franciſcan Friar, was born at Coutance in lower Normandy (a) in the year 1541 (b); and he might have inherited a large eſtate, had he not choſen to wear a Monk's habit rather than a ſword (c). He took the habit of a Franciſcan in the Convent of Baieux (d), and got a much greater reputation under this dreſs, than he would have done in that of a Gentleman's. His temper agreed ſo well with his name [A], that never was the ancient maxim, conveniunt rebus nomina ſæpe ſuis, (the names do often very well agree with the things) never, I ſay, was this maxim more true, than with regard to him. He was one of the moſt violent adverſaries and one of the moſt bitter perſecutors the Proteſtants had ever to deal with amongſt Clergymen. And yet it is he that boaſts he had been abuſed by the Heretics [B]. He wrote Commentaries

(a) Feuardent. Epiſt. Dedicat. Theomach.

(b) Konig, pag. 302.

(c) Boterius, Commentarior. de Rebus in Gallia geſtis, lib. 17. pag. 590.

(d) Idem, ibid.

* Feuardent in French ſignifies a briſk fire.

[A] His temper agreed ... with his name *.] Monſr. Daillé makes the following obſervation. Feuardentius ſays he (1), homo nomine ſuo digniſſimus, quem cæci irarum, odiorum, ac furiarum ignes ſic exagitabant, ut raro apud ſe eſſet. i. e. "Feuardent a man who de-"ſerved his name perfectly well: and who was ſo "tranſported with anger, hatred, and fury, that he "was ſeldom in his right ſenſes." I have often wondered, that ſuch families as have an odious or ridiculous name, do not change it (2). Why, for inſtance, ſhould not a man change the burleſque or frightful name of Feuardent. I might mention an hundred ſuch other names.

(1) De Pœn. & Satisfact. pag. 462. apud Konig, Bibl. vet. & nova, pag. 302.

(2) Some of theſe families have changed their names. See Monſ. Menage's Origines Françoiſes, under the word Hauteclair. See the laſt remark of the article REGIUS.

]B] He boaſts he had been abuſed by the Hereticks.] If you will believe him (3) he received once a good box on the ear; he was often abuſed in the ſtreets, accuſed before the Magiſtrates, and proſecuted to death. They robbed him of his horſe, on which he uſed to ride in his old age, when he went to evangelize from place to place. One of his brothers was wounded with a gun. He did not omit what his brethren the Monks ſuffered: but he ought alſo to have related what they made others ſuffer. But this is the perpetual illuſion of paſſionate men. They tire the patience of all the world, and they meet ſometimes with impatient adverſaries, who thraſh them ſoundly; whereupon they are ſo barefaced as to complain, that they are abuſed. Do they not make a Catalogue of the wrongs they ſuffered, and omit the injuries which they made others ſuffer firſt? Moreri has followed this deceitful way of proceeding, with regard to Feuardent. Perkins, Cocus, Rivet, and other Calviniſts, ſays he (4), fall into a paſſion againſt Feuardent in a manner little becoming Chriſtians: but theſe are not the Authors whom ſincere men uſe to conſult. Was this Friar's uſage of the Miniſters very Chriſtian-like? Let his friends anſwer this queſtion for Moreri.

(3) Theomachia Calviniſt. lib. 13. pag. m. 160.

(4) In the article FEUARDENT.

Commentaries on ſome books of the Scripture, and tranſlated ſome works of the Fathers into French. He has given a new edition of Irenæus with notes [C], and has publiſhed ſome books of Controverſy, which the Catholics themſelves own are written with too much paſſion [D]. The Jeſuits have had reaſons to be diſpleaſed with his conduct towards Suares [E]. I forgot to obſerve, that he was one of the moſt ſeditious preachers, who

[C] He has given a new Edition of Irenæus with Notes.] Here follows Monſieur Du Pin's opinion of it (5). "Laſtly Feuardent, a Franciſcan Friar, Doctor of Divinity of the Faculty of Paris, and a learned man for his time, took this work in hand, and publiſhed it at Paris for Nivelle, in the years 1575, 1576, the five books of St. Irenæus, reviſed and corrected in ſeveral places from an ancient Manuſcript, with an addition of five intire chapters, which were in his manuſcript at the end of the fifth book. He has added, at the end of each chapter, the notes, which he thought neceſſary for the better underſtanding of his Author. They are for the moſt part uſeful and learned; but there are ſome which go beyond the bounds which a Commentator ought to ſet to himſelf; ſince his deſign muſt not be to appear learned, or to treat controverted ſubjects, but only to explain his Author, The ſecond edition of Feuardent's Irenæus, printed at Cologne in the year 1596, and again in 1630, and at Paris in 1639, is better than the firſt, becauſe it contains the Greec paſſages of St. Irenæus, which were in St. Epiphanius, and in ſome other ancient Writers." Here is great moderation. Father Labbe, exaſperated by the injuries which a Proteſtant had publiſhed againſt Feuardent's edition, has not kept his temper ſo well. Plura nos quoque, ſays he (6), adverſus Centuriatores Magdeburgenſes, Nicolaum Gallaſium . . . ſed præcipue Rivetum bipedum nequiſſimum, qui priſtinæ Apoſtolorum Patrumque Doctrinæ retinentiſſimos Baronium & Poſſevinum hæreticos appellare, & de Catholicæ fidei fortiſſimo vindice hæc auſus eſt effutire; "Caveant (7) ab illis editionibus, quas impudentiſſimus ille monachus Feuardentius homo projectæ audaciæ & nullius fidei, fædè in multis corrupit, & annotationibus impiis & mendacibus (ſic Chriſtianas & Catholicas vocant deſperatiſſimæ cauſæ infelices Patroni) conſpurcavit." Verum quid facias homini impudentiam ubique profeſſo, nec Deum nec homines reverito, xυνώπη κὺ κυνογλώσσῳ, cui totidem hærent infixæ cordi ſagittæ, quot pro veritate Euchariſtiæ, hujus oblatione a Chriſto Domino inſtituta, libero arbitrio, fide & operibus, principalitate Romanæ Eccleſiæ, ac ſimilibus Catholicæ Religionis aſſertis, ex Irenæi Lucubrationibus depromuntur apertiſſima teſtimonia, quæ allegatis aliorum Patrum locis firmavit & diſcuſſa novatorum caligine illuſtravit Feuardentius, nunquam non a laudatis viris laudandus. i. e. "We have alſo made ſeveral obſervations againſt "the Centuriators of Magdeburg, Nicholas Gelaſius ". . . but eſpecially againſt Rivetus the greateſt rogue "of all the two-legged creatures, who dared to call "Baronius and Poſſevinus, who were moſt zealous for "the ancient doctrine of the Apoſtles and of the Fathers, hereticks; and blabs out the following words "againſt the moſt ſtrenuous aſſertor of the Catholick "Faith: Let them beware of thoſe Editions which that "moſt impudent Monk Feuardent, a man of the moſt conſummate audacious neſs, and of no honeſty, has baſely "corrupted in ſeveral places, and ſpoiled with his impious and fallacious annotations (thus theſe wretched "defenders of a deſperate cauſe ſtyle his Chriſtian and "Catholick Notes). But what will you expect from "a man, who makes every where an open profeſſion "of his impudence, who fears neither God nor men, "a dog's face and a dog's tongue, whoſe heart is pierced through with as many darts, as there are plain teſtimonies gathered out of Irenæus's works, in favour "of the Sacrament, of its oblation eſtabliſhed by the "Lord Jeſus Chriſt, of free-will, of faith and good "works, of the ſuperiority of the Church of Rome, "and ſuch other doctrines of the Catholick Church, "which teſtimonies Feuardent, that man who will always be eſteemed by all praiſe-worthy perſons, has "confirmed by paſſages from the other Fathers, and "explained by anſwering the cavils of the innovators."

(5) Biblioth. des Auteurs Eccleſiaſt. tom. 1. pag. 73, 74. edit. of Amſterdam.

(6) Diſſert. de Script. Eccleſiaſt. tom. 1. pag. 630.

(7) Rivetus ſays this in Critico Sacro, lib. 2. cap. 6. Oper. tom. 3. pag. 1091.

[D] He publiſhed ſome Books of Controverſy, which the Catholicks themſelves own are written with too much paſſion.] Moreri is the witneſs, from whom I ſhall borrow my proofs. There is perhaps, ſays he (8), ſome exaggeration in Father Gautier's aſſertion, who charges the Calviniſts with an hundred hereſies; they may perhaps be reduced to a ſmaller number. We may ſay the ſame of what Father Francis Feuardent a Franciſcan, and a Doctor of Paris wrote, who in his Theomachia Calviniſtica has pointed out one thouſand and four hundred errors of the Calviniſts. Thus ſpeaks Moreri. This Work of Feuardent was reprinted at Cologne in the year 1629 (9). He has intitled one of his Books Les Entremangeries & Guerres miniſtrales (10): (The Quarrels and Wars of the Miniſters) the paſſages he tranſcribes from other Authors are in all reſpects the moſt conſiderable part of this Work.

A few days ago I caſt my eyes on his Examen des Confeſſions, Priéres, Sacramens & Catechiſme des Calviniſtes; avec Réfutation de la Réponſe d'un Miniſtre; où ils ſont convaincus de ſix cent ſoixante & ſix tant contradictions, erreurs, que blaſphemes, contenus en iceux. Seconde Edition reveue & amplifiée par l'auteur. i. e. "An Examination of the Confeſſion, Prayers, "Sacraments, and Catechiſm of the Calviniſts, with a "Confutation of a Miniſter's Anſwer; in which they "are convicted of ſix hundred ſixty ſix contradictions, "errors and blaſphemies contained in them. The "ſecond Edition reviſed and augmented by the Author." This Book was printed at Paris in 8vo, in the year 1601. We find in it that paſſion which is cuſtomary with Feuardent, and ſome paſſages in (11) which he relates in a prophane and obſcene manner, I know not what ſtories concerning the wives and maid-ſervants of the Miniſters. There is not the leaſt gravity in his ſtyle; he interſperſes it with jokes and phraſes intirely burleſque. An anonymous Author publiſhed an anſwer to the firſt edition of this work; this anſwer, printed at La Rochelle (12) by Nicholas Froit-d'eau * was ſent to Feuardent at Mantes towards the end of the year 1599 (13). He obſerves that it was thought Anthony de la Faye was the Author of it (14). Here follows an inſtance of his bragging. Feuardent has preached in the largeſt Cities and moſt famous Churches of France, Brabant, Flanders, and Lorrain, where by the grace of God he has converted above ſix hundred ſouls from theſe errors to the true Faith and Catholic Religion, and has confirmed in the ſame above an hundred thouſand good Chriſtians (15).

(8) In the article of CALVIN.

(9) I make uſe of that edition which is in 4to.

(10) I have ſeen the 3d edition, which is that of Paris printed for Sebaſtian Nivelle, in 1604, 4to.

(11) Folio 18 verſo, &c.

(12) It is a ſham. * Cold Water.

(13) Feuardent, Examen des Confeſſions, folio 1 verſo.

(14) Ibid. folio 3 verſo.

(15) Ibid. folio 63.

[E] The Jeſuits have had reaſons to be diſpleaſed with his conduct towards Suares.] The fact is as follows. Feuardent had quoted the words of Joſſe Clichthou as though it was a paſſage from St. Cyril, in order to prove the immaculate conception of the holy Virgin. This Joſſe finding that Cyril's work of St. John's Goſpel was imperfect, ſupplied the four books that were wanting, and publiſhed them with St. Cyril's. There is in thoſe ſupplements a paſſage as clear as noon-day, and peremptory for the immaculate conception. Feuardent quoted it with a triumphant air, and aſcribed it to St. Cyril. Suares gave him notice of this miſtake, and obſerved to him, that that paſſage ought to be reſtored to Clichthou, inſtead of being aſcribed to St. Cyril. Feuardent did not like this advice, and was ſo incenſed at it, that he collected all the blunders he could meet with in Suares concerning numbers, and pretended to convict him thus of a miſtake like that of which he had been found guilty. But the things are by no means of the ſame kind. To write one number for another is no great matter; it is often an error of the preſs, with which the Author ought not to be charged. But to quote a paſſage as being from St. Cyril, which yet is from an Author of our own time, and to do it with an intention to bring an unexceptionable witneſs againſt one's adverſaries, is a fault of the Author, and a great one too. Theophilus Raynaud plainly decides, that who taught at Paris the maxims of Buchanan againſt Henry III and Henry IV (e). He did not ſpare even the chief of the Leaguers, when he thought him guilty of ſomething that might prejudice the cauſe of the rebels [F]. He died at Paris January the 1ſt 1610 (f). See in Moreri's Dictionary the title of ſeveral of his works, and add to them, Hiſtoire de la Fondation de l'Egliſe & Abbaye de Mont Saint Michel, au peril de la Mer, & des Miracles, Reliques, & Indulgences données en icelle (g).

(e) Maimbourg, Hiſt. de la Ligue, pag. 295.

(f) Boterius, Commentarior. de Rebus in Gallia geſtis, lib. 17. pag. 590.

(g) Du Cheſne, Bibliot. des Hiſt. de France, pag. m. 141. quotes the edition of Conſtance, 1611, in 24mo.

that Feuardent did not err through ignorance, but wilfully. Feuardentius ad lib. 3. S. Irenæi cap. 23. intentus ad aſtruendum nitorem conceptionis prædictæ, allegavit locum pro ea, ipſis Solis radiis ſcriptum, ex lib. 6. S. Cyrilli in Joannem cap. 15. At non eſſe eum librum S. Cyrilli, ſed Clichtovei, qui lacunam quatuor intermediorum librorum in eo Cyrilli opere ſupplere voluit, in confeſſo eſt. Neque id ignoraſſe Feuardentium, comperta ejus eruditio dubitare non ſinit. Sed (ut dixi) ſerviens cauſæ quam tractabat, locum ex lucubratione nuperi ſcriptoris, operi S. Cyrilli intexta, meditatò ſuppoſuit S. Cyrillo, & tanquam tanti Patris dictum, protulit. Monuit de hoc loco per Feuardentium minùs aptè citato, & ad Clichtoveum, non ad S. Cyrillum referendo, Suarez tom. 2, 3. Part. d. 3. ſ. 5. qui eam à Feuardentio gratiam retulit in poſteriore editione commentariorum in Irenæum, ut quotquot congerere potuit menda, in numeros typographicos illapſa in Suaris operibus, ad eum ſimilis lapſus inſimulandum intorſerit. Sed eſt profectò ſumma diſparitas. Nam autorum allegationes quoad numerum arithmeticum, quæ à typographo exhibentur, nullus author præſtare queat indemnes à multis mendis, in tanta operarum oſcitantia, & emaculatorum indiligentia. At plagulæ Clichtovei prolatio nomine S. Cyrilli, ad conciliandam majorem fidem placito pro quo pugnes, non eſt erratum, vel mendum typographicum, quod in oſcitantes operas, vel in dormitantem emaculatorem poſſit referri (16).

(16) Theoph. Raynaud, Erotemat. X, de bonis ac malis libris, num. 289.

[F] He did not ſpare even the chief of the Leaguers, when he thought him guilty of ſomething that might prejudice the . . . . . rebels.] The Duke of Nemours having done ſomething which the Duke of Maienne, his brother by the mother's ſide, diſliked, was taken up, and men thought that it was done by the Duke of Maienne's intrigues. "Feuardent a Franciſcan "Friar, and one of the moſt ſeditious Preachers at "Paris, was ſo bold as to give the Duke ſeveral "broad hints of it from the pulpit. The Duke ſent "for him, with a deſign to chaſtiſe him in order to "teach him better manners. Yet hearing that he "was a native of Savoy, he was pleaſed to pardon "him, as a man, who favoured a Prince of Sa-"voy (17)." Paſquier is miſtaken with regard to this Friar's native country.

(17) Paſquier, Lett. liv. 16. pag. 234.

FEUILLANT (LE PETIT) or the little Bernandine, a Preacher of the Leaguers. See MONGAILLARD.

FEVRE of Etaples (a) (JAMES LE), in Latin Faber Stapulenſis, was one of thoſe who began to expel the barbariſm which reigned in the Univerſity of Paris. He was a very little man, and of mean extraction (b), but a great genius ſupported by a great deal of learning. He became ſuſpected of Lutheraniſm, and was obliged to give way to the outrages of certain paſſionate and ignorant zealots, who ſuffered him not to reſt (c). He quitted the field, and retired from Paris to Meaux, where was a (d) Biſhop who loved the Sciences and men of true learning. The perſecution raiſed by the Franciſcans at Meaux obliged the Biſhop to be a good Catholic (e). Le Fevre was then forced to retire to Blois, and from thence to Guienne. Margaret Queen of Navarre, ſiſter to Francis I, honoured him with her protection, ſo that he enjoyed full liberty at Nerac till his death, which happened in the year 1537 (f). Some very ſingular things are related of his laſt hours [A]. The Parliament of Paris received orders from Francis I, to (a) Etaples in Picardy is the name of the town where he was born.

(b) Verheiden, in Effig. & Elog. pag 104. Jovius, Elog. cap. 121.

(c) Beza, Hiſt. Eccleſ. liv. 1. pag. 2.

(d) Named William Bziçonnet.

(e) Beza, Hiſt. Eccl. liv. 1. pag. 6.

(f) Ibid. and pag. 14.

[A] Some very ſingular things are related of his laſt hours.] Thomas Hubert, Counſellor to the Elector Palatine Frederic II, whom he attended in his journey to Spain, wrote an Account of that Journey, which was printed at Francfort in the year 1624. He relates (1) that the Elector his maſter, in his return from Spain, paſſed through France in the year 1538, and fell ſick at Paris, where Francis I, and the Queen of Navarre, viſited him often. It was in one of thoſe viſits that that Princeſs related in what manner le Fevre of Etaples ended his life. He and ſome other learned men, whoſe converſation greatly pleaſed the Queen, dined with her one day (2). In the midſt of the entertainment le Fevre began to weep, and when the Queen aſked him the reaſon of it, he anſwered that the enormity of his ſins threw him into that grief. It was not the remembrance of any lewdneſs he had been guilty of, ſince at the age of 101 (α) he had never known woman. With regard to the other paſſions which precipitate men into debauchery, he felt his conſcience eaſy enough; but he reckoned it a very great crime that having known the truth, and taught it to ſeveral perſons who had ſealed it with their blood, he had had the weakneſs to keep himſelf in an aſylum, far from the places where crowns of martyrdom were diſtributed. The Queen, who was very eloquent, comforted him. He made his will by word of mouth, and went to bed, where he was found dead a few hours after. The Queen cauſed him to be honourably interred under the ſame marble which ſhe had deſigned for herſelf: Honorifice tumulari fecit & marmore quod pro ſe exſcindi fecerat contegi voluit. He left his Books to Gerard Rouſſel, and the reſt of his eſtate to the poor.

It is hard to doubt of this Relation, and hard not to doubt of it. If the fact had been falſe, would the Queen have told it to the Elector? If ſhe had not told it him, would Thomas Hubert have dared to put it into his Hiſtory? Theſe are the motives not to doubt of it. But, on the other hand, how can we be perſuaded that ſuch a fact as this, moſt glorious for James le Fevre in particular, and for the whole body in general, ſhould be ſuppreſſed by all the Miniſters if it had been true? Whence comes it that Theodore Beza does not ſpeak of it, either in his Hiſtory of the Churches when he mentions the death of James le Fevre, or in the particular Elogy which he has given that Doctor (3), or in any other paſſage of his writings, where opportunities of relating this wonderful event frequently occurred? Whence could proceed the ſilence of Sleidan, of Verheiden, and of a million of Authors who, if they had common ſenſe, ought to have related this fact in caſe they had any knowledge of it? Theſe difficulties can no otherwiſe be ſolved than by ſuppoſing that this adventure was utterly unknown to them. But this is getting out of one perplexity to fall into another. The ſcene of this accident was the King of Navarre's Court: ſeveral learned men who dined with the Queen muſt have been witneſſes of it: the greater part of them were of the ſame opinions with the Reformed: by what ſtrange combination ſhould they have engaged not to ſpeak of it as long as they lived? By what fatality could an accident ſo public, and of ſuch a nature, have ſound the tongues of a whole Court tied up for above fifty years? They very well knew that the good old man when he was dying ſaid he left his eſtate to the poor, and they failed

(3) In Iconibus.

(1) Rivetus has inſerted this Hiſtory in his Letter de Senectute bona, Oper. tom. 2. pag. 1266. Mr. Colomiés relates it in his Mélanges Hiſtoriques, pag. 2, &c. Mr. Jurieu relates it alſo, Apol. pour les Reform. ch. 2. p. 70, and 71. I only give the ſubſtance of it.

(2) Mr. Colomiés ſuppoſes the Queen went to dine with him. The Latin of Thomas Hubert does not ſignify this. Quadam autem die miſit ad eum Regina, & ſe velle cum eo prandere dixit, convocatis aliquot doctis, quorum confabulationibus mirum in modum delectaretur.

(α) James le Fevre was not quite 100 years old when he died, but he wanted not much of it; witneſs theſe verſes of Macrinus, Ævi peracto jam prope ſeculo, &c. pag. 362. of the new Menagiana, Paris edit. 1715. The 173d of Mr. Bayle's Letters teſtifies that the entire piece was ſent him in the month of June 1699. CRIT. REM.

to come to no reſolution concerning le Fevre, but to wait to know his Majeſty's intentions. That Prince was then a priſoner; and the ſubſtance of his Letter is to be ſeen in Sleidan [B]. It was probably at the ſame time that the Sorbonne degraded Le Fevre from his Doctor's degree; but he did not leave France, as Sleidan aſſerts. I own he took a journey to Straſburg, but that was by the Queen of Navarre's order, to confer with Bucer touching the Reformation of the Church [C]. His natural moderation left him when he wrote againſt his old friend Eraſmus [D]. This quarrel did not end to his advantage.

(g) See above the Citation (o) of the Article AGRIPPA.

We have ſaid above (g) that he expoſed himſelf to the clamours of the Monks, for having maintained that St. Ann had been married but once. He was not leſs contradicted in the opinion he advanced, that the woman who was a ſinner, of whom St. Luke ſpeaks in the VIIth Chapter, Mary Magdalen, who is mentioned in the VIIIth Chapter of the ſame Evangeliſt, and Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, mentioned in the XIth Chapter of St. John, were three different women. This Diſpute has been lately revived [E]. We muſt

(4) Corpus humo, mentemque Deo, bona cuncta relinquo Pauperibus: Faber hæc cum moreretur, ait. Verheiden, pag. 105. We ſhall obſerve below, Citation (27), that this was his Epitaph.

(5) Sleid. lib. 5. ſub finem.

(6) Per abſentiam quoque regis captivi Pariſienſes Theologi Jacobum Fabrum Stapulenſem.... exagitabant, ita quidem ut ille deſerta Gallia migraret alio. i. e. "Likewiſe by "the abſence of "the captive "King, the Divines of Paris... perſe- "cuted James "le Fevre of "Etaples, and "obliged him to "quit France "and retire elſe- "where." Idem, ibid.

(7) Ad ann. 1523, (and not 1525, as Moreri ſays) num. 15.

(8) Melch. Adam. in Vita Capitonis, pag. 90. He quotes Johannes Sturmius Antipappo 4, pag. 8.

(9) In a Letter dated in March 1526; it is the 26th of the 18th Book.

(10) Eraſmus, Epiſt. 13. lib. 19. pag. 830.

(11) Idem, Epiſt. 51. lib. 3. pag. 213, and 216.

(12) Idem, Epiſt. 33. lib. 3.

(13) See the Letter which he wrote him in April 1517. It is the 9th of the 3d Book. He wrote him another in Sept. following: it is the 33d of the ſame Book.

not to publiſh that circumſtance in verſe (4): whence could it happen that the reſt, which better deſerved to be declared, ſhould not be known? Add to this that it is not at all probable that le Fevre lived a whole Century; for if he had been a hundred and one years old when he died, he muſt have been born in the year 1436. He would have been above fourſcore and ſix when he ſtole away from Meaux: he would have been ninety ſix when Calvin went to pay him his reſpects at Nerac. Is ſuch a circumſtance uſed to be forgotten? do people content themſelves with ſpeaking of ſuch very old men in the vague terms of old age which Beza, Verheiden, and the other Writers of the party make uſe of with regard to this Doctor? In a word, there is no example in theſe latter ages of an illuſtrious man's living above a hundred years, without its being taken notice of by any one Author who mentions him.

[B] The Subſtance of his Letter is to be ſeen in Sleidan.] It is in elegant terms according to his cuſtom (5): but he did not know that le Fevre was retired to Nerac (6). Spondanus (7) has ſpoken very briefly of this perſon, and his degradation.

[C] He took a journey to Straſburg . . . to confer with Bucer.] I have learnt this particular in the Life of Capito. Tanta ſtatim Capitonis & Buceri fama fuit, ut Jacobus Faber Stapulenſis, & Gerardus Rufus clam è Gallia profecti, Capitonem & Bucerum audierint, atque de omnibus doctrinæ præcipuis locis cum ipſis diſſeruerint, miſſi à Margaretha Franciſci Regis ſorore Navarræ regina (8). i. e. "The reputation of Capito and Bucer "was immediately raiſed to ſuch a height, that James "le Fevre of Etaples, and Gerard Rouſſel, privately "leaving France, heard Capito and Bucer, and diſ- "courſed with them of all the principal points of doc- "trine, being ſent by Margaret Queen of Navarre, "ſiſter to King Francis." Eraſmus, who was not acquainted with this laſt circumſtance, imagined that le Fevre was at Straſburg as a fugitive: Faber Stapulenſis Gallia profugus, ſays he (9), agit Argentorati, ſed mutato nomine quemadmodum Comicus ille ſenex, Athenis Chremes erat, in Lemno Stilpho. i. e. "Le "Fevre of Etaples having fled from France reſides "at Straſburg, but under a different name, like the "old man in the Play, who was Chremes at Athens, "and Stilpho in Lemnos." In another Letter, dated from Baſil the 17th of May 1527, he ſays le Fevre had been honourably recalled into France. Hinc honorifice revocatus eſt in Galliam, ceſſerat enim metu, & eſt regi chariſſimus (10). This is ſtill the conſequence of the falſe ſuppoſition that our Doctor had fled towards the Rhine. Every body knew not the true cauſe of that journey, the private Commiſſion of Queen Margaret.

[D] His natural moderation left him when he wrote againſt his old friend Eraſmus.] He was the aggreſſor, without any other provocation than for that all his opinions as to certain paſſages of Scripture had not been adopted by Eraſmus when he publiſhed his Notes on the New Teſtament (11). He rudely attacked Eraſmus, and accuſed him of having advanced impious notions (12). Eraſmus defended himſelf; but when he had ſaid what he thought proper for the clearing of his reputation, he begged of his adverſary the continuance of his friendſhip, and aſſured him that he had always loved and eſteemed him (13). The compliments which were written to him on his Victory were not pleaſing to him, and he deſired his friends not to change their opinion of le Fevre on account of this quarrel. Quæ ſcribis de noſtra ad Fabrum apologia, quanquam ſcio animo abs te ſcribi amiciſſimo, mihi tamen bis moleſta fuerunt, vel quod veterem animi dolorem refricant, vel quod tu hac occaſione minus aliquanto quam vellem videris tribuere Fabro, viro quo vix in multis millibus reperias vel integriorem vel humaniorem. Hac una in re ſui diſſimilis fuit, quod amicum immerentem tam atrociter impetiit. Quis autem omnibus horis ſapuit unquam? Atque utinam mihi licuiſſet adverſario parcere. Nunc duobus crucior nominibus, & quod cum tali amico coactus ſim manus conſerere, & quod intelligam quoſdam de Fabro minus candide ſentire, de quo cupiam omnes quam optime ſentire (14). i. e. "What you write con- "cerning my Anſwer to le Fevre, tho' I know you "wrote it with a moſt friendly intention, was unwel- "come to me on a double account, both becauſe it re- "vives my paſt grief, and for that you ſeem on this "occaſion to ſpeak with leſs eſteem than I could wiſh "of le Fevre, a man who for integrity and humanity "has ſcarce his equal among thouſands. In this ſin- "gle inſtance he has acted unlike himſelf, in attack- "ing a friend, who deſerved not ſuch uſage, in ſo vio- "lent a manner. But what man was ever wiſe at "all times? And I wiſh I could have ſpared my ad- "verſary: but now I am afflicted for two reaſons, "both becauſe I have been conſtrained to engage ſuch "a friend, and alſo becauſe I find ſome entertain not "ſo good an opinion of le Fevre, for whom I wiſh all "mankind to have the utmoſt eſteem." Can there be more heroic ſentiments than theſe? Le Fevre repented of his making the attack (15), and made no reply.

(14) Eraſm. Epiſt. 3. lib. 3. pag. 174. He wrote it to Tonſtal, the Engliſh Ambaſſador at Paris, in the year 1517. Several ſuch paſſages are to be found in his Letters.

[E] He maintained that the woman who was a ſinner, . . . Mary Magdalen, . . . and Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, were different women. This diſpute has been lately revived.] When James le Fevre publiſhed a Book on this ſubject about the beginning of the 16th Century, both the ignorant and the learned, the common people and the Doctors, were unanimouſly of opinion that Mary, the ſiſter of Martha and Lazarus, was not a different perſon from the woman ſinner of the VIIth chapter of St. Luke, nor from her who had been poſſeſſed by ſeven Devils, from which Jeſus Chriſt freed her. The Hymns and the Office of S. Mary Magdalen in the Roman Breviary are conformable to this opinion. However, nothing hindred our le Fevre from encountring it. His Book was reprinted in the years 1518, and 1529, by the care of Jodocus Clichtoveus who followed his ſentiment, and maintained it twice againſt the attacks of Mark Grandival Canon of St. Victor. The Book which John Fiſher, Biſhop of Rocheſter, wrote againſt le Fevre, to ſupport the common opinion of the identity of theſe three women, was printed at Paris in the year 1519. This diſpute terribly exaſperated people's minds, as well becauſe the leaſt innovations were ſuſpected by the Catholics at the beginning of Lutheraniſm, as becauſe they were far from being perſuaded that James le Fevre was orthodox. But when perſonal animoſities were ceaſed, his opinion began to be reliſhed, ſo that at the end of the XVIth Century, and for a long while after, it was reckoned conformable to faith and reaſon. It was permitted to be publickly maintained in the Sorbonne, provided there was added to it a ſmall diſtinction, which really overthrew the whole Decree in favour of which it had been invented. A diſputant was obliged to ſay that he did not acknowledge must not forget that he made a French Tranſlation of the four Goſpels, and a Latin Verſion of St. Paul's Epiſtles, with critical Notes and a Commentary, wherein he pretty frequently cenſures the Vulgate [F]. He made the like Notes and a like Commentary on the Goſpels, and on the Epiſtles of the other Apoſtles. All this only increaſed the ill humour of the Sorbonne againſt him, and he ſaw himſelf attacked by the formidable Natalis Beda. He did not outwardly depart from the Church of Rome, and diſapproved in ſome particulars the conduct of thoſe who eſtabliſhed the Reformation in Germany, as a little too warm [G]; but at the bottom of his heart he was not much of a Papiſt.

(15) Eraſm. Epiſt. 28. lib. 7. pag. 398.

☞FEVRE

acknowledge a triple woman, for that would be advancing what the Decree of the Faculty had condemned; but three different women, one of whom was named Magdalen (16). The matter went ſo far that the moſt able would have been aſhamed to continue in the common opinion, and that the correctors of the Breviaries of Paris, Orleans, and Vienne, put a difference between the ſiſter of Lazarus, the woman ſinner, and Mary Magdalen. Things being in this ſtate, ſome Doctors had compaſſion on the doctrine they ſaw forſaken and led in triumph by that which had appeared ſo falſe when James le Fevre ventured to ſwim againſt the ſtream (17). Father Alexander, who has ſince printed the Reformation of the Office of Paris, after weighing . . . . the authorities and reaſons on both ſides, concluded (*) in favour of the opinion which makes them but one perſon. Since which Father Lamy, Prieſt of the Oratory, not ſatisfied with having endeavoured to reeſtabliſh that opinion in his new Evangelical Concordance, which he publiſhed in Latin in 1689, has written a particular Diſſertation in a French Treatiſe in form of a Letter printed in 1691. . . . . In fine, more lately yet Father Mauduit (a), alſo Prieſt of the Oratory, and Father Pezron (e), ... have each of them given a Diſſertation in a Work they have publiſhed in French on the Goſpel, wherein they defend the common opinion. . . . Mr. du Hamel (i), of the Academy of Sciences, has retained the ſame opinion. I borrow this from a Book which Monſieur Anquetin, a Curate of Lyons, printed at Roan, in 1699, under the title of A Diſſertation on St. Mary Magdalen, to prove that Mary Magdalen, Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, and the woman ſinner, are three different women. Take notice that Eraſmus wrote to the Biſhop of Rocheſter, that all the world gave him the victory; but that ſome people were concerned that he had ſo harſhly treated a perſon who had done ſo many ſervices to learning as James le Fevre (18). We find in the ſame Letter of Eraſmus, that Stephen Poncher, Biſhop of Paris, had put the Engliſh Biſhop on writing againſt this Doctor.

(16) Negabant à ſe agnoſci triplicem ſed tres diverſas mulieres quarum una diceretur Magdalena. Lami, ubi infra.

(17) Extracted from the Diſſertation of Father Lami de Unica Maria Magdalena. It is in the Appendix to his Commentary in Harmoniam quatuor Evangeliſtarum, printed at Paris 1699. See the Utrecht Journal, for the months of July and Auguſt 1699, pag. 448, &c.

* Natalis Alexander, Hiſt. Eccleſ. . . . 1 Seculi, tom. 2. folio 120.

(a) Mauduit, Analize de l'Evangile, ... printed in the year 1695.

(e) Dom Pezron, Hiſtoire Evangelique . . . . printed in 1696.

(i) Theol. Cleric. Fund. tom. 2. lib. 4.

(18) Eraſmus, Epiſt. 8. lib. 6. pag. 352; dated from Antwerp the 2d of April 1519.

[F] He made a French Tranſlation of the four Goſpels, and a Latin Verſion of the Epiſtles of S. Paul with Notes . . . wherein he cenſures . . . . the Vulgate.] This French Tranſlation was printed with Licence by Simon de Colines in 1523. The Author did not put his name to it; but "we learn from a Letter of Eraſ- "mus written to Bilibaldus in 1526, that it is James "le Fevre's, who was obliged to fly for having pub- "liſhed that work, as if they who tranſlated the Scrip- "tures into French were then puniſhed at Paris, by "reaſon of the diſorders which thoſe new Tranſlations "cauſed in Europe." James le Fevre, ſays Eraſ- "mus (†) in that place, who had fled for fear, with- "out any other reaſon than becauſe he had put the Goſ- "pels into French, has been recalled to Court. Jacobus "Faber qui metu profugerat, non ob aliud niſi quòd ver- "terat Evangelia Gallicè, revocatus eſt in aulam (19)." Father Simon, from whom I borrow theſe words, quotes ſeveral paſſages of this verſion, and gives his judgment of it. What he takes from the Life of Capito collected by Melchior Adam (20), is by no means proper to confirm what Eraſmus ſays, that James le Fevre fled from Paris on account of his new French Tranſlation; for it appears from this paſſage of Melchior Adam that our Doctor was at Baſil as the Delegate of Queen Margaret. See above, the remark [C].

(†) Eraſm. Epiſt. lib. 30. Epiſt. 44.

(19) Simon, Nouvelles Obſervat. ſur le Texte & ſur les Verſions du N. T. pag. 146.

(20) Simon, ibid. pag. 150.

"(21) He publiſhed ſo early as the year 1512 a "Tranſlation of the Epiſtles of St. Paul, with a "Commentary. This firſt Edition is in the King's "Library on fine vellum. He durſt not wholly reject "the Vulgate, which he has inſerted intire in his "Work, placing over againſt it his own Tranſlation, "wherein he does not greatly differ from the old one: "but he has added to his Commentary Critical Ob- "ſervations, intitled Examinatio nonnullorum circa lite- "ram; and it is chiefly in theſe Obſervations that he "has taken the liberty to examine and correct the old "Latin Tranſlator. Though he ſhews ſome Learn- "ing in them, and keeps his ſtyle as free as he "could from the barbariſms of the Divines of his "time, he has nevertheleſs in this Work left great "marks of weakneſs, as well with reſpect to the In- "terpretation, as to his Latin ſtyle. Eraſmus and "Stunica have learnedly criticiſed ſome of his miſtakes, "having proved, by ſeveral examples, that he was "no more than half a Grammarian, and had but "mean ſkill in the Greek tongue. Natalis Bedda, a "Divine of Paris, cenſured his Divinity as well as "that of Eraſmus. In fine, the Inquiſitors of Rome "under Clement VIII put his Commentary on the "whole New Teſtament in the Catalogue of prohi- "bited Books, till it ſhould be corrected and purged "from its errors . . . Bedda objected ſeveral errors to "him, and among others the having written on the "ninth Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romans, that "ſalvation did not depend on a man's will (*), Poſſe "ſalvari non eſt in hominis voluntate, poteſtate aut ope- "ribus. . . . The learned father Taumaſſin (22) of "the Oratory, failed not to inſert this cenſure of "Bedda in his Memoirs on grace, adding that the "Work of that Divine was in ſome ſort the Doctrine "of the Faculty of Divinity at Paris, ſince that Body "had approved the cenſure. However it be, Bedda "preſſed him very warmly on that account, as if he "had denied univerſal grace . . . . (23). I have ſeen "but one Edition of his Commentary on the Goſpels, "which did not appear till 1522, having been printed "at Meaux at the charge of Simon de Colines . . (24). "He has alſo written on the Canonical Epiſtles. He "dedicated this laſt Work to Antony du Prat, Chan- "cellor of France, whom he thanked for the pro- "tection he had given to his explication of the Goſ- "pels; which might induce one to judge that this "Author's Books were already diſpleaſing to ſome "Divines of Paris. . . . . In this laſt Commentary he "has followed the ſame method as on the Goſpels, "except only that he has placed his corrections in "the margin over againſt the text: which is more "commodious. He obſerves in a Letter prefixed to "it, written at Meaux in 1525, that the Original "Greek of the Goſpels and St. Paul's Epiſtles is more "exact than the old Latin Edition; that that Edi- "tion, on the contrary, is more exact than the Greek "in ſome paſſages of the Canonical Epiſtles." Father Simon mentions ſeveral other things to ſhew the Character of this Work, and concludes that James le Fevre ought to be placed among the moſt able Commentators of his age. But Eraſmus, who wrote at the ſame time, and with much more politeneſs, greatly leſſened his reputation. The Works of this Divine are no longer read at Paris; whereas thoſe of Eraſmus . . . are highly eſteemed even at this day (25).

(21) Simon, Hiſt. Critique des Commentateurs du N. T. chap. 34. pag. 488.

(*) Jac. Fab. apud Bedd. in Cenſur. C. 9. Epiſt. ad Rom. Prop. 59. Edit. Pariſ. in fol. ann. 1525.

(22) It ſhould be Thomaſſin.

(23) Simon, Hiſt. Crit. des Comment. du N. Teſt. pag. 496.

(24) Ibid. pag. 502.

(25) Ibid. pag. 503.

[G] He did not outwardly depart from the Church of Rome, and diſapproved the conduct of thoſe who eſtabliſhed the Reformation in Germany.] The ſecond of theſe two facts is contained in theſe words of Eraſmus. De regno quod ſcripſi, plebem lingua temperare, magiſtratum nihil gerere, niſi ex ipſorum ſententia, ſenatu movere, qui à doctrina ipſorum diſſentiunt; conjicere in carcerem, qui verbo ipſos tetigerit, fœderibus ſeſe communire, an non hoc eſt regnare? Damnavit hoc in illis egregius ille vir Jacobus Faber, quum metu ceſſerat Galliis, & in Germaniam conceſſerat (26). i. e. "As to what I "wrote concerning their affecting Sovereignty, is it "not affecting Sovereignty to govern the common "people with their tongues, to ſuffer the Ma- "giſtrates to do nothing but what they approve, "to put out of the Senate thoſe who differ from "them in point of doctrine, to caſt thoſe into "priſon

(26) Eraſm. Epiſt. ad Fratres Germaniæ inferi. folio m. Q. 4. verſo.

☞FEVRE (TANEGUI LE), in Latin Faber, was born at Caen in Normandy in the year 1615 of a good family [A]. His father determined to educate him to learning, at the ſollicitations of one of his brothers, who was an Eccleſiaſtic, and who promiſed to aſſiſt his nephew in his ſtudies, and take him into his own houſe. At twelve years of age his uncle begun to inſtruct him in the Latin tongue [B]; and in ſix months our Author made a greater progreſs in that language than other children generally do in two years. But his uncle being a man of prodigious ſeverity, ſtruck ſuch a terror upon him, that his father could not perſuade him to proſecute his ſtudies till he took him home, and put him under another Preceptor, who was an Eccleſiaſtic, and though well ſkilled in the Latin tongue, intirely ignorant of the Greek. But the young le Fevre already convinced of the neceſſity of the latter language, undertook to learn it of himſelf [C], and ſoon made as great a progreſs in it as he did in the Latin under his Preceptor. A year and an half after this his father ſent him to the College of la Fleche, where he went thro' a courſe of Rhetoric and Philoſophy. The Jeſuits uſed their utmoſt efforts to engage him to continue with them, but in vain; for as ſoon as he had paſſed thro' his courſe of Philoſophy he returned to Caen to his father, who being charmed with the genius and learning of his ſon, adviſed him to enter into holy Orders, as the readieſt way to advancement for a perſon of ſmall fortune. But our Author was inflexible in this point to the perſuaſions of his father and uncle, and having continued ſome years in Normandy, went to Paris, where he gained the friendſhip of ſeveral perſons of the higheſt diſtinction. Monſieur des Noyers recommended him to Cardinal de Richelieu, who gave him a penſion of two thouſand livres to inſpect all the works printed at the Louvre, and to chooſe ſuch of the various readings of the antient Authors, as he ſhould moſt approve of. The Cardinal deſigned to have made him Principal of the College, which he was about to erect at Richelieu, to continue his penſion, and to ſettle on him a very conſiderable ſtipend for that purpoſe. But the Cardinal's death cut off our Author's hopes; for Mazarin, who ſucceeded him, having no great reliſh for learning, the Louvre-preſs became almoſt uſeleſs, and Monſieur la Fevre's penſion was very ill paid. Upon this he quitted his employment, and continued ſome years at Paris without any occupation beſides his ſtudies, the fruits of which were ſeveral excellent works, which he afterwards publiſhed [D]. Some " priſon who ſpeak a word againſt them, and to " ſtrengthen themſelves by alliances? This is what " that excellent perſon James le Fevre, who had for " fear fled from France into Germany, condemned " in them." For the firſt fact I ſhall quote a paſſage of Florimond de Remond: " Le Fevre, who bore the " ſurname of d'Etaple, the village where he was borne, " a poor child, in the utmoſt want, and owned by " nobody, lived a long time in the territories of the " King of Navarre, ſowing many doubts and ſcru- " ples in the conſciences of thoſe who would hearken " to him, pretending at the ſame time to be a Catho- " lic. I remember formerly to have ſeen his tomb, " when the Church of Nerac was ſtanding, where- " on are theſe words:

" Corpus humo, mentemque Deo, bona cuncta relinquo
" Pauperibus, Faber hæc, dum moreretur, ait.

" My corps to th' earth, my ſoul to God,
" My goods to th' poor I give:
" Thus dying Faber made his will,
" And ſtraitway ceas'd to live.

(27) Flor. de Remond, Hiſt. de la Naiſſance de l'Hereſie, liv. 7. chap. 3. pag. m. 846, 847.

" No change was then made in Religion, or the cere- " monies of the Church. The King and Queen of " Navarre, tho' their devotion was obſerved to be cool- " ed by having converſed too familiarly with the fu- " gitives of Meaux, continued their uſual way of " life (27)."

(1) Segraiſiana, ou Melange d'Hiſtoire & de Literature, recüelli des Entretiens de M. de Segrais.

[A] Born . . . of a good family.] The Author of the Segraiſiana (1), upon what grounds is uncertain, aſſerts that his father was a Ditcher, (Foſſoyeur), in the Pariſh of St. John in Caen. It is true, he had been no good œconomiſt, and was unhappily too fond of travelling, to be maſter of any conſiderable fortune (2).

(2) Niceron, Memoires pour ſervir à l'Hiſtoire des Hommes Illuſtres, tom. 3. pag. 105, 106. edit. de Paris 1727.

[B] At twelve years of age his uncle began to inſtruct him in the Latin Tongue.] Before he was put to ſtudy, his uncle obſerving, that he had an excellent voice and ear, was deſirous that he ſhould learn Muſic. This was his employment from his eighth to his twelfth year. He made a great progreſs in this ſcience, and at eleven years of age ſung and played with prodigious judgment (3).

(3) Idem, ibid.

[C] But the young le Fevre already convinced of the neceſſity of the latter language, undertook to learn it of himſelf.] He was often heard to ſay, that when a perſon is maſter of a little good ſenſe and judgment, he has no occaſion for a maſter in the languages; and that the greateſt difficulty is to learn to read. When he had learned the Greek Grammar, and read ſome chapters of the New Teſtament, he began Homer and the Tragic Writers, after the example of Joſeph Scaliger (4), who began the ſtudy of the Greek Language with thoſe Writers (5).

(4) Idem, ibid.

[D] The fruits of which were ſeveral excellent works, which he afterwards publiſhed.] The Catalogue of his works is as follows: I. Luciani de Morte Peregrini Libellus. Cum Notis Tan. Fabri. Paris 1653 in 4to. The Dedication to Iſaac Sarravius, the ſon of Claudius Sarravius, is dated at Saumur July 23d 1653. In the Preface Monſr. le Fevre obſerves, that of all Lucian's writings there is ſcarce any one comparable to his Treatiſe concerning the Death of Peregrinus; and that having a deſign to publiſh an edition of all that Writer's Works, he thought proper to reviſe this Treatiſe with the utmoſt care, and print it, in order that if the learned World ſhould approve of it, he might publiſh an Edition of Lucian, which ſhould be purged from innumerable errors, with which the common Editions abound, and ſhew the negligence, or ignorance of the former Tranſlators. In his Notes (6) he remarks, that it is evident from the ſenſe being broken off in one place, that Lucian had introduced there many things againſt Chriſt, which had been caſtrated by our anceſtors, men of too great zeal and piety. We ſhall give the learned reader our Author's own words. Iſtæc vocula γᾶν & ſenſus repente abruptus ſatis indicant multa hic a Luciano adverſus Chriſtum ſcripta fuiſſe, quæ a majoribus noſtris, hominibus nimium piis, ſublata fuere. Hinc itaque eſt quod dixerat Suidas, Lucianum καὶ θάπτεσθαι τὸν Χριστιανισμὸν καὶ αὐτὸν βλασφημεῖν τὸν Χριστὸν ἐν τῷ τοῦ Περεγρίνου βίῳ, (melius dixiſſet ἐν τῇ τοῦ Περεγρίνου τελευτῇ) hinc factum ut in pleriſque MSS. Codd. non amplius extet Peregrinus. Penè tamen quod hic non itidem fecere ut apud Joſephum, quem (quod mirere) Origines duobus tribuſve locis aſſerit contra Chriſtum ſcripſiſſe, & tamen hodie laudat. Quî factum? Nil enim facilius. In hunc locum κακηγορίας ſuffecere ἐγκώμιον. O timidam Pietatem! II. Diatribe, Fl. Joſephi de Jeſu Chriſto Teſtimonium ſuppoſitum eſſe. Saumur 1655 in 8vo.

(5) Vide Joſ. Scaligeri, Epiſt. 1. lib. 1. pag. 46. edit. Francofurti 1628 in 8vo.

(6) Cap. 2. pag. 67.

In

Some time after the Marquis de Franciere, Governor of Langres, who was one of his friends, took him along with him to his government. It was there that he left the Church of Rome for that of the Reformed; and having taken his leave of the Marquis returned to Paris, after he had communicated with the Proteſtants at Is-ſur-Tille near Dijon. He continued but a ſhort time at Paris, and retired to Preuilly, a little town in Touraine, where he ſtaid ſome years. The Univerſity of Saumur was then in a flouriſhing

In this Diſſertation he endeavours to ſhew, that the famous teſtimony of Joſephus concerning our Saviour is ſuppoſititious; and obſerves, I. That there are many things in it inconſiſtent with the character of Joſephus, who was a Phariſee, a Jewiſh Prieſt, and zealous for his Religion. II. That the ſtyle of it is unlike that of Joſephus. III. He objects to theſe words Ἰησοῦς τις. and to this expreſſion, εἴγε ἄνδρα αὐτὸν λέγειν χρή, which ſeem to intimate that Jeſus was God, whereas the Jews expected their Meſſiah to be only a man. IV. That the Author of this Teſtimony did not pay ſufficient regard to the ignorance of his Gentile Readers, for whom his Antiquities appear chiefly to be written. V. That there is no mention of John the Baptiſt's going before him. VI. That the paſſage is not connected with the preceding, ſo that it appears like an interpolation. VII. That it appears from St. Jerom's words that he ſuſpected a fraud here. VIII. That it is not taken notice of by Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, Theodorit, or Photius. IX. He produces two paſſages out of Origen's Commentaries on St. Matthew, and his Books againſt Celſus, in oppoſition to this Teſtimony, as it now ſtands, and endeavours to ſhew, that the contrary ſenſe was rather contained in the manuſcripts of Origen. X. That Euſebius, upon whoſe authority the Teſtimony depends, was the Author and Interpolator of it. Poſtquam ſatis, ut videtur, à nobis probatum eſt in hoc teſtimonio Joſephi fraudem poſteris factam fuiſſe, unum nunc ſupereſſe videtur, quod quis ex me percontetur, quonam ſcilicet tempore ſuſpicer illud παρεγχείρημα admiſſum fuiſſe? Quæ res haud difficulter inveniri poteſt: id enim ab Origenis tempore ad Euſebii ætatem factum, mihi liquet dejerare. Ille autem circa annum CCXXII & paullo inferius florebat; at Euſebius ſub Conſtantino Magno. Conſtat autem ex iis, quæ ſunt à nobis ſcripta ſuperius, nondum eam corruptelam in Joſephi libros irrepſiſſe, quo tempore ſcribebat Origines. Itaque conſtet neceſſe eſt, id intra illud tempus admiſſum fuiſſe, quod ab Origine ad Euſebium fluxit. Mihi autem imprimis credibile ſit, auctorem hujus τιχογράφου eſſe Euſebium. At the cloſe of this Diſſertation he remarks, that if any perſons ſhould cenſure him for want of piety in preſſing theſe objections, he would aſk them, what affinity there is between light and darkneſs, Chriſt and Belial; and whether the truth of the Chriſtian Religion ought to be united to the pious frauds of a jealous zeal? "Otherwiſe, ſays he, why do not we admit "thoſe trifling writings, commonly read under the title "of the Sibylline Oracles, and other pieces of that "kind, in which a great many true and glorious "things are ſpoken of our Saviour? When the Spi"rit of Divination or of Python, which we read of "in the Acts of the Apoſtles, ſtiled St. Paul and Silas "very truly the Servants of the moſt high God, and de"clared that they ſhewed the way of ſalvation; tho' "the falſe ſpirit ſpake truth, yet St. Paul did not think "that he ſtood in need of the teſtimony of the Devil, who "was a lyar from the beginning. And thus I think I "may juſtly affirm, that we have no occaſion for this "teſtimony in favour of Chriſt, which has been frau"dulently inſerted." Si qui porro erunt, ut ſunt varia hominum judicia, qui exiſtiment, non ſatis piè feciſſe me, qui hæc moverim; ex iis perconter libens, ecquid commune eſſe putent lucem inter & tenebras, Chriſtum inter & Belialem. Nihil, ut opinor. Quid autem? Veritas Chriſtianæ Religionis cum fraudibus timidæ pietatis conjungi debeat? Ne dixeris. Alioqui nugatoria illa ſcripta, quæ vulgo ſub Sybillarum nomine leguntur, & alia id genus, quibus de Jeſu D. multa & verè & magnificè memorantur, cur, quæſo, non amplectimur? Cur olim &c. He owns indeed, that he was greatly averſe to that gloomy and timorous kind of Religion, ſo commonly approved of; but that no perſon could ſhew that he had ever in the leaſt departed from true and genuine Religion. "I entertain, continues he, no "ideas of the Deity, which are low and mean, and "and depreſs him to our bodily ſervices, but on the "contrary am fully perſuaded, that thoſe people, "who diſtort their eyes and lift up their hands to "heaven in the churches with ſo much affectation, "and ſighing cry perpetually, Lord, Lord, and by "that means impoſe on the vulgar, cover themſelves "with the ſanction of pretended piety, while "they are really hypocrites. So much difference do "I think there is between form and true piety, be"tween the ſtage and the church, between a theatri"cal actor, and a ſincere worſhipper, who, as Chriſt "ſays in St. John, worſhippeth the Father in ſpirit and "in truth." Scio equidem, & ultro confiteor, longè me ab illâ lacrymoſâ & meticuloſâ pietate, quam hodie video in vulgus tantopere placere, naturâ & moribus abhorrere, ut qui maximè; ſed veræ tamen ſinceræque pietatis officio digreſſum unquam fuiſſe, me qui probet, hominem ſcio natum neminem. Videlicet de Deo nil parvum, nil humile ſentio; nihil, quod eum ad corporis noſtri miniſterium deprimat. Quin contra, mihi planè perſuaſum iſtos, qui in templis orantes ſibi oculos miſerè pervertunt, manuſque ad cœlum perpetuo jactant, qui ſuſpirabundi identidem exclamant, Domine, Domine, illaque ratione popello imponunt, falſo ſe religionis nomine tutari; uſque adeo magnum intereſſe diſcrimen arbitror inter geſticulationem & germanam pietatem, inter theatrum & templum, inter ſcenicum artificem & ἀληθινὸν προσκυνητὴν, ὅσις, ut ait Chriſtus apud Joannem, τῷ πατρὶ ἐν πνεύματι καὶ ἀληθείᾳ προσκυνεῖ. This Diſſertation of our Author is particularly anſwered by the learned Mr. Charles Daubuz in his Treatiſe, intitled, De Teſtimonio Flavii Joſephi de Jeſu Chriſto Libri duo. III. Luciani Timon, with a Latin Verſion and Notes. He eſteemed his Edition of Lucian de Morte Peregrini much more than this of Timon, probably becauſe the former is much more correct than the latter. IV. Epiſtolarum pars I. Saumur 1659 4to. Pars II. cui accedunt Ariſtophanis Concionatrices Græcè & Latinè cum Notis. Saumur 1665 in 4to. Theſe Letters are intirely Philological. We find in them a great number of corrections of paſſages in antient Authors; but complaints have been made againſt the boldneſs of theſe corrections, which are not all founded upon the authority of Manuſcripts, which Monſieur le Fevre never gave himſelf the trouble to conſult, but only upon his own imagination. Let us ſee what Monſieur Gallois writes in the Journal des Sçavans (7). "All the ſub- (7) Du May 3, 1666.
"jects, which the Author treats of here, are almoſt
"intirely critical. We ſee here a great many paſſages
"of the Antients explained with a good deal of "learning, ingenious conjectures in order to reſtore
"places which appeared to be corrupted, and fine re"marks relating to Hiſtory and Chronology. But it is "difficult to ſay, whether this critical talent of Monſr.
"le Fevre is of more advantage or prejudice to the "Authors of whom he treats. For if he has il-
"luſtrated ſeveral paſſages of their Works, he has "diſcovered a great many conſiderable defects in
"them, and even pretended to ſhew that they fre"quently did not underſtand the language which they "made uſe of in their Books, nor the Authors cited
"in them; and among others mentions as inſtances
"of this, Livy, Terence, Ariſtotle, Horace, Taci-
"tus, Euſebius, Euſtathius, &c. Nor is he ſatisfied
"to correct the Hiſtorians and Poets, but has carried
"his criticiſm even into the Scripture itſelf, in which "he has touched upon many places, changing the "words, tranſpoſing the Periods, and ſometimes cut"ting off intire lines, and this without bringing any "proof of what he advances, except that it ſeems to "him that the ſenſe would be better and more intel"ligible. In the Comedy of Ariſtophanes, which he "has ſubjoined to the Second Part, with a Latin Ver-
"ſion and very learned Notes, he might have omit-
"ted to explain with ſo much diligence certain ob-
"ſcenities, in which the Poet himſelf had affected to "be obſcure. At leaſt it will appear abſurd to find riſhing ſtate, and great care was taken to admit none for Profeſſors, but thoſe who were eminent for their learning. While Monſieur le Fevre lived in Touraine, the place of Regent of the third Claſs fell vacant, and being offered to him, he accepted it preferably to the Profeſſorſhip of Greek at Nimeguen, to which he was invited at the ſame time. His merit was ſoon known, and drew to him from all parts of the Kingdom, and even foreign countries, a great number of ſcholars, many of whom boarded at his houſe. He had afterwards a conteſt with the Univerſity and Conſiſtory of Saumur, on account

" in the ſame Volume an explication of ſeveral paſſa-
" ges of Scripture, and of the moſt ſhocking expreſſions
" of Ariſtophanes, that is, of the moſt impure writing
" among the Pagans, and of what is eſteemed the
" moſt ſacred by Chriſtians." V. Journal du Journal, ou Cenſure de la Cenſure. Saumur, 1666 in 4to. The judgment paſſed upon his Letters in the Journal des Sçavans, cited above, was too ſevere upon him, not to raiſe his reſentment. He ſhews by the vivacity of this piece, that he was extremely piqued. Monſr. Gallois (8) in his account of this Anſwer in his Journal did not at all ſpare our Author; and this drew upon him as keen a reply, which was intitled, VI. Seconde Journaline. Saumur 1660 in 4to. VII. Dionyſii Longini de ſublimi Libellus, Græcè & Latinè, cum Notis. Saumur 1663, in 12mo. Theſe Notes of Monſieur le Fevre upon Longinus were his favourite piece. Monſr. Graverol was of opinion, that it was this which procured him a penſion of five hundred crowns, which the King, to whom it was dedicated, gave him (9). Monſieur Boileau in the Preface to his Tranſlation of Longinus tells us, that our Author's ſhort Notes upon that Writer were of great uſe to him. Monſieur le Fevre had promiſed to write larger Notes upon Longinus; but they were never publiſhed. VIII. Phædri Fabulæ cum notis & Gallicâ Verſione. Saumur, 1664 in 12mo. IX. Lucretius cum conjecturis, emendationibus, & notulis perpetuis. Saumur 1662 in 4to. The ſecond Edition, to which are added Obertus Giphanius's Life of Lucretius and Dionyſius Lambinus's Index, was publiſhed at Cambridge in 1686 in 12mo. Our Author dedicated this Work to Monſieur Peliſſon, when he was in the Baſtille; which was an effect of his gratitude. Monſieur Peliſſon had given him a penſion of an hundred crowns, which was paid him by Monſieur Menage, becauſe Monſieur Peliſſon was not willing it ſhould be known that it came from him. It was paid for four years till the impriſonment of that Gentleman, when Monſieur Menage acquainted Monſieur le Fevre with the name of his benefactor, who was no longer capable of ſerving him (10). X. Abregè des Vies des Poetes Grecs. Le Marriage de Belfegor, nouvelle Italienne, traduite en François. La Vie de Theſée, traduite du Grec de Plutarque en François. Saumur 1665 in 12mo. The Lives of the Greek Poets are written according to Monſieur Sallo (11), " in a very agreeable manner,
" and were received with ſo much the more applauſe,
" as there was nothing written in the French Lan" guage upon that ſubject." But Monſieur Baillet (12) adds to this judgment, that as taſtes are different, the ſame ſtyle, which is agreeable to ſome, appeared very diſagreeable to others, who thought it extremely low, and full of an affectation, which, in their opinion, ſavoured a little of pedantry. Beſides, the Author might have ſaid much more upon the ſubject than he has done. However, continues Monſieur Baillet, there is a great deal of Learning in this collection; and it is a pity that he did not inform us of the vaſt aſſiſtance which he received from the Work of Lilio Gregorio Giraldi. Monſr. de la Monnoye obſerves upon this paſſage of Baillet that " Monſieur le Fevre ſometimes inclined to ſhew
" himſelf a man of wit and humour, but never the " pedant. His deſign in his Short Account of the Lives
" of the Greek Poets, was at once to inſtruct and divert
" the young Count de Limoges, to whom it is ad-
" dreſſed. As he went immediately to the ſame ſources
" with Giraldi, he could not avoid agreeing with him;
" and upon the ſame account he did not think himſelf
" obliged to cite him." Mr. Reland republiſhed this treatiſe at Amſterdam 1700 in 12°, with a ſmall number of learned Notes, but without the two other pieces which have no relation to it. The Marriage of Belfegor is a Novel tranſlated out of the Italian of Machiavel, in which that Author ſhews in an ingenious manner, that there are women ſometimes to be found, who are worſe than the Devil, and even bad enough to provoke the Devil himſelf. The Life of Theſeus is not a mere Tranſlation of Plutarch; but our Author has inſerted divers ſupplements extracted from various Writers, in order to render this Life compleat. But he has taken care to diſtinguiſh by a different character what does not belong to Plutarch. XI. Le Feſtin de Xenophon, traduit en François. Paris 1666 in 12mo, XII. Premier Alcibiade de Platon mis en François. Paris 1666 in 12mo. Monſieur le Fevre has added Notes at the end of this Tranſlation, in which he has reſtored ſeveral paſſages, which Marſilius Ficinus and Serranus did not underſtand. XIII. Traitè de la Superſtition compoſé par Plutarque, & traduit en François, avec un Entretien ſur la vie de Romulus. Saumur, 1666 in 12mo. The Diſcourſe on the Life of Romulus contains the Hiſtory of that King only till the Rape of the Sabine Women. XIV. Cl. Æliani variæ Hiſtoriæ, Græcè & Latinè, emendatæ à T. Fabro. Saumur, 1667 in 8vo. XV. Eutropii Hiſtoria Romana, cum Viris Illuſtribus Aurelii Victoris, cum brevibus Notis. Saumur, 1667 in 8vo. XVI. Juſtini Epitome Hiſtoriarum Univ. Trogi Pompeii cum Emendationibus & Notis. Saumur, 1667 in 12mo. XVII. Terentii Comœdiæ ex recenſione & cum Notulis T. Fabri. Saumur 1671 in 12mo. The Dedication to Cardinal Bouillon is dated at Saumur in May 1671. At the end of the Notes is ſubjoined a Tranſlation by our Author in Latin Verſe of Bion Smyrnæus's Lamentatio Veneris ad Adonin. XVIII. Q. Horatii Flacci Opera cum Notulis. Saumur 1671 in 12mo. XIX. Apollodori Athenienſis de Deorum origine Libri III. Græcè & Latinè recenſiti, & Notis illuſtrati. Saumur 1661, in 8vo. XX. La Vie d'Ariſtippe, traduite du Grec de Diogene Laerce. Paris 1667 in 12mo. Inſerted in the Memoires de Literature de Salengre, Tom. II. part 2. XXI. Virgilii Opera cum Notis. Saumur 1675 in 12mo. XXII. Plinii Panegyricus ex recenſione Tan. Fabri. Saumur 1671 in 12mo. XXIII. Dionyſii Alexandrini de ſitu Orbis Liber, Græcè & Latinè, ex recenſione Tan. Fabri. Saumur 1676 in 8vo. XXIV. Methode par commencer les Humanitez Grecques & Latines. Inſerted by Monſieur de Sallengre in his Memoires de Litterature, Tome II. part 2. It was reprinted at Paris in 1731 in 12mo with Remarks by Monſieur Gaulher. This piece was tranſlated into Engliſh by Mr. J. T. Philipps, now Preceptor to his Highneſs Prince William; and publiſhed in a Book, the ſecond Edition of which was printed at London in 1723 in 12mo under this title: A compendious Way of teaching antient and modern Languages, formerly practiſed by the learned Tanaquil Faber, in the Education of one of his ſons, and of his daughter the celebrated Madam Dacier, and now with little Alteration ſucceſsfully executed in London. To which are added ſome Tracts and Obſervations on the ſame ſubject, by ſeveral eminent men, viz. Roger Aſcham, (Tutor to Queen Elizabeth), Richard Carew. Mr. Milton, Mr. Locke, &c. With an Account of the Education of the Dauphin by J. B. Boſſuet, Biſhop of Meaux. XXV. Anacreontis & Saphonis Carmina, Græcè & Latinè, cum Notis. Saumur 1680 in 12mo. The Latin Notes in this Edition have been joined to the French Tranſlation of theſe Poems by Madam Dacier in the Amſterdam Edition of 1716 in 8vo. XXVI. Scaligerana, ou bons mots, rencontres agreeables, & remarques judicieuſes & ſavantes de J. Scaliger, avec des Notes de Tanneguy le Fevre, & de Paul Colomiez. Groningen 1669 in 12mo. Cologne 1695 in 12mo. This Scaligerana is intitled prima, to diſtinguiſh it from another, which was printed before, that is in 1666 under the title of Scaligeriana, ſive Excerpta ex ore Joſephi Scaligeri. Per F. F. P. P. (13); but was not made till after. That publiſhed by Monſieur le Fevre is intirely in Latin, whereas the other is a mixture of Latin and French. Francis Sigonius being deſirous of printing it ſhewed it Monſieur le Fevre and Monſieur Colomiez, who added Notes to it, which is an advantage that the other Collection wants. XXVII. Fabulæ ex Locmanii Arabico Latinis Verſibus redditæ. Saumur 1673 in 12mo.

(8) Journal des Sçavans, du 12 Juillet 1666.

(9) Niceron, pag. 121.

(10) Menagiana, tom. 2.

(11) Journal des Sçavans, du 12 Janvier, 1665.

(12) Jugemens des Savans, tom. 2. pag. 59. edit. Amſterdam 1725, in 4to.

(13) i. e. Fratres Puteanos.

account of his having written in one of his books, that he could pardon Sappho's paſſion for thoſe of her own ſex, ſince it had inſpired her with ſo beautiful an Ode upon that ſubject, which Catullus has tranſlated almoſt intire. Upon this diſpute he would have reſigned his place, if he could have procured one elſewhere. At laſt in 1672 the Prince Palatine invited him upon very advantageous terms to the Univerſity of Heidelberg; and our Author was preparing to remove thither, when he was ſeized by a fever, which proved fatal to him in eleven days. He died September the 12th 1672, aged fifty ſeven years (a). Monſieur Huet, Biſhop of Avranches, tells us (b), that he had almoſt perſuaded our Author to reconcile himſelf to the Church of Rome, and that he ſignified to him his reſolution to do ſo in a Letter written a few months before his death, which prevented him from executing his deſign. He was agreeable in his perſon, and his ſtature was above the common ſtandard, but he was a little ſtiff in his behaviour. He was good-natured, but ſomewhat blunt in his converſation. He had an averſion to a lie, and could not bear great talkers. He was very charitable and compaſſionate; and though he had broken off almoſt all converſation to apply himſelf to his ſtudies, yet he had a great affection for his friends, and took prodigious pleaſure in ſerving them. As he was a man of vaſt fire, he ſoon fell into ſtarts of paſſion in his family, but they were over in a moment. His books, his children, and his garden, in which he cultivated all kinds of flowers himſelf, were his ordinary diverſions. He eat little, and was employed almoſt always while he was eating. He ſlept likewiſe very little. In his youth he went late to bed; but he afterwards changed that method. For the laſt ten years of his life he went to bed at nine, and frequently at eight. The leaſt noiſe would awake him, and whenever he awoke he roſe, whatever the hour was. This manner of living, with the cuſtom, which he gave into in the latter part of his life by the advice of his Phyſician, of drinking his wine unmixed with water, inflamed his blood, and occaſioned the fever, which put an end to his life. In this fever, though he was for the moſt part of the time delirious, he tranſlated into Latin verſe eighteen Fables of Locman, the Eaſtern Sage. Beſides his invitations to Nimeguen and Heidelberg, he was offered the Profeſſorſhip of Greek at Utrecht and at Leyden. He was juſt ready to accept of the latter offer, and to diſpoſe of his eſtate for that purpoſe, when he was diverted from it by a letter of Mr. Diodati to him from Geneva. But others affirm, that an amour of his at Saumur had more effect upon him than Diodati's letter; and it is reported that this amour diverted him from accepting another offer at Paris [E]. We ſhall give the character of him as a ſcholar in the note [F]. By his wife Mary Olivier he had a ſon named Tanegui le Fevre, Author of

(a) See his Eloge by Monſ. Graverol; and Monſ. Huet's Hiſtoire de la Ville de Caen; and Niceron, Memoires pour ſervir à l'Hiſt. des Hommes Illuſtres, tom. 3. pag. 105, & ſeqq. edit. Paris 1727.

(b) Demonſtr. Evangel. pag. 30. & Comment. de Rebus ad eum pertinent. lib. 4. pag. 249. edit. Amſtelod. 1718.

[E] It is reported, that this amour diverted him from accepting another offer at Paris.] Having taken a journey to Paris, Monſr. Colbert, who was deſirous of fixing him there, made him very advantageous offers, which had a great effect upon his mind. But of a ſudden, when his friends leaſt expected it, he went away to Saumur. It was believed, that his impatience to ſee his miſtreſs induced him to depart ſo abruptly. He was very near being drowned in this journey in the Loire, the boat being leaky on all ſides. When he had eſcaped the danger, he wrote a Diſtich, of which Madam Dacier, his daughter, could repeat only the laſt verſe to Monſr. Graverol; but Monſr. Cappel ſupplied the firſt in this manner:

Quid juvat haud periiſſe tuis, Ligurine ſub undis,
Si pereo flammis, O Ligurina, tuis.

His miſtreſs's name was Mademoiſelle Liger. This ſudden departure greatly diſpleaſed Monſr. Colbert: and Monſr. le Fevre ſoon after loſt his penſion of five hundred crowns, which the King had granted him for ſome years. It is not known whether this gallantry of his made him liberal, or whether he was naturally ſo; but it may be ſaid, that he was very expenſive with regard to his pleaſures. He was always very elegant in his dreſs, and as highly perfumed as Anacreon himſelf. He ſent conſtantly to England for whole boxes of gloves, ſilk-ſtockings, and pins, and to Paris and even Rome for all ſorts of eſſences, perfumes, and powders, which he diſtributed among his friends.

(14) Hierozoic. 2. 18.

[F] We ſhall give the character of him as a ſcholar in the Note.] Monſr. Bochart (14) ſtyles him a man excellently ſkilled in the Latin and Greek learning, and of uncommon ſagacity and penetration. Non ſolum Græcis & Latinis Literis egregiè eſt imbutus, ſed & rarâ valet ἀγχινοίᾳ. James Tollius tells us (15), that he was a perſon of great wit and pleaſantry, and wonderfully poliſhed by all the elegance of the Greek and Roman Literature. Tanaquillus Faber, homo, dum vixit, perfacetus fuit, omnique Græcâ & Latinâ urbanitate mirificè excultus. Dr. Guy Patin (16) in a Letter dated at Paris Sept. 21. 1666 gives him the character of an excellent perſon, and one of the firſt rank of learned men of that age, and obſerves that he was juſt then returned from Paris to Saumur. Nicholas Heinſius (17) repreſents him as a man of learning and genius, but very opinionated of himſelf. Daniel Morhof (18) ſays, that he "was very learned, a good Philologer, well "ſkilled in the Greek Language, of a very fine and "enterprizing genius, who from his own imagination "made a great many alterations in Authors, though "deſtitute of manuſcripts; which raſhneſs however "ſometimes ſucceeded very well with him, who by "his own ſagacity ſaw what others ſearch for with "great labour in manuſcripts. But he is more than "once ſeverely animadverted upon by other Writers "on account of his preſumption; for he frequently "corrects at his pleaſure corrupt paſſages, and makes "prodigious alterations in Writers. Many of his con"jectures are contained in his Epiſtles, of which "there are two Books, in which he explains the paſ"ſages of the ancients contrary to the opinion of eve"ry body; tho' he is highly to be valued on account "of the elegance and acuteneſs of his genius." Tanaquillus Faber, vir doctiſſimus fuit, Philologus, Græcarum Literarum peritiſſimus, velocis ſed & audacioris ingenii, Salmurienſis Academiæ Profeſſor; multa ex ingenio ſuo in Autoribus repoſuit, etſi manuſcriptis libris deſtitutus; quæ tamen ipſi temeritas nonnunquam feliciter ceſſit, ingenii ſolertiâ ſæpe percipienti, quod alii magno labore in manuſcriptis requirunt. Non ſemel tamen aliis ob audaciam ſuam vapulat ſcriptoribus; nam corrigit ſæpe pro libitu mendoſa loca, Deſtruit, ædificat, mutat quadrata rotundis.

Multa ſuarum conjecturarum complexus eſt Epiſtolis ſuis, quarum libri duo ſunt, quibus autorum veterum loca adverſus omnium ſententias explicat, ob feſtivitatem ingenii & acumen magno in pretio habendus. Monſr. Huet, Biſhop of Avranches, aſſures us (19), that our Author was anciently ſkilled in the Greek and Roman, and all the ancient learning: Græcis Latiniſque Doctrinis, omniſque

(17) Not. in Ovid. de Arte Amandi, lib. 2. ver. 660.

(18) Polyhiſt. pag. 297, 298.

(19) Commentar. de Rebus ad eum pertinentibus, lib. 4. pag. 249. edit. Amſtelod. 1718.

(16) Lettres choiſies de feu Monſ. Guy Patin, Let. 148. pag. 416. edit. Francfort 1683.

(15) Fortuit. pag. 320.

(c) Printed at Amſterdam 1697 in 12mo.

of a ſmall Tract de Futilitate Poetices (c), who was a Miniſter in Holland, and afterwards fifteen or ſixteen years at London, and in 1697 went to Paris, where he embraced the Romiſh Religion; and two daughters, one of whom was the celebrated Madam Dacier, and the other married to Paul Bauldri Profeſſor at Utrecht. A letter of John Henry Horbius dated January the 6th 1700, and inſerted in the Acta Literaria of Struvius (d) is full of miſtakes [G].

(d) Faſc. VI. pag. 45.

omniſque antiquitatis peritia inſigniter excultum. Father Niceron obſerves (20), that "his Latin ſtyle is fine "and delicate, without any points or affectation; "every thing is expreſſed very happily in it. He "had likewiſe a good genius for Greek and Latin "Poetry; and his Verſes are worthy of the better "Ages. His French ſtyle has not the Graces of his "Latin. He knew well enough the rules of our lan-"guage, but he did not truly underſtand the true ge-"nius and natural propriety of it. As he lived in "the Province, that is, almoſt out of the world, he "wrote more by ſtudy than cuſtom, and he has not al-"ways obſerved the French turn and idiom. Be-"ſides he ſpoiled his ſtyle by a vicious affectation, en-"deavouring to mix the ſerious of Balzac with the "humour and pleaſantry of Voiture. Notwithſtand-"ing theſe defects, what he has written in our lan-"guage will ſtill pleaſe; and if his Tranſlations have "not all the elegance poſſible, they ſupport them-"ſelves by their accuracy, and the learned Remarks, "which accompany them." Mr. William Baxter in the Dedication of his edition of Anacreon (21) ſtiles him futilis Gallus, and affirms that our Author in his Notes upon that Poet every where trifles, and with all his ſelf-conceit and vanity has ſhewn himſelf abſolutely unfit for that taſk. Satius duxerim aliquantulum ingenio meo indulgere, atque adeò pro audaculo à nonnullis cenſeri, quam cum futili Gallo (Tanaquillum Fabrum dico) quicquid non intelligerem pro falſo vel ſuppoſititio habere; quem quidem virum ubique ineptiiſſe, & nihil uſquam μετὰ τοσαύτης οἰήσεως καὶ δυκησισοφίας videre potuiſſe, verum in omnibus prorſus fuiſſe ὄνον πρὸς λύραν, quod Græcis dicitur, non ſine ſummâ indignatione admiror. In another place (22) he writes thus; Nugatur etiam Tanaquillus Faber, ut ſolet; in another place (23) he ſtyles him Criticaſter Gallus.

(20) Ubi ſupra, pag. 117.

(21) Printed at London 1695, in 12mo.

(22) Note 24, pag. 13.

(23) Note 40. pag. 19.

[G] A Letter of John Henry Horbius relating to our Author . . . is full of miſtakes.] Horbius's words are as follow. In Galliâ Tanaquillus Faber defendit Copiſtas, ita vocat, Codicis ſacri non majorem Spiritus Sancti habuiſſe aſſiſtentiam, quam qui Pindarum deſcripſerunt, aut Ovidium, & contrarium urget Dominus Gepé Pariſienſis. Occaſio Litigii hinc ſumma, quod Faber in Epiſtolarum opere aliqua Novi Teſtamenti loca correxerit; quod cum reprehendiſſet Dominus Gepé, Criticæ arti infenſus, adverſarium laceſſivit eruditiſſimum, qui hoc anno duos contra ipſum libellos edidit, & in his non ſolum Dominum Gepé, ſed & Collegium ipſum, cujus membrum eſt; des Sçavans, ſive eruditorum Pariſienſium refutavit, horumque conamen in cenſendis aliorum operibus fruſtraneum eſſe dixit; addens erudite quid ad hoc requiratur, ſi eruditorum opera judicari debeant, quod cum deſit bonis illis viris, nihil boni ab ipſis expectandum eſſe. i. e. "In "France Tanaquil Faber aſſerts, that the Copyiſts of "the holy Scriptures had no more aſſiſtance of the "Holy Ghoſt, than thoſe who tranſcribed Pindar or "Ovid; and the contrary is maintained by Monſr. "Gepé of Paris. The chief occaſion of the diſpute "aroſe from this, that Faber in his Epiſtles corrected "ſome paſſages of the New Teſtament; which being "cenſured by Monſr. Gepé, who is an enemy to cri-"tical learning, and who exaſperated his very learn-"ed Antagoniſt, Faber publiſhed this year two Books "againſt him, in which he confuted not only Monſr. "Gepé, but likewiſe the whole College des Sçavans or "learned men at Paris, of which he is a Member, "and aſſerted that their attempt to paſs a judgment up-"on the works of others is to no purpoſe, ſhewing "with great erudition what qualifications are neceſſary "for paſſing a judgment upon the writings of learned "men; which being wanting in thoſe honeſt Gentle-"men, nothing valuable is to be expected from them." What a number of errors are here in a few words? I. Who could diſcover Monſr. Gallois under the name of Monſr. Gepé, whom Horbius thro' a pleaſant miſtake thought proper to make an Author, becauſe Monſr. Gallois has prefixed to his Journal des Sçavans the two Letters G. P. which ſignify Gallois Prêtre? II. Horbius gives us to underſtand that there was then a ſociety conſiſting of ſeveral perſons engaged in writing that Journal. But this was not the caſe in Monſieur Gallois's time. III. It ſeems by what he ſays of Monſieur Gallois, that this learned man abſolutely rejected Criticiſm; which is falſe, ſince he only condemned the abuſe of it. IV. The two pieces publiſhed by Monſr. le Fevre are not of the year 1670, but of 1666. T.

FEVRET (a). Monſieur Charles Fevret, ſon of Monſieur James Fevret, the King's Counſellor in the Parliament of Dijon, was born at Semur in Auxois in the year 1583.

(a) See the Advertiſements concerning the 2d edition of Monſ. Bayle's Dictionary.

The famous Monſieur Genebrard, Archbiſhop of Aix, and Prior of our Lady at Semur, was an intimate friend of James Fevret, whom he ſtiles in his works, Patronum rebus omnibus ornatum, i. e. "his Patron adorned with all kind of perfections." He deſired him to ſuffer his ſon to accompany him in his journey to Rome; but this Prelate was found ſuddenly dead in his bed by his ſervant, who went to call him up the very morning he was to ſet out.

Monſieur Bongars, ſo well known to all men of letters, and by his works, was alſo one of James Fevret's friends. He wrote to him to aſk him his ſon Charles, who went to meet him at Mets in the year 1602, and attended him in his journey into Germany, whither King Henry IV ſent him Reſident from France to the Electors and Princes of the Empire.

Charles left him to go and ſtudy the Law at Heidelberg a famous Univerſity of Germany. Monſieur Godefroy was at that time Law Profeſſor there. He took great care of Charles Fevret, who was recommended to him by ſeveral perſons of quality and merit; he took him into his own houſe, and made him hold public diſputations with great applauſe.

In the year 1607 Charles Fevret returned to Dijon, where he married Miſtreſs Ann Brunet of Beaulne, by whom he had nineteen children. They brought up fourteen of them together during eight years. After his wife's death, which happened in the year 1637, he cauſed his bed to be made one half narrower, and did never marry again.

He gained great reputation at the Bar at Dijon, where he pleaded a great while with much eloquence and ſtrength, and did ſeveral public actions, for which he was univerſally eſteemed.

He was choſen Counſellor to the three eſtates of the Province.

In

In the year 1629 King Lewis XIII being come to Dijon in order to puniſh the Authors of a popular inſurrection, Charles Fevret was choſen to petition the King that he would be graciouſly pleaſed to pardon the guilty. He ſpoke for all the Corporations, and made ſuch an elegant diſcourſe, that the King commanded him to print it, and to ſend it to him at Lyons. His Majeſty pardoned the authors of the ſedition, and granted to Charles Fevret the place of Counſellor in the Parliament of Dijon. But as the performance of a Prince's command often depends on his Miniſters, Charles Fevret was given to underſtand, that the King's intention was, that he ſhould exerciſe himſelf the office of Counſellor, which his Majeſty had granted to him; but he refuſed it, becauſe he would not quit his profeſſion of an Advocate, of which he acquitted himſelf with ſo much glory and reputation. He was therefore obliged to be content with the poſt of King's Counſellor Secretary to the Court, with a penſion of nine hundred livres, which he obtained gratis.

As he was frequently ſent a Deputy to the Court, he was known to Monſieur de Marillac keeper of the Seals of France, who honoured him with his friendſhip.

As early as the years 1626, and 1627, Monſieur, the King's brother, had choſen him for his Counſellor in ordinary in all his affairs, and the Prince of Condé had made him Intendant of his houſe, and of his affairs in Burgundy.

He was continued in the ſame poſt by his ſon Lewis de Bourbon Prince of Condé, and during the life of theſe two Princes he was honoured with their favour in a very diſtinguiſhed manner. Frederic Caſimir Prince Palatine of the Rhine, and his conſort Amelia Antwerpia, born Princeſs of Orange, did alſo chooſe him for their Counſel and their Intendant for their affairs in Burgundy.

Charles Fevret had a particular correſpondence with all the learned Civilians in his time.

He publiſhed in 1645 a ſmall Latin Treatiſe, De claris Fori Burgundici Oratoribus. i. e. "Of the famous Lawyers belonging to the Court of Burgundy.

The firſt edition of his famous Treatiſe of Abuſes, and of the true Subjects of Appeals called by that name of Abuſe, was publiſhed in 1653. He enlarged it by half, which occaſioned a ſecond edition of it, publiſhed in 1667 after his death. The ſame Treatiſe has been reprinted a third time in 1677. He made an excellent Tranſlation of Pybrac's Quatrains in Latin Verſes, printed at Lyons in 1667, with a Commentary under this title, De Officiis Vitæ Humanæ, ſive in Pybraci Tetraſticha Commentarius.

Several Authors have mentioned him and his works in honourable terms. His motto was, Conſcientia Virtuti ſatis amplum Theatrum eſt. i. e. "Conſcience is a ſcene large "enough for virtue.

He died at Dijon in the year 1661, aged threeſcore and ſeventeen years: he left two ſons, both Counſellors in the Parliament of Dijon, and two grandſons, one of whom is alſo Counſellor in the Parliament of Dijon, and the other is Counſellor in the Parliament of Mets.

☞FIDDES (RICHARD) a learned Divine and polite Writer of the eighteenth Century, was born of reputable parents at Hunmanby near Scarborough in Yorkſhire, in 1671. From his infancy he diſcovered a ſtrong inclination to letters; to cultivate which he was more eſpecially encouraged by his uncle the Reverend Mr. Fiddes of Brightwell in Oxfordſhire, who was as a father to him. After having read the uſual Claſſicks at a private ſchool at Wickham, in the neighbourhood of Scarborough abovementioned, he was admitted into Corpus Chriſti, and then into Univerſity College in Oxford, where his genius, his ſprightly converſation and winning behaviour gained him many friends. Having taken his Bachelor's degree with applauſe in 1693, and exerciſed the genteel employment of Collector in the Univerſity abovementioned he returned to his friends, and married the ſame year Mrs. Jane Anderſon, a Gentlewoman well deſcended and of a good fortune. The year after he was ordained Prieſt by Dr. Sharp Archbiſhop of York; who being pleaſed with his behaviour and abilities, honoured him with his familiarity, and was very kind to him. Not long after he was preſented to the living of Halſham (about ninety pounds per ann.) in Holderneſs in Yorkſhire, where his affable behaviour, and his cloſe application to the duties of his function, endeared him to his pariſhioners. Here he was ſo unhappy as to be deprived in a great meaſure of his ſpeech [A], till which misfortune he had been admired for the ſweetneſs of his voice and the gracefulneſs of his delivery, the people ſome miles round flocking to his Sermons. He had ſo happy a memory,

[A] To be deprived, in a great meaſure, of his ſpeech.] Halſham being ſituated in a marſh, is conſequently very unhealthy, as our Author found to his misfortune, himſelf and his family being frequently afflicted with agues there. Going one Sunday afternoon to preach for a friend, whoſe living was two miles from his own, his ſpeech was almoſt taken from him at the cloſe of the Sermon, after which he had a violent fit of ſickneſs, and was ſcarce ever able to ſpeak but with the utmoſt ſlowneſs, and that very inarticulately. As Halſham was ſo prejudicial to our Author and his family, his Dioceſan, Dr. Sharp Archbiſhop of York, diſpenſed with his reſidence at his benefice for the future; upon which he removed to Wickham and continued there ſome months. A remarkable circumſtance was, that on ſome occaſions, as when he was in chearful company, which he liked, two or three glaſſes of wine (for he never was a drinker) would elevate his ſpirits in ſuch a manner, that he would deliver himſelf with the ſame fluency, and almoſt as articulately, as before the unhappy accident abovementioned.

a memory, that he retained every thing he read [B], and therefore never made uſe of a book in preaching. Being no longer able to diſplay his talents in the pulpit, and having a very numerous family, he reſolved to apply himſelf entirely to writing, and coming to London in 1712, was exhorted by many very ingenious men to devote himſelf to that way of life. By the favour of Dr. Swift Dean of St. Patrick's in Dublin [C], he was introduced to the late Earl of Oxford, who gave him the moſt kind reception, and appointed him one of his Chaplains. He would certainly have riſen in the Church, had it not been for the impediment abovementioned; the late Queen, to whom he was introduced on occaſion of his publiſhing a volume of Sermons [D], expreſſing great eſteem for him. She ſoon after appointed him Chaplain to the Garriſon at Hull, and would have made an handſome proviſion for him and his family, had ſhe not been ſnatched away ſo ſuddenly. At this time he was perſonally acquainted with and very much eſteemed by many of the fineſt Writers his contemporaries. By the generoſity of his friend and relation the late Dr. Ratcliff, he took the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, and was afterwards complimented by the Univerſity of Oxford with his Doctor's Degree, in conſideration of his great abilities as a ſcholar (a). The firſt work by which he more immediately diſtinguiſhed himſelf was a Body of Divinity [E], which, as well as his Sermons, was publiſhed by ſubſcription. Loſing his patrons upon the change of the Miniſtry in 1714, he loſt the Chaplainſhip of the garriſon abovementioned [F], and his family increaſing in proportion as his circumſtances leſſened, he was obliged to apply himſelf to writing with greater aſſiduity than ever. He now compiled the Life of Cardinal Wolſey [G], for which he had a large ſubſcription; a conſiderable number of perſons

(a) The Doctor himſelf takes notice of this, in the dedication of one of his Sermons, where he ſays, "It affords "me an opportunity of paying my moſt "humble and "public acknowledgments for the "Diploma I "lately had the "honour of receiving from "thence (the "Univerſity of "Oxford) and "after the moſt "honorary manner." Fiddes's vol. of Sermons, pag. 568. folio.

[B] He had a very happy memory.] By this faculty eſpecially he was enabled to preach a Sermon without the leaſt preparation for it. Being at Eberſtone church in Yorkſhire, a little after he had taken Orders, the Clergyman who was to have officiated that morning, happening to be taken ill, and there being no other to be immediately procured, the Churchwarden went to the pew where Mr. Fiddes ſat, and acquainting him with the accident, deſired him to ſupply the Gentleman's place. Our Author had no Sermon about him; he would willingly, at firſt, have been excuſed; but at laſt, yielding to intreaties, he went up into the pulpit; opened a Bible; and after meditating a few minutes, made an ex tempore Sermon which gave great ſatisfaction to his auditors.

[C] By the favour of Dr. Swift.] This very ingenious Gentleman had a great eſteem for our Author; and recommended his intereſt with the warmth and cordiality of a ſincere friend, on all occaſions, as appears from the following paſſage. "If this prefatory "addreſs may be of any uſe, which you are the beſt "able to determine, I ſhall be glad to ſee it made "public; tho' from no other motive of vanity, ex"cept that of being thought to have a ſhare in your "friendſhip; and to have received the moſt ingenuous, "the moſt ſenſible, and ſeaſonable proofs of it. In "particular, from your recommending me to that "noble Mecænas of the age (*), who diſpenſes his fa"vours with a magnificence, &c (1).

(*) The late Earl of Oxford.

(1) A Prefatory Epiſtle concerning ſome remarks to be publiſhed on Homer's Iliad &c. By R. Fiddes, B. D. pag. 3, 4. Lond. 1714, 12°.

[D] On occaſion of his publiſhing a volume of Sermons.] The title is, Fifty two practical Diſcourſes on ſeveral ſubjects; Six of which were never before publiſhed. By Richard Fiddes D. D. Rector of Halſham, and Chaplain &c. It is in folio, and was printed in 1720 (2). The Collection in general is dedicated to Dr. Wake the preſent Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and to Sir Arthur Kaye, Member of Parliament for the County of York. Eleven of theſe Sermons, which had been publiſhed before, are inſcribed to particular perſons. In the Dedication to Sir Arthur, the Dr. obſerves, that "the "end of his making theſe Diſcourſes public, being to "expoſe ſome of the prevailing errors and vices of the "Age, and to perſuade men to be ſolidly good and "religious, I thought it might be very ſubſervient to "this end to prefix a good name to them (3)."

(2) The peruſal of theſe Sermons is recommended, pag. 32. of Advice to a young Student; with a method of Study for the firſt four years. London 1730.

(3) Dedicat. pag. xxiii.

[E] The firſt work by which he more immediately diſtinguiſhed himſelf, was a Body of Divinity.] It is in two volumes in folio, the firſt of which is entitled, Theologia Speculativa; or the firſt part of a Body of Divinity under that title: wherein are explained the principles of natural and revealed Religion. By Richard Fiddes, B. D. Rector of Halſham, and Chaplain to the Right Honourable Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl of Mortimer. London 1718. fol. It is dedicated to Sir William Dawes, late Archbiſhop of York, and, as the Author tells us, was written principally to promote true and ſolid piety, upon clear and convincing reaſons (4). As this work, which met with a very favourable reception from the public, is eaſily met with; and a good extract of it was given in Mr. de la Roche's Bibliotheque Angloiſe and Memoirs of Literature (5), I ſhall not ſay much of it here. The Doctor in the courſe of his Preface tells us, that he had conſulted, eſpecially on matters of greater importance, and difficulty, the beſt Authors (6): and gives his reaſons why he choſe to compoſe his Syſtem of Divinity from his own ſtudy and obſervation, rather than extract it from our Engliſh Sermons (7). "However, continues "he, if there be any perſon, who in purſuance of a "method ſo often talk'd of, may think proper to ex"tract a Body of Divinity out of our Engliſh Sermons; "as he may be ſupplied with materials for his pur"poſe, eſpecially as to modern performances, at a "very eaſy rate; ſo his pains in putting them toge"ther, may deſerve, for any thing I know, to be "very well received by the public (8)." As the reverend Mr. Stackhouſe has compoſed his Body of Divinity on this plan, what is here ſaid by our Author, might poſſibly induce him to ſpeak ſo unfavourably of the Doctor's work, at the cloſe of an Encomium which he at the ſame time makes on his ſtyle and manner of writing. "Doctor Fiddes, ſays he, was "a polite rather than a learned man, and his want of "Books, and other proper encouragements, put him "under the neceſſity of entertaining us with a fine ſtyle, "and manner of expreſſion, whereof he was certainly "a very great Maſter, when he knew himſelf inſuf"ficient to go to the bottom of his argument. It is "a melancholy reflection that a perſon of his genius "ſhould be ſo far neglected by the world, as to live "in want of any thing; but while we lament his "misfortune in this reſpect, we cannot but, at the "ſame time, in ſome meaſure, condole with his rea"der, who, in the latter part of his work more eſpe"cially, to his great joy, will meet with abundance of "excellent words; but as he reads over a page or two, "to his great ſurprize and diſappointment, will meet "with words only (9)." Doctor Fiddes's ſecond volume is entitled, Theologia Practica, or the ſecond part of a Body of Divinity under that title; wherein are explained the Duties of natural and revealed Religion: London 1720. fol.

(4) Dedication to the Archbiſhop, vol. 1.

(5) See the note [X].

(6) Ibid.

(7) Ibid. pag. xv, xvi. The great Lord Bacon adviſed the compiling of a Body of Divinity after this method, as the Rev. Mr. Stackhouſe obſerves.

(8) Ibid. pag. xvii.

(9) Introduction pag. ii. to a Complete Body of ſpeculative and practical Divinity. By Tho. Stackhouſe, A. M. Vicar of Beenham in Berkſhire, 2d edit. London 1734, folio.

[F] Upon the change of the Miniſtry in 1714, he was removed from the Chaplainſhip of the garriſon abovementioned.] The late Earl of Oxford had been chiefly inſtrumental in procuring it him. Upon the Doctor's loſing it, Archbiſhop Dawes, and Biſhop Smalridge waited on his late Majeſty, who thereupon reſtored him. But he did not enjoy his Chaplainſhip the ſecond time above a month; a Gentleman at Court getting him removed in favour of one whom he patronized.

[G] He now compiled the Life of Cardinal Wolſey.] The title is, The Life of Cardinal Wolſey. With ſeveral copper ſons diſtinguiſhed for their learning and titles, honouring him with their names and intereſt on that occaſion. This work being attacked with great ſeverity in the London Journal, and the Author charged with being a Papiſt, the Doctor wrote a Vindication both of his Work and of himſelf [H]. The great encouragement which copper plates. By Richard Fiddes, D. D. &c. London 1724. folio. It is dedicated to the Chancellors, Vice-Chancellors, the Doctors, with the other Members of the two Univerſities. In the Preface, the Doctor * expatiates on the occaſion of his compiling this Work, the method and ſtyle of it, the principles on which he proceeds, the materials wherewith he was furniſhed, and the defects relating to it. The Reader will find ſeveral particulars relating to this Work in the following Note, &c.

* There are two folio editions of this work.

[H] This Work being attacked with great ſeverity in the London Journal, the Doctor wrote a Vindication &c.] This was written but a little before his death, and is intitled, An Anſwer to Britannicus, compiler of the London Journal. By the Compiler of Cardinal Wolſey's Life, lately publiſhed. London 1725. This Anſwer conſiſts of two Letters, in the firſt of which our Author, to obviate the charge of Popery which had been brought againſt him, ſays, " It may not be improper to de-" clare, that I do not think my ſelf affected by any " thing you have ſaid, or can ſay to my prejudice, " in relation to your chimerical charge of Popery: if " by Popery you mean (what you can only mean by " writing againſt the Life of Cardinal Wolſey, pub-" liſhed by me) either the true primitive doctrine of " the Church of England, as contained in the wri-" tings of her genuine ſons, and her public confeſſions; " or elſe the true principles of Chriſtian morality, " by which, I have every where endeavoured to ſhew " in that Life, all the counſels and actions of men, " whether in a public or private capacity, are to be " inviolably directed... But if you intend, that every " man is a Papiſt or Popiſhly affected, who aſſerts " any of the following propoſitions; that God is the " author of peace and not of confuſion; that the " Chriſtian Church is a regular and viſible ſociety, " founded by the Son of God; that there is a conti-" nued ſucceſſion of Paſtors in it, who derive their " powers from Chriſt, and which no human authority " can either confer, or alter the original method of " conveying; that ſuch Paſtors have certain inaliena-" ble, inherent, and therefore independent Rights, " which the Civil Magiſtrates, as ſuch, cannot exer-" ciſe, and of which the Civil Magiſtrate here in " England have diſclaimed all right of exerciſing. " If this is your notion of Popery, the wit of man " cannot contrive any method in order to introduce " Popery, ſo effectual as by propagating this no-" tion (10). Again, in reſpect to morality, if you " infer that every man is a Papiſt, or ought to be " reputed a Papiſt, who endeavours to obviate popu-" lar and unjuſt calumnies, how general ſoever; who " diſcovers in what he writes any ſentiments of hu-" manity or good nature; who thinks it an act of " hiſtorical juſtice to repreſent both the vices and vir-" tues of great men, without diſtinction of parties, " in a true light, eſpecially their virtues; though I " know it is more agreeable to a certain malignity " of temper in ſome men, to vilify and traduce all " thoſe who are not in their own narrow way of think-" ing, whatever good qualifications they may other-" wiſe poſſeſs: or, if to decry corruption and breach " of truſt, cruelty and oppreſſion, and all falſe poli-" ticks, diſhonourable to God, reproachful to human " nature, deſtructive to the ſtate, and commonly in " the event, by ſome ſecret over-ruling diſpoſition of " Providence, to the authors of them: in a word, if " to expreſs a juſt indignation at the abuſe of power " in any kind, or in any ſtation; if this, Sir, is your " notion of Popery, conſidered in relation to moral " life, I will readily own, that there is ſcarce a page " in the Life of the Cardinal, which does not afford " clear and undeniable evidence, whereby your charge " againſt me may be directly ſupported (11)." The Doctor afterwards ſays, " to fly out with ſo great fury, " to vilify and traduce me, without any notice given, " or the leaſt opportunity of explaining my ſelf; this, " I conceive, is neither reconcileable with the maxims " of common probity, or of Chriſtian piety (12). " There is a vile inſinuation, which you ſeem much " inclined to improve as far as you are able, as if I had " advanced ſome things in prejudice to the royal ſu-" premacy; againſt which, as I have not ſaid any thing " that can render me obnoxious, ſo I ſhall always be " ready to aſſert it, in the ſenſe of our Articles and " other public Teſts (13). All I have done in relation " to this nice point of ſupremacy, is, to mention it in " general, without determining any thing upon it, " or even deſcending, as I had once deſigned, to ſpe-" cify the particular arguments on both ſides of the " queſtion relating to it (14)." Our Author, after declaring his opinion with regard to non-reſiſtance, takes notice of an error he had been guilty of, in his Life of Cardinal Wolſey. " Upon the faith, ſays " he, of the printed copies of that Life by Caven-" diſh, without collating them in that particular, as " I ought to have done, with the Authentick Manuſ-" cripts, which I had the opportunity of conſulting, " I have made uſe of an expreſſion which ſeems to " import, that the Cardinal poiſoned himſelf; and from " whence it has been the vulgar opinion, that he " actually poiſoned himſelf. I have endeavoured to " prove, indeed, from the circumſtances he was in, at " the time he is ſuppoſed to have done it, that the " expreſſion ought not to be taken in the moſt ſtrict " and literal ſenſe; but the true anſwer to all captious " and malevolent Readers of that paſſage is, that we " do not find it in the written Manuſcripts of the " Cardinal's Life by Cavendiſh, which are of the beſt " authority; but it has been maliciouſly inſerted in " the printed copies by ſome enemy (15)." Our Author, in his ſecond Letter to Britannicus, declares it his opinion, that every man has an inalienable right of judging for himſelf, " but this, continues he, can " give no private perſon a commiſſion to diſturb the " peace of the ſociety, whereof he is a member. I " am ſtill of opinion that men ought to proceed even " in the reformation of public abuſes in a regular " way; and that the church being a ſociety founded " by Chriſt, till the providence of God open ſome " regular method of reforming ſuch abuſes as may " have crept into the Eccleſiaſtical Adminiſtration, it " is not in the power of any private member whatever " arbitrarily to introduce a change in it (16)." He next ſpeaks of the impartiality with which (as he declares) he drew up the Life of Cardinal Wolſey. " Though he had ſome great and generous qualities, " I was far, when I wrote his Life, from deſigning " a perfect character. I charge him with ſeveral " faults, but was willing, conſidering ſome popular " unjuſt prejudices, under which he has all along " ſuffered, to obviate them, ſo far as they might be " obviated, upon juſt and reaſonable grounds: and " after all the noiſe that has been made concerning " my partiality to him, I have not yet been charged " upon ſufficient evidence with one falſe fact, or with " one falſe inference from any true fact, or facts re-" lating to him. And, I believe, it will be diffi-" cult for you to find many inſtances of my failure " in either kind, though ſome poſſibly may be found " in both. However, had I really been under ſome " favourable prejudices in compiling the Life of ſo " great a Prelate and Miniſter of State, who em-" ployed all his Eccleſiaſtical revenues not in a ſa-" crilegious application of them to private uſes, and " all the revenues ariſing from his civil employments, " not to aggrandize his own family, but in acts of " public munificence, eſpecially towards the advance-" ment of Learning; which glorious deſign both our " Univerſities have ſo often and ſo juſtly celebrated; " though in this reſpect I had not indeed written " Cardinal Wolſey's Life, according to the ſtrict rules " of hiſtorical juſtice; yet an error, which for the " ſake of ſo many beneficent actions, had inclined me " to cover even a multitude of faults, would certainly " have been more pardonable, than the method ac-" cording to which, I perceive his Life would have " been written, under your direction, with all bitter-

(10) Anſwer to Britannicus, pag. 6, 7.

(11) Idem, pag. 8.

(12) Idem, pag. 16.

(13) Idem, pag. 18.

(14) Idem, pag. 19.

(15) Idem, pag. 30.

(16) Idem, pag. 35.

which his Cardinal Wolſey met with, prompted him to undertake the Life of Sir Thomas More, and that of Dr. John Fiſher, Biſhop of Rocheſter; but when he had gone thro' a great part of this work, his manuſcript was loſt [I]. He left behind him a widow and ſix children [K]. Beſides the works abovementioned, he wrote an Epiſtle concerning the Iliad of Homer [L]; a Defence of the Latin Epitaph, which John Sheffield late Duke

" neſs and wrath, and anger and clamour and evil " ſpeaking (17)." Our Author then declares, that his Life of Cardinal Wolſey was not written under any direction, as had been objected by Britannicus (18); and afterwards proceeds to vindicate the charge brought againſt him by that Writer, with reſpect to pious foundations. Dr. Knight Prebendary of Ely, having referred to the Life of Cardinal Wolſey in queſtion, at the cloſe of a Sermon, where he has theſe words; " How ſhould we... ſhew our indignation at thoſe, " who, though they call themſelves Proteſtants, yet " are highly engaged in ſapping the very foundations " of their own Religion, and do all they can to render " thoſe Tenets, which we have all abjured, palatable " and plauſible to unthinking minds, by throwing " dirt upon the happy Reformation of Religion " amongſt us, as has been lately done by ſome " Writers (19)." In anſwer to this, our Author only refers Dr. Knight to what he had addreſſed to Britannicus in the Pamphlet in queſtion. Dr. Knight, a little after our Author's death, attacked him in the ſevereſt terms, accuſing him of ſpeaking irreverently of Eraſmus, probably... ſays he, becauſe he had by his writings favoured the Reformation.... He (Dr. Fiddes) cenſures the Reformation... and to give it the more home ſtrokes.. goes to the very root of it, and does all he can to evince the unjuſtifiable grounds it proceeded upon; ridicules the inſtruments of it; and would inſinuate that there was a change made for the worſe, and therefore palliates ſome of the moſt abſurd Doctrines of the Church of Rome, which were happily thrown off at the Reformation (40). He afterwards goes much farther, in the latter part of Eraſmus's Life, aſſerting among other particulars, that our Author has moſt partially, and indeed ſcandalouſly reflected upon the opening the Reformation, laying on the groſſeſt colours to hide the deformities of Popery. But all this.... plainly ſhows, how little regard the Author (Dr. Fiddes) had to truth, and how good an inclination to Popery (21). Dr. Knight then proceeds to give the true (as he aſſerts) riſe and occaſion of writing this Life of Wolſey (22), which he declares to have been at the ſollicitation of the late Biſhop Atterbury, on occaſion of the diſpute in which he was engaged with Dr. Wake the preſent Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Dr. Knight ſays that " Biſhop Atterbury " ſupplied our Author with his own collections." (for the writing the Life of Cardinal Wolſey) " directed " him to the ſtock of others, procured him the whole " party of ſubſcribers, entertained him at his Deanery " at Weſtminſter, ſuggeſted matter and method, " turned him to authorities and conjectures, and laid " the whole plan for forming ſuch a Life as might " blacken the Reformation, caſt lighter colours upon " Popery, and even make way for a Popiſh Pre- " tender (23)." As our Author himſelf has endeavoured to anſwer much the ſame charge when brought againſt him by Britannicus, I ſhall only refer the reader back to it, and to the aſſeverations of his friends, mentioned in the text. Dr. Fiddes indeed had given occaſion for part of this ſurmiſe, by his ſaying in print, a very learned Prelate generouſly offered ... to let me compile the Life of Cardinal Wolſey ..... in his houſe... I ſhould under ſuch a Direction not only have had the benefit of many curious and deep reſearches into Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity, but of the beſt and moſt uſeful inſtructions both in reſpect to the matter and the conduct of my work.... But... I had not thoſe aſſiſtances which were expected from a perſon, able, as I had grounds to believe, above any other to direct me in a work, which he had ſometimes thoughts of undertaking himſelf (24). This ſuſpicion was likewiſe heightned by the elogium he made of Biſhop Atterbury a little before his deprivation. " I ſhall not ſays our Author, " incur any cenſure for paying a debt of gratitude to " a learned Prelate, under his preſent circumſtances, " or for celebrating thoſe great talents, wherein, as " a perſon of capacity and letters, his moſt inveterate " enemies muſt allow him to excel... It is ignoble " and unjuſt, becauſe men are charged with high " crimes either to refuſe them thoſe grateful acknow- " ledgments which are due to their beneficial actions, " or to deny their extraordinary and diſtinguiſhing " abilities, on other accounts (25)." But our Author was miſtaken in imagining, that he would not incur any cenſure on this account; no circumſtances having, perhaps, contributed more to raiſe up a ſpirit of indignation againſt him. This was owing to the complexion of the times, and might be very neceſſary, conſidering the dark things which were ſuppoſed to be then hatching, though unknown to our Author. Another thing which gave no little umbrage was, Dr. Fiddes's attending regularly on the late Earl of Oxford during his confinement in the tower; the Doctor thinking himſelf eſpecially obliged to attend on his Patron at ſuch a juncture, when men are often deſerted by thoſe who call themſelves friends, and ſtand in the greateſt need of conſolation.

[I] He loſt his manuſcript.] An Advertiſement was publiſhed, but without effect, a little after the Doctor's death, by the reverend Mr. Barcroft, his ſon-in-law, offering a reward to any perſon who could produce the manuſcript. In the propoſals for this undertaking, it is ſaid, " that the compiler of Cardinal Wolſey's Life, " having in the progreſs of that work, met with ſeveral " curious Memoirs relating to the character and conduct " of Sir Thomas More, ſometime Chancellor of Eng- " land, and John Fiſher of Rocheſter, cotemporaries " with the Cardinal, hath been adviſed to publiſh the " Lives of thoſe two great men; and doth according- " ly propoſe to publiſh them in Michaelmas Term " 1725, upon a proſpect that an attempt of this kind " may be of ſome ſervice, towards a better illuſtrati- " on of the hiſtory of the time wherein they flouriſh- " ed, both in reſpect to the political and eccleſiaſti- " cal ſtate of affairs (26)." Theſe two Lives were to make about 120 ſheets in a large letter; and the four firſt ſheets, which are in the hands of one of the Doctor's intimate friends, are written in a ſtyle ſuitable to the dignity of hiſtory; and ſhew that he had not been ſparing in his reſearches. The late Mr. Oldiſworth, who had ſeen the manuſcript in queſtion, offered to complete the two Lives, in caſe they ſhould be found. Some perſons now living have ſeen a great part of this manuſcript.

[K] He left behind him a widow and ſix children.] His eldeſt daughter was married to the late ingenious and reverend Mr. Barcroft, Curate of St. George's Hanover Square, who abridged Biſhop Taylor's Ductor Dubitantium, or Rule of Conſcience, and publiſhed it in two volumes 8vo. His eldeſt ſon lives in a reputable way, and his youngeſt ſon is now an undergraduate in Hart-Hall, Oxford.

[L] He wrote an Epiſtle concerning the Iliad of Homer.] Here follows the title A prefatory Epiſtle concerning ſome Remarks to be publiſhed on Homer's Iliad: occaſioned by the propoſals of Mr. Pope towards a new Engliſh Verſion of that Poem. To the reverend Doctor Swift, Dean of St. Patrick's. By Richard Fiddes B. D. Chaplain to the right honourable the Earl of Oxford. London 1714. It is a pamphlet in twelves, and contains 108 pages. After the prefatory compliments, in which an Elogium is made of Mr. Pope's genius, and the motives that prompted our Author to draw up this piece, he tells Dean Swift, " What I propoſe here, by " the way, prefatory to the Remarks is,... in the " firſt place to ſay ſomething more particularly in de- " fence of ſo bold an undertaking. Secondly, to give " a general idea of Homer's character, from the great- " eſt authorities and beſt Criticks among the ancients; " thence I ſhall proceed to ſhew the uſefulneſs of my " deſign: and laſtly the method wherein I thought " proper to purſue it (27)." With regard to the firſt head, the Doctor ſays, as an apology for his undertaking, " I am in hopes of ſaying at leaſt ſomething new

(17) Ibid. pag. 39, 40.

(18) Ibid. pag. 40.

(19) A Sermon preached in the Cathedral Church of Norwich, before the Mayor, &c. On Tueſday Octob. 20, 1724. By Samuel Knight, D. D. London 1724.

(20) The Life of Eraſmus, more particularly that part of it which he ſpent in England &c. Introduction, pag. xv, xvi. Cambridge, without date (it muſt be 1725 or 1726) 8vo.

(21) Idem, pag. 381.

(22) Ibid.

(23) Idem, pag. 382.

(24) Introduction, pag. 12, 13. of the Life of Cardinal Wolſey, by Dr. Fiddes.

(25) Idem, pag. 13.

(26) Copied from the Propoſals now before me.

(27) A prefatory Epiſtle... on Homer's Iliad, pag. 10, 11.

Duke of Buckingham, compoſed for his own monument [M]; a Treatiſe of Morality.

" new upon my ſubject, and am aſſured of writing " ſeveral that are new to myſelf, which did not " occur to me in reading what others have written " upon the ſubject, but were the reſult of my own " obſervations; and ſeemed naturally, in my way of " thinking, to ariſe out of the paſſages which occa- (28) Idem, pag. 11, 12. " ſioned them (28)." And afterwards, " Were the " Writers upon Homer more numerous than they are; " yet as in perſons who have much the ſame features, " there is a different air of the face or manner of ad- " dreſs, whereby other people are differently affected; " ſo among writers on the ſame ſubject, could we ſup- " poſe them to write with an equal propriety of " thought and expreſſion, ſtill there is a certain ſpirit " peculiar to every one of them, which diſtinguiſhes " him, and ſometimes renders even what is leſs regu- " lar and beautiful in the compoſition, yet more agree- " able to thoſe who like his way, or are inclined to (29) Idem, pag. 14, 15. " favour him (29). On the ſecond head the Doctor, " ſpeaking of Homer's character, obſerves that he who " could accommodate what he wrote to the different taſte, " manners, and inclinations of men, and in different " ages, muſt have been a perfect maſter in the art of " writing, and the knowledge of things. None but " an univerſal genius could have pleaſed all men, at (30) Idem, pag. 18. " all times (30)." Under this head our Author expa- tiates particularly on the great veneration which the Antients had for Homer; the homage Ariſtotle paid to his writings; and the objections that were made to them by Plato, which the Doctor endeavours to an- ſwer. He then proceeds to his third head, to ſhew the uſefulneſs of his deſign, on which occaſion he ſays, " Though Homer has been commented upon by " a great many learned men, who, as their genius or " method of ſtudy led them, have taken his works as " it were to pieces, and ſeverally conſidered him with " reſpect to his Stile, his Grammar, his Philoſophy, " and Geography, and almoſt all the bright and pro- " per characteriſtics of an Author; yet none, that I " know, has written a critique upon him, ſo uſeful " as might be wiſhed, and which preſents us, in one " entire view, with a draught of his greateſt beau- (31) Idem, pag. 74, 75. " ties (31)." Something like this obſervation is made in the Notes on Mr. Pope's noble tranſlation of the Poet in queſtion. " Of all the Commentators " upon Homer, there is hardly one whoſe principal " deſign is to illuſtrate the poetical beauties of the " Author. They are voluminous in explaining theſe " Sciences which he made but ſubſervient to his Po- " etry, and ſparing upon that noble art which conſti- (32) The Iliad of Homer, tranſlated by Mr. Pope, vol. 1. In the Obſervations on the 1ſt Book, pag. 1. " tutes his character (32)." The Doctor then re- marks " That though Homer is to be admired for " theſe and all other beauties of ſtyle, yet his ſenti- " ments are ſtill more admirable for the entertainment " and inſtruction they afford us; eſpecially at an age " when this Poet is uſually read, and a competent " ſkill in the language ſuppoſed, it may be proper to " engage youth in the more manly and generous ex- " erciſe of their thoughts upon him, and to ſhew " them thoſe maſter ſtrokes of his wit, wherein he " ſhines and ought to be imitated. It is an error to " think, that to be able to render Homer in Latin or " Engliſh is to underſtand him. Though he is one " of the moſt clear and perſpicuous Writers in the " world, yet his deſign and the ſublimity of his " thoughts are not always diſcoverable at firſt (33) A prefatory Epiſtle .... on Homer's Iliad, pag. 82, 83. " view (33)." After a variety of reflections, our Author proceeds to his fourth and laſt head, viz. the method in which he intended to purſue his undertak- ing, and on this occaſion he tells us his deſign was Firſt, " To examine the Iliad by the rules of Epic " Poetry, and to conſider in general the other poetical " beauties of it; more eſpecially with reſpect to the " noble ſimplicity, harmony, and perſpicuity of the (34) Idem, pag. 104. " Poet's diction (34)..... Secondly, to conſider the " moſt material objections that have been raiſed againſt " Homer, with reſpect to the Iliad, by antient and " modern critics, or which, ſays he, might ariſe from (35) Idem, pag. 206, 107. " my own obſervation (35)." And laſtly, " to defend " Homer, but ſo far only as he appears defenſible, " from the ſeveral charges that have been brought " againſt him, and particularly by Plato and Scali- " ger (36)." The Doctor concludes with expreſſing (36) Idem, pag. 113. his thanks to Dr. Sherlock the preſent Biſhop of Saliſbury, for his general directions; and Dr. Prat, Pro- voſt of Dublin, for his approbation of his work (37). (37) Idem, pag. 117. It may not be improper to obſerve, that our Author had not leiſure to go through with his deſign.

[M] A Defence of the Latin Epitaph which the Duke of Buckingham compoſed for his own monument.] It is a pamphlet, a ſmall octavo, and contains ſixty pages. The complete title of it is. A Letter in anſwer to one from a Free-thinker: occaſioned by the late Duke of Buckinghamſhire's epitaph: Wherein certain paſſages in it that have been thought exceptionable, are vindicated; and the Doctrine of the ſoul's immortality aſſerted. To which is prefixed, A verſion of the EPITAPH, agreeable to the explication given of it in the Anſwer. With an Introduction, containing Extracts of two Letters relating to the conduct of that noble Lord. By Richard Fiddes. D. D. London 1721. Here follows the famous Epitaph, and the verſion which our Author gave of it.

Pro rege ſæpe, pro republica ſemper:
Dubius, ſed non improbus vixi.
Incertus morior, ſed inturbatus.
Humanum eſt errare, & neſcire.
Chriſtum adveneror, Deo confido,
Omnipotenti benevolentiſſimo.
Ens Entium miſerere mei.

" Much for the prerogative, ever for my country:
" I lived irregular, not profligate.
" Tho' going to a ſtate unknown, I dye reſign'd.
" Frailty and ignorance attend on human life.
" Religiouſly I worſhip Chriſt, in God confide
" Almighty, and moſt merciful.
" O thou principle of all beings, and firſt of " Cauſes, have compaſſion on me."

This tranſlation, which, at firſt ſight, will not be thought faithful in ſeveral places by many, occaſioned a free-thinker to write a Letter to the Doctor, to which the latter anſwers, " What I deſign in the firſt place, " is to convince you, if I can, that your judgment " concerning the Epitaph which gave occaſion of your " writing to me, is precipitate and groundleſs; and " that ſuppoſing it were really well grounded, yet the " conſequences which you would draw from it, will by " no means follow in a juſt and ſtrict way of reaſoning. " When I have laid before you, what it may be pro- " per for me to ſay in reference to theſe two particu- " lars, I ſhall examine whatever may deſerve to be " further conſidered in your Letter, with an impartia- " lity, of which no free-thinker, in the ſenſe accord- " ing to which you declare yourſelf one, can have any " cauſe to complain. I only deſire, as to the firſt ar- " ticle, this very reaſonable conceſſion may be made " to me, that the late Duke of Buckingham was ca- " pable of expreſſing himſelf conſiſtently, and that he " would be particularly careful to do ſo in an Inſcrip- " tion, compoſed by himſelf in order to be placed on " his monument. If this, (and certainly no one can " deny me the benefit of it,) be granted; and if I " can ſhew, there is nothing in that Inſcription, but " what may be explained in a good ſenſe, and what " ought not to be otherwiſe explained, ſuppoſing a " due conſiſtency in the ſeveral parts of it; then, Sir, " this concluſion will inevitably follow, that the cen- " ſure which you have paſſed upon it is raſh, and " withal highly injurious to the memory of that no- " ble Peer. I ſhall not here deſcend to examine every " branch of this remarkable Epitaph, after a particu- " lar and diſtinct manner, but only conſider thoſe ar- " ticles of it, which are chiefly pretended to have " given cauſe of offence, to ſome pious, learned, and " good men (38)." The Doctor then proceeds to his (38) A Letter occaſioned by the late Duke &c. pag. 25, 26. Examination. He had before given the following Ex- tract of a Letter written to him by a Gentleman, upon whoſe integrity he could depend (39). " I can aſſure (39) Ibid. pag. 7. " you that my Lord Duke had conſtantly Prayers at " his own houſe, and that I was often with his Grace " at them; that, as to the Sacrament, he took it at Morality [N]; and a book on the Sacrament [O]. He died in 1725, aged fifty four years, at Putney, at a country ſeat of his good friend John Anſtis Eſq; the preſent Garter King at Arms (b), and was buried in Fulham Church-yard, near the remains of the excellent Dr. Compton Biſhop of London, to whom he had been very much obliged. With regard to the aſperſions that were caſt upon him, both in his life time and after his death, as being a writer of no abilities, and one who would not ſcruple to proſtitute his pen; the firſt is ſufficiently invalidated by the compliment which was paid him by the Univerſity, by the great regard which ſo many ingenious men had for him, and by the works he has left; as the latter is, in a great meaſure, by the whole tenor of his life, in every part of which he ſhewed the utmoſt diſintereſtedneſs [P]. The Doctor was probably ſincere in the notions which he entertained of the hierarchy [Q]. His misfortunes in the latter part of his life, were chiefly owing to his too ſtrong attachment to a party which he thought the moſt juſt, without knowing the violent

(b) I write this in 1736.

" leaſt four times every year, and ſometimes oftner... " And farther, I can particularly aſſure you, he took " it at Church ſix weeks before his death (40)." The inference which our Author draws from this paſſage is as follows. " How any perſon who did not retain in his " mind ſome lively and powerful ſenſe of Religion, and " of the Chriſtian Religion, could ſo frequently, and " upon no viſible motive, but a conviction of Duty, " attend the worſhip of God, and communicate in " the moſt ſolemn inſtituted rite of it; but eſpecially " how ſuch a perſon could upon any grounds be ſup- " poſed to queſtion the truth of the Chriſtian Revelation " in general, let thoſe judge, I do not ſay, who regulate " their judgment by Chriſtian Principles, but by the " maxims of common candour and ingenuity (41)." He ſays in another place, " to ſhow what diſpoſition " ſome perſons, out of their great humanity were in " to fix the worſt ſenſe upon this inſcription, they " made no ſcruple in ſeveral copies that were diſperſed " abroad, to add to the original text, Deo confido, by " inſerting the word ſolo, which had been indeed " more excluſive of our Lord's Divinity, but not ab- " ſolutely ſo: for it cannot be juſtly inferred that any " perſon does not believe in Chriſt, as God, from an " expreſſion which yet may properly be uſed on ſup- " poſition that Chriſt is really God (42)," Our Author concludes his defence of his Tranſlation in theſe words. " If I have erred in this occaſional defence of " a noble Lord, diſtinguiſhed by many ſhining and " ſuperior talents, or in any part of it, my error has " been on the charitable ſide; and I ſhall humbly " ſubmit every thing I have ſaid to correction, eſ- " pecially where it may proceed from a zeal for Reli- " gion, ſo fervent as I know it to be in perſons who " have taken a diſtaſte at this Epitaph. I would not, " upon any motive whatever, be chargeable with de- " ſigning the leaſt prejudice or diſſervice to the cauſe " of true piety: but we are obliged by all the rules " of candour and common ingenuity to put the moſt " favourable conſtruction on the words, as well as on " the actions of men, which they will reaſonably " bear. And the obligation we are under of con- " forming to thoſe rules is ſtill more powerful, where " we are to ſpeak the ſenſe of thoſe perſons who are " no longer capable of ſpeaking for themſelves (43)."

(40) Idem, ibid.

(41) Idem, ibid. and pag. 8.

(42) Idem, pag. 39.

(43) Idem, pag. 41.

[N] A Treatiſe of Morality.] The title is this, A general Treatiſe of morality formed upon the principles of natural Reaſon only; with a Preface in anſwer to two Eſſays lately publiſhed in the Fable of the Bees, and ſome incidental remarks upon an Inquiry concerning Virtue, by the Right Honourable Anthony Earl of Shaftsbury. By Richard Fiddes D. D. It is in octavo, and printed in 1724. Our Author ſays in his Preface. " My deſign in the following Treatiſe is to eſtabliſh " the great truths of morality upon their proper and " natural principles. I have therefore conſidered " them without drawing any proofs in the proſecu- " tion of my ſubject from Divine Revelation. For " though ſeveral paſſages are occaſionally cited by me " from the holy Scriptures, yet they are not propoſed, " as having the ſanction of Divine Authority, but " only, as conveying to the mind certain natural " truths, relating to morality, in a better light; and " expreſſing them with a more peculiar and irreſiſtible " force. I was principally induced to undertake this " work upon the two following motives; a deſire of " obviating ſuch ill effects as might ariſe from the " dangerous tendency, if not the formed deſign, of ſe- " veral Pieces that have been lately publiſhed towards " ſubverting the very principles of natural Religion: " and a proſpect at the ſame time, of ſupplying in " ſome meaſure, what has been reckoned among the " things that are wanting, a general Treatiſe of mo- " rality in the Engliſh tongue. For though we a- " bound with great variety of practical Diſcourſes, " and many of them very excellent as to particular " moral ſubjects; yet I do not know one Engliſh " Writer who has undertaken to ſtate the principles " of morality in one intire ſyſtem from natural reaſon " only, or to reſolve them into their diſtinct and pro- " per grounds. None of the antient moraliſts have " treated this ſubject in its due extent, or after a " manner wherein there is nothing defective. Cicero, " in his admirable Book of Offices, has gone farther " than moſt, if not than any of them, towards eſta- " bliſhing moral duties, upon the natural aptitude, " beauty and decency of them. He was a lover of moral " truth, and had devoted himſelf much to her ſervice; " but he did not follow her to the place of her habi- " tation. He ſought her every where upon earth, " in ſolitary life, in private families, and in the pub- " lic Adminiſtration of Affairs; but ſhe is only to be " found in Heaven, and by contemplating there, the " moral perfections of the Divine Nature, the rule " and model of perfection to all other intelligent " Beings (44)." The Doctor in the courſe of his Preface undertakes the defence of ſome of the opinions of the noble Author of the Characteriſticks, in oppoſition to the Author of the Search into the nature of Society; and afterwards attempts a vindication of Dr. Ratcliff from the aſperſions caſt upon him on account of his benefaction to the Univerſity of Oxford.

(44) Preface, pag. ii, iii, iv.

[O] A Book on the Sacrament.] It is dedicated to the preſent Lady Kaye, and intitled, Dr. Fiddes's preparative to the Lord's Supper; or a Diſcourſe, wherein the nature of this holy Sacrament, the ends for which it was inſtituted, and the duties required, in order to a more worthy receiving of it, are conſidered, and certain prejudices are obviated. To which is added, an Appendix, with Meditations and Prayers formed on the principal parts of the Diſcourſe; with Devotions proper before and at the time of receiving the holy Sacrament, and after it.

[P] In every part of which he ſhewed the utmoſt diſintereſtedneſs.] Few people who have a true paſſion for ſtudy, are ſtrongly attached to the good things of this world. The pleaſure they meet with in Books is ſo exquiſite, that it will allow them but little time to purſue any other. It is all things to them, and therefore no wonder that ſuch perſons are not ſollicitous for preferment. Had our Author been eager after it, he might have embraced ſome opportunities that offered themſelves, and which he neglected purpoſely to ſerve his friends. It is well known that he was ſtrongly invited to ſtand for the headſhip of Univerſity College in Oxford, but that he declined it purely to oblige a friend.

[Q] The notions which he entertained of the Hierarchy.] The Doctor himſelf has the following words on this " occaſion. If I have been, (tho' I am not conſcious " of it).... ſometimes tranſported with an exceſs of " zeal for the eſſentials of the Chriſtian Church, or " ſuch as I ſincerely, and in my conſcience, believed " to be ſo; this will (nay I have a right to expect " it ſhould) more eaſily recommend me to the favour " of thoſe, who make ſincerity the only condition of " recommending all men to the Divine favour (46)."

(45) Fiddes's Body of Divinity, vol. 2. in the Introduction, pag. iv.

violent lengths they were going [R]. All who were intimately acquainted with him declare, that he expreſſed his averſion to Popery on all occaſions, and preached many Sermons in oppoſition to the Romiſh tenets; and there is now extant a long manuſcript letter, in his own hand, written a few months before his death to a Proteſtant Lady, to diſſuade her from turning Roman Catholic [S]. His application to his ſtudies was [R] Without knowing the violent lengths they were going.] This has been the caſe of many honeſt and ingenious men, of which numberleſs inſtances are to be found in hiſtory. Virtue and probity, it is well known, are not attached to any Party, Sect or Religion, but are blended more or leſs in all. "There "are, we charitably hope, ſome perſons who have "honour and probity, of all perſuaſions, prejudices "of education, and circumſtances of life; method "of ſtudy or choice of particular books, reaſons of "dependance and gratitude, of friendſhip and al"liance... have too viſible a power... So that ma"ny perſons of excellent and ſuperior qualities, "both intellectual and moral, are yet ſometimes ob"ſerved to be moſt unhappy in the choice of their "party, of their friends and converſation.... We "ought nevertheleſs duly to acknowledge to them "thoſe good qualities wherein they excell; and they "who would confine all merit within their own pale "diſcover a narrowneſs of mind which is not to be "endured in private converſation, but muſt neceſſa"rily deſtroy the credit of a public Hiſtory, by "rendring it ſuſpected to perſons of the greateſt can"dor and ingenuity (46)."

(46) Introduction to the Life of Cardinal Wolſey. by R. Fiddes, pag. xix.

[S] A Letter to a Proteſtant Lady, to diſſuade her from turning Roman Catholic.] Since my drawing up the text of this Article I have been favoured with the Original Letter in queſtion. As it was written only for private uſe, it conſequently will give us a better idea of the Doctor's real opinion with regard to the ſubject treated of in it, for which reaſon I ſhall tranſcribe ſome part of it.

"Madam,

"I ſhall make no apology for diſcharging my "duty which I could not have diſpenſed with my ſelf "in omitting, on the laſt occaſion of my waiting "on you. Neither can I have any apprehenſions, "that a perſon animated with ſo juſt ſentiments of "piety would take the leaſt umbrage at a freedom "which was really owing to pious motives, and upon "a ſubject of the laſt importance.

"I now proceed directly to the queſtion you were "pleaſed in particular to propoſe, and ſhall ſpeak to "it with that impartiality which a matter of ſo great "conſequence requires, without conſidering my ſelf in "the leaſt as perſonally affected with it, on account "of my ſacerdotal character.

"The queſtion is, How it appears that ſuch of the "Biſhops in this Kingdom, who ſeparated from the "Communion of the Romiſh Church, at the time of the "Reformation, could validly ordain? I made no diffi"culty of aſſuring you, in general, that the proofs "whereby we make the validity of their ordinations "appear, are as full and ſatisfactory as the nature of "hiſtorical proofs will admit. It is at preſent in"cumbent on me to confirm in a more particular "manner what was then ſaid upon this Article."

The Doctor, after having fully anſwered the following objections made to the ordination of the firſt reformed Biſhops, viz. "that they gave no expreſs "power to thoſe whom they ordained of conſecrating "the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt... That the "Civil Power has too great a ſhare in electing perſons "to the Epiſcopate... And, what neceſſity was there "for an Act of Parliament for the making and conſe"crating the Engliſh Archbiſhops and Biſhops, if the "validity of their orders had not been in ſome mea"ſure at leaſt doubted, even by thoſe who had made "it?" Our Author, I ſay, after anſwering theſe objections, proceeds, in the ſecond place, to conſider ſome of the moſt popular objections that have been made againſt the ordination of our reformed Biſhops, with reſpect to the regularity of them.

Firſt, ſays the Doctor, "It is pretended that they "were done in oppoſition to the Biſhop of Rome, "and ſo were uncanonical.

"I cannot here enter into the detail of the con"troverſy about the extent of that Biſhop's power, "and muſt therefore ſatisfy myſelf with ſome general "reflections, as they occur to my thoughts, upon "which I ſhall be ready at any time to make a par"ticular explication, when you may think fit to ho"nour me with your commands to that end. And,

"1ſt, I would obſerve, that all Biſhops were "ever acknowledged by the Catholick Church as equal "in power, tho' a ſuperiority of Order according to "that of the Roman Cities was granted to the Biſhops "of thoſe Churches, which were planted in them. "And therefore the Biſhops of Antioch and Alexan"dria were declared in the firſt general Council, to "have the ſame authority over the Churches ſubor"dinate to them, that the Biſhops of Rome had within "their own precincts."

"2dly, That the Patriarchal Power depending on "the conſtitution of the Roman Empire, whatever "pretence there might be, for the Supremacy of the "Biſhop of Rome over theſe Weſtern parts of it, "while they continued under one head; yet when it "was afterwards broken into ſeveral diſtinct ſovereign"ties, the very reaſon upon which that Patriarchal "Authority was firſt inſtituted ceaſing, all obligation "to canonical obedience to that Biſhop, as Patriarch "of the Weſt, of conſequence ceaſed with it.

"3dly, If after the Kings of England became in"dependent of all foreign Power, the Pope was ſtill "by their connivance permitted to interpoſe by his "authority here, in affairs of an eccleſiaſtical nature; "this would be no reaſon why ſucceeding Princes "might not, eſpecially upon wiſe and juſt conſidera"tions, reſume their right, and exclude that Biſhop "from exerciſing a power which he held by the mere "favour of their predeceſſors.

"4thly, If it ſhould be ſaid, that the Patriarchal "Dignity was at leaſt an inſtitution of prudence, and "ought for that reaſon to have had a due regard paid "to it, even after the diſſolution of the Roman Em"pire: We anſwer, that no prudential inſtitution is "to be extended beyond the reaſons of making it, and "ought always to give way to ſuperior reaſons of pie"ty, when a truſt which was originally repoſed, and "ſtill ſubſiſts in any perſon, by mere occaſion, for "the better edification of the Church, is employed to "favour any dangerous errors and corruptions in it; "ſuch an authority not only may, but ought to be "deſtroyed in conſequence of thoſe very reaſons, upon "which it was originally granted." The Doctor, afterwards anſwers the objection made to us, viz. "that "the Biſhops by whom Archbiſhop Parker was conſe"crated were not canonically qualified for performing "that office."

Our Author then concludes in this manner. "I "have exceeded the bounds I propoſed to my ſelf in "this Letter; but I was deſirous of giving you all "the ſatisfaction I could in a point, concerning which "the conſequences of a miſtake may prove extremely "dangerous: And I cannot think of it without a moſt "ſenſible concern, that the Church wherein you were "born and educated, ſhould loſe ſo bright an orna"ment. Not that I am of opinion, theſe conſidera"tions can be any reaſon for your continuing in an "erroneous belief or practice; yet ſo much regard is "at leaſt due to them, that both to avoid the impu"tation of levity, and to ſatisfy our own conſciences, "we ought not without impartially examining upon "what principles we have hitherto acted, implicitly "to part with them. And if ſuch an examination be "made, as I aſſure my ſelf from your piety it will; "I am alſo at the ſame time ſo confident of your mak"ing a true judgment, that I may ſafely leave you "to prefer any other communion to that of our moſt "excellent Church if you can. I ſhall bleſs God more "and more for that good providence, which afforded "me this occaſion of communicating my thoughts to "you, if they may be of any uſe towards removing "your preſent doubts, and retaining you within the "boſom of the Church, which I verily believe to be was so great [T], that he would frequently pass whole nights in writing, which, together with his misfortunes, did not a little contribute to hasten his death [V]. He had led a life of the utmost sobriety, and was remarkable for his patience [W], and submission to the divine will. He had been presented to two considerable livings (to one of them by the University) but lost both (c). Some of the foreign Journals take notice of our Author and of his works [X].

(c) These particulars, and all such in the notes, as are not transcribed from printed books, were communicated to me by persons who were very intimate with our Author.

" the best constituted in the world, whether with re" spect to its faith and worship, its doctrine or admi" nistration.

" I shall conclude with my fervent prayers to God,
" that he would in every case of difficulty be your " light and your guide, and give you a right under" standing in all things. I am,

" Madam,

" Your most faithful and obedient servant

R. Fiddes.

[T] His application to his studies was great.] They seemed to engross his whole soul, whence he would frequently discover such an absence of mind with regard to exterior objects, and things relating to common life, as surprized all about him, and sometimes occasioned very whimsical incidents: but the following which happened to him, rouzed him for some days from his lethargy. Our Author, about a year before his death, being in Oxford, had invited several persons of consequence in that University to sup with him at his lodgings. The guests came, the entertainment was got ready and spoilt, but the Doctor could not be met with in any of the Colleges. At last however he appeared; when it was found that he had been so much wrapt up in contemplation in the Bodleian Library, that he did not take notice of the shutting it up; and might have spent the whole night there, had not the inarticulate noise he made from the window occasioned a Student who was passing by to take notice of him, and procure his release by the assistance of the Janitor.

[V] Did not a little contribute to hasten his death.] It is a very melancholy circumstance when a man of genius and learning is forced to sit day and night with his pen in his hand, to support a numerous family. On one side, to have these calling upon him perpetually for a support; and on the other, to have Fame whispering for ever in his ear, that he must endeavour to make his productions worthy of immortality. These are circumstances that are hardly consistent; and therefore a fine genius in distress, has very aptly been shadowed under the emblem of a beautiful woman in a poor habit, having her right hand chained to a huge stone lying on the ground; whilst her left hand, round which are a pair of wings, is held aloft: signifying the ardor with which a genius aspires to the noblest things, whilst the unhappiness of his condition keeps him for ever low.

[W] Was remarkable for his patience.] Our Author, though he had ever been enabled to support his family with decency, had yet struggled with many disappointments, to all which he submitted with such a chearfulness, as raised the strongest admiration and pity in his friends, and particularly on one occasion, when his wife bursting into tears at a melancholy revolution in their affairs, the Doctor embraced her in the most affectionate manner, and cried, How! the wife of a Philosopher, and weep!

[X] Some of the foreign Journals take notice of our Author and of his Works.] Mr. de la Roche, in his Bibliotheque Angloise, and Memoirs of Literature, has given two large extracts of our Author's Body of Divinity. This Journalist says, that it was his opinion, Dr. Fiddes had refuted the Calvinists, the Roman Catholicks, the Socinians and Deists in a genteel and polite manner, worthy of a true Christian (47). Afterwards observing from Dr. Fiddes, that many persons ridiculed the Fathers of the Church because of their allegories; but that we ought to acknowledge the strength of their arguments, when they reason more justly; and should acknowledge that there are many beauties scattered up and down their works, he says, " I shall subjoin to Dr. Fid" des's reflection, that a judicious man of letters ought " never to discover a contempt for the Fathers of the " ancient Church, particularly because this contempt
" may cast an odium on the Christian Religion. We " are allowed to point out the errors and false reason-
" ings of the Fathers, but then we ought to shew the " highest regard to their persons (48)." Mr. de la Roche is of opinion, that the Doctor has refuted the Duke de la Rochefoucault, Mr. Bayle and Mr. Esprit with the utmost candor and politeness (49). He thinks that one passage in the Doctor's Body of Divinity, will excite the indignation of many readers, viz. his not believing that the ordination of the Ministers of Christ is valid, unless they are ordained by Bishops whose succession was never interrupted (50). Here the Journalist tells us, that the arguments which the Doctor has built on this hypothesis, appear to him too rigid. " I own, says Mr. de la Roche, that all Protestants
" ought to have preserved Episcopacy; but then we " ought not to exclude from the advantages of the E" vangelical Alliance, those who were not so happy
" as to retain the ancient government of the Church.
" I add that the Protestants of this Age ought not to " be responsible for the faults of their forefathers; and " that it would be extremely difficult to introduce any " alterations in Church Government (51)." Mr. de la Roche takes notice, that " Dr. Fiddes cites Mr.
" Jurieu so often, and speaks in such advantageous
" terms of him, that he seems to be one of his fa" vourite Authors (52)." It appears from almost every part of the Doctor's writings, that he was very fond in general of those of Father Malbranche. The Authors of the Bibliotheque Raisonnée, in giving an account of Dr. Knight's Life of Erasmus, have translated most of those passages which bear hard on the memory of Dr. Fiddes; but we are assured by the friends of the latter, that both Dr. Knight, and these Journalists after him, are mistaken particularly in two assertions. First in declaring that Bishop Atterbury had entertained Dr. Fiddes at his Deanery at Westminster (53); which the Journalists translate thus; Il le logea dans ses appartemens de Doyen de Westminster (54). i. e. " He lodged him (Dr. Fiddes) in the a" partments belonging to him as Dean of Westmin-
" ster." On this occasion the friends of Dr. Fiddes declare, that if by the word entertain Dr. Knight understood, as the Journalists translate it, lodged; it is a direct falshood, Dr. Fiddes having never lain at the Deanery of Westminster; nor even so much as studied there, as they firmly believe. With regard to the other assertion, where Dr. Knight represents Dr. Fiddes as being in the most miserable circumstances, and capable of engaging in any undertakings, which the Journalists have translated, un Auteur (Dr. Fiddes) que la misere rendoit capable de tout (55); they answer, that tho' the Doctor, in some parts of his life, was not over happy in his circumstances, yet his family were never in want of a decent support, so far from being reduced to the extremes of misery as Dr. Knight would insinuate. I.

(47) Bibliotheque Angloise, pag. 410. tom. 3. Amsterdam, 1718, in 12mo.

(48) Memoires Literaires de la Grande Bretagne, pag. 479, 480. Hague 1720, 12mo.

(49) Ibid. pag. 486.

(50) Ibid.

(51) Ibid. pag. 488.

(52) Idem, ibid.

(53) See citation (54).

(54) Bibliotheque Raisonnee, pag. 46. tom. 1. Amsterdam 1728, 12mo.

(55) Ibid. pag. 47.

FINE' in Latin Finæus (ORONTIUS) Professor of Mathematics in the Royal College at Paris, was the son of a Physician, and was born at Briançon in Dauphiné in the year 1494 (a). Being still very young when his father died, he went to Paris, where he studied with the greatest application. Anthony Silvestre who was a native of Briançon (b), and taught the Belles Lettres in the College of Montaign, was a very good friend to him, and procured him a place in the College of Navarre. The young man applied himself there to polite Literature and Philosophy (c); and though he carefully attended the Lectures of his Professors, yet he applied himself more particularly to the Mathematics,

(a) Thevet, Eloges des Hommes illustres, tom. 7. pag. m. 313.

(b) Launoius, Hist. Gymnas. Navarr. pag. 646.

(c) Idem, ibid. pag. 678.

Mathematics, for which he had naturally a very ſtrong inclination (d). He was not diſcouraged either by the contempt that Science was in then, or by the neceſſity he was under of ſtudying it by himſelf, without the aſſiſtance of any maſter; and notwithſtanding theſe difficulties, he made a very conſiderable progreſs in them (e). He acquired a great knowledge in the Mechanics, and as he had both a genius proper to invent inſtruments, and a ſkilful hand to make them himſelf (f), he gained very great reputation by the ſpecimens he gave of his ingenuity. The firſt works by which he made himſelf known, was his publiſhing and correcting John Martin Siliceus's Arithmetic, and the Margareta Philoſophica [A]. He read afterwards private Lectures on the Mathematics, and then he taught that Science publickly in the College of Gervais (g). He acquitted himſelf of that function with ſo much reputation, that he was recommended to Francis I as the moſt proper man to teach the Mathematics in the new College, which that Prince founded at Paris (h). He omitted nothing to ſupport the glory of his profeſſion; and though he inſtructed his ſcholars with great aſſiduity, yet he found time to publiſh a great many books (i) upon almoſt every part of the Mathematics. He boaſted that he had found out the Quadrature or Squaring of the Circle [B]. What the Author of his Elogy ſays upon this ſubject will furniſh us with materials for a remark. I am very much miſtaken if he is not the perſon who is mentioned in Agrippa's Letters, as a man who was a long time in priſon, becauſe he had foretold ſome things which were not acceptable to the Court of France [C]; for at that time moſt of the Aſtronomers and Geometers would meddle with Aſtrology. In order to have a notion of his ſkill in Mechanics you need only conſider the clock which he invented in the year 1553, and of which there is a deſcription in the Journal of Amſterdam for March the 29th 1694. His genius, his labours, his inventions, and the eſteem which an infinite number of perſons ſhewed him, could not ſecure him from that fate which ſo generally befalls men of letters; he was obliged to ſtruggle all his life-time with the inconveniencies of poverty [D]; and when he died he left a numerous family deeply in debt. It is true that the memory of his merit was more ſerviceable to his children, than his merit itſelf had been to him. There happened to be ſome Mecænas's, who for his ſake aſſiſted his family

(d) Thevet, Eloges, tom. 7. pag. 314.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Ibid. pag. 315.

(g) Launoi, Hiſt. Gymnaſ. Navarr. pag. 679.

(h) Thevet, Eloges, pag. 314, 315. Launoius, Hiſt. Gymnaſ. Navarr. pag. 679.

(i) See a catalogue of them in Mr. Teiſſier's Addit. aux Eloges de Mr. de Thou, tom. 1. pag. 110.

[A] The firſt work by which he made himſelf known was his ... correcting the... Margareta Philoſophica.] Monſieur de Launoi acquaints me with this. Et primo quidem, ſays he (1), nomen ſuum ab edendis corrigendiſque aliorum operibus illuſtre fecit. Nam anno 1519 è Navarra ſua Joannis Martini Silicei Hiſpani Arithmeticam typis commiſit, mendiſque pluribus expurgavit, & anno 1523 dum adhuc in Navarra cum Antonio Silveſtro degeret, Philoſophicam Margaretam, quæ rationalis ac Moralis Philoſophiæ principia duodecim libris complectitur, recognovit & prælo mandari curavit. i. e. "He made "himſelf famous at firſt by correcting and publiſhing the works of other Authors. For in the year "1519 being ſtill in the College of Navarre, he "publiſhed the Arithmetick of John Martin Siliceus "a Spaniard, in which he had corrected a great many errors, and in the year 1523, living ſtill in the "ſame College with Anthony Silveſter, he reviſed "and ſent to the preſs the Philoſophical Pearl, which "contains the principles of Logic and moral Philoſophy in twelve Books."

(1) Laun. Hiſt. Gymnaſ. Navarr. pag. 678, 679.

[B] He boaſted that he had found out the Quadrature of the Circle.] Sammarthanus aſſerts, that Orontius Finé boaſted without reaſon that he had found it, and that Providence deſigned that glory only to Joſeph Scaliger. Cum .... inter cætera volumina peculiari quodam libro quadraturam illam circuli à multis fruſtra quæſitam ſe tandem aliquando reperiſſe gloriaretur. Hoc enim de ſe facile credebat homo ſummæ doctrinæ ſibi conſcius, cùm tamen veram hujus admirabilis inventi gloriam uni Joſepho Scaligero faciliora numina reſervarent (2). i. e. "Amongſt his other volumes he wrote "a particular Book, in which he boaſted that he had "found out the Quadrature of the Circle, after which "a great many perſons had laboured in vain. He "was eaſily inclined to believe this of himſelf, being "conſcious of his great learning; though a kinder "fate deſigned the glory of that admirable diſcovery "to Joſeph Scaliger alone." Sammarthanus is in the right to ſay that Orontius Finé boaſted without reaſon, that he had invented a method to ſquare the Circle: but he is ſtrangely miſtaken, when he pretends that Scaliger is the only perſon who diſcovered that ſecret. For it is ſo far from being true that this privilege was deſigned for Scaliger alone, that it may be aſſerted this great man was farther from it than ſeveral others.

(2) Sammarth. Elog. lib. 1. pag. m. 28.

[C] I believe that according to Agrippa, he was a long time in priſon, becauſe he had foretold ſome things which were not acceptable to the Court of France.] Agrippa's words, which I ſhall quote, are taken from a Letter in which he complains of his misfortune, which he aſcribes to a Horoſcope by which he had found that the Conſtable de Bourbon would ſtill be victorious in the year 1526. The Queen Regent was very angry with the Aſtrologer for it, who ſaid thereupon, that he did not think he was to make uſe of his art in order to tell lies, and that he did not think time enough of the fate which befel a great Mathematician. I think he means Orontius Finé. Sed & neſciebam me prædario Aſtrologum conductum, quodque mihi, quod ars illa dictat, monendi dicendique jus relictum non eſſet; occurritque extemplò Orontius Parrhiſiorum inſignis Mathematicus & Aſtrologus, qui dum veriora, quàm poterat, vaticinaverat, iniquiſſima captivitate diutinè vexatus eſt (3). i. e. "I did not think that I was hired to "foretel falſities, nor that it was not lawful for me "to publiſh and declare thoſe things which I diſcovered by my art: and hereupon I called immediately to mind the fate of Orontius, a celebrated "Mathematician and Aſtrologer of Paris, who having "foretold truer things, than he might do, laboured "for a long while under a very unjuſt captivity."

(3) Agrippa, Epiſt. lxii. lib. 4. pag. m. 831. This Letter is dated from Lyons Nov. 3, 1526.

[D] He was obliged to ſtruggle all his life-time with the inconveniencies of poverty.] He had gone through the whole courſe of his ſtudies without receiving from his family that aſſiſtance which a ſcholar wants: his father was dead, and his relations neglected him (4). One can eaſily conceive that this is a very uneaſy ſituation. Thevet aſſerts (5), that Orontius Finé was ſo far from covetouſneſs, that by philoſophizing he did indeed pleaſe his mind, but did not fill his purſe. But I cannot think it was his fault, conſidering the complaints he often made to ſeveral Lords of the poverty to which he was reduced; but they did not ſeem to underſtand him; ſo that the good Orontius had nothing at his death but a great many debts, in which (to his great ſorrow) he left his dear wife Deniſa Blanch engaged, who had five ſons and one daughter to provide for. Men have a great eſteem for ſome Orators, Philoſophers and other learned perſonages, ſome of whom ſwam in riches, and others threw theirs into the ſea, as though they had been an obſtacle to their philoſophizing. The learned Finé belonged to neither of theſe (6), yet he had ſomething common with the latter, who after they had rid themſelves of their eſtates, happened to be poor with regard to riches. Let us add to theſe words what the ſame Thevet obſerves in Peter Danes's Elogy. "I cannot forbear complaining "of

(4) I do not deſign to relate the glory which from his anceſtors reflected upon him; but only that which he acquired by himſelf, without the aid, aſſiſtance, or ſupport of his relations, of which the good man complains ſomewhere in his works. Thevet, Eloges, tom. 8. pag. 314.

(5) Ibid. pag. 319.

(6) This is the third time that Thevet refutes in this paſſage what he had aſſerted, that Orontius was very far from covetouſneſs. It is not being far from it, to be poor againſt one's will.

mily in their want [E]. I ſhall quote an Author who charges him with plagiariſm [F]. You will find in Moreri that he died October the 6th, 1555. The Abbot de Brianville, who invented a kind of cards to teach Heraldry, and wrote ſome books for the uſe of the Dauphin under the reign of King Lewis XIV, was of the ſame country and of the ſame family with Orontius Finé (k).

(k) Allard, Biblioth. du Dauphiné, pag. 106.

" of the ingratitude and unthankfulneſs of ſeveral " Cardinals, Abbots, and other Prelates, who have " ſeen and heard to what poverty and want ſome men " of virtue and eminent learning were reduced, ſuch " as Iodelle, Orontius Finé, Poſtel, Regius, Belle " Foreſt, and a great many others, who after their " death did not leave wherewithal to bury them, and " yet theſe Prelates were ſo little compaſſionate, that " they did not deign to offer theſe learned men one " poor penny (7)."

(7) Thevet, tom. 2. pag. 22.

[E] There happened to be ſome Mecænas's who aſſiſted his family in their want.] Let us continue tranſcribing Thevet. He had a great many children, who being deſtitute of their father and mother, and of all means to ſupport themſelves, yet did not want aſſiſtance; for after his death ſeveral generous Lords exerted their charity for the ſupport, maintenance, and defence of the children of that man, whom they had very much loved and eſteemed in his life-time. Two of his children applied themſelves not only to the ſtudy of the Mathematicks, but alſo the one to Divinity and the other to the Law, and they have both taken their degrees in their reſpective faculties (8). In page 312 Thevet mentions John Finé Doctor of Divinity, ſon of Orontius. I have received ſome memoirs, ſays he, from his ſon John Finé Doctor of Divinity, who hearing that I was writing a ſhort account of the lives of illuſtrious men, took all the care he could to engage me to give a place in it to his father. He ſays in another place. Though his ſons have compoſed very beautiful and excellent epitaphs, yet I did not dare to inſert them, leſt it ſhould be thought, that though they be well done and contain nothing but the truth, yet they are of no weight, ſince they come from his children, who are not the proper perſons to bear witneſs to their father's reputation (9). Monſieur de Launoi (10) tells us, that this John Finé ſtudied in the College of Navarre, that he taught Philoſophy for ſome years in the College of Harcourt, that he commenced Doctor of Divinity in the year 1565, that he was afterwards Canon of Meaux, and that in the year 1608 he was Senior or Dean of the faculty of Divinity.

(8) Ibid. tom. 1. pag. 320.

(9) Ibid. pag. 321.

(10) Laun. Hiſt. Gymnaſ. Navarr. pag. 679.

[F] I ſhall quote an Author, who charges him with plagiariſm.] John Baptiſt Benedictus declares in the Preface to his Book of Sun-dials, that he has ſaid nothing of what others had very well explained, and that he confined himſelf to this method, becauſe he would not invade other people's property, and alſo becauſe he would not prevent any perſon from reading the Books of others. He adds that other Writers have not been ſo ſcrupulous, and names Munſter and Finé. Quis enim Sebaſtiani Munſteri, & Orontii Phinei horologiographias legit qui non animadverterit quam multa præter neceſſitatem de verbo ad verbum in poſterioris opere ſint tranſlata quæ poterant majori cum utriuſque laude apud priorem videnda relinqui, aut potius ab utroque prætermitti, cum alter alterius imprudens calcaverit veſtigia, & quandoque eodem errore ambo ducti cæcutientes in eandem foveam ſeſe præcipites egerint ut factum eſt, præcipue ubi agunt de deſcriptione horarii ſuper globo aut ſphærica ſuperficie convexa (11). i. e. " Who is there " that read the deſcriptions of dials by Sebaſtian " Munſter and Orontius Finé, and did not obſerve " that there are a great many things needleſsly tranſcribed word for word in the Book of the latter, " which had they been left to be read in the Book " of the former, it had been more to the reputation " of both; nay it had been better had they been " omitted by both; for as they follow each other's " footſteps, they often fall into the ſame error, and as " the blind leading the blind they throw each other " into the ditch; this happens eſpecially where they " mention the deſcription of a dial on a globe, or on " a convex ſpherical ſurface." There are two things to be conſidered here, the one is a matter of fact, namely that Finé's Book contains ſeveral Remarks tranſcribed word for word from Munſter; the other is Benedictus's way of arguing. He ſuppoſes that if Finé had not tranſcribed from Munſter it had been more to the reputation of both. He is in the right in ſome reſpects: but his reflection is ill grounded if it be conſidered in a certain light; however he ought to have explained it in a clearer manner. He ſuppoſes afterwards that they have tranſcribed each other without being aware of it. He ought therefore to have ſaid, that Munſter pirated the ſame Authors whom Finé pirated afterwards, and he ſhould have told us who theſe Authors were.

(11) Joannes Baptiſta Benedictus, Patricius Venetus, in Præfatione Libri de Gnomonum Umbrarumque ſolarium Uſu. This book was printed at Turin, 1574, in folio.

FLACIUS (MATTHIAS). See ILLYRICUS.

FLAMINIUS (MARK ANTHONY) was one of the beſt Latin Poets in the ſixteenth Century, and alſo a good Humaniſt. He was born at Imola in Italy, and was the ſon and grandſon of very learned men (a). See an account of him in Monſieur Teiſſier (b), which is more complete than that which Moreri has given. I ſhall touch only upon one particular, which they have not mentioned. The Pope had choſen him Secretary to the Council in the year 1545 (c), but Flaminius refuſed that noble employment, becauſe he favoured the new opinions, and would not therefore employ his pen for an Aſſembly, in which he knew that thoſe opinions were to be condemned. This is Cardinal Palavicini's conjecture, who ſpeaking of the honours which the Pope deſigned to confer on Flaminius, did not forget to cenſure Father Paul [A]. He heard that Flaminius had the happineſs to find out his errors ſince that time, by his intimacy with Cardinal Pool, and that he wrote and died like a good Roman Catholic. Thuanus was not

(a) See the remark [C].

(b) Eloges tirez de Mr. de Thou, tom. 1. pag. 36, &c.

(c) See the remark [A].

[A] Cardinal Palavicini . . . ſpeaking . . . of Flaminius did not forget to cenſure Father Paul.] He charges him (1) with falſely affirming that the Pope ſent the Legates word, that it was not neceſſary the Letters ſhould be diſpatched in the name of the Council, and that thoſe which he ſhould write himſelf, or which the Legates ſhould write in their own name would be ſufficient. In order to prove that this is falſe, Cardinal Palavicini obſerves, that the Pope expreſly told the Legates how the Letters, written in the name of the Councils, ſhould be directed, and ſigned. He adds, that the drawing up of ſuch Letters, and of the decrees of the Council ought to have been part of the functions of the Secretary to the Council, and that the Pope propoſed Mark Anthony Flaminius for that employment (2). Adunque il Papa fè proporre al Concilio per Segretario Marcantonio Flaminio, chiaro frà gli Scrittori Latini di quell' età, come dimoſtrano i ſuoi verſi. Ma egli ſcuſoſſi dal peſo, forſe perchè gia covava (3) nella mente l'affezione à quelle dottrine in condannazion delle quali gli ſarebbe convenuto d'eſercitar quivi la penna: auvenga che (*) in fine de gli anni ſuoi la ſalutevol converſazione del Cardinal Polo in Viterbo il faceſſe ravvedere, e ſcriver' e morir cattolicamente. But the ſtrongeſt argument this Chapter of the Cardinal contains againſt Father Paul is, that upon the Fathers of the Council's complaint that the Pope choſe himſelf the Officers of that Aſſembly, he left them a full liberty to chooſe whom they pleaſed for their Secretary, whereupon they choſe Angelo Maſſarelli proviſionally (4), and afterwards for the whole ſeſſion (5).

(1) Iſtoria del Concilio di Trento, lib. 6. cap. 1. num. 4.

(2) Ibid. num. 5.

(3) This expreſſion ſeems wrong to me, for Flaminius went backwards rather than forwards in Lutheraniſm, from the year 1545 till his death in 1551.

* Sta nella vita del Polo ſcritta dal Baccatello.

(4) That is to ſay till Priuli, who had been choſen perpetual Secretary, ſhould take poſſeſſion of his poſt, but he refuſed that employment.

(5) Palavicini, Iſtoria del Concilio di Trento, lib. 6. cap. 1. num. 8.

not ignorant of Flaminius's inclination for the Reformed party, with regard to ſome doctrines, but he excepts the article of the Lord's Supper, and I do not find that Simler contradicts him [B]. Longolius has greatly commended our Flaminius [C]. The latter's piety did not prevent him from writing a great many very tender love-verſes, though he was a Clergyman (d).

(d) Menage, Anti-Baillet, tom. 2. pag. 337.

The weakneſs of his conſtitution obliged him to keep ſuch a ſtrict courſe of diet, that he refuſed to ſup with Corradus, becauſe he feared leſt ſome other perſons might have been invited (e).

(e) Sebaſt. Corradus, in Brutum Ciceronis, pag. 43.

[B] I do not find that Simler contradicts him.] Thuanus ſpeaks of Flaminius in ſuch a manner as to make him appear a Janſeniſt rather than a Proteſtant. He ſays, that amongſt thoſe in Italy, who thought it was neceſſary to procure an effectual Reformation, there aroſe controverſies concerning faith, good works, grace, free-will, election, vocation, and glorification, and that moſt of them had ſuch opinions upon all thoſe ſubjects, as were very different from thoſe that were generally received, and that they ſupported their opinions by St. Auguſtin's authority. It was for this reaſon, adds Thuanus, that Auguſtin Fregoſe Soſteneo publiſhed at Venice in the year 1545 ſome ſmall pieces taken from that Father's works. Flaminius admitted thoſe opinions, but for the reſt he did not follow the doctrines that had been ſpread through Germany; he plainly ſhewed in a Letter that with regard to the Lord's Supper he was of the opinion of the Church; nor did he leave his native country, like ſome other perſons, with whom he had lived in friendſhip, for the ſake of Religion; of this number was Galeazzo Caraccioli Marqueſs del Vico (6). Monſ. Teiſſier has confuted this account. If we may believe Joſias Simler, ſays he (7), Thuanus was miſtaken when he wrote, that Flaminius did not approve the doctrine, which Luther had ſpread through Germany; for Simler (8) places Flaminius amongſt thoſe, who having embraced the Religion of the Proteſtants, engaged Peter Martyr Vermil, who has been ſince Miniſter at Zurich, to follow their example, and to forſake the Church of Rome. I have read the whole Life of Peter Martyr in Melchior Adam (9), and I have found there only the following particular concerning Flaminius. Peter Martyr being Superior of the Monaſtery at Naples found the truth out by reading ſome Books, and had ſeveral conferences upon religious ſubjects with ſome pious perſons, who were very zealous for the pure Religion. Mark Anthony Flaminius was one of the chief of thoſe, with whom Peter Martyr conferred upon thoſe ſubjects. I do not find any thing in this, that is contrary to Thuanus's account; and after all Simler rather deſerves to be cenſured than this great Hiſtorian, ſince Flaminius's Letter is authentick, and it is unqueſtionable that he lived and died in Italy. I have ſaid it a thouſand times; a man might acknowledge there were an hundred abuſes and diſorders in the Church of Rome, and ſeveral excellent truths in Luther's works, without thinking himſelf obliged to retire into Germany, and without pretending, that the Roman Catholicks were in the wrong in all that the Lutherans blamed (10). Monſieur Teiſſier objects againſt Thuanus Flaminius's Epigram on Savonarola's death. But this is no proof at all; an infinite number of Dominicans, tho' very good Papiſts, might ſubſcribe to that Epigram. The Letter inſerted in the Life of Galeazzo Caraccioli ſhews a great deal of piety, but we do not find any thing in it relating particularly to the profeſſion or approbation of Lutheraniſm.

(6) Cui ſententiæ accedebat Flaminius, cum in ceteris fidei capitibus doctrinæ per Germaniam tunc diſſeminatæ minime adſtipularetur. Nam & luculentum ipſius exſtat inter vulgareis clarorum virorum Epiſtolas de ſacroſancto Euchariſtiæ myſterio ex Eccleſiæ ſenſu ſcriptis mandatum teſtimonium, itaque cum alii, quibuſcum religionis cauſa amicitiam coluerat, atque in primis Galeacius Caracciolus Vici Marchio, patriam reliquiſſent &c. Thuan. lib. 9. pag. m. 177.

(7) Elog. tirez de Mr. de Thou, tom. 1. pag. 39.

(8) In Vita P. Martyr.

(9) He gives us that which Joſias Simler wrote.

(10) See amongſt other paſſages the remark [Q.] in the article CASTELLANUS at the a-linea.

[C] Longolius has greatly commended our Flaminius.] Monſieur Teiſſier quotes theſe words from Longolius (11). Know, that for a great many ages there has not been one perſon equal to Flaminius, with regard to wit, learning, virtue, and probity. I am wont to ſay, when I ſpeak of him, that I do not know, at this time, a man who has more merit, and is more unfortunate than he. I have met with other paſſages (12), in which Longolius ſhews a particular eſteem and friendſhip for Flaminius. Here follows one, which has ſome affinity to that quoted by Monſieur Teiſſier. Ego nihil ad Flaminium ſcripſi, quod neque ſcirem ut cum ipſo ageretur, neque certi quicquam haberem, ad quod literas meas accommodarem. Quin ingenio, induſtria, virtute æquales ſuos omnes longe ſuperarit, plane non dubito; ne fortuna tantæ indoli maligne reſponderit, etiam atque etiam timeo. Sed tamen velim ut animo maximo ſit, optetque ſemper ſecunda, cogitet adverſa, ferat qualiacunque acciderint, neque ſibi præſtandum quicquam præter culpam exiſtimet; à quâ Janè tam longè abeſt quam ab ea ætate, quæ vel culpam adhuc præſtare debeat (13). i. e. "I have not "wrote to Flaminius, becauſe I did not know in what "condition he was, nor where to direct my Letters "ſafely. I do not doubt but by his genius, ſkill and "virtue he excells all his contemporaries; but I "fear very much that his circumſtances will but ill "anſwer his great merit. Yet I would have him "pluck up a good heart, hope for proſperity, think "of adverſity, and ſuffer what happens, nor let him "think that he may venture upon any thing but what "is criminal; and indeed he is as far from doing any "thing unhandſome, as he is from that age in which "it is pardonable." Flaminius was at that time but a young ſcholar, and conſequently it could not be reaſonably ſaid of him, that he was the moſt unfortunate of all men. To ſay that of a man, one muſt have ſeen him turn himſelf every way, and always unſucceſsfully. Yet this paſſage acquaints us with Flaminius's ill fate; he was a young man in very bad circumſtances, for his friends were obliged to ſupply his wants, and to endeavour to procure him cloaths by recommendatory Letters. De Flaminio quod benigne polliceris, reſpondes illi omnino, quam de prolixa iſta tua atque benefica in ſtudioſos omnes natura ſemper habui, opinioni: ſed nihil eo quod oſtendis etiam nunc eſt opus. Inita eſt enim a nobis ratio, quemadmodum hic adoleſcentem tueamur. In veſtiario tantum laboramus; in quo ſi adjutus a te fuerit, otium ejus liberalitate tua conſtitutum eſſe judicabo (14). i. e. "Your kind promiſe with regard "to Flaminius does perfectly anſwer the opinion I "have always had of your good nature and generoſity "towards Men of Letters. But we have no occaſion "at preſent for what you propoſe; for we have "formed a ſcheme for maintaining that young man "here: we want only to provide for his cloathing; in "which if you aſſiſt him, I ſhall think that your libe-"rality gave him leiſure to ſtudy." By a certain Letter he wrote, he made himſelf an enemy; who reviled him in a terrible manner ſpeaking to Longolius, and who maintained in that converſation, that it was impoſſible to diſcover any virtue or wit in Flaminius, ſince he was the ſon and the grandſon of a Pedant, and a Pedant himſelf. Erras, inquit, Longoli, erras, ſi quod te vel ingenii vel virtutis lumen in eo perſpexiſſe putas, qui & ipſe pædagogus ſit, & pædagogo patre & avo natus (15). As for our Flaminius's father, I am not unacquainted with him: his name was JOHN ANTHONY FLAMINIUS. He taught the Belles-Lettres at Bologna for ſeveral years (16), and died there in the year 1536 after he had publiſhed ſome works (17). Moreri has mentioned him. As for the grandfather I know nothing of him: he is perhaps the ſame with SEBASTIAN FLAMINIUS, a native of Imola (18), and Author of the Life of Ambroſe of Sienna, a beatified Dominican.

(11) He quotes Longol. Epiſtol. lib. 3. See his Additions, tom. 2. pag. 395.

(12) See lib. 2. folio 190. and lib. 3. folio 240.

(13) Ibid. lib. 2. folio 183 verſo.

(14) Ibid. lib. 4. folio 271.

(15) Ibid. lib. 2. folio 202 verſo.

(16) Leand. Albert. Deſcript. Italiæ, pag. m. 493.

(17) See Voſſius, de Hiſt. Latin. pag. 682.

(18) Idem, ibid. pag. 678.

FLAMINIUS (ANTHONY) a learned Profeſſor of Literature in the College of Rome towards the beginning of the ſixteenth Century, was born in Sicily. He was ſuch a lover of a retired life, that he took no delight in talking either with the learned, or with the ignorant. He never invited any perſon to his houſe, and would not be invited by any. He had neither a man nor a maid-ſervant. He uſed to buy his victuals daily at a neighbouring tavern. The miſtreſs of the tavern obſerving that he had been three days without aſking for any thing, and even without appearing, entered into his room through the garden-window, and found him dead amongſt his books. He uſed to lie down upon the ground when he ſtudied (a) [A].

(a) Taken from Pierius Valerianus, de Literatorum infelicitate, lib. 1. pag. m. 23.

[A] He uſed to lie down upon the ground when he ſtudied.] This was not the leaſt proof of his odd ſingular temper. Is inopinata præventus morte a caupone vicinia, qui quotidiana edulia homini venditabat, contentionem admirante, quod jam triduum non apparuiſſet, & per hortuli feneſtellam quandam ingreſſo, inter libros quos humi ſtratos, ſtratus & ipſe lectitare conſueverat, ſempiterno oppreſſus ſomno repertus eſt (1). He had taught a long time at Rome with very deep learning. Cujus prælectionibus Roma longa annorum ſerie nihil habuit eruditius (2).

(1) Pierius Valerianus, de Literatorum infelicitate, lib. 1. pag. m. 23.
(2) Idem, ibid.

☞FLAMSTEED (JOHN), an eminent Engliſh Aſtronomer in the eighteenth Century, was born at Denby in Derbyſhire Auguſt the 19th 1646 (a). His father, whoſe name was Stephen, was third ſon of Mr. William Flamſteed of Little Hallam in that county. His mother was Mary (b) daughter of Mr. John Spateman of Derby Ironmonger. Our Author had from his infancy a natural weakneſs of conſtitution, which he could never ſurmount. He was educated at the free-ſchool of Derby, where his father lived; and at fourteen years of age, when he was newly raiſed to the head of that ſchool, he was viſited with a ſevere fit of ſickneſs, which was followed with a conſumption, and other diſtempers; which however did not ſo much obſtruct his progreſs in learning, but that he ſtill kept his ſtation till the form broke up, and ſome of his fellows went to the Univerſity; to which, tho' he was deſigned for it, his father thought it not adviſeable to ſend him on account of his diſtemper. Being thus taken from ſchool in 1662, within a month or two after he had John de Sacroboſco's book de Sphæra put into his hands, and this occaſioned him to ſtudy Aſtronomy [A]. He had already read a great deal of Hiſtory both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical; but this was a new ſubject to him, and he found great pleaſure

(a) Moſt of the particulars of the text of this article are extracted from two manuſcripts written by our Author, and communicated by the very learned and ingenious Mr. James Hodgſon, F. R. S. and Maſter of the Royal Mathematical School at Chriſt's Hoſpital in Lond. One of theſe manuſcripts is intitled, The ſelfe-inſpections of J. F. being an account of himſelfe in the the actions and ſtudies of his twenty one firſt yeares, written at ſeverall times by his owne hand. The other is intitled, Hiſtorica Narratio Vitæ meæ ab anno 1646 ad 1675.

(b) She died Sept. 7, 1649.

[A] Occaſioned him to ſtudy Aſtronomy.] In the text of this article we have given an account of his progreſs in that ſcience in his younger years, as it is repreſented in a manuſcript of his written in 1707, and intitled, Hiſtorica Narratio Vitæ meæ ab Anno 1646 ad 1675. But we ſhall give a more particular account of his ſeveral ſteps in that ſtudy from another manuſcript of his dated May the 8th 1667, and intitled, The Selfe-Inſpections of J. F. being an account of himſelfe in the Actions and ſtudies of his twenty one firſt yeares; written at ſeverall times by his owne hand. He tells us, that in 1662 he had Sacroboſco's Book de Sphæra lent him, which he ſet himſelf to read without any Director in it, but not unſucceſsfully, for here he laid the ground of his mathematical knowledge. In that winter before Chriſtmas his father taught him Arithmetic and the Doctrine of fractions, and the golden Rule of three direct and converſe. At Chriſtmas or a little after he went to Utoxeter for his health, and took with him Mr. Thomas Fale's Art of Dialling (1); and having ſeen a Quadrant formerly, whoſe fabric, as he was informed, was laid down in that book, he ſet himſelf immediately to calculate a Table of the Sun's Altitudes at all hours in the Equator, Tropics, and ſome intermediate parallel in the latitude of 53 degrees, by Mr. Fale's Tables of natural Sines; which our Author performed in Lent of that year, without any help, and before he had heard of any artificial Tables; and accordingly framed himſelf a Quadrant. The reſt of the Winter he was greatly indiſpoſed, and his diſtemper continued violent upon him the ſummer of the year 1663, when it abated a little, and ſuffered him to proſecute his ſtudies. For upon his return home, he was brought into company with Mr. Elias Grice, who told him of the artificial Tables, and ſhewed him Wingate's Canon. He procured likewiſe Mr. Stirrup's Art of Dialling, which he read this Summer with ſome other Authors on mathematical Subjects, as Mr. Gunter's Sector and Canon; and ſoon after he obtained Mr. Will. Oughtred's Canon: in all which, ſays he, I read ſome parts curſorily, not abiding a tedious prolection of any throughout, without the help or directions of any one, not being permitted (becauſe they were ſcarce to be met with) the help of any one ſo much as to expound a term unto me. His ſtudies were diſcountenanced by his father; but his natural inclination forced him to proſecute them thro' all impeding occurrences. Having got the artificial Canon he calculated ſeveral both general and particular Tables, fitting the particular ones to the latitude of Derby, viz. 53 Degrees. He collected alſo a calculative Method of Dialling from Mr. Gunter's Sector, and tranſcribed it (with a method for the conſtruction of the Quadrant, and Tables fitted thereto, calculated with his own hand,) in a ſmall paper book. In this taſk, and in peruſing ſome other Authors on various ſubjects he ſpent his vacant hours this year and the beginning of 1664. In 1664 he became acquainted with Mr. George Linacre, and Mr. Will. Litchford, deſiring the friendſhip of the former on account of his knowledge of the fixed Stars; and of the latter on account of his knowledge of the Planets. Mr. Flamſteed being deſirous to eſſay all ſorts of mathematical ſcience, and unwilling to be ſeen with Mr. Gadbury's Book, which contained Horrox's Tables, leſt he ſhould be ſuſpected to ſtudy Aſtrology, bought Mr. Street's Caroline Tables, intending when he had an opportunity, not only to learn to calculate the places of the Planets, but alſo to ſtudy their motions, and underſtand their theory; but was prevented from executing this deſign for that year. January 1ſt 1665, he applied himſelf to calculate the true places of the Planets to a given time, by his Tables abovementioned; and accordingly effected it, tho' not ſo exactly as by his following calculations, yet ſo auſpiciouſly as gave him a further encouragement to proſecute theſe endeavours; in which, ſays he, I obſerve, it was my fault to err more thro' want of care than knowledge; which ſince I animadverted, I have ſtriven with double care to prevent. He employed himſelf afterwards in writing an Almanac for the year 1666; but never offer'd it to the preſs. He had in the Summer of the preceding year calculated ſeveral new Tables, and digeſted ſome of them into a convenient Book; and this year he added ſome more unto it. He likewiſe calculated the Nativities of ſeveral of his friends and acquaintance. He wrote alſo a piece upon the conſtruction and uſes of a Quadrant with neceſſary Tables for the framing of the ſame, and of a Rule, which he had drawn, fitting both to the latitude of 53 degrees. He began this piece Auguſt 8th, and finiſh'd it on the 24th of the ſame month, intitling it his Mathematical Eſſays; and it was the firſt piece which he wrote. Auguſt 26th he ſet out for Ireland, in order to be touch'd by Mr. Valentine Greatraks, but receiving no benefit, returned to Derby September 23d following. Soon after he added an Appendix to his Mathematical Eſſays, and the Projection of an univerſal Dial, and a Catalogue of 70 of the Fixed Stars, with their right Aſcenſions, Declinations, Longitudes, and Latitudes to the year 1701, which he had compoſed by the Tychonic places, and allowing the annual proceſſion of the Fixed Stars 50″. He alſo proceeded to perfect the Calculation of the Solar Eclipſe, which was to happen June 22d 1666 in the morning, according to the Caroline Tables. In the Lent Aſſizes in 1666 he became acquainted with Mr. Emanuel Halton of Wingfield Mannor, who lent him the Richleian Tables compoſed by Natalis Durret, a Frenchman; the introduction to which Mr. Flam-

(1) This was printed at London 1626 in 4to.

ſteed

pleaſure in it; and having tranſlated ſo much as he thought neceſſary for his uſe into Engliſh, he proceeded to make Dials by the directions of ſome ordinary books; and having changed a piece of Aſtrology found amongſt his father's books for Mr. Street's Caroline Tables, he ſet himſelf to calculate the places of the Planets by them, and to inquire into the reaſons of them, in which he found little ſatisfaction, that Author being very conciſe and ſhort, and leaving the reaſons of his proceſſes to be learned from others. Having calculated by theſe Tables an Eclipſe of the Sun, which was to happen June the 22d 1666, he imparted it to a relation of his, who ſhewed it to Mr. Emanuel Halton of Wingfield-Manor, who coming ſoon after to ſee him, and finding that our Author was not acquainted with the Aſtronomical performances of others, ſent him Riccioli's Almageſt, and Kepler's Rudolphine Tables, with ſome other mathematical books, to which he was before a ſtranger. Mr. Halton, who was a good Algebraiſt, endeavoured to draw him into the ſtudy of Algebra by propoſing little problems to him, which, having not long before made himſelf acquainted with Euclid, he gave geometrical ſolutions to, and never troubled himſelf with Algebra till he removed to London. He now proſecuted his ſtudies in Aſtronomy with great vigour [B]; and in 1669 collected ſome remarkable Eclipſes of the fixed Stars by the Moon, which would happen in 1670, and calculated them from the Caroline Tables, and directed them to the Lord Viſcount Brouncker, Preſident of the Royal Society [C]. This piece being read before that Society was highly approved, and procured him letters of thanks from Mr. Oldenburg (c) their Secretary, and Mr. John Collins (d), one of their members, with the latter of whom our Author held a correſpondence for ſeveral years, and wrote a great many letters to him, moſt of which are now in the hands of William Jones Eſq; F. R. S. and of which we ſhall give the reader ſome extracts, ſince they will ſhew the progreſs of our Author's ſtudies till his ſettlement at Greenwich in 1675 [D]. From the time of the abovementioned piece's being ſteed tranſlated into Engliſh, and corrected the errors of it. Mr. Halton ſoon after communicated to him Ricciolus's new Almageſt in Latin, which our Author was extremely glad to receive, becauſe it ſhewed a method of finding the Sun's true Parallax by obſervations of the Moon's Dichotomy, which he was very deſirous of inveſtigating at that time. He ſpent likewiſe ſome part of his time in Aſtrological Studies, but ſo, ſays he, as my labours were rather Aſtronomical. Amongſt others I ſpent ſome time on Mr. Linacre's and another great perſon's ſchemes; yet could I not any ways ſatisfy my ſelf in the Arcs of Directions for the meaſuring of time, nor am I yet perfectly ſatisfy'd: yet I think Kepler's meaſures moſt rational and beſt grounded, tho' in the great perſon's nativity, which I directed, I uſed Naboyd's meaſure, which is moſt in uſe amongſt Aſtrologers. In fine, I found Aſtrology to give general ſtrong conjectural hints, not perfect declarations. After Mr. Flamſteed had received Ricciolus's Almageſt, he read it over with great attention. In 1667 ſome conſiderations of the different Equations of time uſed by ſeveral Aſtronomers, tho' well demonſtrated by none, cauſed him to endeavour after a demonſtrable Equation. He was at firſt of opinion, that the natural days were always equal; and that there needed no Equation of time; but whilſt he was endeavouring to demonſtrate this, he proved the contrary; firſt, that the Excentricity of the Earth's Orbit from the Sun's Center cauſed an inequality; and afterwards that the Ecliptic's Obliquity cauſed another inequality of the apparent day; which two cauſes applied together would make the abſolute Equation of time. He wrote a Letter of three ſheets to Mr. Halton upon this ſubject. He likewiſe endeavoured ſomething with regard to the Obliquity of the Ecliptic, the Sun's true Diſtance from the Earth, and the mean Length of the Tropical year, in April 1667.

(c) His letter was dated Jan. 14, $16\frac{72}{73}$.

(d) His letter was dated Jan. 15, $16\frac{72}{73}$.

[B] Proſecuted his ſtudies in Aſtronomy with great vigour.] He employed himſelf in calculating the places of the Planets obſerved by Hevelius, and related in his Mercurius ſub ſole viſus, from the Caroline Tables; whereby Mr. Flamſteed found that they agreed not ſo well with the Heavens, as he preſumed they had; and that further obſervations were requiſite to correct them. An Eclipſe of the Sun happening Octob. 25th 1668, he had calculated the times of the appearance from the Caroline Tables, and afterwards obſerved it: but not being yet furniſhed with convenient inſtruments for meaſuring and correcting the times, he could not believe it accurate enough to be publiſhed, tho' he found by this, that the Tables differed very much from the Heavens.

[C] In 1669 he collected ſome remarkable Eclipſes of the Fixed Stars by the Moon, which would happen in 1670, and calculated them from the Caroline Tables, and directed them to the Lord Viſcount Brouncker, Preſident of the Royal Society.] He ſpeaks of this in the Appendix to his Selfe-Inſpections in theſe words: At the latter end of the year 1669, I wrote an Almanac for the following year, not after the uſual method, but much more accurately, inſerting an Eclipſe of the Sun, that might have been obſervable, but was omitted in the Ephemerides; and five Appulſes of the Moon to Fixed Stars. But this being rejected as being beyond the capacity of the Vulgar, and returned me, I excerped the Eclipſe and Appulſes, and addreſſed them with ſome Aſtronomical Speculations to the Royal Society, ſuppreſſing my name under my anagram. My little labour was better accepted than I expected. I received a Letter of thanks from Mr. Oldenburge, the Secretary of the Society. My papers I ſent to Mr. Stanſby: he delivered them to Mr. Aſhmole, that great lover of curioſity, and he preſented them to the Royal Society. The original manuſcript of this piece is now in the hands of the learned and ingenious William Jones Eſq; F. R. S. and is inſcribed thus: To the Right Honourable William Lord Viſcount Brounker, Preſident of the illuſtrious Royal Society; as alſo the right worſhipful, worthy, and truly ingenious Henry Oldenburg Eſq;, Chriſtopher Wren, M. D. and all other the Aſtronomical Fellows of the ſaid Society: J. F. humbly preſents this Epiſtle. At the cloſe of it he writes thus; Excuſe, I pray you, this juvenile heat for the concerns of ſcience, and want of better language from one, who from the ſixteenth year of his age to this inſtant hath only ſerved one bare apprenticeſhip in theſe arts, under the diſcouragements of friends, the want of health, and all other inſtructors except his better genius. I crave the liberty to conceal my name, not to ſuppreſs it. I have compoſed the Letters of it written in Latin in this ſentence: In Matheſi a Sole fundes. I had many materials to add, but they would have ſwelled my Letter beyond its preſcribed limits. If I may underſtand, that you accept of theſe, or think them worth your notice, you ſhall e'er long hear more from yours &c. J. F.

[D] We ſhall give the reader ſome extracts of his Letters to Mr. John Collins, ſince they will ſhew the progreſs of our Author's ſtudies till his ſettlement at Greenwich in 1675.] In his Letter dated at Derby January 24th $16\frac{72}{73}$ he writes thus: "Yours of the 15th "I received; by which I underſtand, that my pa- "pers, however unworthy, were read in the Royal "Society; an honour, which I could as little either "expect or deſerve, as it merited their applauſe, or I "their thanks. My intent in addreſſing thoſe Calculi "to his Lordſhip (2), was only to give notice what "Phænomena the Heavens were about to afford us, "which, ſince I was not accommodated with inſtru- "ments ſufficient to obſerve them with the requiſite "accuracy myſelf, I made bold to preſent to his ho- "nour, whom I ſuppoſed to be amply accommodated "for ſuch obſervations. But preſcribing the uſe of a "Teleſcope

(2) Lord Brouncker, Preſident of the Royal Society.

ing read to the Royal Society, he began to have accounts ſent him of all the mathematical books which were publiſhed either at home or abroad. And in June 1670 his father taking notice of his correſpondence with ſeveral ingenious Gentlemen, whom our Author had never ſeen, adviſed him to take a journey to London, that he might be perſonally acquainted

" Teleſcope before other inſtruments, and taking occaſi-
" on thereon to urge ſomething too boldly on Mr. Hook,
" and in another on Mr. Street concerning the Ephe-
" merides, being likewiſe conſcious of my rude addreſſes
" to thoſe worthy perſons with my papers, and fear-
" ing that my heat for the promotion of ſcience might " be worſe taken by them than I intended; knowing
" alſo the ſmallneſs of my merits, I reſolved to ſup-
" preſs my name, till I underſtood how it was like to " ſpeed with my papers. I fear I addreſſed myſelf
" too rudely to his Lordſhip; but ſince he is pleaſed to " take notice of thoſe unpoliſhed papers, and enquire
" after their Author, you may pleaſe (if you have not " already) to tender my humble and ſincereſt ſervices
" with my name to his Lordſhip, and deſire his excuſe
" for me, that I have not explained my Method of " Calculation. I ſuppoſe it cannot be hid to thoſe,
" who are verſed in Trigonometry. It is the accurat-
" eſt I could chooſe, and the numbers were twice, ſome
" thrice repeated, for more certainty. If any deſire
" to be more fully ſatisfied, I hope I ſhall anſwer
" their expectations in an Epiſtle to the excellent He-
" velius, containing a Commentary on, and a correc-
" tion of ſeveral particulars in his Mercurius ſub ſole
" viſus, and Commentary on Mr. Horrox's Venus ſub
" ſole viſa; which I have lying by me, written in " Latin about half a year ſince. But my ſtyle not " pleaſing ſome of my more judicious friends, I have
" ſince then given my ſelf to the peruſal of the Claſ-
" ſic old Roman and ſome modern Authors, that ſo I
" may beſtow a better language on it before I expoſe
" it to the view of ſuch ſeverities as I ſhall be ſure to " meet with. I intend to preſent it with an Epiſtle
" de Æquatione Temporis to the view of the Royal So" ciety before I commit it to the public; but by rea-
" ſon of my frequent diſtempers, my parents affairs,
" and the coldneſs of the ſeaſon, I ſhall be forced to
" protract the time I have ſet my ſelf for the peruſal
" of my papers, which yet I hope to preſent you with " compleated within theſe ſix months. I have Solar
" Tables by me compoſed above two years ſince, to " wit, before I was twenty one years of age; which
" I intend to expoſe with my Epiſtle de Æquatione
" Temporis, directed to Mr. Street, whom on occaſion
" you may let know I ſhall write to him before the " Term be over by my kinſman, an Attorney. But " I ſhall be forced to trouble you with the Letter, be" cauſe I know not the place of his habitation. I de-
" ſire to tranſact things fairly with him, as I have " done with his deceaſed antagoniſt, Mr. Wing,
" with whom I had a fair correſpondence; and tho'
" we differed de Parallaxi & Æquationibus Syſtematis
" Solaris, and ſeveral other things, yet our diſſent
" made us not the leſs friends. And tho' I may not ſub-
" ſcribe to Mr. Street's opinions de Fixatione Aphelio-
" rum & Nodorum in ſuperioribus, & de Æquationibus
" Lunæ oſcillatoriis, yet I hope that he will not re-
" fuſe, that we may friendly communicate by letters
" of ſuch things, as concern the Heavens and our Stu-
" dies. As to the ſeverity of Calculations, I ſuppoſe,
" that if the Artiſt be but careful and curious enough,
" we have canons ſufficiently large. In the ſtudy of " my eſpecial friend Mr. Halton I once ſaw one of U-
" laccus to every ten ſexagenary ſeconds. And if " our ſupputations be exact to ſeconds, I think it is " enough, and more than ever we may hope by inſtru-
" ments to obtain from the Heavens; I mean in de" fining the places of the Luminaries, fixed, and the " Planets. As for their Diameters, I dare not deny,
" but that by the help of glaſſes we may be enabled to " define them to ſeconds or ſmaller parts, eſpecially if
" a ſhort Teleſcope may be made to perform as much " as a long one; which you ſay that Mr. Newton hath " not only proved by demonſtration, but fact. Sir,
" if it be no concealed ſecret, if you have the liberty,
" and may do it, I deſire that you would pleaſe to in" form me of what glaſſes his ſmall Teleſcope is com-
" poſed, how or in what figures ground, and how diſ-
" poſed in the tube. I intend to work ſome for my " own uſe, and am framing ſuch an engine as Mr.
" Hooke deſcribes for the grinding and poliſhing of " them. I intend to grind with ordinary fine
" ſand dreſſed, and poliſh firſt with chalk, and
" after with putty. I know no better powders, but " would be much obliged to any one, that would " inform me that or any thing elſe either concerning
" the uſual method or neceſſaries for grinding and po-
" liſhing them: if you know any thing, which you
" may freely impart, I ſhould be much obliged by a
" communication."

In his Letter dated at Derby July the 16th 1670 he writes thus. " I have received another Letter from
" you ſince, with an account of Gaſſendus's obſervation,
" and an information of Mengolus's Book, for which " I am obliged to you. Pray when it is known, let " me underſtand his opinion of the quantity of the " ſun's horizontal parallaxes. and the refractions, and
" what refraction he allows the ſun in the altitude of " 20 gr. I ſuſpect, and have good reaſon for it,
" that in inland places it is nothing, or not ſenſible in
" that altitude; for by ſome of Mr. Wright's obſer-
" vations the ſun at noon had no refraction the " 15th of December in altitude 15 gr... I thank you " for the advice of writing to Mr. Townley. I am
" at preſent calculating the moon's appulſes for the " next year; which when I have finiſhed, I will
" ſend him a ſpecimen of to make way for our fu" ture correſpondence.... As for what I have noted
" in Ricciolus, beſides the frequent errors of his ſchemes,
" you may note theſe. P. 161, he applies the horizontal
" parallax of the ſun in all altitudes, as if it was the
" ſame both in the zenith and the horizon, and ſo
" gathers the ecliptic's obliquity 20″ more than his " own obſervations permit. P. 435, he in his ſecond
" example is guilty of the higheſt diſingenuity; for
" he firſt lays down a vicious obſervation, by which
" he thruſts the ſun's place above ten minutes further " than either Street's or my Tables afford, and then " derives a right aſcenſion almoſt two minutes larger
" than his obſervation will allow; as I can eaſily
" prove, but that I have neither time nor room at " preſent. If you deſire it, I ſhall make it good " hereafter. P. 477, in his catalogue of the fixed
" ſtars he protrudes the right ſhoulder of Auriga 1 deg.
" 20′ forwarder than his own obſerved diſtances from
" Capella, the brighteſt of the Pleiades, and Procyon
" will permit, that he may make his catalogue agree
" with the Tychonick, from which, he was ſo con-
" ſcious of his own defects, he ſcarce has dared any " where to recede; ſo that he ſeems to me rather to " affect the name of having corrected our Tables than " really to have amended what was faulty in any " one. I had firſt notice of this ſtar's varying from
" the Tychonick Canon in Hevelius's Mercurius ſub
" ſole, but found it abſolutely confirmed by the Ricciolan
" obſervations. In his Appendix p. 733. Prob. 3. he " teaches how to correct the apparent time of the " Quadrature, as if the parallax cauſed the moon to
" be really cave, when ſhe was apparently ſemi-illu" minated. But this correction is needleſs, and all " that is ſaid in that column and the two next abſo-
" lutely to be rejected, ſince the parallax cannot vary
" the phaſis at all, as I can eaſily prove, and will ap" pear to any one that duly conſiders what he there
" lays down. Laſtly, he is wholly inclined to the " Peripatetics againſt all other Philoſophy, and on
" this account favours Claramontius againſt Tycho,
" Kepler, and reaſon itſelf. And tho' he proteſts againſt
" it, yet I fear he was partial to Tycho, becauſe a
" Calviniſt, and propenſe to Claramontius, as one that " was a Prieſt of his own Order, and in his princi" ples a rigid Peripatetic, and one that had left ſome
" perſons his relations of, and well deſerving from,
" their ſociety."

In a Letter dated at Derby Sept. 19, 1670 he writes as follows. " I ſat up this laſt night waiting to obſerve
" the eclipſe of the moon. The Heavens were clear
" till midnight, after which they were by little and
" little covered over with thick whitiſh clouds, thro'
" which, when our clocks ſtruck one, I ſaw the " moon

acquainted with them. He gladly embraced this offer, and viſited Mr. Oldenburg, and Mr. Collins, who introduced him to Mr. Jonas Moore, who preſented him with Mr. Townley's Micrometer, and undertook to procure him glaſſes for a Teleſcope at a moderate rate. At Cambridge he viſited Dr. Iſaac Barrow, and Mr. Iſaac Newton, and Dr.

" moon eclipſed almoſt a digit; but I could not find " a convenient ſtar to take its altitude, being on one " ſide prohibited by the buildings, and the Heavens " all covered with the white clouds, that none of the " bigger ſtars, or any almoſt, removed from the me- " ridian, appeared; and the moon was ſcarce an hour " removed from the noonſtead; ſo that it was in vain " to think to take her's amongſt the clouds. The " Heavens continued covered with theſe till morning, " and the moon appeared very rarely through the " clouds, ſo that deſpairing of any good obſervation, " and ſeeing the Heavens thicken, I left off, and " went to my reſt, when I had ſeen the cuſps paral- " lel to the horizon, and the ſiniſter end had covered " the occidental ſpot or Palus Mæotidis of Hevelius, " but could not note the time. I wrote to Mr. Hooke " about the obſerving this eclipſe. Pray, if you " chance to meet him, enquire whether he obſerved it " or not: if he did, and the Heavens ſmiled on his " endeavours, deſire him to be pleaſed to communi- " cate his obſervations to me; for I think the Heavens " anteverted our calculations ſome minutes; which if " ſo, favours an equation I have long ſince conceived " ought to be induced into the Lunar Syſtem ..... I " hope ſpeedily to preſent you with the Phænomena " of the next year, for I have as good as finiſhed my " calculations."

In his Letter dated at Derby October the 1ſt the ſame year he writes thus. " If the Lunar Eclipſe " laſt hath been obſerved by any in London, if you " can procure the obſervation without trouble, pleaſe " by your next to communicate it to me. I have " now finiſhed my calculations, and am writing them " out, but cannot tell what tongue to expoſe them " in, Engliſh or Latin. Let me have your opinion; " that ſhall rule me. The appearances are treble the " number I calculated laſt year, and moſt of them " ſome way truly notable. I have read a part of " Fabri's Optics. I was much pleaſed with his " acuteneſs and accurateneſs at firſt, but coming to his " 43d Propoſ. I find it loſt; for in his VI, VII, and " VIII ſections he demonſtrates not what he intends, " but by drawing his 90 and 91 ſchemes too cloſe " deceives and mocks his reader."

In his Letter dated at Derby December the 1ſt following he writes thus. " I hope you have re- " ceived my laſt with my calculations of the laſt year's " appearances; in my introduction to which if I ſeem " to have aſſerted too boldly againſt our Aſtronomical " Tables, I have now received an obſervation of my " Couſin Wilſon, that will fully confirm my affirma- " tions, which I ſend you incloſed. I cannot but " congratulate you for your happy correſpondence with " P. Bertet, and I am much pleaſed to hear of De " Mouton's Book de menſurâ Diam. Solis & Lunæ, " one of which, when they come to your hands, I de- " ſire you to ſend me, and pay your ſelf out of what " you have in your hands. If the piece be well done " it will conduce no little to the correction of Aſtro- " nomical Lunar Tables. When I have received " and peruſed it, I ſhall, according to your directions, " write to De Mouton; till then not having any occa- " ſion offered, I ſuppoſe you will neither hold it con- " venient nor neceſſary. Sir, you once, I remember, " proferred to lend me Mr. Horrox's Papers, which " are now in your hands. If, Sir, you have not pro- " cured them yet to be printed, nor any Bookſeller " offers to undertake them, I would accept of the " offer gladly, for I have leiſure now to peruſe any " Author, and I would gladly try if that deviation, " which is now very perceptible in the motion of Sa- " turn, was not in his time ſenſible: for if I remember " aright, one of his Books contains the obſerved " diſtances of the planets from the fixed ſtars with " other his obſervations, from which nothing as yet " hath been deduced."

(3) Afterwards Sir Jonas Moore. F. R. S. and Surveyor General of his Majeſty's Ordnance.

In his Letter dated at Derby January the 30th 167⅘, he writes as follows. " I have lately written " to Mr. Moore (3), from whom I have received an " anſwer full of his natural civility and generoſity. " By this advice I have likewiſe wrote to Mr. Townley, " from whom I cannot yet expect an anſwer by rea- " ſon my Letter went but on Tueſday laſt, and can " ſcarce yet reach his hands... I have the Tranſac- " tion (4), in which Mr. Oldenburg hath printed the " ſhort Abſtract of my calculations, which give the " obſervers notice of ſuch appearances; but the other " requiſites of the ſupputations being wanting, they " will be put to a ſecond trouble of calculating to gain " the Anomalies and other parts of the calculation, " before they can be able to gueſs how or where " any thing in our numbers are to be corrected. I " am framing Tables of oblique aſcenſions for the lati- " tudes of London, Dantzick, and Derby, ſuppoſing " the declination 23 gr. 30′-00″ to ſecond minutes, " the old ones falſely ſuppoſing it 23 gr. 31′ ½; to " which I intend to add the angle orient, which " will not little aſſiſt calculations, and ſuch as are " minding to make Aſtronomical predictions, or com- " pare Cæleſtial obſervations with our numbers."

(4) Philoſophical Tranſactions.

In his Letter dated at Derby March the 20th 167⅘ he writes thus. " I have both your Letters... I am " exceedingly pleaſed to hear that Mr. Horrox's Pa- " pers will be printed, and I ſuppoſe the Venus ſub " Sole with them; to which, having well peruſed it, " I know not what can be added. The Notes of " Hevelius I find generally needleſs, and thoſe on the " ſixth chapter page 124 abſolutely falſe, conceding " his own parallax, becauſe he hath taken the Angle " of the Poſition of Venus, which is made by a line " drawn through her's and the Sun's Center, inſtead " of the Angle of the Vertical Circle per Centrum Vene- " ris, with the Ecliptic, or the Parallactical Angle; " whence he not only vitiates the truly computed " Parallaxes of Mr. Horrox, but alſo ſuppoſing the " Parallax of Venus from the Sun in altitude 1. 57, " he falſely calculates theſe Parallaxes.

	h ′	Of Long.	Of Lat.	Par. Long.	Par. Lat.
Horr.	3-15	1′-20″	1′-27″	which 0′-32″	1′-50″
	3-35	1-17	1-28	ought 0-42	1-49
	3-45	1-15	1-29	to be 0-44	1-48

" So that what he hath deduced from theſe his vitious " Parallaxes ought, if his Comment be printed with " the Original, to be corrected. Of this you may " pleaſe to inform the Doctor. You wrote that " Dr. Wallis deſired my Comment on the Mercurius of " Hevelius might be printed with Horrox's Papers. " When I received your Letter, I looked up my Pa- " pers, but find that I ſhall ſcarcely have time to " tranſcribe, and fit them for the preſs, partly becauſe " my occaſions, but more frequently my diſtempers " withraw and detain me from my pen-endeavours. " For the ſpring coming on, my blood increaſes, " which, if I ſhould not exerciſe ſtrongly, I ſhould " ſpit up, or receive into my ſtomach with great de- " triment to my health. When I return from exer- " ciſe, other occaſions are ready to detain me. Far- " ther I have received a Letter from Mr. Oldenburg, " who is not willing that I ſhould advert too plainly " on Hevelius, leſt he ſhould recede from his correſ- " pondency, and detain his obſervations from us, if " he be diſguſted. However, if I might but know " by what time Mr. Horrox's Papers would be ready " for the Printer, I would endeavour to get my Notes " ready to ſucceed them; for I am reſolved not to de- " ſiſt, if my diſtemper will be forced to intermit by " my uſual remedies, which I much queſtion not, " God permitting. In the mean time I am pre- " paring caſes for my glaſſes, for which I hope to " raiſe a pole to elevate them on this evening, and " then I ſhall endeavour when I have leiſure to ob- " ſerve the Heavens, that I may ſome ways benefit the " ſcience. I am enamoured of Aſtronomy... I have " received and returned Letters to Mr. Townley, from " whom I have an account of the Solar Eclipſe of " 1668 October the 25th, and the Occulation of An-

Dr. Wroe, then Fellow of Jeſus College there, with whom he correſponded frequently for the four following years. He alſo entered himſelf a Student of Jeſus College. In the ſpring of the year 1672 he excerpted ſeveral obſervations from Mr. Gaſcoigne's and Mr. Crabtree's Letters, which had not been made public, and which he tranſlated into Latin.

" tares on May the 23d 1670, of which I deſire you " to procure me Mr. Hook's obſervation if he made " any; for I fear Mr. Street's is wreſted a little."

In his Letter dated at Derby May the 3d 1671 he writes as follows. " I have yours of the 27th laſt " paſt, for the communications in which I heartily " thank you. I am glad to hear, that Mr. Horrox's " Papers are gone to the preſs. I ſhall againſt that " time they may be almoſt finiſhed have retranſcribed " my Notes on Hevelius's Mercurius ſub Sole, which " leſt I may offend, I ſhall willingly ſubmit to the " Caſtigations and Corrections of Dr. Wallis or any " other ingenuous perſon. My diſtempers and affairs of " late have been ſo intermutually urgent, that I have " performed little. I have by me a ſheet or two, " which I wrote ſome five years agone de æquatione " temporis aſtronomica, which I have laſt ſummer made " Latin, and would gladly it might ſee the light. It " being readieſt, I intend firſt to abſolve and ſend it " to you, to be diſpoſed of as you ſhall think moſt " meet. What you write of Mr. Horrox's Papers " being in Mr. Townley's hands I am well pleaſed to " hear of; and I hope I may do you ſome ſervice " in that buſineſs; for Mr. Townley correſponds with " me very familiarly, and promiſes me all the ſer- " vices he can do me in my ſtudies. But before this " comes to your hands, I ſuppoſe you may hear of him " in London, for he wrote to me ſome ten days " agone, that he would ſet forward on Munday laſt " for the city, which I ſuppoſe he will reach by this " week's end. I am to go into Lancaſhire, and near " his houſe the latter end of this month, where I " intend to call, if he be returned into the country. " In the mean time, if you or Mr. Jonas Moore can " meet with him, you may do well to urge him in " this buſineſs; and if I can do any thing when I go " into Lancaſhire, let me have your directions, and " you ſhall not want my endeavours, either for collect- " ing or methodizing any Papers that may fall or be in- " truſted into my hands. I deſire you Sir, to let me " hear from you concerning theſe things within this " fortnight, for I cannot know preciſely what time " this month I ſhall take my journey. I muſt before " I end, acknowledge myſelf much obliged to you " and Mr. Hooke for procuring me my glaſſes. They " ſerve well in a tube of $13\frac{1}{2}$ feet, but caſt ſome co- " lours, which will not be eaſily removed, though I " put on a narrow aperture to the object glaſs.... " Pray preſent my ſervice to Mr. Moore. I am read- " ing his Algebra, and find it not very difficult unto " me; and intend, when I ſhall have ſpare time, to " make ſome progreſs in Geometrical ſtudies."

In his Letter dated at Derby May the 13th 1671 he writes thus. " Having written to Mr. Oldenburg, " I thought convenient to incloſe this... I have ſent " Mr. Oldenburg my obſervation of the moon's appulſe " to the ſtar in Virgo 9°-53′ whoſe latitude is 1°-20′ " North of the 4th light, which I ſaw covered by the " dark ſide of the moon in ſomething leſs latitude " than the loweſt part of the Propontis, when Jupiter " was elevated 32°-52′; whence I deduced the hour " 9-16′-30″. The preciſe emerſion I ſaw not, for I " was elſewhere then engaged, but coming to the " tube I found that the ſtar was the breadth of the " Caſpian ſpot or Palus Mæotis diſtant from the " moon's limb, and higher than the ſupreme part of " the ſaid ſpot its whole length. Whence turning " to my Quadrant, I took the height of the moon's " ſupreme limb 31°-54′: therefore the ſtar's height " was 71°-45′, and the hour 10-24′-36″. I noted " the height of Jupiter to be 22°-36′, and find the " hour thence 10-25′-00″. I am perſuaded that the " times are pretty exactly taken, for they ſhew partly " the ſame duration, and all things conſidered as the " tables; but at leaſt 10, if not 15 minutes later. I " deſire to hear from you whether any of your ac- " quaintance have obſerved this appearance, of which " the Calculus is with the reſt in the Tranſactions. " If you have any obſervations, pray favour me ſo " far as to impart them to me. I have given Mr. " Oldenburg a calculation of the moon's tranſit by Ju- " piter on the 20th of September next at ſun-riſe, which " I ſuppoſe he will, if you deſire, impart to you; " for I have not time to tranſcribe it at preſent, " but you ſhall command it when you pleaſe."

In his Letter dated at Derby July the 10th 1671 he writes thus. " I have finiſhed my Tranſcript of " my Solar Tables, which I wait but for an oppor- " tunity to tranſmit ſafely unto you...Laſt week here " I ſaw a Boy, one Smedly, about 14 years old, who " has two perfect rows of teeth on the upper ſide of " his mouth round, ſave that the third tooth on each " ſide from the foreteeth are lately come forth; and " has a third half cut and coming forth more inwards " towards the roof of his mouth. Of theſe two inwards " extraordinary rows, the two foremoſt teeth of the ſe- " cond row came firſt not a year agone; the reſt all " within this half year or leſs... The boy is of a " good complexion, and heathful; only in his child- " hood he was lamed in his knee."

In his Letter dated at Derby Auguſt the 1ſt 1671 he writes as follows. " With theſe I ſend my pro- " miſed Solar Tables by my ſchoolfellow Mr. Sergeant: " though I have not added the ſun's diameters, yet I " intend before theſe may be printed to ſend them to " you to be annexed to them, or included with the " reſt... My occaſions are ſo frequent, and I am ſo " much forced from my ſtudies, that I fear I can " ſcarce get any time to tranſcribe what I have written " on Monſieur Hevelius, it being ſo prolix, that it " will coſt me more time than I can poſſibly ſpare to " abbreviate it. I eſteem myſelf obliged to continue " my annual præadmonitions of the Lunar Appearances, " which is a work not only neceſſary, but, if I flat- " ter not myſelf too much, ſomething honourable for " our countrymen, and therefore not to be diſconti- " nued. Sir, my ſpare hours betwixt my indiſpoſi- " tions and affairs being now but few, and likely to " be much leſs, I cannot poſſibly perform both theſe " taſks; therefore deſire you to excuſe me my Papers " upon Hevelius, by which perhaps I might diſoblige " him to the Engliſh ſociety, which he honours; and " permit me only to make my new calculations, " towards which I have not as yet wrote one figure. " If you think them not ſo neceſſary, I ſhall for- " bear thinking of them, and perform my Notes " on Hevelius with all ſpeed and ſweetneſs poſſible. " I ſhall have e'er long an opportunity of ſending " to Dantzick, when perhaps I ſhall write to him, " and inform him civilly of his errors myſelf. In " the mean time I ſubmit my intentions to your diſ- " cretion, and reſolve in this to be ruled by your ad- " vice.... I cannot but joy with you in the know- " ledge of your French correſpondence; but I fear " you have given them an account of my abilities " beyond what they will prove. I deſire to know if " you ever communicated any of my calculations or " my few obſervations unto any of them, and what " you have in return. As for the correſpondence of " the French Aſtronomers, I ſhall gladly undertake " it with the firſt convenient opportunity, but not " over haſtily. I have ſeveral obſervations of the " moon's tranſits by the fixed ſtars, and her diameters " made by Mr. Gaſcoigne, and related in his Letters, " which yet (the like for accuracy not being to be " had amongſt the French) I think not fit to commu- " nicate, nor buy their acquaintance with them. As " for my exerciſe de æquatione Temporis, I have no " perfect copy of it, ſo I cannot ſend one; but " ſhall (if you have not already) inform them of my " obſervations of the laſt viſible ſolar eclipſe, and the " lunar tranſit, and ſome admonitions of future ap- " pearances."

In his Letter dated at Derby November the 8th " 1671 he writes thus. " I have now ſomewhat ex- " traordinary to furniſh your correſpondencies, and " ſhall

Latin. He finiſhed the tranſcript of Mr. Gaſcoigne's papers May the 12th 1672. Amongſt that Gentleman's letters he found ſome, in which Mr. Gaſcoigne ſhewed how the images of remote objects were formed in the diſtinct baſe of a convex object-glaſs. From theſe our Author got his Dioptrics in a few hours, having read Des Cartes's Dioptrics before, but learned little from them, becauſe Des Cartes diſcourſes not of this ſubject, his main buſineſs being to ſhew how by elliptical or hyperbolar glaſſes all the rays of light, which fall on the object parallel to the axis, may be collected into one point of the image in the diſtinct baſe, ſuppoſing all the rays of light of the ſame ſpecies, and liable to the ſame law of refraction, which yet Mr. Iſaac Newton has demonſtrated they were not, by many experiments publiſhed in this year's Philoſophical Tranſactions. "And this, ſays our Author, is the only thing that I can perceive, for which Des Cartes's "Dioptrics have been ſo celebrated." The ſpare hours of the remaining part of the year 1672 were employed in his obſervations, as the weather permitted, and in preparing

" ſhall have every day more and more. Laſt Octo" ber I obſerved with my fourteen foot tube and the " Towleian micrometer the underwritten diſtances of " the Pleiades, which I have compared with thoſe I
" find in Mr. Gaſcoigne's Papers, and thoſe of Mutus
" in Ricciolus." Here Mr Flamſteed incloſes a ſcheme of the Pleiades.

In his letter dated at Derby January the 31ſt 167½ he writes thus. " I have ſeen the December Tranſ-
" action, in which Mr. Oldenburg has tranſcribed
" ſome lines from my letters concerning the appear" ance of Saturn, which I am glad to find agree ſo
" well with the like of the French Aſtronomers. You
" may further intimate, that I viewed the ſame Pla-
" net on New-year's day at night with my long tube
" and more convex eye-glaſs. But neither my ſelf
" nor a young man with me could diſcern any anſes,
" although the appearance was ſufficiently clear. I
" have ſeveral times meaſured the ſun's ſemidiame-
" ters, which none of my obſervations allow leſs in
" Perigæo than 16′, 24″ or 25″, I think I communi" cated to you ſome meaſures of his diameters when
" he appeared elliptical. If I have not, I ſhall,
" when you pleaſe to command them, for I owe,
" and eſteem a good part of my endeavours a debt to
" you. I am now excerping ſome obſervations from
" Mr. Gaſcoigne's and Crabtree's reciprocal Letters,
" in which I find exact obſervations of the moon's
" eclipſe December the 10th 1638, and the ſun's
" May the 22d 1639; this by Mr. Gaſcoigne, that
" by Crabtree; which if they were not in Mr. Hor-
" rox's Papers, and Mr. Townley would permit, might " do well if they were added to them; of which I de-
" ſire to hear how many are printed by the next....
" If Mr. Jonas Moore give any attendance on the " Heavens, I ſhall early enough let him know of
" ſome obſervable appearances not publiſhed nor cer" tified in the Tranſactions, with ſome obſervations
" made with the micrometer he gave me, and there" fore a due debt to him. I have read De Mouton de
" æquatione temporis &c. whoſe Notes upon the Equa-
" tions of others might eaſily be redargued, but that " I would ſpare your correſpondents; of whom if " any now will agree to obſerve the diameters of the " planets (the ſun and moon eſpecially) with the Sa" tellite appearances of Jupiter, I ſhall not fail, as the " weather and my diſtempers permit, to do my endea" vour to make reſpondent obſervations. All the times I " have viewed the ſun I could never ſee any macula
" upon him, but his whole diſk perfectly clear....
" I had ſent you a draught of my new micrometer,
" but that I lately ſent one to Mr. Townley, whoſe
" ſentiments I expect concerning it before I mind it
" ſhould travel further."

In his Letter dated at Derby February the 10th 167½ he writes thus. " I have wrote to you lately
" ſo have not much to write at this time... The " Heavens of late have not favoured me with any " ſerenity more than ſerved one night, viz. Feb. 1.
" to obſerve the immerſion of the firſt Satellite into " the ſhade of Jupiter, and the application of the third
" to his limb, of which I gave Mr. Oldenburg an " account in a late letter. I am now excerping ſome
" things from Mr. Gaſcoigne's letters to Mr. Crab-
" tree, and his anſwers; but find ſome ſchemes and " papers wanting, of which Mr. Crabtree could not " be careleſs, but they are ſuppoſed to be fallen into
" Mr. Jonas Moore's hands. Pray let him know
" what I am doing when you ſee him; they can be
" of no concern by themſelves, wherefore he may do " well to put them into Mr. Townley's hand, who " owns the letters referring to them." In this letter he likewiſe ſends the Sun's diameters on January 5th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 15th, and 1ſt of February 167½.

In his Letter dated at Derby February 20th 1672, he writes as follows: " Mr. Halton is tranſlating Kink-
" huyſen's Moone-wiſer into Engliſh, that I may have " a view of it: and at Mr. Townley's requeſt I have " lately wrote and ſent him the Hiſtory of Malting. I " have begun that Tract concerning the Diſtances and " Diameters of all the Planets, which I promiſed in " my Letter to Mr. Oldenburg; but ſhall go but very
" ſlowly forward by reaſon that ſometimes my infirmi-
" ties, oftner affairs interrupt me. But this I have " certainly learn'd from my obſervations, that the " Sun's Parallax is not above 10″, yea probably but
" 7″, and his diſtance a terrâ 26000 ſemidiameters;
" which is a diſtance, to which none ever durſt re-
" move him yet, and thrice as far as I ſuppoſed him
" formerly in my Solar Tables."

In his Letter dated at Derby April 1ſt 1672, he writes thus. " The included paper contains the laſt
" obſervation of Jupiter's tranſit by a Fixed Star, and
" another ſince made, with my deductions therefrom.
" Theſe, (being buſy at this time of the year) to ſave a " labour of tranſcription I ſend through the hands of " Mr. Oldenburg, that ſo you may have the peruſal
" of them. I hope you had my laſt informing you,
" that I have received Mr. Horrox's papers, and ſa-
" tisfying you concerning the contents of my laſt Let" ter. I have peruſed Horrox's Venus ſub Sole, and find
" he needs no comment, ſave in this: he has taken
" the Sun's Semidiameter leſs by 20″ or more than
" really it was, ſo that his calculations will need ſome
" little correction, which, if you think fit, I ſhall give " them by way of comment. He has aſſumed the " Diameters of the Fixed Stars too large, which He-
" velius has only well corrected; and his Diameters of " the Planets are much amiſs. But not having ob-
" ſerved them all my ſelf, as I intend (if God afford
" me opportunity) I ſhall not meddle with them; yet
" only to you I may ſay, that thoſe ſettled in Helve-
" lius, except in Venus and Mercury, are as erroneo-
" ous as thoſe of Mr. Horrox. Hevelius is much
" miſtaken in the Parallactical Angle in his Venus ſub
" Sole; but it is ſo eaſily proved, that I cannot think,
" but if ever he again read over that piece and his " notes, he could not but ſee his miſtake. I find by
" my frequent obſervations, that the remoteſt Satellite
" of Jupiter goes not 23 Semidiameters only from " him, as Caſſini has it, but rather 24½ or ¼, as Mr.
" Townley gave it me in a looſe Note; and this you
" may prove by an obſervation March 19th amongſt
" the reſt, if you have it. I think thoſe obſervations the " exacteſt that ever were had of this Planet; and if we " had but a few more ſuch in ſeveral places of his Orbit,
" I ſhould not doubt but to reſtore his motions more ac" curately than we have yet done, or perhaps can ex" pect. I cannot think the Satellites of Jove ſubject
" to any great inequalities in their motions, ſince I " find their diſtances from Jupiter on each ſide him
" equal in their greateſt Elongations. If I had but
" the opportunity of obſerving one tranſit of Mars in " his Achronical Appearance from a Fixed Star, I
" ſhould not doubt but to derive the Sun's Parallax and
" Diſtance a terrâ as well, if not better, therefrom,
" than from any obſervations as yet we poſſeſs. This

" I expect ing advertiſements of the appulſes of the Moon and Planets to fixed Stars for the following year, which were printed by Mr. Oldenburg in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, with ſome obſervations of the Planets, which Mr. Flamſteed imparted to him. In 1673 he wrote a ſmall Tract in Engliſh concerning the true Diameters of all the Planets, and their viſible, when at their neareſt diſtances from the earth, or their greateſt removes from it; "which I lent, ſays he, to Mr. Newton in 1685, who has made uſe of it in "the fourth book of his Principia Phil. Nat. Mathemat." By Mr. Oldenburg's means he exchanged ſome letters with Monſieur Caſſini. In 167$\frac{3}{4}$, beſides his uſual taſk, he wrote an Ephemeris, in which he ſhewed the falſity of Aſtrology, and the ignorance of thoſe who pretended to it, and gave a Table of Moon's riſing and ſetting carefully calculated, together with the Eclipſes and Appulſes of the Moon and Planets to fixed Stars. This fell into the hands of Sir Jonas Moore, for whom, at his requeſt, Mr. Flamſteed made

"I expect, and have forecaſted for; but by an acci"dent the courſe of my obſervations are and will be a "little interrupted, for being laſt Thurſday night pre"paring to obſerve the Diameter of Jupiter, I took "my object-glaſs of my long tube to ſmear it, as I "had often done before, at my candle. As I was "holding it over the light, it gave a crack, and a
"little piece ſplinter'd from it in the middle, and the "glaſs cleft clear through. I durſt not remove it out "of the box, becauſe I was afraid I could not ſo well
"make it cloſe again. I keep it by me, but dare not "adventure to make any obſervations by it, though
"I have viewed the Moon with it, and find it does
"not perform much worſe, if any, than it did."

In his Letter dated at Derby April 17th 1672 he writes as follows: "I have yours of the 12th inſtant, "whereby you intimate your deſire to have me ſay "ſomething farther concerning the Lunar Theory of "Mr. Horrox for the ſatisfaction of Dr. Wallis. I "am content, and therefore ſhall e'er long ſend you "the whole calculation of the Moon's place at her laſt "tranſit over the Pleiades after his method, with my "further thoughts upon it. I am very deſirous to be "framing Lunar Numbers, but want obſervations of "her Apogæon Diameters, which the inconveniency "of my dwelling permits me not to make, becauſe the "Apogeon Moon in Sagittarius goes ſo very low this "year, and further the Refractions in her low meri-"dional heights would greatly diminiſh her vertical "Diameters, which upon continual experience I find "can only be taken to the requiſite exactneſs; ſo that "I fear I muſt wait till the year 1674 or 1675 e'er I "can well obſerve them. I cannot but much approve "of the form of Mr. Horrox's Theory, and having "conſidered it ſeveral times I find that we might al-"moſt as eaſily compute her place in her orb as the El-"liptical place of any other Planet, if Tables were "fixed to his Method; which therefore for facility of "calculation I intend to propoſe to my ſelf to correct, "when I ſhall gain ſo much leiſure, and I hope this "Summer may afford it me. . . . . The Heavens ne-"ver ſince I broke my glaſs afforded me any oppor-"tunity for obſervation till yeſterday, when at noon "(having covered the broken part of my glaſs with "the bigger piece) I took the Sun's Diameter 5325 "= 31′—58″; which ſtill conſpires for the ex-"actly biſected Excentricity, and the Perigeon ½ "Diameter 16′—25″." In this letter there are ſome remarks upon Mr. Newton's letter concerning Colours.

In his Letter dated May 6th 1672 he writes thus: "I have received two Letters from you, conveying the "moſt current news; for which I am bound to give "you hearty thanks. . . . . I hope you have by this "time received a Letter from me by Mr. Sargeant. . . . "I intimated by that Letter, that I would ſend you "the Lunar Tables by Monday next."

In his Letter dated at Derby May 13th following he writes thus: "With this you will receive the pro-"miſed Lunar Tables, to which I have added an Epi-"logus directed to yourſelf. But my deſire of brevity, "and not to meddle where Mr. Horrox had done any "thing himſelf, reſtrained my thoughts in that place. "Here with your leave I ſhall enlarge. How the A-"pogee of the Moon is librated, Mr. Horrox has ſhewn "us very well; but why it ſhould be ſo librated, me-"thinks he ſhews no good reaſon. What he ſays of "the Sun's attracting that end of the Axis of the Sy-"ſtem next him, is framed from Kepler's groundleſs "notions." Mr. Flamſteed then propoſes his own ſolution, and afterwards proceeds thus: "You have "ſometimes deſired to know what I found amiſs in the "Hevelian Edition of Horrox's Venus ſub Sole. I am "not willing to let all be known I have againſt that "great man; but in his Comments on that Treatiſe "the main cauſe of his error there is, that he hath "miſtaken the Parallactical Angles calculated by Mr. "Horrox at

h		°			°
3	15′	70	56′	and us'd inſtead of them	46	34′
3	35	68	53		48	37
3	45	67	55		49	35

"which were the Angles made by a line paſſing thro' "the centers of the Sun and Venus with the Ecliptic; or "that he hath uſed the ∠∠ECV inſtead of ∠∠NCL; "whence have proceeded all thoſe faults and faulty "corrections of Mr. Horrox's works, which are found "every where in the ſucceeding Comments. He finds "fault with Mr. Horrox for having framed the Diame-"ter of the Planets amiſs, whilſt his own, if well conſi-"dered, tho' ſomething alike in proportion to each "other, are not leſs erroneous in quantity. His great-"eſt Diameter of Jupiter is but 24″½; yet I find that "Mr. Gaſcoigne once obſerved it 51″; he ſays accu-"rately. I have ſeen it above 46″, and Mr. Townley "no leſs; and that it is wholly ſo much, the obſerv-"ed Elongations of the Satellites from Jupiter's center "taken in minutes and ſeconds, compared with the "eſtimated Diameters, do plainly evince. But Mr. "Horrox hath erred himſelf in the Sun's Diameter, "which he ſtates only 31′—30″; which my obſerva-"tions warrant 32′—42″. Hevelius has ſtated it "32′—30″. He has likewiſe in his Comment on "the ſixth chapter p. 124. delivered the Parallaxes of "Longitude and Latitude in his own Hypotheſis, "which ſuppoſed the Sun's diſtance from the earth "5064 ſemidiameters of the earth, and its horizon-"tal Parallax 41″. I know not what warrant he "may have for this, ſince he ſays nothing of it in his "works that I have ſeen; but I hope at this next A-"chronical Apparition of Mars, or at the latter end "of September next to make thoſe obſervations of "him, which may ſhew his Parallax, and by conſe-"quence the Sun's. I hoped to have obſerved him "this morning, but the ſkies are clouded; yet if they "clear before Tueſday, I doubt not to gain another "accurate obſervation of him, and to meaſure his diame-"ter, which yet I could never do conveniently. I have "obſerved the Return of Jupiter to the Star in Virgo "9°—58″. If you deſire it, I ſhall ſend you both "it and what I obſerve of Mars, when I have "heard from you. . . . . Since I wrote this, I have re-"ceived yours of the 13th inſtant. I have therefore "paſted new Radixes to the Meridian of Derby, that "ſo they may comply the better with the Solar "Numbers. I have ſo paſted them, that if you turn "them up, you may find thoſe for London under: "but if you approve the Radixes to Derby, that ſo they "may comply the better with my ſolar Numbers; the "title may be written thus: Lunares Numeri ad novum "Lunæ Syſtema excogitatum ab Aſtronomo peritiſſimo "Jeremia Horroxio, ad Meridianum Derbiæ notiſſimè "Coritanorum oppidi in ipſo ferè totius Angliæ umbilico "ſiti, accommodati ab J. F."

In his Letter dated at Derby May 20th 1672 he writes thus: "I have lately obſerved the diſtance of "Mars from a fixed Star very accurately. Laſt week "I made Equations for Mr. Horrox's greateſt Excen-"tricity of the Moon: for the leaſt, I have them "made ready to my hands. This week I will more "accurately calculate the Equations of the Apogeon made a Table of the Moon's true ſouthings for that year, from which and Mr. Philips's Theory of the Tides, the High-waters being made, he found that they ſhewed the times of the turn of the Tides very near, whereas the ordinary ſeamens coarſe rules would err ſometimes two or three hours. In the ſummer of the year 1674, our Author paſſing through London in the way to Cambridge, Sir Jonas Moore informed him, that a true account of the Tides would be highly acceptable to his Majeſty, and offered the help of his ſervant to make the Table or any other work of the like nature. Upon this they reſolved to compoſe a ſmall Ephemeris for the King's uſe, which was in good part finiſhed before Midſummer, but not compleated till near Chriſtmas after, by reaſon of Mr. Flamſteed's return to Derby about Michaelmas. Sir Jonas had heard him often diſcourſe of the weather-glaſs or Barometer, and the certainty of judging of the weather by it. Mr. Townley having communicated to our Author his obſervations and the rules deduced from

" and Excentricities, and reduce the mean motions to " current time. So that you may within a fortnight, " or three weeks at fartheſt, expect the Lunar Tables " from me, if God ſpare me health. I ſhall now " have more time than formerly. I intend likewiſe " to note the erroneous places in Hevelius's Notes on " the Venus ſub Sole, and ſend them as ſoon as I have " finiſhed the new Lunar Tables. My obſervation of " Mars I intend not to ſend you till I have made " ſome more, which I expect about the middle of the " next month."

In his Letter dated at Derby May 30th 1672 he writes thus: " I have this morning compleated my " Numbers for Horrox's Theory, which I ſhall tranſcribe, and ſend you with ſome little account of the " Method of Calculation, as my leiſure and occaſions " will permit. Theſe I hope to ſend you on Monday come ſevennight. I have late obſerved the Return " of Jupiter to the Star in Virgo 9°—58″; but have " not yet had time to commit it to my Book, and " calculate the times from the obſerved altitudes; but " with the Lunar Tables you may expect them."

In his Letter dated at Derby June 12th 1672 he writes as follows: " I had delivered my Lunar Tables " after Mr. Horrox's Syſtem to our Carrier laſt Monday, but that ſome employments caſt upon me ſince " the death of my uncle put me ſo behind hand, that " I have finiſhed but this morning. However I hope " they will be no whit the later in your hands, for I " ſhall procure one of our Attorneys to deliver them " to you either the end of this week, or the beginning of the next. I have wrote in Latin an Epiſtle to you, containing what I have altered in their " form, and what I think concerning the Equation of " time, and alteration of the Excentricity and the " Variation. I ſuppoſe you print Mr. Crabtree's Letter, which contains this Theory, with Mr. Horrox's " works; for the Theory contained in the Letter of " Decemb. 10th 1638, as I find in ſome looſe papers " and the exerciſes, is not that, which Horrox reſolved upon, and further in it the optical part of the " Equation varies not, but only the Focus of the mean " motion, and the phyſical equation, ſo that the diſtance of the Moon a terrâ varies not above five ſemidiameters of the Earth, which in his later papers " he ſays all Eclipſes require to alter above ſeven. " You have done well therefore to omit that Letter; " but in the room of it I ſuppoſe you will give Mr. " Crabtree's, which will lead to mine."

In his Letter dated at Derby July 10th 1672 he writes thus: " Included I ſend you the Catalogue I " promiſed. I have choſen thoſe towns, where celeſtial obſervations have been made; and where I have " found none I have ordered them by comparing their " poſitions to one another in our maps; which yet I " dare not truſt, for by celeſtial obſervations of the Pole's " height and eclipſes made in ſeveral places at once " compared together, I find they place Italy too near, " and all the towns of Poland, Germany, and France " over remote. The maps I uſed were Speed's, where " I wanted, but I find them not good. . . . . I would " gladly make ſome further enquiry into the nature " of light and colours, but want a priſm for experiments, which may have two faces of an equal " breadth, the third not half ſo broad as either of " them; that ſo the angle included by the broader " faces may be leſs than 30 gr. It needs not be large, " ſo it be but clear glaſs and well wrought. If you " can procure me ſuch an one, provide it me againſt " the latter end of the next week."

In his Letter dated at Derby July 23d 1672 he writes thus: " I have received Dr. Wallis's Letter to " you of the 18th of this month, which finding me at " an unuſual leiſure, I thought fit not to delay an anſwer, that might give you ſatisfaction, tho' I hope " you are ſatisfied already. The difference of the " leaſt and greateſt Excentricities in my Tables is as " the Doctor makes it 2323 $\frac{5}{\sqrt{}}$ qualium Radius " 100000$\frac{\circ}{\sqrt{}}$. That I wrote 22235, was a miſtake " in the firſt tranſcript of my Number, and ought to " be made every where 2323 $\frac{5}{\sqrt{}}$; for that I have " uſed in all my calculations, and the Table of Equations is framed upon that difference, elſe the greateſt " diſtance could not be 7°—40′, as I have calculated " it. The other faults of my copy pray correct after " the Doctor's intimations. You need alter nothing " in the example of the calculation; for the fault exceeds not one ſecond; which ſince we cannot obſerve with ſuch exactneſs, I willingly yield in any calculation, and few expect that ſeverity. I mention in " my Epilogus the letter, in which you have an account " of Mr. Horrox's Theory; I mean that you ſent " me the copy of the Theory from, which, if I remember, you wrote me word, that Dr. Wallis had " long ſince tranſlated. This, I ſuppoſe, you intend " to print; and it is neceſſary to be placed before my " Tables; and ſuppoſing that you intend it, I have " ſaid nothing of any thing contained in that Letter, " but only of ſuch things as Horrox has ſaid nothing " of. . . I have lately procured ſome Lough-water, (ſo " the Miners call it) for one Webſter, the Author of " the Metallographia. It is found in the midſt of " a firm ſtone in the lead-mine. This I have is very " tranſparent, but looks a little whitiſh, and ſmells " of ſulphur. I am promiſed ſome ſtones, which being made of water, that congeals as it drops, are " yet all of them hollow in the middle. Theſe are " rarities ſeldom met with or heard of."

In his Letter dated at Derby Auguſt the 5th 1672 he writes thus. " Your laſt I received on Wedneſday, " and having then a Letter new written to Mr. " Townley, I ſent the included Papers of yours to him, " according to your deſire. When he returns them, " I ſhall impart them to Mr. Halton, to whom I believe they will be as welcome as to my ſelf . . . . . " But the buſineſs of this Letter is to let you know, " that you miſtook my meaning concerning the Letter I mentioned in my Epilogus, which was not " that of December the 20*th* 1638, but one of Crabtree's to Mr. Gaſcoigne dated Junii 21 1642, in " which he deſcribes Mr. Horrox's ſyſtem upon the " Author's ſecond thoughts, which he might find in " his exerciſes and his calculations on ſome looſe Papers. This differs much from that in the December Epiſtle; for 1, In that he makes the greateſt " Equation of the Apogeon leſs than in his later Papers. 2, The greateſt phyſical Equation 5° -10′, " the greateſt optical 2°-30′; whereas afterwards he " made either of them 3°-50′ equal to each other. " 3, In that Epiſtle he directs to take $\frac{1}{6}$ of the Tychonic variation; but on after-thoughts he aſſumes " $\frac{2}{10}$. Laſtly, that calculation is compiled by aid of " Lanſberg's and Kepler's Tables, which in this Epiſtle is done more artificially by Trigonometry. " Add that he directs no correction of the mean motions, which yet I find in his exerciſes and in Crabtree's Letter. Theſe conſidered, the difference betwixt this firſt ſyſtem of Mr. Horrox in the Letter " of December the 20th 1638, and that collected " from his later Papers by Mr. Crabtree is ſo wide, from them, Mr. Flamſteed ſet up a Barometer at Derby, where for three years together before this he had noted thrice a day commonly the height of the Mercury in the Barometer, and of a tinged ſpirit in the Thermometer, and found, conſidering the different ſituation, that Mr. Townley's remarks agreed very well with his, which were; That upon every ſinking of the Mercury the air was more moved, and that either wind or rain followed, not the ſame day always, but one, two, three, or four days after, according to the time and height it had been ſtationary at. Something of this had been noted by Mr. Boyle, but not proſecuted by reaſon that the daily watching its motions, and noting " that I believe you would not think fit to be placed " before Tables, from which they differ ſo much. I " have therefore tranſlated ſo much from that Epiſtle of " Crabtree, as contains the ſyſtem and Trigonometri- " cal method of calculation, which you may cauſe to " be printed before the Tables, which are framed " from them, and agree punctually with them."

In his Letter dated at Derby Auguſt the 13th 1672 he writes thus. " I have yours of the 10th inſtant... " I am glad you are ſatisfied of Horrox's ſyſtem by " the Letter I ſent you. The precepts I found tran- " ſlated by the ingenious Mr. Shakerly, which I tran- " ſcribed from him, becauſe I thought them clearer " expreſſed than the Engliſh ones in Crabtree's Letter, " though they are in ſubſtance the very ſame. I re- " member not that he bids any where double the co- " ſine of an arch, or that he uſes natural numbers at " all. I doubt you miſtake, and that the 3d precept " may have cauſed the error. It is Duplicetur argu- " mentum annuum & duplicati co-ſinui; and the laſt " two words I fear you read, to the doubled co-ſine, " by which nothing can be underſtod but to the co- " ſine of that argument doubled, which is clear another " ſenſe, and ſound enough. For his method of cal- " culating the Proſthapheireſis of the Orb, it is ſo " framed as that it may include that little arch, " which Street applies at the Focus of mean motion, " and calls the variation; otherwiſe the difference be- " twixt Anomalia media & Anomalia Excentri doubled, " as Crabtree finds it, will give Biſhop Ward's Ellip- " tick Equation, or Street's without that variation. " As for that inequality in the moon's motion, which " Horrox calls the variation, and in his Letter of De- " cember the 20th confeſſes he knew not how to ap- " ply, and Crabtree alike in that of June the 21ſt " 1642, I eſteem it purely phyſical, and have not " forgotten to ſay ſomething of it in the Epilogus to " the Tables, as you will find, if you peruſe it again. " Nor can Horrox be thought to have judged it " otherwiſe on his after thoughts, ſince he makes no " uſe of it in computing the moon's diſtance from " the earth, which if it were not only phyſical, it " muſt neceſſarily vary. I thought Crabtree's pre- " cepts ſufficiently clear for calculation. If they ſhall " not be ſo to ſome, our tabular method and direction " will explain them, and render them eaſy, though " we need not fear that any will give themſelves the " trouble to calculate by them trigonometrically, when " the tabular calculation is ſo eaſy, accurate, and ex- " peditious. I think it is not any ways evident from " Crabtree's Letter that his friend Mr. Horrox died " not the 3d of January 1640, except I have amiſs " tranſlated ſomething. Pray peruſe it again, and let " me know, for beſides the Note on the back of the " Letters, I find that in a Letter of Crabtree's to " Gaſcoigne dated March the 18th $164\frac{0}{1}$ he much " laments the death of Horrox. Mr. Gaſcoigne was " ſlain in our wars, I believe in the year 1642; for " I find no Letters either of his or Crabtree's to him " after that of Junii 21 1642, if I have not miſ- " written. Crabtree lived much longer; I believe till " 1652, if his neighbour Mr. Wroe informed me " truly. I ſhall write to morrow to Mr. Townley, " and will make one part of my deſires to be aſcer- " tained of the time of his death." In the Poſtſcript he writes thus. " When I came to compare Horrox's " own ſyſtem in the Letter of December the 20th " 1638 with his in Crabtree's Letter June the 21ſt " 1642, I found that Crabtree had demonſtrated it in " Horrox's own words from that Letter in December " 1638; I mean the Libration of the Apogeon, con- " cerning which, what I have written to you for- " merly, I intended once to have compoſed into " the Epilogus, but upon ſecond thoughts judged it " better to take your opinion of it. I conſent that " you ſhould inſert it, ſince I perceive you eſteem " of it not amiſs, and I doubt not but hereafter to " have ſomething that may further illuſtrate and con- " firm it if occaſion be given."

In his Letter dated at Derby May the 5th 1673 he writes as follows. " I received the ſheet omit- " ted in Mr. Horrox's Book, without which I " think it may do as well as with it; for the cor- " rections in Crabtree's Letter, I find by Mr. Horrox's " exerciſes, are the very ſame he intended; only by " this addition we ſhall ſee the progreſs of Horrox's " endeavours, and how he framed that in the rough, " which he after mended, but left to his ſuc- " ceſſors to poliſh and perfect. I have ſpent my " ſpare hours of late in correcting Kepler's numbers " in the planet Mars, ſo as they may repreſent my " obſervations; which I think they will do very ac- " curately, I mean thoſe of September laſt, which I " made for finding his Parallax and the ſun's. To " make them fit all others is impoſſible, by reaſon " that the places of the fixed ſtars are erroneouſly " ſometimes ſtated by Tycho. But if we ſhould once " be ſo happy as to have them reſtored by Teleſcope- " obſervations on large inſtruments as Tycho's, I ſhould " not doubt in a ſhort time to frame numbers, that " ſhould repreſent all the cœleſtial appearances, at " leaſt of one age, and perhaps the next, very exact- " ly. What I have done, I think will fit all obſerva- " tions as well as any; but my great deſire is to have " them repreſent my own well, which being made " with larger and more accurate inſtruments than were " ever uſed before Mr. Townley's time, muſt needs be " more exact than any before his. I hoped to have " had many accurate obſervations this ſpring of all " the planets, but the clouded Heavens have almoſt " conſtantly deprived me of my foreſeen opportunities " in all but Jupiter, of whom what I have obſerved, " Mr. Oldenburg can now inform you."

In his Letter dated at Derby July the 7th 1673 he writes thus. " I wrote to you about a week agone... " I might have informed you in my laſt, that after " I had diſcovered the ſun's diſtance in September " laſt to be near 21000 ſemidiameters, I place it juſt " ſo much in perigeo: then will his Parallax be juſt " 9″-82, which is preciſe the hundredth part of the " ſun's ſemidiameter there, i. e. 16′-22″; ſo that I find " the earth is but the millioneth part of the ſun. This " cauſed me to think of putting it in a Problem, which " I did to puzzle ſome boaſting pretenders to ſkill. " Thus the ſun's diſtance from the earth is 21000 of " the earth's ſemidiameters; whoſe body is but the " $\frac{1}{1000000}$ part of the ſun. Quære, What is the ſun's " ſemidiater?"

In his Letter dated at Derby July the 26th 1673 he writes thus. " Thurſday laſt I received a Let- " ter from Mr. Gregory (5) about the Scotch obſerva- " tory and inſtruments. I had written a good way " of an anſwer; but when I came to deſcribe my " new micrometer, I find my papers, in which I had " deſcribed it, removed. I have not time to ſearch " for it at preſent, and am on Munday next to go " ſome 30 miles from home, but ſhall return within " three days, God willing. After I ſhall ſearch for " my Papers, and return him an anſwer in the mean " time. Yeſterday I wrote to Mr. Townley to ſend " you his advice, and think it convenient you would " viſit Sir Jonas Moore, who has one of Mr. Townley's " micrometers, which Mr. Gregory may there ſee fit- " ted to the tube better, if I miſtake not, than by " Mr. Hook's."

(5) Mr. James Gregory, Author of the Optica Promota.

In

ing them was thought perhaps a trouble, which ſuch a trifling ſubject as the weather did not deſerve. But now at Sir Jonas Moore's requeſt Mr. Flamſteed ſet up for him a pair of theſe Glaſſes, and left him materials for making more. It had been long ſettled fair weather, when Mr. Flamſteed left London; ſoon after which the Mercury in the Glaſſes began to ſink, but no rain followed till the fourth or fifth day after. This made Sir Jonas eſteem the glaſſes and rules very much, of which informing the King and Duke of York, he was ordered to prepare them the next day, which he did together with Mr. Flamſteed's directions for judging of the weather from their riſing or falling. Sir Jonas had ſhewed the King and Duke our Author's Teleſcopes and Micrometer before; and whenever he acquainted them with any thing which he had gathered from Mr. Flamſteed's diſcourſe, he told them frankly from whom he had it, and recommended him to the Nobility and Gentlemen about the Court. Mr. Flamſteed having taken his degree of Maſter of Arts at Cambridge, deſigned to enter into Orders, and to ſettle in a ſmall living near Derby, which was in the gift of a friend of his father's, and therefore went to Okeham in order to proceed to Peterborough at Chriſtmas; but it happened that there was no ordination there. In the mean time Sir Jonas Moore having been informed of his deſign, wrote to him to come to London; upon which he returned thither in the beginning of February $167\frac{4}{5}$, and was entertained in the houſe of that Gentleman, who deſigned an employment for him, wherein Mr. Flamſteed might have been aſſiſtant to his ſon, for whom Sir Jonas had procured the reverſion of his place, which, though in nothing like his father, he enjoyed for the few years he lived. But Sir Jonas finding Mr. Flamſteed perſiſt in his reſolution to take Orders, and that his ſon's temper was ſuch as would make him as uneaſy as himſelf, he did not diſſuade him from his intent. March the 4th following he brought Mr. Flamſteed a warrant to be the King's Aſtronomer, with the ſalary of an hundred pounds per ann. payable out of the Office of Ordnance, to commence from the Michaelmas before. The Eaſter following our Author was ordained at Ely-Houſe by Biſhop Gunning, who ever after converſed freely with him, and particularly upon the new Philoſophy and opinions, though that Prelate had always maintained the old. Auguſt the 10th 1675 the foundation of the Royal Obſervatory at Greenwich was laid [E], and during the building of it Mr. Flamſteed lodged at Greenwich, and his

In his Letter dated at Derby Auguſt the 20th 1673 he writes thus. "If Ulac's Canon would be had for "a crown or a noble, I ſhould be glad of it, but I "cannot go beyond that rate, for my father takes "notice of my expences, and I am at the outſide of "my allowance. I have more than half finiſhed my "Hecker, for ſo I call my Ephemeris; and after the "next week hope to get time to conclude him ſo "that you may have him before Michaelmas. My "ſervice to Mr. Gregory, if he be ſtill in the City. "I ſhall be glad to know what inſtruments and books "he takes into Scotland with him."

In his Letter dated at Derby September the 29th 1673 he writes thus. "This day I have received one "from you, by which I underſtand you have found "thoſe Tables of Ulack's I deſired. . . . I am very "well pleaſed with the news of Hugenius's Treatiſe "being come over; but more to hear of Caſſini's "Book of Refractions being expected. I am of his "opinion, that they ought to be continued to the "Zenith, becauſe the refractive air reaches ſome "height above our heads. But from Tycho's obſerva-"tions, ſuch as I find in Ricciolus's Almageſt, and "ſome late experiments of mine own, which I in-"tend to repeat as ſoon as I can borrow a convenient "room, I have good reaſon to think, that he makes "them too large a little in the Horizon, and their "decreaſe over flow, or themſelves much too big in "altitudes above 30 degrees. I ſhall ſhortly write "to Mr. Townley to engage him to make ſome ſuch "experiments as I have thought of, and perhaps if "mine own ſucceed, I ſhall in the mean time let you "know the event of them. . . . I wiſh I could have "any ways aſſiſted Mr. Sherburne's Catalogue (6) "with particulars of Mr. Gaſcoigne's Life, who, I "believe, was the firſt that applied ſcrews to Teleſ-"copes. He made with them ſeveral curious ob-"ſervations ab anno 1638 to 1642. Such as could "be found in his Letters, I have digeſted into a ſmall "book with notes of my own to them, where they "were needful for my own uſe. But I fear we have "loſt many more, and that paſt hopes of recovery."

(6) Subjoined to his Tranſlation of Manilius.

In his Letter dated at Derby December 27th 1673 he writes thus. "Yours informs me of the reaſons "why my Ephemeris is not printed; with which I "am very well ſatisfied. But if you have not already "done it, I would not have you propoſe the printing "it at the charges of the Royal Society, leſt they loſe "by it, to whom I am ſo much already obliged for "their reſpects, that I deſire not to be made their "further debtor. As for Mr. Gregory, after I wrote "the letter to him, with the deſcription of the Mi-"crometer in it, I never heard any thing from him, "and therefore forbore to write, ſuppoſing he would, "if deſirous to have any correſpondence with me, "have given me an occaſion to continue it by ſome "anſwer to mine. I deſire to know from you what "inſtruments he took into Scotland. If he deſire any "intercourſe of letters, if he pleaſe to give me a good "occaſion, he ſhall ever find me ready to ſatisfy and "comply with his deſires."

There is another Letter of his from Derby, but without any date, in which he writes thus. "I in-"tend to ſend you my Hecker, which I hope to finiſh "either this day or to morrow. If that my father's "affairs had not preſſed me extraordinarily, I had "long ſince finiſhed it, but hope now will be ſoon "enough. I find a table of the Equation of natural "days in Hugenius's piece ſeemingly much different "from mine, from which it keeps a conſtant diſtance "of about fourteen minutes of time, which that in-"genious perſon has ſo contrived, that the Equation "may always be of the ſame ſpecies. I doubt not "but that though it be ſeemingly different, I ſhall "find it on further examination to agree exactly with "ours, but not fit to be applied to aſtronomical cal-"culations, or any experiments but thoſe about his "watches; but of theſe more hereafter. In the "mean time when you find an opportunity to write "to me again, I ſhall be glad to know what Mr. "Gregory has done in reference to the inſtruments he "was about procuring, and what is the opinion about "my alteration of Mr. Townley's Micrometer."

[E] Auguſt 10*th* 1675 the foundation of the Royal Obſervatory at Greenwich was laid.] Betwixt Mr. Flamſteed's coming up to London in Feb. and the Eaſter following, an accident happened, which haſtened, if not occaſioned the building of the Obſervatory. The Sieur de St. Pierre, a Frenchman, who had ſome ſmall ſkill in Aſtronomy, and made an intereſt with the Ducheſs of Portſmouth, propoſed no leſs than the diſcovery of the Longitude, and procured a kind of Commiſſion from King Charles II to the Lord Brouncker, Dr. Seth Ward Biſhop of Sarum, Dr. Chriſtopher Wren, his Quadrant and Teleſcopes being kept in the Queen's houſe there, he obſerved with them the Appulſes of the Moon and Planets to the fixed Stars. In 1681 his Doctrine of the Sphere [F] was publiſhed in a poſthumous work of Sir Jonas Moore, intitled, A new Syſtem of the Mathematics printed at London in 4to. We may expect a new and accurate edition of this Treatiſe of Mr. Flamſteed with a great many alterations and additions by him, from the very ingenious Mr. James Hodgſon, F. R. S. About the year 1684 he was preſented to the Living of Burſtow near Blechingley in Surrey, which he enjoyed

Sir Charles Scarborough, Sir Jonas Moore, Colonel Titus, Dr. Pell, Sir Robert Murray, Mr. Hooke, and ſome other ingenious perſons about the town and court, to receive his propoſals, with power to elect and receive into their number any other ſkilful perſons; and to give the King an account of them with their opinion. Sir Jonas Moore carried Mr. Flamſteed to one of their meetings, where he was choſen into their number. The Frenchman's propoſals were then read; which were, I. To have the year and day of the obſervations. II. The height of two Stars, and on which ſide of the Meridian they appeared. III. The height of the Moon's two Limbs. IV. The height of the Pole. All of them to degrees and minutes. It was eaſy to perceive from theſe demands that the Sieur knew not, that the beſt Lunar Tables differed from the Heavens, and that therefore his demands were not ſufficient for determining the longitude of the place, where ſuch obſervations were or ſhould be made from that to which the Lunar Tables were fitted. This Mr. Flamſteed immediately repreſented to the Company. But they conſidering the intereſt of his Patroneſs at Court, deſired to have the Sieur furniſhed according to his demands. Mr. Flamſteed undertook it, and having gained the Moon's true place by obſervations made at Derby Febr. 23d 1672 and November 12th 1673, gave him obſervations ſuch as he demanded. The Sieur did not think that they could have been given him; but anſwered that they were feigned. Mr. Flamſteed delivered them to Dr. Pell February 19th 167$\frac{4}{5}$, who returning him his anſwer ſome time after, Mr. Flamſteed wrote a Letter in Engliſh to the Commiſſioners, and another in Latin to the Sieur, to aſſure him that they were not feigned, and to ſhew, that if they had been ſo, yet had we Aſtronomical Tables, which would give us the true places of the Fixed Stars, and Moon's true places both in Longitude and latitude nearer than to half a minute, we might hope to find the longitude of places by lunar obſervations, but not by ſuch as he demanded; but that we were ſo far from having the places of the Fixed Stars true, that the Tychonic Catalogues often erred ten minutes or more; that they were uncertain to three or four minutes by reaſon that Tycho affirmed a faulty Obliquity of the Ecliptic, and had employed only plain ſights in his obſervations; that the beſt Lunar Tables differed $\frac{1}{4}$, if not $\frac{1}{3}$ of a degree from the Heavens; and laſtly, that he might have learned better methods than he propoſed from his countryman Morinus, whom it was proper to conſult before he made any more demands of this nature. Mr. Flamſteed heard no more of the Sieur after this, but was informed that his Letters being ſhewn King Charles II, he was ſtartled at the aſſertion of the places of the Fixed Stars being falſe in the Catalogues, and ſaid with ſome vehemence, that he muſt have them anew obſerved, examined, and corrected for the uſe of his ſeamen. And further when it was urged to him how neceſſary it was to have a good ſtock of obſervations taken for correcting the motions of the Moon and Planets, with the ſame earneſtneſs he declared, that he muſt have it done; and being aſked who could or ſhould do it, replied, The perſon, that informs you of them. Upon this Mr. Flamſteed was appointed, with the allowance abovementioned, and aſſurances at the ſame time of ſuch further additions as ſhould be found requiſite for carrying on the work. The next point to be thought of was a place to fix in. Several were propoſed, as Hyde-Park, and Chelſey College. Mr. Flamſteed went to view the ruins of the latter, and judged it might ſerve the purpoſe; and the better becauſe it was near the Court. Sir Jonas Moore inclined to Hyde-Park; but Dr. Chriſtopher Wren mentioning Greenwich, it was reſolved on. The King allowed five hundred pounds in money, with bricks from Tilbury Fort, where there was a ſpare ſtock, and ſome wood, iron, and lead from a gate-houſe demoliſhed in the Tower, and promiſed to grant what more ſhould be neceſſary.

[F] His Doctrine of the Sphere &c.] In the Preface he obſerves, that in this Treatiſe he has ſhewn how all the diurnal appearances of the Suns and Stars are naturally made; and how laying aſide all thoſe old projections of the Sphere, which falſly ſuppoſe the Earth's Stability, they may be repreſented, and the problems concerning them anſwered by new ones, grounded on that true Syſtem of the World, which ſuppoſes the annual and diurnal motions of the Earth, propoſed at firſt by Pythagoras, aſſerted by Copernicus, demonſtrated by Kepler, and as moſt agreeable to reaſon and experience approved and entertained by the ableſt Aſtronomers of our times. He tells us, that in the ſecond part he has taught how to find within what ſpace of the Earth the Solar Eclipſe is viſible, and where the principal Phaſes appear, by calculation; as alſo how all the Requiſites of the ſame Eclipſe may be found, for any given place, without the calculation of Parallaxes; which uſeful invention, ſays he, having never appeared in public before, I find myſelf obliged to give the following account of its original, that I may not hereafter be accuſed of injuſtice to two of my ſingular good friends, the admirably ingenious Sir Chriſtopher Wren, Maſter-Surveyor of his Majeſty's Buildings, and our Southern Tycho, Mr. Edmund Halley. It was in the Winter of the year 1676, that Mr. Flamſteed light upon this Method. The Autumn before ſome ſpots had appeared in the Sun, and then he was obſerving a compact one, that made more than two intire Revolutions before it was wholly extinct. Examining his obſervations to find the reaſon of their different appearances, he collected from them, that the ſpots adhered to the ſuperficies, and that they were carried round his center once in 25 days and a quarter, the Northern half of that Axis, on which this Revolution was performed, being inclined about eight degrees to the Plane of the Ecliptic, between the 12th and 18th degrees of Virgo; which being concluded, he found that allowing what alterations muſt neceſſarily happen in their appearances by reaſon of the Earth's diurnal progreſs in her Orbit, all his obſervations would be repreſented as nearly as he could expect. And now having ſeen how the Poles, Axis, Equator, and Parallels in the Sun altered their appearances to the eye placed on the Earth, according as ſhe changed her place in her Orbit, and being ill of the ſtone, that he might have ſomething to think of beſides his pains, he ſet himſelf to conſider (7) how the Axis of the earth and the ſeveral Paths and Parallels imagined on it, would appear from the Sun, and how the diurnal Phænomena would be repreſented by an orthographical projection of our globe on a plane ſtanding at right angles to the Ecliptic, and the line connecting the centers of the Sun and Earth. Here he found what he has delivered in the firſt Section of his Treatiſe of the Doctrine of the Sphere, viz. how the Parallaxes of Altitude, Longitude and Latitude were made and given by conſtruction; and upon a little farther conſideration how the times of any appearance of a Solar Eclipſe, the parts then darkened, with the inclination of the Cuſps, might be determined, without any calculation of them, by the help of a projection. Much pleaſed with this diſcovery he immediately conſtructed an Eclipſe, which he had obſerved at Derby Octob. 25th 1668; and with a brief deſcription of the Method tranſmitted it to his kind friend and patron Sir Jonas Moore, by whom it was communicated to the Royal Society at one of their meetings. It happened that Sir Chriſtopher Wren was there preſent, who having viewed the figure only, told Sir Jonas that himſelf had known the ſame Method ſixteen years before; and to aſſure him of it ſent him ſoon after a like projection neatly drawn on paſtboard, and fitted with ſeveral ingenious contrivances of numbers and ſcales for the conſtruction of Solar Eclipſes in our Latitude. This Sir Jonas brought to Mr. Flamſteed, then labouring joyed to his death, which happened December the 31ſt 1719, being occaſioned by the ſtrangury, under which he had laboured for three days. He was married, but never had any children. His Hiſtoria Cœleſtis Britannica [G] was publiſhed at London 1725 in 3 vol. fol. and dedicated to the King by his widow, Mrs. Margaret Flamſteed, and Mr. James Hodgſon. A great part of this Work was printed off before his death, and the reſt compleated, except the Prolegomena, prefixed to the third volume. In the preface we are informed, that in 1704, he having communicated by a friend an account of his collection of obſervations to the Royal Society, they were ſo highly pleaſed with it, that they recommended the Work to his Royal Highneſs Prince George of Denmark, who ordered Francis Roberts Eſq; Sir Chriſtopher Wren, Sir Iſaac Newton, Dr. David Gregory, and Dr. John Arbuthnot, to inſpect Mr. Flamſteed's papers; and accordingly a report was made in their favour. Upon this ninety ſeven ſheets were printed at the Prince's expence before his death; after which the remainder was publiſhed at the charge of our Author and his executors. Mr. Hodgſon has in his poſſeſſion above twenty letters of Sir Iſaac Newton to our Author from the year 1680 to 1699 (e); and a great many others to him from Monſieur Caſſini, Dr. Edmund Halley, William Molyneux of Dublin, Eſq; Dr. John Wallis, and other great men. Mr. Wotton (f) ſtyles our Author one of the moſt accurate obſervers that ever was, and obſerves, "that he calculated Tables of the Eclipſes "of the ſeveral Satellites, according to which Aſtronomers in different quarters of the "world, having notice of the preciſe time when to look for them, have found them to "anſwer to his predictions, and publiſhed their obſervations accordingly." William Molyneux Eſq; in his Dioptrica nova (g) gives him a great character, and in the Admonition to the reader (h) prefixed to that Work obſerves, that the geometrical method of calculating a Ray's progreſs, is wholly new and never before publiſhed; and for the firſt intimation thereof, ſays he, I muſt acknowledge myſelf obliged to my worthy friend Mr. Flamſteed, who had it from ſome unpubliſhed papers of Mr. Gaſcoigne. Dr. John Keil (i) tells us, that

(7) Theſe words in Italic are an addition by Mr. Flamſteed's own hand in the margin of the Preface of the Doctrine of the Sphere in Mr. Hodgſon's poſſeſſion.

(e) We ſhall give ſome of them in the article of NEWTON (Sir Iſaac).

(f) Reflections upon antient and modern Learning, cap. 15. pag. 175. edit. London 1694, in 8vo.

(g) Cap. 6. § 11. pag. 270, 271. 2d edit. London 1709, in 4to.

(h) Dated April 17, 1690.

(i) Preface, pag. xii, xiii. to his Introduction to the True Aſtronomy, edit. London 1721, in 8vo.

labouring under ſome diſtempers, to Greenwich, whereby the latter was ſatisfied that the honour of the firſt diſcovery of this uſeful invention was abſolutely due to Sir Chriſtopher Wren, whom of all mortals he believed to have been the firſt, who knew how to find the times of the beginning, middle, digits then darkened, inclination of the cuſps at any Phaſis, and end of a Solar Eclipſe, without the calculation of Parallaxes. In ſome diſcourſe, which our Author had with Mr. Halley, before he went to obſerve the Southern Conſtellations at St. Helena (8), the latter mentioned the conſtruction of Eclipſes as poſſible, but out of a tender affection, ſays Mr. Flamſteed, to his own inventions, or for what other reaſon, I know not, he was pleaſed to conceal his Method both from me, who then thought it ſcarce poſſible, and, for ought I can underſtand, from all others. Nor is it to be wondered at, that three of us ſhould make this diſcovery ſeverally, and without any intimation of the Method from each other. For to me it ſeems very unlikely, that any one, who admits the Motion of the Earth, and apprehends how the Moon paſſing between the Sun and it, eclipſes ſome part of him to all thoſe people, who lie under its paſſage, ſhould ever miſs of it. But we might rather admire (had I not intimated the reaſon of it in the fifth Section of the ſecond part) that the acute wit of the ſagacious Kepler ſhould overlook it, when he had diſcovered the method of finding by calculation within what ſpaces on our Globe the Solar Eclipſe is bounded, and where the principal Phaſes of it would appear. Mr. Flamſteed then tells us, that he had almoſt finiſhed what he had here delivered concerning the conſtruction of Eclipſes, when it was intimated to him by his ingenious friend Mr. Perkins, that there was little extant in the Engliſh Tongue concerning the general Method of Calculation abovementioned, and that therefore he might do well to explain it. He conſider'd then that this might be performed more eaſily than is taught by the firſt famous inventor, and without his Nonageſimary Table. Waving therefore his firſt intent, which was not to engage himſelf in any thing, which had been expreſly handled by others before him, he thought it neceſſary to undertake this further taſk, and accordingly wrote the precepts relating to that ſubject after, tho' for method's ſake, they are inſerted before the conſtruction of the Solar Eclipſe. He obſerves likewiſe, that in 1670 he firſt publiſhed Predictions of the Moon's Appulſes to Fixed Stars, which he continued eight years after ſucceſſively, firſt in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, after in the Royal Almanack, propoſing them as an uſeful, and the moſt practicable expedient for finding the Longitude, or difference of Meridians betwixt any two places, by reaſon both of their frequency, and that a ſingle perſon might obtain whatever is required in obſervations of them with a ſmall apparatus of inſtruments. But the calculation of Parallaxes required in their application cauſed them to be leſs regarded than he hoped they would have been. He has therefore ſhewn how this tedious labour may be avoided, and the Occultation or Emerſion of a Star from the Moon, or Time of its viſible Conjunction with the Center, and Diſtance then from her next Limb, may be found by Conſtruction, as the Phaſes of a ſolar Eclipſe; and the Difference of Meridians betwixt two diſtant places, by Obſervations of the ſame Appulſe made at each. And now, ſays he, the main difficulty being removed, I would again recommend this Method to the ſtudy and practice of the ingenious Aſtronomer and Navigator.

(8) He went thither in 1677.

[G] His Hiſtoria Cœleſtis Britannica &c.] The firſt Volume contains the Obſervations of Mr. William Gaſcoigne (the firſt Inventor of the way of meaſuring Angles in a Teleſcope by the help of ſcrews, and the firſt, who applied teleſcopical ſights to aſtronomical inſtruments) taken at Middleton near Leeds in Yorkſhire, betwixt the year 1638 and 1643, excerpted from his Letters to Mr. Crabtree; with ſome of Mr. Crabtree's Obſervations of the ſame year; as alſo Obſervations of the Sun's and Moon's Diameters, Configurations and Elongations of Jupiter's Satellites from him, ſmall diſtances of Fixed Stars, with appulſes of the Moon and Planets to them, obſerved with a Teleſcope and Micrometer at Derby by Mr. Flamſteed betwixt the years 1670 and 1675; with the larger intermutual Diſtances of fixed Stars, and of the Planets from them; Eclipſes of the Sun, Moon, and Jupiter's Satellites, Spots on the Sun, Comets, and Refractions, taken with a Sextant of near ſeven foot Radius, a voluble Quadrant, and the abovementioned Inſtruments, betwixt the years 1675 and 1689 at the Royal Obſervatory, rank'd under proper heads, with the Places of the Moon, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, and Mercury, deduced from the Obſervations, and alſo neceſſary Tables to be uſed with them. The ſecond Volume contains his Obſervations (made with a mural Arch of near ſeven foot Radius, and 140 Degrees on the Limb) of the meridional Zenith Diſtances of the fixed Stars, Sun, Moon, and other Planets, with the Time of their Tranſits, over the Meridian, together with Obſervations of the Sun's and Moon's Diameters, Eclipſes of the Sun, Moon, and Jupiter's Satellites, Variations of the Compaſs from 1689 to the end of the year 1719, &c. Tables ſhewing how to render the Calculation of the Stars and Planets Places from the Obſervations, eaſy, and expeditious; to which are that our Author " with indefatigable pains, for more than forty years, watched the mo" tions of the Stars, and has given us innumerable obſervations of the Sun, Moon, and " Planets, which he made with very large inſtruments, exactly divided by moſt exqui-

" ſite art, and fitted with teleſcopial ſights. Whence we are to rely more on the obſer-
" vations he hath made, than on thoſe that went before him, who made their obſerva-
" tions with the naked eye, without the aſſiſtance of Teleſcopes. The ſaid Mr. Flam-
" ſteed has likewiſe compoſed the Britiſh Catalogue of the fixed Stars, containing about " three thouſand Stars, which is twice the number that are in the Catalogue of Hevelius;
" to each of which he has annexed its longitude, latitude, right aſcenſion, and diſtance
" from the Pole, together with the variation of right aſcenſion and declination, while the " longitude increaſes a degree. This Catalogue, together with moſt of his obſervations,
" is printed on a fine paper and character, at the expences of the late Prince George of added the Places of the Moon, (at the Oppoſitions, Quadratures, and on her Limits, &c.) and the Places of Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, and Mercury, derived from the abovementioned Obſervations. The third Volume contains a Catalogue of the right Aſcenſions, Diſtances from the Pole, Longitudes, and Magnitudes of near 3000 fixed Stars, with Variations of their right Aſcenſions and Diſtances from the Pole, whilſt they change their Longitudes one degree, whereby the right Aſcenſions and Diſtances from the Pole of the Stars and Planets being given, their Longitudes and Latitudes may be found by inſpection. To this Volume is prefixed a very large Preface, containing an account of all the Aſtronomical Obſervations made before his own time, with a Deſcription of the Inſtruments made uſe of; as alſo an account of his own obſervations and inſtruments, together with a new Latin Verſion of Ptolomy's Catalogue of 1026 fixed Stars from the Greek; and Uleg-beig's Places annexed on the Latin page, with the Corrections; ſmall Catalogues of the Arabs; Tycho Brahe's of about 780 fixed Stars, in a proper order; the Landtgrave of Heſſe's of 386; Hevelius's of 1534, in a proper order. A Catalogue of ſome of the Southern fixed Stars, not viſible in our Hemiſphere, reduced to right Aſcenſion, Diſtance from the Pole, Longitude and Latitude, with Variations of right Aſcenſions and Diſtances from the Pole; calculated from Obſervations made by Dr. Halley at St. Helena, and Mr. Flamſteed's Stars's Places, and fitted to the year 1726. T.
" Denmark."

FLAVIGNY (VALERIAN DE) Doctor of Divinity of the Houſe and Society of Sorbonne, King's Counſellor and Profeſſor of the Hebrew Tongue in the Univerſity of Paris, and Senior of the King's Profeſſors in the Royal College of France (a). Add to what has been ſaid of him in Moreri and above (b), that he was engaged in a very great controverſy with ſome Divines of the Faculty of Paris, becauſe he had approved a theſis concerning Epiſcopacy, which Lewis de Cleves Bachelor of Divinity had maintained in a public diſputation, which he held according to cuſtom November the 4th 1667. Complaints were made againſt two propoſitions contained in that Theſis [A], and it was not ſuffered, " that this Bachelor, who had finiſhed his time after which he was to be a Li" centiate, who had been preſented to the Chancellor of the Church and Univerſity of " Paris, who had been paranymphed (α), and was appointed by the ſaid Chancellor to " have the place, rank, and apoſtolical bleſſing of the Licentiates on the third of Febru" ary laſt, like the others who have likewiſe finiſhed their time, ſhould receive the ſaid
" bleſſing, which is the reward of the Student's application to their ſtudies, and a teſti-
" mony of their learning (c)." Flavigny adviſed him, only for the ſake of peace, and to avoid the offence which this diviſion might give, to ſubſcribe the declaration, explanation, and explication of the ſaid two propoſitions, as it was required of him [B]. He drew up a long vindication which was printed at Tournay in the year 1668, with this title, Ad Theſim Cleveſianam ubi de Epiſcopatu expectatæ vindiciæ. i. e. " The expected vindication of " the de Cleves's Theſis concerning Epiſcopacy." It is a pamphlet in 4to of 128 pages, in which the Author quotes an infinite number of Authors, who have aſſerted the ſame doctrine which Lewis de Cleves maintained, namely, that Epiſcopacy, conſidered as being to himſelf the liberty of aſſerting and cauſing to be regiſtred in the Rolls of the Faculty at the meeting of the firſt of March following, that the ſaid explanation ſhould not in the leaſt prejudice the probability, or apparent truth of the doctrine contained in it, as alſo of remonſtrating &c. The Declaration which was extorted from this Bachelor was as follows. Non intendo negare abſolutè Epiſcopatum eſſe Sacramentum; imò agnoſco in collatione Epiſcopatûs dari Gratiam Sanctificantem. Ad ſecundam Propoſitionem. Cùm dixi, Aliquandò negatum videri Preſbyteratum prævium eſſe debere ad Epiſcopatum, non intendi, Epiſcopatum conferri poſſe per ſaltum; imo exiſtimo non poſſe Epiſcopum conſecrari, niſi ſit Preſbyter. i. e. " I do not deſign to deny ab-
" ſolutely, that Epiſcopacy is a ſacrament; nay, I " acknowledge that a ſanctifying grace is given to the " Order of Epiſcopacy. And with regard to the ſe-
" cond propoſition, when I ſaid, that it has been
" ſometimes denied, that one muſt be a Prieſt, be" fore he can become a Biſhop, I did not mean, that " Epiſcopacy can be conferred by a Skip; nay I " think, that one cannot be conſecrated a Biſhop un-
" leſs he be a Prieſt."

(a) Theſe are the titles which are given him in a deed made by a Notary, which he ſigned Auguſt 3, 1668, and which is prefixed to his Vindiciæ ad Theſim Cleveſianam.

(b) In the remark [F] of the Article ECCHELLENSIS.

(c) See the ſame deed.

[A] Complaints were made againſt two propoſitions contained in that Theſis.] The firſt propoſition was, Preſbyteratum veſtiri ratione ſacramenti certum: Epiſcopatum ea decorari quicunque negat, probabiliorem tenet ſententiam. i. e. " It is certain that the Order of Prieſt-
" hood is conferred as a ſacrament: but they who de-
" ny that Epiſcopacy is a ſacrament, hold the moſt
" probable opinion." The ſecond propoſition was, Ad Epiſcopatum præviuſne Preſbyteratus? Aliquando negatum videtur. i. e. " Muſt one always be a Prieſt
" before one can become a Biſhop? It ſeems to have " been ſometimes denied."

(α) Paranymphed.] This is ſaid of a ceremony which is uſually obſerved in favour of the Licentiates of Divinity, when they commence Doctors. All the Sovereign Courts of Judicature &c. are invited by Latin Orations, which are delivered before the reſpective Courts, and to which the Preſident anſwers in the ſame language *. CRIT. REM.]

* Furetiere, Dictionary under the word Paranymphe.

[B] Flavigny adviſed de Cleves . . . to ſubſcribe the " declaration, explanation and explication . . . as it was required of him.] He added in the deed, from whence I tranſcribe theſe words, the following clauſe: Keep- ing distinct from Priesthood, is not a Sacrament. To this vindication are prefixed some letters, in one of which we read, that Valerian de Flavigny, Presbyter Laudunensis, a Priest of Laon, had been forty years ago a Reader of the Sorbonne.

FLEETWOOD (WILLIAM), a very learned English Divine and Bishop in the beginning of the eighteenth Century was descended from an antient family in Lancashire, where he had an estate, now in the possession of his son Dr. Charles Fleetwood. He was son of Mr. Jeffery Fleetwood [A], by Anne, daughter of Mr. Richard Smith (a), formerly Prothonotary of the Poultry-Compter. He was born in the Tower of London on New-year's day 1656, and educated at Eaton school, and from thence elected to King's College in the University of Cambridge (b). About the time of the Revolution he entered into holy Orders, and commenced a celebrated Preacher at his first setting out. Having preached the Anniversary Sermon on the Founder's Day before the University in his own College March the 25th 1689, it fell to his turn to preach before them on the Sunday following at St. Mary's, when the Vice-Chancellor and Heads of Colleges desired him to print both Sermons, but he declining one part of the honour printed only the first of them, on 2 Cor. ix. 12. [B]. He was soon after made Chaplain to King William and Queen Mary; and by the intereſt of Dr. Godolphin, late Provost of Eton, and Dean of St. Paul's, (at that time Vice-Provost of one, and Residentiary of the other) he was made Fellow of that College, and Rector of St. Austin's London, which is in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. His own great merit brought him soon after into the Lecture of St. Dunstan's in Fleetstreet. He distinguished himself during King William's reign by his Inscriptionum antiquarum sylloge [C] printed at London 1691 in 8vo; by several Sermons preached upon public occasions, and afterwards published [D]; and by his Essay upon Miracles [E] printed at London 1701 in 8vo. The

(a) Desiderata Curiosa. By Francis Peck, M. A. vol. 2. lib. 14. pag. 37. edit. London 1735, in fol.

(b) See an Account of his Life and Writings, prefixed to Proposals for printing by Subscription a compleat Collection of the Sermons, Tracts, and pieces of all kinds, that were written by the Right Reverend Dr. William Fleetwood, late Lord Bishop of Ely. These Proposals are dated, London Jan. the 23d 173$\frac{5}{6}$.

[A] Son of Mr. Jeffery Fleetwood.] He died in the Tower of London August the 18th 1665, leaving his widow with six small children (1).

(1) See the Extract of Mr. Richard Smith's Obituary in the Desiderata Curiosa, published by Francis Peck, M. A. vol. 2. lib. 14. pag. 37. edit. London 1735, in fol.

[B] Printed only the first of them, on 2 Corinth. ch. ix. v. 12.] It was printed at Cambridge in 4to. 1689, pagg. 27, under the following title: A Sermon preached before the University of Cambridge in King's College-Chapel, on the 25th of March 1689; being the Anniversary for Commemoration of King Henry VI, the Founder. By William Fleetwood, M. A. Fellow of King's College. The Imprimatur by Dr. John Covel, the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. John Copleston, Dr. John Spencer, and Dr. Humphrey Gower, is dated March the 27th 2689.

[C] His Inscriptionum antiquarum Sylloge.] It consists of two parts. The first contains remarkable Pagan Inscriptions collected from Gruter, Reinesius, Spon, and other Writers, and it is digested into five classes; the first of Gods; the second of public Works; the third of Emperors; the fourth of Priests, Magistrates, Soldiers, &c. and the last of various persons, as parents, children, husbands, wives, brothers, sisters, &c. The second part contains the antient Christian monuments. The Notes are very concise, and partly formed from the observations of others, and partly our Author's own. If there should ever be published another Edition of this Book, it would be of great advantage to the Reader to give accurate Indexes, especially of the proper names; for there is at present only one, which may be styled a Glossary of the antiquities which occur in the monuments. It would likewise be very proper to add to the titles of the inscriptions the letter G or R, or S. A. B. P. F or W, in order to shew whether they were taken from Gruter, or Reinesius, or Spon, Aringhus, Baronius, Papebroch, Ferretius, Wheeler, &c. For by this means we might have recourse to the sources themselves, if there should be any suspicion of a typographical mistake, or we should be desirous of a more particular account of them (2).

(2) See Acta Eruditorum Mensis Julii 1691, pag. 327.

[D] Several Sermons preached upon public occasions, and afterwards published.] 1. A Sermon preached before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen at St. Mary le Bow, April the 11th, 1692. 2. A Sermon preached at Guildhall Chapel, December the 11th 1692. 3. A Sermon preached before the Queen at Whitehall, February the 12th 169$\frac{2}{3}$. 4. A Commemoration Sermon preached before the Governors of Christ's Hospital London, 1693. 5. A Sermon against Clipping, preached before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen at Guildhall Chapel, December the 16th 1694, upon Genes. xxiii. 16. 6. A Sermon of the Education of Children, preached before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen at Guildhall Chapel, November the 1st 1696. 7. A Sermon preached at St. Paul's Cathedral January the 30th 169$\frac{8}{9}$ before the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen on 1 Sam. xxvi. 10, 11. 8. A Sermon preached before the King at Whitehall, November the 5th 1700. 9. A Sermon preached before the Gentlemen educated at Eton College, December the 6th 1701.

[E] His Essay on Miracles.] It was printed under the following title: An Essay upon Miracles, in two Discourses. By William Fleetwood, Fellow of Eton College, and Chaplain in ordinary to his Majesty. London 1701 in 8vo pag. 277. Mr. Fleetwood tells us in the Epistle Dedicatory, that he has been "free "enough to blame those who have gone before him, "whether Antients or Moderns, without distinction "or respect to any name how great soever; some, "for their downright begging the question in debate; "others, for their neglect, or slight solutions of con"siderable difficulties; others for attributing so great a "power to the Devil, as seemed to him utterly in"sistent with the maintenance of Christianity up"on the foot of miracles; and most of them, for "leaving us schemes very defective in some parts, "and very undefensible in others." He owns, that he has walked in by-paths, and advanced something new on this argument, and thereby may possibly have fallen into mistakes; but he declares withal, that he shall be very ready to retract his errors upon the first kind discovery which shall be made of them. Lastly he assures us, that he has made very fair war with such as are adversaries to Revealed Religion, allowing them all that they can ask in the matter in debate; and that he has made such concessions as by unconsidering people will perhaps be suspected sooner than approved. This Treatise is divided into two Dialogues, managed in a familiar way by two Speakers; the one is A, who raises objections against, and desires to be satisfied in the doctrine of Miracles; the other is B, who maintains and illustrates this doctrine, and undertakes to solve the difficulties raised against it. Mr. Fleetwood defines a Miracle to be an extraordinary operation of God, against the known course and settled laws of nature, appealing to the senses. In the first Dialogue he treats of the Miracles wrought by Moses; and in the second of those wrought by Jesus Christ. Mr. Benjamin Hoadly, now Bishop of Winchester, soon after published A Letter to Mr. Fleetwood, occasioned by his late Essay on Miracles. London 1702 in 8vo. This Letter is reprinted in Mr. Hoadly's Tracts at London 1715 in 8vo. The Author of the Account of the Life and Writings of Bishop Fleetwood above quoted observes (3), "that it has been often affirmed, and (3) Pag. ix.
"passes with some for a certain truth, that the Bishop
"in a Letter to the Reverend Mr. Hoadly... had "given up his scheme. But this the Reader may be "assured is a report altogether false. Nor is the "Bishop's not replying any just ground for such a
"surmise; for it was almost a principle with him
"never to enter into controversy, to which he had an ex-

The preferments abovementioned were all that he had during King William's reign [F]; having received no recompence for his long ſervice and attendance as Chaplain till within a week of that Prince's death, when he was nominated by the King to a Canonry of Windſor, at the recommendation of the late Lord Godolphin. The grant not having paſſed the ſeals before the King's death, the Houſe of Commons addreſſed the Queen to give that Canonry to their Chaplain; but that affair having been opened to the Queen by the Lord Godolphin, ſhe ſaid, that if the King had given it to Mr. Fleetwood, he ſhould have it (c), and accordingly he was inſtalled into the Canonry in 1702 (d). In 1704 he publiſhed a piece without his name, intitled, The Reaſonable Communicant [G]; and the year following he publiſhed with his name ſixteen practical Diſcourſes upon the relative Duties of Parents and Children, Huſbands and Wives, Maſters and Servants; with three Sermons upon the Caſe of Self-murther. About the year 1705 he took a reſolution to retire from the noiſe and hurry of the City, much to the grief and concern of his friends and admirers there. His pariſhioners of St. Auſtin's were ſo ſenſibly affected at the thought of loſing him, that they made very moving applications to him to continue longer among them. They offered to keep a Curate for him at their own expence, and to come into any meaſures that would make him eaſy. But nothing could divert him from a reſolution, which had been long and deeply grounded in his mind. He gave up his preferments in the City, and withdrew to Wexham, a ſmall Rectory of about ſixty pounds a year in Buckinghamſhire, where he enjoyed the eaſe and pleaſure of that privacy, which he had ſo much longed for, in a neat commodious houſe and gardens; and that which made this retirement more agreeable, was its nearneſs to his beloved Eton. In 1707 he publiſhed without his name his Chronicon precioſum [H]. In 1708 upon the death of Dr. William Beveridge Biſhop of St. Aſaph, he was nominated by the Queen to that See, without any knowledge or ſollicitation of his own, ſo that, as he aſſured a friend of his, the firſt intelligence he had of his promotion was from the Gazette. He was but juſt gone out from waiting as Chaplain when his predeceſſor died; upon which one of the Ladies of the bed-chamber aſking the Queen whom ſhe intended to make Biſhop of St. Aſaph, her

(c) Ibid.

(d) Le Neve, Faſti Eccleſ. Anglican. pag. 388.

" treme averſion; the acrimony with which diſputes " were too often carried on being not all agreeable " to the calmneſs and meekneſs of his temper; for " which reaſon he would not be drawn to defend what " he had written. I write my own ſenſe as well as I " can, was his ſaying upon ſuch occaſions: If it be " right, it will ſupport itſelf; if it be not, it is fit it " ſhould ſink." In 1706 there was printed at London in 8vo. Reflections upon Mr. Fleetwood's Eſſay on Miracles, ſhewing the Abſurdity, Falſhood, and Danger of his Notions. With a Supplement, wherein is repreſented the Extent and Strength of the Evidence, which Miracles give to Revealed Religion. By John Gilbert, a Preſbyter of the Church of England. Mr. Jenkins likewiſe in his Obſervations on the Life of Apollonius Tyanæus makes ſome Animadverſions upon the Principles, which Mr. Fleetwood's Eſſay proceeds upon, but without naming the Author or the Book.

[F] The preferments abovementioned were all that he had during King William's reign.] It often puzzled Mr. Fleetwood's friends to find a reaſon why he was ſo long neglected by the Biſhops and thoſe great men, who were intruſted with the diſpoſal of Eccleſiaſtical preferments in that King's reign. Perhaps from his retired manner of Life, and his appearing ſeldom or never in places of public reſort, they had conceived ſome doubt of his principles, in relation to the Government, as it afterwards appeared ſome in the city had done for no better reaſons; of which he takes notice in the Preface to his Four Sermons; where he tells us (4), that he publiſhed thoſe Sermons, that he might ſatisfy thoſe people who have, ſays he, objected a Change of Principles to me, as if I were not now the ſame man I formerly was. I never had but one opinion of theſe matters; and that I think is ſo reaſonable and well grounded, that I believe I never can have any other. But let the cauſe be what it will, it is moſt certain, that he never entertained any notions againſt the intereſt or liberty of his country. He was hearty and zealous for the Conſtitution, in which the Revolution and ſubſequent ſettlements of the ſucceſſion to the crown left the State, as his firſt Preface to his Sermon on the Duke of Glouceſter's death, and his two Sermons on the 30th of January ſhew. And as for the eſtabliſhed Church, his three ſeveral charges to his Clergy ſufficiently atteſt his attachment to it. He was for the Proteſtant ſucceſſion's taking place in its due time; witneſs his Defenſe of Lay Baptiſm, and afterwards his famous Preface. He was for ſupporting the Houſe of Hanover on the throne, when they were come to it, as his Sermon at Ely Houſe on the Thankſgiving for the ſuppreſſion of the Rebellion teſtifies. He ſtood firm to the excluſion our Laws had made of Papiſts from the throne; and was always quick to obſerve and to expoſe the attempts, whether covertly or openly made to conciliate the nation to that line; as, beſides the pieces abovementioned, his Preface to the Life of St. Winefrede, and other Tracts written at proper ſeaſons, ſhew. In ſhort he never had but one and the ſame judgment of matters with relation to Government, as will very fully appear by a paſſage taken out of one of his Sermons, preached before the Lord Mayor ſo early as 1692. The paſſage runs thus: Here likewiſe are the Laws and Government ſo famous over all the world for liberty without licentiouſneſs, for monarchy without tyranny, and for ſubjection without ſlavery. Here are the fortunes and eſtates the beſt ſecured that can be, not ſubject to the aſſeſſment or taxation of an arbitrary lawleſs Prince alone, whoſe vanity or folly, bad deſigns or wantonneſs might drain the labouring induſtrious ſubject; nor yet ſo much the private maſter's own, as that he ſhould deny the uſe of what the public finds is neceſſary to diſcharge its duty. Here laſtly are the cities of our God, the beſt Religion in the world, founded and built upon the Laws of God, and eſtabliſhed by thoſe of the land. The Writer of the Account of his Life above quoted obſerves, that two of thoſe Biſhops, if they once thought not ſo well of him as he deſerved, lived long enough to ſee their miſtake; they acknowledged his great merit, and gave him frequent teſtimonies of a ſincere and valuable friendſhip to the end of their lives. Dr. Teniſon, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in particular, took much pains to fix him in the See of Ely, upon the death of the late Queen in 1714.

(4) Preface, pag. 6. 2d edit. London 1712, in 8°.

[G] In 1704 he publiſhed a piece without his name, intitled, The Reaſonable Communicant.] The whole title is: The Reaſonable Communicant; or, an Explanation of the Doctrine of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, in all its parts, from the Communion Service. There have been ſeveral Editions of it. It was aſcribed to another hand, and is expreſly given to Mr. Theophilus Dorrington, Rector of Wittreſham in Kent, and Author of A Vindication of the Chriſtian Church in the baptizing of Infants, drawn from the holy Scriptures, printed at London 1701 in 8vo, in the Catalogue of the Tracts diſtributed by the Society for propagating Chriſtian Knowledge.

[H] His Chronicon Precioſum.] It was printed under the following title: Chronicon Precioſum: or an Account of the Engliſh Money, the Price of corn, and other commodities, for the laſt 600 years. In a Letter to a Student of the Univerſity of Oxford.

her Majeſty replied, " One whom you will be pleaſed with, whom you lately heard " preach; I intend it for Dr. Fleetwood;" and immediately ordered him to be ſent for to Court. It was this circumſtance, his having been called to that Biſhopric by the Queen's own choice, that greatly contributed, as himſelf ſaid to ſome of his friends, to conquer the averſion he had expreſſed againſt returning again into the world. He thought he ſaw the hand of God in it, and ſo ſubmitted (e), and was conſecrated June the 6th 1708 (f). In this ſtation he acted in the moſt exemplary manner [I]; and in 1710 publiſhed his Charge to the Clergy of his Dioceſe. The change of the Queen's Miniſtry that year gave him great regret [K]. The ſame year he publiſhed without his name a pamphlet, intitled, The 13th Chapter of the Romans vindicated from the abuſive ſenſes put upon it [L]. February the 16th $17\frac{10}{11}$ he preached a Sermon before the Society for the propagation of the Goſpel in foreign parts upon Acts xxvi. 18. which Sermon was printed at London 1711 in 8vo. He publiſhed at London 1712 in 8vo, without his name, A Sermon on the Faſt-day January the 16th $17\frac{11}{12}$ againſt ſuch as delight in war [M], which

(e) Account of his Life &c. pag. 3.

(f) Le Neve, ubi ſupra, pag. 23.

[I] In this ſtation he acted in the moſt exemplary manner.] The Author of the Account of his Life tells us (5) that " he had a very difficult part to act, coming into " this Dioceſe but juſt before that ſpirit of rage and " madneſs broke out in 1709, which continued to the " end of the Queen's reign, when party-rage ran " higher, and the ſpirit of Jacobitiſm was more in- " ſolent and bare-fac'd, than in any former time, ſince " the Revolution, and more in that part of the King- " dom than in moſt others. Yet his great and clear " reputation, his uncommon abilities and unblemiſh'd " life, which ſet off the epiſcopal character with much " luſtre, his obliging and eaſy deportment, free from " the leaſt tincture of pride, or ſhew of ſuperiority, " did not only place him above all indecent treatment, " which was a great point gained in thoſe unequal " times, but procured much reverence and affection to " his perſon from a Clergy, that almoſt to a man dif- " fered from him in principle."

(5) Pag. 3, 4.

[K] The change of the Queen's Miniſtry that year gave him great regret.] He could not be drawn to give any countenance to the meaſures of the new Miniſtry, tho' endeavours had been uſed, and intimations given by the Queen herſelf, who had a great value for him, how pleaſing his frequent coming to Court would be to her. But his ſentiments will beſt appear from his own words in a Letter to a Friend, to whom he uſed to ſpeak and write his mind freely. When my duty, ſays he, to the Queen and the good of my Country will permit it, my gratitude will never let me vote againſt my friends; when I have ſaved my conſcience, I give up my ſelf to what I call my honour; and therefore under all the diſcouragements I can be, I ſhall always be on the ſide of the late Miniſtry, becauſe I know they ſerved the Queen and Nation ſo well, that I am morally aſſured they never will be ſerved better; and whenever they are, I ſhall certainly be on their ſide, who do that ſervice. I think I may be allowed to act as clear and diſintereſted a part as any man of our Order; for ſure if I could ſhift my ſide, I might be well accepted, conſidering what relation I have had to one (the Earl of Rocheſter) who governs all, and who is very civil to me upon all occaſions. But the meaſures we are in are by no means pleaſing to me, as what will never do the Nation's buſineſs; and I foreſee that all our millions and our blood ſpent for theſe twenty years paſt, will end in a deſpicable peace, which yet we muſt pitifully ſue for too. When he was aſked about two years after his opinion of the ſituation of our public affairs, his anſwer was; " I have been, and am ſtill " in ſo ill humour with relation to them, that I hard- " ly can endure to think of them. We were in the " greateſt honour abroad of any nation in the earth; " we are now the ſcorn of all people. Our friends " hate us, and our enemies laugh at us. We ſhall nei- " ther have a good peace, nor a good war. France " will not give us the firſt, and we ourſelves have cut " off the means of the laſt. The diſgrace of the " Duke of Marlborough was worth a million at leaſt; " and yet I do not hear we got a farthing by it; " which I impute not to our honeſty and virtue, but " to our folly, malice, infatuation, and the great haſte " we are in to be undone. The Parliament has paſ- " ſed ſuch a cenſure upon the Duke, that I dare aver " no equal number of men in all the world, of what " Nation or Religion ſoever, would have done. But " the laying him aſide is ſo ſtrange a thing, that peo- " ple are put to all their ſhifts to account for it; and " to make it go down with the world, muſt invent, " exaggerate, and ſay and do any thing to make him " appear worthy of ſuch uſage. But I expect it will " turn to his enemies miſchief, as it certainly does to " his honour, that after ſo keen and malicious an in- " quiſition into his conduct, their great maſter ſhould " be able to accuſe him of nothing, but of doing " what all Generals have done before him, and what " King William always did."

[L] A Pamphlet intitled, The thirteenth Chapter to the Romans vindicated from the abuſive ſenſes put upon it.] The whole title of it is, The thirteenth Chapter to the Romans vindicated from the abuſive ſenſes put upon it. Written by a Curate of Salop, and directed to the Clergy of that County and the neighbouring ones of North-Wales, to whom the Author wiſheth patience, moderation, and a good underſtanding for half an hour. London 1710 in 8vo, pagg. 22. In this pamphlet his deſign is to ſhew (6), that this Chapter of St. Paul " requires of no people any more ſubmiſſion to the " higher powers than the laws of their ſeveral Coun- " tries require; that it exacts no other obedience than " the laws exact; that it forbids no other reſiſtance, " than the laws of that Country forbid; and that it " damns no man for making ſuch reſiſtance as the " laws of his Country allow him to make, be it more " or leſs;" or, as he expreſſes it at the concluſion of his Tract, that the Word of God obliges all ſubjects to ſuch obedience, and no other, as the laws of their Country have obliged them to, and has forbidden ſuch reſiſtance, and no other, as the laws of their Country have forbidden.

(6) See pag. 13.

[M] He publiſhed at London 1712 in 8vo without his name, A Sermon . . . againſt ſuch as delight in war.] The title of it is: A Sermon on the Faſt-Day January the ſixteenth $17\frac{1}{12}$ againſt ſuch as delight in war. By a Divine of the Church of England, London 1712 in 8vo, pagg. 23. The text is, Pſalm lxviii. 30. Towards the end he has the following paſſage (7): " The " war we are engaged in is acknowledged to be juſt, " and the ſucceſſes God has crowned it with, have " been aſtoniſhingly great. And therefore they who " now tell us, that we entered wrong into it, are thoſe, " I doubt, who would have us go wrong out of it. Or " if they mean that we have been at too great charge, " it is manifeſt they know not how to value thoſe ſuc- " ceſſes. But I would ſpeak to Engliſhmen. Theſe " great ſucceſſes, it is plain, have not been overbought, " becauſe we are told, it is by them, that the enemies " have been ſo far reduced, as to make propoſals for " treating of a general peace. Would they have done " it then without theſe great ſucceſſes? Or could we " have obtained theſe great ſucceſſes at a leſs expence? " I am as glad to confront ſo ſenſeleſs a ſlander with " ſo great an authority, as I am to ſay, that our " enemies have been at as great expence at leaſt, to " loſe their country, cities, and their armies, as we " have been to win them, take them, and overcome " them; and that their children, and their children's " children will be paying debts (if arbitrary Govern- " ments pay debts) contracted by diſgraces, loſſes and " defeats, which left them fighting ſtill in chains and " ſlavery, while our poſterity ſhall be diſcharging " debts contracted by their fathers, to leave them the " Proteſtant Religion, a Proteſtant Succeſſion, and " (which muſt keep them both) their Liberties. Our " enemies themſelves will hardly have the malice, or which Sermon was to have been preached by him before the Houſe of Lords, to which office he had been appointed by that Houſe; but the new Miniſtry fearing that he had drawn his pen againſt the peace, deprived him of the opportunity of preaching it, by adjourning the Houſe deſignedly beyond that day. The Printer, who then knew not the Author, had omitted ſeveral paſſages in the copy delivered to him, out of dread of the Miniſtry (g). The ſame year he publiſhed without his name, The Judgment of the Church of England in the caſe of Lay-Baptiſm and of Diſſenters Baptiſm: in two parts [N]; and, with his name, Four Sermons. I. On the Death of Queen Mary, 1694. II. On the Death of the Duke of Glouceſter, 1700. III. On the death of King William, 1701. IV. On the Queen's Acceſſion to the Throne, preached in 1703: the Preface to which Sermons was ordered in May 1712 to be burnt by a vote of the majority of the Houſe of Commons [O]. In 1713 he publiſhed

(7) Pag. 21, 22, 23.

(g) Account of his Life, pag. 9.

" or the confidence to ſay, this Nation is an enemy " to peace; or that whatever could be done, has not " been done in order to the obtaining it. But we " ſhall alſo give them cauſe, I hope, to ſay, that all " that can be done in order to the carrying on the war, " is alſo done. The firſt, without the laſt, would only " give them a pleaſure, that we owe them not, and " make us their ſcorn, who have been hitherto their " terror." But let us not ſo much as preſage the leaſt evil. I know very well in whoſe hands, under God, we are. This is a peace or war, that is not like any other peace or war, that we or our fathers have ſeen. It is one of the greateſt misfortunes, that could befal a Nation at this time, if people's conſideration can be ſo ſhort and ſlight, as to think this Treaty will determine only whether they ſhall ſave a little money by peace, or ſpend a little more by carrying on the war. Whereas it will determine, in all likelihood, whether they ſhall ever have abilities and power again, of giving or refuſing. I do not mean that we ſhall article for or againſt a new Religion, a new Government, and a new King; but I mean, that unleſs the peace be good, thoſe things will certainly follow in their time, without and againſt all articles. And therefore no man can be too ſollicitous about this great event, that will determine the fortune of Europe for many years, and it may be for many Ages; and for our own particular determine, in its conſequence, of all we have. And therefore, they who are in earneſt zealous for the glory and the ſafety of the Queen, the preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Proteſtant ſucceſſion, and for the Engliſh laws and liberties, will certainly beg of God ſo to direct, guide, and aſſiſt thoſe, whom the Queen employs in this moſt nice and perillous affair of treating, that ſuch a peace may be obtained, as will ſecure them all to us and our poſterity: or (ſhould the war be ſtill found neceſſary) that he would go forth with our armies in the moſt glorious and ſurprizing manner he hath hitherto done, and raiſe us up (he only can) a General wiſe, and brave, and fortunate, as was our laſt.

[N] His Judgment of the Church of England, &c.] The whole title of the Firſt Part is, The Judgment of the Church of England in the caſe of Lay-Baptiſm and of Diſſenters Baptiſm. By which it appears, that ſhe hath not by any public Act of hers made or declared Lay-Baptiſm to be invalid. The ſecond Edition. With an additional Letter from Dr. John Coſin, afterwards Biſhop of Durham, to Mr. Cordel, who ſcrupled to communicate with the French Proteſtants upon ſome of the modern pretences. London 1712 in 8vo. The title of the Second Part is, The Second Part of the Judgment of the Church of England in the caſe of Lay-Baptiſm and Diſſenters Baptiſm. London 1712 in 8vo. In the Preface to the Firſt Part he obſerves, that he knows not whether reaſon, judgment, learning, perſpicuity, and all the qualities that a good Writer ought to have, would ſignify much, if once the word were given out among the Holy Brotherhood, that ſuch a Book was written againſt (what they are pleaſed to call) the Church. " And indeed, ſays the Biſhop, this argu- " ment is ſo ſtrong, that I my ſelf am forced to ſub- " mit to it. As free as I am from any of the afore- " ſaid reſtraints, under which the Clergy lie; as " little as I have to hope for, or to fear, on ſecular " accounts; yet I do not dare to own my ſelf the " Writer of this Paper, by ſetting my name before it. " The deſign I have is as good as the heart of man " can frame: the cauſe I plead for is that of the " Church of England, of which I ever was, and am, " and ever ſhall be by the Grace of God, a very " faithful and ſincere member; and am, I think, re- " tained in this good cauſe by juſtice and great cha- " rity; and I believe I have maintained it well, and " like an honeſt and reaſonable man. But yet I own, " the dread of drawing down the indignation of the " Church-rabble upon me is ſo great, that I will not " have it ſo much as whiſpered, where I live, nor of " what profeſſion I am. My reaſons and my argu- " ments have ſo far favoured the Diſſenters, that " (whatever my intentions were) they have proved " them to be Chriſtians in the opinion of the Church " of England; and that I perceive will not go well " down, nor be digeſted well (the more is the pity) " by abundance of Smatterers, and young Students in " Divinity, who would give more credit to Doctor " H. (7) in this caſe, recommending a Layman's (7) Hickes. " Treatiſe, that condemns them all, than to a hun- " dred other Laymen's Treatiſes, endeavouring to " make them Chriſtians, though they ſhould come " into the world with the approbation of the majority " of the Biſhops. And this is another cauſe of my " concealment, becauſe I have no heart to engage with " ſuch a wrathful Generation."

[O] In May 1712 his Preface to his Four Sermons was ordered to be burnt by a Vote of the majority of the Houſe of Commons.] This Preface is dated May the 2d 1712. We ſhall give a paſſage or two out of that Preface. Although in the conſtant courſe of my Miniſtry, I have never failed, on proper occaſions, to recommend, urge, and inſiſt upon the loving, honouring, and the reverencing the Prince's perſon, and holding it, according to the Laws, inviolable and ſacred, and paying all obedience and ſubmiſſion to the Laws, though never ſo hard and inconvenient to private people; yet did I never think myſelf at liberty, and authorized to tell the people, that either Chriſt, St. Peter, or St. Paul, or any other holy Writer, had, by any doctrine delivered by them, ſubverted the Laws and Conſtitutions of the country, in which they lived, or put them in a worſe condition, with reſpect to their civil liberties, than they would have been, had they not been Chriſtians. I ever thought it a moſt impious blaſphemy againſt that holy Religion, to father any thing upon it that might encourage tyranny, oppreſſion, or injuſtice in a Prince, or that eaſily tended to make a free and happy people ſlaves and miſerable. No, people may make themſelves as wretched as they will; but let not God be called into that wicked party. When force and violence, and hard neceſſity have brought the yoak of ſervitude upon a people's neck, Religion will ſupply them with a patient and ſubmiſſive ſpirit under it till they can innocently ſhake it off; but certainly Religion never puts it on. This always was, and this at preſent is, my judgment of theſe matters; and I would be tranſmitted to poſterity (for the little ſhare of time ſuch names as mine can live) under the character of one, who loved his country, and would be thought a good Engliſhman, as well as a good Clergyman. At the end of the Preface having mentioned the glorious ſucceſſes of the war in the firſt ſeven years of the Queen's reign; he proceeds thus: " We were, as all the world imagined " then, juſt entring on the ways that promiſed to " lead to ſuch a peace, as would have anſwered all " the prayers of our Religious Queen, the care and " vigilance of a moſt able Miniſtry, the payments of " a willing and obedient People, as well as the " glorious toils and hazards of the Soldiery; when " God for our ſins permitted the Spirit of Diſcord to " go forth, and by troubling ſore the camp, the city, " and the country, (and Oh, that it had altogether " ſpared the places ſacred to his worſhip!) to ſpoil " for liſhed without his name The Life and Miracles of St. Wenefrede, together with her Litanies. With ſome Hiſtorical Obſervations made thereon [P]; and a funeral Sermon upon the death of Mr. Noble, who was executed at Kingſton for the murther of a Gentleman, with

" for a time this beautiful and pleaſing proſpect, and " give us, in its ſtead, I know not what. —— Our " enemies will tell the reſt with pleaſure. It will " become me better to pray to God to reſtore us to " the power of obtaining ſuch a peace as will be to " his glory, the ſafety, honour, and the welfare of the " Queen and her dominions, and the general ſatiſ- " faction of all her High and Mighty Allies." This Preface was reprinted in the Spectator (8) on May the 21ſt following. Our Author wrote the following Letter to Biſhop Burnet on the occaſion of burning his Preface.

(8) Num. 384. vol. 5.

June the 17th 1712.

" My Lord,

" I received the favour of your Lordſhip's Letter, " and took it as I know it was intended, very kindly. " The manner of my receiving the indignity put up- " on my Preface, was neither like a Chriſtian nor " Philoſopher, but like a very worldly man. I knew " the whole proceſs, and knew it to be a piece of re- " venge taken by a wicked party, that found them- " ſelves ſorely ſtung; and it affected me accordingly, " i. e. very little. I am not one that love to be the talk " of the town; and in this part, I confeſs, I was uneaſy, " although I think the talk was very much in my fa- " vour. The complaint was made by Hungerford, " and ſeconded by Manley, (people that ſhould indeed " have been ordered to have burnt it) and thirded by " what we call the Court, and carried by numbers, " without a wiſe word ſaid againſt it. Sir Peter King, " Sir J. Jekyll, Mr. Lechmere, and others of the " robe, were very ſtrenuous advocates in its behalf, " and ſo were other Gentlemen, but to no great pur- " poſe, for the Court divided 119, and my friends " but 54. If their deſign was to intimidate me, they " loſt it utterly; or if to ſuppreſs the Book, it hap- " pens much otherwiſe; for every body's curioſity is " awakened by the uſage, and the Bookſeller finds his " account in it above any one elſe. The Spectator " has conveyed above 14000 of them into other peo- " ple's hands, that would otherwiſe have never ſeen " nor heard of it. In a word, my Lord, when I " conſider that theſe Gentlemen have uſed me no " worſe than, I think, they have uſed their own " country, the Emperor, the States, the Houſe of Ha- " nover, and all our Allies abroad, as well as all the " braveſt, wiſeſt, and the honeſteſt men we have at " home, I am more inclined to become vain, than " any ways depreſſed at what has befallen me, and " intend to ſet up for a man of merit upon this very " ſtock. But Pleaſantry apart, my heart is wounded " within me, when I conſider ſeriouſly whereabouts " we are, and whither we are tending. The Court-Party " do now own publickly, that except the Allies accept " of the conditions, that are offered them, King " Philip is not to make any Renunciation; and cer- " tainly the Allies cannot accept of thoſe conditions, " unleſs they are diſtreſſed to the laſt degree. We " muſt and ſhall have a ſeparate peace in ſpite of all " that can be ſaid, and that muſt be without a Re- " nunciation on the part of France, and without a " Guaranty from the Allies; and what a peace is that " like to be? It is now ſaid that England is to con- " ſtrain the King of France to content the States with " a Barrier to their liking, and that the reſt will " come in, or ſtand out without any danger. But I " am afraid England has loſt all her conſtraining " power, and that France thinks ſhe has us in her " hands, and may uſe us as ſhe pleaſes, which, I " dare ſay, will be as ſcurvily as we deſerve. What " a change has two years made? Your Lordſhip may " now imagine you are growing young again; for " we are fallen, methinks, into the very dregs of " Charles the Second's Politicks; ſaving that then " they were more reaſonable, becauſe our enemy was " then in ſo full power and luſtre, as might both " terrify and dazzle a poor luxurious Prince, that " would not be diſturbed, nor ſeemed to care much " what become of England after he was gone. The " preſent times may put you in mind of thoſe, with " this bad difference ſtill, that now the ruinous effects " of thoſe advices ſeem to be taking place after an in- " terval of five or ſix and twenty years, and after " ſuch an interruption as one would have thought " ſhould have quite baffled and deſtroyed them. I " find, my Lord, upon reading my Letter, that I have " entered upon deep matters, which conſidering the " times, and the Spâ waters I have taken, I ought " not to have done. You will, I hope, excuſe me, for " methought I was talking with you, who, I believe, " favour me. I have, I thank God, an intire truſt " in his goodneſs, and know he has hitherto preſerved " us beyond all reaſonable hopes, without and againſt " all our deſervings; but will he ſtill go on to ſave " us againſt our will, and in the midſt of our en- " deavours to deſtroy our ſelves? I hope he will, for " elſe I think we are a loſt people. I pray God to " preſerve your Lordſhip and all your family.

" I am, my Lord,

" Your Lordſhip's moſt humble Servant.

" W. Aſaph."

The Revenge, which the Biſhop points at in this Letter, was dealt out to him in remembrance of the Sermon which he had publiſhed a few months before againſt ſuch as delight in war. The Preface above-mentioned was immediately attacked in A Letter to a Friend; occaſioned by the Biſhop of St. Aſaph's Preface to his Four Sermons. By a true born Engliſhman (9). Dated June the 10th 1712. In the Poſtcript we are told that this Letter was bonâ fide finiſhed, as you ſee it, before the Author heard of the damnatory and flagrant ſentence paſſed on his Lordſhip's performance (ſecundum uſum Sarum) by the Commons of Great Britain. This Pamphlet begins thus: " When Simeon and Levi, " Whigs and Diſſenters, men of ſome, and men of " no ſenſe, with an eager and unuſual applauſe, exor- " bitantly recommend to the nation the performance " of a Religious and Political Biſhop, we may ſafely " conclude from never-failing obſervation the Epiſco- " pal labour to be extremely irregular and indefenſible. " And this I take to be the caſe of the patronage of the " Biſhop of St. Asaph's Preface to his Four Sermons, by " that ſort of men. They would impoſe it on the world " as a conſummate and celebrated piece in defenſe of " our Religion and Government, when I cannot but " think it an aukward and backſide compliment to " both . . . Had not his Lordſhip put his name and title " in the front, with the Printer's and Publiſher's names " ſubjoined, I ſhould have feared an enemy had ſur- " reptitiouſly publiſhed the Sermons with a Preface " on purpoſe to diſgrace him. Doth not his Lord- " ſhip know, that abſolute non-reſiſtance to the ſu- " preme power of every nation (whether ſeated in " one or more) is, ever was, and ever will be a funda- " mental Law? Reſiſtance in any caſe againſt the " power ſupreme, is, and ever will be High-Treaſon " in all States and Governments."

(9) London, 1712 in 8vo, pagg. 24.

[P] The Life and Miracles of St. Wenefrede, &c.] In the Preface to the Reader the Biſhop makes ſome obſervations on the third chapter of Bollandus's general Preface to the Acta Sanctorum Januarii, printed at Antwerp in 1643, wherein that Jeſuit lays down ſeveral rules concerning the credibility of Hiſtory in general, but, as his work led him, with a more particular regard to the credit of ſuch as have written the Lives and Miracles of Saints and Martyrs. The Biſhop afterwards obſerves (10), that the Proteſtants urge in juſtification of their not praying to Saints, that they do not know, nor have any means of knowing, whether the Saints above know any thing of our affairs below. " A man would not, ſays he, pray to " God himſelf, unleſs he was ſure that God could " hear his prayers, and knew his wants, and was " able to relieve him, if he ſaw fit. Now the very " reaſons that induce a Proteſtant to pray to God, " muſt hinder him from praying to Saints and An- " gels. He does not know that Saints or Angels un- " derſtand his wants; he does not know that they " can hear his prayers, if he ſhould make them; nor " does he know that they can help him in his neceſ- " ſities, although they heard his prayers. In a word, " he knows nothing of ſouls departing in the favour with whoſe wife he had criminal converſation. The text was 2 Sam. xii. 5. In December 1714 he was tranſlated to the Biſhopric of Ely (h), without any ſingle ſtep of his direct or indirect (i). The year following he publiſhed without his name, The Counſellor's Plea for the Divorce of Sir G. D. and Mrs. F. [Q], and in 1716 a Thankſgiving Sermon on Pſalm cvii. 2. preached at Ely-Houſe Chapel June the 7th 1716, upon the ſuppreſſion of the Rebellion. The ſame year he publiſhed his Charge delivered to the Clergy of the Dioceſe of Ely at Cambridge Auguſt the 7th 1716 at his primary Viſitation [R], London

(10) Pag. 13.

(h) He was confirmed on the 18th of that month. See Le Neve's Faſti Eccleſ. Anglican. pag. 71.

(i) See his Charge delivered to the Clergy of the Dioceſe of Ely at Cambridge, Aug. 7, 1716, at his primary Viſitation, pag. 1.

" of God, but that they are happy. When it is " made very plain, that the Saints above know our " affairs below; when it is made very plain, that " they can hear the prayers of ſuch as call upon " them from all parts of her Majeſty's dominions at " one and the ſame time; and when it is made plain " that they cannot only hear, but grant our requeſts " of what kind ſoever; when theſe things are made " plain, the Proteſtants will not, I think, be back- " ward to call upon the Saints. All theſe powers are " manifeſt in God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; " upon them we are bid to call, and upon them we " call with all aſſurance of being heard. God is in " every place, and therefore all the ends of the earth " may pray to him at once. God knoweth every " thing, and therefore knows what every one ſtands in " need of; and God is able to do what he pleaſes, and " therefore able to grant us every thing we aſk, if " he ſees fit. Let but the Saints be proved to be om- " nipreſent, omniſcient, and omnipotent, and they " will then, and not till then, deſerve to be the object " of prayer. And ſince we have a God thus quali- " fied to pray to, what need have we to ſeek for any " other?"

[Q] His Counſellor's Plea, for the divorce of Sir G. D. and Mrs. F.] The caſe, upon which this Plea was formed, was as follows: " I. G. D. without the " knowledge and conſent of his father (then alive; but " accounted not of ſound judgment) was at the age " of fifteen, by the procurement and perſuaſion of " thoſe, in whoſe keeping he was, married, accord- " ing to the Church-Form, to M. F. of the age of " thirteen. II. This young couple was put to bed in " the day-time, according to cuſtom, and continu'd there " a little while, but in the preſence of the company, who " all teſtify they touched not one the other: and after " that they came together no more; the young Gen- " tleman going immediately abroad, the young wo- " man continuing with her parents. III. G. D. af- " ter three or four years travel, returned home to En- " gland, and being ſollicited to live with his lawful " wife, refuſed it, and frequently and publickly de- " clared he never would compleat the marriage. IV. " Fourteen years have paſſed ſince this marriage-cere- " mony was performed; and each party having (as is " natural to think) contracted an incurable averſion " to each the other, is very deſirous to be ſet at liberty; " and accordingly application is made to the Legiſla- " tive Power, to diſſolve this marriage, and to give " each party leave, if they think fit, to marry elſe- " where." The reaſons urged againſt ſuch diſſolution were, Firſt, That each party was conſenting to the marriage; and was old enough to give ſuch conſent, according to the known laws of the Kingdom; the male being fifteen years old, the female thirteen; whereas the years of conſent are by law fourteen and twelve. Secondly, they were actually married according to the Form preſcribed by the Church of England, the Miniſter pronouncing thoſe ſolemn words uſed by our Saviour, Thoſe whom God has joined let no man put aſunder. They are therefore man and wife both by the laws of God and of the Land; and ſince nothing but adultery can diſſolve a marriage, and no adultery is here pretended, the marriage continues indiſſoluble. Our Author propoſes a variety of arguments in favour of the divorce; and obſerves (11), that what makes the marriage-contract valid and obliging, is that a male and female ſhould be at age to conſent, and at liberty to conſent, and ſhould actually conſent, to give to each other the uſe and dominion of each other's body, excluſively to all the world beſides, as long as they both ſhall live. This is properly the marriage-contract, and common to all Nations and Religions; and all beyond this is matter of ceremony, decency, and prudence, and ordered by the Legiſlative Powers of different Countries, as they ſee convenient. He afterwards ſhews (12), that this was not a compleat marriage, becauſe it never was conſummated. " The love and the deſire, ſays he, that men and wo- " men have each of the other, is what is implanted " in the hearts of all of them, and is therefore as in- " nocent an appetite as any elſe they have; and it has " (as every other appetite) its proper ſatisfaction pro- " vided for it by the good Creator; and when it fixes on " its proper object is ſatisfied as innocently as the de- " ſire of meat, or drink, or ſleep can be. Marriage " is fixing the deſire upon its proper object; and this " deſire is never to be ſatisfied with innocence but in " the marriage-bed. The end of marriage therefore " is the ſatisfaction of this appetite. This is the end and " purpoſe of God in making them male and female; this " is the way, the only way, of their becoming one fleſh. " And therefore till the end is anſwered, where it can " be anſwered, marriage is not perfect and compleat. " God cannot properly be ſaid to have joined thoſe to- " gether, who never joined themſelves together in the " natural way of his appointment. And therefore, " under favour, it is a great miſapplication of thoſe " ſacred words to the caſe before us, where the two " parties never came together in the ſenſe intended by " thoſe words. What can be plainer than this propo- " ſition? The end of marriage by God's inſtitution, " is, that two ſhould become one fleſh. The two " before you in the Bill were never yet one fleſh. Your " Lordſhips will make the concluſion. Thoſe whom God " has joined let no man put aſunder. The two before " you in the Bill were never yet conjoined by God in " the true meaning of thoſe words: they may there- " fore as yet be put aſunder by men." He next conſiders the great argument of all, which was brought to prove a marriage compleat, tho' its effect never follow; and that is, that Joſeph and the Bleſſed Virgin were, and are often called, in the Holy Scripture, man and wife, altho' we are ſure by Scripture they never came together till the Holy Child was born; and by Tradition, ſure they never came together after it was born. But our Author ſhews (13), that the marriage of Joſeph with the Bleſſed Virgin was all (as the antient Chriſtian Writers call it) according to œconomy. It was to ſave appearances; to cover both the Mother and the Son from the reproaches of ignorant malicious people, till it ſhould pleaſe God, in his own good time, to manifeſt the truth more clearly to the world; and therefore tho' it might be wrapped in Prophecies before his Birth, yet it was not till after his Death that it became an Article of Faith, that he was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, and born of the Virgin Mary. During the life of Chriſt, Joſeph was the ſuppoſed huſband of the Bleſſed Virgin, and the ſuppoſed father of her Bleſſed Son, and under cover of that relation was to take upon him, under God, the care and protection of them both. Will any man, after this, pretend to ſay, that this was a compleat marriage, as marriage is the ordinance of God? It was compleat to all the ends and purpoſes, that God intended by it. It ſcreened the Mother and Son from blame and ſlander; and it provided for them ſuch defence and maintenance as was convenient. But what is this to God's original Inſtitution? Or how can ſuch a thing be drawn into example?

[R] His Charge delivered to the Clergy of the Dioceſe of Ely &c.] In this Charge he treats of the Dignity and Difficulties of the Paſtoral Office. He obſerves (14), that " as for all the attempts of the profane, the " ſcornful, the witty, and malicious ſpirits of the " age, to vilify and bring it into diſrepute, they are " no other than what have always been, and al- " ways are to be expected. Our care, ſays he, muſt " only be, that we ourſelves contribute nothing to it " by our imprudence or our negligence, our ignorance " or ill behaviour of ourſelves. Religion is ſo uſe- " ful and ſo neceſſary to the well-being of the world, " and ſo perfective of human nature, that it com- " mands the eſteem of all men, and obtains it of all " that

(11) Pag. 13. 2d edit. London 1715, in 8vo.

(12) Pag. 15.

(13) Pag. 22.

(14) Pag. 5.

London 1716 in 4to; and the year following a Pamphlet, without his name, intitled, Papiſts not excluded from the Throne upon the account of Religion. Being a Vindication of the Right Reverend the Lord Biſhop of Bangor's Preſervative &c. in that particular. In a ſhort Dialogue. London 1717 in 8vo. The reſt of his works we ſhall give an account of in the note [S]. He died Auguſt 4, 1723, in the 67th year of his age, and was interred in the Cathedral Church of Ely, where a monument is erected to his memory [T].

By

" that are reaſonable. There never was a country in " any manner civilized without Religion; nor have " any of our travellers in their diſcoveries either of the " old or new world found any populous town or city " without a temple or place of public worſhip. Nor " was there ever any Religion profeſſed without its " Prieſts and Miniſters; nor Prieſts and Miniſters " without their honours, privileges, and revenues. " Nor, I may alſo add, were ever any Prieſts and " Miniſters without their enviers, maligners, and tra- " ducers; who yet were never able to perſuade the " world out of their Religion, or the neceſſity of per- " ſons ſet apart for the adminiſtration of its offices. It " is by no means new, or of yeſterday's growth, that " men employed in ſacred offices, ſhould be inſulted, " injured, railed upon, and evil ſpoken of. Com- " plaints of that kind are as old as any accounts we " have, and that, in all places, and under all Religi- (15) Pag. 13. " ons." He afterwards obſerves (15), that as to the qualifications, which are requiſite to make a compleat Clergyman, if we ſhould conſult the writings of ſome very famous Chriſtian Biſhops, and others, of old, and be obliged to believe them, without departing from them in the leaſt, we ſhould find them ſo great, ſo many, and ſo hard to be obtained, that as I am ſure, ſays he, for my own part, ſo I may reaſonably fear, that many of this Aſſembly, deſpairing of ſuch attainments, muſt have betaken ourſelves to other callings, who yet, I hope, ſhall give a good account to God, each of our Stewardſhip. . . . . According to the flights and exaggerations of thoſe devout and over fervid ſpirits, a very few people, were they ſerious, would ever go into holy Orders; which ſhould it ever happen, would be very prejudicial to Religion, tho' overſtocking the Church is alſo not without its miſchief. There was ſomething like this happened in the matter of the bleſſed Sacrament, which may partly account for it. For the two or three firſt Centuries the generality of Chriſtians did frequently, even every Lord's Day, partake of the Lord's Supper; but this their frequency did naturally abate much of their devotion, in the performance of that holy ſervice; which godly zealous men perceiving, ſet themſelves to write and preach upon that ſubject; and to raiſe the people's devout affections, and revive their ancient fervours, ſaid ſo many fine exalted things, uſed ſo many ſtrong and bold alluſions, and lively figurative repreſentations, both of the Prieſt, and Sacrifice, and Preſence, that they quickly made the duty of preparation ſo difficult, and the danger of coming to that Table ſo great and dreadful, that even good people were afraid to venture, and rather choſe to ſtay away, altho' invited to that Supper, than come without what was then made to be the wedding garment. Thus, good well-meaning men do often cure one miſchief by another, and till they have tried, they know not which is greater. The Biſhop remarks (16), " that it is very well for us, that theſe great (16) Pag. 16. " men's examples relieve us againſt the rigour of their " rules and inſtructions; for after all they have ſaid, they " were themſelves Biſhops and Preſbyters, and though " very learned and very good, yet not ſo ſuperlatively " ſo, but that others might and did equal them." In the Poſtſcript to this Charge, dated at Ely Aug. 30th, 1716, he obſerves, that before theſe ſheets were quite finiſhed at the preſs, he received a Letter from the Deputies of the Epiſcopal Reformed Churches in Great Poland, and Poliſh Pruſſia, and of the Epiſcopal Betlenian College in Tranſylvania, wherein they earneſtly entreated him, after the example of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London, to recommend the moſt deplorable eſtate thoſe Churches and that College were then in, to the charitable conſideration of the Clergy of his Dioceſe. The Requeſt, ſays he, was ſo reaſonable, and the example ſo good, that I complied with it, and followed it immediately. . . . . The Brief will come amongſt you about a month hence; but I hope and deſire you will, in ſome of the interim, uſe your endeavours to diſpoſe your people to a more than ordinary liberality in contributing to the neceſſities of theſe our Chriſtian Brethren of the ſame houſhold of Faith with us. This Charge of the Biſhop was attacked in A Letter to the Biſhop of Ely upon the occaſion of his ſuppoſed late Charge (ſaid to be delivered at Cambridge, Auguſt 7th 1716*) as far as relates to what is therein urged* againſt frequent Communion; and for the (pretended) Epiſcopal Reformed Churches of Tranſylvania, Great Poland, and Pruſſia. By Philalethes. London 1717 in 8vo. pagg. 31. This Letter is ſaid to have been written by Mr. Matthias Earbery, who obſerves (17), (17) Pag. 2. that " the Charge contains very ſlight expreſſions " of the Holy Sacrament of the Euchariſt, ſuch as in- " deed, ſays he, made my blood chill in my veins. " I was told therein, that the miſchief of indevotion " at that ſacred myſtery was cured by another miſ- " chief more fatal, viz. the exhorting people to fre- " quent the Communion. I could not find a name " hard enough for ſuch a monſtrous poſition. Surely, " ſaid I, this man has but aukwardly imitated a " Chriſtian Biſhop in making him detract from " the ſolemn myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion. " Surely he was but indifferently acquainted with ei- " ther firſt inſtitution of the Euchariſt, when our Bleſ- " ſed Saviour was pleaſed to call it his Body, even his " Fleſh and his Blood; or with the writings of St. " Paul. He never turned over 1 Cor. xi. 26, 27, 28, " 29. For as often as ye &c. Was here no tropes, " no metaphors, no bold expreſſions, as this mock " Biſhop would pretend to call them? Were the pri- " mitive Chriſtians ſingular in their devout Encomi- " ums upon the Euchariſt? The learned, the judicious " Biſhop of Ely could never talk at this rate." The Author of the Letter then remarks (18), that the Wri- (18) Pag. 3. ter of the Charge has found out a new race of Epiſcopal Beggars, which were never known in the world before, which require ſome ſevere reflections. For firſt, It is falſe as to fact, that ſuch Epiſcopal Churches are in the world. They ſet forth in their Petition publiſhed in the Daily Courant of Monday Septemb. 17*th* 1716, that Wicliff was their Reformer. But I ſhall lay down before the Reader, what notions Wicliff entertained of Epiſcopacy. This the Author does from Orthuinus Gratius's Faſciculus; and then proceeds (19) to the Hiſtory (19) Pag. 7. of the Conſtitution of thoſe Churches, in order to ſhew what manner of Epiſcopacy was ſettled therein. He repreſents Wicliff as a Traitor (20), and an Arch- (20) Pag. 25. Heretic (21), and treats all the foreign Proteſtant Churches with a peculiar ſeverity. (21) Pag. 26.

[S] The reſt of his works we ſhall give an account of in the note.] A Sermon preached September the 7th 1704, being the day for the Thankſgiving. A Faſt-Sermon preached before the Queen at St. James's April the 4th 1705. A Sermon preached before the Queen at Windſor, June the 17th 1705. A Thankſgiving Sermon preached before the Queen at St. Paul's Auguſt the 19th 1708. A Sermon preached before the Queen at St. James's April the 17th 1709. A Sermon preached before the Lords January the 30th $17\frac{0}{10}$. A Sermon preached before the King in the Royal Chapel at St. James's on March the 2d the firſt Sunday in Lent 1717. A Letter from Mr. John Burdett (who was executed at Tyburn for the murder of Captain Falkner*) to ſome Attorneys Clerks of his acquaintance, written ſix days before his execution.* London 1717, without our Author's name. A Letter to an Inhabitant of the Pariſh of St. Andrew's Holborn, about new Ceremonies in the Church. London 1717 in 8vo without our Author's name, The Juſtice of paying Debts. A Sermon preached in the City. London 1718. A Defence of praying before Sermon, as directed by the LVth Canon. London 1720 in 8vo without his name, A Sermon upon ſwearing. London 1721 without his name. A Charge delivered to the Clergy of Ely in Auguſt 1722. London 1723 in 8vo. A Plain Method of Chriſtian Devotion tranſlated and reviſed from the French of Monſieur Jurieu. This Tranſlation was done, when he was young; and there have been 26 Editions of it.

[T] Interred in the Cathedral Church of Ely, where a monument is erected to his memory.] His Epitaph is as follows.

H. S. E.

By his Lady he left one ſon, Dr. Charles Fleetwood, Rector of Cottenham in Cambridgeſhire. Our Author's character was in all reſpects incomparable [V].

H. S. E.
GULIELMUS FLEETWOOD.
Hujus Eccleſiæ, olim Aſaphenſis Epiſcopus,
Pridie Non. Auguſti. A. D. MDCC XXIII^o;
Suæ Ætatis LXVII^m
Nondum pervectus obiit, gravi jam ſenectute innumeris
Laborum ſtudiis approperatâ;
Quorum ſanè recenſioni neque ulla ſatis patet Tabula;
Nec morum ſanctimoniam, candorem ingenii, rerumque
Divinarum & Humanarum ſcientiam, hic commemorare
Opus erat; neque verò ineluctabilem (ſuaviſſimæ tamen)
Eloquentiæ vim, Religioni, Patriæq; Sacramento
Semper fido, militantis; nec Robur illud Pectoris ultro
Sævientibus formidoloſæ Potentiæ minis atq; flammis
Oppoſitum, pro Domo nunc Regiâ, hoc eſt, pro legibus
Ipſaque Populi ſalute, & civili & ſempiternâ;
Iſta enim ad omnem memoriam ipſe quam plurimis
Conſignavit, expreſſitque monumentis ſuis,
Qualia non ponimus ſuperſtites.
Sed hoc teſtari conjux dilectiſſima ſuam uniciq; filii Venerationem voluit, & Deſideria atq; luctus inſanabiles ſolari.

[V] Our Author's character was in all reſpects incomparable.] The Author of the Account of his Life above cited tells us, that "he lived an uſeful, ſtudious, "exemplary life, ſo conſtantly employed in the good "way of his profeſſion, that no man had fewer idle "hours to anſwer for. He had a juſt ſenſe of "the duty of his office, and lived up to the dignity "of it. He was conſtant in preaching, which duty "he diſcharged for many years three times a week. "It may be truly ſaid, he was the moſt celebrated "Preacher of his time. I need not ſay how uſefully "he employed his talent, or with how much Elo"quence. His Sermons fully ſpeak it; which he ſet "off with ſuch a ſweetneſs of voice, and ſuch a graceful "delivery, that he charmed his hearers into the warm"eſt attention, and left a laſting impreſſion on their "minds. And that which made his Sermons more "uſeful was the fine vein of caſuiſtry that ran thro' "moſt of them, wherein he diſplayed a peculiar ta"lent in making things plain and eaſy, which ſeemed "to many difficult, and gave diſturbance to weak "and honeſt minds. He informed the judgment, "and then ſet the mind at reſt. To which may be "added, what many of his auditors have often ſaid, "that they ſeldom heard him preach, but they learned "ſomething from him, that they never had obſerved or "heard before. He was a diligent viſiter of the ſick, "and a ſkilful healer of the wounds of conſcience; "for the cure of which ſad malady he was often ap"plied to by many, who were not properly under his "care, to whom he was a willing and a wiſe in"ſtructor. And theſe good offices he diſcharged in "ſo affectionate and tender a manner, that beſides the "inward ſatisfaction he had of doing much good, "many of thoſe who had applied to him expreſſed "the grateful ſenſe they had of this his labour of "love, which he beſtowed upon them, by kind lega"cies bequeathed to him; ſome of which came to "his hand after he was a Biſhop." In this ſtation he did not ceaſe to be a Preacher; he was a conſtant one at St. Aſaph, where the Choir was well ſuited to his voice: not ſo at Ely, where the Church was much too large for it; but in his own Chapel at Ely-Houſe, ſo frequent in the diſcharge of that good part of his office, though in the cold ſeaſon of the year, that he ſometimes preached four and twenty Sermons in the ſpace of ſix months. He was a great lover of antiquities, eſpecially of thoſe of his own country; but that did not caſt a ruſt upon his parts, or ſpoil his ſtyle; an effect which it often has upon thoſe, whoſe genius leads them early into that kind of ſtudy. He was an uſeful antiquarian, and at the ſame time a fine Preacher. The filling of the Churches in the Dioceſe of St. Aſaph, where he was almoſt the General Patron, with virtuous and worthy men, was what lay next his heart. He often expreſſed the great ſatisfaction he had in beſtowing preferments on worthy Clergymen, and was extremely pleaſed when upon experience and obſervation he found that the care of their people was matter of conſcience to them: "ſo may it always be, "(he uſed to ſay) and with increaſe; for without that "there was no living, but he was ſure, no dying with "comfort." He paid little or no regard to the importunate ſollicitations of the great men of that Dioceſe, if the perſon recommended was not found upon due enquiry, to be of an unblemiſhed life. And tho' he could not have the ſatisfaction he wiſhed of filling his Churches with men, whom he thoroughly approved in other reſpects, yet he took much pains to fill them with men of virtue; and if ever he was moved beyond his uſual temper, it was when he found that he had been deceived by teſtimonials, which had little or no truth in them. He had a generous heart; his hands were always open to thoſe in want, eſpecially to the poorer Clergy, to whom he often gave money or books, beſides the remiſſion of their fees. He was a liberal encourager of every charitable deſign, which came in his way, never ſhewing any deſire to be rich, except in good works; and he was much pleaſed, when he heard, that any rich man had left ſomething to good uſes, ſaying ſometimes upon that occaſion, "it were almoſt reaſonable there ſhould be a "moderate Purgatory for ſuch as live and die ſo "wealthy, without doing any good to any body but "their children, when there was ſo much want and "miſery in the world." He was much concerned to ſee ſo much paſſion and uncharitableneſs raiſed by difference in opinion in matters of Religion; and thought that mere miſtakes, and ſuch differences as did not influence practice, were to be born with. He was modeſt and humble even to a fault, qualities rarely to be found in a breaſt ſo replete with knowledge as his was; and as he fled from his juſt praiſes, and was always uneaſy under them, ſo he was backward to cenſure others. His temper was ſweet and even, and calm and meek, ſo that hardly any thing could diſcompoſe him; no paſſion, no reſentment, no partial mixtures could find a place in his breaſt. To this happy temper of mind was joined a good degree of cool and ſedate courage, which he did not fail to ſhew whenever a proper occaſion called for it. And to crown all his other good qualities, ſo much innocence of life, integrity of heart, and ſanctity of manners hardly ever met in any one man in a fuller meaſure, than they did in him. In a word, this good Biſhop excelled in every virtue, that conſtitutes a wiſe man, and in every grace, that diſtinguiſhes a Chriſtian (21). T.

(21) Account of his Life, ubi ſupra, pag. 6, 7, 8.

☞FLETCHER (JOHN), an excellent Engliſh Poet of the ſeventeenth Century, was ſon of Dr. Richard Fletcher Biſhop of London [A], and born in 1576.

[A] Son of Dr. Richard Fletcher, Biſhop of London.] He was born in Kent, and educated in Bennet-College in Cambridge (1). He was made Dean of Peterborough in 1583, and was preſent with Mary Queen of Scots, when ſhe ſuffered death at Fotheringay in Northamptonſhire in February 1586. In December 1589 he was advanced to the See of Briſtol, and about that time made Lord Almoner. In 1593 he was tranſlated to the Biſhopric of Worceſter, and from thence in the end of the year 1594 to London (2). At length he married a ſecond wife, the Lady Baker, (a handſome widow;) at which marriage the Queen was greatly diſpleaſed (3). He died ſuddenly in his houſe at London June 15th 1596, and was interred in the Cathedral of St. Paul's (4). He had a brother named GILES FLETCHER, who was educated in Eaton School, and elected Scholar of King's College in Cambridge in 1565, where he became a learned man, and an excellent Poet, and took the Degree of Doctor of Laws. He was afterwards ſent Commiſſioner into Scotland, Germany,

(1) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 107.

(2) Godwin, De Præſulibus Angliæ, and Wood, ubi ſupra.

(3) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(4) Godwin, ubi ſupra.

1576 [B]. He was educated in the Univerſity of Cambridge (a), and died of the plague at London in 1625, being 49 years of age, and was interred at St. Mary Overy's in Southwark, on the 29th of Auguſt that year (b). Sir Aſton Cockaine Bart. among his Poems (c) hath an epitaph on our Author and Mr. Philip Maſſinger (d), who, as he tells us, "lie "buried both in one grave in St. Mary Overy's Church in Southwark;" but the Regiſter of that Church ſaith, that Maſſinger was buried in one of the four yards belonging to that Church (e). Mr. Edward Philips obſerves (f) he was "one of the happy Tri- "umvirate (the other two being Johnſon and Shakeſpeare) of the chief Dramatic Poets "of our Nation in the laſt foregoing age; among whom there might be ſaid to be a "ſymmetry of perfection, while each excelled in his peculiar way; Ben Johnſon in his "elaborate pains and knowledge of Authors; Shakeſpeare in his pure vein of wit, and "natural poetic height; and Fletcher in a courtly elegance and gentile familiarity of "ſtyle, and withall a wit and invention ſo overflowing, that the luxuriant branches "thereof were frequently thought convenient to be lopt off by his almoſt inſeparable "companion Francis Beaumont." But with regard to his character and writings, the reader may conſult the article of BEAUMONT (g). Mr. Rymer, as we obſerved in that article (h), attacked our Author's and Mr. Beaumont's Plays with great ſeverity [C]. Fuller tells us (i), that Mr. Fletcher meeting once at a Tavern to contrive a rude draught of a Tragedy, undertook to kill the King therein; and his words being overheard, he was ſeized and charged with High Treaſon, till the miſtake ſoon appearing, ſince the plot was only againſt a dramatical and ſcenical King, it occaſioned a great deal of mirth. He wrote in conjunction with Ben Johnſon (k), Philip Maſſinger (l), Thomas Middleton (m), and James Shirley, who, as Mr. Dryden was informed (n), "after Mr. Beaumont's "death was conſulted by Fletcher in the plotting of ſeveral plays."

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 524. 2d edit. London 1721.

(b) Idem, ibid. and Langbaine's Account of the Engliſh Dramatic Poets, pag. 206. edit. Oxford 1691, in 8vo.

(c) Choice Poems of ſeveral ſorts, &c. pag. 180. edit. London 1658, in 8vo.

(d) He died ſuddenly in March $16\frac{32}{40}$, at his houſe on the Bankſide in Southwark, near the Play-Houſe, and was buried on the 18th of that month.

(e) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(f) Theatrum Poetarum; Modern Poets, pag. 108, 109. edit. London 1675.

(g) Vol. 3.

(h) Ibid. pag. 121.

(i) Worthies, in Northamptonſhire.

(k) Langbaine, pag. 298.

(l) Idem, pag. 353.

(m) Idem, pag. 370.

(n) See the Preface, pag. xxvii. to vol. 1. of Beaumont's and Fletcher's Works, printed at London in 7 volumes in 8vo, 1711.

Germany, and the Low-Countries, and Embaſſador to Ruſſia; and was appointed Secretary to the City of London, and Maſter of the Requeſts. He publiſhed a Diſcourſe Of the Ruſſian Commonwealth at London 1591 in 8vo, which was immediately ſuppreſſed, leſt it might give offence to a Prince in amity with England (5). It was reprinted in 1643 &c. in 12mo. He died in the Pariſh of St. Catherine Coleman-Street in London in February 1610. He left behind him a ſon of both his names, Bachelor of Divinity of Trinity College in Cambridge, who died at Alderton in Suffolk in 1623; and another ſon, named Phineas Fletcher, of King's College in the ſame Univerſity, who was eſteemed an excellent Poet. He was beneficed at Hilgay in Norfolk, and wrote ſeveral Books, particularly The Purple Iſland, a Poem, Piſcatory Eclogues, &c.

(5) Wood, ubi ſupra.

[B] Born in 1576.] He was forty nine years of age when he died in Auguſt 1625. Fuller (6) places him in Northamptonſhire, where it is probable he was born.

(6) In his Worthies.

[C] Mr. Rymer . . . . attacked our Author's and Mr. Beaumont's Plays with great ſeverity.] Mr. Rymer's Book is intitled, The Tragedies of the laſt Age conſider'd and examin'd by the practice of the Antients and by the common ſenſe of all Ages. In a Letter to Fleetwood Shepheard Eſq;. By Thomas Rymer of Gray's-Inn Eſq;. London 1678 in 8vo. The Plays of Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Beaumont, which he examines, are Rollo, Duke of Normandy; King and no King; and The Maid's Tragedy. With regard to Rollo, Mr. Rymer obſerves (7), that "the ſucceſs of this Play is due chief- "ly to the Scenes for laughter, the merry Jig un- "der the gallows; and where the Tragedy tum- "bles into the kitchin among the ſcoundrels, that ne- "ver ſaw Buſkin in their lives before. There the "Pantler and the Cook give it that reliſh, which ren- "ders it one of the moſt followed entertainments of "the town." With reſpect to King and no King, he tells us (8), that in the fable of it are many improbabilities, and thoſe of the worſt ſort, becauſe they contribute nothing to the wonder; and that the characters are all improbable and unproper in the higheſt degree. With regard to The Maid's Tragedy, he remarks (9), that "no- "thing in Hiſtory was ever ſo unnatural, nothing in "nature was ever ſo improbable, as we find the whole "conduct of this Tragedy, ſo far are we from any "thing accurate and philoſophical as Poetry requires." He concludes with obſerving (10), that "the Drolls "in this Play make not ſo much noiſe as in the two "former; but are leſs excuſable here. In the former "they keep their diſtance, and make a ſort of inter- "lude; but here they thruſt into the principal places, "when we ſhould give our full attention to what is "Tragedy. When we ſhould liſten to a lute, our "ears are rapt with the Tintimar and twang of the "Tongs and Jewſtrumps. A man may be free to "make a jeſt of his own misfortunes; but ſurely it is "unnatural and barbarous to laugh when we ſee an- "other on the ſcaffold." H.

(7) Pag. 55.

(8) Pag. 59.

(9) Pag. 106, 107.

(10) Pag. 139.

FLORA, if we believe Lactantius, was a Lady of Pleaſure [A], who having gained large ſums of money by proſtituting herſelf, made the Roman people her heir, and ordered that the produce of a certain fund, which ſhe appointed, ſhould be employed in ſolemnizing her birth-day. She deſigned that that day ſhould be remarkable every year, by the Games that were to be exhibited to the people, and which were to be named Floralia, from her name. Theſe games were celebrated in a very ſcandalous manner,

[A] If we believe Lactantius, ſhe was a Lady of pleaſure.] He upbraids the Heathens with the exceſſive abuſes of their Deifications after the following manner. Jam quanta iſta immortalitas putanda ſit, quam etiam meretrices aſſequuntur? Flora (cum magnas opes ex arte meretricia quæſiviſſet) populum ſcripſit hæredem, certamque pecuniam reliquit, cujus ex annuo fœnore ſuus natalis dies celebraretur, editione ludorum, quos appellant Floralia (1). i. e. "What immortality muſt we think "that to be, which is conferred even on Curtezans? "Flora having gained great riches by her wicked "trade, made the people her heir, and left a certain "ſum of money, the yearly produce of which was to "be employed in public games, which were to be ce- "lebrated on her birth-day, and are called Floralia." Neither Arnobius (2) nor St. Auguſtin (3) ſay any ſuch thing concerning Flora, tho' they reproach the Heathens with the laſciviouſneſs of the Floral Games; but ſhe is ſtiled a Curtezan in Minutius Felix's Dialogue (4). St. Auguſtin muſt no doubt have found, that this ſtory of Lactantius was ill grounded. I have read in the Scholiaſt on Juvenal (5), that the Floralia were eſtabliſhed to the honour of the Goddeſs Flora, by the Curtezan Flora. This proves nothing in favour of Lactantius's aſſertion. We ſhall ſee in the following article, that there has been a famous Curtezan, whoſe name was Flora, but it is not true, that ſhe eſtabliſhed the Floralia. The Scholiaſt on Juvenal is miſtaken, and after all he does not ſay, that the Curtezan Flora founded the Floral Games for herſelf.

(1) Lactant. Divin. Inſtitut. lib. 1. cap. 20. pag. m. 60.

(2) Arnob. lib. 3. pag. m. 113. and lib. 7. pag. 238.

(3) Auguſt. de Civitat. Dei, lib. 3. cap. 27, & alibi paſſim. See Coquæus's Notes upon that paſſage.

(4) Pag. m. 233, 234.

(5) In Sat. 6. ver. 249.

manner [B], they were in ſome ſenſe the feſtival of the Curtezans [C]. Lactantius adds, that the Senate endeavoured to hide from the people how a feſtival, which had ſuch a ſhameful origin, came to be eſtabliſhed [D], and making an advantage of this Curtezan's name, they made the people believe, that Flora was the Goddeſs who preſided over the Flowers, and that in order to have a good crop it was neceſſary to honour that Goddeſs every year, and to render her propitious. There are reaſons to doubt whether Lactantius had this from authentic memoirs; for ſince the worſhip of Flora was eſtabliſhed at Rome by Tatius (a) King of the Sabines, and Romulus's Collegue, this Goddeſs muſt have been worſhiped by the Sabines, before the City of Rome was built. It was not therefore a Curtezan who made the Roman people her heir. They did not begin to celebrate the Floral Games before the year 513 ſince the building of Rome [E]. And

(a) Varro aſſerts it lib. 4. de Lingua Latina. See Voſſius, de Orig. Idolol. lib. 1. cap. 12. pag. m. 93.

[B] The Floralia . . . were celebrated in a very ſcandalous manner.] Lactantius is here in the right. Celebrantur ergo hi ludi cum omni laſcivia convenientes memoriæ meretricis. Nam præter verborum licentiam, quibus obſcœnitas omnis affunditur, exuuntur etiam veſtibus populo flagitante meretrices, quæ tunc mimorum funguntur officio, & in conſpectu populi uſque ad ſatietatem impudicorum luminum cum pudendis motibus detinentur (6). i. e. "Theſe games therefore are celebrated with the "utmoſt laſciviouſneſs ſuitable to the memory of a "proſtitute. For beſides the looſe and obſcene diſ"courſes, the proſtitutes, at the people's requeſt, un"dreſs themſelves, and act the Pantomimes, and con"tinue to exhibit their ſhameful motions before the "people till the lewd ſpectators be perfectly ſatiated "with the ſhew." St. Auguſtin has very well expoſed this lewdneſs and thundered againſt it in ſeveral paſſages. I ſhall tranſcribe but one of them (7). Horum plane florum non terra fertilis, non aliqua opulens virtus; ſed illa Dea Flora digna mater inventa eſt, cujus Ludi Scenici tam effuſiore & licentiore turpitudine celebrantur, ut quivis intelligat, quale Dæmonium ſit, quod placari aliter non poteſt; niſi illic, non aves, non quadrupedes, non denique ſanguis humanus, ſed multo ſceleſtius pudor humanus tanquam immolatus intereat. i. e. "It is not the earth, nor ſome plentiful power that "produces theſe flowers; but the Goddeſs Flora has "been thought a worthy mother for them, whoſe thea"trical Games are celebrated with ſo much debauchery "and diſſoluteneſs, that it is eaſy to underſtand what "evil ſpirit it is, whom men cannot appeaſe unleſs "they offer up to him as a ſacrifice, not birds, nor "cattle, nor even human blood, but what is more a"bominable, men's chaſtity itſelf." The Heathen Authors do not deny, that in the Floralia women were ſhewed naked before the people, and they relate that Cato being once preſent at thoſe games, and obſerving that his being there prevented the people from aſking for the ſhameful ſhew of thoſe naked women, he went away, that he might not ſpoil the ſport. The people loaded him with praiſes by their acclamations for his complaiſance, and after he was gone, the games were celebrated as uſual. Eodem (Marco Catone) Ludos Florales, quos Meſſius ædilis faciebat, ſpectante, populus ut Mimæ nudarentur poſtulare erubuit: quod cum ex Favonio, amiciſſimo ſibi, una ſedente, cognoviſſet, diſceſſit e theatro, ne præſentia ſua ſpectaculi conſuetudinem impediret. Quem abeuntem ingenti populus applauſu proſecutus, priſcum morem jocorum in ſcenam revocavit; confeſſus plus ſe majeſtatis uni tribuere, quam univerſo ſibi vindicare (8). i. e. "The ſame (Marcus Cato) being "preſent at the Floral Games, which Meſſius the Æ"dile gave, the people were aſhamed to aſk that the "Actreſſes ſhould undreſs. Cato being told of it by "Favonius his particular friend, who ſat near him, "went away from the theater, that his preſence might "not prevent the cuſtomary ſhew. The people hav"ing applauded him wonderfully as he was going a"way, reſtored the ancient cuſtom of the games; "having acknowledged by their conduct, that they "reſpected the gravity of one ſingle man more, than "they minded the pleaſure of themſelves in general." Martial has very well ridiculed this conduct of Cato. Why did he go to thoſe games, ſince he knew what was practiſed there? Did he go thither only with a deſign to retire? This is the Poet's cenſure of him (9). He forgot the moſt material obſervation, which is, that Cato ought not to have gone away, ſince he knew that his preſence was ſo uſeful to reform a bad cuſtom. Juvenal gives us in three words a moſt terrible notion of the diſſoluteneſs of the Floralia:

(6) Lactant. Divin. Inſtitut. lib. 1. cap. 20. pag. m. 60.

(7) Auguſt. Epiſt. 202. pag. m. 865.

(8) Val. Maxim. lib. 2. cap. 10. num. 8. Seneca, Epiſt. 47. mentions the ſame thing; Catonem illum, quo ſedente negatur, populus ſibi permiſiſſe poſtulare florales jocos nudandarum meretricum.

(9) Noſſes jocoſæ dulce cum Sacrum Floræ Faſtoſque luſus & licentiam vulgi, Cur in theatrum Cato ſevere veniſti? An ideo tantum veneras ut exires? Mart. Epig. 3. lib. 1.

——— ——— Digniſſima prorſus
Florali matrona tuba (10).
That is,
"A woman worthy to appear on the Stage at the Flo"ral Games."

(10) Juven. Sat. 6. ver. 249.

[C] . . . They were . . the Feſtival of the Curtezans.] Though this be ſufficiently plain from the paſſages which I quote in the foregoing remark, yet I ſhall add to them the following verſes from Ovid.

Turba quidem cur hos celebrent meretricia ludos
Non ex difficili cauſa petenda ſubeſt.
Non eſt de tetricis, non eſt de magna profeſſis,
Vult ſua plebeio ſacra patere choro.
Et monet ætatis ſpecie, dum floreat, uti,
Contemni ſpinam cum cecidere roſæ (11).
That is,
"It is not difficult to gueſs, why theſe games are ce"lebrated by the herds of proſtitutes; this Goddeſs is "not of the grave, nor of the heroical Deities; ſhe will "have her Feſtival to be celebrated by the women of "pleaſure; and ſhe warns them, to employ their "youth, whilſt it is in its bloom, and tells them, that "when the roſe is decayed the thorn is deſpiſed."

(11) Ovid. Faſt. lib. 5. ver. 349.

This is a fine moral indeed. The Goddeſs Flora would have the curtezans to keep her Feſtival, becauſe it is reaſonable to let the women know, that they muſt make a good uſe of their beauty, whilſt it is in its prime; for if they let youth fly away, they will be deſpiſed as a roſe, which has nothing left but thorns. But how abominable ſoever this moral be, it is publickly ſung amongſt the Chriſtians in thoſe aſſemblies, which are honoured with the protection of the ſovereign authority (12).

(12) The Plays and Operas abound with thoſe maxims.

[D] The Senate endeavoured to hide from the people, how a feſtival ſo ſhameful . . . came to be eſtabliſhed.] I ſhall quote Lactantius's words (13), Quod quia Senatui flagitioſum videbatur, ab ipſo nomine argumentum ſumi placuit, ut pudendæ rei quædam dignitas adderetur Deam finxerunt eſſe, quæ floribus præſit, eamque oportere placari, ut fruges cum arboribus, aut vitibus benè proſperèque floreſcerent. Eum colorem ſecutus in Faſtis Poeta non ignobilem Nympham fuiſſe narravit, quæ ſit Chloris vocitata, eamque Zephyro nuptam quaſi dotis loco id accepiſſe muneris a marito, ut haberet omnium florum poteſtatem. i. e. "The Senate finding that this was "abominable thought fit to add ſome dignity to a "ſhameful thing, by making an advantage of her "name. They feigned that ſhe was a Goddeſs, who "preſided over the Flowers, and who was to be "made propitious, that the fruits of the earth with "the trees and the vines might blow well and ſucceſs"fully. The Poet following this hint in his Faſti, "relates that Flora was a celebrated Nymph, who "was called Chloris, and being married to Zephy"rus, received from him as a jointure, the power "over all the Flowers."

(13) Lactant. Divin. Inſtit. lib. 1. cap. 20. pag. m. 60.

[E] They did not begin to celebrate the Floral Games before the year 1513 ſince the building of Rome.] This is Voſſius's opinion (14). Pliny corrected by F. Hardouin confirms it. Before that Jeſuit's Edition of Pliny, that paſſage ſtood thus. Floralia quarto Kalendas ejuſdem (Maii) inſtituerunt Urbis anno DXVI. ex oraculis Sibyllæ, ut omnia bene defloreſcerent (15). i. e. "They eſtabliſhed the Floralia April the 28th "in the year DXVI ſince the building of Rome, "according to the Sibylline Oracles, that all things "might blow well." But Father Hardouin, both by means of manuſcripts, and by chronological arguments, (14) Voſſ. de Orig. Idolol. lib. 1. cap. 12. pag. 93.

(15) Plin. lib. 18. cap. 29. pag. m. 527.

And the method of paying the charges of thoſe games is a new argument againſt Lactantius [F]. Since that time, till the year 580, they were not celebrated annually, but only when bad ſeaſons required it, or when it was commanded by the Books of the Sybils (b). This is another argument againſt Lactantius. Laſtly, in the year 580 it was thought proper to publiſh an Edict, by which it was ordered, that thoſe Games ſhould for the future be celebrated annually [G]. This Edict was occaſioned by the bad weather in the ſpring, of which the Romans had often felt the ill conſequences. Voſſius's Reflection upon Lactantius's objection is not generally approved [H]. There is a paſſage in that Father which he did not underſtand [I]. You will find Moreri's blunders below [K].

(b) Voſſius, ibid.

FLORA

has reſtored the number DIV in this place (16). There is a paſſage in Paterculus, which has been of great uſe to him. It is as follows. Proximo anno Torquato Sempronioque Coſſ. Brundiſium (colonis occupatum) & poſt triennium Spoletium: quo anno Floralium ludorum factum eſt initium (17). i. e. "The next year Torquatus and Sempronius "being Conſuls, a Colony was ſent to Brundiſium, "and three years after to Spoletium; in which year "the Floral Games were firſt celebrated." According to Livy's and Pliny's Chronology, Torquatus and Sempronius were Conſuls in the year 510 ſince the building of Rome. Incidit prior ille conſulatus in annum Urbis DX. ex Liviana Plinianaque Chronologia, quo fit ut triennio interjecto Floralium celebritas ludorum incurrat in annum DXIV (18). Since therefore the Floralia began to be celebrated three years after, we muſt place the beginning of them in the year 513. Father Hardouin chooſes to place it in the year 514, becauſe he imagines, no doubt, that from the end of that Conſulſhip there paſſed three full years before a Colony was ſent to Spoletto. At this rate it would be true that the Floral Games began the fourth year after that Conſulſhip, that is to ſay, in the year 514. It is, I think, more natural to ſay, that a thing, which happened three years after the year 510, happened in the year 513. Obſerve that according to Pliny, the Floral Games were eſtabliſhed by an order from the Sibyl; it was not therefore, in order to perform the laſt will of a Curtezan. Father Hardouin has ſeen ſome medals of the family of the Servilii, which have this inſcription. FLORA. PRIMUS, that is to ſay, according to him, Floralia primus edidit (19). i. e. "He is the firſt that celebrated the Floralia." Whence he infers, that the firſt, who celebrated theſe Games, was of that family. But if we may give the leaſt credit to Ovid (20), we ſhall be convinced, that the firſt who celebrated thoſe Games, were the Ædiles of the family of the Publicii. The medals confirm this (21); and Tacitus adds a great weight to it, when he tells us, that Lucius and Marcus Publicius built the Temple of Flora, whilſt they were Ædiles (22).

(16) Prius DVI. permutatis annorum numeris legebatur: nos tum ex veſtigiis veterum codicum, tum ex indubitata temporum ratione locum eum ſanavimus. Harduin. in Emendat. lib. 18. Plin. num. 40.

(17) Paterc. lib. 1. cap. 14.

(18) Harduin, in Emendat. lib. 18. Plinii, num. 40.

(19) Idem, ibid. pag. 557.

(20) Faſtor. lib. 5.

(21) See Voſſius, de Orig. Idolol. lib. 1. cap. 12. pag. 93.

(22) Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 49.

[F] The method of paying the charges of thoſe Games is a new argument againſt Lactantius.] They who had uſurped the lands belonging to the Commonwealth, were condemned to pay a fine, and that money was applied to pay the charges of the Floralia. Non ex Flora vel meretricis cujuſquam hæreditate, ſed ex pecunia multaticia eorum qui peculatus damnati forent quia publicum populi Romani agrum occupaſſent (23). It was not therefore the money which Flora, or any other Courtezan had left.

(23) Voſſius, de Orig. Idolol. lib. 1. cap. 12. ex Ovidio, Faſt. lib. 5.

[G] In the year 580 of Rome ... an Edict was publiſhed, by which it was ordered, that thoſe Games ſhould for the future be celebrated annually.] Ovid furniſhes us with the proof of this, for he makes the Goddeſs Flora relate, that ſhe ſuffered the bloſſoms of the trees and vines to periſh, to revenge herſelf of the Romans, becauſe they did not celebrate the Floralia every year; by which conduct ſhe obliged the Senate to order by a decree, that if there was a good crop the Floralia ſhould be celebrated annually. The crop happened to be good, and the decree began to be obſerved under the Conſulſhip of Poſtumius and Lænas.

Convenere Patres, & ſi bene floreat annus,
Numinibus noſtris annua feſta vovent.
Annuimus voto. Conſul cum Conſule ludos
Poſtumio Lænas perſoluëre mihi (24).

(24) Ovid. Faſt. l.b. 5. ver. 627.

[H] Voſſius's reflection upon Lactantius's objection is not generally approved.] After having laid before the Reader the arguments which confute that objection, he ſays that the truth does not want to buy the aſſiſtance of falſhood, and that therefore we ought not to admit all that the Fathers have written againſt the Heathens. Cum veritas falſi minime ſit indiga, non omnia alba ſignari linea oportere quæ veteres adverſus pago deditos ediſſerunt (25). Blondel has expatiated with a great deal of freedom on that thought. We ought not, ſays he (26), to defend a good cauſe by ill-choſen arguments, nor admit every thing, that ſeems to be favourable to us, from what ſide ſoever it comes. And yet we may obſerve this in the Fathers; for their deſire of making an advantage of every thing, of forcing the truth out of the mouth of falſhood itſelf, of making themſelves like torrents, that by the impetuoſity of their ſtreams carry all before them, has been the reaſon why a great many of them have neglected to exert their judgment, that nothing might eſcape their memory; and they have not only endeavoured to make uſe of all the reflexions of the Heathens, whether they were well or ill grounded, like thoſe large rivers, that carry gold ſand mixed with mud, but they have alſo taken a pride in that kind of dealing, which was often attended with fraud and artifice, as though they had had a right to ſay with Æneas in Virgil, Dolus an virtus, quis in hoſte requirat? *Hence it happened that St. Jerom * yielding to the force of this ſtrange prejudice did not ſcruple to alledge in his own defenſe, that the Fathers have been obliged to ſay, not what was their own opinion, but what was neceſſary againſt the aſſertions of the Heathens. He even endeavours to juſtify them by the example of St. Paul, but very unreaſonably, ſince the Apoſtle never ſupported ſuch abuſes by his own conduct, nor did he think, that all kind of methods were indifferent or even lawful, provided they could but ſerve to confute errors,* &c.

(25) Voſſius, de Orig. Idolol. lib. 1. cap. 12. p. 94.

(26) Blondel, des Sybilles, liv. 1. chap. 26.

* Apolog. ad Pammachium, pro Libris adv. Jovinian.

[I] There is a paſſage in Lactantius, which Voſſius did not underſtand.] That Father (27) upbraids the Romans with the Apotheoſis of a Proſtitute, whoſe feſtival was called Larentinalia. He adds, that they paid the ſame Divine Honours to another lewd woman, namely to Paula, who according to Verrius was Hercules's Harlot. He mentions Flora afterwards in the words we have tranſcribed above. Voſſius pretends, that Lactantius did not diſtinguiſh Faula from Flora, but that inſtead of Faula we ought to read Flaura. Now Flaura is the antient manner of ſpelling Flora, thus Caudex has been changed into Codex, and thus it is with ſeveral other words (28). All this falls to the ground as ſoon as we remember that Lactantius's Faula was Hercules's Concubine, and that the Flora he mentions left all her eſtate to the people of Rome. Thus it happens, that for want of attention the moſt celebrated Writers commit the greateſt blunders.

(27) Lactant. lib. 1. cap. 20.

(28) Suſpicor priſco more Flauram ſcripſiſſe (Lactantium) id eſt Floram, quod ex altero factum. Voſſius, de Orig. Idolol. lib. 1. cap. 12. pag. 92.

[K] You will find Moreri's blunders below.] I. He aſſerts, that the Floralia were celebrated in the beginning of May. This is taking the IV Kalendas Maij in another ſenſe than all thoſe do, who know any thing of polite Literature. The fourth of the Calends of May is the 28th of April. It muſt not be objected that theſe Games laſted till the beginning of May; for it is againſt all the rules of narration to mark the time of feſtivals by the laſt days rather than by the firſt on which they are kept. The good man Roſinus (29) imagined that the Floralia were celebrated at firſt in April, but that they were afterwards put off till the next month. Ovid's verſes, which he quotes, paſſed his underſtanding, and yet they ſignify very plainly, that theſe Games continued during the laſt days of April, and the firſt days of May.

(29) Roſin. Antiquit. Roman. lib. 5. cap. 15.

Incipis Aprili, tranſis in tempora Maii
Alter te fugiens, cum venit alter, habet.

FLORA, a famous Courtezan of Rome, was tenderly beloved by Pompey, and had so much regard for him, that she would never yield to the pressing entreaties of another lover (a), till Pompey himself desired her to do it. Pompey acted thus, because that other lover, who was one of his good friends, had begged of him to speak a good word to Flora in his favour (b). Since that time, Pompey, who no doubt was sorry of his great credit, and that he met with so much complaisance, did not visit this mistress any more, which threw her into such a melancholy, that she was ill for a long while (c). In her old age she took a very great delight in speaking of the agreeable hours she had past with him, and even used to observe, that she never retired from his embraces, without being bit by him [A]. Plutarch observes that Pompey had a particular gift to gain the

(a) His name was Germinius.

(b) Plutarch. in Pompeio, init. pag. 619.

(c) Τοῦτο δὲ αὐτὴν οὐχ ἑταιρικῶς ἐνεγκεῖν ἀλλὰ πολὺν ὑπὸ λύπης καὶ πόθου χρόνον νοσῆσαι. i. e. "She did not take it as a Courtezan, but was sick a long while for grief, and longing after him." Plut. in Pomp. pag. 619.

Cum tua sint cedantque tibi confinia mensam,
Convenit in laudes ille vel iste tuas (30).

(30) Ovid. Fast. lib. 5. ver. 185. Rosinus has not quoted the two last verses.

(31) Pomey, Pantheum Mythicum pag. m. 219.

(32) Lib. 6. cap. 8. pag. m. 513.

(33) I mean that he marks neither volume, nor book, nor any thing whatsoever.

(34) Pomey, Pantheum Mythicum pag. 218, 219.

(35) He quotes Lactantius without mentioning the book. Valerius Maximus, lib. 2. cap. 5. where there is not a word of the Floralia; and Ovid in the 4th of the Fasti, he should have quoted the 5th.

II. None of the Authors quoted by Moreri say, that during the Floralia the Ædiles spread the roads with blossoms of beans and pease. He borrowed this from some modern Author, and perhaps from the Jesuit Pomey, who asserts, that during these Festivals the Ædiles distributed beans, and pease, and other kinds of such pulse among the people (31). He quotes Valerius Maximus l. 2. cap. 5. But look for this in that passage as much as you please, you will never find the least hint of it. Pomey trusted, no doubt, to Tiraqueau's Commentary on Alexander ab Alexandro, in which that same false quotation is to be found (32). I do not think that Plutarch is quoted any more to the purpose. Pomey says, in a strange and inexcusable manner of quoting (33), that the statue of the Goddess Flora in the Temple of Castor and Pollux was dressed in a tunick, and held the blossoms of pease and beans in her right hand (34). Plutarch, or I am much mistaken, says only that Cecilius Metellus consecrated in the Temple of Castor and Pollux the picture of Flora, Pompey's mistress, and one of the most beautiful women of Rome. III. All the Authors whom Moreri cites, are wrong quoted (35).

[A] Without being bit by him.] Girac maintains, that Amiot did not understand the following Greek passage in Plutarch. Φλώραν δὲ τὴν ἑταίραν ἔφασαν ἤδη πρεσβυτέραν οὖσαν ἐπιεικῶς ἀεὶ μνημονεύειν τῆς γενομένης αὐτῇ πρὸς τὸν Πομπήϊον ὁμιλίας λέγουσαν ὡς οὐκ ἂν ἐκείνῳ συναναπαυσαμένην, ἀδήκτως ἀπιέναι. Amiot translates this passage thus: It is also asserted that the Courtezan Flora did in her old age take a great delight in relating frequently the correspondence there had been in her youth between Pompey and her, adding that it was impossible for her, when she lay with him, to leave him without biting him. This is not giving the sense of the original. The Latin Translator has not succeeded much better. Floram meretricem ajunt natu jam grandiorem fere semper commemorantem suam cum Pompeio consuetudinem, dicere solitam non potuisse se ab ejus concubitu sine aculeo discedere. (He makes her say, that she could not leave him without grief.) I am not the first that made this observation against Amiot. I have read it in Girac's Reply, in the passage where he censures his adversary for comparing his teeth with those of that beautiful Roman woman, who was in love with Pompey, and never used to leave him without biting him out of fondness. Here follows in what manner Costar was reproved for this. "This application betrays a great ignorance; for it "was not Flora that used to bite Pompey, it was Pompey that bit her, as it is asserted in the Greek in very "clear and intelligible words. If Monsieur Costar "did not understand that language, and if his Amiot "has misled him, the whole connection of the discourse ought to have set him right again. To what "purpose would so judicious an Author, as Plutarch "was, have observed with regard to Flora a piece of "lasciviousness, which is very common with all the "women of her trade? His design was to draw Pompey's character, to disclose his most secret actions, "and to acquaint posterity with the most hidden pas"sions of so illustrious a General (1)." Monsieur de Girac did not think, that this censure was sufficient, and he was very much in the right. It was still more necessary to expose the fault his adversary had committed against virtue. And indeed he censures him severely for his not being ashamed to compare himself with a Courtezan, who is so well known in the Roman History by her prostitution. He thinks it strange, that an Archdeacon and a Curate should learn from this lewd woman how to bite in a genteel manner. As for his part he is glad, that he does not live under the slavery of love, since it is a master full of fury and rage (2). This rage, continues he, as Lucretius * very well observes, appears never with more violence, than in the enjoyment of those obscene pleasures: it makes men wound and bite those they love most. The Poets mention these bitings every where. Immediately after this he speaks of Flora and Pompey.

(1) Girac, Replique, Sect. 8. pag. m. 73.

(2) Ibid. pag. 72.

* Quod petiere premunt arcte, faciuntque dolorem
Corporis, & dentes inlidunt sæpe labellis,
Osculaque adfigunt quia non est pura voluptas:
Et stimuli subsunt, qui instigant, lædere id ipsum
Quodcumque est, rabies unde illa hæc germina surgunt. Lucret. lib. 4. ver. 1072.

The Poets are not the only Authors who speak of those bitings; Cicero entertained the Senate with such stories in one of his Orations against Verres. He asserted that if the criminal would shew his breast, they would not see upon it those glorious marks of wounds, which brave men receive in battles, but such as lascivious men get in their obscene pleasures. Hic scilicet est metuendum, ne ad exitum defensionis tuæ (3) vetus illa Antoniana dicendi ratio atque auctoritas proferatur, ne excitetur Verres, ne denudetur a pectore, ne cicatrices populus Romanus aspiciat ex mulierum morsu, vestigia libidinis atque nequitiæ (4). i. e. "Here you may fear "lest at the close of your plea, we have recourse to "that ancient method of Anthony, supported by his "authority, namely to make Verres appear, to shew "his naked breast, that the Romans may see those "scars caused by the bitings of the women, the proofs "of his lewd and profligate life." They who are willing to see several passages from the Poets concerning that kind of biting, may consult, if they please, Dionysius Lambinus, upon the following verses of the XIIIth Ode of Horace's first Book.

(3) Cicero directs his discourse to Hortensius, Verres's Council.

(4) Cicero, in Verrem, lib. 5. cap. 13.

Sive puer furens
Impressit memorem dente labris notam.
Non, si me satis audias,
Speres perpetuum, dulcia barbare
Lædentem oscula, quæ Venus
Quinta parte sui nectaris imbuit *.

* See the Translation of these lines in the article ADONIS, remark [D].

Yet this Author has not collected all that the Poets have said upon this subject: he has omitted perhaps more passages than he transcribed. I have observed that amongst other passages he has omitted that of Ausonius concerning the love-rage of some Eunuchs. The Jesuit Theophilus Raynaud has very well remembred it (5): S. Basilius lib. de vera virgin. sub finem distinguit duplicem eunuchismum factitium. Unum quo exscinditur tota virilitas, . . . alium quo soli didymi auferuntur. Priores eunuchos negat S. Basilius (6). . . . De posterioribus ait eos acrius atque ardentius inflammari libidine, & impatientissime ferri ad complexum. Et cum obstructis per excisionem superioribus meatibus, non possint humorem in lumbis inflammatum emittere: non allevantur per complexum, ut ii quibus vasa sunt integra & expedita, & emissione concupiscentiæ flagrantis remittunt ardorem: sed pruritu assiduo stimulati, aguntur in rabiem, nec desistunt donec fatigatio cassos conatus disturbet. Probat hoc S. Basilius, gemino suæ ætatis exemplo, quorum alterum est de fassa ingenue Virgine sacra, spurcum eunuchum totum toti affusum, cum non haberet, qui æstum concupiscentiæ sedaret, ardentem rabiem, morsibus, ac infixis dentibus indicasse. Annuit Ausonius Epigrammate 160 (7), sic canens.

(5) In Tractatu de Eunuchis, cap. 5. Paragr. 2. num. 12. pag. m. 143.

(6) You will find wherewithall to fill up this gap, in the quotation (14) of the article COMBABUS.

Defectos sic fama viros, ubi cassa libido
Fœmineos cœtus, & non sua bella lacessit
Irrita vexato consumere gaudia lectos;
Titillata brevi cum jam sub fine voluptas
Fervet, & ingesto peragit ludibria morsu.

(7) In my edition of Ausonius, which is that of Amsterdam 1671, these lines are in the 105th Epigram.

the love of women [B], and that Flora was ſo beautiful, that Cecilius Metellus cauſed her picture to be drawn to be kept with ſeveral others in the temple of Caſtor and Pollux (d). This was neither the firſt nor the laſt time that a Courtezan's picture received that honour [C]. I do not know whether this action of Cecilius Metellus might not have been the occaſion of the miſtake which I have mentioned in the foregoing article, where I ſhewed that Lactantius was not in the right to ſay that the Floralia were celebrated in the honour of a Courtezan. A modern Author, who no doubt was not unacquainted with Lactantius's blunder, yet did not entirely avoid it [D]. I ſhall ſhew from whence (d) Plutarch, in Pomp. init. pag. 619.

That is,

" St. Baſil, towards the end of his Book of true Virginity of Eunuchs made ſo by art. The one of thoſe, who are totally emaſculated; the other of thoſe, whoſe teſticles only are cut off. St. Baſil denies that the former Eunuchs &c. . . . As for the latter he aſſerts, that they are moſt violently inflamed with luſt, and deſire a woman's embraces moſt impatiently. And as the upper ducts are obſtructed by the ſcars, they cannot emit the humour which is enflamed in their loins: ſo that they are not eaſed by embracing a woman, as thoſe are, whoſe veſſels are whole and ſound, and whoſe burning luſt is cooled by emiſſion: But being affected with a continual itching, they fall into a rage, nor do they interrupt their unſucceſsful attempts, till they be quite ſpent. St. Baſil proves this by two inſtances that happened in his time. The one is of an holy Virgin, who frankly confeſſed, that a laſcivious Eunuch lay with her, and not being able to ſatisfy his luſt, he ſhewed his burning rage by biting her. Auſonius confirms this in his 160th Epigram, where he ſays; It is reported, that, when a vain luſt prompts theſe Eunuchs to frequent the women, and provokes them to a wreſtle, for which they are moſt proper, they vainly expect pleaſures on a bed, that is tired with them. And when towards the end their luſt is in its greateſt fury, they bite, becauſe they can do nothing more."

See what we have ſaid above in the Remark [D] of the Article ADONIS, and below in the Remark [A] of the Article LAMIA, a Courtezan.

A Phyſician of Paris, much better acquainted with the Greek Tongue than Coſtar was, did yet miſtake the ſenſe of Plutarch's paſſage. Sic Flora, ſays he (8), nobile apud Romanos ſcortum, & forma egregia cum ardentius Pompeium magnum tum adoleſcentem deperiret, dicere ſolebat, (ut quidem refert Plutarchus) nunquam ſe ab ejus amplexibus diſcedere potuiſſe niſi corpore ejuſdem demorſo. i. e. " Thus Flora a celebrated and beautiful Courtezan of Rome, who was paſſionately in love with Pompey, when ſtill a young man, uſed to ſay (as Plutarch relates it) that ſhe never could retire from his embraces, without biting him." Take notice, that he makes ſome pretty curious obſervations concerning the brutality of love, and hints, that it not only prompts men to bite the beloved object, but alſo inſpires them with a deſire to eat it up. He drags to it a paſſage from Plato, in which love is compared to the hunger, and to eagerneſs with which wolves hunt after lambs. Τὴν ἐράσϑ φιλίαν, ὅτι ϑ μετ' ἐυνοίας γίγνεται, ἀλλὰ σιτίϑ τρόπον χάριν πλησμονῆς, &c (9). i. e. " The friendſhip of a lover does not conſiſt in any kindneſs, but in a certain greedineſs, like that which we have for food."

(8) Petrus Petitus, de Natura & Morib. Anthropophag. pag. 107.

(9) Plato, in Phædro, apud Petitum, ibid. pag. 108.

[B] Pompey had a particular gift to gain the love of women.] He proves it both by the teſtimony of Flora, and by the behaviour of Julia Pompey's ſpouſe. She was a young woman, and was married to a man, who was not young, and yet ſhe was paſſionately in love with him. Pompey had gained her affection not only by keeping faithfully to her alone, but alſo by his courteous behaviour towards the fair ſex. Καὶ γαρ ϰ τϑτο λέγεται, ϰ περιϐέητον ἦν τῆς κόρης τὸ φίλανδρον, ϑ καθ' ὥραν πόϑους τὸν Πομπήϊον. ἀλλ' αἴτιον ἔοικεν ἥττε σωφροσύνη τῆ ἀνδρὸς εἶναι, μόνην γινώσκον ϰ τὴν γεγαμμένην, ἥττε σεμνότης ἀκ ἄκριτον ἀλλ' εὐχαρι ἔχϑσα τὴν ὁμιλίαν, ϰ μάλιϛα γυναικῶν ἄγωγον, εἰ δεῖ μηδὲ Φλῶραν ἀλῶναι τὴν ἑταίραν ψευδομαρτυριῶν (10).

(10) Plutarch. in Pompeio, pag. 647, B.

(11) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 10.

(12) Athen. lib. 13.

(13) Remarks [C] and [G].

[C] This was neither the firſt nor the laſt time, that a courtezan's picture received that honour.] The Venus riſing out of the ſea was the picture of Campaſpe Alexander the Great's miſtreſs (11), or that of the Courtezan Phryne (12). See the Article of APELLES (13). Whilſt Phryne was young, ſhe was the original after which the picture of Venus uſed to be drawn (14). The Venus of Cnidus was drawn after the face of a Courtezan, with whom Praxiteles was paſſionately in love (15). Pliny mentions a Painter who always uſed to draw the Goddeſſes after ſome of his miſtreſſes. Fuit Arellius, ſays he (16), Romæ celeber paulo ante divum Auguſtum, niſi flagitio inſigni corrupiſſet artem, ſemper alicujus fœminæ amore flagrans, & ob id Deas pingens, ſed dilectarum imagine. i. e. " Arellius, who flouriſhed at Rome a little before Auguſtus, was a very celebrated Painter, had he not diſgraced his art by a notorious wickedneſs; for as he was always in love with ſome woman, he painted the Goddeſſes after the likeneſs of his miſtreſſes." The Chriſtian Religion is not free from this diſorder. See Voetius's Theſes (17), in which you will find the following words: Quid factum ſit aperit Molanus (18) in Libro de Picturis ſacris, cap. 29. . . . Viſæ inquit quandoque in locis ubi non decuit divorum imagines viventium adhuc hominum ora vultuſque referre, ut hoc umbratico velamento illorum quos amabant effigie paſcerent oculos. Ad quas ſelectas & procaciter venuſtas formas pingi ſolere imagines Deiparæ Virginis probe norunt pictores. i. e. " Molanus, in his Book concerning ſacred Pictures, chapter the 29th, acquaints us with what has been done. . . One has ſeen, ſays he, in ſome places an unbecoming ſight, namely pictures that were very like ſome perſons ſtill living, that they might feed their eyes, by gazing upon thoſe they loved, under ſuch a diſguiſe. The Painters do very well know after what particular faces, but impudently beautiful, the picture of the Virgin, Mother of God, has been drawn." I ſhall cloſe this Remark with a paſſage from the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres. " The Author (19) . . . gives us the explication of a medal of Julian the Apoſtate, which on one ſide has a Serapis, perfectly reſembling Julian, and on the other the figure of an Hermanubis. It was not an uncommon thing to ſee the ſtatues of men entirely like thoſe of ſome God. Flattery or pride had often occaſioned thoſe diſorders. Pliny mentions a Painter, who always drew the pictures of the Goddeſſes like ſome Courtezan, with whom he was in love. This may have given Juſtin the Martyr a handle to ridicule the Heathens by charging them with worſhipping the miſtreſſes of their Painters. But I do not know but it is ſomewhat unfair to make the Heathens anſwerable for the fancies of a Zeuxis or a Lyſippus. What would be ſaid of a man, who ſhould pretend, that they who think they worſhip the images of St. Charles Borromeo, worſhip only a fictitious picture, or a fancy of the Painter. I ſay this, becauſe though that Saint was very homely, yet they make him very handſome in his picture *. This is unavoidable in all the Religions which admit of images. Men muſt condeſcend to the liberty which the Painters take, and truſt to them for the features and air of the objects of their devotion. " Deos ea facie novimus, qua pictores & fictores voluerunt †: We know the Gods by their faces only as it pleaſed the Painters and Sculptors to repreſent them: This is what the honeſt men amongſt the Heathens uſed to ſay. Notwithſtanding all this, men ought to take care that the abuſes do not go too far; for inſtance, they ſhould not have ſuffered that an image be made at Rome of the holy Virgin after the picture and likeneſs of Pope Alexander the VIth's ſiſter §, who was indeed very beautiful, but not very virtuous (20)." See the Remark [E] in the Article DURER.

(14) Arnob. lib. 6. pag. 199.

(15) Idem, ibid. pag. 198.

(16) Lib. 35. cap. 10.

(17) Vol. 4. pag. 429. I do not well know whether this whole paſſage be from Molanus; I ſuſpect that all that follows paſcerent oculos is Voetius's.

(18) Voetius ſays that he quotes in the margin, Fridericus Scenckius a Tautenburch, ultimus Epiſcopus Ultrajectinus Libro de imaginibus, cap. 12, 13.

(19) Monſieur Spon is mentioned here. See his Miſcellanea erudita Antiquitatis, pag. 13.

* Vavaſſor, de Forma Chriſti, pag. 200.

† Cicero, de Nat. Deor. 1.

§ Rabelais, Epit. 15.

(20) Nouvell. de la Republ. des Lettres for Sept. 1685, Article 10, pag. m. 1028.

[D] A modern Author . . . did not intirely avoid Lactantius's blunder.] The modern Author I mean is la Mothe le Vayer: here follow his own words, which tend to ſhew, that all things conſiſt only in men's opinions whence Montagne borrowed the following assertion, namely, that the Courtezan Flora would not yield to the embraces of any person under the dignity of a Dictator, Consul, or a Censor, and that she took a pride in the dignity of her lovers (e) [E]. Brantome goes beyond Montagne, and has related a great many things which have not the least foundation [F].

(e) Montagne, Essais, liv. 3. pag. m. 71.

opinions of them, and thus only virtue differs from vice, and not by a natural and unchangeable Law. (21) Dialogue 1. None but common whores and prostitutes, says he (21), are noted with infamy amongst us; but a Lais, a Rhodope, an Acca Laurentia who got an estate worthy to be left to the Romans by her last will, a Flora, a Faustina deserve temples and altars. The most famous pyramid of Egypt was built by a King's daughter, who required but one stone from each of them that lay with her, and yet she got stones enough to erect that prodigious building, after she had enriched King Æthiops her father by this pretty pastime, It is plain that la Mothe le Vayer did not think that the Courtezan Flora made the people of Rome her heir; for he ascribes this action only to Laurentia. And yet he believes that Flora, one of the Goddesses of Rome, had been a noted Courtezan. This is an idle fancy. It is pretending to keep the building after the foundation has been ruined. There has been no other Courtezan Flora, but that mentioned by Lactantius, and she that was in love with Pompey. The latter was not born but after the Floralia were established, and we have seen (22) that the former did not establish them. Our modern Author did not pretend that she left all her estate to the Roman Commonwealth; where then did he find the apotheosis of a Courtezan, whose name was Flora?

(22) In the remarks of the foregoing article.

(23) Huic si Mutonis verbis mala tanta videntis Diceret hoc animus, quid vis tibi? nunquid ego a te Magno prognatum deposco consule cunnum, Velatumque stola, mea cum conferbuit ira? Hor. Sat. 2. lib. 1. ver. 68.

[E] I shall shew from whence Montagne borrowed ... that she took a pride in the dignity of her lovers.] Horace censures some rakes, who followed the same maxim (23). See also the Patriciæ immeiat valvæ of Persius (let him enjoy a Patrician Lady) towards the end of the last Satyr. You will find in the following remark that a very modern Writer (24) had acquainted Montagne with this curious particular.

(24) Anthony de Guevara.

[F] Brantome ... has related a great many things, which have not the least foundation.] He says (25), that the Courtezan Flora was of a good family and noble extraction; and that she yielded only to the embraces of the great men, for which she was to be commended, excelling therein Lais, who yielded to every body as a strumpet: whereas Flora had put a bill over her door with these words: Kings, Princes, Dictators, Consuls, Censors, High-Priests, Questors, Embassadors, and other great Lords, come in; but no others. Lais would always be paid beforehand, but not Flora, who used to say, that she acted thus with the Great, that they might behave towards her like great and illustrious men: she added, that a beautiful woman and of a great family would always be esteemed according as she valued her self: she never took more than what was offered her, and said that a pretty woman ought to grant the favour to her lover, for the sake of love and not of interest; because all things have a certain price except only love. Lastly, she made love in her time in a very genteel way, and was so well waited on, that when she went out, she afforded matter for a whole month's conversation, not only by her beauty, her noble and rich dress, her stately air, and good grace, but also by the great number of her lovers, all great Lords, who followed her, and waited upon her as though they had been her slaves; and when any foreign Embassadors returned home, they took more delight in speaking of the beauty and uncommon qualities of the beautiful Flora, than of the grandeur of the Roman Commonwealth: they took a particular notice of her great generosity, which is against the usual character of the Ladies of her trade; but then she was above the common sort, since she was of a noble family. She died so rich that the amount of her money, furniture and jewels was sufficient to rebuild the walls of Rome, and also to acquit the debts of the Commonwealth. She left the Roman people her chief heir, for which reason they built a very stately temple to her at Rome, which from her name was called Florian. All this is nothing but an idle story, invented by Don Antonio de Guevara, an Author who is more to be blamed than our new Romance writers, how great soever their faults may be in that kind of writing.

(25) Vie des Dames Galantes, tom. 1. pag. 313, &c.

FLORIMONT (GALEACIUS) a disciple of Augustine Niphus, lived a great while at Paris as Agent of Anthony Colonne, and became acquainted with the learned men, who were improving themselves under the Tutorship of James Faber Stapulensis. He published in Italian a work upon some moral subject, and was made Bishop of Sessa (a). Fracastorius directs one of his Poems to Mark Anthony Flaminius, and to Galeacius Florimont, and acquaints us that they both applied themselves to the study of Divinity [A].

(a) Taken from Naudé, in Judicio de August. Nipho, pag. 41.

[A] Fracastorius .... acquaints us that M. A. Flaminius and Florimond applied themselves to the study of Divinity.] Here follows the beginning of the Poem.

Dum vos fatidicos vates, arcanaque sensa
Volvitis, atque animum cœlesti nectare alentes,
Alloquiis, magnoque Dei consuescitis ori
Fœlices Duce Gibberto, Campense Magistro:
Quid dicam miserum me agete, & quam ducere vitam, &c. (1).

i. e. "Whilst you study the Books of the Prophets, "and endeavour to find out the hidden sense of them, "and become acquainted with the venerable face of "God, in the conversation you have with him; you "are happy under the direction of Gibberti: what "shall I say, that I wretched man do, and what life "I lead?"

(1) Fracastor. pag. m. 68. Carmin. edit. Genev. 1637.

FONTARABIA, a City of Spain, situated on the river Bidasso, near the Sea, is said to have been built by King Suintilla [A]. Alfonsus IX King of Castile took it from Sanchez King of Navarre (a), and granted to the inhabitants the same privileges, which his father King Sanchez had granted to St. Sebastian. It is pretended that Fontarabia was formerly a City of Guienne, under the Viscounty of Baionne (b). Its being situated beyond the Pyrenean Hills, is some argument in favour of that opinion; besides that in spiritual matters it was under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Baionne till the year 1571 (c). See in Moreri the taking of that City by the French under the reign of Francis I, the

(a) Oihenhart, Notitia Vasconiæ, pag. 168.

(b) Baudrand, Geograph. pag. 197.

(c) Idem, ibid.

supply

[A] It is said to have been built by King Suintilla.] Beuterus affirms it; but Oihenhart does not believe it. A Suintilla Rege Gotho conditam fuisse affirmat Beuterus lib. 3. cap. 27. Sed quis credat Beutero sine teste loquenti in re adeo antiqua, & à nostro ævo remota? mihi certe nulla suppetunt argumenta quæ huic oppido tantæ vetustatis decus concilient (1). i. e. "Beuterus asserts in "his third Book, Chapter the 27th, that this city was built by Suintilla King of the Goths. But "who would believe Beuterus, when he speaks without a voucher, of so antient a fact, and so distant "from our time? For my part I know of no argument proper to secure to that city the glory of so "great an antiquity."

(1) Oihenhart, Notitia Vasconiæ, pag. 168.

ſupply of ſoldiers they conveyed into it, and the baſeneſs of the Governor who ſurrendered it to the Spaniards. Moreri ought not to have omitted the diſgrace, which the French met with before that City in the year 1638 two days after Lewis XIVth's birth [B], which no doubt was taken for a wonderful omen by the Spaniards [C]. Lewis the Juſt and Cardinal de Richelieu were extremely exaſperated againſt thoſe whom they looked upon to be the cauſe of this misfortune [D].

Joſeph

[B] The diſgrace which the French met with before that city in the year 1638, two days after Lewis XIVth's birth.] This was one of the greateſt misfortunes, which happened in the reign of Lewis the Juſt, and during the adminiſtration of Cardinal de Richlieu. We muſt hear Balzac upon this (2). Let us never mention * * *: it is the ſhame and diſgrace of the French nation. It is a day which the Romans would have called Scelerata dies, and which we ought to ſtile a curſed day. Poſterity muſt abhor it, or rather muſt not hear of it; and we ought to eraſe it, if it be poſſible, from the year one thouſand * * *.

Que ce jour ſoit rayé des choſes avenuës
Jupiter le commande aux trois Filles chenuës
Qui tiennent Regiſtre des Tems.

Let this day be blotted out of the account of things that happened; Jupiter charges the hoary maidens, who keep a regiſter of the times, to do it. There are ſome perſons upon whom fortune has an evil deſign, with whom the faireſt opportunities are ſpoiled and loſt. If you deſign to raiſe a ſiege you have begun, or to loſe a battle, employ thoſe men; and every city be to them an Acrocorinthus, and every enemy an Alexander. It is plain that thoſe men upon whom fortune has an evil deſign &c. are a veil under which the Author hides the Prince of Condé (3); it was ſaying gravely and reſpectfully the raillery of the Song, Il prendra Fontarabie, Zeſt, comme il a pris Dole (4). i. e. "He ſhall take Fontarabia forſooth, as he has taken Dole"

[C] ... Which no doubt was taken for a wonderful omen by the Spaniards.] We may be ſure, that their Poets and Orators inſiſted in the moſt pompous manner upon the circumſtance of the time. A moſt remarkable triumph, a compleat victory, gained two days (5) after the birth of a Dauphin, which France had longed for ſo many years: what a happy omen was this for Spain. What may not ſhe expect under the reign of a French Prince, the firſt days of whoſe life have been remarkable by a battle moſt glorious to the Spaniards, and moſt diſgraceful to the French! The firſt expreſs which came to the French Court ſince the Dauphin's birth, was probably he that brought the ſad news of the raiſing the ſiege of Fontarabia. What an Horoſcope! What an happy preſage for the Spaniſh Monarchy! I am perſuaded that one might make a whole Book of the Poetical flights, which dropped at that time from the pens of the Writers of that nation. And yet what is become of all theſe happy omens? They have been like ſo many Sibylline Oracles written on looſe leaves; which the wind has diſperſed and carried away (6). It is proper to make all theſe Poetical Authors, whether they write in proſe or in verſe, ſenſible, that they ought not to meddle with propheſying. The Queen of France was delivered of a Prince at the time when the Court received one expreſs after another with the news of the uninterrupted ſucceſs which Lewis XIV met with in Holland in the year 1672. How many glorious things did not the French Poets foretell on theſe occaſions? What triumphs did they not promiſe the Prince that was born in the midſt of ſo many happy events? And yet he lived but a very little time.

Let us obſerve, that there was a Jeſuit (7), who made uſe of a thought of the Heathens, to anſwer the conſequences drawn from the raiſing of the ſiege of Fontarabia. The King's kind genius, ſaid he (8), was ſo buſy at Saint Germain, that he could not be preſent at Fontarabia. He meant that this good genius employed all his cares for the birth of the Dauphin. Plutarch has very ſeverely cenſured this thought. Alexander ſays he (9), was born June the 6th, on which very day the Temple of Diana was burnt at Epheſus, as Hegeſius the Magneſian witneſſes, who makes ſuch a cold exclamation upon this, that it was alone ſufficient to extinguiſh the fire which burnt that Temple. We ought not to wonder, ſays he, that Diana ſuffered her Temple to be burnt, ſince ſhe had buſineſs enough upon her hands, performing the office of a mid-wife at the birth of Alexander. Plutarch's taſte differs very much in this place from Tully's, Concinnè ut multa Timæus, qui cum in hiſtoria dixiſſet qua nocte natus Alexander eſſet eadem Dianæ Epheſiæ templum deflagraviſſe, adjunxit, minimè id eſſe mirandum quod Diana cum in partu Olympiadis adeſſe voluiſſet, abfuiſſet domo (10). i. e. "Timæus has been witty on this occaſion, as in many other places. For having obſerved in his Hiſtory, that the Temple of Diana of Epheſus was burnt the very night that Alexander was born, he adds, that we ought not to wonder at it, becauſe Diana was not at home, for ſhe would be preſent at Olympius's delivery."

[D] Lewis XIII and Richelieu were extremely exaſperated againſt thoſe, whom they looked upon to be the cauſe of this misfortune] The Duke de la Valette, the Duke d'Epernon's eldeſt ſon, paſſed for the chief Author of this great loſs. He durſt not go into priſon, until it was examined whether he was guilty or not. But he fled into England. The Council of State declared him guilty of High-Treaſon, for leaving the King's ſervice baſely and perfidiouſly at the ſiege of Fontarabia, and of Felony for going out of the Kingdom againſt his Majeſty's orders: for all which he was condemned to be beheaded at the place of execution, if he could be apprehended, or in effigy, if he could not be taken, and to loſe all his employments, and to have all his eſtate forfeited (11). I obſerve that the King declared him not guilty of cowardlineſs. The queſtion is not, ſaid he (12), concerning the Duke de Valette's cowardlineſs or incapacity; for I know that he wants neither courage nor ſkill. But he was reſolved not to take Fontarabia. Lewis the XIIIth's opinion was not general. See the following paſſage from the Menagiana (13). "At the time when Monſieur d'Epernon fled into England, being charged with running away in a battle, Monſieur Peireſc wrote to the great Bignon, and aſked whether a man might be condemned to death for the want of courage. Monſieur Bignon anſwered him that there were no Laws upon which a man could be thus condemned. For the utmoſt the Laws did was to condemn to death the firſt that fled, to make an example of him." Monſieur Menage's memory did not ſerve him well on this occaſion; for Monſieur Peireſc died (14) fifteen months, more or leſs, before the defeat at Fontarabia; and it is certain, that the Duke de la Valette did not retire into England but on occaſion of that defeat. After all, what the King ſaid is more probable; nor would it be the only occaſion, in which the hatred men had for the Cardinal, made this Prince loſe battles. The enemies of that Miniſter left nothing unattempted to ruin him. They wiſhed victories to the Spaniards, and even procured them ſometimes, only with a deſign to ruin the Cardinal, who would not have been able to keep his ground, had it not been for the great ſucceſs, which his Majeſty's arms met with. But here is another misfortune. His creatures did ſometimes loſe battles out of complaiſance for him. It has at leaſt been ſuſpected, that the Marſhal de Grammont ſuffered himſelf to be beaten at Honnecour, in order to procure a great advantage to the Cardinal (15). This Miniſter was retired from Court: and what could be more to his advantage, than the perplexing of the affairs of the Kingdom? Was it not a proper method to make people ſay, that as ſoon as he left the Helm, every thing grew worſe and worſe? Was it not alſo the means to have him reſtored, that he might reform the diſorders which happened during his abſence? Thus the happineſs of a nation, and even the glory of Princes is made a ſacrifice to the intereſt of a Miniſter.

(2) It is a Letter he wrote to Chapelain (the 11th of the 3d book). They have put ſtars in ſome places, in order to miſlead the reader. And I am ſure that it is with the ſame deſign that they have put a wrong date at the bottom of the Letter. They have put May 8, 1638, inſtead of Oct. 8, 1638, becauſe they would not offend a Prince of the blood; I mean the Prince of Condé, who had the command of the army at that ſiege.

(3) The grandfather of him, who bears that name this year 1695.

(4) See Richelet's Dictionary, under the word Zeſt.

(5) September 7, 1638.

(6) Foliis tantum ne carmina manda
Ne turbata volent rapidis ludibria ventis. Virgil. Æn. lib. 6. ver. 74.

(7) Called Joſſet. See the Letter which Balzac wrote to him. It is the 15th of the 3d book of the 1ſt part of his Lettres choiſies.

(8) Balzac mentions this in the ſame Letter. See the Apologie de Coſtar, pag. 92.

(9) In the Life of Alexander, near the beginning.

(10) Cicero, de Nat. Deorum, lib. 2, cap. 27.

(11) Hiſtoire du Cardinal de Richelieu, printed at Amſterdam 1694, tom. 2. pag. 364, 365.

(12) Ibid. pag. 364.

(13) Pag. 359. of the 1ſt Dutch edition.

(14) June the 24th 1637. See his Life by Gaſſendi, pag. m. 347, 349.

(15) When one reads Puyſegur's Memoirs, where he gives an account of the battle of Honnecour, pag. m. 234, &c. one can hardly forbear thinking that the Marſhal de Grammont had orders to ſuffer himſelf to be beaten.

Joſeph Moret a Spaniſh Jeſuit wrote in Latin a very full account of this ſiege of Fontarabia. I did not ſee the year of the impreſſion in the copy I made uſe of (d); but the dedication being dated from Segovia April the 12th 1654, and the approbation of the Provincial of Jeſuits being dated March the 5th 1655, we may very well infer from thence, that this work was not publiſhed till a long while after the defeat of the French.

(d) It is a book of 467 pages in 16°.

FONTE (MODERATA). It is under this name that a Venetian Lady publiſhed her works; her true name was Modeſta Pozzo (a). She is the Author of a Poem intitled, Il Floridoro, and of another Italian Poem on the Paſſion and Reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt. Beſides theſe Poems and ſome others, ſhe publiſhed a book in proſe De Meriti delle Donna, in which ſhe maintains that the female ſex is not inferior to the male. I have extracted this from a book intitled, Le Coſe notabili & maravigliose della Citta di Venetia, gia riformate & accomodate da Leonico Goldioni, & hora grandemente ampliate da Zuanne Zittio. i. e. "The remarkable and wonderful things of the City of Venice, "formerly corrected and improved by Leonico Goldioni, and now greatly augmented "by Zuanne Zittio." See pag. 311. of the Venice edition printed in the year 1655. I have been ſurpriſed that they do not ſet down there either the year of this Lady's birth, or that of her death, or any other particulars of her life. But I have found a ſupplement to this in another place [A]. See the remark. Moreri has related ſomething of this woman under the word Puy.

(a) She kept up the ſenſe of that name under the word Fonte, which anſwers to that of Pozzo, and under that of Moderata, which anſwers to that of Modeſta. Fonte ſignifies a Spring, and Pozzo a Well.

[A] They do not ſet down . . . any particulars of her life in the Coſe memorabili . . . . di Venetia. I have found a ſupplement to this in another place.] Father Hilarion de Coſte tells us, that this Lady (1) was born at Venice in the year 1555, that ſhe loſt her father and mother the firſt year of her life; that in her younger days ſhe was put into the Monaſtery of the Nuns of St. Martha of Venice; that ſhe learnt Poetry and the Latin tongue with the utmoſt eaſe; that ſhe had ſuch a good memory, that when ſhe heard a Sermon but once, ſhe could repeat it word for word. That her Book of the merit of women was printed immediately after his death; that ſhe was honourably married with Philip de Georgiis, and lived twenty years with him in a very great union, after which ſhe died in childbed November the 1ſt 1592: that her huſband raiſed a monument to her, on which the following Epitaph is engraved. "Modeſtæ "à Puteo fœminæ doctiſſimæ, quæ varios virtutis par- "tus Moderatæ Fontis nomine rhytmis Etruſcis (qui- "bus memoranda cecinit) & ſermone continuo felici- "ter enixa, naturæ partum dum ederet, puellæ vitam, "ſibi verò mortem (proh dolor) aſcivit. Philippus "de Georgiis Petri in officio ſuper aquis, pro ſereniſſ. "Do. publici jura defendens, amantiſſimæ conjugi P. "Obiit anno Domini 1592 Kal. Novemb." That John Nicholas Doglioni wrote the Life of this Lady in Italian in the year 1593. That the Reverend Father Peter Paul Ribera has made an Elogium of this learned Heroine, in his Theatre of Learned Women; and that N. di Zorzi her daughter wrote a Preface to her works (12).

(1) He calls her Modeſta Pozzo di Zorzi.

(2) Taken from Hilarion de Coſte, Eloges des Dames illuſtres, tom. 2. pag. 717, &c.

FONTEVRAUD, or rather FRONTEVAUX [A], a famous Abbey of the Dioceſs of Poitiers, in the Province of Anjou, was founded by ROBERT D'ARBRISSEL. I had promiſed to ſpeak of this perſon, and I here acquit my ſelf of the engagement. He was born about the year 1047, in the village of Arbriſſel (a), ſeven leagues from Rennes. He went to Paris in 1074, and was there made Doctor of Divinity. A Biſhop of Rennes who, though he was very ignorant, had yet a great regard for learned men [B], and raiſed them to employments, made him return into Britany about the year 1085, made him Arch-prieſt and Official; and had the pleaſure to ſee him combat the licentious diſorders with which his Dioceſe was over-run; quarrels, ſimony, the concubinage of the Clergy making ſtrange havock there. After having laboured four years at the extirpation of theſe diſorders, Robert ſeeing himſelf expoſed by the death of his Biſhop to the ill will of the Canons, who were no way pleaſed with his reforming ſpirit,

(a) It is now Arbreſſee.

[A] Or rather FRONTEVAUX.] This Latin name in the antient characters is Fons-Ebraldi (1). According to this origin we ſhould ſay Fontevraux, and ſeveral call it ſo: but Menage declares, that we muſt ſay Frontevaux with the people of Anjou and Poictou. The letter r has been inſerted here, as in the word fronde derived from the Latin funda, and in the word fromage derived from formaticum. This letter has been inſerted many years, we finding in Savigni's Chronicle, pag. 317; Anno Domini 1189 obiit Henricus Rex Angliæ, octavis Apoſtolorum Petri & Pauli, & ſepultus eſt apud Fronteval (2). i. e. "In the year of our Lord "1189, Henry King of England departed this life, "on the octaves of St. Peter and St. Paul, and was "interred at Fronteval."

[B] A Biſhop of Rennes, who though he was very ignorant, had yet a great regard for learned men.] His name was Silveſter de la Guerche, and he had carried arms againſt Conan Duke of Britany (3). Here follows what is related of him in the Hiſtory of Robert d'Arbriſſel. Licet non litteratus litteratos tamen inhianter complexabatur . . . convocabat igitur aliunde ſi quos poterat litteratos, quod hominum genus Britannia tunc habebat rariſſimum (4). i. e. "Though he himſelf was "no ſcholar, he yet had a very great affection for "men of learning . . . . he therefore drew together "from other parts, all the learned he could, there "being few of this character at that time in Britany." On the advantageous things that were told him of this Robert, he prevailed with him to come into his dioceſe, and made this ingenuous confeſſion to him. Evectione præparata, venerandus Pontifex dirigit Pariſius, & accerſitum taliter alloquitur. Vides, inquit, Frater chariſſime, quomodo ſancta Redonenſis Eccleſia mater tua ſine regimine vacillat, hoc præſertim tempore cum me pene Laïcum ei contigerit præeſſe. Eſto igitur, quæſo, in reſponſis Eccleſiaſticis noſter interpres, audiam te, & loqueris in me. Poteris procul dubio Dei populo prodeſſe, ſi zelum Dei habens, volueris nobiſcum aliquantulum militare. i. e. "The venerable Prelate having "ſent for him, ſpoke to him as follows. My dear "brother, you ſee in what manner the Holy Church "of Rennes, your mother, totters for want of order "and government; and particularly at this time "when I, who am almoſt a layman, preſide over it. "I therefore beſeech you to be my interpreter in "Eccleſiaſtical matters. I will attend to your di- "rections, and you ſhall ſpeak through me. You "doubtleſs may be of advantage to God's people, if, "being fired with a zeal for his ſervice, you will en- "gage with us for ſome time in the Religious war- "fare."

(1) In St. Bernard's 200th Epiſtle, this place is called Fons Eberandi. Menage, Orig. de la langue Françoiſe, pag. 336. edit. of 1694.

(2) Cited by Menage, ibid. See alſo his Hiſtoire de Sablé, pag. 89, 90.

(3) Father de la Mainferme, in Clypeo naſcentis Fontebraldenſis Ordinis, tom. 2. pag. 47.

(4) Albricus, in Vita Roberti Arbriſſ. cap. 2. num. 8. apud Jean. de la Mainferme, ibid. pag. 48.

(b) Baldricus, in Vita Rob. Arbriſſ. cap. 1. num. 10. apud Joan. de la Mainferme, in Clypeo naſcentis Fontebraldenſis Ordinis, tom. 1. pag. 137.

ſpirit (b), changed his views. He went and taught Divinity in Angers; but contracted ſo great a diſtaſte for the world, at the ſight of the great depravity of manners which reigned in it, that he withdrew into a deſart (c). The auſtere life he there led made a great noiſe, inſomuch that many perſons went to him, as though he had been a great ſaint. He detained ſome of theſe, and began to found a kind of College of Canons regular, about the year 1094. Urban II being in France two years after, heard ſo many things ſaid to his advantage; and being deſirous of hearing him preach, ſent for him, and made him preach a Sermon at the dedication of a Church (d). He was ſo well pleaſed with it, that he appointed him Apoſtolical Preacher. The Baron of Craon was ſo greatly moved at this Sermon, that founding an Abbey the very day after, he gave it to Robert (e). The new Abbot acquitted himſelf of his duty as ſuch till the year 1098; when reflecting that the character with which he was inveſted of Apoſtolical Preacher would not allow him to be always confined in one place with his Canons regular, he therefore quitted his Abbey, and travelled up and down the countries, in order to diſplay his talent as a Preacher. Having done this two years (being ever followed by a great number of men and women) he reſolved to reſt and pitch his tent in the foreſt of Frontevaux. There he was not in want of any thing, the people in the adjacent places ſending him, eagerly, all ſorts of proviſions and other things neceſſary to ſubſiſt the devout people who were with him; ſo that he was ſoon in a condition to beſtow alms, he having not only enough, but to ſpare. I muſt not omit that there were two other celebrated Preachers at the ſame time, who agreed to divide the two ſexes with him, and to ſuperintend the men, leaving the women under his care [C]. As ſoon as he had ſettled good laws in his monaſtry of Frontevaux, he reſumed his employment of itinerant Preacher, and travelled over ſeveral Provinces of France, particularly Britany and Normandy. Being in Roan he performed one of the greateſt exploits that it was poſſible for a man in his way of life to do; for, by a ſingle exhortation, he converted all the courtezans in a certain brothel [D], which he entred, in order to preach the word of God. He

(c) Corruptiſſimi ſeculi faſtidioſus Robertus in Credonenſe deſertum abſcondit ſe. Joan. de la Mainferme, in Clypeo naſcentis Fontebraldenſis Ordinis, tom. 2. pag. 498.

(d) That of St. Nicholas in Angers.

(e) Mirabili ejus facundia captus illius regionis princeps Baro Credonenſis Abbatiam beatiſſimæ Virgini conſtruxit, cui de Rotâ cognominatæ Robertum præfecit Abbatem. Jo. de la Mainferme, Clypei, tom. 1. pag. 28.

[C] Two other celebrated Preachers . . . agreed . . . to ſuperintend the men, leaving the women under his care.] There is an extraordinary partition, and cannot be compared to that of circumciſion and uncircumciſion, I mean that made by St. Peter and St. Paul, when it was ſaid that St. Peter ſhould apply himſelf to the converſion of the Jews, and St. Paul to the converſion of the Gentiles (5). The three Preachers ſpoken of here are, Robert d'Arbriſſel, Bernard of Tiron, and Vitalis of Moriton. Here follows a paſſage from an antient Hiſtorian. In transmarinis partibus, ſicut à majoribus accepi, tres memorabiles viri uno tempore fuere: ſcilicet Robertus cognominatus de Arbruſculo, Bernardus, & Vitalis. Hi non ignobiliter eruditi, & ſpiritu ferventes, circuibant per caſtella & vicos, ſeminanteſque ſecundum Iſaiam ſuper omnes aquas, de converſione multorum fructus colligebant, pio inter ſe placito conſtituto: quòd Robertus quidem fœminarum communi labore ad meliora converſarum ſollicitudinem gereret; Bernardus vero & Vitalis maribus propenſius providerent. Robertus igitur famoſiſſimum illud Monaſterium fœminarum de Fonte-Evraldi conſtruxit, & regularibus diſciplinis informavit. Bernardus verò apud Tirocinum, & Vitalis apud Saviniacum Monachis regulariter inſtitutis, ſuos quiſque ab aliis per quaſdam præceptorum proprietates diſtinxit (6). i. e. " I have been informed by our old men, that three " famous perſons flouriſhed beyond ſea, at one and the " ſame time, viz. Robert ſurnamed d'Arbriſſel, Bernard and Vitalis. Theſe being men of great erudition, and glowing with zeal, travelled up and down " the countries, ſowing, according to Iſaiah, upon all " waters; and, by making a great number of converts, gathered much fruit, having made the following pious agreement among themſelves, viz. " that Robert ſhould take upon himſelf the converſion of the women, whilſt Bernard and Vitalis " ſhould ſuperintend that of the men. Upon this, " Robert built the moſt famous monaſtery of Fontevraux in which he inſtituted a regular diſcipline. " As for Bernard and Vitalis, they founded ſeverally a " regular order of Friars; the former at Tiron, and " the latter at Savigny, each diſtinguiſhing his order " from others by ſome peculiarities in their rules " or precepts." It was to no purpoſe that our Robert was told, the great danger to which he would expoſe himſelf, by the zeal he ſhewed for the direction of the fair ſex. He rejected theſe counſels as ſo many ſnares of Satan, and fortified himſelf by the example of St. Jerom. Deſpexit ergo tentatorem, irriſit ejus fallaciam, nec fœminarum abjecit moderationem . . . . . divum Hieronymum imitatus, cui inſulſi obloquebantur Ariſtarchi, quòd ſcriberet ad mulieres, eaſque viris anteponeret: quorum cavillationes venuſtiſſimâ & copioſiſſimâ retundit devoti ſexûs celebratione ſacris ex litteris deductâ (7). i. e. " He therefore deſpiſed the tempter, " laughed at his wiles, and did not lay aſide the direction of the female ſex . . . imitating on that occaſion St. Jerom, who was reviled by certain ſilly " ſlanderers, becauſe he wrote to women, and preferred them to men; but he overthrew their cavils, " by a moſt beautiful and copious elogium on the fair " ſex, taken from the ſacred writings."

(5) See the Epiſtle to the Galatians, cap. 2. ver. 798.

(6) Guillelmus Neuburgenſis, lib. 1. de Rebus Anglicis, cap. 15. apud Joan. de la Mainferme, tom. 1. pag. 117.

(7) Joan. de la Mainferme, Clypei, tom. 1. pag. 118.

[D] By a ſingle exhortation, he converted all the Courtezans in a certain Brothel.] He is ſaid to have had a very peculiar talent for this; and it was neceſſary for him, ſince the direction of females was fallen to his ſhare, that he ſhould ſearch chiefly after ſcabby ſheep. He uſed to go bare-footed thro' the ſtreets and ſquares, in order to exhort looſe women to repentance, and he uſed to go even into brothels, to exhort them to refrain from their wicked courſes. One day he went into one of thoſe ill houſes at Roan, and ſat down by the fire to warm his feet. Preſently he was ſurrounded with women, who were perſuaded that he was come merely for laſcivious pleaſures; but he ſpake to them of quite different matters, he preaching to them the words of life, and the mercy of the Son of God. The chief of theſe Courtezans, ſurprized at what ſhe heard, told him, that during the twenty five years ſhe had frequented that houſe, ſhe had not ſeen any perſon enter into it who ſpake of God, or made them entertain the leaſt hopes of the divine favour; but that, could ſhe depend on what he ſaid, ſhe would not fail to change her courſe of life; and upon his again promiſing her mercy, ſhe and her iniquitous ſiſters fell proſtrate at Robert's feet, and promiſed to repent of their wicked courſes. He laid hold of this propitious opportunity, and taking them out of the city, conducted them all into his deſert, where having fulfilled their penitence, he led them happily to Chriſt (8). In vita beati Roberti de Arbriſſello legitur, quod Ordinem Sanctimonialium Fontis-Ebraldi inſtituit; & quod nudipes per plateas & vicos ire conſueverat, ut fornicarias ac peccatrices ad medicamentum pœnitentiæ poſſet adducere. Quadam ergo die, cum veniſſet Rotomagum, Lupanar eſt ingreſſus, ſedenſque ad focum pedes calefacturus, à meretricibus circumdatur, æſtimantes eum causâ fornicandi eſſe ingreſſum. Sed prædicante eo verba vitæ, ac miſericordiam Chriſti eis promittente, una ex meretricibus, quæ cæteris præerat, dixit ei: quis es tui qui talia loqueris? Scias pro certo, quia per viginti quinque annos, quibus hanc domum ad perpetranda ſcelera ſum

(8) Statim eas de civitate eduxit, & ad eremum cum eis gaudens perrexit, ibique peracta pœnitentia Chriſto feliciter tranſmiſit. Idem, ibid. pag. 133, ex Codice manuſcripto (anno 1210) Abbatiæ de Vallibus Cernai, (the Abbey des Vaux de Cernai) Ordinis Ciſtercienſis Diœceſis Pariſienſis.

He assisted, in 1104, at the Council of Beaugenci, and had a seat there among the Prelates. In the years 1107 and 1108 he travelled over Anjou, Poitou and Touraine, to perform his duty of Apostolical Preacher. His travels had at least this good effect, that it spread the Order of Frontevaux in these Provinces [E], and found great advantage by the exhortations of Pope Paschal II. The Bishop of Poitiers being at Rome in 1106, to intreat his Holiness to confirm this Order, he obtained a bull from Paschal II, by which this Pontiff declared, that he would take it more particularly under his care; take it immediately under the jurisdiction of the Holy See; at the same time exhorted all good Christians to promote this new institution; and by a fresh bull in 1113, confirmed its several privileges. The order was greatly increased by this time; for the founder, travelling into other Provinces of France, and preaching in them, settled converts in them (f). He prevailed with Queen Bertrade to assume the habit of the Order [F]; but she did not wear it long, the austerities of this Order soon putting an end to her life [G]. He found himself decaying in 1115, when, by the advice of several Prelates, Abbots, and Monks, sum ingressa, nunquam aliquis huc advenit, qui de Deo loqueretur, vel de ejus misericordia præsumere nos faceret; tamen si scirem vera esse &c (9). It has been observed in the history of the works of the learned (10), "that several other loose women having also been converted, Robert was obliged to build a particular "cloister for them, which he dedicated to St. Mary "Magdalen; and confined in another, dedicated to "the Blessed Virgin, such women as were of good "repute." This shews the peculiar talent which Robert had for winning over this sort of creatures (11), and his attachment to the ancient discipline; some Fathers having thought, that those Nuns who had violated their chastity ought to live sequestred from those who had not been so unfortunate (12).

(f) See the remark [F].

(9) Idem, ex eodem Codice.

(10) Histoires des Ouvrages des Savans, for August 1690, pag. 527. in the Extract of vol. 2. of the Clypeus.

(11) Quæ quidem omnia liquido ostendunt Robertum ardenti zelo æstuasse, dono speciali præditum fuisse ad convertendas mulieres impuras, meretrices; & publicæ libidinis victimas imo de facto plurimas convertisse. Jo. de la Mainferme, Clyp. tom. 1. pag. 133.

(12) See the 85th Letter of Pope Leo I. cap. 2 & 5.

[E] The Order of Frontevaux . . . spread . . . in these Provinces.] During his travels into Anjou, Poitou, and Touraine, anno 1107 and 1108, he founded the Monasteries of Chamfournois, Lapuie, des Loges, Pelai, Gaine and Gironde. In 1110 he travelled over Berri and Britany, and founded the Monastery of Orsan in the Diocese of Bourges. In 1112 he founded three in the Dioceses of Orleans and Poitiers, those of Landé-en-Beauchene, Turon and la Madelaine d'Orleans. In 1114 he preached in le Limousin, l'Angoumois, le Perigort, and in the Diocese of Toulouse; and founded four Monasteries, those of Bourbon, la Gasconiere, Cadouïn and l'Epinasse. It was at this time, that having travelled thro' Languedoc and Guienne, he went into Auvergne, where he had religious conferences with the blessed Raingarda, mother to Peter the Venerable (13).

(13) Extracted from the Clypeus nascentis of Father de la Mainferme, tom. 2. pag. 500, 501.

[F] He prevailed with Queen Bertrade to assume the habit of the Order.] This BERTRADE was daughter to Simon de Montfort, and sister to Amauri de Montfort, Count d'Evreux, and to William de Montfort Bishop of Paris. She was educated in Normandy at her aunt's, the Countess of Evreux, and it was there that Fulk Rechin, Count of Anjou, saw, and fell in love with her. He married her in 1089, and 1092 or 1093 she left him, to marry Philip I King of France, with whom she had had a private conference, on the eve of Whitsunday in the church of St. John de Tours, whilst the Canons of St. Martin were blessing the fonts of the church. She went to Orleans where the King received her (14), after which he married her in Paris. The Pope excommunicated him, by his Legate, anno 1094 in the Council of Autun, and himself excommunicated him the year following in the Council of Clermont. Philip put away Bertrade in 1096, and took her again in 1100. He was again excommunicated, but both of them obtained absolution in 1105, having sworn on the holy Evangelists, not to cohabit together any longer in a carnal way; and never to see or speak to one another, but in presence of unsuspected persons (15). The Cartulary or Register of St. Nicholas of Angers informs us, that in 1106, the 6th of the Ides of October, Philip was at Angers with Bertrade, and was received there by Rechin with great magnificence. It was doubtless at this time that Bertrade reconciled her two husbands, and gave them a grand entertainment, at which she waited upon them at table as Orderic has written, who adds, that Bertrade continued with Philip till he died (16). The Pope, in all probability, approved their marriage; for their two sons were declared capable of succeeding to the Crown, as Sugen informs us in the Life of Lewis le Gros. Bertrade had a dowry upon the demesnes of the Crown, . . . and this dowry was the lands of Hautebruire, in the neighbourhood of Montfort, and in the Diocese of Chartres, which is the place where she founded a Priory, having taken the veil at Frontevaux, before R. d'Arbrissel; and having retired thither, she led an exemplary life till her death. She had lived in Anjou since the death of King Philip, which happened in 1108. Menage, from whom I borrow all these particulars (17), has cleared up a prodigious number of mistakes, which he found in Historians with respect to this Bertrade. He does not inform us whether she lived long after she had assumed the religious habit; but William of Malmsbury informs us, that she died soon after. Philippus, says he (18), in extremo vitæ, tactus morbo monachicum apud Floriacum accepit habitum (19). Pulchrius & fortunatius illa (Bertrada), quod ætate & sanitate integra, nec specie rugata apud Fontem Evraldi Sanctimonialium appetiit velum. Nec multò post præsenti vitæ valefecit. Deo forsitan providente, non posse delicatæ mulieris corpus Religionis laboribus inservire. i. e. "Philip, says he, being afflicted "with sickness and near his end, assumed a religious "habit at Fleury. Bertrade took the veil, at Fonte-"vraud, more happily and with better grace, because "she did it when flushed with health, in the flower of "life and pride of beauty. She died not long after. "Heaven perhaps ordering it in such a manner, that "a woman of so delicate a texture could not undergo "the austerities of a monastic life." The conversion of this lascivious Queen gained Robert very great honour. This woman was so artful, that she manag'd the King as she pleased; and her first husband was often seen at her feet, making a thousand submissions after she had left him; a meanness equal, at least, to the abject behaviour of Menelaus. Amore ejus ita captus est (Philippus), ut illa sibi in omnibus imperaret, cum ipse omnibus imperare cuperet (20). Bertrada virago faceta, & eruditissima illius admirandi mulieris artificii, quo consueverunt audaces suis etiam lacessitos injuriis maritos suppeditare, Andegavensem priorem maritum, licet thoro omnino repudiatum, ita mollificaverat, ut eam tanquam Dominam veneraretur, & scabello pedum ejus sæpius residens, ac si præstigio fieret, voluntati ejus omnino obsequeretur (21). i. e. "Philip was so strongly smitten "with her charms, that she had an absolute ascen-"dant over him, tho' he was desirous of commanding "over all others. Bertrade was a stout facetious wo-"man; and so wonderfully well versed in this spe-"cies of female cunning, by which bold wives are "accustomed to trample upon their husbands after "they have injured them, that she so far mollified "the Earl of Anjou her first husband, tho' she had "entirely left his bed, that he yet revered her as his "Sovereign; and sitting frequently on her footstool, "as tho' this had been done by the power of magic, "he paid the utmost submission to her will." It is thought that she took the veil at Frontevaux, Anno 1115.

(14) Rex libidinosus Philippus Turonis venit, & eum uxore Fulconis locutus eam fieri Reginam constituit. Pessima illa, Consule dimisso, nocte sequenti Regem sequitur, qui Mindraïco prope pontem Bevronis milites dimiserat, qui eam Aurelianis duxerunt. Menage, Hist. de Sablé, lib. 3. cap. 16. pag. 85, 86. ex Gestis Consulum Andegavensium.

(15) Idem, pag. 89

(16) Ibid.

(17) Ibid.

(18) Lib. 5. de Gestis Regum Anglorum, apud La Mainferme, Clyp. tom. 2. pag. 137.

(19) Father de la Mainferme, ibid. pag. 138, 139. shews that this is false.

(20) Vincentius Bellovacus, Specul. lib. 26. cap. 88. apud la Mainferme, Clyp. tom. 2. pag. 141.

(21) Sugerius, in Vita Ludovici Grossi, cap. 17. apud eundem, ibid.

[G] The austerity of this Order soon put an end to her life.] We have seen (22) that William of Malmsbury conjectures, that the Providence of God ordered it perhaps in such a manner, that the delicate body of this Queen was incapable of submitting to the toils of a monastic life. It was perhaps better that she sunk under them at once; for had they only emaciated her body, possibly too tedious and languishing a state might have given her an aversion to a monastic life, and made her

(22) Above, at the end of the Citation (18).

(g) Abbatiſſam toti ſuo Ordini Petronillam de Camilliaco præpoſuit. Clyp. Naſcent. Ord. Fontebraldenſis, tom. 2. pag. 502.

Monks, whom he aſſembled, he appointed a woman General of the Order (g), a circumſtance that has been very much cenſured [H]. The year after he recovered his ſtrength, upon which he travelled through the Dioceſe of Chartres, diſcharging his uſual duties of Preacher. He put an end to a diſpute which many perſons had attempted, but in vain, to terminate, between Ives Biſhop of Chartres, and Bernard Abbot of Bonneval. He was no leſs fortunate in appeaſing the quarrel which broke out between the Count de Chartres, and the Canons, with regard to the election of a Biſhop after the death of Ives. He fell ſick as he was preaching in the Dioceſe of Bourges, anno 1117, and made himſelf be conveyed to the monaſtery of Orſan, where he died ſome days after. The Archbiſhop of Bourges, followed by his Clergy, together with a great number of Gentlemen and others, attended the corps as far as the monaſtry of Frontevaux, where he ſolemnized the funeral the twelfth day after the deceaſe of Robert d'Arbriſſel. The Count of Anjou, the Archbiſhop of Tours, the Biſhop of Angers, ſeveral Abbots, a numberleſs multitude of Clergymen, and common people, had gone to meet this funeral proceſſion before it came out of the Dioceſe of Tours (h). Father Mainferme (i), a Monk of Frontevaux, has publiſhed three apologetical volumes, and therein has employed his utmoſt endeavours to vindicate his Patriarch, whom ſome have accuſed of lying with his Nuns [I], not indeed with a deſign of enjoying them, but only that he might her regret the voluptuous pleaſures ſhe had forſaken. However this be, here follows the proof of what I advanced in the text. Anno 1115 aut circiter Bertradam Reginam ad inſtitutum Font-Ebraldenſe tandem pellectam Robertus in Monaſterio Alta-Brueria dicto collocavit. Victu cultuque in primis aſpero atque horrido utens, vita ſtatim privata eſt (23). It was then that the maxim was verified, nullum violentum durabile, i. e. "nothing that "is violent is laſting."

(b) Extracted from tom. 2. of Clypeus naſcentis Fontebraldenſis Ordinis, at the end of it, where we meet with a chronological Abridgment of the Life of Robert d'Arbriſſel, with the references to the ſeveral places where every circumſtance is more amply related.

(i) The firſt vol. of his Clypeus was printed in 1684, the 2d in 1688, and the 3d in 1692.

(23) La Mainferme, tom. 2. pag. 502.

[H] A circumſtance that has been very much cenſured.] Nothing is more odd and ſingular in a monaſtic world (24), than to ſee an entire great Order, compoſed of Friars and Nuns, recognize a woman for their Head and their General: but this done by the Monks and Nuns of the Order of Frontevaux, in compliance with their rule; Robert d'Arbriſſel their founder enjoining this. He enacted a Law diametrically oppoſite to the Salic Law; not ſatisfied with permitting women to govern it occaſionally, he commanded that one woman ſhould always ſucceed another woman, as Head and General of the Order. Father Mainferme has employed the third volume of his work, to juſtify the founder's conduct on this occaſion. He anſwers all the objections that are uſually raiſed; and lays great ſtreſs on the Bleſſed Virgin's having commanded God himſelf, for it is ſaid in Scripture, that Chriſt was ſubject to his Mother. Now if God, the neceſſary or eternal Being, and Creator of all things, did not ſcruple to obey a woman, ſhall men, (poor abject creatures) dare to ſcruple it? If ever the Church of Rome did wilfully, what it is pretended it did unknowingly under the reign of Pope Joan, this Church would find its apology ready drawn up in Father de la Mainferme's Book; and I cannot ſee why any difficulty ſhould be made of chuſing a female Pope, in caſe the Apology for Frontevaux ſhould be look'd upon as juſt and valid. Add to this, that according to the hypotheſis of moſt of the Devotees of the Romiſh Communion, God has beſtowed the Empire of the World upon the bleſſed Virgin. Nothing is more common in the Books of thoſe Gentlemen, where the Virgin is ſpoke of, than the titles Queen of Heaven, Queen of the Angels; and it is even the ſtyle and language of the public worſhip, I mean of the Church Hymns. A Monk of Frontevaux employed this reaſon, and Father de la Mainferme relates this without cenſuring it in any manner (25). "It happened one day that a certain Friar who ſhall be "nameleſs, who could hardly digeſt that part of our "inſtitution, ſaid to me, ſpeaking of this matter, our "Kingdom is under female government: in which "he really ſpoke better than he thought to do, and "did us much honour contrary to his intention. For "it really is under female government, as the whole "kingdom of the univerſe, of heaven and earth is "under female government, inaſmuch as it is governed "by the ſupreme power and authority of her, who, "like a ſtrong woman, manum ſuam miſit ad fortia; "& digiti ejus apprehenderunt fuſum. Prov. xxxi. "v. 19. That is, "She layeth her hand to the ſpin"dle, &c."

(24) See in the remark [P] Citation (‡). Charles du Moulin's words.

(25) Tom. 3. pag. 21. He cites father E. Martin, author of a book entitled, Le Sejour du Verbe incarné dans les entrailles immaculées de la Vierge.

[I] Some have accuſed him of lying with his Nuns.] This charge is founded on a Letter written by Geoffry, Abbot of Vendome. The Letters of this Abbot were publiſhed by Father Sirmond in 1610, from a manuſcript in the Abbey of Couture. One of theſe Letters were writ to our Robert, to inform him of an ugly report that was ſpread concerning his conduct, and the inconveniencies which might ariſe from it. Here follows that Letter (26): Fœminarum quaſdam, ut dicitur, nimis familiariter tecum habitare permittis, & cum ipſis etiam, & inter ipſas, noctu frequenter cubare non erubeſcis. Hoc ſi modò agis, vel aliquando egiſti, novum & inauditum ſed infructuoſum martyrii genus inveniſti. . . Mulierum quibuſdam, ſicut fama ſparſit, & nos ante diximus, ſæpe privatim loqueris, & earum accubitu novo martyrii genere cruciaris. i. e. "It is re"ported that you permit ſome of the women to live "in too familiar a way with you; and that you do "not bluſh to lie frequently with, and among them, "in the night. If you now do, or have ever done "this, you have found out a new, unheard of, but "fruitleſs kind of martyrdom. . . . It is ſaid, as I be"fore obſerved, that you often diſcourſe in private "with ſome of the women; and, by lying with them, "inflict a new kind of martyrdom upon your ſelf." There is another Letter that is aſcribed to Marbodus Biſhop of Rennes, which contains the ſame informations (27): Mulierum cohabitationem diceris plus amare. Has ergo non ſolum communi menſa per diem, ſed & communi accubitu per noctem dignaris, ut referunt. i. e. "It is ſaid that you are very fond of cohabiting with "women, and that you not only let them eat with "you by day, but permit them to ſhare the bed with "you at night." Robert is blamed, for making young girls take the veil too inconſiderately, and the ill ſucceſs of this is repreſented to him. Some at the expiration of nine months, had broke from their Convents, to go and lie in elſewhere, and others had been delivered in the midſt of their cells. Taceo de juvenculis, quas ſine examine Religionem profeſſas mutata veſte per diverſas cellulas protinus incluſiſti. Hujus igitur facti temeritatem miſerabilis exitus probat. Aliæ enim, urgente partu, fractis ergaſtulis elapſæ ſunt, aliæ in ipſis ergaſtulis pepererunt (28). Obſerve, in the firſt place, that in the Letter aſcribed to Geoffry of Vendome, Robert d'Arbriſſel is accuſed of ſhewing a reſpect to perſons. You are always, ſays the Letter-writer, in a good humour with ſome women; are ſo ready, active and nimble, that you ſhew your civility to them by every method you can think of; whereas to other women, if at any time you deign to ſpeak to them, it is only to ſpeak harſh things; you behave like a rigid Cenſor towards them, and leave them expoſed to hunger, thirſt and cold. Illis ſiquidem te ſemper ſermone jucundum oſtendis, & alacrem actione, omneque genus humanitatis exhibes, nulla ſervata parcitate. Et iterum. Aliis vero, ſi quando cum ipſis loqueris, ſemper locutione nimis durus appares, nimis diſtrictus correctione: illas etiam fame, & ſiti ac nuditate crucias omni relicta pietate (29). This is inſinuating what is aſſerted by Theophilus Raynaud (30), viz. that Robert always made choice of the moſt beautiful women, whenever he would expoſe himſelf to temptation by lying with them. Obſerve in the ſecond place, that Father de la Mainferme does not

(26) See the Clypeus naſcentis Ord. Fontebraldenſis, tom. 1. Diſſertat. 1. pag. 38.

(27) Ibid. pag. 41.

(28) Ibid. pag. 69.

(29) Ibid. pag. 66.

(30) See above, the remark [L] citation (42).

might have the greater temptations to ſtruggle with. This ſcene has been diſplayed in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres [K]. We cannot wonder to find the Monk in queſtion ſo very zealous againſt thoſe who ſtarted this accuſation [L]. It is certainly a very cite the whole paſſage of Marbodus's pretended Letter. I have ſeen it much longer in Menage (31); and find that Robert is there put in mind, that he had formerly loved to dally with the fair ſex. I alſo met with another reproach there which I ſhall mention below.

(31) See alſo in the remark [P] citation (†).

(32) Remark [P].

[K] . . . This Scene has been diſplayed in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres.] See Article II for April 1686, I mean the extract of Vol. I. of the Clypeus naſcentis Fontebraldenſis Ordinis. The Author of the Extract has compared to Tantalus, that man who ſhould make choice of ſuch a ſpecies of mortification as that imputed to our Robert: yet as there is no compariſon but what is lame, that of Tantalus, in ſome reſpects, would not ſuit with our ſpiritual Director. He would bear hunger and thirſt in the midſt of remedies, but it is not certain that ſuch a remedy would draw back, in proportion as one ſhould advance towards it. The compariſon of thoſe curious naturaliſts, who ſtudy ſo intenſely the cauſes of phænomena, would be juſt only in certain reſpects. By their meditations and reſearches they only juſt glance at nature; the ſecret they hunt after is in a veſſel the brims of which, only, they are capable of touching; in vain they turn about, and go backwards and forwards, they meet for ever with the circumference of the circle, but never get to the center. This is the emblem of Robert, with this difference, that he was not, like thoſe Naturaliſts, deſirous of diving to the bottom of the myſtery (33). I am far from affirming what is related of him, for the reaſons of his apologiſt appear to me very ſtrong; but one cannot imagine how many heretics there have been, who, at the ſame time that they profeſſedly prohibited marriage and the full enjoyment of the ſex, would yet go to bed to women, claſp them in their arms, and not omit any of the amorous preludes. See the proſecutions of the Inquiſitions of Toulouſe (34), printed at Amſterdam in 1692, part of which I ſhall cite in the Article GUILLEMETE. See alſo what the Biſhop of Meaux relates concerning St. Bernard againſt the Henricians, in paragraph LXIX Book XI of the Hiſtoire des Variations. This is one of the good tokens by which we may know, that the ſoul of man is ſuſceptible of illuſions and chimæras of every kind. The greateſt danger to which thoſe who have made a vow of continence can be expoſed, is, to meditate on the objects they have renounced, and to ſee them in certain lights: witneſs the hermit who ſaw Brandimart in the arms of his dear Fleurdelis (35).

(33) Ἡ Σήμις ἀνθρώπων πέλει ἀνδρῶν ἠδὲ γυναικῶν. Πώποτε τῆς ἐυνῆς ἐπιβήμεναι ἠδὲ μιγῆναι.

(34) Pag. 382, & ſeq.

(35) See Marigni's Letters.

Hor ſtando inginocchiato in oratione,
Vide far' à color quel gioco ſtrano:
E vennegli ſi fatta tentatione,
Ch'il Breviario gli cade di mano.

That is,

" Whilſt, on his knees, the hermit is at prayer,
" He ſees 'em dallying in the looſeſt manner,
" Which raiſes ſuch a tranſport in his boſom,
" That down his Breviary drops at once.

(36) Apply here the two following verſes, Omne vafer vitium ridenti Flaccus amico Tangit, & admiſſus circum præcordia ludit. Perſ. Sat. 2. ver. 316. i. e. " To touch the " foul the way fly " Horace found, " And pleas'd " the patient " while he " prob'd his " wound."

What would have become of him in a preludium? Admiſſus circum præcordia ludens (36)? Would he have had ſo much ſtrength of mind as Adhelme? Not to be too prolix, I will mention this Saint in the Remark [C] of the Article FRANCIS of ASSISI.

[L] We cannot wonder to find the Monk in queſtion, ſo very zealous againſt thoſe who ſtarted this accuſation.] He has recourſe to ſeveral methods; he denies the genuineneſs of the two Letters; he aſſerts that Geoffry of Vendome was not the Author of thoſe which are publiſhed under his name; and is very much ſurprized, that Sirmond the Jeſuit ſhould have publiſhed it as genuine, and ſhould put in the Index, mira Roberti ſimplicitas, & confidentia. He diſputes againſt Father Alexander for aſſerting, that this Letter was really written by Geoffry de Vendome; and takes advantage of the confeſſion which this Dominican made, viz. that the Letter aſcribed to Marbodius is ſuppoſititious (37). He pretends (38) that Roſcelin the heretic, condemned as a Tritheiſt in a Council, is the Author of the Letter which Sirmond has publiſhed among thoſe of Geoffry de Vendome. This is the ſentiment of Cardinal Bona, and of the Jeſuits Bollandus and Henſchenius, as he does not omit obſerving (39). He adds, that Father Sirmond, having duly weighed all matters, had gone over to the ſame opinion (40). He cites Theophilus Raynaud who came over to the ſame ſentiment (41). He cenſures Father Alexander for denying that Sirmond had retracted, and intended to ſuppreſs that Letter in a new Edition. He declares that this Jeſuit had acted very injuriouſly to the memory of the bleſſed Robert d'Arbriſſel, and cites a paſſage of Father Theophilus Raynaud (42), which is founded only on the Letter publiſhed by Father Sirmond. Here follow the words cited by him. Feciſſe hoc Robertum de Arbruſcellis legitur cum omni deteſtatione apud Goffridum Vindocinenſem; nec ſane poteſt ulla par eſſe deteſtatio inconſultiſſimi facti quo dicitur (43) cum ſpecioſiſſima quaque ſacrarum Virginum, cum nuda nudus in eodem lecto cubuiſſe, ut nequicquam frendentem & adhinnientem appetitum in tam illecebroſi objecti præſentia novo martyrii genere afficeret. i. e. " It is with the utmoſt deteſtation " we read, in Geoffry de Vendome, that Robert d'Arbriſſel did this: Nor can any deteſtation be equal " to that of this moſt ſenſeleſs aſſertion, viz. for a man " to lie naked with the moſt beautiful of all the Nuns " naked alſo, merely to martyr, after a new way, " the raging and luſtful appetite, by the preſence of " ſo alluring an object." He ſhews, that we cannot point out the time in which Geoffry de Vendome could have writ ſuch a Letter; and urges a great many reaſons, to ſhew, that this Abbot never thought that Robert deſerved ſuch a reproof. He aſſerts that the other was not written either by Marbodus Biſhop of Rennes, nor by Hildebert Biſhop of Mans (44) and afterwards Archbiſhop of Tours; but that it was forged either by Roſcelin, or by ſome other wicked Eccleſiaſtic (45). I forgot to mention, that he cites (46) a certificate importing, that the manuſcript of the works of Geoffry de Vendome, which is preſerved as an original, in the Monaſtry of the holy Trinity at Vendome, does not contain the Letter in queſtion (47). The Prior of this Monaſtry gave this Certificate the 3d of February 1652. To conclude, Father Mainferme exhibits a very great number of proofs, extracted from the elogiums and favours which Robert received from the moſt eminent perſons of that age both Clergy and Laity, and clears him from all the other aſperſions which might be caſt upon him. I ſhall take notice of that only which bears the greateſt relation to the crime of which we are here ſpeaking.

(37) See Section 8. of Diſſertation 1.

(38) Tom. 1. Diſſert. 1. pag. 4, 5.

(39) Ibid. pag. 14.

(40) Bollandus aſſerts this upon a hearſay, ibid. pag. 15.

(41) In Triade ſortium David. pag. 46.

(42) Extracted from pag. 132. of his treatiſe de ſobria alterius ſexus frequentatione.

(43) Father de la Mainferme puts here the following note, Falſo ſcribit Theophilus id legi apud Gotfridum Epiſt. 47. lib. 4. See with regard to this falſe citation of Theoph. Raynaud, the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, for April 1686, pag. 391.

(44) It is found among the Letters of this Hildebert, in the manuſcript of the Library of St. Victor at Paris. See Clypeum, Diſſert. I. pag. 61.

(45) Ubi ſupra, pag. 91.

(46) Ibid. pag. 59.

(47) Vincent Marſolle. He was General of the Congregation of St. Maur.

It is pretended that when he uſed to go and preach up and down, he always carried a great number of women with him. Father de la Mainferme denies this, and confeſſes only that this holy man uſed ſometimes to take along with him, in his journeys, Petronilla Abbeſs of the Order, and Angardis Prioreſs of Frontevaux, which gave no offence to pious ſouls; ſo far from it, that they were once received, with all kinds of hoſpitality, in the Abbey of Dol; the Fathers of that hoſpital exerting themſelves to the utmoſt, to do honour to their gueſts. Cum jam cœptum iter ageret conſociatâ ſibi Petronillâ aliiſque nonnullis, quadam die apud Dolenſem Abbatiam hoſpitalitatis gratiâ pervenit. Quem monachi ejuſdem cœnobii læti ſuſcipientes, hoſpitalitatis jura ei honorificè præbuerunt, ut eorum animas prædicationis ſanctæ pabulo reficere dignaretur, humillimè poſtulaverunt (48). The paſſage from Marbodus's Letter, which Menage cites, and which will be found below Remark [P] citation (†), ſhews that Robert was reproached with taking a great number of women with him in his travels, and with quartering them in various Provinces, in public houſes and hoſpitals, promiſcuouſly with the men, upon pretence of their ſerving and waiting upon poor people and ſtrangers. It is added, that this odd conduct had occaſioned the bringing of ſo many children into the world, that it could not be doubted but that Robert had expoſed the honour of his female followers to very great danger.

(48) De la Mainferme, Clyp. Diſſert. 1. pag. 161.

very delicate affair [M]; and he is certainly very much in the right to exert the utmoſt of his abilities to juſtify his hero. He denies the fact, which was the only way of making his apology; for nothing can be more inconſiſtent with purity, both internal and external, than the pretended mortification of reſiſting temptations which a perſon had himſelf raiſed. The true triumph is to keep at the greateſt diſtance impoſſible from ſuch an enemy [N], and never to turn one's thoughts that way; and it would be a very groſs miſtake,

[M] It is certainly a very delicate affair.] Sins of uncleanneſs are not of the ſame ſpecies with thoſe which may be overcome by combating, by anticipating, and by marching boldly againſt them. The moſt certain way of gaining the victory, is, to fight flying, or rather to run quite away. Is it not therefore a ſtrange piece of raſhneſs, and a criminal contempt of that ſage advice, Quiſquis amat periculum peribit in illo, i. e. "He that ſeeketh danger ſhall periſh in it," to go and provoke this dangerous enemy, and to march and inſult him even in his fortreſs? Arbriſſel ſhould hardly have been allowed to look him in the face; and he was ſo raſh, as we are told, to take him by the neck, in order to wreſtle with him.

Cervi, luporum præda rapacium,
Sectamur ultro, quos opimus
Fallere & effugere eſt triumphus (49).

(49) Horat. Ode 4. lib. 4. ver. 50.

"We feeble ſtags, challenge rapacious wolves,
"And follow, raſhly, what we ought to ſhun;
"To cheat ſuch potent enemies is triumph.

Thoſe who make a vow of chaſtity, ought, if they are wiſe, to ſeek ardently for the Gift of Oblivion; and drive away at their firſt entrance, the ideas of uncleanneſs; ſo far are they from being allowed to lie with living objects. Though they ſhould be ſure of victory, they yet would be obliged to fly thoſe kinds of combats like a plague; charity to one's neighbour enjoyning ſuch a flight. Can they depend upon their ſhe-companion? Is it not morally certain, that a woman, who conſents to let a man come and lie in the ſame bed with her, is very much diſpoſed not to refuſe him any favour? Does not the proximity of a man's body inflame ſuch a diſpoſition in her? Does not ſuch a proximity awake thoughts and deſires from which ſhe otherwiſe would be exempted, were ſhe to lie alone (50)? See what Montagne ſays, with regard to women married to old men. Such, ſays he (51), tho' in full marriage, are in a worſe condition than virgins and widows. We judge them to be well provided, becauſe they have a man lying by them... But on the contrary, they thence are the more diſtreſſed, becauſe the contact and company of any male, raiſes a warmth which would be leſs troubleſome were they to be alone. So that thoſe holy ramblers, thoſe ſeekers after alluring opportunities, thoſe anchorets, who, to ſignalize the bravery of their continence, creep into a young girl's bed, only throw oil on a fire that was hid under aſhes. Are they not anſwerable for the looſe deſires they awake in them? It is very probable that moſt of thoſe people do not ſeek for a complete victory. If they do not ſatiate, they at leaſt tickle their luſtful paſſion. They put themſelves on the foot of thoſe who ſay, Amare liceat, ſi potiri non licet. Eſt quodam prodire tenus, ſi non datur ultra. Let us at leaſt enjoy the prelude; let us have an antepaſt. They behave like thoſe huſbands in Seneca's Controverſies. Novimus, inquit, iſtam maritorum abſtinentiam, qui etiamſi primam virginibus timidis remiſere noctem, vicinis tamen locis ludunt (52). i. e. "I have known, ſays he, that "the abſtinence of ſome huſbands has been ſo great, "as to indulge a virgin's fears the firſt night, but yet "they ſported about the confines." This is therefore a very delicate point, and Father de la Mainſerme did well in attempting the Apology of the founder of his order.

(50) She might ſay, Qui me commôrit, melius non tangere, clamo. Horat. Sat. 1. lib. 2. ver. 45. i. e. "Who "rouſes me, "may ſoon re- "pent his raſh- "neſs."

(51) Montagne, Eſſais, lib. 3. cap. 5. pag. m. 123, 124.

(52) Seneca, Controv. 2. lib. 1. pag. m. 95.

[N] The true triumph is, to keep at the greateſt diſtance poſſible from ſuch an enemy.] I before glanced at this, in the beginning of the preceding remark; but I return to it, in order to ſtrengthen this wholeſome leſſon with good authorities. Let us firſt hear the advice which Socrates gave to his diſciples. Thou fancieſt, ſilly wretch, ſays he (53), that amorous kiſſes are not poiſonous, becauſe thou doſt not ſee the poiſon of them: know that a beautiful woman is a more dangerous animal than the ſcorpion, becauſe the latter cannot wound without touching us, whereas beauty ſtrikes us at a diſtance; from whatſoever we perceive it, it darts its poiſon upon us, and overthrows our reaſon. It is, perhaps, for this reaſon, that the little loves are repreſented with bows and arrows, becauſe a beautiful face wounds us from far. I therefore adviſe thee, Xenophon, whenever thou ſhalt diſcover ſome beauty, to fly without once looking behind thee; and as for thee, Critobulus, I fancy it would be proper for thee to be abſent a whole year, for thou wilt not require leſs time to get thy wound healed. To this let us add what St. Jerome uſed to ſay to thoſe who did not approve of people's retiring into deſarts, and who pretended that this was not combating vice, but flying from it; and that thoſe only deſerved the crown, who fought with, and overcame it. He uſed to anſwer, among other things, that the moſt ſecure way ought to be no ſin, and therefore, that it were better to fly, than to ſtay in the field of battle, in which if, on the one ſide, we may overcome, on the other ſide we may be vanquiſhed. That perſon, adds he, is not ſafe who ſleeps near a ſerpent; he may, or he may not, bite. St. Jerom expreſſes himſelf ſo well on this head, that I cannot forbear copying his words, which are as ſo many thunderbolts with reſpect to the conduct aſcribed to Arbriſſel. Qui ſciens imbecillitatem ſuam, & vas fragile, quod portat, timet offendere: ne impingat, corruat, atque frangatur. Unde & mulierum, maximéque adoleſcentularum vitat aſpectum & in tantum caſtigator ſui eſt: ut etiam quæ tuta ſunt, pertimeſcat. Cur, inquies, pergis ad eremum? videlicet ut te non audiam, non videam, ut tuo furore non movear, ut tua bella non patiar, nè me capiat oculus meretricis: ne me forma pulcherrima ad illicitos ducat amplexus. Reſpondebis: hoc non eſt pugnare, ſed fugere; ſta in acie: adverſariis armatus obſiſte: ut poſtquam viceris, coroneris. Fateor imbecillitatem meam. Nolo ſpe pugnare victoriæ, nè perdam aliquando victoriam. Si fugero, gladium devitavi: ſi ſtetero, aut vincendum mihi, aut cadendum. Quid autem neceſſe eſt certa dimittere, & incerta ſectari? Aut ſcuto, aut pedibus mors vitanda eſt. Tu, qui pugnas, & ſuperari potes, & vincere; ego cùm fugero, non vinco in eo, quod fugio; ſed ideò fugio, nè vincar. Nulla ſecuritas eſt, vicino ſerpente, dormire. Poteſt fieri, ut me non mordeat: tamen fieri poteſt ut aliquando me mordeat (54). "Who knowing his own weakneſs, "and that the veſſel which he carries is frail and brit- "tle, is fearful of ſtumbling, leſt he ſhould fall and "daſh it to pieces. He therefore flies the ſight of "women, eſpecially of girls; and keeps ſo watchful "an eye over himſelf, that he is even afraid when he "is ſafe. You will aſk why I withdraw to a deſart? "It is that I may neither ſee nor hear thee; that I "may not be moved by thy fury, that I may not "run the hazard of quarrelling with thee, that I may "not be captivated by a leud eye, that no exquiſite "beauty may entice me to unlawful embraces. You "will anſwer: this is not combating but flying: keep "the field, ſtand to your arms, in order that you may "be crowned, after having gained the victory. I "confeſs my weakneſs. I will not fight in hopes of "gaining a conqueſt, leſt one time or other I ſhould "be overthrown. If I fly, I eſcape the ſword; if "I ſtand my ground, I muſt either conquer or fall. "But where is the neceſſity of my leaving certainty, and "following uncertainty? Death may be avoided either "by fighting or running away. Thou, who fighteſt, "may'ſt either conquer or be conquered. I who run "away, do not overcome becauſe I fly, but I fly to "prevent my being overcome, it is not ſafe to ſleep "near a ſerpent. It poſſibly may not bite me; but it "is poſſible that it may ſome time or other." The Author of a Book printed at Paris in 1630, and intitled, Le Miroir des Chanoines, has collected a great number of ſentences, which condemns in the ſtrongeſt terms, the conduct of thoſe who advance as near as poſſible miſtake, nay impertinence to the laſt degree, to argue, that as there have been men among the Laity who paſſed whole nights with women without enjoying them [O]; we conſequently may believe that Monks would reſtrain themſelves the more on ſuch occaſions. Menage deſerves to be conſulted with regard to the proofs which Father Mainferme to danger. Joſeph, ſays he, leaves his cloak, without attempting to ſtruggle for it, with Potiphar's wife, becauſe the touch of a woman, as venomous and contagious, ought to be as much dreaded as the bite of a mad dog. This is St. Jerom's compariſon. Ipſe mulieris contactus quaſi contagioſus & venenatus eſt viro fugiendus, non minus quàm rabidiſſimi canis morſus (56). Our Author adds, that St. Jordan in St. Antoninus (†), rebukes a Friar very ſeverely, for only touching a woman's hand. True, anſwered the Friar, but ſhe is a pious woman. No matter for that anſwered St. Jordan; the earth is good, water is alſo good, but when theſe two elements are mixed, they form nothing but dirt.... " (*) St. " Jerom being ſenſible how much the converſation of " women, though not ſuſpected, or of ill fame, was " prejudicial to Eccleſiaſticks: Hoſpitiolum tuum, ſays " he, aut rarò, aut nunquam mulierum pedes terant: " quia non poteſt toto corde cum Deo habitare, qui fœ- " minarum acceſſibus copulatur: fœmina ſecum pariter " habitantis conſcientiam exurit, fœminæ nomen tuum " noverint, vultum neſciant. i. e. Never, at leaſt " very ſeldom, let women come into thy apartment; " becauſe he who delights in the converſation of wo- " men, cannot inhabit with God with his whole " heart. A woman burns the conſcience of him ſhe " dwells with. Let women know thy name, but not " thy face,... nor do thou know theirs.... (‡) St. " Cyprian refutes, in a ſubtle and learned manner, " thoſe daring ſpirits, who preſume ſo much on their " own integrity, that they are not under any fears " from women, generouſly hoping that they ſhall get " clear of them without engaging in the leaſt their " holy affections. Here follows his thought. It is " impoſſible to be ſurrounded with flames and not be " burnt, and it is better to fear well, than to preſume " ill. It is more uſeful that man ſhould acknowledge " himſelf weak in order that he may become ſtrong; " than to become weak, by endeavouring to appear " ſtrong. That man deceives himſelf who fancies " himſelf ſomething, and yet is nothing in reality. " Who can put fire in his boſom and not burn his " clothes? True, but I would overcome that I may " may triumph. Haſt thou not thy own fleſh to con- " tend with and conquer? Why wouldſt thou have " another climate furniſh thee with laurels? The fleſh " luſteth againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit againſt the fleſh. " Be it ſaid once for all; the converſation of women " is the devil's birdlime, to take and enſlave men... " (57) Dreadful blindneſs! to chooſe to live in a " place, where one muſt neceſſarily, every day of our " lives, either conquer or die; and to think of ſleeping " near a viper in ſafety. (§) Quid tibi neceſſe, ſays St. " Jerom, in ea verſari domo, in qua neceſſe habeas quo- " tidie aut perire, aut vincere? quis unquam morta- " lium, juxta viperam ſecuros ſomnos capit?" Our Author afterwards giving ſome remedies againſt the emotions of the fleſh, places abſtinence in the firſt rank, frequenting of good company the ſecond, after which he ſays (58), that the third will be, not to approach women in any manner, but to ſee them at a diſtance, as Lacides (in Laertius) ſaid to King Attalus that pictures ought to be ſeen... () St. Auſtin, on the following words of St. Paul, fly fornication, obſerves that St. Paul does not ſay, reſiſt, but fly, becauſe victory is better ſecured by flight, than by reſiſtance. Contra libidinis impetum apprehende fugam, ſi vis obtinere victoriam, nec tibi verecundum ſit fugere, ſi caſtitatis palmam deſideras obtinere.

(53) Xenophon. Remarkable Things of Socrates, lib. 1.

(54) Hieronym. Epiſt. adverſ. Vigilant. It is the 13th of Book 3. pag. 563. in the edition I make uſe of.

Tu fugiendo fuga, quem fuga ſola fugat.

Conquer by flying, what flight only conquers.

Theſe maxims, ſo true and important in themſelves, and beſides, ſo conſiderable on account of the veneration we bear tothoſe great ſaints who eſtabliſhed them in their writings, are very often inculcated into thoſe who ſtand in the greateſt need of them. They are told it every day from the pulpit, it is enforced on them in a numberleſs multitude of books, and nevertheleſs theſe perſons perſevere willingly in the cuſtom of expoſing themſelves to danger. One would imagine that they ſet themſelves up for couragious perſons, and that flight ſeems to them as ignominious and cowardly as it does to thoſe of the military profeſſion. They march boldly to the attack with an air of gaiety and unconcern. The fair ſex, who are not brave from nature, are yet very intrepid on this article: they are no leſs fond of receiving viſits in their cells, than the other ſex are of paying them: each party behave as though they were not afraid of being overcome; and it is very probable, that this ſecurity does not reſult ſo much from the knowledge of their ſtrength, as from their not being over willing to come off victorious in theſe combats; and that, let the worſt happen, the combat it ſelf, whatever may be the iſſue of it, has ſome charms. If perſons conquer, it is ſo much gained on nature; if they are conquered, it is ſo much gain to her. Be this ſaid without prejudice or offence to thoſe, who truly keep their vows of chaſtity; and who doubtleſs, in caſe they ſhould happen not to follow the counſel given by St. Jerom, are ſure that their viſits, their long converſations, &c. will not call up any evil deſires. But theſe would certainly not be the laſt in condemning the exceſs of raſhneſs, of which ſome imagined the founder of Frontevaux to be guilty.

[O] There have been men among the laity, who paſſed whole nights without enjoying them.] This Montagne aſſures us of. I do not look upon it as a miracle, ſays he (59), as the Queen of Navarre does in one of the tales of her Heptameron, a pretty book in its kind; nor for a very difficult thing to ſpend whole nights with the utmoſt freedom, with a long wiſhed for miſtreſs, and to keep a promiſe that may have been made her, to content one's ſelf with kiſſing and toying. He ſays in another place (60), that his father would tell of ſtrange intimacies that he had with virtuous women, without being the leaſt ſuſpected on that account. And, of himſelf, he uſed to ſwear (61), that he had not known woman when he married, though he was then three and thirty, and had long ſerved in the wars in Italy. If leud people may be credited, the caſes mentioned by this writer are not ſo very extraordinary. When this ſort of people are in a humour to relate their adventures, they proteſt that, in ſome, they have been forced to proceed gradually; and that the worſhipped maid did not indulge them the laſt favour, till after having tried, whether they would keep the promiſe they had made, to content themſelves with leſſer ones. There are others who, without naming any perſon, declare that it was in their power to have enjoyed the fair one; but that they put a reſtraint upon themſelves, for fear of ill conſequences; or not to expoſe the much loved, and fearfully complaiſant object, to the diſhonour ſhe dreaded. Let us allow, to thoſe who would make uſe of ſuch adventures, in order to make it probable, that ſome Friars have been conquerors, even in the warmeſt opportunities; let us allow them, I ſay, that the fire of lewd men is not always ſo impetuous, that it does not ſtop of itſelf by the conſideration of certain circumſtances; what uſe will they make of this, to juſtify the Friars in queſtion? Do theſe lewd people reſtrain themſelves ſo far, as not to commit certain acts of uncleanneſs, which, in the judgment of the leaſt rigid caſuiſts, amount to mortal ſins, and even ſometimes, in the opinion of ſeveral Caſuiſts, to a ſin which exceeds that of actual enjoyment? If the pretended victory of theſe Friars was ſomething in this caſe, would it not be in reality the triumph of uncleanneſs, and not the triumph of chaſtity? In allowing the men in this manner, let us not ſpare their female companions. Their raſhneſs is ſtill greater than that of the men; and as we could never excuſe, with reſpect to chaſtity, thoſe women who expoſe themſelves ſo far, neither can we ever excuſe them with regard to the article of prudence. This would whiſper to them, not to truſt promiſes nor

(55) Vita Bernard, Canon of the Cathedral of Puy, Miroir des Chanoines, pag. 240.

(56) Hieronym. lib. 1. contra Jovinian. cited by Vital Bernard, ibid.

(†) D. Antonin. 3. p. tit. 23. c. 9. §. 5.

(*) D. Hieron. Ep. ad Nepot. ſub fin.

(‡) D. Cypr. de ſingul. Cler.

(57) Idem, Vital Bernard, Miroir des Chanoines, pag. 252.

(§) D. Hieron. lib. 2. Ep. 9.

(58) Vital Bernard, Miroir des Chanoines, pag. 273.

() D. Aug. Ser. 250 de tem.

(59) Montagne, Eſſais, lib. 2. cap. 11. pag. m. 172, 173.

(60) Ibid. cap. 2. pag. 21.

(61) i. e. Montagne's father.

ferme has rejected [P]; but we ought to peruſe ſtill more attentively the Apologetical Diſſertation for the bleſſed Robert of Arbriſſelles, ... concerning what I ſaid of him in the firſt edition of this work. This apology is ſo well drawn up, and in ſo ſolid a manner [Q], that every reaſonable man ought to acquieſce with it; and although I have ſufficiently ſhewn that I did not believe the reports which were ſpread with reſpect to his lying with his nuns &c. I here declare, that in all thoſe places where I mention it, without nor oaths, but to ſecure themſelves a better way. This brings to my mind an adventure, I read in a little Book which was printed in Paris and Holland anno 1682. Here follows the ſubſtance of it. The gay rambler, whoſe name is ſuppoſed to be Pontiguan, delivers himſelf as follows. I was, ſays he (62), in the country with two charming women, both whom I loved in my way. I had told each of them, ſeparately, the inclination I had for them, and was extremely well ſatisfied with their anſwers. One evening, when I was withdrawn to my chamber, and had got my night-gown on, the two Ladies in queſtion came to me, and ſaid, that they muſt wrap me up in ſwadling clothes, in order to put a trick upon another Gentleman who was with us. They let me into the trick, which I thought a merry one, and therefore conſented very readily to be ſwadled up. Immediately they took me, with only my night-gown on, and wrapt me about with, I believe, above an hundred ells of linnen cloth, cut in the form of ſwathes, ſo that I had all the air of an Egyptian Mummy. Being thus equipp'd, ſay my women to me; Come, Pontiguan, a well-bred Gentleman will not refuſe to come and lie with Ladies when requeſted to do it. We both promiſed you to be kind, whenever an opportunity ſhould offer, and we muſt now be as good as our words.... Wicked creatures, ſaid I to them, unſwathe me firſt, and then do what you pleaſe with me. No, no, replied they, thoſe will be no hindrance; upon which they ordered me to be carried to one of their houſes, lay me in a bed between a pair of ſheets, when the two baggages came and laid themſelves down on each ſide of me. There were a great many lights in the bedchamber; ſo that I perceived them to be in a very agreeable, alluring night-dreſs, and both were tempting. I was not at liberty to make uſe of my arms, hands, or any thing elſe; but was buried under a heap of linnen, and had only my eyes at liberty, which made me half diſtracted. Image to yourſelf the condition I was in. One moment I would beſeech them, to let me have but an arm, a hand, or even a finger free. The next I would make the moſt violent ſtruggles to break my bands, inſomuch that the Ladies imagined once that I had forced them, and hereupon both jump'd out of bed, crying, we are undone. They indeed had reaſon to make that exclamation; for, to ſay the truth, could I have been enabled to wreak my vengeance on them, they perhaps would have been reduced to the neceſſity of ſuing for quarter. I ſometimes threatned to diſgrace them, by ſleeping by their ſide, which yet would have been no eaſy matter. They anſwered me no otherwiſe than by inſulting me for the happy opportunity I loſt, and by fondling me at intervals, for which I freely could have beat them. I never in my life ſpent ſuch a night. Theſe precautions were well concerted (63). Theſe Ladies, how immodeſt ſoever they may be repreſented, were more prudent than the Devotees of Frontevaux (64).

(62) Academie Galante, pag. 160. Dutch edit.

(63) We might apply on this occaſion, a parody of the two following lines of Horace, Epiſt. 2. of lib. 1.
Ira furor brevis eſt: animum rege: qui, niſi paret, Imperat: hunc frænis, hunc tu compeſce catena.
ver. 62, 63. i. e. "Anger is a "tranſient madneſs; govern "your mind, "He who does "not command, "obeys, "Reſtrain your "paſſion with "chains."

(64) Taking it for granted, that what is ſaid of them is true, in this caſe one might apply to them the following words of the Goſpel according to St. Luke, cap. xvii. ver. 8. The children of this world are wiſer in their generation than the children of light.

[P] Menage deſerves to be conſulted with regard to the proofs which Father de la Mainferme has rejected.] "Bollandus, in his Annotations on the Life of R. d'Arbriſſel, ſays that Father Sirmond, who publiſhed "Geoffry de Vendome's Letters, was ſorry that he "had publiſh'd that in queſtion, he, after having "cloſely examin'd it, judging it to be ſpurious; and "that he intended to declare this publicly in a ſecond "Edition. But I can affirm for a truth, that this was "never Father Sirmond's deſign, and that he never repented his having publiſhed this Letter. I was "very intimate with him for a great many years, "and till he died. Pavillon, in the Preface to his "Hiſtory of R. d'Arbriſſel, ſays that as this Letter of "Geoffry de Vendome, is not found in the MSS. of "the Monaſtery of Vendome, as Father Sirmond "knew, and as he inſinuates ſufficiently, he ought naturally to have ſuſpected it (65)." Menage, having related ſome other matters, and particularly the Certificate of Vincent Marſelle, proceeds thus: "Since he "has declared, that this Letter was not found in that "manuſcript, I am firmly perſuaded that it was not "there when he made this declaration. But as, on "the other ſide, Father Sirmond, who was a man of "the utmoſt ſincerity, and had ſeen this manuſcript, "has not obſerved, in his notes on this Letter, that "it was not in the manuſcript in queſtion; and "that he never ſaid ſo to me, tho' I have ſpoken to "him more than once of this Letter; I alſo am firmly perſuaded that it was in it, at the time that Father Sirmond printed his Geoffry de Vendome. It "therefore muſt have been torn out of it ſince, at the "ſollicitation of Joanna Baptiſta de Bourbon, legitimated daughter of France, at whoſe ſollicitation alſo, Theophilus Raynaud retracted in his Trias ſortium David, of what he had written concerning R. "d'Arbriſſel, in his De ſobria utriuſque ſexus converſatione, which I was told by Father Commire the Jeſuit. And a circumſtance that may make it be believed that it was torn from it, is, that this manuſcript is no longer ſhewn, and that people ſay in the "Abbey of Vendome, that they don't know what is become of it. But what nevertheleſs refutes the opinion of Bollandus, Theophilus de Raynaud, Coſmier, Pavillon, and Father de la Mainferme is, "that Marbodus, a very virtuous man, who, having been Schoolmaſter of the Church of Angers, was "made Biſhop of Rennes, and afterwards became a "Monk of St. Aubin of Angers, wrote ſuch a "Letter to R. d'Arbriſſel †. This Letter is found in "the Collection of Marbodus's Letters, printed at "Rennes. It is true indeed, that in a manuſcript of "the Letters of Ildebert Biſhop of Mans and Archbiſhop of Tours, which is in the Library of St. "Victor at Paris, the ſame Letter is aſcribed to Ildebert. And Mr. Baluze, who has promis'd an Edition of Ildebert's Works, fancies it was written by "Ildebert rather than by Marbodus. But I am "not of his opinion; I ſcarcely believing that Ildebert, as he himſelf was accuſed of loving the fair-ſex, would reproach R. d'Arbriſſel of the ſame paſſion. But tho' this Letter had been written by Ildebert, it yet would prove what I intend to prove, "viz. that R. d'Arbriſſel had the reputation of being "a lover of the fair, which I likewiſe prove by one "Petrus Salmurienſis. This Peter of Saumur, who "was a Monk of St. Florant had wrote ſomething "like Geoffry de Vendome's Letter. This piece was "in our time in the hands of Father Vignier of the "Oratory, who ſuppreſſed it at the requeſt of Joanna "Baptiſta of Bourbon, Abbeſs of Frontevaux. This "I was told by Mr. d'Herouval, Father Luke d'Acheri, and Mr. de Sainte Beuve, all perſons of credit, and who were told all theſe particulars by Father Vignier ‡. But be all this ſaid, without injuring the memory of R. d'Arbriſſel, for which I have "the utmoſt Veneration; being perſuaded that this "report which was ſpread of him, and on account "whereof Geoffry Abbot of Vendome, Marbodus "Biſhop of Rennes, and Peter Monk of St. Florant, "had written the things I juſt now ſpoke of, had no "real foundation. R. d'Arbriſſel had founded a Monaſtery of women, to whom he had made the men "ſubordinate; which du Moulin, in his notes on the "Decree, has expreſſed as follows ‡: In monaſterio "Fontis Ebraldi, adhuc præpoſterè Monachi ſunt infernè, Monachæ verò ſunt ſuperne: i. e. "In the Monaſtery of Frontevaux, the Friars are prepoſterouſly "placed under, and the Nuns above;" and as this "inſtitution ſeemed contrary to what is written by St. "Paul, viz. that women muſt not govern men, it "was judged that he loved the fair ſex, and he was "rallied for it, and theſe railleries gave occaſion to "theſe ſlanders." In the Additions (66) Menage informs the public, that the Letter of Geoffry Abbot of Vendome to Robert d'Arbriſſel, is found in the manuſcript of the Letters of that Abbot, which is in the Library of the Franciſcans of Sainte Croix (holy Croſs) in Florence, which puts it paſt all doubt that it is of this Author's: for it is likewiſe found in the manuſcript of the Abbey of Couture at Mans, but in a different order from that of Florence.

† Mulierum cohabitationem, in quo genere quondam peccaſti, diceris plus amare: ut quaſi antiquæ iniquitatis contagium, novæ religionis exemplo, circa eamdem materiam ſtudeas expiare. Has ergo, non ſolum, communi menſa per diem, ſed & communi habitu per noctem, dignaris, ut referunt: accubante ſimul & diſcipulorum grege, ut inter utroſque medius jacens, utrique ſexui vigiliarum & ſomni leges præfigas. Has peregrinationis tuæ loquuntur eſſe pediſſequas: & diſputanti tibi jugiter aſſidere. Sed & diverſis locis & diverſis regionibus, non parùm te aſſerunt habere numerum feminarum per xenedochia & diverſoria diviſarum: quas maribus non impune permixtas quaſi ad pauperum & peregrinorum obſequia, deputaſti. Quod quàm periculosè ſit factum, vagitus infantium prodiderunt.

‡ Father Vignier ſaid alſo, that there was a Council held at Albi againſt the Albigenſes; wherein it was ſaid, that theſe heretics being cenſured for carrying women along with them, they juſtified themſelves by ſaying, Sic nos docuit Chriſtus Dominus: ſic nos docuerunt magiſter noſter Robertus, qui nuper Conventum Virginum inſtituit.

‡ At the word In nullo loco, 18, Queſtion, 2.

(66) Page 310.

without ſubjoining my opinion, I deſire to have it underſtood. There are computed thirty two or thirty three Abbeſſes of Frontevaux, from Petronilla de Chemillé, who was the firſt, to her who is now in that quality (k) [R]. The Order is divided into four Provinces [S], in each of which it is poſſeſſed of ſeveral Priories.

(k) La Mainferme, tom. 3. pag. 172.

Florence. It is the firſt in the latter manuſcript, and the 47th of Book 4th of the other. Menage adds, to the authority of theſe manuſcripts, two reaſons drawn from the Letter itſelf. Magliabechi informed him of what related to the manuſcript of Florence.

There is no occaſion for me to hint to my readers, that there are ſome reflections neceſſary for them to make, on the complaiſance ſhewn to an Abbeſs of Frontevaux, who was a legitimated daughter of France. At her requeſt an original piece was torn out of an antient manuſcript. How many other pieces have been ſuppreſſed at the ſollicitation of great numbers of people? On the other ſide, how many have been forged? How many words have been erazed in manuſcripts, and others ſubſtituted in their ſtead? See a Book printed in 1699, and intitled, Lettres Critiques où l'on voit les ſentimens de Monſieur Simon ſur pluſieurs ouvrages nouveaux, publiées par un gentilhomme Alleman. i. e. "Critical Letters, in which Mr. Simon's ſentiments are "ſeen, concerning ſeveral new works, publiſhed by a "German Gentleman." Have not a numberleſs multitude of incidents been thereby turned into caſes of vain doubts or problems, which only exerciſe the ſubtilty of the diſputants, and are never cleared up?

(67) Printed in Antwerp, as the title declares, for Henry Deſbordes, bookſeller in Amſterdam, 1701. Mr. Bernard ſpeaks of it in his Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, for July 1701, pag. 79, & ſeq.

[Q] This apology (67) is ſo well drawn up, and in ſo ſolid a manner.] It is in form of a Letter, which I had the honour of having directed to me, and contains 315 pages in 12mo. The Author of it has therein diſplayed the utmoſt politeneſs, genius and erudition; and I am very ſorry I am not worthy of the Encomiums, which ſo ingenious and learned a Writer compliments me with. His work conſiſts of nine articles, all which he has proved in a manner, as I am told, highly ſatisfactory to the public. "I. That Geoffry's "controverted Letter was really written by him, and "is even in the manuſcript of Vendome (68). II. That "the Letter aſcribed to Marbodus Biſhop of Rennes, "or to Ildebert Biſhop of Mans and afterwards Archbiſhop of Tours, was not written by either of thoſe "Authors, and is more probably of Roſcelinus. III. "That at the worſt, it is evidently proved that thoſe "three Prelates had, at all times, a conſtant and unterrupted eſteem for this founder; and thought the "very reverſe of thoſe reports which ſome nameleſs, "obſcure people publiſhed concerning him. IV. "That the Letter, (whatever it be) which is ſaid to "have been written by Peter of Saumur, does not "conclude any thing diſadvantageous, any more than "this fragment of a Council of Albi againſt the Albigenſes. V. That all thoſe writings were founded "on mere HEARSAYS, without the leaſt ſhadow of "proofs or even of veriſimilitude; and that every ſe"rious reader ought to deſpiſe the uncertain reports "which were ſpread, becauſe of the numberleſs multitude of poſitive teſtimonies that may be produced "to the contrary. VI. That the boldneſs with which "Robert preached and exclaimed againſt the crimes of "the Great and thoſe of the Clergy, together with "his actions in the Councils of Poitiers and Baugency, "are a triumphant proof of his purity and innocence. "VII. That thoſe even, who, as it is pretended, were "his enemies, may be conſidered as witneſſes in his behalf. VIII. That it would be ſurprizing if a man, "who inveighed ſo publickly againſt ſinners, had "not, at leaſt, made them murmur; and that, being "ſo generally eſteemed, it was impoſſible but ſome "people muſt have envied him; but that he forced "even envy itſelf to reſpect him. IX. That all theſe "proofs are crowned both by his death, and the ſanc"tity of his life. That, from theſe ſeveral particu"lars united, there reſults a full evidence of the falſi"ty of the new kind of martyrdom imputed to him; "and may deſtroy abſolutely the leaſt ſuſpicions con"cerning him, in the mind of every judicious perſon "who is capable of reflection."

(68) That is to ſay, that it exiſts there ſtill, in part, for it is now without a title, and the leaf which was at the beginning of it is cut out; but the three following pages, point out plainly enough, the perſon to whom it was directed, and agree with what we find printed of it. Diſſert. Apologet. pag. 34, 35.

[R] There are computed 32 or 33 Abbeſſes of Frontevaux.... to her who is now in that quality (69).] She is Mary Magdalen Gabriel Adelaide de Rouchechoüart, daughter to the Duke de Mortemar, and Marſhal de Vivonne's ſiſter. She was appointed Abbeſs of the Order anno 1670 (70), and is a Lady of extraordinary merit. Several perſons who have had the honour of ſeeing and converſing with her, aſſure me, that the beauty, the ſtrength and ſolidity of her converſation, excite the admiration of all who hear her. Her virtue and knowledge (71), and many other ſhining qualities, rank her among the moſt illuſtrious perſons of her age. See in Vol. III, pag. 192 and 193 of the Clypeus naſcentis Font-Ebraldenſis Ordinis, the encomiums which are beſtowed upon this Lady, in a dramatic piece dedicated to her.

(69) I write this in 1699.

(70) La Mainferme, tom. 3. pag. 182.

(71) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for April 1686. at the beginning of Article II.

She died the 15th of Auguſt 1704. See her Elogium in the Memoirs of Trevoux, for December 1704, pag. 2118 & ſeq.

[S] The Order is divided into four Provinces.] That of France, of Aquitain, of Auvergne and of Britany. There are fifteen Priories in the firſt, fourteen in the ſecond, fifteen in the third, and thirteen in the fourth (72).

(72) La Mainferme, tom. 3. pag. 357.

FONTIUS BARTHOLOMEW) born in Florence, was a learned man of the fifteenth Century. He wrote ſome books which are printed [A]. Matthias Corvinus King of Hungary honoured him with his friendſhip, and gave him the direction of the famous Library in Buda. He was eſteemed by Picus Mirandula, Marſilius Ficinus, Jerom Donatus, Robert Salviati, and other illuſtrious men of that age. He had taught Rhetoric with ſucceſs in his native country, if we may credit two verſes of Verinus, which I ſhall cite in the remark.

(a) Gaddi, tom. 2. de Scriptor. pag. 139. apud Angelicum Apoſium, in Biblioth. Apoſiana, p. 3.

To point out the time in which he taught Rhetoric in his own country, I ſhould have obſerved that he was collegue with Politian in 1488, a good proof of which we find in Gaddi (a).

[A] He wrote ſome Books which are printed.] Among Picus Mirandula's Letters, there is one which Fontius wrote to Robert Salviati (1) to thank him for a Book (2) he had ſent him. One of the chief works of Fontius is his Commentary on Perſius, printed at Venice in 1491. The Epitomizers of Geſner's Bibliotheque, have ſpoken of this Commentary only as a Manuſcript kept in the Emperor's Library; but, as Gaſpar Maſſa (3) reproaches them, they did not know that it had been printed and publiſhed near an hundred years. Fontius's Orations met with a more favourable reception from the public than his Commentary (4). There was printed at Francfort in 1621 a Collection of his Works, in which the Life of Paul Ghiacetti is found. Here follow the two verſes I promiſed.

(1) It is the 17th of Book 2.

(2) L'Heptaple de Pic. Mirand.

(3) Della vita, Origine & Patria di Aulo Perſio, pag. 17.

Fontius eſt Rhetor, pubis moderator Hetruſcæ,
Judicio & nulli morum pietate ſecundus.

"Fontius inſtructs the Tuſcan youth in knowledge,
"And is for judgment, virtue, Rhetoric fam'd.

(4) Fontius & ipſe non parum in Perſio meruit: ſed illius orationes majore quodam favore excipiuntur. Autor Dialogi de Latinæ Linguæ reparat. pag. 412.

FORBES (PATRIC) in Latin Forbeſius, a Scottiſh Gentleman in the ſeventeenth Century, devoted himſelf to the miniſtry. The perſuaſions of his Biſhop prevailed on him him to undertake the ſervice of a private Cure in the country (a). He was then forty eight years of age. He diſcharged his duty ſo worthily, that a few years afterwards he was promoted to the Biſhopric of Aberdeen, which he held about ſeventeen years. It was with great difficulty that King James made him accept that dignity, and for ſeveral months he refuſed it, having propoſed to himſelf to live in a leſs conſpicuous ſtate. It was ſoon ſeen how much he deſerved to be a Biſhop; and that his refuſal was not counterfeit, but the real effect of his humility. In all his behaviour he has diſplayed the character of a truly apoſtolical man (b). This will be ſeen more particularly below [A]. He died in 1635, at the age of ſeventy one (c). He wrote ſomething on the Apocalypſe (d).

(a) Burnet, Preface to the Life of William Bedell.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Konig, Bibliath. pag. 321.

(d) Idem, ibid.

[A] This will be ſeen more particularly below.] "He viſited his Dioceſs without pomp and noiſe, attended only by one ſervant, that he might more eaſily be informed of what belonged to his care. When he was told of the negligence or weakneſs of any of his Clergy, he would go and lodge near his Church upon Saturday in the evening, without making himſelf known, and the next day, when he was in the pulpit, he would go and hear him, that by this he might be able to judge what his common Sermons were, and as they appeared to him he encouraged or admoniſhed him. He took ſo much care of two Colleges he had in his Dioceſe, that they ſoon diſtinguiſhed themſelves, and became famous all over Scotland: and when the Church was involved in troubles, it appeared from the Writings that came out againſt the Covenant, that none but the Doctors of thoſe Colleges were able to defend her cauſe; and though they were the firſt that entred the liſts in that famous controverſy, yet hitherto we have ſeen nothing that has eclipſed or excelled their writings. Their exemplary piety, and profound erudition, were equally beneficial and honourable to that Dioceſe... He commonly aſſembled his Clergy twice a year, and before he entred upon any buſineſs, he made them a ſhort ſpeech to excuſe his own infirmities, and told them, that if they obſerved any defect in his conduct, if his errors were ſecret, they might privately reprove him, or before the whole aſſembly, if they were public, in the manner they ſhould think proper. Then he retired a little, leſt his preſence ſhould hinder particular perſons from ſpeaking. There never was but one turbulent fellow that abuſed this liberty, for which he was reprimanded by every body, except the Biſhop, who treated him with that civility his character required (1)." This I have taken from the Preface which the famous Dr. Burnet, now Biſhop of Saliſbury, has prefixed to the Life of William Bedell.

(1) Burnet, Preface to the Life of William Bedell.

☞FORBES (PATRIC). We ſhall give a ſupplement to the preceding Article from ſome Memoirs communicated to us. He was Lord of Corſe, and Baron of Oneil in the Shire of Aberdeen (a). He was born in the year 1564, when the affairs of the Church of Scotland were in great confuſion [A]. Our Author having had a liberal education both at Aberdeen and St. Andrews, added to a plentiful eſtate, noble alliance, and great credit in his country, contributed very much to the promotion of Religion, by encouraging pious and peaceable Miniſters, and in ſeveral ſet conferences, as well as occaſional diſcourſes, inſtructing the people, eſpecially Papiſts, who would hear nothing from the pulpit. Thus acted he in a Lay-capacity; and his abilities were ſo conſpicuous, that he was often ſollicited to enter into the Miniſtry by many very eminent perſons both in Church and State. He ſubmitted to their judgments, and was ordained Preſbyter, when he was about forty eight years of age, and was admitted Miniſter of Keith in the Dioceſe of Murray, where for ſix years he diſcharged his duty with ſuch applauſe, that at the earneſt deſire of the Clergy and Laity of the Dioceſe of Aberdeen, as well as at the expreſs command of the King, he accepted of that Biſhopric, to which he was elected by a full chapter March the 24th 1618 [B]. On the 25th of Auguſt following was held the famous Synod of Perth, which eſtabliſhed the Five Articles [C]. It was opened by our Author by a Sermon on Ezra vii. 23. His character in all reſpects was very exemplary [D]. Two days before his death he ſent for the Clergy of Aberdeen to receive the Communion with him, and died with the ſtrongeſt ſentiments of devotion and reſignation

(a) See Dr. John Forbes's Preface to his Inſtitutiones Hiſtorico-Theologicæ, edit. Amſt. 1645, in fol.

[A] When the affairs of the Church of Scotland were in great confuſion.] Tho' Popery was at that time declining, and in a great meaſure aboliſhed, yet it was a long time before any thing conſiſtent or poſitive could be eſtabliſhed in its room, the reformers there generally running upon negatives in Religion. In many places the Churches becoming ruinous, and the endowments being either inſufficient or perverted to other uſes, whereby learning wanted due encouragement, there were but few good Preachers, and even thoſe more remarkable for zeal than knowledge.

[B] Accepted of that Biſhopric, to which he was elected by a full Chapter March 24th 1618.] He was conſecrated May 17th at St. Andrews by the Archbiſhop, aſſiſted by the Biſhops of Dunkeld and Breechin, and enthroned in his Cathedral the 26th of that month.

[C] Which eſtabliſhed the five Articles.] They were, I. Kneeling in the act of receiving the Euchariſt. II. Adminiſtring that Sacrament to ſick or dying perſons. III. Baptizing infants privately or at home in caſe of neceſſity. IV. Confirmation of children at a proper age. V. The obſervation of five days, viz. the days of the Birth, Paſſion, Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion of our Lord, and the ſending down of the Holy Ghoſt. Upon theſe days the Miniſters were enjoined to commemorate theſe ineſtimable benefits, and make choice of pertinent texts of Scripture to preach upon, and rebuke all ſuperſtitious obſervation and licentious profanation thereof (1),

(1) Vide Proceedings of Perth-Aſſembly by Dr. Lindſay, and Act. Parl. 1621.

[D] His character in all reſpects was very exemplary.] His great care was not only to plant worthy men in his Dioceſe, but to find proper methods how this might be continued to poſterity by procuring ſufficient proviſion for their ſubſiſtence, wherein he was very ſucceſsful. As he recovered many of the revenues, which by the injury of the times had been loſt or neglected; ſo he ſpent much of his income on the poorer Clergy, and uſed all proper methods with Heretors and Titulars of Tiends and others to make conſiderable augmentations; which he had no ſooner accompliſh'd, but he diſſolved many real or ſuppoſed unions betwixt Churches in very large and extenſive Pariſhes; ſo that each of them might have the advantage of a proper Paſtor. He was very ſtrict in examining Candidates for Orders, the want of which proves often an irreparable detriment to the Church. As he was Chancellor of the Univerſity of Aberdeen, he took care to improve that ſeat of learning, by repairing the fabrick, augmenting the Library, reviving the profeſſions of Divinity, Canon-Law, and Phyſic, and procuring another Profeſſorſhip in Divinity to be added. He ſcarce ever ſuffered any man of merit to aſk any thing at his hands, but anticipated them; while thoſe, whoſe character would tion on Eaſter Even March the 28th 1635, aged ſeventy one, and was interred in his Cathedral on the 9th of April [E] between two of his predeceſſors Biſhop Dunbar and Biſhop Cuningham. His funeral Sermon was preached by Dr. Baron, before a numerous Auditory, who lamented the death of ſo excellent a Prelate. His Commentary upon the Revelations was printed at London in 1613. Biſhop Burnet obſerves (b), that "he took "ſo much care of the two Colleges he had in his Dioceſe, that they ſoon diſtinguiſhed "themſelves and became famous over all Scotland; and when the Church was involved "in troubles, it appeared by the writings that came out againſt the Covenant, that none "but the Doctors of thoſe Colleges were able to defend the cauſe." Upon this paſſage we may remark, that there were many men of merit both able and willing to engage in the cauſe; but as the Divines of Aberdeen were the only ſociety attacked at firſt in a ſcholar-like way, ſo they were the moſt proper perſons to anſwer. The other Univerſities and many of the Clergy were attacked in a violent manner; and thoſe worthy Divines, Dr. Robert Baron, John Forbes, Alexander Scrogg, James Sibbald, William Leſley, &c. were forced from their preferments. The two Colleges abovementioned were continued in Epiſcopal hands many years after the Revolution which eſtabliſhed Preſbytery; and to this day the people in that Dioceſe are remarkable for their adhering to theſe principles, and the encouragement which they give to Miniſters of that perſuaſion.

(b) Preface to the Life of Biſhop Bedell.

would not bear a ſevere ſcrutiny, never preſumed to ſollicit him. As his penetration and ſagacity were great, ſo likewiſe were his courage and integrity. He had a quick eye and ſprightly countenance, which proved an additional ornament to his expreſſions, which were grave and majeſtic, and of peculiar inſinuation and grace. His prudence was remarkable; for he greatly allayed and almoſt conquered not only the diſtempered judgments, but the perverſe and turbulent humours of divers in his Dioceſe. He was greatly reſpected by the Laity, who often choſe him arbiter in ſettling their differences. In Parliament he was elected one of the Lords of the Articles, and his judgment there and in Council was conſidered as an Oracle.

[E] Interred in his Cathedral on the 9th of April.] In 1635 there was publiſhed at Aberdeen in 4to a Book intitled, Funerals of a Right Reverend Father in God, Patrick Forbes of Corſe, Biſhop of Aberdeen. ΤΩΥ ΈΝ ΆΓΙΟΙΣ Reverendiſſimi in Chriſto Patris, Patricii Forbeſiii à Corſe, Epiſcopi Abredonienſis Tumulus, à multis omnium ordinum collachrymantibus, variegato opere exornatus.

FORBES (JOHN), ſon of the preceding, was "of a much more extenſive learning "than his father, in which perhaps he was excelled by none of that age: thoſe who ſhall "read his Book of Hiſtorical and Theological Inſtitutions, will not diſpute this title "with him; for it is ſo excellent a work, that if he had been left in quiet in the retirement he had choſe, to apply himſelf to his ſtudies, and could have finiſhed it by a ſecond Volume, it would perhaps have been the moſt valuable Treatiſe of Divinity that has yet appeared in the World. He filled the Profeſſor's chair (a), which his father had founded (b), when the Covenanters expelled him, and forced him to fly beyond ſea." The Letter he wrote to Voſſius, dated from Amſterdam the 17th of January 1645, and that which Voſſius wrote to him ſome months after, deſerve to be conſidered [A]. Note, there was one FORBES, by nation a Scot, and a great Puritan, who was driven out of his country the beginning of the ſeventeenth Century, and took refuge in Holland, where he warmly declared himſelf againſt the Arminians (c).

(a) Burnet, Preface to the Life of William Bedell.

(b) In the Univerſity of Aberdeen.

(c) See Grevinchovius, in the Preface to his Book againſt Ameſius.

I add, that having continued in Holland ſomewhat above two years, he returned to his own country, where he ſpent the remainder of his life at his Eſtate of Corſe, and that he died the 29th of April 1648 (d). An Edition of all his Works was publiſhed in two Volumes in folio, at Amſterdam, in the year 1703, to which is added his Life, written by George Garden. An Abridgment of it, with a general Idea of his Writings may be ſeen in the Journaliſts (e): for which reaſon I do not enlarge any farther.

(d) Nouvelles de la Republ. des Lettres, Feb. 1704, pag. 181.

(e) Ibid. pag. 176, &c. Hiſt. des Ouvrages des Savans, July 1703, pag. 291, &c.

[A] The Letter he wrote to Voſſius... and that which Voſſius wrote to him... deſerve to be conſidered.] The Letter he wrote to Voſſius (1) accompanied the preſent which he made him of a Copy of a Latin Treatiſe he had publiſhed, wherein he ſhewed that the doctrine of St. Auguſtin, concerning grace, was conformable to the conſtant doctrine of the Catholic Church. He excuſed himſelf to Voſſius for not being of his opinion. I have not ſeen the Anſwer which was returned him; but Voſſius's Letter (2) mentioned by me is in the Collection printed at London.

(1) It is the CDII among thoſe written to Voſſius.

(2) It is the DLXIX among the Letters written by Voſſius.

FORBES (WILLIAM), Biſhop of Edinburgh in the ſeventeenth Century, was born at Aberdeen in Scotland, where he went through his claſſical Learning, and a courſe of Philoſophy. He was admitted Maſter of Arts at the age of ſixteen, and immediately after he was made Profeſſor of Logic, the duties of which place he diſcharged for four years with great ſucceſs. He ſtrenuouſly applied himſelf to ſupport Ariſtotle's Logic againſt the cavils of the Ramiſts. Afterwards he went to travel, and made a very great progreſs in Divinity and Hebrew, in the Univerſities of Germany, during the four years he ſpent in that country. He then viſited the Univerſity of Leyden, and won the eſteem of all the great men who flouriſhed there. The ill ſtate of his health not permitting him to undertake a journey into France and Italy, as he would willingly have done, he went over to England. The fame of his Learning ſoon made a great noiſe there, ſo that the Univerſity of Oxford offered him a Profeſſorſhip of Hebrew. He did not accept it; for the Phyſicians adviſed him to return to his native country. The Magiſtrates of Aberdeen expreſſed a particular eſteem for him. He recovered his health, and accepted the cure of Alford in the Dioceſe of Aberdeen. He ſtaid not long in that pariſh; his great learning, learning, eloquence, and piety required a more ſpacious theatre. They invited him to be Preacher in his native city; he accepted that employment, and diſcharged it as a true Miniſter of the Goſpel ought to do. He was admitted Doctor of Divinity when King James, among other regulations, had ſettled it with the Deputies of the Clergy (a), that the academical degrees and dignities ſhould be reſtored to their ancient courſe. As the duties of the Miniſtry, and of preaching, impaired his health, they gave him a leſs painful employment, making him Principal of Marſhal College. He read three Lectures every week, as the Statutes required, and was afterwards declared Dean of the Faculty of Divinity, and then Rector of the Univerſity; a poſt immediately under that of Chancellor. The city of Edinburgh invited him to be Paſtor there; he returned his humble thanks for this mark of eſteem, but was at length obliged to accept the charge, by order of the ſupream Council and the provincial Synod. He was received at Edinburgh with all poſſible tokens of friendſhip, but people's diſpoſitions being changed [A], he withdrew from that flock, and returned to his own country, where he was paſſionately wiſhed for. He was ſent for ſome years after by King Charles I, who had cauſed himſelf to be crowned at Edinburgh with extraordinary pomp, in 1633. He preached before that Monarch with ſo much eloquence and learning that he won the admiration of the whole audience. That Prince having founded an Epiſcopal Church at Edinburgh, met with none more worthy to fill the new See than our Forbes: he was conſecrated with the uſual ceremonies, and applied himſelf wholly to the functions of his dignity; but he fell ſick ſoon after, and died the 1ſt of April 1634, having enjoyed the Biſhopric but three months. He was forty nine years old (b). He had publiſhed nothing, and had compoſed very little. He wrote a Treatiſe tending to pacify Controverſies [B], which was printed in 1658, and reprinted at Helmſtad in 1704 (c). We ſhall ſee below what the Biſhop of Saliſbury has ſaid of this Prelate's merit [C]. Monſieur le Fevre, Doctor of the Sorbonne, made a bad choice of his teſtimonies, when he cited the opinions of William

(a) He held an Eccleſiaſtical Aſſembly at St. Andrew's in Scotland, to conſider of the affairs of the Church of that Kingdom.

(b) Extracted from his Life, prefixed to the Book which I ſhall give the Title of in the Remark [B].

(c) See the 5th Volume of the Bibliotheque Choiſie, pag. 396, &c.

[A] People's diſpoſitions being changed.] The diverſity of opinions concerning Epiſcopacy was the cauſe of this alteration. The Paſtor taught that Biſhops are above Prieſts: the people did not believe this Epiſcopal Primacy; but were warmly attached to the Diſcipline of Geneva, and extremely zealous for the equality of miniſters. Forbes, in his Sermons, modeſtly and ſolidly maintained that the Primacy of Biſhops was not a human inſtitution, but is founded on the Word of God, the practice of the Apoſtles, and the cuſtom of the primitive Church. His Auditors rejected this doctrine, and defamed him, and accuſed their Preacher of Popery (1). When he ſaw his labours were of no uſe to his flock, and but ſeed ſown on barren ground, he reſolved to reſign his charge, and the rather becauſe his lean and emaciated body could very ill bear the ſmoke of Edinburgh, and he ran great danger on that account (2). I here act the part of a Tranſlator only, that is, I do not interpoſe my own judgment in the diſpute between the Epiſcoparians and the Preſbyterians.

(1) Forbeſii ſanam doctrinam de Epiſcoporum primatu, multis convitiis inceſſere, ipſumque Pontificiæ profeſſionis reum inſimulare non verebantur. Elench. Vitæ Gul. Forbeſij.

(2) Ibid.

[B] He compoſed very little. He wrote a Tract tending to pacify Controverſies.] The title of the Book is, Conſiderationes modeſtæ & pacificæ controverſiarum de juſtificatione, purgatorio, invocatione Sanctorum, & Chriſto mediatore, Euchariſtia (3). The Reader will be pleaſed to find here the judgment which the Author of his Life has given of it. Opus hoc poſthumum, quod jam in lucem prodit, eſt pacati ingenii & moderati animi ingens ſpecimen & indicium: in quo tanquam alter Caſſander & Catholicus moderator, rigidas & auſteras, utriuſque tam Reformatæ quam Pontificiæ partis, opiniones in quibuſdam Religionis controverſiis, componere, ſaltem mitigare ſatagit. Quanti moderationem fecerit oſtendens dicto illo frequenter ab ipſo uſurpato: Si plures fuiſſent Caſſandri & Wicelii, non opus fuiſſet Luthero aut Calvino (4). i. e. "This poſthumous Work, which "now appears in public, is a ſignal ſpecimen and "proof of a pacific temper, and a moderate mind; "wherein, like a ſecond Caſſander and Catholic Moderator he endeavours to compoſe, or at leaſt to mitigate, the rigid and auſtere opinions, in certain "points of Religious Controverſy, both of the Reformed, and of the Popiſh Party. How greatly he "regarded moderation appears from that uſual ſaying "of his: If there had been more Caſſander's and "Wicelius's, there would have been no occaſion for a "Luther or a Calvin." Theſe laſt words are not very pleaſing to zealous and hot men: they are a tacit cenſure of Luther and Calvin; they ſeem to blame them for having carried a thouſand things too far, which moderate men, ſuch as Caſſander and Wicelius, would have tolerated for the ſake of peace. Obſerve, that he had filled all the margins of the 4 Volumes of Bellarmine with notes, which appeared ſo excellent to Robert Baron, Profeſſor of Divinity in the room of William Forbes, that he preferred them to all the Writings which had appeared againſt that Jeſuit. He would have publiſhed them if death had not prevented him. The reſolution our Prelate had taken not to write much was a very good one, and as ſolid as the advice he gave to one who uſed a great deal of paper. Read more, ſaid he to him, and write leſs. Pauca ſcripſit, ſcire enim maluit quam ſcribere, & hoc dicterium ſcripturienti cuidam, & ei magnos labores oſtentanti, lepide ſed ſolide uſurpavit; Lege plura, & ſcribe pauciora (5). The number of excellent Writers would not be ſo ſmall as it is, if they, who at length acquire the talent of writing well, would reſolve to publiſh but once in four years; whereas they abuſe the facility of writing they have obtained, and their reputation; they heap Volume on Volume, without taking the trouble to reviſe and poliſh, and no longer produce any thing of value, or which comes near the merit of their firſt performances. In fine, I believe, that if the man, who wrote ſo much, had ſome time after come and told William Forbes, I have followed your advice, I have read much, ſuch and ſuch a number of Books, he would have given him this farther counſel. For the future read leſs, and meditate more. I have heard that Mr. Claude adviſed a learned perſon who had been a prodigious Reader, to be three or four years without reading, and to do nothing but meditate: as if he had ſaid, You have eaten enough, now digeſt. Thoſe who are called helluones librorum have need of this advice.

(3) It is in Octavo, and contains 466 pages. It was printed at London.

(5) Ibid.

[C] We ſhall ſee below what the Biſhop of Saliſbury has ſaid of this Prelate's merit.] "William Forbes "was alſo one of the Doctors of Aberdeen (*): while "King Charles was in Scotland, he was promoted to "the Biſhopric of Edinburgh, which that Prince had "then founded, and this gave him occaſion to ſay "that he had met with ſo excellent a Clergyman, "that he deſerved to have a new Epiſcopal See erected "for him; and indeed he was a great and ſublime "Divine. ... He preached with ſo much zeal and "ardour, that frequently forgetting the meaſure of "time, he continued his Sermons for two or three "hours: this toil greatly diminiſhed his ſtrength, together with his faſting and aſcetic way of life, "which he carried to ſuch a height that he took no "more nouriſhment than was juſt ſufficient to retard "his death, which happened one year after his promotion to a Biſhopric. He enjoyed this dignity "long

(*) In 1633.

(4) Elench. Vitæ Gul. Forbeſij, pag. penult.

liam Forbes to prove that the Calviniſts do not ſtand to the Deciſions of the Synod of Dort. Mr. Arnauld knew how to make the beſt of his advantages on that occaſion [D].

" long enough to exhibit the virtues of an excellent " Miniſter in his perſon, but too little a while to " perform what might have been expected from a " longer life. The few Books he publiſhed are a " ſufficient proof of his great and extenſive learning, " though his ardent deſire after peace and unity among " Chriſtians, made him too favourable to a great " many corruptions in the Church of Rome. Thus " an unlimited charity engages great men to enter- " tain imprudent opinions; but when the principle or " motive they act by is truly good, they ought to " be excuſed, or at leaſt cenſured with modera- " tion (6)."

(6) Burnet, Preface to the Life of William Bedell.

[D] Mr. Arnauld knew how to make the beſt of his advantages on that occaſion.] He had maintained in his great Book of the Overthrow of Morality, that the inamiſſibility of grace was an article of faith among the Calviniſts, determined by the Synod of Dort. Mr. le Fevre oppoſed this aſſertion, and endeavoured to prove that the Calviniſts were at liberty to believe what they pleaſed on that head. He quoted ſeveral Proteſtant Writers who did not hold the inamiſſibility of grace, and particularly William Forbes. Let us ſee what reply Mr. Arnauld made to this (7): The title only of William Forbes's Book ought to have convinced Mr. le Fevre that he was by no means a proper perſon to be quoted againſt me. For he was the moſt moderate and the moſt equitable of all thoſe pacific Epiſcoparians, who wiſhing the Proteſtants and Catholics could have reunited, made no difficulty of declaring for the Catholics againſt the Calviniſts, when they thought the Calviniſts in the wrong, as this Writer believed they were in many of the points of controverſy which he has handled. Wherefore it is ſaid in the Abridgment of his Life prefixed to his Book, that he was a ſecond Caſſander.... His friends durſt not publiſh his Book till 1658, twenty years after his death: and yet, long before it appeared, he was ſo cried down among the Calviniſts, as maintaining againſt them the Arminian doctrine of the amiſſibility of grace, becauſe perhaps he could not forbear ſpeaking of it in his Sermons, that when the Preſbyterians undertook to ruin Epiſcopacy, being ſupported by the Parliament rebels, one of the reproaches they made to the unfortunate Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was that he fomented Arminianiſm; and the proof they alledged for it was, that he had perſuaded the King to nominate to the Biſhoprics in Scotland men who had ſcarce any thing to diſtinguiſh them, but their being known to be zealous Arminians, ſuch, ſaid they, as was Forbes, advanced by that King to the Biſhopric of Edinburgh. This very liberty which he took to diſapprove of the opinions of Geneva had brought him into ſo ill repute with the partiſans of Calvin, that having been called to Edinburgh to be Paſtor there, before it was erected into a Biſhopric, the Puritans, who were the ſtrongeſt party there, could not bear him, and loaded him with abuſes, calling him Papiſt. This, and the other particulars ſet forth by Mr. Arnaud, ſo evidently ſhew that the private opinion of our Forbes concerning the inamiſſibility of grace cannot be alledged as a proof that the Calviniſts are at liberty to reject that doctrine, that it is unneceſſary to enquire what Mr. le Fevre replied: for we may eaſily conceive his reply could not be worth any thing. It is really ſo bad (8) that I will not ſet it down.

(7) Arnauld, Calviniſme convaincu de nouveau, pag. 120.

(8) See the 17th Chapter of his Reply to Mr. Arnauld.

☞FORTESCUE [A] (Sir JOHN), Lord Chief Juſtice and Lord High Chancellor of England in the reign of King Henry VI, was deſcended from an ancient family in Devonſhire [B], and third ſon of Henry Forteſcue, Lord Chief Juſtice of Ireland [C]. He ſtudied the Municipal Laws of England in Lincoln's-Inn (a), of which he was made one of the Governors in the fourth and ſeventh years of King Henry VI's reign (b). In 1430, in the eighth year of that King, he was called to the degree of Serjeant at Law [D]; and in 1441, in the 19th year of the ſame reign, he was conſtituted the King's Serjeant (c). The year following he was advanced to the dignity of Lord Chief Juſtice of England (d), in which honourable ſtation he continued to near the end of that King's reign, who ſhewed him many particular marks of his favour [E], and advanced

(a) Dugdale's Origines Juridicales, pag. 268. Sir John Forteſcue-Aland's Preface, pag. xl. to The Difference between an abſolute and limited Monarchy, &c. By Sir John Forteſcue Knt. Lord High Chancellor of England, 2d edit. London 1719, in 8vo.

(b) Dugdale, ubi ſupra, pag. 257.

(c) Idem, Chronica Series, pag. 61 and 63.

(d) Idem, ibid. pag. 62.

[A] Forteſcue.] Bale calls him (1) Foſkewe and Forteſkewe, and Pits (2) tells us, that ſome called him Foſkew.

(1) Scriptorum illuſtr. Majorr. Brytanniæ Catalog. Cent. 8. cap. 36. pag. 613.

(2) De illuſtrib. Angliæ Scriptor. ad ann. 1460. pag. 649.

[B] Deſcended from an ancient Family in Devonſhire.] Mr. Prince (3) gives us the following pedigree of this family from Sir William Pole, who collected it out of the Herald's Office. William Forteſcue of Wimpſton, ſeventh in deſcent from the firſt Poſſeſſor, by Elizabeth, ſiſter and coheir of Thomas Beauchamp of Ryme, had iſſue William and Sir John Forteſcue, Captain of Meaux in France. William, by Mabilia daughter and heir of John Falwel, had iſſue John; who by Joan daughter and heir of John Pruteſton de Pruteſton in the Pariſh of Newton-Ferrers, had three ſons; John of Wimpſton, William of Pruteſton (now Preſton), and John of Spridelſton, commonly called Spurleſton. Sir John Forteſcue, ſecond ſon of William Captain of Meaux, by the daughter and heir of Norreis of Norreis, had iſſue three ſons; Henry, who by his firſt wife had iſſue Forteſcue of Wood, whoſe iſſue-male failing, his daughter and heir was married unto Forteſcue of Preſton. By his ſecond wife, only daughter and heir of Fallapit of Fallapit in Eaſt-Allwington, he had iſſue Richard Forteſcue, whoſe heir-male failing in the third deſcent, his daughter Elizabeth was married unto Lewis, the third ſon of Forteſcue of Spridelſton, who hath continued the name there to this day. The ſecond ſon of Sir John Forteſcue of Norreis was Sir John Forteſcue, the Lord Chancellor (4). His third ſon was Richard, from whom iſſued the ſeveral families of this name in the Eaſt parts of England, as at Poleſborn in Hertfordſhire, Fulborn in Eſſex, Souldon in Bucks, &c. all which ſprung originally from Wimpſton abovementioned.

(3) In his Worthies of Devon, pag. 304.

(4) See note [C].

[C] Third ſon of Henry Forteſcue, Lord Chief Juſtice of Ireland.] This is affirmed by Sir John Forteſcue-Aland (5), who tells us, that this " Henry Forteſcue " was ſon and heir to Sir John Forteſcue Knt. Captain " of Meaux Caſtle, and Governor of the Province of " Brie in France, under King Henry V; which Sir " John was ſecond ſon of William Forteſcue of Wime- " ſton in the County of Devon Eſq; whoſe lineal An- " ceſtor, Sir Richard Forteſcue Knt. the Heralds ſay, " came into England with William the Conqueror." But Mr. Prince (6) tells us, that Sir John Forteſcue, the Lord Chief Juſtice and Lord High Chancellor, was ſecond ſon of Sir John Forteſcue Knt. Captain of Meaux in France, by his wife, who was daughter and heir of Norreis of Norreis; who was ſecond ſon of William Forteſcue of Wimſton, antiently Wimondeſton, in the Pariſh of Modbiry, the moſt antient ſeat of this honourable name and family in this County or the Kingdom; in whoſe poſſeſſion it remained from the days of John King of England to the reign of Queen Elizabeth, about four hundred years; ſo runs the ancient Deed; Rex Johannes per Litteras ſuas patentes datas anno 10 Regni ſui conceſſit Johanni Forteſcue Wymondeſton in Com. Devon. &c.

(5) In his Preface, pag. xl. to The difference between an Abſolute and Limited Monarchy, written by Sir John Forteſcue Knt. Lord Chief Juſtice and Lord High Chancellor of England, 2d edit. London 1719.

(6) Ubi ſupra.

[D] In 1430, in the eighth year of that King, he was called to the Degree of Serjeant at Law.] This we are informed of by Sir William Dugdale (7); and by Sir John Forteſcue-Aland (8), who obſerves, that he was made a Serjeant in Michaelmas Term in that year.

(7) Chronica Series, pag. 61.

(8) Preface, pag. xxxviii.

[E] Shewed him many particular marks of his favour.] Beſides the uſual ſalary of a Chief Juſtice, Sir John had granted to him an augmentation of it two ſeveral times by two ſeveral Annuities; one of which was an advanced him to the poſt of Lord High Chancellor of England. This dignity of his is not found recorded in the Patent Rolls, (upon which account it is omitted by Sir William Dugdale in his Chronica Series; (the occaſion of which is thus aſſigned by Mr. Selden (e), "that being with King Henry VI driven into Scotland by the fortune of the "wars with the Houſe of York, he was made Chancellor of England while he was "there." And Sir John Forteſcue in his book de Laudibus Legum Angliæ ſtyles himſelf Cancellarius Angliæ. Bale (f) likewiſe calls him Anglici regni Cancellarius ſummus; and Pits (g) gives him the title of Summus Angliæ Cancellarius. Mr. Whitlock likewiſe in his Diſcourſe of the Antiquity, Uſe, Privilege, and places of Students and Profeſſors of the Common Laws of England (h) ſtyles him Chancellor of England. But Mr. Thynne in his Treatiſe of the Antiquity of the Houſes of Law (i) obſerves, "that he was only "Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench, and not Chancellor of England, as he is untruly "called by Molcaſter in tranſlating his book of the Laws of England, ſince he was only "Chancellor to the young Prince Edward and his mother, after he fled with them "into France." He wrote ſeveral works [F]. Bale tells us (k), that he was baniſhed out of England; which in all probability might be grounded upon his flight with his unfortunate

(e) Epiſtle to the Reader, prefixed to his Notes on Forteſcue de Laud. b. Legum Angliæ.

(f) Scriptor. illuſtr. Major. Brytann. Catalog. Cent. 8. cap. 36. pag. 613. edit. Baſil. 1557, in fol.

(g) De illuſtrib. Angliæ Scriptor. ad ann. 1460, pag. 650.

(h) Publiſhed by Mr. Tho. Hearne in his Collection of curious Diſcourſes written by eminent Antiquaries upon ſeveral Heads in our Engliſh Antiquities, pag. 130. edit. Oxon. 1720 in 8vo.

(i) Printed in the ſame Collection, pag. 112.

(k) Ubi ſupra. His words are, Tandem exul fuit ab Angliâ. Pits alſo writes thus. Ferunt tamen eum, ſurentibus tum in Angliâ bellis Civilibus, exilio multtatum.

(9) Selden, in his Epiſtle to the Reader, prefixed to his Notes on Forteſcue de Laud. Legum Angliæ; and Prince, pag. 305. and Sir John Forteſcue-Aland, pag. xxxix. xl.

(10) Ubi ſupra.

(11) Dugdale, Chronica Series, pag. 64.

(12) Bale, ubi ſupra, and Pits, ubi ſupra.

(13) Bale and Pits.

(14) See Catalog. Librorum Manuſcriptorum Angliæ & Hiberniæ, tom. 2. pag. 213. Num. 6884. ed. Oxon. 1697.

(15) Dugdale, Origin. Juridical. pag. 58.

(16) Idem, ibid.

(17) Smith, Catalog. Libror. Manuſcript. Bibliotb. Cottonianæ, p. 98. Vitell. E. Num. x.

(18) Dugdale, Orig. Juridical. pag. 268. and Prince, pag. 306.

(19) Engliſh Hiſtorical Library, Part 3. pag. 164, 165, 166. edit. London 1699, in 8vo.

† Inſtit. Part 2. cap. 99. pag. 208. ubi etiam citantur Rott. Parl. 28. Hen. VI. num. 19. uſq; ad num. 47.

* See Sir William Temple's Introduction to Eng. Hiſt. pag. 312, 313.

an Annuity of 180 Marks out of the hamper, (a great ſum in thoſe days,) that he might Statum ſuum decentius manutenere, as the Record expreſſes it; and with that was granted the ſum of 116 s. 11 d. ½ percipiendum ſingulis annis ad Feſtum Natalis Domini pro unâ Roba & Furrura pro eadem erga idem Feſtum; & 66 s. 6. d. ſingulis annis ad Feſtum Pentecoſtes pro una Roba & Linura pro eadem erga idem Feſtum (9); the like favour, as Mr. Selden obſerves (10), having never been granted to any Judge before. And in the 25th year of Henry VI, he was ordered to receive forty pounds a year more beyond what had been formerly granted him by any other Letters Patent: Johannes Forteſcue Mil. Cap. Juſt. habeat XL Libras per ann. ei conceſſas ultra omne id quod per aliquas Literas Patentes antehac ei conceſſum eſt. T. R. apud Weſtm. 22 Mar. 25. H. VI (11).

[F] He wrote ſeveral works.] They are as follow: I. De Diſcrimine Legum, in one Book (12). II. De Vigore Legis Naturalis, in one Book (13). This is probably the ſame with a manuſcript formerly in the Library of Henry Worſeley of Lincoln's-Inn Eſq; (14), intitled, Tractatus de Naturâ Legis Naturæ per D. Joannem Forteſcue. It is extant likewiſe in a manuſcript in the Bodleian Library, among the manuſcripts of Archbiſhop Laud N°. 1120. intitled, Opuſculum de Naturâ Legis Naturæ, & de ejus Cenſurâ in ſucceſſione Regnorum ſupremorum per Joannem Forteſcue. III. De Legibus & Conſuetudinibus Angliæ, in one Book (15). IV. Abridgment of the Book of Aſſizes, in one Book (16). V. A Dialogue between the Underſtanding and Faith, written by him in the time of Henry VI, in which he ſhews, Quibus modis & rationibus Deus ſæpè caſtigat & punit Reges per eos, qui magis contra illum deliquerunt (17). VI. De Laudibus Legum Angliæ, in one Book. This Book is ſaid to have been written in France, when Sir John attended upon Edward Prince of Wales, eldeſt ſon of King Henry VI, for the direction of whoſe ſtudies it was compoſed (18). But Archdeacon Nicholſon tells us (19), that "it is reaſonably † believed, that it "had a more early original. William de la Pole "Duke of Suffolk (Henry the Sixth's great favourite "and flatterer) endeavoured to bring in the uſe of the "Civil Law; which obliged the Chief Juſtice to write "in commendation of our own Laws, preferring them "(for the Government of this Land) before others. In "this Treatiſe, which is managed by way of dialogue "betwixt the Prince and himſelf, he proves that all "Kings are under the like obligation to be converſant "in the Laws of their own Realms, as thoſe of Iſrael "were to be in the Book of Deuteronomy. That our "laws are not alterable at the ſole will of our Monarchs, "whoſe power is not abſolute and royal, but legal and "political. That our cuſtomary and common Law is "the moſt reaſonable, as well as moſt * antient in Europe. That our Statutes, enacted by the advice and "conſent of above three hundred Senators, are not "alterable but by the ſame authority, that gives them "their being. That our conviction of criminals by "Juries, and without racking, is more juſt and humane than the methods of ſome neighbouring Nations; our challenging of Pannels, Writs of Attaint "upon corrupt Verdicts, and the uſual wealth of our "jurors, ſuch ſecurities to the lives and eſtates of ſubjects "as other Countries are incapable of affording. Our "Kings greater and more potent in the liberties and "properties of their people, than arbitrary Tyrants "in the vaſſalage of their ſlaves; the Civil Law more "unreaſonable than ours in the legitimation of children born before wedlock; as alſo in its axiom of "Partus ſequitur Ventrem, Tuition of Orphans, &c. "Our Inns of Court more convenient for the ſtudy of "the Engliſh Law than our Univerſities; and their "Serjeant's Degree as honourable as that of Doctor "in theſe. And laſtly, that the Proceedings in our "Courts of Judicature are leſs dilatory than in thoſe of "other Nations." This Book was firſt tranſlated and publiſhed, together with an Engliſh Verſion, by Mr. Rich. Mulcaſter, and printed at London 1599 in 8vo; being reviſed afterwards and illuſtrated with notes by Mr. Selden, and printed at London 1616 in 8vo. This Edition being out of print, the Company of Stationers gave leave to one of their Body to reprint it; which he did in a very careleſs manner at London 1660 in 12mo. The literal faults, eſpecially in the Latin Text, are very numerous; and ſome of them ſuch as extremely pervert the Author's ſenſe. As this Book is written in a very conciſe method, Mr. Edward Waterhouſe wrote a Commentary upon it; which was publiſhed at London 1663 in fol. under the title of Forteſcutus illuſtratus. VII. De Politicâ Adminiſtratione; ſive de Dominio Regali & Dominio Regali-Politico. This Book was publiſhed by Sir John Forteſcue-Aland, and the ſecond Edition was printed at London 1719 in 8vo under the following title; The Difference between an Abſolute and Limited Monarchy, as it more particularly regards the Engliſh Conſtitution. Being a Treatiſe written by Sir John Forteſcue, Knt. Lord Chief Juſtice and Lord High Chancellor of England, under King Henry VI. Faithfully tranſcribed from the manuſcript copy in the Bodleian Library, and collated with three other manuſcripts. Publiſhed with ſome Remarks by Sir John Forteſcue-Aland, Knt. one of the Juſtices of his Majeſty's Court of King's-Bench. The ſecond Edition with Amendments, and a compleat Index to the whole work. It is dedicated by the Editor to Sir Thomas Parker, Knt. Lord Chief Juſtice of England. The firſt copy of this Treatiſe, which Sir John Forteſcue-Aland ſaw, was that among the manuſcripts of Mr. Selden in the Bodleian Library, which he procured a tranſcript of, and carefully examined, and collated with three other manuſcript copies, two of which he found in the ſame Library amongſt the manuſcripts of Archbiſhop Laud and Sir Kenelm Digby, and the third in the COTTON Library. That among Sir Kenelm Digby's manuſcripts is the faireſt, and moſt perfect of them all, and was tranſcribed by Sir Adrian Forteſcue's own hand, who was a deſcendant from our Author, and lived in the reign of King Henry VIII, as appears from theſe words written upon this manuſcript; Iſte Liber pertinet Adriano Forteſcue militi manu propriâ ſcriptus, anno Domini 1532, & anno Regis H. VIII. 24. But Archbiſhop Laud's copy ſeems to be the moſt antient, ſince we find in it ſeveral Saxon characters in ſeveral places, and by ſome very old words different from thoſe in the laſt mentioned copy. But all the various readings, which are material for the curious Antiquary, Sir John Forteſcue-Aland has noted in the margin of his Book.

As

unfortunate maſter King Henry, when upon the ſucceſs of the Houſe of York he retired into Scotland (l). The time of his death is not mentioned; but it very probably happened at Eberton (m), or Ebrighton (n) near Camden in Glouceſterſhire, where he had purchaſed an eſtate of three hundred pounds per ann. which has continued in the family ever ſince, and is now enjoyed by Hugh Forteſcue of Filleigh in the County of Devon Eſq; as his heir at law, and lineally deſcended from him (o). He now lies buried in the pariſh

(l) Prince's Worthies of Devon, pag. 306.

(m) Idem, ibid.

(n) Sir John Forteſcue-Aland's Preface, pag. xl.

(o) Idem, ibid.

As to the language, it is the Engliſh of thoſe times, participating very much of the nature of the Saxon Tongue; for it has in it many words and terminations of words, as alſo many phraſes, purely Saxon. Sir John Forteſcue-Aland choſe to publiſh it in its own native dreſs, not only as it is a curious piece of antiquity, but that every man may be judge for himſelf of the true ſenſe and meaning of the Author, and lay no imputation on the Publiſher of altering the ſenſe in attempting to give it a more modern dreſs. The antiquity of this piece, ſays the Editor (20), is a great addition to its value and worth; for we have the happineſs to live in a Kingdom, where our Laws are not ſpun out of men's brains, pro re natâ, but are conſidered, debated, tried, and practiſed; and if after long uſe and experience they are found good and ſerviceable to the Kingdom, they are delivered down to poſterity: and when they have been thus in uſe, and practiſed time out of mind, then they commence, and are eſteemed part of the Common Law of the Kingdom. For though all the Lawyers and Stateſmen now living ſhould agree in the ſame ſentiments with our Author, it woula not have the ſame authority; for it is nothing but length of time, time immemorial, can make any thing part of our conſtitution. It cannot be doubted, that Sir John Forteſcue was the Author of this piece, this manuſcript being taken notice of by Mr. Selden and ſeveral other Antiquaries, and being ſo long preſerved in the family; beſides that there are ſeveral copies of it extant in ſeveral hands, and allowed by all learned men to be genuine. Sir John Forteſcue-Aland obſerves (21), that he having been ſomething acquainted with the Saxon tongue, and finding in the ſtyle of our Author ſo much of the Saxon phraſe and idiom, and indeed ſo many words entirely Saxon, he could not forbear making ſome remarks on the language, which he the rather did, to reſcue our Author from the ignorance of ſome, and malice of others, who are apt to take many of theſe old idioms for the miſtakes of the Author, or pretend to object to them as ſuch. " And it will not, ſays he, " perhaps be diſagreeable to the Engliſh Reader, to " have the obſcurities cleared up to him, and at the " ſame time to obſerve the great affinity between our " language and the Saxon, and to be thereby put into " a way to trace the original of the Engliſh tongue." In the firſt Chapter he diſcourſes of the difference between Dominium Regale and Dominium Politicum & Regale, and tells us, that a King poſſeſſed of the firſt may rule his people by ſuch laws as he makyth hymſelf, and therefor he may ſet upon them Talys and other impoſitions, ſuch as he wyl hymſelf without their aſſent. But that the ſecund may not rule his people by other Lawys than ſuch as they aſſenten unto; and therfor he may ſet upon them non impoſitions without their own aſſent. In the ſecond Chapter Sir John Forteſcue treats of the reaſon " why one King reyn- " ith Regaliter tantum, and another reynith Politicè " & Regaliter;" and obſerves, that it was becauſe one Kyngedome beganne of and by the might of the Prince, and that other beganne by the deſier and inſtitution of the people of the ſame Prince. In the third Chapter he ſhews the fruits of Jus Regale and of Jus Politicum & Regale, and remarks, that " hou ſo be it, that " the French Kyng reynith upon his people Dominio " Regali; yet Saynt Lewes ſumtyme Kyng ther, ne " any of his Progenytors ſet never Talys or other Im- " poſitions upon the people of that Lond, without the " aſſent of the three Aſtatts, which whan thay be aſ- " ſemblid ar like to the Court of Parlement in Eng- " glond. And this order kept many of his ſucceſſours " until late days, that Engliſhmen made ſuch a war " in Fraunce, that the three Eſtats durſt not come to " geders. And than for that cauſe and for grete ne- " ceſſite which the French Kyng had of goods for " the defence of that Lond, he took upon him to ſet " Talys and other Impoſitions upon the Commons, " without the aſſent of the three Eſtats; but yet he " would not ſet any ſuch chargs, nor hath ſet upon the " Nobles, for feare of rebellion. And becauſe the " Commons, though they have grutchid, have not re- " bellid or be hardy to rebell, the French Kyngs " have yearly ſythen for ſuch chargs upon them, and " ſo augmented the ſame chargis, as the ſame Com- " mons be ſo impoveriſhid and deſtroyyd, that they † " may unneth lyve..... Verely thay lyvyn in the " moſt extreme povertie and myſerye, and yet thay " dwellyn in one the moſt fertile realme of the world; " wher thrugh the French Kyng hath not men of his " own realme able to defend it, except his Nobles, " which beryn non ſuch impoſitions; and therfor thay " ar right likely of their bodys; by which cauſe the " ſaid Kyng is compellid to make his armys and re- " tennys, for the defence of his Lond, of Straungars, " as Scotts, Spaniards, Arragonars, men of Almayn, " and other nacions, els al his ennymys might over- " renne him. For he hath no diffence of his own, " except his caſtells and fortrais. Loo this the frute " of his Jus Regale!" Yf the realme of Englond, which is an Ile, and therefor may not lightly get ſecoures of other Londes, were ruled under ſuch a Lawe, and under ſuch a Prince, it would be than a pray to all other nacions that would conquere, robbe, and devouer yt; which was well prouvyd in the tyme of the Brytons, when the Scotts and the Pictes ſo bette and oppreſſyd this Lond, that the people thereof ſoughte helpe of the Romayns, to whom they had byn trybutorye. And whan thay could not be defendyd by them, they ſought helpe of the Duke of Brytayne, than callid Litil Brytayne, and grantyd therfor to make his brother Conſtantine their King. And ſo he was made Kyng heere, and raynyd many yers, and his children after hym, off which grete Arthur was one of their yſſue. But bleſſid be God this Lond ys ruled under a better Lawe, and therfor the people therof be not in ſueh penurye, nor therby hurt in their perſons, but thay be wealthye and have al thyngs neceſſarye to the ſuſtenaunce of nature. Wherfore thay be mighty and able to reſyſte the adverſariis of the realme, and to bett other realmes, that do or will do them wrong. Loo this is the frute of Jus Politicum & Regale, under which we lyve. In the twelth Chapter he ſhews what harme would come to Englond, if the Commons thereof were pore; and obſerves, that " ſome men have ſaid, that it war good for the Kyng, " that the Comons of Englond wer made poer, as be " the Comons of Fraunce. For than they would not " rebell as now thay done oftentymes; which the " Comons of Fraunce do not nor may do; for thay " have no wepon, nor armor nor good to bye it " withall. To thees maner of men may be ſaid " with the Philoſopher, Ad parva reſpicientes de fa- " cili enunciant, that is to ſay, thay that ſeen fewe " things, woll ſone ſay their advyſe. Forſothe thoos " folkys conſyderyn litil the good of the realme of " Englond, whereof the might moſt ſtandyth upon " archers, which be no rich men. And if thay were " made porer than thay be, they ſchuld not have " wherewith to bye them bowys, arrowes, jakkes, " or any other armour of defence, whereby thay " might be able to reſyſte our ennymyes, whan thay " liſte to come upon us, which thay may do on every " ſyde, conſydering that we be an Ileland, and as it " ſaid before, we may not have ſone ſocors off any " other realme." In the thirteenth Chapter he endeavours to prove, that onely lacke of harte and cowardiſe kepyn the Frenchmen from ryſing; and tells us, that povertie onely is not the cauſe, why the Comons of Fraunce riſe not ageyn their Soveryng Lord; for there were never people in that Lond more pore then wer in our tyme the Comons of the cuntry of Caux (22), which was almoſt deſerte for lack of tyllars, as yt now wel apperith by the new huſbondrye that is done ther; namely in grobbyng and ſtockyng of trees, buſhes, and grovys growyn, while we were ther Lords of the countrey. And yet the foreſaid Comons of Caux made a marvelous grete ryſing, and took our townys, caſtells, and fortreſſes, and ſclewe our Captayns and ſoldiers at ſuch a time, when † i. e. can ſcarce live.

(21) Preface, pag. xli.

(20) Preface, pag. xxxvii, xxxviii.

(22) A Province in Normandy, of which Diep is the chief town.

pariſh Church of Ebrighton, where there is an antient monument erected to his memory [G]. He lived to a great age, being ſuppoſed to be near ninety years old when he died (p). Mr. Prince informs us (q), that there is a tradition at Ebrighton, that he followed King Henry to the battle of Tewkſbury in Glouceſterſhire, not far from Ebrighton, where the King being defeated and taken priſoner in 1471, Sir John retired to his Houſe at Ebrighton, and died in diſcontent. Bale tells us, that he was a ſtrict follower of virtue in his youth as well as his more advanced age, a lover of polite learning, and one of the beſt Lawyers of his age; and that he diſcharged the great office, which he filled, with the utmoſt integrity, and applied all his intereſt with his Prince to the advantage of the commonwealth. And Sir John Forteſcue-Aland obſerves (r), that "all good men, "and lovers of the Engliſh conſtitution, ſpeak of him with honour; and he ſtill lives, "in the opinion of all true Engliſhmen, in as high eſteem and reputation as any Judge, "that ever ſate in Weſtminſter-Hall. He was a man acquainted with all ſorts of learning, beſides his knowledge in the Law, in which he was exceeded by none, as will "appear by the many learned judgments he gave when on the Bench, in the Year-book "of Henry VI. His character in Hiſtory is that of pious, loyal, and learned; and he "had the honour to be called the Chief Counſellor of the King. He was a great courtier, and yet a great lover of his country."

(p) Prince's Worthies of Devon, pag. 307.

(q) Ibid.

(r) Preface, pag. pag. xxxix.

we had but a fewe men of war lying in that countrey. Which provith that it is cowardiſe and lack of hartes and corage, that kepith the Frenchmen from ryſing, and not povertye; which corage no Frenche man hath like to the Engliſh man. "It hath ben often ſeen in Englond "that III^e or IV^er theſes, for povertie, hath ſett upon "VII or VIII true men; and robbyd them al. But "it hath not ben ſeen in Fraunce, that VII or VIII "theſes have ben hardy to rob III^e or IV^er true men; "wherfor it is right ſeld, that French men be hangyd "for robberye, for that they have no hertys to do ſo "terryble an acte. There be therfor mo men hangyd "in Englond in a yere for robberye and manſlaughter, "than ther be hangid in Fraunce for ſuch cauſe of "crime in VII yers. There is no man hangyd in "Scotland in VII yers together for robberye; and "yet thay be often tymes hangyd for lacenye and "ſtelyng of goods in the abſence of the owner therof. "But their harts ſerve them not to take a mannys "goods, while he is preſent and will defend it; which "manner of takyng is callid robberye. But the "Engliſch men be of another corage; for if he be "poer, and ſee another man havynge rycheſſe, which "may be takyn from him by might, he wol not "ſpare to do ſo, * but if that poer man be right "true. Wherfor it is not povertie, but it is lacke of "harte and cowardiſe, that kepyth the French men "from ryſyng."

* But if, i. e. except.

[G] Where there is an antient monument erected to his memory.] This monument is of freeſtone, with his proportion at full length lying thereon in his Judge's robes. On the ſides and end are the arms of Forteſcue. Over this monument is fixed a table of marble, at the charges of Robert Forteſcue of Wear and Filleigh Eſq; his direct heir (23), and uncle to Sir John Forteſcue-Aland, Knt. having this inſcription engraven upon it.

(23) See Prince, pag. 307. and Sir John Forteſcue-Aland's Preface, pag. xl.

In
Fælicem & immortalem memoriam
Clariſſimi Viri Domini.
JOHANNIS FORTESCUTI
Militis, Grandævi, Angliæ Judicis Primarii,
Et proceſſu temporis ſub Henr. VI Rege &
Edwardo Principe ſummi Cancellarii,
Regis Conſiliarii prudentiſſimi,
Legum Angliæ pertitiſſimi,
Necnon earundem
Hyperaſpiſtis
Fortiſſimi
Qui
Corporis Exuvias lætam Reſurrectionem expectantes
Hic depoſuit.

Marmoreum huc monumentum
Poſitum eſt A. D.
M.DCLXXVII.
Voto & Expenſis Roberti Forteſcuti
Armigeri, ejuſdem Familiæ Hæredis nuper defuncti.

Angligenas intra Cancellos Juris & Æqui
Qui tenuit, Cineres jam tenet Urna Viri.
Lex viva ille fuit Patriæ, Lux ſplendida Legis,
Forte bonis ſcutum, ſontibus & Scutica.
Clarus erat titulis, clarus Majoribus, Arte
Clarus, virtute aſt clarior emicuit.
Jam micat in tenebris, veluti Carbunculus Orbi,
Nam Virtus radios non dare tanta nequit.
Vivit adhuc Forteſcutus laudatus in Ævum;
Vivit & in Legum laudibus ille ſuis.

T

FOULQUES, or FULK Prior of Deuil in the twelfth Century, was Peter Abelard's good friend. I believe he is ſcarce known but by the conſolatory letter (a) he wrote to that friend, upon his being emaſculated. We have related elſewhere (b) the cruelty that was exerciſed on Abelard, who, inſtead of duly inſtructing the female ſcholar who was entruſted to his care, got her with child. The relations of the young woman in queſtion, to ſatiate more completely their vengeance, went to the very root of the evil, and removed it ſo fully, that it was impoſſible for the criminal ever to fall into the ſame guilt again. Foulques hearing that Abelard was inconſolable at his being caſtrated, wrote a letter to him, in which he diſplayed the many advantages that might be reaped from this misfortune. It was repreſented to him, that his great talents, the ſubtilty and penetration of his genius, his eloquence, and his erudition, which drew a numberleſs multitude of ſcholars to him [A] from all parts, had made him inſupportably vain. A tranſient mention is made

(a) It is in Abelard's Works, pag. 217. of the Paris edit. of 1616.

(b) In the Articles of Abelard and Heloiſe.

[A] Abelard's great talents, . . . drew a numberleſs multitude of Scholars to him.] He had ſome from Rome, Spain, England, Germany, the Low Countries, and the moſt remote Provinces of France. Our Foulques gives a lively picture of this, altho' his ſtyle is a little too much inflated like that of the barbarous Ages. Roma ſuos tibi docendos tranſmittebat alumnos, & quæ olim omnium artium ſcientiam auditoribus ſolebat infundere, ſapientiorem te ſe ſapiente tranſmiſſis ſcholaribus monſtrabat. Nulla terrarum ſpatia, nulla montium cacumina, nulla concava vallium, nulla via difficili licet obſita periculo & latrone, quominus ad te properarent, retinebat. Anglorum turbam juvenum mare interjacens, & undarum procella terribilis non terrebat, ſed omni periculo contempto, audito tuo nomine ad te confluebat. Remota Britannia ſua animalia erudienda deſtinabat. Andegavenſis eorum edomita feritate tibi famulabantur in ſuis. Pictavi, Waſcones & Hiberi: Normannia, Flandria, Theutonicus, made of another circumſtance that had not a little contributed to ſwell him with pride, viz. that the women uſed to run after him [B], and thought it an honour to catch him in their ſnares. Abelard was told that the loſs he had ſuſtained would cure him of that pride, free him from the traps the fair-ſex laid for him, and which reduced him to the extremes of poverty [C], though he got a great deal of money by his profeſſion. It was Theutonicus, & Suevius tuum colere ingenium, laudare & prædicare aſſiduè ſtudebat. Præterea cunctos Pariſiorum civitatem habitantes, & intra Galliarum proximas & remotiſſimas partes qui ſic à te doceri ſitiebant, ac ſi nihil diſciplinæ non apud te inveniri potuiſſet. i. e. "Rome ſent her ſons to be inſtructed by you, and ſhe "who antiently uſed to pour into the minds of her "pupils the knowledge of all arts, ſhewed, by tranſ-"mitting her Scholars to you, that your wiſdom is ſu-"periour to hers. No diſtance of country, no height "of mountains, no depth of valleys, no way, though "infeſted with robbers and other dangers have re-"ſtrained them from haſtening to you. The inter-"poſition of ſeas, and menaces of dreadful ſtorms, "could not intimidate the Engliſh youth, when they "had heard of your name, from flocking in crouds "to you. Remote Britany was reſolved to diſpel her "clouds of ignorance. Anjou, having conquered her "ſavage fierceneſs, learned obedience from you. Poi-"tou, Gaſcony and Spain; Normandy, Flanders and "Germany, acknowledged the greatneſs of your ge-"nius, and were for ever applauding it. All the Ci-"tizens of Paris, and the inhabitants in general of "France, were ſo eager to be inſtructed by you, that "one would have concluded, they imagined you had "engroſſed the whole round of ſcience." Foulques is not the only Writer who mentions this prodigious concourſe of pupils. There is a Writer of Chronicles (1), who declares, that they came to him from moſt parts, where Latin was underſtood; Petrus Abailardus Monachus & Abbas, vir erat religioſus, excellentiſſimarum Rector Scholarum, ad quas pene de tota Latinitate viri litterati confluebant. i. e. "Peter Abelard, a Friar "and Abbot, was a religious man, and a maſter of "moſt excellent Schools, to which learned men, "from moſt parts of the Latin World, flock'd in "crowds." It cannot be denied but that ſome came from Italy, ſince St. Bernard writes, that Peter Abelard was not under any manner of fear, becauſe of the many Protectors, (Cardinals and other Eccleſiaſtics who had been his pupils) which he imagined he had in the Pope's Court at Rome; Securus tamen eſt quoniam Cardinales & Clericos Curiæ ſe diſcipulos habuiſſe gloriatur (2). Cardinal Guy du Chatel, who was afterwards Pope Celeſtine II (3), was one of theſe patrons. If we conſult Abelard himſelf with regard to the number of his Scholars, he will inform us, that having retired into the country, he was followed thither by ſo great a concourſe of Scholars, that there were neither houſes nor proviſions enough for them; Ad quas (ſcholas) tanta ſcholarium multitudo confluxit, ut nec locus hoſpitiis, nec terra ſufficeret alimentis (4).

(1) Autor Chronici Moriniacenſis, apud And. du Cheſne, Not. in Hiſtor. Calamit. Abælardi, pag. 1155.

(2) Epiſt. 193.

(3) See the Epiſtle which St. Bernard writes to him, in Abelard's Works, pag. 299.

(4) Abelardi Opera, pag. 19.

[B] The women ran after him.] Here follow the words which are employed by Foulques, where the reader will obſerve that he ſpeaks only by hearſay. Nam illud quod ſic te, ut aiunt, præcipitem dedit, ſingularum ſcilicet fœminarum amorem & laqueos libidinis earum, quibus ſuos capiunt ſcortatores, melius mihi videor præterire quam aliquid dicere quod ordini noſtro & regulæ noſtræ religionis non concordet. i. e. "With regard "to that which (as common fame ſays) plunged you "into calamity, viz. a paſſion for women, and the "ſnares of luſt in which they catch thoſe lewd men "who frequent them; I think it will be more pru-"dent to paſs over thoſe particulars in ſilence, than "to mention any thing which may be repugnant to "our reader, and the rules of our Religion."

[C] The fair ſex . . . reduced him to the extremes of poverty.] Foulques, who had heard that Abelard was ſo very poor when this misfortune befel him, that he had nothing but tatters left, deſires him to conſider the great prejudice which the part of his body that had been cut off had done him; and how much he would ſave by loſing it. You uſed to ruin yourſelf, ſaid he, by your lewd commerce, and your whole ſubſtance was ſwallowed up by that deteſtable gulph. Hæc corporis particula quam omnipotentis Dei judicio & beneficio perdidiſti, quantum tibi nocuerat ac nocere quamdiu permanſit non deſiſtebat, melius tuarum diminutio rerum quam mea poſſit monſtrare oratio, docet. Quicquid verè ſcientiæ tuæ venditione perorando præter cotidianum victum & uſum neceſſarium, ſicut relatione didici, adquirere poteras, in voraginem fornicariæ conſumptionis demergere non ceſſabas. Avara meretricum rapacitas cuncta tibi rapuerat. Nulla audierunt ſecula meretricem vel alteri miſereri, vel peperciſſe rebus appetitorum quas quoquo modo auferre potuerunt. Videtur hoc probare tua profunda paupertas, qui nihil, ut dicitur, præter pannos ex tanto quæſtu habebas, cum his primum caſibus ſubjacuiſti fortunæ. . . . Adde quod pecunia tua, ſi quam tibi habere licuerit (non enim eſt Monachorum ſine licentia proprium quid habere) vexationi diſtrahentium non erit obnoxia. A modo incipies poſſidere quod multis paulo ante diſtrahebatur eviſcerationibus. There is no doubt but common fame had magnified things. I do not believe, that at the time of Abelard's calamity, he was reduced to the condition of the prodigal ſon, who, having ſpent his whole ſubſtance on lewd women (8), was dying with hunger (6). I confeſs that his comforter does not repreſent him as expreſly reduced to want a bit of bread; but exhibits him, in general, as reduced to tatters. It may even be objected to me, that it is more probable a lewd fellow ſhould ruin himſelf ſo far as not to have clothes to his back, than to be in want of a meal's meat; for the ſame leeches who ſuck all his money, are very glad he ſhould be in health. It is their intereſt that he eats heartily; whether he has clothes or not ſignifies very little to them, but it would be a loſs to them, had he not a good ſtock of health; and they would chooſe to ſupply him with food at their own expence, rather than let him ſtarve. But notwithſtanding this I believe that Foulques had heard, that Abelard was reduced to ſuch miſerable circumſtances, by his commerce with the ſair, that he was in want both of food and clothes: I do not believe that Foulques regarded thoſe ſubtil diſtinctions between ſuſtenance and clothes (7); but I am certain he gave too much credit to falſe ſtories; for tho' we were not to ſuppoſe, that Abelard's profeſſion, and his marriage with Heloiſe kept him in certain bounds; we can hardly perſuade ourſelves, that ſo handſome and eloquent a youth as he was, a youth who was ſo ſubtle a diſputant, had gained ſuch mighty renown, and was ſo eagerly ſought after by the women, ſhould have ſpent to his laſt farthing upon them. A witty man, and uſed to female wiles, who had been in his place, would perhaps have gained by this traffic. But this is a circumſtance Abelard was wanting in; he was ignorant of the artifices of the lewd part of the world, and was a ſtudious man; hence, tho' he had returned the fair ones as much love, at leaſt, as they brought him, he yet would not have had the art to increaſe his income by it. He was liable to be fleeced every way.

(5) Ὁ καταφαγὼν σε τὸν βίον μετὰ πορνῶν. i. e. "Who hath devoured his living with harlots." Luke xv. 30.

(6) Ἐγὼ δὲ λιμῷ ἀπόλλυμαι. i. e. "I periſh with hunger." Ibid. ver. 17.

(7) Theſe diſtinctions might do, ſuppoſing that a harlot could not get another ſpark; but Abelard was at Paris, where, when once a gallant's purſe is drained, he is abandoned, and others ſought for, who are able to ſupport a miſtreſs; and then the diet of the firſt ſpark is as little minded as his clothes.

I fancy that I may affirm, without being accuſed of forming a raſh judgment, that our Foulques was very little acquainted with the antient Poet Archilochus, and was but little verſed in Ælian: nevertheleſs, he has employed a thought which bears a reſemblance to an expreſſion in Archilochus cited by Ælian. Πολλάκις τὰ κατ' ὀδολὸν μετὰ πολλῶν πόνων συναχθέντα χρήματα, κατὰ τὸν Ἀρχίλοχον, εἰς πόρνης γυναικὸς ἕτερον καταίρουσιν (8). The Tranſlator has not exhibited the thought of the Greek Poet in its full light: the word ἕτερον ought to be taken, in that place, only for the purſe in a metaphorical ſenſe. The learned Kuhnius underſtood the meaning of it: κακέμφατον, ſays he (9), & ſenſus turpiculus ſubeſt voci ἕτερον. Ita Stoici τὴν συνεσίαν pro ſua εὐθυῤῥημοσύνῃ definiunt ἑτερίᾳ παράτριψιν &c. Nicetas Choniates applies this thought of Archilochus to the reign of Alexis Manuel Comnenus (10): Τὸ τῦ Ἀρχιλόχε ἄνλικρυς ἐπραίνετο, ὅ φησιν, εἰς ἕτερον πόρνης πολλάκις μιταῤῥυίσκειν τὰ χρόνῳ καὶ πόνῳ συλλεγέντα μακρῷ. Ut plane id fieret quod Archilochus ſcribit ea ſæpe in ſcorti pudenda confluere quæ longo labore & tempore ſint congeſta. i. e. "The aſſertion of Archilochus was "fully was affirmed that the privation of thoſe parts, which he had made an ill uſe of, would ſtifle ſeveral paſſions that torment other men; allow him leiſure to recollect himſelf, inſtead of letting him cheriſh a thouſand laſcivious thoughts. It was added, that as his meditations would no longer be interrupted by carnal emotions, they would be better able to diſcover the ſecrets of nature, and the reaſons of things; not to mention that he would no longer ruin himſelf by his gallantries; and that his money would no longer be the prey of thoſe miſerable and greedy courtezans, who knew ſo well how to fleece him (c). It was reckoned as a great advantage to him, that he would be no longer the terror of huſbands [D], and that he might lodge or reſide with ſafety in all places; for as he would not be ſuſpected by any hoſt, he would be welcome in all families, and not be under any apprehenſions from jealouſy. The writer did not omit obſerving, that he thenceforwards might paſs backward and forward in the midſt of women ſplendidly dreſt; might gaze upon the greateſt beauties without the leaſt danger; and not fear thoſe criminal temptations, which, at the ſight of ſuch objects, light up a fire even in old men. He is congratulated, in that he will be freed from thoſe impure illuſions which riſe before the fancy in ſleep [E]; to be exempted from which, ſays the letter writer, is a great

(8) Ælian, Hiſt. div. lib. 4. cap. 14. pag. m. 276. Here follows Vulteius's verſion. Sæpe pecuniæ, quas multo cum labore quis ſigillatim per obolos vix comparſerit, juxta Archilochum, univerſæ ſemel in ſcorti marſupium effunduntur.

(9) Kuhnius, in Ælian, ibid.

(10) Nicetas Choniates, in Alexi Man. Comneno, pag. 253. edit. Genev. 1593, 4to.

(c) See the remark [C].

" fully verified, viz. that what has been amaſſed with " great toil and during many years, is frequently ſwallowed up by a whore's lap." We alſo may compare the expreſſion of Foulques, in voragine fornicariæ conſumptionis demergere non ceſſabas, (you was for ever plunging in the all-craving gulf or whirlpool of fornication) with a paſſage in Sidonius Apollinaris, where the like madneſs is called, ſumptuoſitas domeſticæ Charybdis. It is a good paſſage, and deſcribes the conduct of a young man, who, after having ruined himſelf by intriguing with lewd women, had at laſt opened his eyes, and bidding adieu to that infamous courſe of life, had married very advantageouſly. The Author would have had this change ſtill more holy, and have had the young man change a life of fornication for a life of continence; but, continues he, few men who go ſuch lengths at firſt, can ſuppreſs their paſſions at once, after having given the utmoſt looſe to them. Hic proximè abrupto contubernio ancillæ propudioſiſſimæ, cui ſe totum conſuetudine obſcœna junctus addixerat, patrimonio, poſteris, famæ ſubitâ ſui correctione conſulit. Namque per rei familiaris damna vacuatus, ut primum intelligere cœpit, & retractare quantum de bonuſculis avitis paterniſque ſumptuoſitas domeſticæ charybdis abligurisſet, quamquam ſerò reſipiſcens, attamen tandem veluti frænos momordit, excuſſitque cervices, atque Ulyxeas (ut ferunt) ceras auribus figens, fugit adverſum vitia ſurdus, meretricii blandimenta naufragii: puellamque (prout decuit) intactam vir laudandus in matrimonium aſſumpſit, tam moribus natalibuſque ſummatem, quàm facultatis principalis. Eſſet quidem gloria, ſi voluptates ſic reliquiſſet, ut nec uxori conjugaretur: ſed etſi forte contingat ad bonos mores ab errore migrare, paucorum eſt incipere de maximis: & eos qui totum indulſerint ſibi, protinus totum & pariter incidere (11). i. e. " This man having at laſt broke off all " correſpondence with his moſt ſcandalouſly lewd maid, " to whoſe impure embraces he before had abandoned " himſelf entirely, he, by this ſudden reformation, " conſulted his intereſt, his fame and family. For being reduced, by the many ſhocks his fortune had " ſuſtained; the inſtant he reflected how much of " his patrimony had been ſwallowed up by this " greedy domeſtic charybdis, altho' his wiſdom and " repentance were late, yet, having at laſt broke " his rein, and got his neck out of the yoke, as we " are told Ulyſſes did, he ſtopp'd his ears with wax, " grew deaf to the ſoft inticements of vice, and ſhunned the rocks to which the Syren would have led " him. Having acted thus laudably, he then married (as wiſdom directed) a ſpotleſs virgin, as conſpicuous for her behaviour and high birth as for her fortune. It would have been glorious for him, had he reſigned all carnal pleaſures ſo far, as not to have married; but altho' it may ſo happen, that a man may leave his errors and grow good; yet few riſe to the ſummit of virtue at once; and thoſe who have long indulged a full ſcope to their paſſions, ſeldom change to an oppoſite conduct in an inſtant." See Rigaltius's Notes and thoſe of Gudius on a paſſage of Phædrus (12), you will there find a great many ſentences, relating to the artifices which looſe women employ, in order to reduce their gallants to beggary. Foulques was not unacquainted with this truth, and he imagined that Abelard had experienced it. He could not have expreſſed himſelf in ſtronger terms, even tho' he had been in a condition to profit by reading the following words of Signior Stefano Guazzo. Sono piu dannoſe le donne vecchie che le giovani, perche ſecondo il volgar detto, la capra giovane mangia il ſale, & la vecchia mangia il ſale, e'l ſacco . . . coſi alla fine vi riſolverete, che ſiamo poſti al mondo dalle donne, per eſſer ruinati dalle donne: Et perciò diceva un meſchino, che ſe ne moriva di mal franceſe: Donna m'ha fatto, & donna m'ha disfatto § (α). Et certo che disfanno in due modi, ſe crediamo à quel gentil Poeta, che diſſe.,

Succia Leſbia la borſa, & ſucca ill core,
Pazzo è chi compra con due ſangui amore (13).
That is,

" Old women are more deſtructive than young ones, " becauſe, according to that trite ſaying, the young " kid eats the ſalt, but the old goat eats the ſalt and " bag alſo. . . . So that it, at laſt, muſt be concluded, " that we are brought into the world by women, in " order to be ruined by women. This it was that " made a poor ſinner, who was dying with the foul " diſeaſe, cry out; A woman gave me life, and a " woman kills me. It is certain that women ruin us " two ways, if we may credit the agreeable Poet, who " ſays,

" Curſt Leſbia ſucks our purſes and our hearts:
" Fooliſh is he who buys his love ſo dear."

§ (α) Extracted from the Forêt Nuptiale of John Neviſon, lib. 2. n. 100. REM. CRIT.

(13) Stefano Guazzo, la civil Converſatione, lib. 2. pag. m. 261.

[D] The terror of huſbands.] I have not given a literal verſion, for fear of falling upon an expreſſion that would be a little too much in the comic caſt; for Foulques ſays as follows: Hoc quoque magni exiſtimare debes quod nulli ſuſpectus ab omni hoſpite hoſpes tutiſſime recipiaris. Maritus uxoris violationem ex te vel lectuli concuſſionem minime formidabit.

[E] Might gaze upon the greateſt beauties without danger . . . and be freed from impure illuſions which riſe before the fancy in ſleep.] To ſhew the reader that I don't exaggerate, I will ſit down the Author's own words. Decentiſſime ornatarum turmas matronarum inviolabiliter pertranſibis, virginum choros flore juventutis ſplendentium, quæ etiam ſenes jam calore carnis deſtitutos ſuis motibus in fervorem libidinis inflammare conſueverunt, non timens earum inceſſus & laqueos, ſecurus & ſine peccato miraberis . . . Omnino poſt hos hujus fragiliſſimæ fragilitatis fluxus, quod magnum Dei gratiæ munus in hoc ordine æſtimo, nocturnas ſomniorum illuſiones te minimè ſentire ita certum eſt, ſicut certum eſt quoniam voluntatem, ſi forte aderit, nulla ſequetur effectus. i. e. " You may now ſafely paſs thro' crowds of La- " dies how ſplendidly ſoever they may be adorned; " you may, without running the leaſt hazard, or being in the leaſt danger of ſinning, go to balls, and " gaze upon the choirs of lovely-blooming virgins, " whoſe charms have frequently wak'd the fire of luſt " in old men, tho' that paſſion had long been extin- " guiſhed in them. . . . After this deprivation of the " greateſt of all frailties, which I conſider as a ſpecial " mark of divine favour in this order; it is as certain " that you will no longer be troubled with the nocturnal illuſions of dreams, as it is certain, that ſhould " you have any inclination this way, it could not be " productive of any effect." There is no occaſion to a great bleſſing indulged by heaven. The duties of a married ſtate, continues the writer, and the cares of a family will no longer retard your endeavours to pleaſe God (d); and how great a happineſs is it to be removed out of the way of danger, and be exempted from a poſſibility of ſinning? The examples of Origen and of ſome holy martyrs are cited, who rejoice in heaven for their having been upon earth, in the condition for which Abelard bemoans himſelf. It is repreſented to him, that his loſs is irreparable [F], and for prove, that Foulques had reaſon to rank this among the greateſt advantages of an Eccleſiaſtic's life. It is plain to every one, that a man who devotes himſelf to a life of continence ought to look upon himſelf as happy, when his heart is ſo ſtrongly fortified againſt beauty, as to be proof againſt all the arrows in Cupid's quiver. He ought, with reſpect to this fire, to wiſh for the ſame qualities as the Hirpes had for the common fire (14). This is not only the moſt commodious, but the ſureſt way to be chaſte; for thoſe who cannot ſupport themſelves in this way but by frequent ſtruggles, are greatly to be pitied: They live in a troubled and doubtful ſtate; victory is ſometimes wavering (15), and it even declares ſometimes againſt them. They experience but too often, that ſucceſs is uncertain, and they ſeldom or never come off victorious from theſe combats, without being covered with wounds. It is very juſt to ſuppoſe, that thoſe who are continually in the hands of Phyſicians, lead miſerable lives (16). This is no leſs true with reſpect to thoſe, who are forced to ſtruggle with a ſanguine conſtitution, and be for ever upon their guard againſt the ſallies of the fleſh. This is a deplorable ſtate: a perſon is often repulſed behind his intrenchments, which makes the conſcience ſigh and groan: But what progreſs would ſuch a one have made, in the road to perfection, could he have walk'd in it without this kind of ſhackles, and without loſing ſo much time, in combatting the enemy every ſtep he took? As to the other point, I mean the impurities of ſleep, St. Auſtin will tell us what advantage that was, upon which Foulques congratulated his friend; St. Auſtin, I ſay, who begs of God to be freed from the frailty he ſtill felt in that reſpect. He uſed to yield in dreams to things which he oppoſed when awake; and laments at his ſtill being ſubject to ſo great an infirmity. Adhuc vivunt in memoria mea, ſays he (17), talium rerum imagines, quas ibi conſuetudo mea fixit: & occurſant mihi vigilanti quidem carentes viribus, in ſomnis autem non ſolum uſque ad delectationem, ſed etiam uſque ad conſenſionem factumque ſimillimum. At tantum valet imaginis illuſio in anima mea & in carne mea, ut dormienti falſa viſa perſuadeant, quod vigilanti vera non poſſunt. . . . Numquid non potens eſt manus tua Deus omnipotens, ſanare omnes languores animæ meæ, atque abundantiore gratia tua laſcivos motus etiam mei ſoporis extinguere? Augebis Domine magis magiſque in me munera tua, ut anima mea ſequatur me ad te, concupiſcentiæ viſco expedita, ut non ſit rebellis ſibi: atque ut in ſomnis etiam, non ſolum non perpetret iſtas corruptelarum turpitudines per imagines animales uſque ad carnis fluxum, ſed ne conſentiat quidem. i. e. "Some images, ſays he, "which cuſtom has fixed in my memory, are ſtill imprinted on it; and tho' they have no force or power "when I am awake, yet in ſlumbers they not only "raiſe a pleaſure, but even a conſent that bears a near "reſemblance to an act. Theſe illuſions have ſo great "an aſcendant over my mind as well as body, that "falſe images, in ſleep, make a greater impreſſion "upon me, than real ones when I am awake. . . . "Almighty God! is not thy hand powerful enough "to heal all the infirmities of my ſoul; and, by thy more "abundant grace, to extinguiſh all the looſe emotions of my ſlumbers? Aſſiſt me, O Lord, ſtill more "with thy mercies, that my ſoul being diſintangled "from the ſnares of concupiſcence, may no longer "rebel againſt itſelf, but follow thee; and that in "ſlumbers alſo, it may not only be delivered from "thoſe pollutions, and the illuſion of animal images, "but alſo may not conſent on thoſe occaſions."

(11) Sidon. Apollinar. Epiſt. 6. lib. 9. pag. m. 571.

(12) On the following words of Fable 2. Book 2. A fœminis utcunque ſpoliari viros Ament, amentur, nempe exemplis diſcimus. i. e. " Examples " teach that men " are women's " tools, " If they love " them, or are " by them lov'd.

(d) Blanditiæ uxoris corporumque contactus, ſine quo uxor haberi non poteſt, ac liberorum cura ſingularis, quominus Deo placeas, minime retardabunt.

(14) See the remark [M] of the article LOYOLA.

(15) See the remark [N] of the article FONTEVRAUD.

(16) Vivere medice eſt miſere vivere.

(17) Aug. Confeſſ. lib. 10. cap. 30. pag. m. 217, 218.

[F] It is repreſented, to Abelard, that his loſs is irreparable.] This is a certain fact; it is not here, as with the Sybil's tree, which the inſtant a golden bough was lopped off, another reſembling it exactly ſhot up in its ſtead,

(18) Virgil. Æn. lib. 6. ver. 143.

. . . . . Primo avulſo non deficit alter
Aureus, & ſimili frondeſcit virga metallo (18).

That Author who obſerved, ſpeaking of virginity, that it can be loſt but once, and that no art can repair it, was right in the main.

(19) Ovid. Epiſt. 5. ver. 103. Heroid.

. . . . . Nulla reparabilis arte
Læſa pudicitia eſt, deperit illa ſemel (19).

But he knew very probably, that tho' the original is not to be recovered by the utmoſt efforts of induſtry; a copy, at leaſt, is ſometimes obtained (20). But it is not ſo with Abelard's wound; it is incurable! no reſtorers are to be found for that, nor can any falſe or fictitious pieces be purchaſed; in ſhort, it is a cypreſs tree (21). The conſequence which Foulques draws is not ſo certain; be not afflicted, ſays he, at the loſs of your member; for it will never ſhoot up again, nature will never ſuffer it to be reſtored. Ergo frater ne doleas, nec contriſteris, nec pertubatione hujus incommodi quatiaris, præſertim cum hoc tam plures, ut dictum eſt, utilitatis afferat fructus, & quod hoc modo factum eſt ſemper & irreparabile permaneat & evulſum. Sic hoc tibi ſolamen aſſiduè quod redintegrari natura non patitur, levius poteſt tolerari. One would imagine that Foulques, in the latter part of this citation, had a view to the following line in Horace.

Levius fit patientiâ quicquid corrigere eſt nefas (22).

"The worſt of evils lighter grow by patience."

But he does not convey the ſenſe of it juſtly; this Poet does not mean, that one may more eaſily bear an irreparable loſs, than a loſs that may be repaired; he only ſays, that the weight of an irreparable loſs is made lighter, when the ſufferer reſolves to ſubmit patiently to it.

(20) Some cheats among the women pretend to reſtore loſt maidenheads. See Furetiere at the word Pucelage.

(21) Cupreſſi mortuorum domibus ponebantur ideo quia hujus generis arbor exciſa non renaſcitur, ſicut ex mortuo nihil eſt jam ſperandum Feſtus. i. e. "Cypreſs trees "uſed to be ſet "at the doors of "perſons de-"ceas'd, becauſe "when this tree "is once cut "down it never "ſhoots up again, "as when per-"ſons are dead, "all hopes of 'em "are loſt."

(22) Horat. Od. 24. lib. 1. ver. 19, 20.

EXAMINATION of ſome common places of conſolation.

It muſt be confeſſed, that moſt common-place conſolations have two aſpects, and that they may be made to ſerve two ways. They have this defect, viz. that they may be retorted: for inſtance, what can be more rational or judicious than to do nothing in vain? On this foot, one argues well againſt a mother who is grieved at the loſs of a dear ſon, if one obſerves to her, that her tears avail nought; and that, do or ſay what ſhe can, it will be impoſſible for her ever to recall her ſon. But it is this very circumſtance, may the mother reply, that makes me inconſolable; for could I repair my loſs, I would bear it patiently; could I hope, as people in trade, to recover by one ſhip what I had loſt by another, I ſhould not ſtand in much need of conſolation. I do not doubt but that Foulques's conſolatory admonitions would have been more efficacious, had Abelard loſt nothing but his beard. Why do you grieve, would Foulques have ſaid to him, you have been deſpoiled of your beard: a mighty matter! wait but ſome months and you will have another. This, I am ſure, would have been a great motive of conſolation to Abelard; but the bare reflection that his evil was incurable, and ſubject as much, or more, than any other thing to that harſh rule in Philoſophy, à privatione ad habitum non datur regreſſus; this ſingle reflection, I ſay, which his benefactor ſuggeſted to him, as a ſtrong motive or reaſon why he ought to be patient, was the chief cauſe of his deſpair: nor would it mend the matter to tell him, that the rule in queſtion would, at laſt, be falſe, viz. in the reſurrection at the laſt day (23); for he might anſwer, that he then would have no occaſion for ſuch things, ſince that at the reſurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the Angels of God in heaven (24).

(23) St. John chap. xi. ver. 24.

(24) St. Matth. cap. xxii. ver. 30.

Obſerve, that one may corroborate, by the teſtimony of the chief of the ſeven wiſe men of Greece, what I have ſaid above, with regard to ſuch a loſs as is irreparable, viz. that it is apt to make people ſtill more inconſolable. Solon bewailing the death of his ſon, it was repreſented to him that his tears would avail nothing; for that reaſon he ought to ſubmit to it with patience and reſignation. That when he was emaſculated he was not engaged in a criminal action [G], ſince he was alone in his bed, faſt aſleep, and not meditating ill to any perſon. He alſo was comforted from other reaſons; his friend repreſenting how much the Biſhop, the Canons, and all the Clergy of Paris [H] were concerned at his ſhameful misfortune, and how greatly he was pitied nothing; that, replied he, is the very reaſon why I weep. Αὐτὸν φησι Διοσκυρίδης ἐν τοῖς ἀπομνημονεύμασιν ἐπείδη δακρύοι τὸ παιδὸς τελευτήσαντος ... πρὸς τὸ εἰπόντα, ἀλλ' ὑδὲν ἀνύττεις, εἰπεῖν, δι' αὐτὸ δὲ τοῦτο δακρύω, ὅτι ὑδὲν ἀνύττω (25). See in the remark [K] of the article AMPHIARAUS, in what manner Carneades refuted ſome common places of conſolation.

(25) Diogen. Laert. in Solone, lib. 1. num. 63.

[G] That when he was emaſculated, he was not engaged in a criminal action.] He means, that he was not catched in the action with a woman, which had coſt ſome men the ſame parts he had been deprived of. Fer & hæc, ut ait ille, ſolatia tecum, quoniam tempore hujus diminutionis vel thorum violando, vel in aliquo fornicationis veneno minimè deprehenſus es. This was a better conſolation than the former, though it muſt be confeſſed, that Abelard had brought this misfortune upon himſelf, by as wicked a crime as adultery. He therefore could not ſay with the ſame confidence as his brother Eunuch,

Quid fortunæ, ſtulte, delictum arguis?
Id demum eſt homini turpe, quod meruit pati (26).

(26) Phædr. Fab. 11. lib. 3.

" Thou fool, why doſt thou blame the crime of " fortune?
" That's only baſe, which men deſerve to ſuffer."

However, his crime was over; and he was not doing ill to any perſon at the time he was mutilated. The following maxim in general is good; Quæ venit ex merito pœna, dolenda venit, whether Abelard could, or could not, apply it to himſelf. By the way, there are ſome good authorities to prove, that thoſe who were catched in the act, uſed to leave the inſtrument of their crimes behind them. Thus Plautus (27) introduces his Syncerаſtus ſaying, (27) In Pœnul. Sc. 2. Act. 4. ver. 40.

--- SYN. Facio quod manifeſto hi mœchi haud ferme ſolent
MI. Quid id eſt? SYN. Refero vaſa ſalva.

" SYN. I'm come, as our adulterers ſeldom do.
" MI. What's that? SYN. I'm ſafe returned with " my tackle."

I make uſe of Mr. Dacier's verſion, who quotes this paſſage in a note on that place of Horace, where this kind of puniſhment is mentioned (28). Periplectomenes, in the ſame Plautus (29) will not only treat the ſwaggerer in this manner, but will likewiſe hang about his neck, like a child's play-thing, the trinket he had lopped off.

(28) Quin etiam illud Accidit, ut cuidam teſtes, caudamque ſalacem
Demeteret ferrum. Horat. Sat. 2. lib. 1. ver. 44.

Vide, ut tibi iſtic ſit acutus, CARIO, culter probe.
CA. Quin jamdudum geſtit mœcho hoc abdomen adimere
Ut faciam quaſi puero, in collo pendeant crepundia
- - - - - - - - - -
PE. Cur es auſus ſubagitare alienam uxorem impudens!

(29) In Milit. glor. Scen. ult. ver. 5.

" See, Cario, that your knife be very ſharp.
" CAR. 'Tis keen, and longs to be about the knave.
" I'll make a boy of him, and hang his gugaw
" About his neck. . . . . .
" PE. How could you dare to dally? &c."

Terence ſays only (30), that the offender was already bound, and that they were going to inflict the puniſhment on him that was exerciſed on adulterers; but, either becauſe he was more modeſt than Plautus, or becauſe a ſervant maid is the interlocutor, he does not ſay what the puniſhment was; but people knew very well what it was.

(30) Eunuch. Act. 5. Scen. 5. ver. 3.

--- Ut ne viderem, miſera huc effugi foras
Quæ futura exempla dicunt in eum indigna---
--- Colligavit primum eum miſeris modis---
--- Nunc minatur porro ſeſe id quod mœchis ſolet
Quod ego nunquam vidi fieri neque velim.

" I left the houſe to ſhun the odious ſight.
" What an example will, 'tis ſaid, be made of him!
" He bound the hapleſs wretch, firſt, hand and feet...
" And now he menaces to ſerve him, Oh!
" As our adulterers are treated; a ſpectacle
" I never ſaw, nor would for all the world.

See two examples of this puniſhment in Valerius Maximus (31). It was alſo inflicted, by the Laws of Egypt (32) on thoſe who violated a married woman. Zonaras relates, that the Emperor Juſtinian ſentenced Sodomites to this puniſhment. In eos Juſtinianus pœnam planè convenientem ſtatuit. Nam qua parte erant tam ignominioſi, hac eos privari imperabat, ut Zonaras prodidit. Quid enim? (ajebat) ſi ſacrilegium commiſiſſent, nonne eis manus amputaſſem (33)? What? did he uſe to ſay, had they committed ſacrilege, ſhould not I have ſentenced them to loſe their hands? The proportion between the puniſhment and the crime was juſt enough, and was a ſure way of preventing it for the future. A gallant who ſhould eſcape unmaimed might renew the attack; and acted like run-away ſoldiers who afterwards return to the charge. To prevent this, was judged neceſſary amputation (34).

(31) Lib. 6. cap. 1. num. 13.

(32) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 1. cap. 78.

(33) Salmuth. in Pancirollum Rerum Memorabil. Part. 2. pag. m. 86.

One of the Authors above cited (35), quotes a little epigram of Martial, in which a huſband is laughed at, for cutting off the noſe of his wife's gallant. But, was he anſwered, ſhe is no loſer by this; it was not the part injured you.

Quis tibi perſuaſit nares abſcindere mœcho?
Non hac peccatum eſt parte, marite, tibi.
Stulte quid egiſti? nihil hic tua perdidit uxor,
Cum ſit ſalva ſui mentula Deiphobi (36).

(34) Ἀνὴρ ὁ φεύγων καὶ πάλιν μαχήσεται. Demoſthenes cited this verſe, when he was reproached with running away. Aul. Gell. lib. 17. cap. 21.

(35) Salmuth in Pancirol. Rerum Memor. Part. 2. pag. 86.

A Poet of the ſixteenth Century employed his muſe on a like thought, but changed the circumſtances of the incident. His epigram is as follows:

(36) Mart. Epigram. 85. lib. 3.

De marito, cujus mœcha erat conjux.

Cum mœcha ſenſit mœchum dormire maritus,
Extemplò uxori conſtruit ille dolos.
Nocte ſemel media repetens ſua limina, mœchum
Cum mœcha in tepido conſpicit eſſe toro.
Diſtringit gladium, mœchæ duo brachia ſcindit,
Atque duos mœchi diſſecat enſe pedes.
Non ſic debuerat facinus punire nephandum:
Pars, qua peccatum eſt, hæc reſecanda fuit (37).

(37) Jo. Vulteius, Epigram. lib. 2. p. m. 136.

" On a huſband who was cuckolded by his wife.

" A huſband finding that his wife was wanton,
" Reſolv'd to catch her in the ſhocking act.
" Returning home at dark midnight, he found " His perjur'd wife, and her gallant, in bed.
" He draws his ſword, of arms bereaves the dame;
" And next, chops off both the adulterer's legs.
" Miſtaken puniſhment for this fell crime:
" The part that did the deed ſhou'd have been
" lopp'd."

[H] His friend repreſenting, to Abelard... how much.... the Clergy at Paris were concerned at his ſhameful misfortune.] Nothing can ſhew more evidently, the prodigious eſteem they had for this Philoſopher. Foulques no doubt, amplified things very much in his Letter; for, to believe him, almoſt the whole city of Paris was in the deepeſt affliction, becauſe Abelard had been emaſculated: from this general grief the comforter draws one of the beſt arguments; as if this ſtrong teſtimony of the love which the Pariſians have for him, was more than an equivalent for all that Abelard had loſt (38). In my opinion the ſufferer would have been far from acquieſcing with this valuation; and he doubtleſs would much rather have been for ever ignorant of the friendſhip people had for him, than to know it at ſo dear a rate.

(38) Tantus omnium luctus extitit, ut melius mihi videaris te debere velle periiſſe, quam ſervaſſe quod periit. Felix ſe neſcit amari. Pene tota civitas in tuo dolore contabuit. Habes aram veræ dilectionis in te quam ſi prius agnoviſſes nullas, meo judicio, divitias illi comparabiles æſtimares.

pitied by the people, and bewailed by the women [I]. This is deſcribed in a very lively manner, but not the leaſt mention is made of Heloiſe [K] in the laſt mentioned article.

As

This might have been ſaid with propriety enough to perſons who had let thoſe parts lie idle; but Abelard employed his talent very vigorouſly, drew a good income from it, and always reſolved to make the moſt of it. Be this as it will, I will cite the very words employed by the comforter. Plangit hoc tuum vulnus & damnum venerabilis Epiſcopi benignitas, qui quantum licuit vacare juſtitiæ ſtuduit. Plangit liberalium Canonicorum ac nobilium Clericorum multitudo. Plangunt cives civitatis hoc dedecus reputantes, & dolentes ſuam urbem tui ſanguinis effuſione violari. i. e. "The venerable Biſhop "bewailed that loſs, and endeavoured to do you all "the juſtice in his power. The whole body of Canons "and dignified Clergy have bewailed it, as have alſo "the Citizens, who judge that this action reflects ig"nominy on them; and grieved that their city ſhould "be defiled, by the effuſion of your blood." See the reſt, either in the margin or in the following remark. See likewiſe the remark [N] of the article HELOISE; I have there cited what Abelard himſelf ſpeaks concerning the affliction which his ſad adventure occaſioned.

[I]... bewailed by the women.] They wept as bitterly for him as if each of them had loſt her huſband or lover in battle. It is true indeed, that a man had not been killed on this occaſion; but they nevertheleſs had loſt their champion: it is Foulques who expreſſes himſelf in this manner (39). They had loſt their Adonis; their grief for him muſt therefore have been more ſincere, than that of thoſe women among the Antients, who uſed to ſolemnize annually the remembrance of Venus's mourning for the death of Adonis (40), plangentes Adonidem (41). Methinks the comforter ought not to touch this ſtring; it was not by any means adapted to his deſign, and could only heighten the ſorrow of the ill fated Abelard, and that from two invincible reaſons; for firſt, he thence ſaw, after a very peculiar manner, the importance of the bleſſing he had loſt; ſecondly, it informed him of a favour, for which it would never be in his power to make a grateful return. I repeat it again and again, our Foulques was too inflated a Rhetorician, and he blinds and confounds two things which ought to have been diſtinguiſhed or divided. He is of opinion that the tears of all thoſe women, ſingularum feminarum, aroſe from their having loſt their champion, militem ſuum; but this could be true only of a few with whom Abelard had been intimate, or who hoped to partake one day of his favours. Foulques ſhould therefore have ſaid, either that the reſt did not weep; or that, if they wept, it was not ſo much out of love for Abelard, as for fear of the conſequences; I mean, they were afraid leſt this barbarous manner of puniſhing lewdneſs ſhould be introduced in the world, and the example of the Canon be practiſed upon others. Some therefore wept, becauſe they had been diſpoſſeſſed of a treaſure, and others for fear they ſhould loſe theirs (42). This is a diſtinction that was neglected very improperly by Foulques. We find in the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, an incident ſo well adapted to this remark, that I either muſt have been ignorant of it, or be unaccountably negligent not to give it a place here. The ſtory is as follows. "The Greeks were making war on the "Duke of Benevento, and gained ſeveral mighty ad"vantages over him. Theobald, Marquiſs of Spoleto, "his kinſman, being come to his aſſiſtance, and hav"ing taken ſome priſoners, cauſed their genitals to "be cut off, and ſent them back, in that condition, "to the Grecian General, ordering them to tell him, "that he had done this to oblige the Emperor, know"ing him to have a great value for Eunuchs; and "that he would endeavour to procure him ſoon a "much greater number. The Marquiſs was pre"paring to keep his word, when one day a woman, "whoſe huſband his ſoldiers had taken, came all in "tears to his camp, and deſired to ſpeak with Theo"bald. The Marquiſs having enquired the cauſe of "her grief; my Lord, anſwered the Grecian woman, "I am ſurprized that ſo great a hero as you are "ſhould make war upon women, when men are un"able to reſiſt you. Theobald replying, that he had "not heard that war had been made againſt women, "ever ſince the time of the Amazons: my Lord, con"tinued the Greek woman, would it be poſſible for "a more cruel war to be carried on againſt us, than "to deprive our huſbands of what gives us health, "pleaſure and children. When you make Eunuchs "of them, it is us you mutilate, not them. When you, "ſome days ſince, carried off our cattle and our bag"gage, I did not once complain of that; but as the "loſs of the bleſſing, of which you have bereaved ſe"veral of my female friends is irreparable, I could "not forbear coming in order to ſue to the conqueror "for mercy. The whole army was ſo well pleaſed "with the ingenuous declaration of this woman, that "her huſband was reſtored to her, and all they had "diſpoſſeſſed her of. As ſhe was going back, Theobald "aſked her, what puniſhment ſhe would be willing "to have inflicted on her huſband, in caſe he ſhould "be found again in arms. He has eyes, ſays ſhe, a "noſe, hands, and feet; theſe are his own, and you "may bereave him of them in caſe he commits any "crime; but I much beſeech you to ſpare what be"longs to me (43)."

We may obſerve, that it is very probable this woman would have choſe to have had her huſband killed, rather than to have ſeen him come back an eunuch, ſince, had he been in that condition, ſhe would have experienced all the evils of widowhood, without taſting any of its conveniencies; ſhe would neither have been allowed the liberty to marry again, nor the right to get her marriage diſſolved upon pretence of impotency; for the Courts of Juſtice would not have admitted her plea, they not taking cognizance of impotency when it ariſes from ſuch accidents. It may be obſerved, by the way, that the Romans would not have blamed the woman's taſte. Their way of thinking was ſuch, that they would have loſt their lives rather than their manhood. This Cæſar repreſented to the Embaſſadors of Pharnaces, in the complaints he made of the barbarous treatment the Roman Merchants had met with in Pontus. Se magnas & graves injurias civium Romanorum qui in Ponto negotiati eſſent, quoniam in integrum reſtituere non poſſet, concedere Pharnaci. Nam neque interfectis amiſſam vitam, neque exectis virilitatem reſtituere poſſe, quod quidem ſupplicium GRAVIUS MORTE cives Romani ſubiſſent (44).

[K] But not the leaſt mention is made of Heloiſe.] This we are not to wonder at, for as ſhe had been more injured than any other woman, her affliction was ſufficiently known; and it would have been no news to her huſband, to inform him that ſhe had wept floods of tears. It is true indeed, that ſhe was then in a Convent, but then ſhe only wore the religious habit; and the ſecret viſits ſhe there received from her huſband, were for ſomething more than mere chitchat; they had the cunning to retire into ſome corner, in order to be free and undiſturbed (45); and ſhe had long enjoyed thoſe converſations under a religious habit (46). She therefore had not renounced what her huſband was bereaved of. To judge of the grief which pierced her ſoul, when ſhe heard the news in queſtion, I will not confine myſelf to the new tranſlation of her Letters (47). How cruel were they, ſays the verſion, when their blind fury excited a ruffian to ſurprize you in your ſleep! Had we been together, I would have defended you at the hazard of my life; my cries alone would have ſtopped his arm. But here love is wounded; and modeſty joined to deſpair, bereave me of the faculty of ſpeech. I am not allowed to ſay all I think on that head, and I could not do it, tho' this ſhould be permitted me. And indeed, ſilence itſelf is eloquent, when the greatneſs of a calamity is above all the powers of expreſſion. How emphatical is all this! nature itſelf ſpeaks; one would not imagine that theſe expreſſions were dictated by fancy, but that they reſulted from experience and ſenſation; and of one who might be in Heloiſe's place (48). I wiſh the latter had really ſaid thoſe words, and I am ſorry not to have found the ſame in the original Latin, as we meet with in the French paraphraſe. But though ſhe does not ſay, that ſhe would have ventured her life to ſave her huſband's manhood; and that her cries might have availed ſo far, as to have preſerved

(39) Quid ſingularum feminarum referam planctum quæ, ſic hoc audito, lachrymis, more fœmineo, ora rigarunt propter te MILITEM SUUM, quem amiſerant, ac ſi ſingulæ virum ſuum aut amicum ſorte belli reperiſſent extinctum?

(40) That is to ſay, according to ſome, for a diſaſter which befel poor Adonis, like to that of Peter Abelard. See the remark [L] of the article ADONIS.

(41) Ezek. viii. 14.

(42) Horace ſays much the ſame thing, Epiſt. 1. lib. 2. with regard to ſatyr, Doluêre cruento Dente laceſſiti: fuit intactis quoque cura Conditione ſuper communi ver. 150.

(43) Bibliotheque Univerſelle, tom. 11. pag. 10.

(44) Hirtius, de Bello Alexandrino, pag. m. 411.

(45) See the remark [E] of the article HELOISE.

(46) She aſſumed this diſguiſe, when ſhe went to lie in at the houſe of Abelard's ſiſter. See her article citation (b).

THE extreme grief with which Heloiſe was ſeized, when ſhe reflected on her husband's emaſculation.

(47) Printed a the Hague fo John Albert 1693.

(48) I indeed am told, that this verſion is by a woman.

As Abelard ſeemed deſirous of going to Rome, and ſuing for juſtice at the Pope's hands, he is ſtrongly exhorted to ſuppreſs all thoughts of this kind, for that it would be impoſſible for him to get money ſufficient to give ſucceſs to his affair in that country [L]; that the ruffians who uſed him ſo barbarouſly had been puniſhed [M]; that he had no reaſon to complain of the Cathedral Church; and that ſince he was a Monk he ought to lay preſerved from the barbarous hands of the aſſaſſins, that precious jewel, that invaluable trinket, ſhe ought to have declared ſo; and we therefore cannot blame the tranſlator, for ſuppoſing ſo natural a thought came from her pen. Nevertheleſs, I will not make this a rule, to form a judgment of Heloiſe's grief, her Latin furniſhing me with a ſufficient number of others. Her murmurings againſt God's Providence, riſe even to blaſphemy, ſuch as never fell from the lips of Job, tho' he had loſt all his ſubſtance, all his children, and been dreadfully tormented in his own body. Heloiſe thought her loſs greater than his, tho' ſhe and her huſband were in good health; after all, ſays ſhe, the only comfort that remains is, I know he is not dead; but then I am for ever debarred from all other pleaſures that reſult from his perſon. Ubi nullum niſi te remedium habeam, & nullum aliud in te niſi hoc ipſum quod vivis, omnibus de te mihi aliis voluptatibus interdictis, cui nec præſentia tua conceſſum eſt frui, ut quandoque mihi reddi valeam (49). She then breaks into the moſt injurious complaints againſt divine Providence. God, ſays ſhe, has treated me ſo cruelly, that he has diſcharged his whole quiver of arrows at me, ſo that he now has nothing wherewith to puniſh others, and ſinners may therefore no longer ſtand in awe of him. The only ſhaft he would not ſhoot at me, is that which would have killed me, and by that means have put a period to my miſery; he is afraid of putting an end to my life, tho' I am every moment expiring. O ſi fas ſit dici crudelem mihi per omnia Deum! ô inclementem clementiam! ô infortunatam fortunam! quæ jam in me univerſi conaminis ſui tela in tantum conſumpſit, ut quibus in alios ſæviat jam non habeat. Plenam in me pharetram exhauſit, ut fruſtra jam alii bella ejus formident. Nec ſi ei adhuc telum aliquod ſupereſſet, locum in me vulneris invenirent. Unum inter tot vulnera metuit ne morte ſupplicia finiam, & cum interimere non ceſſet interitum tamen quem accelerat timet. Every part of the ſequel of her diſcourſe ſhews, that her horrid murmurs have no other foundation, than the calamity which deprived Heloiſe of her huſband; and this we cannot doubt of, after what ſhe confeſſes in page 59 (50); ſhe takes an unbounded liberty in arraigning Providence, as tho' God had chaſtized them at a time when they did not deſerve it, and had ſpared them when he ought to have puniſh'd them. God, ſays Heloiſe, did not afflict us when we were engaged in criminal pleaſures, but ſuſpended his puniſhment, till they were made lawful by marriage; & ut ex injuria major indignatio ſurgeret, omnia in nobis æquitatis jura pariter ſunt perverſa. Dum enim ſolliciti amoris gaudiis frueremur, & ut turpiore, ſed expreſſione vocabulo utar, fornicationi vacaremus, divina nobis ſeveritas pepercit. Ut autem illicita licitis correximus, & honore conjugii turpitudinem fornicationis operuimus, ira Domini manum ſuam ſuper nos vehementer aggravavit, & immaculatum non pertulit thorum qui diu ante ſuſtinuerat pollutum (51). This unhappy woman was ſtrangely miſtaken, if ſhe imagined that her love was very chaſte and pure, becauſe ſhe did not ceaſe to love her huſband, ſince he had been rendred impotent. She reproaches him, with entertaining only a laſcivious paſſion for her, ſince he had neglected her, the inſtant he could no longer enjoy carnal pleaſures with her. Concupiſcentia te mihi potius quam amicitia ſociavit, libidinis ardor potius quam amor. Ubi igitur quod deſiderabas ceſſavit, quicquid propter hoc exhibebas pariter evanuit (52). But does ſhe not confeſs (53), that ſhe regrets paſt pleaſures, that ſhe reflects day and night on the amorous careſſes with which her huſband had entertained her? Does ſhe not own a deſire of repeating them? Quomodo etiam pœnitentia peccatorum dicitur quantacunque ſit corporis afflictio ſi mens adhuc ipſam peccandi retinet voluntatem, & priſtinis æſtuat deſideriis (54)? If this be not a luſtful love, a love of fleſh and blood, what ſhall we look upon as ſuch? Abelard was very ſenſible of this truth, and therefore exhorted his wife to entertain other thoughts, leſt ſhe ſhould be juſtly reproached with harbouring an impure love. Cave obſecro, ſays he to her (55), ne quod dixit Pompeius mœrenti Corneliæ tibi improperetur turpiſſimè,

——— ——— Vivit poſt prælia Magnus
Sed fortuna perit, quod deſles illud amaſti *.

* Lucan. lib. 8.

Attende, precor, id & erubeſce, niſi admiſſas turpitudines impudentiſſimas commendes.

That is,

" I beſeech you, ſays Abelard to her, take care, leſt " what Pompey ſaid to the afflicted Cornelia, ſhould " be maliciouſly objected to you.

" My fortune's loſt;
" Who grieve for that, no love for me can boaſt,
" But mourn the loſs of what they valued moſt.

" Conſider theſe things, I entreat you, and be ſo mo- " deſt as not to juſtify the moſt ſcandalous and impu- " dent practices."

[L] He told Abelard . . . that it would be impoſſible for him to get money ſufficient to give ſucceſs to his affair in that Country.] Our Foulques has ſaid ſo many diſadvantageous things of the Court of Rome, that it was not his fault, if he has not been rank'd among thoſe who bore witneſs to truth. He declares that nothing is able to ſatiate the avarice of the Romans; and that ſhould Abelard go and viſit the Pope without being well furniſhed with money, his journey will be ineffectual. But we muſt quote his own words, the language in which he writes, permitting the moſt groſs terms much better than the French. Nunquid non audiſti aliquando de Romanorum avaritia & impuritate? quis unquam ſuis potuit opibus meretricum voraginem ſatiare? quis potuit ſacculis cupiditatis earum ſufficere crumenis? . . Subſtantia tuæ rei ad viſitationem Romani Pontificis cum aut modica ſit aut nulla, minime ſufficit. Quid Palatinis morſibus objectabis? . . . Si defecerit (pecunia) & iter tamen impleveris incaſſum te ſudaſſe nulli dubitare fas eſt: quotquot enim noſtris temporibus ad illam ſedem ſine pondere pecuniæ acceſſerunt, perdita cauſa, confuſi & reprobi abſceſſerunt. i. e. " Have not you " been told of the corruption and avarice of the prin- " cipal men at Rome? What perſon could ever ſatiate " a proſtitute's all-devouring appetite with his wealth? " or whoſe bags were large enough to ſatisfy all their " cravings? . . As your whole ſubſtance is very ſlen- " der, (and it may be nothing) it will not ſuffice to " defray the expence of your journey to the Roman " Pontiff. . . How will you be able to ſatisfy the gree- " dineſs of thoſe about the Pope? . . In caſe you ſhould " get to your journey's end, and then be in want of " money, there is no doubt but all your pains will " have been employed to no purpoſe. Whoſoever, " in our time, went to Rome without a large ſum of " money, loſt his ſuit, and returned back aſhamed and " confounded." This evil ſubſiſts now, if we may credit Mr. Hallier, in his Letter from Rome to Father Dinet the Jeſuit, dated the 16th of June 1653. Hallier was one of the deputies who ſollicited the condemnation of Janſeniſm. " It would be but juſt, ſays " he (56), for them to have ſome little regard for us, " after the extraordinary expences we have been at on " this occaſion. You cannot figure to yourſelf how " much money is ſent in bribes and preſents. The " moſt inconſiderable Saint will have his fee. The " Janſeniſts have ſpent upwards of an hundred thou- " ſand, and perhaps a hundred and fifty thouſand li- " vres."

[M] The Ruffians who uſed him ſo barbarouſly had been puniſhed.] There were but two of them taken, one of whom was Abelard's footman. They were not only emaſculated, by way of retaliation, but their eyes were put out. Here follow Abelard's words (57): Quibus mox converſis in fugam duo qui comprehendi potuerunt oculis & genitalibus privati ſunt, quorum alter ille fuit ſupradictus ſerviens qui cum in obſequio meo mecum maneret, cupiditate ad proditionem ductus eſt. i. e.

" Who

(49) Foulques's Letter, printed in Abelard's works.

(50) Si vere miſerrimi mei animi profiteor infirmitatem qua pœnitentia Deum placare valeam non invenio, quem SUPER HAC SEMPER INJURIA ſummæ crudelitatis arguo, & ejus diſpenſationi contraria magis eum ex indignatione offendo quàm ex pœnitentiæ ſatisfactione mitigo.

(51) Pag. 57.

(52) Pag. 47.

(53) See the notes on her article.

(54) Pag. 59.

(55) Pag. 75.

(56) See the Pieces ſur le nouveau teſtament de Mons, tom. 1. pag. 405.

(57) Pag. 17.

lay aſide all thoughts of revenge; leave it wholly to God, and love even his greateſt enemies. In fine, he was exhorted not to regret the happineſs he had loſt, ſince that pretended happineſs is ever accompanied with a thouſand inconveniencies; and he is aſſured, that if he perſeveres to the end, the things he had been deprived of ſhould be reſtored at the day of judgment; and that even the following maxim in Logic, in habitum nunquam poteſt redire privatio, would be proved falſe. It is pity we have not an anſwer of Abelard to this conſolatory letter. It is probable that it would bear a reſemblance to the diſpute between Job and his friends; I mean, that Abelard would have found anſwers and replies; and that Foulques, on certain occaſions, would appear to him a wretched comforter.

By the way, the Priory of Deuil, which our Foulques poſſeſſed, ſtands three leagues from Paris, near Montmorenci. Conſult, on this ſubject, Father Chifflet the Jeſuit, Genus illuſtre D. Bernardi aſſertum, where he mentions one Eudo of Deuil; and Valeſius in his Notitia Galliarum, at the word Pariſii (e).

(e) Extracted from a manuſcript Memoir, ſent to me from the Mazarine Library.

"Who running away inſtantly, two of them being "there taken, were deprived of their eyes and geni- "tals, one of whom was my ſervant I before ſpoke "of, who, tho' he lived under my roof, and ought to "have defended me, was yet ſo baſe, for the ſake of "lucre, as to commit that perfidious act." Foulques ſays in general, that ſome of thoſe villains were ſentenced to be emaſculated, and to loſe their eyes; and that all the Canon's poſſeſſions were confiſcated, tho' he denied his being concerned in any manner in the guilt. Quidam illorum qui tibi nocuerunt oculorum privatione & genitalium abſciſione mutilati ſunt. Ille autem (he doubtleſs means Fulbert Heloiſe's uncle) qui per ſe factum abnegat jam ab omni poſſeſſione ſua bonorum comportatione exturbatus eſt (58). But Abelard was not pleaſed with the ſentence; he complained of the Biſhop and Canons, and had a mind to ſue to the Court of Rome for juſtice (59). Totum meæ pondus injuriæ Romanis auribus intimare ſtudebo, & tam Epiſcopum quam Canonicos quoniam primum judicium de illo qui in me malus extitit mutare machinati ſunt, quantum potero perturbabo, ac tum demum intelligent quàm ſit contrarium honeſtati à rigore juſtitiæ deviaſſe . . . (60). Noli Canonicos vel Epiſcopum tui ſanguinis effuſores vel perditores vocare, qui propter te & propter ſe quantum potuerunt juſtitiæ intenderunt. i. e. "I will endeavour to appeal, and repreſent the whole "weight of my injuries to the Pope. I will perplex "and trouble, as far as I am able, the Biſhop and "Canons, and becauſe they firſt endeavoured to change "the ſentence of that man from whom all my misfor- "tunes flowed; in order that they may at laſt know, "how repugnant it is to the dictates of honeſty, to "ſwerve from the rigour of juſtice... Call not the "Canons or the Biſhop the ſpillers of your blood, who "laboured to the utmoſt of their power to ſee juſtice "done, as well for your own ſake as for their own." It is great pity we have not the trial of Abelard's aſſaſſins, and of him who ſet them on; and I am ſurprized that, among the great number of pieces, which have been taken out of obſcurity within theſe hundred years, nothing yet has been found relating to this affair. Methinks too much indulgence was ſhewn the Canon, who ought to have had the law of retaliation put in force againſt him. Du Cange (61) having told told us, that the Salic Law ſentenced ſuch ſlaves to be caſtrated, as were catched in adultery and theft; that the Law of the Viſigoths condemned Sodomites to the ſame puniſhment; and that the Law of William the Conqueror ſentenced thoſe to the ſame puniſhment, who raviſhed a woman; adds, that Suger, pag. 308 of his Life of Lewis VI, ſpeaks of a traitor who was ſentenced to have his eyes put out, and his genitals cut off. Hofman (62) has not copied du Cange exactly; for, inſtead of theſe words apud Sugerium in Ludovico VI, pag. 308, he has made it, apud Eugenium in Ludovico VI, pag. 1308. The traitor mentioned by Suger, was a man upon whom the King of England had heaped the greateſt favours, and who nevertheleſs engaged in a conſpiracy againſt his maſter, for which he was only caſtrated and had his eyes put out, but was not hanged as he deſerved. Tam horribili factione deprehenſus oculorum & genitalium amiſſione, cum laqueum ſuffocantem meruiſſet, miſericorditer eſt damnatus (63). Father Theophilus Raynaud, tho' he had read ſo much, did not know that the wretches who aſſaſſinated Abelard were puniſhed by the civil Magiſtrate, as is manifeſt from what Foulques ſays on this occaſion. That Jeſuit therefore did not call to mind this letter of Foulques, ſince he ſays, that the puniſhment of thoſe who emaſculated Abelard, is as criminal as the action they committed, if they were puniſhed without public authority. Petrus Abelardus . . . privata auctoritate eſt eviratus, quam fuiſſe vindictam illicitam eſt manifeſtum. Et æque nefaria fuit, ſi privata autoritate facta eſt, repenſa executoribus trucis illius ultionis exoculatio ſimul & exectio (64). i. e. "Abelard was emaſculated by the contrivance of certain "private perſons, and it is manifeſt that this was an un- "lawful action... Nor was the puniſhment, (of loſs of "ſight and caſtration) inflicted on the wretches who "perpetrated that horrid act of revenge leſs unlawful, "if it was done only by private authority." I ſhall perhaps ſpeak elſewhere, of the puniſhment to which the gallants of the three daughters-in-law of Philip the Fair were ſentenc'd (65).

(58) Foulques's Letter.

(59) Foulques introduces him, ſpeaking after this manner.

(60) It is Foulques who ſpeaks.

(61) Gloſſar. Ling. Lat. See Caſtratio.

(62) Lexic. vol. 3. pag. 389.

(63) Suger, tom. 4. Hiſt. Francor. Scriptor. pag. 308

(64) Theoph. Raynaud. de Eunuchis, pag. m. 75.

(65) Their privities were cut off, and they afterwards were ſtead. See Guaguin. lib. 7. fol. m. 129.

☞FOX, (JOHN), an eminent Church-Hiſtorian in the ſixteenth Century, was born at Boſton in Lincolnſhire (a) in 1517 (b), of honeſt and reputable parents. While he was very young, his father dying, and his mother marrying again, he came into the tutelage of his father-in-law (c). He was ſent to Brazen-Noſe College in the Univerſity of Oxford at about ſixteen years of age, and placed under the inſpection and patronage of Mr. John Hawarden, Fellow of that College (d). May the 17th 1538 he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts (e). He was afterwards elected a Fellow of Magdalen College (f), and proceeded Maſter of Arts June the 6th 1543 (g). In his younger years he diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his genius for Poetry, and wrote ſeveral Latin Comedies [A] in an

(a) Baleus, Scriptor. illuſtrium Majoris Brytanniæ Catalog. Cent. 9. cap. 92. pag. 763. edit. Baſil. 1557, in fol.

(b) Vita Johannis Foxii, written by his ſon, and prefixed to our Author's Acts and Monuments, edit. 1641, in fol.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 230. 2d edit. London 1721.

(e) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 60.

(f) Vita Joh. Foxii.

(g) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 67.

[A] Wrote ſeveral Latin Comedies.] Mr. Samuel Fox, his ſon, in his Vita Johannis Foxii (1), tells us, that theſe Comedies were then extant; and were taken from ſubjects in ſacred Hiſtory. We have a Comedy of his, intitled, De Chriſto triumphante, printed at London 1551, at Baſil 1556 in 8vo, &c. Mr. Wood (2) aſſerts, that it was written at Baſil in the houſe of Oporinus the Printer. But this is undoubtedly a miſtake, ſince our Author did not go to Baſil till the reign of Queen Mary, who came to the Crown in 1553. This Comedy was tranſlated into Engliſh by Richard Day, ſon of John Day, the famous Printer in the reign of Q. Elizabeth, and publiſhed with this title, Chriſt Jeſus triumphant, wherein is deſcribed the glorious triumph and conqueſt of Chriſt over ſin, death, and the law, &c. London 1579 and 1607 in 8vo. This Richard Day was educated in King's College in Cambridge, and afterwards exerciſed the place of Miniſter of Rygate in Surrey in the room of Mr. Fox; but ſoon after quitting that Profeſſion, he followed the buſineſs of Printing, and lived ſeveral years near Aldgate in London, where his father had lived before. In 1672 this Comedy was again publiſhed at London in 8vo, and dedicated to all Schoolmaſters, in order that it might be admitted into their reſpective Schools for the peculiar elegance of its ſtyle, by T. C. M. A. of Sidney-College in Cambridge.

(1) Prefixed to our Author's Acts and Monuments of the Church, London 1641, in fol.

(2) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 231. 2d edit. London 1721.

an elegant ſtyle; but afterwards applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity [B] with ſomewhat more fervency than circumſpection, and diſcovered himſelf in favour of the Reformation then in hand before he was known to them, who maintained the cauſe, or were of ability to protect the maintainers of it (h). His conduct in ſeveral reſpects, and eſpecially in abſenting himſelf from the chapel, occaſioning him to be ſuſpected of hereſy, he was obliged to leave the College [C] about St. Mary Magdalen's day in 1545 (i). His friends were greatly diſpleaſed with him, and his father-in-law grew implacable, and reſolved to detain from Mr. Fox his own father's eſtate; ſo that our Author was reduced to great diſtreſs, when he was taken into the houſe of Sir Thomas Lucy of Warwickſhire to inſtruct his children, where he married, and continued till they were grown up to riper years, and had no longer occaſion for a tutor (k). Being now again reduced to great neceſſity, he with ſome difficulty procured entertainment from his father-in-law for ſome time [D]; after which he removed to London a few years before the death of King Henry (l); and in the midſt of the greateſt diſtreſs imaginable was ſent for by the Ducheſs of Richmond to be tutor to the children of the Earl of Surrey, ſon of the Duke of Norfolk [E]. In this family he lived at Ryegate in Surrey (m) in the laſt years of the reign

(b) Vita Johannis Foxii.

(i) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 231.

(k) Vita Joh. Foxii.

(l) Ibid.

(m) Wood, Ath. Oxon. col. 231.

[B] Afterwards applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity.] His firſt care was to look into both the antient and modern Hiſtory of the Church; to learn what beginning it had; what growth and increaſe; by what arts it flouriſhed, and by what errors it began to decline; to conſider the cauſes of all thoſe controverſies, which in the mean time had ſprung up; and to weigh diligently of what moment they were, and what on either ſide was produced ſound or infirm. Prima illi diligentia fuit Eccleſiæ hiſtoriam omnem tum veterem, tum novam evolvere; cognoſcere quis Eccleſiæ exortus, quæ incrementa, quibus artibus floruerit, quo errore declinaverit, expendere controverſiarum, quæ intervenerant, cauſas, vim, & quid in utraque parte ſanum, quid ægrum eſſet (3). This he performed with ſuch vigour and application, and that before the thirtieth year of his age, he had read over all that either the Greek or Latin Fathers had left in their writings, the Schoolmen in their diſputations, the Councils in their acts, or the Conſiſtories in their decrees; and he acquired no mean ſkill in the Hebrew language. He uſed over and above his day's exerciſe to beſtow whole nights on his ſtudy, or not till it was very late betake himſelf to reſt. Near to the college was a grove, in which for the pleaſantneſs of the place, the Students took delight to walk, and ſpend ſome idle hours for their recreation. This place, and the dead time of the night, Mr. Fox choſe, with the horror of ſolitude and darkneſs, to confirm his mind, which trembled at the guilt of a new imagination. Eum locum noctemque delegerat, ubi tyronem animum pavidum conſcientiâ novæ cogitationis, adverſus metum, ipſo terrore ſolitudinis & tenebrarum firmaret (4).

(3) Vita Joh. Foxii.

(4) Ibid.

[C] He was obliged to leave the College.] Mr. Wood tells us (5), that "Henry VIII ſetting up a mongrel "Religion in the Land, which our Author did not "like, and ſhewing his opinion in ſeveral reſpects, "eſpecially by abſenting himſelf from the chapel, "did, with others of the ſame mind, reſign his Fel"lowſhip about St. Mary Magdalen's Day in 1545, "merely, as it was thought, to prevent expulſion." And the ſame Writer in his Hiſtoria & Antiquitates Univerſitatis Oxonienſis (6) ſays, that he was in a manner obliged to reſign his Fellowſhip. Sub Henrico VIII. qui hybridam quandam religionem induxerat, cum in Collegii ſacello ſacris intereſſe recuſaret, ſodalitio ſuo quaſi coactus ceſſit anno 1545. But Mr. Samuel Fox, in his Vita Johannis Foxii above quoted, informs us, that our Author being ſuſpected of hereſy, and upon examination not concealing his ſentiments, was condemned as an heretic, and expelled the College. And his enemies affirmed, that he was favourably dealt with by that ſentence, and might have been queſtioned for his life, if they had not choſen to uſe clemency towards him. Igitur appetitus rumore, inſidiis, inſimulatione omnium, quæſtione ſeverius habitâ, cum ultra celare conſilium ſuum non poſſet, neque in mendacio perfugium quærendum putaret homo ſimpliciſſimi inſtituti, collegiali judicio convictus, damnatuſque de hæreſi, motuſque de collegio eſt. Eâ ſententiâ molliſſime cum eo agi dicebant adverſarii, & potuiſſe capitis appellari niſi clementiam maluiſſent (7).

(5) Ubi ſupra, col. 231.

(6) Lib. 2. pag. 195.

(7) Vita Johannis Foxii.

[D] He with ſome difficulty procured entertainment from his father-in-law.] He wrote firſt to his father-in-law, in order to try, whether he would receive him or not. His father-in-law anſwered, that it ſeemed to him an hard condition to take a perſon into his houſe, whom he knew to be guilty, and condemned for a capital offence; that it would be dangerous to give him entertainment. However that if he would change his opinion, he might come, and continue there as long as he deſired; but if he could not be perſuaded to alter his mind, he ſhould content himſelf with ſtaying the ſhorter time, and not involve him and his mother in hazard of their fortunes, who were ready to do any thing for his ſake. Mr. Fox's circumſtances were ſuch, that he thought no condition to be refuſed. Beſides he was privately adviſed by his mother to come, and not fear his father-in-law's ſeverity, ſince it was neceſſary perhaps to write in the manner in which he did; but that when occaſion offered, he would compenſate for his words with his actions. In ſhort he met with better entertainment from his father-in-law, and his wife's father, than he expected; but ſo his buſineſs required, that he ſhould not rely long upon either; and therefore by often going to and fro from the one to the other, which carried in it ſome ſhew of buſineſs, he both eluded the diligence of thoſe, who inquired after him, and effected, that neither of them grew weary of his company (8).

(8) Ibid.

[E] In the midſt of the greateſt diſtreſs imaginable he was ſent for by the Ducheſs of Richmond, to be Tutor to the children of the Earl of Surrey, ſon of the Duke of Norfolk.] Having ſpent what either his friends had beſtowed on him, or his own induſtry had procured, as he ſat one day in St. Paul's Church, exhauſted with long faſting, his countenance meagre, and eyes hollow, after the ghaſtly manner of dying men, every one ſhunning a ſpectacle of ſo much horror, there came to him a perſon whom he never remembred to have ſeen before, who ſitting by him, and ſaluting him with much familiarity, put an untold ſum of money into his hand, bidding him be of good cheer, adding withal, that he knew not how great the misfortunes were, which oppreſſed him, but ſuſpected that it was no ſlight calamity. He deſired Mr. Fox to accept of that ſmall gift from a countryman, which common humanity obliged him to offer; and aſſured him, that new hopes were at hand, and a more certain condition of livelihood. Mr. Fox could never learn who the perſon was, that relieved him ſo ſeaſonably. Some, who conſidered the event of the prophecy, believed, that this man was ſent by ſome perſons, who had a regard for Mr. Fox's ſafety; and that it was probably thro' the ſervant's negligence that he ſuffered ſo much diſtreſs, before any relief came. It is certain, that within three days after, the iſſue ſeemed to make good the preſage; the Ducheſs of Richmond ſending to invite him into her ſervice. It happened not long before, that the Duke of Norfolk, and his ſon the Earl of Surrey, were committed to the Tower of London; and while they were in priſon, the Earl's children were ſent to the Ducheſs of Richmond their aunt, to be educated by her, viz. Thomas, who ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Norfolk; Henry, afterwards Earl of Northampton; and Jane, afterwards Counteſs of Weſtmoreland. The two young Noblemen made great advances in Literature under Mr. Fox's care, and the Lady Jane profited ſo greatly in the Latin and Greek Tongues, that ſhe might well ſtand in competition with the moſt learned men of that age (9).

(9) Ibid.

reign of King Henry VIII, and the whole reign of Edward VI (n); and was the firſt man who preached the Goſpel in that place, even when the Roman Catholic Religion was in great ſtrength (o). Under Edward VI he was reſtored to his Fellowſhip in Magdalen College (*). But upon the acceſſion of Queen Mary to the throne, Dr. Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, having reſolved to ſeize him [F], the Duke of Norfolk, his pupil, ſent a ſervant to Ipſwich-Haven, to hire a bark for conveying him beyond ſea; and becauſe it ſcarce ſeemed ſafe for Mr. Fox to ſtay in any city or place of reſort, the Duke ſent him to the houſe of one of his ſervants, a farmer, in order to wait for a fair wind. He at laſt with ſome difficulty put to ſea [G], and arrived with his wife, then big with child, at Newport, from whence he went to Antwerp, Francfort [H], and afterwards to Baſil (p), where he maintained himſelf by correcting for the preſs for Oporinus a Printer (q), and began to write his Hiſtory of the Acts and Monuments of the Church [I]. After Queen Elizabeth was ſettled in the throne, and the Proteſtant Religion well eſtabliſhed, he returned to England, and was entertained by the Duke of Norfolk at his manor-place, called Chriſt-Church in London; from whence Mr. Fox went every Monday to the houſe of John Day the Printer, to finiſh his Acts and Monuments of the Church (r) [K]. He might have been raiſed to very conſiderable preferments in the Church, if he would have accepted them; but the (n) Vita Joh. Foxii.

(o) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(*) Idem, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univerſit. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 195.

(p) Vita Joh. Foxii.

(q) Wood, Ath. Oxon.

(r) Idem, ibid.

[F] Upon the acceſſion of Queen Mary to the Throne, Dr. Stephen Gardiner, Biſhop of Wincheſter, having reſolved to ſeize him.] The Biſhop was very intimate with the Duke of Norfolk, Mr. Fox's pupil and patron, and often viſited him, and frequently deſired to ſee the Duke's Tutor. The Duke at firſt denied his requeſt, one while alledging his abſence, another while that he was indiſpoſed, ſtill pretending ſome reaſons to put him off. At length it happened, that Mr. Fox not knowing the Biſhop to be within the houſe, entered the room where the Duke and he were in diſcourſe; and ſeeing the Biſhop, with a ſhew of baſhfulneſs, withdrew himſelf. The Biſhop aſking who he was, the Duke anſwered, his Phyſician, who was ſomewhat uncourtly, being newly come from the Univerſity. I like his countenance and aſpect very well, replied the Biſhop, and upon occaſion will make uſe of him. The Duke immediately underſtood that ſpeech, as the meſſenger of ſome approaching danger; and now thought it time for Mr. Fox to retire; and accordingly furniſh'd him with means to go beyond ſea (10).

(10) Ibid.

[G] He at laſt with ſome difficulty put to ſea.] They had ſcarce weighed anchor, when a violent wind ariſing on a ſudden from the contrary ſhore occaſioned ſuch a ſtorm, that the Sailors were ſtruck with terror. A gloomy and tempeſtuous night followed, during which they with prodigious difficulty lay at anchor; and as ſoon as day appeared, and the ſtorm ſtill continuing, they returned to the haven, from whence they had ſet ſail the day before. In the mean while that Mr. Fox had been at ſea, a Purſevant from the Biſhop of Wincheſter had broken open the Farmer's houſe to apprehend him, wherever he ſhould be found, and bring him back priſoner to the city; but underſtanding that he was gone already, after he had purſued him to the very port, and there found that the ſhip, which he had embarked in, was yet ſcarce out of ſight, returned without ſucceſs. Mr. Fox, as ſoon as he came aſhore, hearing what had paſſed, tho' the news ſomewhat amazed him, yet recollecting himſelf, preſently took horſe, and made as if he would have left the town; but the ſame night returning he agreed with the maſter of the ſhip to ſet ſail again with the firſt convenient wind, telling him that his buſineſs required ſo; nor did he much care what ſhore he landed at. The maſter of the ſhip ſet ſail thence in the night, tho' the ſea was rough, and within two days landed Mr. Fox and his company in ſafety at Newport Haven (11).

(11) Ibid.

[H] Went to . . . Francfort.] We find his name among thoſe of the Engliſh Proteſtants, who took refuge in that city, in the Tract, intitled, The Troubles of Francford, printed in 1575; and upon the diviſion between them there, he eſpouſed the party of Knox and Whittingham, and retired to Baſil (12).

(12) See Fuller's Church Hiſtory, B. 8. Sect. 3. pag. 32.

[I] Began to write his Hiſtory of the Acts and Monuments of the Church.] He had publiſhed at Straſburgh, in 1554, in 8vo, Commentarii Rerum in Eccleſiâ geſtarum, maximarumque per totam Europam perſecutionum a Wiclevi, temporibus ad hanc uſque ætatem deſcript. in one Book; to which he added five more Books, all printed together at Baſil 1559 in fol.

[K] His Acts and Monuments of the Church.] This work was publiſhed at London 1563, in one thick volume in fol. with this title, Actes and Monuments of theſe latter and perillous days touching matters of the Churche, wherein are comprehended and deſcribed the great perſecutions and horrible troubles, that have been wrought and practiſed by the Romiſh Prelates, ſpecially in this Realme of England and Scotland, from the yeare of our Lorde a thouſand unto the time now preſent, &c. Gathered and collected accordyynge to the true copies and wrytinges certificatorie, as well of the parties themſelves that ſuffered, as alſo out of the Biſhops Regiſters, which were the doers thereof. By John Fox. Imprinted at London by John Day dwelling over Alderſgate beneth St. Martins, Anno 1563 the 20*th of March. Cum Gratia & Privilegio Regiæ Majeſtatis.* Mr. Fox preſented a copy of this Edition to Magdalen-College Oxford, and at the ſame time wrote a Latin Letter to Dr. Laurence Humphrey, printed by Mr. Thomas Hearne in his Appendix N° V. to his Preface to Adami de Domerſham Hiſtor. de Rebus Geſtis Glaſtonenſibus, Oxon. 1727 in 8vo, 2 vol. There was a fourth Edition at London 1583 in two volumes in fol. and it was reprinted in 1632 in three volumes in fol. The ninth Edition was printed at London in three volumes in fol. with copper cuts, the former Editions have only wooden ones. Mr. Wood obſerves (13), that the undertakers of this Edition had in a manner obtained a promiſe from King Charles II, to revive the order in Queen's Elizabeth's time of placing it in the common halls of Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, Heads of Colleges, &c. according to the Canons of Dr. Matthew Parker, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in 1571. Mr. Strype tells us (14), that when this Book was firſt publiſhed, our Author was thought "to have done very exquiſite ſervice to the Proteſtant cauſe, in ſhewing from abundance of antient Books, Records, Regiſters, and choice manuſcripts, the encroachments of Popes and Papalins, and the ſtout oppoſitions that were made by learned and good men in all Ages and Countries againſt them; and eſpecially under King Henry VIII and Queen Mary here in England, preſerving to us the memories of thoſe holy men and women, thoſe Biſhops and Divines, together with their Hiſtories, Acts, Sufferings, and their conſtant Deaths, willingly undergone for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel, and for refuſing to comply with Popiſh Doctrines and ſuperſtitions." Archbiſhop Whitgift (15) ſtyles Mr. Fox that worthy man, and tells Mr. Cartwright, the Puritan, that he had read over his Acts and Monuments from the one end to the other; and declares, that Mr. Fox hath very diligently and faithfully laboured in this matter [of Archbiſhops and Metropolitans,] and ſearched out the truth of it as learnedly as I knowe any man to have done. Camden likewiſe gives him and this work this character (16): Ex Eruditorum numero obiit Joannes Foxus Oxonienſis, qui Eccleſiaſticam Angliæ Hiſtoriam ſive Martyrologiam indefeſſo veritatis ſtudio primum Latinè, poſtea Anglicè auctius, magnâ cum laude contexuit. It has been found likewiſe by thoſe, who have ſearched the Records and Regiſters, which he uſed, and particularly by Biſhop Burnet and Mr. Strype, that he is always faithful. Nay this has been

(13) Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 232.

(14) Annals of the Reformation, pag. 238.

(15) Defence of the Anſwer to the Admonition, pag. 333.

(16) Elizabeth. Annales, pag. 558. edit. 8vo.

the only ones which he enjoyed were the Prebend of Shipton in the Church of Saliſbury, to which he was collated upon the death of Peter Vannes in May 1563, and the Vicarage of St. Giles's near Cripplegate in London; but this laſt Mr. Wood ſuppoſes he kept (if he had it at all) but a little while in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign, being always averſe to ſubſcribe the Canons, though tendered to him by Archbiſhop Parker [L], and to ſome part of the ceremonies of the Church. But though he was a Non-conformiſt, he was a very moderate one, and diſapproved of the heats of the rigid Puritans [M]. In 1564 he ſent a Latin Panegyric to the Queen upon her indulgence to ſome been owned by Mr. Collier, who takes all opportunities to depretiate his character, and undervalue his work, and affirms (17), that a vein of ſatyr and coarſe language runs thro' his martyrology. The Papiſts were very angry at the publication of this Hiſtory, "in "which their lies and cruelty were ſo fully expoſed; "and accordingly did all they could to blaſt the cre- "dit of both that and its Author. They called it "Fox's Golden Legend, and repreſented it a huge far- "del of moſt notorious lies and falſhoods (18)." In 1603, above forty years after the publication of Mr. Fox's Book, Father Robert Parſons publiſhed under the name of N. D. that is, Nicholas Doleman, A Treatiſe of the three Converſions from Paganiſm to Chriſtian Religion, in three volumes in 8vo; the principal deſign of which is to expoſe Mr. Fox's Church-Hiſtory. In this performance he charges Mr. Fox with falſities and impoſtures, manifeſt foolery and lying, with having a wicked ſpirit, being guilty of tergiverſation, uſing impertinent arguments, ſhewing a contempt of Antiquity, &c. He tells us, that Mr. Fox endeavoured to corrupt the Acts of old Martyrs, nay, that he diſcredited his own Martyrs; and pretends to have found 120 lies in leſs than three leaves of his Book. Mr. Wood obſerves (19), that as our Author "hath taken a great deal of pains in his Work, "and ſhewed ſometimes much judgment in it, ſo hath "he committed many errors therein, by truſting to the "relations of poor ſimple people, and in making ſuch "Martyrs, that were living after the firſt edition of "his Book came forth, though afterwards by him ex- "cuſed and omitted." He charges (20) Mr. Fox likewiſe with committing a moſt egregious falſity in reporting, that one Grimwood of Higham in Suffolk died in a miſerable manner for ſwearing and bearing falſe witneſs againſt one John Cooper a Carpenter of Watſam in the ſame County, for which he loſt his life. The miſerable death of the ſaid Grimwood was, as J. Fox ſaith, thus, that when he was in his labour ſtacking up a goſſe of corn, having his health, and fearing no peril, ſuddenly his bowels fell out of his body, and immediately moſt miſerably he died. Now ſo it fell out, that in the reign of Queen Elizabeth one Prit became Parſon of the Pariſh, where the ſaid Grimwood dwelt, and preaching againſt perjury, being not acquainted with his Pariſhioners, cited the ſaid ſtory of Fox; and it happening that Grimwood being then alive and in the ſaid Church, he brought an action upon the caſe againſt the parſon. But Judge Anderſon, who ſate at the Aſſizes in the County of Suffolk, did adjudge it not maintainable, becauſe it was not ſpoken maliciouſly. Mr. Wood refers to the Abridgment of many caſes and reſolutions of the common Law, written by Judge Henry Rolles, pag. 87. Sect. 7. tit. Action ſur Caſe. But Mr. Strype has ſhewn (21), that Mr. Fox has not had juſtice done him in this paſſage, ſince there was one Grimwood, who died in the manner abovementioned, though Mr. Fox was miſled by William Punt in inſerting this ſtory in his Martyrology, ſince what Cooper was tried for was not his Religion, but ſpeaking rebellious words againſt the Queen. Mr. Strype remarks (22) that "the e- "ſteem of our Author grew low among ſome even "of the Clergy;" and it is intimated by Dr. Walker (23), that "the Diſſenters pay a known and particu- "lar regard to Mr. Fox's Acts and Monuments;" which paſſage is animadverted upon by the Reverend Mr. John Lewis (24); who obſerves, that as to private ſtories, Mr. Fox and his friends uſed the utmoſt diligence and care, that no falſhood might be obtruded on the reader, and were very ready to correct any miſtakes that might happen.

[L] Always averſe to ſubſcribe the Canons, though tendered to him by Archbiſhop Parker.] Dr. Fuller tells us (25), that the Archbiſhop ſummoned him to ſubſcribe, that the general reputation of his piety might give the greater countenance to conformity. The old man produced the New Teſtament in Greek, To this, ſaith he, will I ſubſcribe. But when a ſubſcription to the Canons was required of him, he refuſed it, ſaying, I have nothing in the Church ſave a Prebend at Saliſbury, and much good may it do you, if you will take it away from me. "However, continues the Hiſtorian, "ſuch reſpect did the Biſhops (moſt formerly his "Fellow-Exiles) bear to his age, parts, and pains, "that he continued in his place till his death; who, "though no friend to the ceremonies, was otherwiſe "ſo devout in his carriage, that (as his neareſt rela- "tion ſurviving hath informed me) he never entered "any Church without expreſſing ſolemn reverence "therein."

[M] Though he was a Non-conformiſt, he was a very moderate one, and diſapproved of the heats of the rigid Puritans.] Fuller obſerves (26), that though Mr. Fox came not up in all particulars to cleave the pin of Conformity (as refuſing to ſubſcribe) yet he utterly diſtaſted the factious people of that age. The Hiſtorian then gives us a Latin Letter written by our Author to a Biſhop upon occaſion of his ſon Samuel's being expelled by the Puritan party from his Fellowſhip of Magdalen College in Oxford, after his return from his travels abroad, upon the groundleſs imputation of his having turned Papiſt. In this Letter Mr. Fox writes thus. Illud confiteor, ſemper caviſſe me ſedulo, ut ſi minus prodeſſe multis licuerit, ne ſciens tamen obeſſem cuiquam, tum vero minimè omnium Magdalenſibus; quo magis id mihi admirationi habetur, quis tam turbulentus genius factioſa iſta Puritanorum capita afflaverit, ut ſic violatis gratiarum legibus, ſpretis meis ad ſe literis & precibus, contempta ipſius Præſidis interceſſione, nullâ præmiſſâ admonitione, nec cauſſa redditâ is tantam hanc in me filiumque tyrannidem exercuerint .... Quod ſi enim, eſſem, qui perbacchari cum eis contra Epiſcopos & Archi-Epiſcopos, aut ſcribam me præbere illorum ordini, hoc eſt, inſanire cum illis voluiſſem, nunquam iſtos in me aculeos exacuiſſent. Nunc quia totus ab iis alienus, partes illas ſectari maluerim, quæ modeſtiæ ſunt, & publicæ tranquillitatis, hinc odium in me conceptum jam diu, in hanc demum effervuit acerbitatem. Quod cum ita ſit, non jam quid mea cauſa velitis facere, id poſtulo, quin potius quid veſtra ipſorum cauſa cogitandum ſit, vos, qui proceres eſtis eccleſiæ, etiam atque etiam deliberate. Quod ad me autem attinet, quamvis erepta filio ſocietas haud leni afficit animum ægritudine, tamen quia res privatæ agitur, hoc fero moderatius. Magis me commovet publicæ Eccleſiæ ratio. Video enim ſuboriri quoddam genus hominum, qui ſi invaleſcant, vireſque in hoc regno colligant, piget hic referre, quid futuræ perturbationis præſagit mihi animus. Olim ſub Monachorum fucatâ Hypocriſi quanta ſit nata lues Religioni Chriſtianæ, minime ignorat prudentia tua. Nunc in iſtis neſcio quod novum Monachorum genus reviviſcere videtur, tanto illis perniciоſius, quanto callidiore fallendi artificio ſub prætextu perfectionis perſonati iſti Hiſtriones gravius occultant venenum, qui dum omnia exigunt ad ſtrictiſſimæ ſuæ Diſciplinæ & Conſcientiæ gnomones, haud videntur prius deſtituri, donec omnia in Judaicam redigant ſervitutem. i. e. "It has always, I confeſs, been my great care, "if I could not be ſerviceable to many perſons, yet "not knowingly to injure any one, and leaſt of all "thoſe of Magdalen College. I cannot therefore but "the more wonder at the turbulent genius, which in- "ſpires thoſe factious Puritans, ſo that, violating the "laws of gratitude, deſpiſing my Letters and Prayers, "diſregarding the interceſſion of the Preſident him- "ſelf, without any previous admonition, or aſſigning "any cauſe, they have exerciſed ſo great tyranny "againſt me and my ſon. Were I one, who like "them, would be violently outragious againſt Biſhops

"and

(17) Eccleſiaſt. Hiſtory of Great Britain, Part 2. B. 4. pag. 233.

(18) Preface, pag. 14. to the Life of John Wicliffe D. D. By John Lewis A. M. Miniſter of Meregate, edit. London 1723 in 8vo.

(19) Ath. Oxon. col. 232.

(20) Col. 691, 692.

(21) Annals of the Reformation, vol. 1. cap. 21. ad ann. 1561.

(22) Life of Archbiſhop Whitgift, B. 3. cap. 16. pag. 255.

(23) Attempt towards recovering an account of the numbers and ſufferings of the Clergy of the Church of England, Preface, pag. 20. edit. London 1714. fol.

(24) Preface, pag. 14. to his Life of John Wicliffe, D. D.

(25) Church Hiſtory, B. 9. Sect. 3. pag. 76.

(26) Ibid. B. 9. Sect. 3. pag. 106.

(27) 107.

(1) Collier's Eccleſ. Hiſtory, Part 2. B. 6. pag. 501.

ſome of the Divines, who ſcrupled a ſtrict conformity to the Church (1) [N]. In 1570 he preached a Sermon of Chriſt crucified at St. Paul's-Croſs on Good-Friday, which was afterwards printed [O]. In July 1575 he wrote a Latin Letter to the Queen, to diſſuade her Majeſty from putting to death two Anabaptiſts, who had been condemned to be burnt [P]. He was remarkable for his piety, charity, humility, and intenſe application to

" and Archbiſhops, or join myſelf with them, that " is, would become mad, as they are, I had not met " with this ſevere treatment. Now becauſe, quite " different from them, I have choſen the ſide of Mo- " deſty and public Tranquillity, hence the hatred they " have a long time conceived againſt me, is at laſt " grown to this degree of bitterneſs. As this is the " caſe, I do not ſo much aſk you what you will do " on my account, as what is to be thought of for your " ſakes; you, who are Prelates of the Church, again " and again conſider. As to my ſelf, though the " taking away the Fellowſhip from my ſon is a great " affliction to me; yet, becauſe this is only a private " concern, I bear it with more moderation; I am much " more concerned upon account of the Church, which " is public. I perceive a certain race of men riſing " up, who, if they ſhould increaſe and gather ſtrength " in this Kingdom, I am ſorry to ſay what diſturbance " I foreſee muſt follow from it. Your prudence is not " ignorant how much the Chriſtian Religion ſuffered " formerly by the diſſimulation and hypocriſy of the " Monks. At preſent in theſe men I know not what " new ſort of Monks ſeems to revive, ſo much the " more pernicious than the former, as with more ſubtle " artifices of deceiving under pretence of perfection, " like ſtage-players, who only act a part, they conceal " a more dangerous poiſon: who while they require " every thing to be formed according to their own " ſtrict diſcipline and conſcience, will not deſiſt, " till they have brought all things into Jewiſh " Bondage." Upon this Letter Dr. Fuller (27) bids us remark the violence of rigid Non-conformiſts. We may perceive, ſays he, by this Letter, how powerful the party of Non-conformiſts was grown at that time, and to what violences and extravagancies ſome went in their practices, inſomuch that Dr. Humphreys, then Preſident of Magdalen, and Mr. Fox himſelf (both which ſcrupled ſubſcription in ſome particulars) were deſerted by them as lukewarm and remiſs in the cauſe. Mr. Fox's ſon was at laſt reſtored to his Fellowſhip by the Queen's mandate.

(27) Ibid. pag. 107.

[N] In 1564 he ſent a Latin Panegyric to the Queen, upon her indulgence of the Divines, who ſcrupled a ſtrict Conformity to the Church.] In the beginning of his addreſs " he mentions her Majeſty's retrieving the " Kingdom from the laſt degree of miſery and de- " clenſion; that ſhe had reformed Religion and the " Statute-Book, corrected idleneſs, ſuppreſſed robbe- " ries, and made the country orthodox and quiet. " That ſhe had recovered the mint to its old ſtandard; " and that the manners of her ſubjects were no leſs re- " fined and brightened than the coin. That theſe " State-Regulations, though very valuable in their " kind, came ſhort of the bleſſings in Religion. That " now truth was no longer perſecuted, conſcience had " its juſt liberty, and ſuperſtition gave way to the " Goſpel. And of this, ſays he, we have a remarkable " inſtance in your Majeſty's Anſwer to the Petition of " ſome Divines concerning the Eccleſiaſtical Habit. " What ſatisfaction this gracious indulgence gave the " Univerſal Church, what an advantage after-ages " would receive by it, and what an immortal honour " would deſcend upon her memory, is ſcarcely to be " imagined." From hence he proceeds to commend her for her encouragement of Learning, and the expectations of favour, which ſhe had given to the Univerſity of Cambridge. In the cloſe he acquaints her Majeſty, that " he deſigned to write her Hiſtory, and " had prepared ſome materials for that purpoſe; but " that theſe would be imperfect without further infor- " mation from her Majeſty; and after all he thought " her own genius nobly furniſhed to deſcribe her reign; " and that no body could do her juſtice better than " herſelf."

[O] In 1570 he preached a Sermon of Chriſt crucified at St. Paul's Croſs on Good-Friday, which was afterwards printed.] It was printed at London in 4to under the following title: A Sermon of Chriſt crucified, preached at Paul's Croſs the Friday before Eaſter, commonly called Good-Friday. Written and dedicated to all ſuch as labour and be heavy laden in conſcience, to be read for their ſpiritual comfort. By John Foxe. Seene and allowed. At London imprinted by John Day over Alderſgate 1570. Cum gratiâ & privilegio Regiæ Majeſtatis. The text is 2 Cor. v. 20, 21. The Sermon is divided into two parts; to which are ſubjoined, The Prayer in this Sermon made for the Church and all the States there, and A Poſtſcript to the Papiſtes. In this Poſtſcript he deſires the Papiſts, that " foraſmuch as " the controverſies between you and us, ſays he, " are weighty, and chiefly ſtand upon the effect and " working of Chriſtes Paſſion, you will therefore geve " the reading hereof, either to conſent to the Doctrine " if ye thinke it conſonant; or to refute the ſame, " if ye miſlike it. My ſaying and meaning is this. " I. That if ye finde by the Scripture of God, or any " approved Doctor, that the ſacrificed Body of the " ſonne of God, ſuffering once uppon the Croſſe on " Goodfriday, is not the only materiall and ſufficient " cauſe of our perfect ſalvation, remiſſion of ſinnes, " and juſtification. II. Or that the promiſe of God " (which is to ſalvation) ſtandeth not free, without " any condition of worke or workes to be added to " that effect, ſave only fayth in that perſon. III. Or " that Faith in Chriſt is not onely the meane and in- " ſtrument, whereby this paſſion is made to be " effectuall; you will bring out your profes, ſhew " your Learning, and what you can ſay: And if you " will not let the world be judge, yet let the world " heare your reaſons, let truth with judgment be " tryed, let rayling, trifling, and ſcoffing goe. Bloud " and perſecution is no way to find truth, but to blind " truth. The Scriptures in matter of ſalvation are " plaine and evident, teaching ſimply without trope " or figure, and ſoone will try the cauſe, &c." Mr. Wood (28) mentions an Edition of this Sermon at London 1609 in 8vo, and a Latin Tranſlation of it, intitled, De Chriſto crucifixo: Concio in die Paraſcev. in 2 Cor. cap. 5. verſ. 20, 21. London 1571 in 4to. Mr. Strype, who does not appear to have ever ſeen the Edition of this Sermon in 1570, is miſtaken in aſſerting (†) that it was preached in 1578, " and " printed in 1585, unleſs reprinted that year." His argument that it was preached about 1578 is drawn from a paſſage in the prayer, wherein Mr. Fox ſays, that the Queen had doubled the years of her ſiſter and brother; which very words are to be found in the prayer publiſhed in the Edition of the Sermon in 1570.

(28) Col. 232.

(†) Annals of the Reformation, vol. 2. B. 2. cap. 14. pag. 550.

[P] In July 1575 he wrote a Latin Letter to the Queen, to diſſuade her Majeſty from putting to death two Anabaptiſts, who had been condemned to be burnt.] Fuller, who tranſcribed this Letter from the Original, has publiſhed it in his Church Hiſtory (29). Mr. Collier obſerves (30), that it is written in a very handſome Chriſtian ſtrain. In this Letter Mr. Fox declares, that with regard to thoſe Fanatical ſects, he does not think they ought to be countenanced in a State, but chaſtiſed in a proper manner. But that to puniſh with the flames the bodies of thoſe, who err rather from blindneſs than obſtinacy of will, is cruel, and more ſuitable to the example of the Romiſh Church, than the mildneſs of the Goſpel; and in ſhort ſuch a dreadful cuſtom as could never have been introduced into the meek and gentle Church of Chriſt, except by the Popes, and particularly Innocent III, who firſt took that method of reſtraining Hereſy. He obſerves, that he does not write thus out of an indulgence to error, but, as he is a man, out of regard to the lives of men, that they may have an opportunity of repenting of their errors. He declares a tenderneſs for the lives, not only of men, but even of brute animals themſelves, and affirms, that he could never paſs by a ſlaughter-houſe without the ſtrongeſt ſenſe of pain and regret. He adores the clemency of God in appointing in the Moſaic Law, that the Blood of the Sacrifices ſhould be ſpilt at the

(29) B. 9. Sect. 3. pag. 104, 105.

(30) Eccleſiaſt. Hiſtory of Great Britain, Part 2. B. 6. pag. 549.

to the duties of his function. Beſides his writings already mentioned he wrote ſeveral others [Q]. He died on the 18th of April 1587, in the ſeventieth year of his age, and was interred in the Chancel of the Church of St. Giles's Cripplegate, where a monument is erected to his memory on the South-wall [R]. He left two ſons, Samuel and Thomas. Samuel, the eldeſt ſon, was born in the City of Norwich December the 31ſt 1560 (t), and in 1576 became Demy of Magdalen College, and afterwards Fellow of that College, and Maſter of Arts. In 1586 he had a leaſe of the manor annexed to the Prebend of Shipton ſettled on him by his father [S]. He was Steward to Sir Thomas Heneage, Vice-Chamberlain to the Queen; and in 1589 married Mrs. Anne Leveſon, in the foot of the Altar, before they were committed to the Flames; from whence we ought to learn, that the moſt juſt puniſhments ſhould be tempered with mercy. Quod igitur ad phanaticas iſtas ſectas attinet, eas certè in republicâ nullo modo fovendas eſſe, ſed idoneâ comprimendas correctione cenſeo. Verum enim vero ignibus ac flammis, picè ac ſulphure æſtuantibus viva miſerorum corpora torrefacere judicii magis cæcitate quam impetu voluntatis errantium, durum iſtud ac Romani magis exempli eſſe quam Evangelicæ manſuetudinis videtur, ac planè ejuſmodi, ut niſi a Romanis Pontificibus, authore Innocentio tertio primum influxiſſet, nunquam iſtum Perilli taurum quiſquam in mitem Chriſti Eccleſiam importaviſſet. Non quod maleficiis delector, aut errortibus cujuſquam faveam, dicta hæc eſſe velim: vitæ hominum, ipſe homo quum ſim, faveo, ideoque faveo, non ut erret, ſed ut reſipiſcat. Ac neque hominum ſolum, utinam & pecudibus ipſis opitulari poſſem. Ita enim, ſum (ſtultè fortaſſis hæc de meipſo, at verè dico) macellum ipſum ubi mactantur etiam pecudes, vix prætereo, quin tacito quodam doloris ſenſu mens refugiat. Atque equidem in eo Dei ipſius valde admiror venerorque toto pectore clementiam, qui in jumentis illis brutis & abjectis, quæ ſacrificiis olim parabantur, id proſpexerat, ne prius ignibus mandarentur, quam ſanguis eorum ad Baſim altaris effunderetur. Unde diſceremus in exigendis ſuppliciis, quamvis juſtis, non quid omnino rigori liceat, ſed ut clementia ſimul adhibita rigoris temperet aſperitatem. He intreats her Majeſty therefore to ſpare the lives of theſe wretches, or at leaſt to change the ſhocking manner of their puniſhment; to baniſh them, or commit them to perpetual impriſonment, or ſtigmatize, or even hang them; at leaſt not revive the Smithfield-fires, which through her Majeſty's care had been ſo long extinguiſhed. If this could not be granted, at leaſt to allow them a month or two, in order that endeavours might be uſed to reclaim them from their errors, and thereby to prevent the deſtruction of their ſouls as well as bodies. Quamobrem ſi tantum mihi apud Principis tanti majeſtatem audere liceret, ſupplex pro Chriſto rogarem clementiſſimam hanc regiæ ſublimitatis excellentiam pro authoritate hac meâ (31), quam ad vitam multorum conſecrandam (32), pellere (33) te divina voluit clementia, ut vitæ ſi fieri poſſit (quid enim non poſſit iis in rebus authoritas tua?) miſerorum parcatur, ſaltem ut horrori obſiſtatur, atque in aliud quodcunque commutetur ſupplicii genus. Sunt ejectiones, incluſiones retruſæ, ſunt vincula, ſunt perpetua exilia, ſunt ſtigmata & φλαγματα, aut etiam patibula; id unum valdè deprecor, ne piras ac flammas Smithfieldianas jam diu fauſtiſſimis tuis auſpiciis huc uſque ſopitas ſinas nunc recandeſcere. Quod ſi ne id quidem obtineri poſſit, id ſaltem omnibus ſupplicandi modis efflagito τᾶτο το φιλαγγικον pectoris tui implorans, ut menſem tamen unum aut alterum nobis concedas, quo interim experiamur, an a periculoſis erroribus dederit Dominus ut reſaneſcant, ne cum corporum jacturâ animæ pariter cum corporibus de æterno periclitentur exitio. But Fuller tells us, that though the Queen conſtantly called Mr. Fox her Father, yet ſhe gave him a flat denial as to the ſaving of their lives, if, after a month's reprieve and conference with Divines, they would not recant their errors. But they continuing ſtill inflexible, were burnt in Smithfield.

(t) See Strype's Life of Archbiſhop Whitgift, B. 3. cap. 16. pag. 255.

(31) It is probable that this ſhould be tuâ.

(32) Perhaps it ſhould be conſervandam.

(33) Perhaps tollere.

[Q] Beſides his writings already mentioned he wrote ſeveral others.] He wrote De cenſurâ, ſeu Excommunicatione Eccleſiaſticâ, Interpellatio ad Archiepiſcopum Cantuarienſem. London 1551 in 8vo. Tables of Grammar. London 1552. Wood tells us (34), that theſe "Tables were ſubſcribed in print by eight Lords of the "Privy Council; which Tables were quickly laid "aſide, as being far more too ſhort, than King "Henry VIII's Grammar was too long." Articuli ſive Aphoriſmi aliquot Joh. Wiclevi ſparſim aut ex variis illius Opuſculis excerpti per adverſarios Papicolas, ac concilio Conſtantienſi exhibiti. Collectanea quædam ex Reginaldi Pecocki Epiſcopi Ciceſtrienſis opuſculis exuſtis conſervata, & ex antiquo pſegmate tranſcripta. Opiſtographia ad Oxonienſes. These three laſt are printed with his Commentarii rerum in Eccleſiâ geſtarum at Straſburg 1554 in 8vo. Locorum communium Logicalium tituli & ordinationes 150, ad ſeriem prædicamentorum decem deſcripti, &c. Baſil 1557 in 4to. Probationes & Reſolutiones de re & materiâ ſacramenti Euchariſtici. This was printed at London about the year 1563. De Olivâ Evangelicâ: Concio in baptiſmo Judæi habita Londini 1 Apr. cum narratione Capitis XI. D. Pauli ad Romanos. London 1578. Tranſlated into Engliſh by James Bell. To this Latin Sermon is ſubjoined our Author's Comedy De Chriſto triumphante above mentioned. Concerning man's Election to Salvation. London 1581 in 8vo. Certain Notes of Election, added to Beza his Treatiſe of Predeſtination. London 1581 in 8vo. De Chriſto gratis juſtificante, contra Jeſuitas, London 1583 in 8vo. Diſputatio contra Jeſuitas & eorum argumenta, quibus inhærentem juſtitiam ex Ariſtotele confirmant. Rupell. 1585 in 8°. Eicaſmi ſeu meditationes in Apocal. S. Johannis Apoſtoli & Evangeliſtæ. London 1587, fol. Genev. 1596 in 8vo. Papa confutatus: vel ſacra & Apoſtolica Eccleſia papam confutans. This was tranſlated into Engliſh by James Bell, and printed at London in 4to. Brief Exhortation, fruitful and meet to be read in the time of God's Viſitation, where Miniſters do lack, or otherwiſe cannot be preſent to comfort them. Lond. in 8°. He tranſlated alſo from Engliſh into Latin. Concio funebris in Obitum Auguſtæ memoriæ Ferdinandi Cæſaris recens defuncti, in Eccleſ. Cath. S. Pauli habitæ 3 Octob. 1564. Alſo from Latin into Engliſh. 1. A Sermon of John Oecolampadius to young men and maidens. London in 12mo. 2. An inſtruction of Chriſtian Faith, how to lay hold upon the promiſe of God, and not to doubt of our Salvation. Or otherwiſe thus: Neceſſary Inſtructions of Faith and Hope for Chriſtians to hold faſt, and not to doubt, &c. London 1579, 2d Edition in 8vo. Written by Urbanus Regius. He finiſhed alſo An Anſwer Apologetical to Hierome Oſorius his ſlanderous Invective, begun in Latin by Walter Haddon L. L. D. London 1577 and 1581 in 4to: and he publiſhed The four Evangeliſts in the Old Saxon tongue, with the Engliſh thereunto adjoyned. Lond. 1571 in 4to. Bale mentions ſeveral other Writings of his; but Mr. Wood tells us (35), that ſome of them were never printed.

(34) Vol. 1. col. 135.

(35) Col. 233.

[R] Where a monument is erected to his memory on the South-Wall.] The Inſcription on it is as follows. Chriſto S. S. Johanni Foxo, Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ Martyrologo fideliſſimo, Antiquitatis hiſtoriæ Indagatori ſagaciſſimo, Evangelicæ Veritatis Propugnatori acerrimo, Thaumaturgo admirabili, qui Martyres Marianos tanquam Phœnices ex cineribus redivivos præſtitit. Patri ſuo omni pietatis officio imprimis colendo Samuel Foxus illius primogenitus hoc monumentum poſuit, non ſine lacrymis. Obiit die 18 Menſ. April anno Dom. 1587 jam ſeptuagenarius.

[S] In 1586 he had a Leaſe of the Mannor annexed to the Prebend of Shipton ſettled on him by his Father.] Mr. Strype tells us (56), that this was done upon Mr. Samuel Fox's return home from his travels, which was about the end of June, as appears from a Journal of his; but Dr. Piers, Biſhop of Sarum, a Court-Prelate, had begged it of the Queen to collate it, and accordingly had the grant of it. Upon this Mr. Fox applied himſelf in his father's name to Archbiſhop Whitgift, declaring his caſe, who immediately gave him a letter dated July the 14th to the Biſhop of Sarum; and the Biſhop readily granted his requeſt, "out of a due ſenſe, ſays Mr. Strype, of a man that "had ſo well deſerved of the Church for his vaſt "written labours of the Hiſtory of the Church, and "the perſecutions of the true profeſſors of it. Nay in the houſe of Sir Moyle Finch at Eaſtwel in Kent, by whom he had the year following a daughter named Anne (u). In 1610 he wrote his father's life prefixed to his Acts and Monuments of the Church (w). THOMAS Fox, the younger ſon of our Author, was educated at King's College in Cambridge, and became afterwards an eminent Phyſician at London, and Fellow of the College there (x). His daughter Anne, who was heir to him, married Sir Richard Willis Bart. of Ditton in Eſſex, ſometime Colonel General of the Counties of Lincoln, Nottingham and Rutland, and Governor of the Town and Caſtle of Newark.

(36) Life of Archbiſhop Whitgift, B. 3. cap. 16. pag. 254.

(u) Ibid.

(w) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. I. col. 233.

(x) Strype, pag. 254.

" more than his requeſt. For he promiſed to ſettle an " exhibition upon Father Fox's ſecond ſon, whoſe name " was Thomas, bred up in King's College Cambridge; " and, when he was capable of it, of a Prebend in " his Church of Sarum. For to this tenour did the " Biſhop's anſwer to the Archbiſhop run, dated the " ſame day with the Archbiſhop's to him. . . . This " was the judgment and venerable eſteem the Arch- " biſhop and Churchmen in thoſe days had of that re- " verend and learned Confeſſor and his labours."

T

FRACHETTA (JEROM) a native of Rovigo in Italy, gained great reputation by his political works [A]. He ſpent ſeveral years in Rome, where he was greatly eſteemed by Seſſa, Embaſſador of Philip II and Philip III, Kings of Spain, and he was employed in affairs of ſtate as well as of war, on which occaſion he diſcharged his duty with great applauſe; but notwithſtanding this he had like to have been ruined, and even loſt his life by the enemies he met with. He then withdrew to Naples; and ſtill enjoying friends to protect his innocence, he proved it to the Court of Spain, who thereupon ordered Count de Benevento, Viceroy of Naples, to employ him, whenever there ſhould be an opportunity, as a very faithful ſervant. This was accordingly done, by which means Frachetta lived in a very honourable manner at Naples, where a handſome penſion was allowed him (a). I know not on what foundation Moreri aſſerts, that his indiſcreet zeal involved him in ſome very unlucky affairs; for Ghilini, who is the only Author cited on this occaſion, does not hint at any thing like this.

(a) Extracted from Ghilini, tom. I. pag. 120, 121.

[A] Gained great reputation by his Political Works.] The moſt conſiderable of them all, is that intitled il Seminario de' Governi di Stato, & di Guerra. He therein has collected under CX Chapters, about eight thouſand military and ſtate maxims, extracted from the beſt Authors; and has added to each Chapter, a Diſcourſe which ſerves as a Commentary to it. This Work was printed twice, at leaſt, by the Author. It was alſo reprinted at Venice in 1647, and at Genoa in 1648, in 4to; and there was added to it il Principe, of the ſame Writer, nel quale ſi conſidera il Principe & quanto al Governo dello Stato, & quanto al maneggio della Guerra. This laſt Work had been printed in Venice appreſſo Gio. Baptiſta Ciotti, anno 1599, in 8vo, and this Edition had been corrected and enlarged by the Author. The firſt Edition was doubtleſs in 1597; for the Dedication is dated from Rome the 7th of November of that year. It informs us, that Frachetta was prompted to write this Book, from a converſation he had with the Duke of Seſſa, in which the latter obſerved, among other particulars, that he thought it was as important a taſk, as it would be a difficult one, to inform Princes of the truth of ſuch Tranſactions as happen in their Dominions. I am to obſerve, that before he publiſhed il Seminario de' Governi he printed a general idea of that Work in 1592. His other Compoſitions are, Diſcorſo della Ragione di Stato: Diſcorſo della Ragione di Guerra: Eſpoſizione di tutta l' Opera di Lucrezio (1).

(1) See Theatre de Ghilini, Part. I. pag. 121.

FRANC (MARTIN) Provoſt and Canon of Lauſanne, and Secretary to Pope Fœlix V, and Pope Nicholas V, flouriſhed about the middle of the fifteenth Century. He was one of the beſt French Poets of that age. He wrote a Poem againſt the Romance of the Roſe, and intitled it the Champion of the Ladies. We therein find ſeveral verſes relating to Pope Joan [A]. I do not believe that David Blondel includes this Author in the

[A] We find in his Champion of the Ladies, ſeveral verſes relating to Pope Joan.] I will tranſcribe ſome of them, and am fully perſuaded that they will be agreeable to many. But I muſt premiſe, that the Work conſiſts of a Dialogue between the adverſary of the Ladies and their Champion. The following lines are an objection propoſed by the adverſary, and it is extracted from his Hiſtory of the She-Pope.

Tu ſcais qu'elle ſceut tant de lettres,
Que pour ſon ſens on la crea
Papeſſe & Preſtreſſe des Preſtres.
O comme bien eſtudia!
O grande louange ſi a!
Femme ſe diſſimula homme,
Et ſa nature regnia, Pour devenir Pape de Rome.

O benoiſt Dieu comme oſa femme
Veſtir chaſuble & chanter Meſſe:
O femme oultrageuſe & infame;
Comment euſt elle la hardieſſe,
De ſe faire Pape & Papeſſe?
Comment endura Dieu, comment,
Que femme ribaulde & Preſtreſſe
Euſt l' Egliſe en gouvernement?

Lors le monde eſtoit bien nouvel:
Dire l'on peut qu'il ne tenoit
Sinon à la queuë d'un vel,
Puis que femme le gouvernoit.
Merveille eſtoit que ne tournoit
Le ciel, & que pour vengement
Dieu ſur la terre ne venoit
Tenir ſon cruel jugement.

Mais il eſt tardif à punir
En attendant que l'on s'amende,
Et quand on ne peut revenir
A raiſon, combien qu'il attende,
Certes c'eſt force qu'il entende
A donner ſa punition,
Et qu' à juſtice ſon droit rende
Sans plus longue remiſſion.

Ainſi touſjours pas n'endura
Que l'Egliſe fuſt abuſée

De

the catalogue given by him of the Writers who affirmed that the ſtory of this female-Pope is true. But this would not be the only Author he has omitted [B]. Authors are not

De celle qui trop y dura,
Car ſa fraude fut encuſée ;
O vengeance bien adviſée
La ſaincte Papeſſe enfanta,
Nonques plus la putain ruſée
A l'autel Sainct Pierre chanta.

Entre le Mouſtier Saint Clement
Et Colliſée chacun vit
Le feminin enchantement.
Si fut tantoſt fait un edict
Que jamais Pape ne ſe fiſt,
Tant euſt il de ſcience au nas,
S'il ne montroit le doy petit
Enharnachié de ſon harnas.

O Dames Dames couronnez
Voſtre Pape & Voſtre Papeſſe,
Deſſus les quatre couronnez
Elle acreut moult voſtre nobleſſe,
Alors le Champion ſe dreſſe,
Et en jettant le dextre bras
Dit, temps eſt que ce parler ceſſe,
De ce mal tu te remembras (1).

(1) Champion des Dames, printed in Paris, by Galliot du Pré, in 1530, folio 335. This work is dedicated to Philip II, Duke of Burgundy, ſirnamed the Good.

The ſenſe is,

" You know, ſhe had ſo much ſenſe and learning, " that ſhe was created Pope, and by that means be- " came the Prieſteſs of Prieſts. How much did ſhe " ſtudy ! What praiſes are due to her ! A woman pre- " tended to be a man, and belied her ſex, in order to " be made Pope of Rome. ... Heavens ! How could " a woman preſume to put on the chaſuble and chaunt " maſs. O inſolent and infamous female ! How " could ſhe have the impudence, to ſet her ſelf up for " male and female Pope ? How could God ſuffer a proſti- " tute, a Prieſteſs to govern the Church ? .. The world " was then in its infant ſtate, and we may affirm that " it was ſuſtained very ſlightly, ſince a woman preſided " over it. It was a wonder that the heavens did not " turn round : and that God out of revenge, did not " come upon the earth, to hold his cruel judgment. " ... But he is ſlow to puniſh, in hopes that mortals " will reform ; but when he finds they will not, after " the wicked have long exerciſed his patience, he at " laſt muſt chaſtiſe, and inflict thoſe puniſhments to " which juſtice obliges him. ... It therefore was not " permitted that the Church, after having been ſo long " impoſed upon, ſhould be always ſo, her fraud being " diſcovered. O well concerted vengeance ! The She- " Pope was delivered of a child, and ſo the artful " proſtitute chaunted no longer at St. Peter's Altar. " ... Between the monaſtery of St. Clement and the " Coliſeum at Rome every one was a ſpectator of the " female enchantment ; immediately after which, a " decree was made, that no perſon how learned ſoever, " ſhould be elected Pope, without firſt giving a proof " of his virility. .. Ladies whoſe heads are adorned " with a Crown, your ambiguous Pope has greatly " increaſed your glory... Then the Champion riſing " up, and throwing down his gauntlet, ſaid, it is time " for us to put an end to this diſcourſe ; thou ſhalt " have reaſon to remember this evil."

I ſhall not copy the Champion's reply, who makes the beſt apology he can for Pope Joan, and recriminates on ſeveral Popes. Here follows a ſpecimen of his Diſcourſe.

Or laiſſons les pechez diſans
Qu'elle eſtoit Clergeſſe lettrée,
Quant devant les plus ſouffiſans
De Rome eut l'iſſue & l'entrée.
Encor te peut eſtre monſtrée
Mainte Préface que dicta.
Bien & ſainctement accouſtrée
Où en la foi point n'heſita.

The ſenſe is,

" Let us obliterate the remembrance of her crimes, " and ſay that ſhe was a learned She-Prieſt, and ſhone " ſuperior to any one in Rome. Beſides, many a " good and pious Preface ſhews, that ſhe was fixed " in the faith."

* A kind of Cope.

[B] But this would not be the only Author he has omitted.] Mareſius obſerves that he has forgot among other Authors him who wrote the piece intitled, l'Arbre des Batailles (the Tree of Battles.) Eſt quoque mihi, ſays he (2), vetus manuſcriptum Gallicum compoſitum ante 300 annos quod inſcribitur, l'Arbre des Batailles. i. e. " I have in my poſſeſſion an old French manuſcript " written 300 years ago, entitled, l'Arbre des Batail- " les," compoſed by Mr. Honoré Bonet, Doctor of the Canon-Law and Prior of Challon, to the honour of God, and in behalf of King Charles VI, ſirnamed the Beloved. Illius libri p. 1. cap. 7. author explicans quo ſenſu in Apocalypſi tertia pars ſolis dicatur obſcurata ad tubam Angeli quarti, idque intelligens de multis qui circa illa tempora ſedem pontificiam illegitimè occupaverant, ſic inter alia ſuo ſtylo loquitur. i. e. " The " Author explaining in part I, chap. 7. of that Book, " in what ſenſe the third part of the Sun is ſaid, in " the Revelations, to be eclipſed at the ſound of the " fourth Angel's trumpet ; and taking it to be ſpoken " of many who, about thoſe times, had uſurped " the Papal Chair, ſays, among other things, after " this manner." And it happened at this time, that the Pope dying, a woman was raiſed to the Pontifical Throne, without being ſuſpected to be of that ſex. This female came from England ; and could people forbear being in deep affliction, to ſee a woman created Pope ? Eam ex Anglia fuiſſe dicit, quod forte ſe curaſſet nominari Johannem Anglicum, vel ut habet vetus fragmentum apud Wolphium, Johannem de Anglia, cum tamen natione Moguntina eſſet. Et credo quod ſi hoc Catalaunenſis Prioris teſtimonium vidiſſet Rev. & Cel. Blondellus, qui etiam Catalaunenſis fuit, minus impendiſſet operæ in veritate iſtius hiſtoriæ oppugnanda. i. e. " He de- " clares that ſhe was born in England, perhaps be- " cauſe ſhe had aſſumed the name Engliſh John ; or, " according to an old fragment in Wolphius, John " of England, tho' ſhe was a native of Mentz. And " I am of opinion, that if the reverend and celebrat- " ed Blondel had ſeen this teſtimony of the Prior of " Challon, his countryman, he would not have taken " ſo much pains to oppoſe the truth of this ſtory." He obſerves, a little after, that Egbert Grim, an Engliſh Author, and a Licentiate in Divinity (3), had publiſhed a Flemiſh Book on Pope Joan, in which he cited the teſtimony of 135 Authors. Blondel mentions but a few above ſeventy.

A book intitled, l'Arbre des Batailles.

(2) Samuel Mareſius, in Joanna Papiſſa reſtituta, pag. 11.

(3) He was Profeſſor in Weſel, and died anno 1636, aged 28 years. Mareſius, ibid. pag. 12.

Since we have had occaſion to ſpeak of Honore Bonet (4), it will be neceſſary, for the reader's inſtruction, for me to take notice of ſome errors relating to this Writer. I ſay then, that Du Verdier Vauprivas calls him Honnoré Bonner, Prior of Salon, and aſcribes to him a Book, containing 165 chapters, entitled l'Arbre des Batailles, and dedicated to King Charles V. He adds that this Book was printed at Paris, by John Du-Pré, anno 1495. Here we find three variations between Du Verdier and Samuel Mareſius : 1ſt, with reſpect to the Author's name ; 2dly, with regard to the name of his Priory ; and 3dly, with reſpect to the Prince who was the hero of the Book. I don't doubt but that Mareſius's teſtimony, as to the firſt and third articles, is better than that of Du Verdier, becauſe Father Labbe the Jeſuit does not cenſure him, as having committed an error on this occaſion. The epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque has an unaccountable blunder in it, the title of a Book being metamorphoſed into an Author's name. See pag. 534, you will there find l'Arbre Batailles de bello & duello. Pag. 360, you will find, Honoratus Bonhor ſcripſit de bello & duello. Thus you find three different names (5) given to the Author of l'Arbre des Batailles. Let us ſee in what manner Father Labbe has criticiſed Mareſius (6). In Honorato Boneto auctore libri vernaculi qui inſcribitur l'Arbre des Batailles, multa peccat : I. Priorem de Challon vocat, cùm fuerit de Salon. II. Compoſitum librum dicit ante annos 300, cùm tamen Carolus VI, cui dicatus fuit, regnarit duntaxat ab anno 1388, ad 1422. III. Challon reddit Catalaunenſem, id eſt, Chaalons. cùm appellare Cabillonenſem debuiſſet. Ita enim diſcriminantur illæ Civitates : hæc Matronæ in Campania, illa Arari in Burgundia impoſitæ, utraque Epiſcopalis. IV. Atque hinc longè abſurdior apparet alluſio, alioquin

(4) Spondanus mentions him, ad ann. 1395, num. 10. and ſays, that he was an Auſtin Friar, and wrote a dream againſt the ſchiſm.

(5) Bonnet, Bonner, Bonhor.

(6) In Johannæ Papiſſæ Cenotaphio everſo, ad calcem Diſſertat. de Scriptoribus Eccleſ. tom. 1. pag. 922.

Alpina

(a) La Croix du Maine, pag. 314.

not agreed with regard to the native country of Martin Franc [C]. His Eſtrif de fortune & de vertu (a), printed at Paris in 1505 (b), is a mixture of proſe and verſe.

(b) Du Verdier Vau Privas, fixes it at the year 1519.

Alpina nivé frigidior : Quòd ſi illius teſtimonium vidiſſet Blondellus qui Catalaunenſis fuit, minus impendiſſet operæ in fabula illa expugnanda. i. e. " He has " committed many miſtakes, with regard to Honoré " Bonet, author of a Book written in our tongue, and " entitled, l'Arbre des Batailles. 1ſt, He calls him " Prior of Challon, whereas he was of Salon. 2dly, " He ſays that this Book was compoſed three hundred " years ſince ; whereas Charles VI, to whom it was " dedicated, reigned only from the year 1388, to " 1422. 3dly, He tranſlates Challon, Catalaunenſis, " that is Chaalons, inſtead of calling it Cabillonenſis : " For in this manner thoſe Cities are diſtinguiſhed, " the one ſtanding on the river Marne in Champagne, " and the other on the Saone in Burgundy, and both " of them epiſcopal cities. 4thly, And hence the alluſion, otherwiſe more cold than the Alpine ſnows, " appears much more abſurd. Had Blondel, who was " born at Challon, ſeen this teſtimony, he would not " have taken ſo much pains, to oppoſe the truth of this " ſtory."

[C] Authors are not agreed with regard to the native Country of Martin Franc.] Preſident Fauchet (7) affirms, that he was born in the County of Aumale in Normandy. But according to John le Maire de Belges, he was of Arras (8).

(7) Des anciens Poëtes François, lib. 2. pag. 205.

(8) John le Maire, Couronne Margaritique, pag. m. 57.

FRANCIS of Aſſiſi, a great Saint of the Romiſh Church, and founder of one of the four Orders of Mendicant Friars, was born at Aſſiſi in Italy about the year 1181. He was ſon to a merchant, whoſe profeſſion he followed till the year 1206 ; at which time he was ſo ſtrongly affected with the precepts of the Goſpel, that he reſolved to retire from the world (a). He devoted himſelf ſo much to ſolitude ; mortified himſelf to ſuch a degree, and thereby contracted ſo ghaſtly a countenance, that the inhabitants of Aſſiſi thought him diſtracted (b). His father now thought of making him reſume his firſt profeſſion, and employed a very ſevere method for that purpoſe, by throwing him into priſon ; but finding this made no impreſſion on him, he took his ſon before the Biſhop of Aſſiſi, in order to make him reſign all claim to his paternal eſtate, which he not only agreed to, but ſtript off all his clothes, even to his ſhirt [A]. He prevailed with great numbers of people to devote themſelves, as he had done, to the poverty enjoined by the Goſpel ; and drew up an inſtitute, or rule for their uſe, which was approved by the Roman Pontiffs. To extinguiſh the fire of luſt he uſed to lie on ice and ſnow [B] ; but this is all he thought proper to imitate in the conduct of St. Aldhelme, he not daring to venture, as his Saint did, near women, in the moment when he was preyed upon by laſcivious deſires [C] ; and he very poſſibly acted wiſely, for who knows whether he would have triumphed

(a) Spondan. ad ann. 1208, num. 7.

(b) Bonaventura, in Vita Sancti Franciſci.

[A] He ſtript off all his clothes even to his ſhirt.] Let us ſee in what manner Ferrand has endeavoured to juſtify this new Saint, at the expence of the Prophet David. Michal, David's wife, ſays he (1), ſpying from a window her huſband, who, tranſported with a holy fervor, leap'd and danced before the ark of the Lord, deſpiſed him in her heart, and... ſaid to him with an air of raillery, How glorious was the King of Iſrael to day, who uncovered himſelf before the eyes of the handmaids of his ſervants, as one of the vain fellows ſhameleſly uncovereth himſelf ! Now theſe laſt words of the ſacred writings ſeem to denote, that David ſtript himſelf quite naked ; nevertheleſs as the Scripture (verſ. 14.) ſpeaking of David's dancing before the Ark, ſays that he had a linnen ephod on, I am of opinion that he did not ſtrip himſelf ſtark naked. But then he ſtript himſelf ſo far as to appear as naked, and, in that, to act in a manner unworthy of the gravity and majeſty of a King ; eſpecially as this was done publickly and in preſence of a large concourſe of people. This action of David, conſidered with all its circumſtances, is not more becoming than that of St. Francis, who had very few ſpectators : ſo that, if the behaviour of the one deſerved cenſure, that of the other ought alſo to be blamed ; and accordingly we find that Michal laughed at it. But let us ſee whether the Holy Spirit laughed at it ; and we may judge from thence whether we ought to laugh at the action of St. Francis. He afterwards quotes the anſwer which David made to Michal ; and the remarks made by the Scripture with reſpect to the barrenneſs of this woman. I will alſo employ Ferrand's words to exhibit the nakedneſs of St. Francis, and I thereby ſhall not need to fear thoſe reproaches, which he levelled at his adverſary (2). " (3) As to what is obſerved by the Apoloſiſt, with regard to St. Francis's ſtripping off his " clothes, I will relate that incident as told by St. Bonaventure. This terreſtrial and carnal Father (ſays † St. Bonaventure, ſpeaking of St. Francis's father) " after having taken this ſon of grace's money from " him, endeavoured to carry him before the Biſhop of " the City, in order that he (in his preſence) might " give up all claim to his father's eſtate, and return " back all he poſſeſſed. Francis did this ; and he even " gave back his clothes to his father, under which was " found a hair-cloth, wherewith he uſed to macerate " his fleſh. After this ‡ being excited by a wonderful " fervour of zeal which intoxicated or tranſported him, " he ſtript himſelf ſtark naked before all the ſpectators, and ſpoke as follows to his father. Hitherto " I have called you my father on earth ; but from this " time I may ſafely ſay, ‡ our father which art in " heaven, ſince I have put all my treaſure and confidence in him. The Biſhop ſeeing this, and admiring ſo excellent a fervour in the man of God, " roſe from his ſeat ; and being a devout, good natured man, he took Francis in his arms with tears " in his eyes, and covered him with his cloak."

(1) Ferrand, Reponſe à l'Apologie pour la Reformation, pag. 364, 365.

(2) He charged Mr. Jurieu to have acted unfairly, in relating the actions of Francis de Aſſiſi, and cites ſome of his falſhoods, beſides the two mentioned in the remark [H]. Ferrand, Réponſe à l'Apologie pour la Reformation, pag. 361.

(3) Ibid. pag. 362, 363.

† Tentabat deinde pater carnis, &c. ibid.

‡ Inſuper ex admirando fervore, &c. ibid.

‡ Matth. vi. 9.

[B] To extinguiſh the fire of luſt, he uſed to lie on ice and ſnow.] I ſhall ſtill make uſe of Ferrand's verſion. " The bleſſed Francis, ſays St. Bonaventure, at the be" ginning of his converſion, uſed to plunge frequent" ly, during the winter-ſeaſon, into a ditch full of ice, " in order to gain a complete conqueſt over his dome" ſtic enemy ; and to preſerve the white robe of cha" ſtity from the conflagration of pleaſure. He affirmed, " that a ſpiritual man choſe infinitely rather to ſuffer " great cold in his fleſh, than to feel ever ſo little in " his ſoul the heat of carnal pleaſure. Being ſtrong" ly ſollicited one day by the emotions of the fleſh, " he pulled off his clothes, and ſcourged himſelf " ſoundly. Being after this enflamed with a wonder" ful fervour of mind, he opened his cell ; and com" ing out of it, he went into a garden, where, after " having plunged his little naked body into a great " heap of ſnow, he made ſeven balls of them ; when, " ſetting them before him, he ſpoke as follows to his " outward man. The greateſt of theſe ſnow-balls is " thy wife, and the other four thy two ſons and two " daughters. The other two are thy man and maid " ſervant which thou muſt entertain in thy ſervice. " Make haſte therefore and dreſs them, for they are " almoſt dead with cold. But if the great trouble " they put thee to, is uneaſy to thee, ſerve carefully " one only God. The Devil, who then tempted St. " Francis, being overcome, retired immediately, and " the holy man returned victorious into his cell ; for, " by his having ſuffered a great cold outwardly, he ex" tinguiſhed to ſuch a degree the internal flames of " luſt, that he was never troubled with them after" wards (4)."

(4) Ferrand, Réponſe à l'Apologie pour la Réformation, pag. 368.

[C] He not daring to venture, like St. Aldhelme, near women, when preyed upon by laſcivious deſires.] Aldhelme umphed over temptation, like St. Aldhelme? But to ſpeak in a more expreſs and poſitive manner, we may declare that his conduct was infinitely more prudent than that of the other Saint. It is a mad raſhneſs in perſons who aſpire to the greateſt purity, to approach ſo Aldhelme who, from being Friar, was made a Biſhop in England, about the cloſe of the ſeventh Century, uſed to go into the water as high as the ſhoulders, even in the depth of winter, to ſuppreſs the rebellion of the fleſh. But he nevertheleſs, on ſome occaſions, would expoſe himſelf to ſome dangers; he uſed not to fly from women when he found himſelf tempted; on the contrary, he would get one, lie down by her till the temptation was paſt, and nature had recovered its uſual calm. He uſed to exaſperate the Devil by this great triumph, this not preventing him from ſinging Pſalms; and he would ſend away the woman without having committed any laſcivious action with her. This is a coarſe tranſlation of the Latin which I have inſerted in the margin (5); but here follows an inimitably-charming paraphraſe. "St. Aldhelme was an Engliſh "Monk in the eighth Century; and, for his learning "and piety was made a Biſhop. The circumſtance "for which his ſanctity was moſt conſpicuous, was, "a chaſtity which no temptation could ſurmount, and "it was ſo the much more worthy of admiration, as "it had put him to dreadful ſtruggles; for the Author of his Life relates, that he uſed to plunge himſelf either into water or ſnow, to extinguiſh the "flames of luſt. He doubtleſs muſt have been preſſed very hard, to have recourſe to ſuch violent remedies; and nevertheleſs he ſubjected this rebellious fleſh to ſuch a degree, that his conſcience was "no longer alarmed with the preſence of the moſt beautiful women. He even made his victory ſtill more complete, by lying with girls, in order that "he might triumph over the moſt dangerous temptations, and in which the greateſt Saints perhaps would have ſtaggered. The imagination of any other man but himſelf would have been greatly diſtracted on ſo delicate an occaſion; whereas he would repeat the whole Pſalter gradually, and all the emotions of his heart were directed to heaven only. He here ſays, that the Devil was tranſported to a wild fury, to ſee him thus brave danger; and to find his virtue increaſe in ſtrength, at a time when it is generally obſerved to ſink. However, Father Henſchenius would not adviſe the preſent Saints, of either ſex, to expoſe their virtue to ſuch mighty trials. In his opinion, this example ought to be admired rather than imitated; and it is raſh in any perſon to put ſo much confidence in his own ſtrength (6)." I wonder how Father de la Mainferme came to omit this incident, becauſe it might help him out admirably at a dead lift. Aldhelme, going to bed to a woman, then repeating the praiſes of God in ſpite of temptation, and gaining a complete conqueſt over nature in the midſt of ſo great danger, has nevertheleſs been rank'd among the Saints, and merited this honour by the great number of miracles he wrought. Why therefore ſhould it be thought ſo ſtrange, that the bleſſed Robert d'Arbriſſel ſhould go to bed to a Nun, in order to gain a victory ſo much the more meritorious, as the atchieving it would have been more difficult? If people will blame this (for it really deſerves very heavy cenſure) at leaſt it muſt be acknowledged, from the example of the Engliſh Biſhop we ſpoke of, that it is no obſtacle to the gift of miracles.

I have ſpoke (7) of an honeſt hermit, who let fall his Breviary, upon ſeeing two perſons who were ſporting in an amorous way. But this would not have happened to him, had he been endued with the ſame ſtrength of mind as St. Aldhelme. This Saint, tho' a beautiful woman was lying by his ſide, did not omit a word of his Breviary or Pſalmody; and I don't doubt, had the caſe of conſcience, which Peter Damianus examined been put to him, he would have made the ſame anſwer as Peter Damianus. This incident is related in La Mothe le Vayer. Agnes, ſays he (8), widow of Henry II (9), cauſed a Biſhop to put the following queſtion to Peter Damianus, one of the moſt learned Eccleſiaſtics of his age, Utrum liceret homini inter ipſum debiti naturalis egregium aliquid ruminare pſalmorum (‡ α); i. e. "Whether a "man during the performance of conjugal duty, may "lawfully repeat to himſelf any part of the Pſalms?" This doubt was reſolved in the affirmative, as we are told by Baronius, on the authority of a paſſage in St. Paul, who declares, in his firſt Epiſtle to Timothy (*), that God may be prayed to in all places. Could one believe, that an Empreſs had been ſo weak as to aſk ſuch queſtions? And, ſuppoſing a woman's curioſity had been carried ſo far, did it become grave caſuiſts to canvaſs and examine them? It has been very juſtly obſerved, that the human mind will pry into every thing: the moſt gloomy and darkeſt receſſes are not inacceſſible to it, but it will endeavour to carry a torch into them, in ſpite of all the laws of decency. I ſhall obſerve by the way, that one of the moſt celebrated Commentators on Ariſtotle would have made a reply, quite different from that of Peter Damianus, to the Empreſs's queſtion. He would have aſſerted, that the welfare of the State requires in this action more than in any other; that the people ſhould mind the hoc age, (what they are about,) and keep their minds as much as poſſible from wandring; for, according to him, the reaſon why the children of men of genius and ſtudy are generally ſuch fools and blockheads, is, becauſe their fathers don't mind enough the buſineſs they are upon, and ſuffer their thoughts to be exerciſed on other matters. On the contrary, ſays he, you meet with ſome heavy fellows who get children of admirable parts; the reaſon of which is, they apply themſelves wholly to the affair of procreation, and not merely for faſhion ſake: they mind what they are about, and nothing elſe; it engroſſes their whole ſoul and all their affections. Read the following Latin paſſage. Alexander Aphrodiſæus magno ſe labore conficit, dum cauſam conatur inveſtigare & tradere, cur non rarò contingat, ut craſſus quiſpiam, tardus ac propemodum hebes, liberos gignat ſolertes, prudentes & acutos; cujus rei cauſam hanc tandem ſtatuit, quòd qui tardiore eſt ingenio, is in ipſo coitu ita ſe totum præſenti voluptati percipiendæ addicit, ut nihil aliud animo cogitet, quem totum corpori immerſum detinet: Itaque ex eo corpore ductum, & hauſtum ſemen, cui ſpiritus admixti ſunt, multum habet ipſius facultatis intelligendi: quo fit ut liberi naſcantur ipſo patre prudentiores. E diverſo, qui ingenio ſunt acuto, aut etiam eruditione præſtant, quia eorum animus in perpetua quadam cogitatione verſatur, in ipſo venereo complexu alias res agunt. Quare ſemen quod tunc profluit, quum nihil niſi corporeum habeat (animo nempe tum peregrinante) non multum illius præſtantiſſimæ facultatis habet (10). This fine doctrine has been urged by a very great number of Phyſicians. Read only Gaſpar à Reies in his LXXVIth queſtion, where he ſays, among other particulars, that wiſe and contemplative people who ſet about the conjugal duty, much leſs from inclination, than in order to keep peace with their wives; and who, even in the midſt of this duty, apply their thoughts to Philoſophy, find their children degenerate. He adds that, for a contrary reaſon, baſtards are generally witty and vigorous. Nec ipſo quidem venereo congreſſu, omnia à rerum ſtudio, & contemplatione deſiſtunt prudentes, à quibus cerebrum debile redditur, quo fit ut plerumque tales minus ſalaces, minuſque fervidi ſint, & qui non magnopere hanc monomachiam ardentius expetant, imo detrectent potius, & velut inviti accedant, tantummodo ut uxoribus gratificentur, eaſque pacatiores experiantur, ſicque ad concubitus debitum ſolvendum magis videntur accedere, quàm avidè expetere (11). The advice he gives is very different from the deciſion ſent to the Empreſs Agnes (12), and from the doctrine of the Rabbins (13).

[(‡ α) The caſuiſts, building on the Canon Law, have declared for the negative. John Neriſſan, l. 1. n. 25 of his Forêt nuptiale: In actu coitus ſemper impeditur ratio ab actu ſuo, & in omni illo actu Prophetæ non habebunt influxum ſpiritus prophetici, ſecundum Tabienam in verbo Matrimonium. III. §. I. imo etiam in actu matrimonii, quod eſt tantum Sacramentum, Spiritus Sanctus adeſt uſque quo venitur ad copulam, quia tunc recedit. Cap. Connubia, xxxii. quæſt. ii. i. e. "In "the act of procreation reaſon is ever hindred from "exerting its power; and, during all that act, the "Prophets had not the influx of the prophetic Spirit, "as is obſerved by Tabiena on the word matrimonium "(matrimony) 3. ſect. 1: nay even in the act of matrimony, which is ſo great a Sacrament, the Holy "Spirit

(5) Ut vim rebelli corpori conciſſeret, fonti, qui proximus Monaſterio, ſe humero tenus immergebat: ibi nec glacialem in hyeme rigorem, nec æſtate nebulas ex locis paluſtribus halantes, curans, mœstes durabat inoffenſus. Finis duntaxat percantati Pſalterii terminum imponebat labori. .. Inter hæc præclaram hominis conſcientiam deſcribere penè verecundaretur oratio; niſi eſſet in facto glorioſæ victoriæ occaſio. Si quando enim ſtimulo corporis amoveretur; non ſolum illecebræ denegabat effectum ſed aliàs inſolitum reportabat triumphum. Neque tunc conſortium fœminarum repudiabat; ut cæteri, qui ex opportunitate timent prolabi. Immò verò vel aſſidens vel cubitans aliquam detinebat; quoad carnis tepeſcente lubrico, quieto & immoto diſcederet animo. Deridere ſe videtur Diabolus, cernens adhærentem fœminam virumque alias avocato animo inſiſtentem cantando Pſalterio. Valefaciebat ille mulieri ſalvo pudore, illæſa caſtitate. Reſidebat carnis incommodum: dolebat nequam ſpiritus de ſe agitari ludibrium. Wilhelmus Malmſb. in Vita Aldhelmi, apud Angliam Sacram, Part. 2. pag. 13.

(6) Beauval, Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans, for April 1689, pag. 164, 165. where he gives an extract of Acta Sanctorum Maii, tom. 6, 7.

(7) Citation (35) of the Article FONTEVRAUD.

(8) In the 20th Homilie Académique, in vol. 14. pag. 291. of his Works.

(9) It ſhould be Henry III.

(10) Corraſius, Not. V, in Arreſtum Parlamenti Tholoſ. pag. m. 21. He cites Alex. Aphrod. Prob. lib. 29.

(11) Gaſpar à Reies in Jucundo Elyſiar. Quæſt. Campo, Quæſt. 76. pag. 1035.

(12) Igitur qui optimæ & ſimilis prolis deſiderio tenentur, non ſecus ac bruta, totos ſe Veneri tradere debent, & illius illecebris cum uxoribus attentos eſſe neceſſe eſt, alioquin ſi aliter imaginationem occupatam habeant, vel conceptus impedietur, vel propoſito optimæ prolis fine minimè potientur. Idem, ibid. pag. 1036.

(13) See the remark of the article ARODON.

ſo near to a condition, which, according to the doctrine of the moſt famous Philoſophers, does not allow the ſoul a freedom of thought [D], ſo far from permitting it to breathe in pious ejaculations. One of the moſt extraordinary circumſtances we are told of St. Francis of Aſſiſi, is, that Jeſus Chriſt, as it is pretended, imprinted on him the marks of his five wounds, on which occaſion a million of wonders are told by the Monks of his Order. They have obtained leave to dedicate a feſtival in honour of thoſe holy prints or

" Spirit is preſent till they come to copulate, and then " withdraws." See the new Menagiana, Paris edit. 1715, Tom. I. pag. 367. REM. CRIT.]

Cicero would have laughed heartily at the pretended cauſe of the dulneſs of certain children; he ſaying, that the ſoul is ſo much abſorbed, that it is incapable of every rational function. Cujus (voluptatis) motus ut quiſque eſt maximus, ita eſt inimiciſſimus philoſophiæ, congruere enim cum cogitatione magna voluptas corporis non poteſt. Quis enim cum utatur voluptate ea, qua nulla poſſit eſſe major, attendere animo, inire rationem, cogitare omnino quidquam poteſt (14)? He has confirmed this in another Book, from the authority of a great Pythagorean Philoſopher (15). Cumque homini ſive natura, ſive quis Deus nihil mente præſtabilius dediſſet: huic divino muneri ac dono nihil eſſe tam inimicum, quam voluptatem. Nec enim libidine dominante temperantiæ locum eſſe, neque omnino in voluptatis regno virtutem poſſe conſiſtere, quod quo magis intelligi poſſet, fingere animo jubebat, tanta incitatum aliquem voluptate corporis, quanta percipi poſſet maxima; nemini cenſebat fore dubium, quin tamdiu, dum ita gauderet, nihil agitare mente, nihil ratione, nihil cogitatione conſequi poſſet, quocirca nihil eſſe tam deteſtabile, tamque peſtiferum, quam voluptatem; ſi quidem ea, cum major eſſet atque longior, omne animi lumen extingueret (16). i. e. " As nature, or " ſome God, did not beſtow a more excellent preſent " upon man than the mind, ſo nothing is ſo great an " enemy to this divine gift as ſenſual pleaſure. For, " where luſt reigns, no room is found for temperance; " nor indeed is it poſſible for virtue to ſubſiſt, where " pleaſure is predominant. To make this clearer, he " bids us figure to ourſelves a man, as ſtrongly in- " flamed as poſſible by corporeal pleaſures: and, in " his opinion, no one could doubt but that, whilſt " ſuch a joy laſted, the man in queſtion could not rea- " ſon or reflect; hence it is, that nothing is ſo dete- " ſtable and peſtiferous as ſenſual pleaſures, ſince, could " it be ſuppoſed to aſcend to a greater height, and be " of longer duration, it would extinguiſh the whole " light of the mind." See the following remark.

(14) Cicero, in Hortenſio, apud Auguſt. contra Pelagium, lib. 4.

(15) Archytas of Tarentum.

(16) Cicero de Senectute, cap. 12.

[D] A condition, which, according to the doctrine of the moſt famous Philoſophers, does not allow the ſoul a freedom of thought.] The reader has juſt now heard Cicero's opinion, which is conformable to the maxims of the greateſt men among the antients. We have ſeen above (17), that Hippocrates and Democritus gave the name little epilepſy, or falling ſickneſs, to the act of venery. What can be added to this definition? Does it not emphatically expreſs what is contained in my text. But I muſt not omit the divine Plato. It is related, ſays he, that the Gods pardon to the ſenſual pleaſures of love, falſe oaths; as tho' they were children void of underſtanding. Ἡδονὴ μὲν γὰρ ἁπάντων ἀλαζονέσατον, ὡς δὲ λόγῳ, καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἡδοναῖς ταῖς περὶ τὰ ἀφροδίσια (αἱ δὲ μέγισαι δοκοῦσιν εἶναι) καὶ τὸ ἐπιορκεῖν συγγνώμην εἴληφε παρὰ θεῶν· ὡς, καθάπερ παίδων, τῶν ἡδονῶν νῦν δὲ τὸν ὀλίγιστον κεκλημένων. Voluptas enim maxime omnium temeraria: fertur enim de Venereis voluptatibus, quæ ingentiſſimæ omnium æſtimantur, quòd pejerantibus illis Dii prorſus ignoſcunt, quaſi pueri quidam voluptates ſint, nullius intelligentiæ compotes (18). Ariſtotle obſerves, that pleaſures are obſtacles to the faculty of thinking juſtly; and that thoſe which love excites, do not permit the ſoul to meditate upon, or examine any one thing. Ἔτι ἐμποδίων τῷ φρονεῖν αἱ ἡδοναί· καὶ ὅσῳ μᾶλλον χαίρει, μᾶλλον· οἷον τὴν τῶν ἀφροδισίων· οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἂν δύναιτο νοῆσαί τι ἐν αὐτῇ. Deinde prudenter ſentiendi facultatem impediunt voluptates, eoque magis quo quiſque magis delectatur: qualis eſt ea quæ ex rebus venereis percipitur. In ea voluptate enim neminem quicquam animo agitare, aut ratione explicare poſſe (19). Montagne was not entirely of this opinion, and he depended on his own experience. Here follow his words (20): " thoſe who " combat ſenſual pleaſures, gladly employ the follow- " ing argument, to ſhew that it is altogether vicious and " irrational, viz. that when it is in its utmoſt height, it " has ſo great an aſcendant over us, that reaſon can- " not have acceſs to it; and they alledge the experi- " ence we ourſelves have of this, in our congreſs with " women.

(17) In the remark [S] of the article DEMOCRITUS.

(18) Plato, in Philebo, pag. m. 405, C.

(19) Ariſtot. Ethic. Nicomach. lib. 7. cap. 12. pag. m. 72, C.

(20) Montagne, Eſſais, liv. 2. chap. 11. pag. m. 172.

. . . (*) Cum jam præſagit gaudia corpus,
Atque in eo eſt Venus, ut muliebria conſerat arva,
That is,
" When that the body feels approaching joys,
" And man prepares to ſow the female field.

(*) Lucret. lib. 4. ver. 1099.

" In which, they imagine, that pleaſure tranſports us " ſo far out of ourſelves, that our reaſon, being quite " languid, and abſorb'd as it were in pleaſure, can- " not then perform its office. I know that it may " happen otherwiſe; and that a man may, if he " pleaſes, bend his ſoul, in that delicate moment, to " ſomething elſe; but it muſt be purpoſely and ſud- " denly forc'd and ſtretched. I my ſelf know by ex- " perience that this pleaſure may be reſtrained; and " I have not found Venus ſo very arbitrary and imperi- " ous a Goddeſs, as many who are more moderate " than my ſelf aſſert." This would be a wretched excuſe for the Monks, whom we combat in this place; the remark which an Italian Phyſician has made, would teach them their duty infinitely better. The bare thought, ſays he (21), of ſuch an action, overthrows reaſon, and inſpires a kind of madneſs. Atque utinam in ipſo Veneris actu duntaxat mente privaremur, non etiam in prævia meditatione ad eundem, quam furorem & rabiem dixit & deſcripſit Virgilius Lib. 3. Georgic. hiſce carminibus (22). . . Tranſimus conſulto carminis majeſtatem, leporem, poſſuntne apertioribus argumentis phyſice comprobari, quas furias addat ſola meditatio Veneris non homini tantum, ſed & brutis quoque ceteris (23). Pudenda itaque, vel partes reprehenſibiles exiſtunt, quod animalia omnia in rabiem agant, naturæ cancellis propiùs amoveant, in homine verò maximè omnium jugulent ipſam rationalem animam. i. e. " I could wiſh we " were deprived of reaſon in the act of Venery only; " and that we were not drove, in the previous medi- " tation on it, to the madneſs and fury which Virgil " has painted in his 3d Georgic. . . . I purpoſely for- " bear expatiating on the loftineſs and elegance of the " verſes; or examining whether the truth of them " may not be proved phyſically, by clearer argu- " ments; and likewiſe what ſpecies of madneſs that " is, which the bare reflection on venereal pleaſure " raiſes, not only in man, but alſo in the reſt of the " brutes. Thoſe parts are therefore juſtly called Pu- " denda (or what we may bluſh at) becauſe they fire " all animals in general to madneſs; throw down the " proper limits or boundaries of nature; and extin- " guiſh (chiefly in man) the rational ſoul." We ſhall ſee elſewhere (24) a paſſage of Melanchthon which has ſome affinity to that in queſtion: but I muſt not refer St. Auſtin's fine maxim to another place. He infers, that as the ſoul when ſtruck with this exceſs of pleaſure, is incapable of performing any intellectual function; therefore every man who is truly wiſe, and ſenſible of holy pleaſures, would chooſe rather, if that were poſſible, to have the conjugal duty ſeparated and abſtracted from the voluptuous ſenſation that accompanies it (25). Hæc autem (libido) ſibi non ſolùm totum corpus, nec ſolùm extrinſecus verum etiam intrinſecus vendicat, totumque commovet hominem, animi ſimul affectu cum carnis appetitu conjuncto atque permixto, ut ea voluptas ſequatur, qua major in corporis voluptatibus nulla eſt; ita ut momento ipſo temporis, quo ad ejus pervenitur extremum, penè omnis acies & quaſi vigilia cogitationis obruatur. Quis autem amicus ſapientiæ ſanctorumque gaudiorum, conjugalem agens vitam, & ſicut Apoſtolus monuit *, Sciens vas ſum poſſidere in ſanctificatione & honore, non in morbo deſiderii, ſicut & gentes quæ ignorant Deum, non mallet, ſi poſſet, ſine hac libidine filios procreare,

(21) Marcus Antonius Ulmus, Phyſiologiæ Barbæ humanæ, Sect. 2. cap. 3. pag. 128.

(22) He here inſerts 24 lines from Virgil.

(23) It muſt be obſerved, that he enquires the reaſon, why the parts deſigned for procreation are called the Pudenda.

(24) In the remark [B] citation (9) of the article FRANCES.

(25) Auguſt. de Civitate Dei, lib. 14. cap. 16. pag. m. 129.

* 1 Theſ. iv. 4, 5.

or marks, and to ſay the office of it (c) [E]. They have publiſhed ſo many particulars of their Patriarch, in ſo injudicious a manner, that they have thereby drawn upon him a multitude of ſharp taunts and invectives [F]. Some of theſe taunts are doubtleſs too ſharp and injurious [G]; but a man can hardly forbear imitating Democritus or Heraclitus, when he images to himſelf Francis of Aſſiſi, after having committed ſuch mad actions creare; ut etiam in hoc ſerendæ prolis officio, ſic ejus menti, ea quæ ad hoc opus creata ſunt, quemadmodum cætera; ſuis quæque operibus diſtributa membra ſervirent, nutu voluntatis acta, non æſtu libidinis incitata? i. e. "This luſt governs, not only the whole outward, but "inward man, and moves every part of him; the "affection of the mind being blended and united with "the carnal appetite, whence that pleaſure ariſes, "which is the moſt exquiſite of all corporeal enjoy-"ments; inſomuch that at the very inſtant of time, "when it riſes to the higheſt pitch, man is almoſt be-"reaved of all thought and reflection. What man, "therefore, who is a lover of wiſdom and celeſtial "joys, leading a married life, and, as the Apoſtle "admoniſhes, Knowing how to poſſeſs his veſſel in "ſanctification and honour, not in the luſt of concupiſ-"cence, as the Gentiles, which know not God, would "not rather, (if he could), procreate children with-"out this luſt; and wiſh that, in the very act of ge-"neration, not only that the faculties of his mind, "but alſo thoſe of his body, might be governed by "his will, and not ſubject to the fire of luſt?

(c) Spondan. ad ann. 1223, num. 11.

[E] The Monks of his Order . . . have obtained leave, to dedicate a feſtival, in honour of thoſe holy marks or wounds, and to ſay the office of it.] See the Alcoran of the Franciſcans (26), and you will there find a marginal note that is vaſtly ſatyrical, and is as follows: With regard to the marks of this Idol, the Jacobins ſay that St. Dominic made them with a ſpit, as St. Francis was hid under a bed, upon a quarrel between them. In this manner do theſe deteſtable Sects worry one another. The Author of this note has made, at leaſt, one very great omiſſion. He has not cited any perſon who ſays that the Jacobins or Dominicans relate this. Now there is ſo little probability of their having ever related it, that twenty teſtimonies would not be too much to make them ſuſpected of it.

(26) Lib. 1. pag. 4. of the Geneva edit. 1560, 8vo. ſold by Conrad Badius, and pag. 5. of the Geneva edit. 1578, 12°, ſold by William de Laimarie.

It is to be obſerved that Faber Stapulenſis condemned very freely, as ſuperſtitious, the feaſt of the holy wounds of St. Francis d'Aſſiſi. See his Commentary on verſ. 17. chap. vi. of St. Paul's Epiſtle to the Galatians (27). The ſuperſtition of this feaſt is a little contagious, and very capable of raiſing an illuſion in the minds of devotees. The Preachers are ſo extremely pathetic on that day, and throw out ſuch high-flown expreſſions, that they raiſe the brain of many people to enthuſiaſm and extaſy; and when there happen a certain concourſe of incidents, theſe ſeeds never fail to ſpring up. I remember a paſſage in Balzac, which the reader will be very glad to peruſe. Some time ſince there was found in a city of Spain a ſociety of female devotees, who meditated a certain number of hours every day, and quitted the care of all terreſtrial things, to live, (as they ſaid) a ſuperiour life. But what do you think happened? A thouſand domeſtic diſorders and extravagant public actions. Thoſe who had leaſt credulity miſtook the pricks of pins for holy marks; the moſt humble look'd upon their huſbands as profane; the wiſeſt mumbled to themſelves, and were for ever making wry faces: Inſomuch that in the month of May, when only three or four of them had run frantic up and down the Country, the year was judged a very favourable one (28).

(27) Simon, Hiſtoire Critique des Commentat. du Nouv. Teſt. chap. 34. pag. 494, 495. quotes the words of Faber Stapulenſis.

(28) Balzac's Letters, Book 3.

[F] They have publiſhed ſo many particulars of their Patriarch, in ſo injudicious a manner, that they have thereby drawn upon him a multitude of ſharp taunts and invectives.] See the Book intitled, Liber conformitatum Divi Franciſci ad vitam Jeſu Chriſti, and you'll have no farther occaſion to have the text of this remark proved. Thoſe who compiled, in the ſixteenth Century, the Alcoran of the Franciſcans, drew their materials from thence, and only publiſhed the extracts of this work; with ſome notes. They made uſe of the Milan Edition of 1510. It is probable that the Franciſcans would have acted a little more prudently, could they have foreſeen what Luther and Calvin brought about: But all thoſe who preſumed to inveigh againſt the Court of Rome, had ſo long been cruſh'd by the ſecular arm, that it was ſuppoſed thoſe who ſhould imitate them, and tread in their ſteps, would meet with the ſame fate. However, thoſe perſons were miſtaken, for a Church compoſed of numberleſs multitudes of people, ſtarted up before the middle of the ſixteenth Century. This Church ſupported itſelf, and ſtill ſubſiſts in ſuch a manner as to be formidable to its enemies. It has abounded with Writers, who have animadverted upon, and finely expoſed the impertinencies of former Authors. The Thomiſts had been ſo imprudent as to permit the Book, intitled Liber Conformitatum to be printed, and they have paid dear for it. This is not merely a tranſient wound, as when a ſect, and all the Books written in its favour are deſtroyed: for thoſe who inflicted this wound, have a great number of Authors, and a multitude of Libraries and Printing-houſes.

[G] Some of theſe taunts are doubtleſs too ſharp and injurious.] I rank among theſe, what I have related above concerning the marks of St. Francis. We doubtleſs are to conſider as a ridiculous and malicious tale, thoſe blows of the ſpit which it is ſaid St. Dominic gave him. Some perſon formed a whimſical idea of the founders of theſe two Orders, by feigning that they were one day engaged in ſo fierce a quarrel that they at laſt came to blows; and that St. Francis running under the bed, his antagoniſt, arming himſelf with a ſpit, gave him five or ſix thruſts in the body; which made ſome one carry on the joke ſo far, as to ſay, that the marks of St. Francis were owing to this quarrel. I likewiſe rank among the ſame jokes, the following of the Sieur d'Aubigné (29). "If any "Biſhop or Cardinal ſhould entertain a paſſion for "his page, let him comfort himſelf in imitation of "St. Francis, who beſtows the epithet ſacred on the "amours in which he was engaged with Brother "Maceus. And indeed, the altar itſelf was a wit-"neſs of their wild and brutiſh lechery; for as the "Book in queſtion ſays, St. Francis would gaze ſo "long on Maceus, that he became as all on fire, and "would often cry aloud, even as he did one day, as "though he had been tranſported to fury, when him-"ſelf held the cup and his companion the Burette, "Præbe mihi te ipſum." In fine I rank in the ſame claſs of idle and malicious tales, the following gloſſes of Conrad Badius, which I ſhall throw into the margin, as he has done. As for the text copied from the work intitled Liber Conformitatum &c. I ſhall give it here in the body of this column. Here follows the manner in which St. Clara (†) was devoted and conſecrated to Chriſt. The night after Palm Sunday, being in virtuous company, ſhe came out of the town of Aſſiſi and came to St. Mary of the Angels, to the Convent of the Brethren, where St. Francis and his companions waited for her. Being received here, in an honourable manner, by St. Francis and his companions, ſhe was led to the altar of the Virgin Mary, and there was firſt ſhaved, after which ſhe was diveſted of her ſecular clothes, and the habit of the Order put on her. This being done, St. Francis and his companions conducted her to the monaſtery of Panzo, which is now of his Order, though before of that of St. Benedict . . . Once upon a time, St. Clara ſaying to St. Francis, that ſhe was deſirous of eating with him, the latter refuſed abſolutely to do it; but being afterwards reproved by his brethren for it, he complied (*). Being then accompanied by a female friend, and two of St Francis's male companions, ſhe came to St. Mary of the Angels; and after having bowed to the altar of the Virgin where ſhe had been eſpouſed to Chriſt, ſhe went to eat her dinner, which St. Francis had ordered to be ſet on the ground. St. Francis, for the (29) Confeſſ. Catholique de Sancy, liv. 1. chap. 2.

(†) This is the ſhe-wolf who hath brought forth ſo many others. Now we may naturally ſuppoſe, that this laſs had been very familiar with this lecher St. Francis, who, as they themſelves declare in their book, was a complete debauchee, delighting in every kind of diſſoluteneſs, in dancing, gaming, feaſting; and I leave you to judge, whether he abſtained from fornication, before Satan had made choice of him to complete that calamity which has overthrown Chriſtianity. For what kind of conduct is it, for a young woman, honourably deſcended, to go about, out of her parents houſe, unknown to them, and meet certain Friars, hotter than townbulls; and to be ſo familiar with them, as to let them do what they pleaſe with her? to ſhave, ſtrip her naked, then dreſs her, and do as they pleaſe with her; and all this under a cloke of ſanctity? Alcoran des Cordeliers, liv. 2. pag. 220. edit. of Geneva, 1560.

(*) He declared before, that ſhe was confined 42 years in this monaſtery, without going out of it. Reconcile, if poſſible, theſe two things. In the mean time call to mind what I remarked, viz. that if theſe particulars are true, it is highly probable that there was a ſprinkle of fornication in this ſanctity: for can it be in any manner decent for two young girls to ramble up and down with two friars, merely for a dinner? Beſides, whence could ariſe a deſire in this holy nun, to feaſt with the ſanctity of this excellent father; only that ſhe was deſirous of romping, in order to renew their former acquaintance? Ibid. pag. 223.

actions in his life-time, enjoying divine honours after his death [H]. He died the 4th of October 1226 (d), and was canonized by Pope Gregory IX the 6th of May 1230. The 4th of October was appointed as his feſtival. The ſtrongeſt of all the Satyrs written againſt him, was that intitled, Alcoranus Franciſcanorum, i. e. The Alcoran of the Franciſcans, a refutation of which has been attempted by a Monk of his Order [I].

(d) Spondan. ad ann. 1226, num. 33.

The

the firſt courſe, began to ſpeak ſo ſweetly and piouſly of God, after ſo divine and exalted a manner, that the good Saint himſelf, Madam St. Clara, and her ſhe-companion, with the reſt of the Brethren, were raiſed to exſtacy. And on a ſudden, as they were thus enrapt, with their eyes and hands directed to heaven, a great fire was ſeen over the convent of the Brethren, inſomuch that the place and the whole foreſt, ſeemed all in a blaze. The inhabitants of Aſſiſi perceiving this, they flew to the convent in order to put out the fire, but found that no damage had been done, and that the brethren and St. Clara were in exſtacy. They now were ſenſible that this was a divine fire, which had diſplayed itſelf in a viſible manner, to comfort thoſe who were aſſembled in that place, wherewith they were greatly edified. Now when the rapture was ended, they did not care for any other food, upon which St. Clara and her Champion returned to her monaſtery (3). If we examine things with ever ſo little impartiality, we ſhall find Badius's laſt gloſs to be equally dull and impertinent. A great fire appeared on the convent, that is to ſay, a report was ſpread, that the Friars uſed to divert themſelves there with ſome Nuns. What kind of interpretation is this? Is it not to transfer to morality the phyſical principles of Anaxagoras (31)? It is finding any thing, at pleaſure, every where.

(30) Ibid. pag. 224.

(31) Quodlibet ex quolibet, quia quidlibet in quolibet.

[H] After having commited ſuch mad actions in his life-time.] " A man who had a wife and daughters " of ſnow, might well have ſwallows aud graſhoppers for his ſiſters, and hares and lambs for his " brothers, for thus he called thoſe creatures. Ye " ſwallows, my ſiſters, you have chatted enough. Brother Leveret, why didſt thou ſuffer thy ſelf to be impoſed upon in this manner? Sing, ſiſter graſhopper, " and praiſe the Creator. He ſpoke as follows to a " peaſant who was carrying two lambs, upon his " ſhoulders, to market; why doſt thou torment my " brethren in this manner? His mercy extended itſelf " to lice and worms, which he would not ſuffer to be " killed, becauſe it is written in Pſalm 21, I am a " worm, and not a man ... He himſelf killed a Phyſician's ſon in a place called Nuceria, to have the " pleaſure of raiſing him to life (32)." Compare this paſſage of Jurieu, with that which I ſhall here quote from Ferrand, and you will find which thoſe facts are that may be looked upon as indiſputable: they are thoſe which Ferrand dares not to deny. I here omit, ſays Ferrand (33), things of no moment, or ſuch as are well known to be falſe, as for inſtance, the compaſſion which St. Francis had for lice and worms, which he would not ſuffer to be killed; and the murther which the apologiſt ſays this Saint committed on the eldeſt ſon of a Phyſician, in order to have the pleaſure to raiſe him from the dead. This is ſo weak, or ſo palpably falſe, that we ought not to give the leaſt heed to it: the bare propoſing of it is refutation ſufficient. Theſe are the only falſities which Ferrand objects to his adverſary. He therefore allows all the reſt to be true, and this is ſufficient to ſhow, that St. Francis had turned his brain, by the very falſe ideas he imagined to himſelf of devotion. I pity Mr. Ferrand, when he undertakes to apologize for theſe fine names of kindred. If the apologiſt, ſays he (34), was like St. Bonaventure, he would be far from (35) cenſuring the name ſiſter and brother, which St. Francis beſtowed on animals: he would admire this, with St. Bonaventure, whoſe interpreter I cannot forbear to be again in this place. " St. " Francis revolving in his mind the origin of all " things, and being filled with an abundant piety, " beſtowed the name of brother and ſiſter, on creatures how diminutive ſoever they might be; the " reaſon of his doing this was, his knowing that all " thoſe creatures iſſued from the ſame principle with " himſelf, i. e. that they were all created by God. " He nevertheleſs embraced with greater kindneſs and " friendſhip, ſuch of the animals who repreſented, " either in themſelves or by the application of the " ſacred Writings, the meekneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, as " for inſtance, lambs. Being one day at St. Mary's " della Portiuncula, a graſhopper ſtood on a fig-tree " which was near the man of God's cell. This graſhopper uſed with its chirping, to invite often this " man of God to praiſe his Creator; he having learnt to " admire the magnificence of the Creator in the moſt " minute things. He one day called this graſhopper, " when as tho' it had been inſtructed by heaven, it flew " on the hand of St. Francis, who ſaying, chirp, " ſiſter graſhopper, and praiſe God with your melody; " the graſhopper immediately obeyed, and began to " chirp." If it be true that St. Francis ſtripped off his clothes, and put himſelf in the place of a crucifix, we can no longer doubt of his being diſtracted. I am far from affirming this poſitively, becauſe I met with this circumſtance only in the confeſſion of Sancy. Here follows the paſſage, which I ſhall trace a little higher. When we read of St. Francis's cohabiting with his wife of ſnow; we muſt ſay that this was an antidote againſt his natural heat, and that which appears in his deſcendants. When he preached to the fiſhes, it implies, that when his deſcendants ſhould preach, it would be neceſſary for them to have dumb auditors. When he preached to them, as a miracle, that God prevented their being drowned in the deluge; this means, according to Richeome, that the miracles of the Romiſh Church are to proceed from natural cauſes. When he calls the wolves his brothers, and gives them his hand, he thereby foretels that the Franciſcans would be a ravenous crew, and endeavour to ſeize upon the innocent ſheep. He calls the ſwallows his ſiſters, becauſe his brethren, as they do, neſtle themſelves at the time of Matins in the peaſants houſes. When the Angel told St. Francis, as he was at prayers, that Antichriſt was to ſpring from his Order; it was in order that the Franciſcans might not be thought unworthy of being raiſed to the Papal See. And when he ſtrips off his ſhirt, to diſplay himſelf naked before women, in the place of a crucifix, it was to reveal the beauties of nature, as not having eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge; and to repreſent, if not the knowledge, at leaſt the nakedneſs, of Father Adam (36). I conclnde with the following remark: none have done more prejudice to St. Francis than his own children. If, in writing his Hiſtory, they had omitted ſuch things as ought rather to have been buried in ſilence, they would not have afforded the Proteſtants a handle to ridicule him. What a grief was it to the Iriſh Capuchins, when they ſettled at Sedan, to ſee themſelves immediately regaled with three Sermons by Mr. du Moulin (37), filled with the moſt ridiculous paſſages in the Legend of their Patriarch, to which Mr. du Moulin, whoſe vein was well turned for raillery, added a high-ſeaſoned ſauce?

(32) Jurieu, Apologie pour les Reformateurs, chap. 1. pag. 52, 53. edit. in 4to.

(33) Ferrand, Réponſe à l'Apologie pour la Réformation, pag. 356, 357.

(34) Ibid. pag. 369, 370.

(35) What a thought is this! it is as if I ſhould ſay, If Mr. de Meaux was like Mr. Claude, he would be far from condemning the Reformation.

(36) Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy, lib. 1. chap. 2.

(37) They were printed anno 1641. Father Joſeph wrote againſt theſe Sermons; but du Moulin anſwered him in a work intitled, the Capuchin, which he publiſhed at Sedan the ſame year (1641). See the remark [M].

[I] A Monk of his Order ... attempted a refutation of the Alcoranus Franciſcanorum.] The Author of this refutation is Henry Sedulius a Flemiſh Franciſcan, He publiſhed his Book (38) at Antwerp in 1607. He obſerves I, That the Book intitled Liber Conformitatum was written by brother Bartholomew de Piſa in 1389, and that there was publiſhed againſt this Work, anno 1513, a piece in German, without the name either of the Author or Bookſeller, intitled the Alcoran of the Franciſcans. II, That this Alcoran enlarged to double the quantity, appeared at Geneva in Latin and French anno 1578, and that it was printed at Dort, in Flemiſh, anno 1598 (39). He obſerves III, That this Alcoran was written by Eraſmus Albertus, who ſtiles himſelf Miniſter of the Church in Brandenburgh. Now as Luther in 1513 had not yet declared againſt the Pope, Sedulius thinks there is ſome fraud in the date of the impreſſion; the title Miniſter Eccleſiæ not being uſed before Luther's time. He obſerves, IV, That it is a calumny to affirm, as Albertus does, that the Liber Conformitatum hath as much authority among the Franciſcans, as the Alcoran among the Turks. V. He denies what is aſſerted by Conrad Badius (40), that ſince the Reformation, the Liber Conformitatum is ſuppreſſed as much as poſſible, before which, it was frequently

(38) Intitled, Apologeticus adverſus Alcoranum Franciſcanorum, pro Libro Conformitatum, Libri tres, in 4to.

(39) He knew nothing of the edition of 1556, cited by Du Verdier, Biblioth. pag. 858. and that of 1560, in 8vo, printed at Geneva, for Conrad Badius. It is to be obſerved that Voetius, Deſper. Cauſa Papatus, pag. 619. knew only the Flemiſh edition of that Alcoran.

(40) In the Preface to the Alcoran des Cordeliers, Geneva edit.

I

The method in which he endeavoured to do this, is adapted to raiſe the laughter rather than the indignation of his adverſaries (e); for, inſtead of condemning what is manifeſtly worthy of being condemned in the Liber Conformitatum, or book of Conformities, he endeavours to juſtify or excuſe every thing in it. It was impoſſible for him to ſucceed in this attempt; and conſequently his book can only ſuggeſt this reflection to the Proteſtants, viz. that as the Monks will not abate in any article, they therefore ſtill approve the greateſt exceſſes of ſuperſtition, which were the offspring of the ages of ignorance. They would diſarm, in ſome meaſure, the fautors of the Alcoran of the Franciſcans, would they but give up the cauſe of Bartholomew of Piſa (f); but, with might and main to defend it, is furniſhing them with new weapons, and procuring them the ſatisfaction to ſee, that this ſatyr was juſt; and that it attacked an inveterate diſeaſe, to oppoſe which the ſtrongeſt cauſtics were neceſſary. I own that the Franciſcans would have run ſome hazard, had they owned themſelves in the wrong; whence I will obſerve, that thoſe are very unfortunate, who are expoſed to a certain kind of attack [K], in (e) See the paſſage of Rivetus, in the remark [I] citation (43).

(f) The Author of the book intitled, Liber Conformitatum, on which the ſatyr intitled, Alcoranus Franciſcanorum is built.

frequently reprinted. He oppoſes, on that account, Badius to Luther (41), and obſerves, that this Book was printed at Boulogne in 1590. In fine, he obſerves, that we do not either in the German, the French, nor the Flemiſh Edition of that Work, find the names of the Compilers; and that he will not anſwer the marginal obſervations, but only thoſe objections which are founded on the words of Bartholomew of Piſa.

(41) Tam hoc eſt falſum (pudere nos libri Conformitatum) quam quod ſcribit Lutherus verum, nos pro hac abominatione necdum pœnitentiam agere, hanc non recantare. Sedulius, in Prolegom.

We are told, in the notes of the Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy (42), that the Alcoran of the Franciſcans was printed under the following title, De ſtygmatiſato Idolo, quod Franciſcum vocant, blaſphemiarum & nugarum lerna, ſeu Alcoranus Franciſcanorum, in 1543; and that this was only a tranſlation from the German, publiſhed in 1513 (*), or rather 1531, ſince there were no Proteſtants in 1531; and that this year 1531, which is only a tranſpoſition of the preceding figures, is ſet down (†) as the Æra of the Life of Dr. Eraſmus Albrus, who firſt wrote the Alcoran of the Franciſcans in German. Here follows the cenſure which Andrew Rivetus paſt againſt this Work of Sedulius. A certain Franciſcan, ſays he (43), Henry Sedulius by name, who endeavoured to ape Lipſius, has undertaken to defend all thoſe chimæras and ſcandalous propoſitions; crouding together divers ſentences of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, and others, which only ſwell his Work, and perplex the ſubject; and although in the beginning he grants, that there is ſomething too free in this Book, becauſe of the ſimplicity of the age in which it was writ, yet there is no freedom of expreſſion in it, but he endeavours to juſtify t hence he compares them to a few drops of water, which do not change the nature of wine; inſtead of acknowledging them to contain a rank poiſon, which choaks the underſtanding of thoſe who delight to drink of it. This Book is approved by the Cenſors of Antwerp, as very uſeful againſt Heretics. It is certainly ſo uſeful to us, that I could wiſh for the glory of God, that there was no judicious Papiſt, but had a copy of it, and had read it attentively, in order that he might ſay boldly and juſtly to the Author, and to thoſe who reſemble him, Thou hadſt a whore's forehead, thou refuſedſt to be aſhamed (§). To ſhew this, it would be neceſſary to write a larger Book than his; but his work alone is ſufficient.

(42) Pag. 91, 92. edition of 1699.

(*) Henry Sedulius ſays this.

(†) Theatre Hiſt. Helvici, Table 37.

(43) Rivet, Remarques ſur la Reſponſe au Myſtere d'Iniquité, Part 2. pag. 352.

(§) Jerem. iii. 3.

[K] Thoſe are very unfortunate who are expoſed to a certain kind of attack.] Such Writers as are expoſed to this, reſemble the Roman army, which ſuffering itſelf to be hemmed in ad furculas Caudinas (44), could not get out upon any other condition, than by paſſing ignominiouſly under the yoke; and could neither defend itſelf nor capitulate but with the greateſt diſadvantage. Some controverſies have the ſame fate; peace cannot be ſued for, nor war carried on, but to one's ſhame. Such was the condition of the Franciſcans in the ſixteenth Century, when the Proteſtants attacked them on Bartholomew de Piſa's Book. To own that there were, in this Book, many blaſphemous particulars, ſeveral ridiculous, extravagant, impious, &c. propoſitions, was to ſacrifice the glory of the Order; to ſcandalize devout ſouls, and acknowledge, that it was neceſſary for the Hereticks to ſearch them to think and ſpeak better. Farther, this was ſwelling the courage of theſe Hereticks, giving them a large ſcope for inſulting the Franciſcans, and preparing a way for them to invalidate other things, by their being obliged to own, that they had been miſtaken in ſome things, and had left the world ſo long in a blind ſuperſtition. It was therefore judged, that they muſt neither retreat, nor capitulate, but make the beſt defence they could, although they had a very weak poſt. The following old Proverb was at that time verified in them. A fronte præcipitium, à tergo lupi; i. e. "I am purſued by the wolves, and a precipice "is before me." They were obliged to make choice between two evils; and it was judged, that the owning themſelves conquered would be the worſt. It was hoped, that ſuch apologies might be drawn up as would ſatisfy devout ſouls; and that the replies of the adverſaries, how victorious ſoever they might be, would not ſtagger the faith of good Roman Catholics. To conclude, they were of opinion, that if it was ſhameful to fight, it would ſtill be more ignominious not to fight at all (45). Generally ſpeaking, it is certain that in a diſpute, he who attacks, has greater advantage, has more prejudice in his favour, and can eaſier maintain his quality or character than a perſon who is attacked: but this was particularly true with reſpect to thoſe who entred the liſts againſt the Liber Conformitatum. They fought on ſure grounds, did not run the leaſt hazard; and were ſure to get the better, which way ſoever the enemy might turn. Should he (might they ſay to themſelves) continue ſilent, he will ſhew that he looks upon our objections as inſurmountable; ſhould he ſuppreſs the Liber Conformitatum, he will evince the ſame thing, and will bluſh at the extravagancies of his predeceſſors and confirm our reproaches. Should he pretend to juſtify this Book, he will as much confirm our accuſation; his anſwers will be wretched and only prove his obſtinacy; and give us a juſt handle to inſult him, and ſay, that he does not ſuffer innocently for the faults of his anceſtors (46); but is an accomplice, ſince he makes them his own, by endeavouring to juſtify them to the beſt of his power. It is to be obſerved that Sedulius (the Advocate for Bartholomew de Piſa) remarks, that ſome hereticks reproached the Franciſcans with being aſhamed of that work, and that others reproached them with not being aſhamed of it (47). Were they not in a fair way of expoſing themſelves, whether they approved or diſapproved the Liber Conformitatum?

(45) Turpe quidem contendere erat, ſed cedere viſum Turpius. Ovid. Metam. lib. 5. ver. 315.

(46) What Horace ſaid to the Romans, Ode 4. lib. 3. Delicta majorum immeritus lues, Romane, ſhould not therefore have been applied to them.

(47) See the remark [I].

But ſuch will ever be the fate of men who are to defend themſelves in ſuch poſts as theſe. Mr. le Camus, the famous Biſhop of Bellai, did not foreſee, when he began to enter the liſts with Mr. Drelincourt concerning the power of the Bleſſed Virgin, that he would be drawn into this defile. Mr. Drelincourt collected together, from the Romiſh Writers, a great number of the moſt wild and extravagant expreſſions, with regard to the power of the Virgin Mary, and deſired Mr. le Camus to tell him what he thought of them. This Prelate was brought into a fine ſnare: He exerted the utmoſt efforts of his genius and invention; he anſwered that he was in the country, and ſo could not verify the paſſages produced by the Miniſter; he joked, gave him drolling airs; but, in the main, did not condemn any thing expreſly; he did not dare to ſwallow the morſel or throw it up; he only chewed it, and even had recourſe to a low and farcical recrimination (48); all which proved the unaccountable dilemma he was in. This recrimination, tho' ſo bad, is more tolerable than that which Feuardent the Franciſcan employed on a like occaſion. He took it into his head to reproach the Proteſtant Miniſters, that Theodore Beza had

(44) See Florus, lib. 1. cap. 16.

(48) See it at the cloſe of the remark [A], of the article ARODON.

in which, whatever courſe they take, they afford their enemy an occaſion for triumph. Such is the dilemma to which the Franciſcans are reduced, when the extravagant and ſcandalous propoſitions in the Book of the Conformities are objected to them. They are not the only perſons who perſiſt obſtinately in owning themſelves in the wrong; for the Jeſuits alſo undertake to defend Bartholomew de Piſa's book, when attacked by the Proteſtants [L]. Some laymen have alſo taken up the pen, for a like cauſe, againſt du Moulin the Proteſtant Miniſter]M], and met with their deſerved had invoked his Candida as a Goddeſs. Here follow his words: "But what anſwer will you make, ſhould "I ſhew you, from the writings of your chief Mini- "ſters and Preachers, that they invoke and worſhip "their whores (ſaving the reverence of all good peo- "ple) eſteeming them as Goddeſſes? Is not this deny- "ing the only living and true God? Here follows "Theodore de Beza's own verſes, made on his ſtrum- "pet Candida.

"Et tamen hanc audes maculare, & dicere nigram?
"Deſine, habet certè Numen & iſta ſuum.
"Quæ niſi ſit precibus noſtris lenita, veremur
"Ne diſcas læſæ quàm gravis ira deæ.

That is,

Dare you aſperſe the Nymph, and call her black?
Leave off, for, ſure Divinity is in her:
And, ſhould it not be ſoftned at our prayers,
You'll feel the vengeance of th' offended Goddeſs.

"And a little after,

"Parce, rogo, quæcunque Dea es.

That is,

Whatever Deity thou art, O hear and ſpare
Thy ſupplicant.

"And again,

"Ecce fugam fateor, veniam ne, Diva, negabo.

That is,

Behold, O Goddeſs, I confeſs my flight, &c.

"He then gives and devotes his ſoul to her, as to a "Goddeſs.

"Ipſam nempe animam tibi dicatam, Amoriſque tui
"ignibus peruſtam, Quæ pridem tua ſit licet, ſuam-
"que Te pridem Dominam vocetque ametque, Se rur-
"ſus tibi datque dedicatque. i. e. My ſoul itſelf, dedicated to thee, and quite burnt with the fires of thy love; which, although it has been a long time thine, and has long called Thee by the name of Miſtreſs, and doats upon Thee, again gives and dedicates itſelf to Thee.

"And again,

"Ergo fas alium te, Candida, dicere Solem,
"Utpote quæ facias æſtum hyememque mihi.

That is,

My Candida, I juſtly call thee Sun,
Becauſe thou ſummer bring'ſt, and winter to me.

"Does it become your Authors and Arch-Preachers, "to call their ſluts, Ladies, Miſtreſſes, Suns and God- "deſſes; and is it idolatry in the Catholicks, to call "the moſt holy Virgin and Mother of God, only "Star of the Sea, Advocate for ſinners, Life, Sweet- "neſs, and Queen of Mercy (49)?" The ridiculouſneſs of this parallel is viſible to every one; for Iſt there is a prodigious difference between poetical phraſes and thoſe of devotion. The former are a mere ſport of the imagination, and have nothing ſerious in them; but the latter are employed on ſerious occaſions, and as a religious act. IIdly, Beza was not a Miniſter when he compoſed thoſe verſes. IIIdly, He diſowned and deteſted them, as ſoon as he had made an open profeſſion of the Proteſtant Religion.

[L] The Jeſuits alſo undertake to defend Bartholomew de Piſa's Book, when attacked by the Proteſtants.] Du Pleſſis Mornai diſplayed, in one of his Books (50), the parallels made by the Author of Liber Conformitatum, between Chriſt Jeſus and the Founder of the Franciſcans. Gretſer the Jeſuit anſwered (51), that there is nothing in this Liber Conformitatum, on which a devout ſoul may not put a favourable conſtruction; and a great many things that a wicked ſoul may explain in a ſiniſter manner. That before candour and ſimplicity had left the earth, many things had been ſaid ſimply and candidly, which double minded people now cavil at and calumniate. "After this manner (this is Andrew Rivetus's reflecti- "on (52),) any man that pleaſes, may attempt to de- "fend the Koran of Mahomet; and there is no blaſ- "phemy but may be converted into a divine ſentence, "by thoſe who can ſo eaſily ſatisfy their devout ſouls, "little zealous for the honour of Chriſt." Cœffeteau, who was a Dominican, did not ſtand up ſo much in vindication of Bartholomew of Piſa, when he anſwered this work of du Pleſſis. As to the Liber Conformitatum, or Treatiſe concerning the conformity or parallel between St. Francis and Jeſus Chriſt, it was never approved by the Church of Rome. It was written by a private perſon, who, carried away with too inconſiderate a zeal for his Patriarch, may juſtly be charged with having little judgment, becauſe, by expatiating too greatly in his praiſe, he has ſaid ſome things which may doubtleſs be explained in a bad ſenſe. Thoſe of his Order, who approved it in their general Chapter, never imagined that his expreſſions would be ſo ſeverely conſtrued; and I am ſure not one of them believed for all this, that St. Francis equalled or was ſuperiour to Jeſus Chriſt, tho' they look'd upon him as one of the great Saints in Paradiſe (53). I ſhall conclude with Rivetus's obſervation. "In caſe "the Romiſh Church does not approve of thoſe blaſ- "phemies, why did ſhe tolerate them ſo long? Why "did the Cenſors of Books, the Maſter of the palace "in Rome, and all the Inquiſitors, paſs them ſo long "over in ſilence? Have they not proved, by their ſi- "lence during two hundred years, what the infamous "de Piſa has written? Have they not alſo permitted "it, a few years ſince (*), to be printed in Bologna, "without the leaſt cenſure, or antidote againſt its "doctrines? Can Cœffeteau therefore throw it upon "a private man, who, tranſported with an inconſide- "rate zeal, . . . He comes off very cheap, if this be "allowed to ſerve his turn. Were his General and "the Chapter a private man? They never imagined, "ſays he, that his expreſſions would be ſo ſeverely con- "ſtrued. But could they declare, with a ſafe con- "ſcience, that after having examin'd it thoroughly, "they did not perceive any paſſage in it that ſtood in need "of correction? Is not this, at leaſt, a mark of ſtupi- "dity and palpable ignorance (54)?" I wanted this to prove what I have aſſerted above, with reſpect to the inextricable labyrinths in which the Proteſtants have led their antagoniſts, when they attacked the Liber Conformitatum. And thus far the influence of one man's folly ſhall extend: It expoſes the whole body, the whole community to a ſtorm, in like manner as the crime of Ajax antiently expoſed the Grecian Fleet (55). If the reader chooſes rather another compariſon let him ſee the margin (56).

[M] Some laymen have alſo taken up the pen, for a like cauſe, againſt du Moulin the Proteſtant Miniſter.] William Cacherat, Counſellor, the King's Attorney in the Admiralty of France, in the Juriſdiction of Quillebœuf, wrote a Book which was printed at Paris in 1642, and entitled, the Capuchin defended againſt the calumnies of Mr. Peter du Moulin, Miniſter; or an apologetic Treatiſe, containing the juſt reaſons which induced the Parliament of Bourdeaux to cauſe to be burnt, by the hands of the executioner, the diffamatory Libel againſt the Capuchins written and publiſhed at Sedan by that Miniſter, and ſpread over this Kingdom, contrary to the tenor of the Edicts of Pacification. With a ſummary refutation of the calumnies and impieties contained therein. I have already mentioned (37) this work of du Moulin, and I add in this place, that Cacherat could not have been more zealous in defending the Capuchins, had he been of their Order; but that his

(49) Feuardent, Examination of the Confeſſions, Prayers, Sacraments, and Catechiſms of the Calviniſts, folio 95. He cites Elegia 6, quæ eſt de ſua Candida, ad Lodoicum. I have an edition of the Juvenilia Poemata of Theodore de Beza, without the date of the year; the place where they were printed, or the Printer's name. The ſix firſt verſes cited by Feuardent are in the 5th Elegy. Thoſe that follow, which this Friar confounds together as tho' they were proſe, are in an epigram intitled, Xenium Candidæ. The two laſt are in another Epigram. The reader may judge from hence, whether Feuardent knew how to quote.

(50) In the Myſtery of Iniquity, pag. 334. and more amply in his Treatiſe on the Euchariſt, Book 3. chap. 17. Note that Henry Stephens takes notice of this in chap. 25. of the Apology for Herodotus.

(51) Gretſer, Examen. Myſter. chap. 53. cited by Rivetus, Remarks on the Anſwer to the Myſtery of Iniquity, tom. 2. pag. 351.

(52) Rivet, ibid. pag. 352.

(53) Cœffeteau, Anſwer to the Myſtery of Iniquity, pag. 870.

(*) Anno 1590.

(54) Rivet, Remarks on the Anſwer to the Myſtery of Iniquity, pag. 351.

(55) Unius ob noxam & furias Ajacis Oilei. Virgil. Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 41.

(56) Sicut grex totus in agris Unius ſcabie cadit & portigine porci. Juvenal. Sat. 2. ver. 79. i. e. "As a whole "herd of Swine "is loſt, by one "that's tainted."

(57) In the remark [H].

ſerved fate. However this be, the Franciſcans ſtill continued to preach the moſt abſurd particulars with regard to their founder; and theſe the public would be more fully acquainted with, were all Prelates as vigilant and reſolute as the Archbiſhop of Reims [N]. Let us now paſs to another circumſtance. Francis of Aſſiſi founded an Order which ſoon roſe to great ſplendor, and has done very great ſervices to the Roman Pontiffs. Some Popes, his apology was a very wretched one. I will here give a ſpecimen of it. He looks upon (58) as the ninth calumny of this Miniſter, the following paſſage. "The Capuchins, who at their entering "into their Order, engage themſelves to obſerve the "entire rule of St. Francis, do not; for by that rule the "Franciſcans are commanded to work with their hands, "which the Capuchins do not." Let us now ſee in what manner he endeavours to prove that it is a calumny. The Generals of the Order, ſays he (59), who give an account of, and are to be anſwerable for, the actions of all their Monks to the Cardinal their Protector, and he to the Pope, whom it chiefly concerns to ſee that the rule be punctually obſerved, and who keep a watchful eye on this occaſion, do not complain that it is neglected; and du Moulin the Miniſter not being appointed to enquire into it; and having never been in the Convents of this Order, to ſee whether the individuals do or do not keep ſtrictly to their rules, he therefore ought to be look'd upon as a ſlanderer, and as a man who did not underſtand what St. Francis meant by the following words, to work with their hands, which are not to be taken in the ſenſe that this Miniſter will have it; but as the Church and the Superiours of the Order have underſtood them, and now explain them. It is plain that ſuch a proof of calumny is very weak, and is rather a calumny than the refutation of a calumny. The pretended proof in queſtion amounts to this, the Church diſpenſes the Capuchins from the literal obſervation of their rule; but this itſelf proves that they do not obſerve it, and that du Moulin's accuſation is juſt. Had he charged them with infringing the orders of their founder, without being authorized to do it by diſpenſations or allegorical gloſſes, he might have been called a ſlanderer; but all he ſaid was, that they did not obſerve the rule of St. Francis of Aſſiſi. Their vindication grounded on the diſpenſations of Popes, and the interpretation of their Superiours, would have put the Miniſter in queſtion to very little trouble: it would have furniſhed him with new arguments againſt him; for it is certainly a very great abuſe, to profeſs the obſervation of a very auſtere rule, and afterwards get a diſpenſation to break it. This is what the Franciſcans did with reſpect to their vow of poverty: they got leave from the Pope to concern themſelves with money, which gave occaſion to a diſpute that made a great noiſe in England, a very diverting deſcription whereof is given by Eraſmus (60). If the reader peruſes it, he will find that the circumſtance which gave riſe to the great hurly burly made by Standiſh, the main pillar of the Franciſcans in that country, was, that he might put a ſtop to the traffic of the Auſtin Friars; the profit they made leſſening that of the Franciſcans. I could name ſome mendicant Friars, famous for their writings, whoſe Superiours have given them permiſſion to negotiate with Booksellers for their manuſcripts. The latter pay them a very handſome price for their copies, and for their trouble in correcting the proofs; they give the Author both money and ſeveral copies of his work, and theſe he himſelf ſells for ready money. Can this be called obſerving his religious vow? Not in the leaſt: But he is allowed to break it, and this very thing ſhews that he does not obſerve it. The diſpenſation ſuppoſes and imports that he really infringes it.

(58) Cacherat, Capuchin defended, pag. 72.

(59) Ibid.

(60) Eraſmus, Adag. Chil. 2. Cent. 5. num. 98. pag. m. 511, & ſeq.

[N] The Franciſcans ſtill continued to preach the moſt abſurd particulars with regard to their founder; and theſe the public would be more fully acquainted with, were all Prelates as vigilant and reſolute as the Archbiſhop of Rheims.] (61) A Franciſcan, a Capuchin, and a Benedictine Friar had preached, in his Dioceſe, the 2d of Auguſt 1694. in honour of St. Francis, at the ſolemnity of the Portiuncula. "(62) He himſelf gave them "the recantation they were to make in writing, in "order to undeceive the people whom they had ſe"duced; to make them circumſpect for the future in "the exerciſe of their functions, and to give people "an antidote againſt ſuch impreſſions. The three "Preachers obeyed his orders with great humility, "and the Franciſcan going up into the pulpit, de"clared that the following text which he had taken "for the ſubject of his ſermon, Tres ſunt qui teſti"monium dant in Cœlo, Pater, Verbum, & Spiritus "Sanctus, & hi tres unum ſunt, i. e. "There are "three who bear witneſs in heaven, the Father, "the Word, and Holy Ghoſt, and theſe three are "one," had nothing to do with what he had under"taken to treat of, and could not be applied to it, "without evidently wreſting the word of God: that "having entertained a falſe idea of the merit of St. "Francis, though he was a great Saint both before "God and men, he had raſhly advanced, that St. "Francis had wrought in the Portiuncula, by his "tears, what Jeſus Chriſt had done by his, for ſinners, "in the manger at Bethlehem; that St. Francis had "done in the Portiuncula, by the blood of his wounds, "what Jeſus Chriſt had effected by his on Calvary; "and that St. Francis had done, in his heart, in fa"vour of ſinners, what Chriſt has done for them, in "his, on the croſs ... (63) The Capuchin recanted "in like manner ſuch propoſitions, contrary to the "doctrine of the Church, which he had advanced in "his Sermon the ſame day. Firſt, that St. Francis, "proſtrating himſelf with his face to the ground, "cauſed the Son of God to deſcend a ſecond time on "the earth. Secondly, that the Portiuncula is ſo "entire and perfect an amneſty or general pardon, "that it may be aſſerted, God never ſhowed him"ſelf, in all paſt ages, more gracious to ſinners than "in this ſolemnity; that when he aſſerted that St. "Francis, like St. Paul, may glory in his having "completed what was wanting in the paſſion of our "Saviour, he had made a raſh application of this "Apoſtle's words, and ſuch an one as was repugnant "to their ſenſe: that he had alſo advanced a raſh "and falſe propoſition, in making St. Francis ſay; "My God, if it be neceſſary that your juſtice ſhould "be ſatisfied, have pardon, have mercy, mercy upon ſin"ners; I offer myſelf ſingly as the victim, and will ſa"tisfy your juſtice for them. . (64). He acknowledges "likewiſe that, in a parallel, ... whichis falſe, raſh and "erroneous; and alſo as what he had aſſerted, that the "indulgence of the Portiuncula is an image of the im"menſity, infinity, and eternity of God, becauſe it is ob"tained in all the Churches of St. Francis, becauſe it "expiates the puniſhment of ſin, and will endure to "the end of the world." Here follow the propoſitions which the Benedictine Friar was obliged to retract (65). Firſt, where he ſaid, that he did not know which to admire moſt, the divine Word deſcending into the chaſte boſom of Mary, or the ſame Jeſus who comes down into the Chapel of the Angels. Secondly, that he did not know which was the greateſt ſubject for admiration; Francis's charity for ſinners, or the love of Chriſt Jeſus for Francis. Thirdly, that he had repeated ſeveral times, that Francis had made himſelf the victim for ſinners, and had taken upon him the ſins of the world. Fourthly, that Chriſt has beſtowed the fulneſs of his grace on St. Francis. Fifthly, his advancing in different parts of his Sermon, that the holy virgin hath an omnipotent power with regard to her ſon, by reaſon of the authority of both father and mother which ſhe has over him. Sixthly, that the cry of St. Francis was heard more favourably than that of Moſes and St. Paul. Seventhly, that the virgin endued Francis with the life of grace, as ſhe endued our Saviour with that of nature. Eighthly, that Francis compenſates, or makes up, for what is wanting in our Saviour's paſſion, in favour of ſinners, by cooperating with him, in his victories over ſin and hell. He alſo retracts ſeveral other dangerous propoſitions and expreſſions, ſuch as the following; That the Franciſcans are brothers, by the mother's ſide, to Jeſus Chriſt, the children of Mary, companions of the bleſſed Spirits, and that like them they draw their origin from the midſt of the ſplendors of grace and glory: that the plenary indulgence of the Portiuncula is irrevocable and eternal, ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, who deſcended

(61) See Journal des Savans of April 11, 1695, pag. 241. Dutch edit.

(62) Ibid. pag. 242.

(63) Ibid. pag. 244.

(64) Ibid. pag. 245.

(65) Journal des Savans, of April 11, 1695, pag. 246.

Popes, ſeveral Cardinals, and a great number of Prelates and famous Authors have been of this Order. Some particulars are found on this head, in the Commentary of Henry Sedulius, a Flemiſh Franciſcan, on the Life of St. Francis, written by St. Bonaventure (g); and a very great number of particulars in the Annals of the Order, drawn up in ſeveral volumes, by Luke Wadding, an Iriſh Franciſcan, who likewiſe wrote a volume concerning the Franciſcan Authors. This Order is divided into ſeveral bodies, ſome of which are more rigid than others, and all ſtrongly inherit the antient emulation which ſoon broke out between the children of St. Francis and thoſe of St. Dominick. This emulation has created a diviſion between them, not only with regard to matters of Religion, ſuch as the diſpute concerning the immaculate conception of the bleſſed Virgin, but alſo with reſpect to a numberleſs multitude of queſtions in Philoſophy. The conteſts between the Scotiſts and Thomiſts, the former Franciſcans and the latter Dominicans, is as ſtrong as that which ſubſiſted antiently between the Platoniſts and Peripatetics. I omit the diſpute which reigned a long time between the Monks of St. Francis, and which gave great trouble to their ſuperiors and the Popes, though it was only about a trifle, I mean the ſhape of the cowl &c. Gentillet relates this after a very pleaſant manner (b). Nicolle has ſpoke of this in one of his imaginary letters. By the way, the Saint whoſe life I now write, was called Francis, becauſe his father had traded in France (i).

(g) Printed at Antwerp, anno 1597, in 8vo.

(b) In the Preface to the 2d book of his Diſcours d'eſtat, againſt Nicholas Machiavel.

(i) Volaterr. lib. 21. pag. m. 761.

cended into the Chapel of the Portiuncula, under the form of a Dove, in like manner as he appeared over the river Jordan, to make this indulgence as it were a baptiſm of ſalvation. That the indulgence of the Portiuncula does not only remit the puniſhment due to ſin, but alſo, in ſome manner, the guilt of it, ſince Jeſus Chriſt himſelf grants it; he, who during his mortal life, never remitted ſin, without remitting both. That Jeſus Chriſt himſelf grants the indulgence of the Portiuncula, independently from the Popes. That it was a Seraphim who drew up the bull of it. That St. Francis ſues, either for a fulneſs of grace in favour of ſinners, or a want of mercy for himſelf.

REFLECTIONS on what has been ſaid above.

I ſhall not, for fear of being too prolix, lay down all the obſervations which might be made on what has been here related. I therefore will confine myſelf to three remarks. I. That the ſame propoſitions which the Archbiſhop of Rheims cauſed the Friars, who had advanced them, to retract; theſe ſame propoſitions, I ſay, or others equivalent to them, are preached every year, not only in Spain, Italy, Germany, &c. but alſo in France. Moſt of the Prelates either overlook this, or are not ſcandalized at it: hence it is, that as theſe doctrines meet with no oppoſition, they go their journey undiſturbed, and without its being known in foreign countries that they have been vented. Should we know that, in 1694, that they were delivered from the pulpit, in the dioceſe of Rheims, had not the Archbiſhop taken exception at them, and obliged the three Preachers to atone, in a public manner, for the fault they had committed? This may contribute to ſhew, that the empire or aſcendant of monkiſh conceits, with reſpect to the credit of certain Saints, and the prerogatives of certain indulgences, is almoſt as powerful as ever; though the ages of ignorance, which gave birth to that Empire, exiſts no longer, and were followed by a return of knowledge and learning which have continued a great number of years. My IId reflection is, that the hyperboles of the Benedictin Friar, concerning the indulgences of the Portiuncula and the greatneſs of St. Francis, are more high-flown than either thoſe of the Franciſcan or Capuchin. This is a good office which the Monks do reciprocally to one another. The Franciſcans imagine, that encomiums on their founder, from the mouth of a Friar of another Order, will not be ſo much ſuſpected as from their own; and therefore they deſire ſome Benedictin, Carmelite, &c. to preach in their Churches on their high feſtivals. The Preacher they employ is ſure to have both mind and body well entertained, for he is always ſplendidly regaled; greatly applauded for his eloquence; and a million of thanks are returned him. Beſides, a return is to be made; the Order he belongs to has alſo its high feſtival. The Sermon of a Franciſcan is of great uſe to them, and is more uſeful than one of the ſame Order. It often expatiates more wildly on the efficacy of the Scapulary than the Sermon of a Carmelite. Thus we ſee here a mutual intercourſe of good offices: Not long ſince a gentleman of excellent good ſenſe, and who is now a Proteſtant, told me, that whilſt he was a Benedictine, he was deſired to preach in a Monaſtery of Franciſcans, on the feſtival of the Portiuncula, and was told the ſubjects on which they deſired him chiefly to inſiſt. He acquieſced with part of what they wiſhed, but gave the matter a certain caſt which did not pleaſe them. Some of them informing him in an artful way of this, he juſtified himſelf, and then aſked them privately, whether it were juſt and reaſonable to publiſh ſo many things from the pulpit as truths, which were really otherwiſe: What would you have us do? replied they, would you have us ſtarve? And this ſhall lead me to my third reflection. There are ſeveral abuſes in the Romiſh Church, which in all probability, will laſt as long as that Church: it will be to no purpoſe for learned ages to be ſucceeded by one more learned, the abuſes in queſtion will not therefore be changed. They indeed ſprung up in ages of ignorance, but ignorance was not the only cauſe, or even the principal cauſe of their riſe; the wants of a community, as well for commodiouſly ſuſtaining, as lodging themſelves; the intereſt which Monks had to exhibit to the people an altar finely decorated, and rich Church ornaments; all theſe circumſtances required them to give marvelous deſcriptions of the privileges of a certain Saint, chapel or feſtival. This became a daily fund by which they procured their ſubſiſtence, and the return of the anniverſary was the ſeaſon of the harveſt and vintage of the Order. Now the wants I am ſpeaking of, are not ſubject to the viciſſitudes of light and darkneſs, but are of all periods, and the ſame in an age of ignorance as an age of knowledge; for this reaſon their effects do not ceaſe, tho' people become more enlightened. Perſons of a Philoſophical turn of mind are puzzled to know whether they ought, on this occaſion, to admire the long forbearance, or long wrath of heaven; and ſome would gladly apply here the tantæne animis cœleſtibus iræ, which an Engliſh Doctor applies to the errors wherein the Eaſtern nations have been involved for ſo many ages (66).

(66) See citation (52) of the article BRACHMANS.

FRANCIS I, King of France, was one of thoſe great Princes, whoſe exalted qualities have been obſcured by many defects. The French Hiſtorians (a) acknowledge, with the utmoſt ſincerity, this intermixture; and ſome of them even complain, that the Spaniſh Writers, inſtead of owning this, ſtudiouſly affect to repreſent this Monarch as a moſt perfect Prince [A]. There may be too much art and deſign in this conduct of both parties; but (a) Beaucaire, Spondanus, Mezerai, Varillas, &c.

[A] The French Hiſtorians . . . complain, that the Spaniſh writers . . . ſtudiouſly affect to repreſent this Monarch as a perfect Prince.] Some of Varillas's critics would have had him imitate the Italian and Spaniſh Hiſtorians, but it ſeems to be leſs ſo in the French Authors, than in the Spaniards; for all but the blind muſt plainly diſcover a long ſeries of errors and imprudent actions in the reign of Francis I. This Prince had very near diveſted himſelf of the right of ſucceeding to Lewis XII, he going the ready way to it, by his entertaining a paſſion for the young Queen (b) [B], but was told the danger to which he would expoſe himſelf. Though this incident is related a variety of ways [C], it is agreed that he made a good uſe of this advice;

(b) Wife to Lewis XII.

ans, inaſmuch as they have not only amplified the great actions of Francis I, but have even concealed thoſe which were not praiſe-worthy (1). He anſwers, among other particulars; that thoſe Hiſtorians did not write in that manner to oblige Francis I, but were prompted to it from motives of a moſt artful policy which it will be proper to lay open; and here follows the manner in which he unfolds it. "They were jealous of the growing pow-"er of France, and afraid leſt it ſhould extend its "conqueſts quite into their countries, after they ſhould "have freed themſelves from the civil wars, with "which they had been infeſted during forty years. "There was no other way to divert it from this, than "by perſuading the French, that they would not be "more ſucceſsful henceforward againſt Spain, Ger-"many, and Flanders, than under the reign of "Francis I; and to effect this, it was neceſſary to ac-"cuſtom them to read, in the hiſtory of this Prince, "that he had made all the efforts that an earthly "Prince could againſt the Houſe of Auſtria, and yet "was not able to ſhake it. That his conduct could "not be reproached on any account; that the errors "which men imagined they had ſeen in it, were ow-"ing to the Monarchy and not to the Monarch; i. e. "that Francis I had, with reſpect to himſelf, done "all that was requiſite for vanquiſhing Charles V; "but that France had not been able to make ſuffici-"ent efforts, nor furniſh men and money enough for "ſuch a victory. That thoſe things which were aſ-"cribed to Francis I as a misfortune, ought to be "aſcribed to nothing but the weakneſs of his King-"dom; and that had the greateſt Commanders, and "the moſt ſubtle Politicians that ever lived, com-"manded the ſame armies, and been in the ſame ſi-"tuation, they would have been overcome before "Pavia, and, like Francis I, have extricated them-"ſelves by the diſadvantageous Treaties of Madrid, "Cambray and Creſſy. Nothing could have been "eaſier than for the French Hiſtorians to refute ſo groſs "an error, by exhibiting, as I have done, the naked "truth; and by ſhewing from authentic inſtruments, "that Francis I had not exerted himſelf near ſo "much as he could have done againſt Charles V; "and that it was in his power to have defeated him "on ſeveral occaſions. That his Moſt Chriſtian Ma-"jeſty had committed ſome overſights and been negli-"gent on ſome occaſions, all which were not to be "excuſed. That theſe irregularities were always ow-"ing to the Monarch, and not to the Monarchy. "That they never reſulted from weakneſs, and, if "ever from ill fortune, this had the leaſt ſhare. That "the whole was owing chiefly to the miſunderſtanding, "ſo often read of in the Hiſtory of France, between "former Kings and their Miniſters; and that abler "Commanders, and more vigilant Politicians, would "one day compenſate for what Francis I had marr'd."

(1) Varillas, Preface to the Hiſt. of Francis I.

[B] His entertaining a fond paſſion for the young Queen.] Lewis XII, who had married the King of England's ſiſter in November 1514, died the firſt of January following, and many thought, that his two eager careſſing of the young Queen had occaſioned his death (2). Theſe careſſes, though over violent for a Prince of ſo delicate a complexion as himſelf, were not ſo with reſpect to his royal Bride, who was but eighteen. She liſtned to love addreſſes both in the French and Engliſh tongues. A Gentleman of her own Country lov-ed her, and had followed her into France, and ſhe married him afterwards. On the other ſide, ſhe ap-peared exquiſitely beautiful in the eyes of the preſump-tive heir to the Crown, who had then the title of Duke de Valois. Here follows what we are told by Mezerai. "The young Duke de Valois, who was fired at the "ſight of a beautiful woman, was ſtruck with a paſ-"ſion for the young Queen; and Charles Brandon, "Duke of Suffolk, who had loved her before her "marriage, and followed the Court of France as Em-"baſſador from the King of England, had not ſup-"preſſed his firſt flame. But Arthur de Gouffier-"Boiſy, who had been the Duke de Valois's Gover-"nor, repreſenting to him, that he ran the hazard of "getting a maſter, and that he ought to be apprehen-"ſive of the ſame thing from the Duke of Suffolk; "he ſuppreſſed his needleſs paſſion, and cauſed this "Duke to be narrowly watched (3)." Varillas has expatiated very much on this incident. Here follows what he ſays, after telling us that Count d'Angoulême (4) was ordered to go and marry in the King's name at Boulogne the Engliſh Princeſs. "He could not for-"bear entertaining a paſſion for the Princeſs whom he "married in his father-in-law's name (5); and as ſhe "could not forbear wiſhing, that Heaven had allot-"ted the Count for her huſband, the conveniency "they had of converſing together, would perhaps have "prompted them to go ſome undue lengths, had not "Prothonotary Duprat (6), who was placed near the "Count, to check in ſome meaſure the ſallies of his "youth, had not made him reflect, that it was the "new Queen's intereſt not to keep her conjugal vow; "becauſe, as ſhe was going to live with a huſband, "by whom it was ſaid univerſally that ſhe could have "no children; it might juſtly be feared that ſhe would "give way to the temptation, of uſing her endeavours "to get a ſon, in order that ſhe might preſerve her "rank and dignity in France, after her royal Conſort "ſhould leave her a widow; and by that means be "kept from returning to England, and becoming ſub-"ject to her brother. But as for himſelf, he obſerv-"ed that he had the greateſt intereſt in the world to "keep a watchful eye over the Queen's chaſtity, in-"ſtead of ſuing for favours at her hands; ſince, ſhould "ſhe have a ſon, tho' himſelf had got it, this ſon would "prevent his ſucceeding to the Crown, and force him "to be contented with Britany, which his wife had "brought him in marriage; not to mention that he "(contrary to the order of nature) would be obliged "to pay homage for it to his baſtard. Theſe argu-"ments check'd Count d'Angoulême's paſſion, and "made him no longer view the Queen but with jea-"lous eyes; and he watched her ſo narrowly, that he "at laſt diſcovered the fondneſs ſhe entertained for the "Duke of Suffolk (7)." Varillas afterwards relates ſeveral other curious particulars, concerning the pre-cautions which were taken againſt the laſt mentioned Duke. See the following remark.

(2) Mezerai, Hiſtory of France, tom. 2. pag. 872.

(3) Chronological Abridgment, tom. pag. 470. ad an. 1514.

(4) This is the title he gives him whom Mezerai calls Duke de Valois.

(5) Princeſs Claude, or Clau-dia, daughter to Lewis XII, was married to Fran-cis I.

(6) Varillas ſets down the follow-ing words in the margin. In ſome relations we find Gouffier de Boiſy, inſtead of Du-prat.

(7) Varillas, Hiſt. of Francis I. lib. 1. pag. 17.

[C] This incident is related a variety of ways.] Brantome does not aſcribe this glory of this prudent coun-ſel either to Gouffier-Boiſy or to Du Prat, but to a Gen-tleman born in the ſame Province with himſelf. As I am ſure that the reader will prefer his words to mine, I therefore will copy them (8): "It is ſaid that Queen "Mary of England, third wife to King Lewis XII, "did not act in the ſame manner (9); for being diſ-"contented at, and diffident of the King her huſband's "ſtrength, ſhe was deſirous to ſound the ford; taking "for her guide, Count d'Angouleſme, who was after-"wards King Francis, at that time a young, handſome, "very agreeable Prince, whom ſhe made very much "of, calling him always her ſon-in-law, as indeed he "was, he having married Claude, King Lewis's "daughter. She indeed was very much ſmitten with "him as he was with her; ſo that both their fires "would probably have united, had it not been for "Mr. de Grignaux, a Gentleman of Perigord, who, "as has been ſaid, had been Knight of honour to "Queen Anne, and was in the ſame quality to Queen "Mary. This Gentleman perceiving that the in-"trigue was carrying too far, remonſtrated to the ſaid "Count d'Angouleſme the error he was going to com-"mit, and ſaid to him, in an angry tone of voice, "Paque Dieu (for this was his oath) what are you "going to do? Don't you perceive that this artful, "intriguing woman, wants to intice you to her em-"braces, in order to be got with child by you; and "ſhould ſhe bring forth a ſon, you will ſtill continue "mere

(8) Brantome, Dames galantes, tom. 2. pag. 117.

(9) He had juſt before related that Queen Lou-iſa, conſort to Henry III, re-jected the coun-ſel which was given her, to procure ſome o-ther man to get her with child, ſince there was no hopes of her having any by the King her huſband.

advice; but he was very unguarded with reſpect to other women (c), and ſome pretend that it coſt him his life [D]. I have ſaid elſewhere (d), that his favourite miſtreſs had like to have made him loſe his whole Kingdom. He had no ſuſpicion of this dark conſpiracy;

(c) He undertook the journey to Milan among other motives, to lie with a beautiful woman. See Penſées ſur les Cometes, pag. 715.

(d) In the article ETAMPES, Remark [E].

" mere Count d'Angouleſme, and never be King of " France, as you one day hope to be. The King her " huſband is in years, and cannot get her with child; " and ſo you want to have an affair with her; and " ſhould you be ſo inconſiderate as you are ſo young " and wanton, and ſhe the very ſame, (Paque Dieu!) " ſhe'll catch like wild-fire, and be got with child by " you, and ſo you'll be finely off. After this you " may very juſtly ſay, adieu to my ſhare of the King- " dom of France; for this reaſon I'd have you think " ſeriouſly of this matter. This Queen had a " mind to practiſe and experience the Spaniſh Proverb, " which ſays, Que manca muger agada murio ſin here- " deros, (no artful woman ever died without heirs;) " that is to ſay, if ſhe cannot be got with child by " her huſband, ſhe will procure a ſecond to perform " that office. Count d'Angouleſme thought ſeriouſly " on this matter, and proteſted that he would be wiſe, " and lay aſide his deſign; but being tempted over " and over again by the careſſes and allurements of this " beautiful Engliſh woman, he grew fonder than ever. " How furious a paſſion is love! ſince, for the ſake of " ſuch a little bit of fleſh, which he pines after, he ſhall " quit and even loſe Kingdoms and Empires! How " many inſtances do we meet with of this in Hiſtory! " At laſt, Mr. de Grignaux, perceiving that this young " man was going to ruin himſelf, and ſtill continued " his amours, informed the Counteſs d'Angouleſme his " mother of them, who reprimanded and chid him ſo " roundly for it, that he ſuppreſſed his paſſion." Compare theſe three relations, and you'll find ſome variations in them; but Brantome differs chiefly from Mezerai and Varillas in this, viz. in ſaying that the young Queen being a widow, endeavoured to get a ſuppoſititious child, in order to exclude Francis I: but the other Hiſtorians clear her of that crime. After the death of Lewis XII, it was thought that Mary of England was with child, but the publick were immediately aſſured of the contrary, by her declaration that ſhe was not. Theſe are Mezerai's words (10), and here follow thoſe of Varillas (11): the Queen was watched as narrowly as before, ſo long as there was room to doubt whether ſhe was with child; But after ſhe had declared that ſhe was not, and that there were proofs ſufficient of her not being ſo, Count d'Angouleſme, then proclaim'd King &c. Brantome delivers himſelf after a very different manner (12). " It is nevertheleſs reported, that the ſaid Queen did " all that lay in her power, a little before and after " the death of the King her huſband, to live and reign " as Queen Mother: But he died too ſoon, and ſhe " had not time ſufficient to complete her deſign, and " yet ſhe ſpread a report, every day after the King's " deceaſe, that ſhe was with child; ſo that, not being " really with child, it was ſaid that ſhe uſed to ſwell " herſelf outwardly, by inſenſible degrees, with linnen " cloths; and her ſuppoſed time being up, ſhe had a " ſuppoſititious child, which another big-bellied wo- " man was to have, and bring forth at the time of the " delivery. But the Lady Regent, who was a native " of Savoy, and knew what it was to bring forth " children; and ſaw that her own intereſt and that of " her ſon were too nearly concerned in this affair, cauſ- " ed her to be cloſely examined and ſearched by Phy- " ſicians and midwives; ſo that by the ſight and diſ- " covery of the linnen and clouts, ſhe was found out, " and by that means her deſign was rendred abortive; " ſhe was not Queen Mother, but ſent back into her " own country." This entirely refutes thoſe people, who ſay, in behalf of the late King James (13), that it can never enter the thoughts of a perſon, who is in the midſt of a numerous Court, and perpetually ſurrounded with a numberleſs multitude of domeſticks, to introduce a ſuppoſititious child: for we here find Brantome, who was a very good judge of mankind, and perfectly well acquainted with the Court; we here, I ſay, find him relating a like deſign, as actually carried on in the French Court. It is an argument that there are men of ſenſe, who look upon ſuch a project as feaſible.

(10) Hiſtory of France, tom. 2. pag. 894.

(11) Hiſtory of Francis I, Book 1. pag. 20.

(12) Brantome, Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 118, 119.

(13) James II King of England.

[D] Some pretend, that it coſt him his life.] The French Authors ſpeak with great freedom on this occaſion, one of them, having ſpoke of an impoſthume or ulcer which brought this Prince to the point of death (14), adds, I have ſometimes heard ſay, that he catched this diſeaſe from the beautiful Feronniere, one of his miſtreſſes, whoſe picture is ſtill ſeen in ſome Cabinets of the curious; and that this woman's huſband, prompted by a ſtrange and ridiculous kind of revenge, went to a brothel to catch this infection, purpoſely to infect both. Tho' he got out of danger, he yet ſuffer'd for it a long time after (15). Thus Mezerai ſpeaks. We will now hear what he ſays concerning this Monarch's laſt ſickneſs. This malignant ulcer, which broke out in 1539, having baffled the art of all his Phyſicians, who did not dare proceed in the cure with the rigorous method requiſite for ſuch diſeaſes, had pierced as far as the neck of the bladder, and began to corrode it with intolerable heats; ſo that this pain and infection, which were ſpread over every part of his body, brought upon him a ſlow fever, and a ſullen peeviſhneſs, which quite enervated him, and made him incapable of engaging in any enterprize (16). This ſlow fever was ſoon turned to a continual one, which carried him off the 30th of March 1547. Although this Author, in his Chronological Abridgment, has related moſt of the particulars abovementioned, I nevertheleſs will here tranſcribe what he repeats, becauſe the reader will meet with ſome new incidents in them. " The King, three months after, was grievouſly at- " tacked with a malignant ulcer, which affected that " part called by Phyſicians the Perinæum. This diſ- " eaſe, we are told, was the effect of an unhappy in- " trigue, which he had with the beautiful Ferroniere, " one of his miſtreſſes. This woman's huſband, exaſpe- " rated at an affront which Courtiers call only an affair " of gallantry, took it into his head to go and catch an " infection, purpoſely to infect his wife, and by that " means extend his revenge to his rival. The unhap- " py woman died of it, but the huſband got himſelf " quickly cured. As for the King, he had all the " grievous ſymptoms of it about him; and as his Phy- " ſicians preſcribed, rather ſuitable to his dignity " than his diſeaſe, he retained ſome of thoſe ſymp- " toms all his life-time; and ſo great was their malig- " nity, that they changed very much the ſweetneſs of " his temper, and made him grow peeviſh, ſuſpici- " ous, and hard to pleaſe (17)." Altho' Varillas is, contrary to his cuſtom, very conciſe in his relation of this incident, he nevertheleſs is full enough, not to oblige his readers to ſupply any circumſtance by his imagination (18). I have read in Brantome, that the King gave Queen Claude the diſeaſe with which he was infected. See Father l'Enfant's Calendar (19), and you will find that mention is made of the beautiful Feronniere's having given Francis I the foul diſeaſe. This Author cites du Verdier's Life of this Monarch.

I have been told that this miſtreſs was called la FERONNIERE, only becauſe her huſband was an Ironmonger. I ſhould not ſuſpect the truth of this ſo much, had I not read in Lewis Guion, that the woman who was infected by her huſband, and gave the King the infection, was wife to a Counſellor. This Author writes as follows (20). " Francis I fell in love " with the wife of a certain Counſellor of Paris, a " very beautiful, and graceful woman, whom I don't " care to name, becauſe her huſband left behind him " children who are very rich, and live in great repute. " This Lady could not be prevailed upon to indulge " the King's wiſhes, but, on the contrary, diſmiſſed " him with very harſh words, which grieved the " King exceedingly. But ſome of the Courtiers and " royal Pimps hearing of this, they told the King, " that he might force her away by his authority and " royal power; and upon this, one of them went and " told this to the Lady; who informed her huſband " of it. The Counſellor perceived, that both him- " ſelf and his wife would be obliged to leave the " Kingdom, and yet were not ſure of eſcaping, un- " leſs they obeyed the Monarch. At laſt, the huſband " gave

(14) In 1539.

(15) Mezerai, Hiſt. of France, tom. 2. pag. 1005.

(16) Idem, pag. 1039, anno 1547.

(17) Chronolog. Abridgment, tom. 4. pag. 606. ad ann. 1538.

(18) It could not be doubted, but that Henry VIII King of England, by indulging himſelf too much with the fair-ſex, had haſtened his death; and Francis found that his was approaching, occaſioned by the diſeaſe mentioned in the 4th book. Varillas, Hiſt. of Francis I. Book 12. pag. 264. I am of opinion that, inſtead of fourth, we muſt read eighth; and that Varillas hinted at the following paſſage of Book 8. pag. 309. The year 1538 cloſed with two memorable events; the one was the King's long ſickneſs at Compeigne, cauſed by an ulcer in the parts which modeſty forbids me to mention. His Majeſty recovered at that time, but it killed him nine years after.

(19) Under March 31, pag. 197.

(20) Tome 2. of his Diverſes Leçons, Book 1. pag. 109.

ſpiracy; and ſeeing the unhappy turn of his affairs, he dropt ſome words againſt divine Providence [E]. This was during a war which was ended much ſooner than it was thought it would be, by thoſe who were not thoroughly acquainted with the ſtate of affairs [F]. He found, but too late, that he had made choice of two or three perſons for his favourites, who were altogether unworthy of that honour, and that their evil counſels had done him the utmoſt prejudice. Had he removed the Conſtable of Montmorenci twelve years ſooner (e), he would not have been reduced to ſuch fatal extremities. Beſides this, there was ſomething unhappy in his ſtar, whence, though he conducted himſelf, in outward appearance, in ſtrict conformity to the rules of prudence, he yet was unſucceſsful. When we duly weigh theſe ſeveral matters his reign will appear very wonderful; for who would not be ſurprized to ſee that this Prince, though little favoured by fortune; ill uſed by his own mother [G]; abandoned to imprudent favourites, and betrayed by thoſe whom he honoured with his moſt ſtrict confidence, could yet reſiſt ſo glorioufly

(e) See the article of HENRY II.

" gave his wife leave to indulge the King in all his " wiſhes; and that he might be no obſtacle, he pre- " tended to have buſineſs in the country for eight or " ten days. In the mean time he kept himſelf pri- " vate in Paris, frequenting bawdy-houſes, endeavour- " ing to catch the venereal diſeaſe, to give it his wife, " in order that ſhe might infect the King. He ſoon " found what he ſought, when infecting his wife, the " King catched the diſtemper of her; gave it after- " wards to ſeveral of his miſtreſſes, and was never tho- " roughly cured; for during the remaining part of his " life, he was unhealthy, peeviſh, troubleſome and " inacceſſible." I am ſurprized not to find Brantome ſpecify any particular woman, in the paſſage I will here cite, where he ſpeaks of this pox. King Francis, ſays he (21), was alſo very amorous, and too much ſo; for being young and free, he dallied indiſcriminately with all women; he not being, in that age, look'd upon as a gallant man, who did not ſport with any woman that came in his way. By this conduct the King catched the foul diſeaſe, which haſtned his end; for, when he died, he was but fifty three, which was far from being old. Francis, after having been fir'd and rack'd with this diſeaſe, conſidered, that ſhould he continue this lewd life he would be caught again. Being therefore grown wiſe by experience, he reſolved to make love in a very gallant manner; and for this purpoſe cauſed his noble Court to be frequented by beautiful and virtuous Princeſſes, great Ladies and Gentlewomen. He did this in order to ſecure himſelf from that naſty diſeaſe, and to pollute his body no longer with the former filth; and he thereby devoted himſelf, not to an impure love, but one of a genteel, clean and chaſte kind. Immediately he ſpeaks of the paſſion which this Prince entertained for Madam de Helly, which ſeems to inſinuate, as tho' he got the foul diſeaſe before his impriſonment; it cannot be doubted but that the Writer in queſtion inſinuates this, ſince he affirms in another place (22), that the King gave Queen Claude the venereal diſeaſe, which haſtned her end; now this Queen died in July 1524.

(21) In the Elogium of Henry II. tom. 2. of his Memoires, pag. 5.

(22) In the Memoirs of illuſtrious Ladies, pag. m. 298. where, ſpeaking of Queen Claude, he ſays that if Queen Anne her mother had lived, King Francis would never have been married to her; ſhe foreſeeing plainly the ill treatment ſhe might expect from him; for the King her husband gave her the foul diſeaſe, which haſtened her end.

[E] He dropt ſome words againſt divine Providence.] Brantome (23) affords me a commentary on this text. " I have heard a Lady of that time ſay alſo, that of all " the engagements which the King had loſt againſt " Charles V, he was never ſo much troubled as when " he heard of the taking of St. Diſier (24); and that " the Emperor was advancing directly to Paris, at the " head of ſo powerful an army, in order to be- " ſiege this city, that he ſaw was already ſhaken; " he was at that time a little indiſpoſed, and kept his " chamber, and the late Queen of Navarre his ſiſter, " with a great number of other Ladies were with him. " Raiſing his voice a little he cried, My God! thou " ſelleſt me, at a dear price, a kingdom, which I " thought thou hadſt very freely beſtowed upon me; " nevertheleſs thy will be done! He then ſpoke thus " to the ſaid Queen, my darling, for ſo he called " her, go you to Church this evening, and there pray " to God for me, that ſince he is reſolved to love and " favour the Emperor more than me, at leaſt that he " would diſcover it in ſuch a manner, that I may not " ſee him encamped before the capital city of my " Kingdom; and that it may not be ſaid one day, " that my rebellious vaſſal is come ſo far to ſee me; " as his grandfather the Duke of Burgundy did to " King Lewis XI, who gave him battle ſo near; ne- " vertheleſs I am determined to march and meet him, " to anticipate him and give him battle; and I beſeech " God rather to permit me to be ſlain in battle, than " to ſuffer a ſecond impriſonment." He might very well ſay then, O crown! were thy weight known, &c. (25).

(23) Elogium of Francis I, tom. 1. of his Memoirs, pag. m. 318.

(24) Varillas, inſerting a tranſlation of this paſſage of Brantome, in the Hiſt. of Francis I, Book 11. pag. 102. applies this to the taking Chateau-Thierri, and not that of St. Diſier.

(25) See Valer. Maxim. lib. 7. cap. 2. num. 5. Ext. Stobæus, Sermon. 47. aſcribes this ſentence to King Antigonus.

[F] This war was ended much ſooner than it was thought it would be, by thoſe who were not thoroughly acquainted with the ſtate of affairs.] Moſt people were of opinion, that as Charles V had made ſo great a progreſs in Champagne, he would not liſten to any conditions of peace but ſuch as it would be too ignominious for his enemy to accept; they therefore did not expect that this negotiation would end ſucceſsfully, but thoſe who knew that an end might be put to this war very eaſily, entertained great hopes. Among theſe was an Italian Poet, who had fled to Paris. Peruſe the following paſſage: " When King Francis I " and the Emperor Charles V came in ſight of each " other in France anno 1544, with each a powerful " army, both being greatly weary of the war; ſome " great men undertook to negotiate the peace which " was then concluded between thoſe two great Mo- " narchs. Some Perſons aſked Lewis Alamanni the " Florentine, whether he thought that the perſons in " queſtion could prevail ſo far as to get this peace " ſigned; to which he anſwered in the following " Italian Diſtich.

Com' eſſer può ch'a noi pace ſi toglia
S'un n'ha neceſſità, l'altro n'ha voglia?
That is,

" How can we fail of peace, ſince one deſires it,
" And t'other party ſtands ſo much in need on't (26)?

Nothing could be more juſt than this reaſoning, and there is not a more ſure prognoſtic of (27) an approaching peace, than the neceſſity both parties are under of putting and end to the war. Want of money on theſe occaſions tires as much as ſatiety; people then do like the wife of the Emperor Claudius (28), they withdraw without having taken their fill of what they were about, but then they are tired. Before this, the mediators were not heard, but then they are intreated to act, or rather, the buſineſs is done without them, and both parties treat directly together; they agree upon the chief articles, and conclude either without their mediation, or elſe in employing it only for form ſake. Here follows what we read in an Author who wrote the Hiſtory of the Peace of the Pyrenees (29): " This " peace being concluded in this manner, without the " interpoſition of thoſe who had a long time en- " deavoured to bring it about, gave occaſion to an ex- " preſſion employed by Pope Innocent, as he was " looking from a window in his Palace in the Piazza " Navona: for he ſeeing two mean fellows boxing there " with great fury, he would not ſuffer them to be " parted, adding, you will find that, as ſoon as they " are tired they will part of their own accord; which " happening a little while after; thus, replied he, will " the French and Spaniards do, when they ſhall grow " heartily tired with making war, they will conclude a " peace without the mediation of any other power."

(26) Meynier, pag. 189. of his Demandes Curieuſes & Réponſes libres. I have corrected ſome typographical errors. He has extracted this from Conſiderationi Civili di Remigio Fiorentino, cap. 97. folio m. 123, verſo.

(27) Such was that of all judicious perſons, at the beginning of the conferences of Ryſwick in 1697.

(28) Et laſſata viris, nondum ſatiata receſſit. Juv. Sat. 6. ver. 129.

(29) Galeazzo Gualdo Priorato. Hiſt. of the Peace, pag. 124, 125. edit. of 1667.

[G] He was ... ill uſed by his own mother.] She was of the Houſe of Savoy. I ſhall ſpeak but of two things whereby ſhe greatly prejudiced France. She cauſed the money to be given her that had been promiſed to Lautrec, Governor of the Milaneſe, which occaſioned the loſs of that country; and when ſhe ſaw Francis I, who was highly exaſperated at this loſs, aſk his riouſly the Emperor Charles V, that is, an enemy whoſe dominions were much larger than France; who had more men and money than he; was a greater warrior, and a very artful Politician; who was ſerved with fidelity and ſkill by his Generals and Miniſters; and who was almoſt always aſſiſted, either by the King of England, or by other powerful Princes againſt him alone? All things duly weighed, it is more glorious for Francis I to have preſerved his Kingdom in ſuch circumſtances, than for Charles not to have been able to conquer it. I believe we might ſay of theſe two Princes, that had there not been one of them to oppoſe, the other might have roſe to univerſal Monarchy; and that ſince confederacies were made more frequently in favour of Charles V than in favour of Francis I, the latter was more dreaded than the former. I farther believe, that the valour of Francis I chiefly prevented Charles V from totally oppreſſing the liberties of Europe (f). I cannot ſay whether the ill fortune of this Monarch was diſplayed in any thing ſo ſtrongly, as in the league he made with Soliman. He did not reap any ſolid advantage by it, and furniſhed his enemies with an opportunity of inveighing againſt him, which rendred him very odious, and did him more injury than the Grand Signior did him ſervice. There is no excuſing, except by the maxims of a moſt pernicious morality, the falſhoods which were ſpread over Europe on this head [H]. There was diſperſed the tenor or formulary of the oath which it is ſuppoſed this his Treaſurer (30) what was become of the money, ſhe flatly denied her having known the uſe to which thoſe ſums were to be applied. The lie ſhe gave this ill fated Treaſurer brought him to the gallows (31). What miſchief did ſhe not do France, by her deſiring to marry the Duke of Bourbon? Exaſperated to ſee the advances ſhe made ſlighted, ſhe perplexed that Prince with a thouſand Law ſuits, which fired him to ſuch a degree, that he treated with the Emperor, and went and commanded his armies in Italy againſt the intereſt of France, and even againſt Francis I himſelf at the battle of Pavia (32).

(f) The remark [A] of the article CHARLES V.

(30) His name was James de Beaune, Lord of Samblançai. See the article of SAMBLANCAI.

(31) Varillas, Hiſt. of Francis I, Book 3. pag. 215, 216. ad ann. 1522.

(32) Ibid. Book 4. pag. 247, & ſeq.

[H] There is no excuſing . . . the falſhoods which were ſpread over Europe . . . with regard to Francis's alliance with the Grand Signior.] I have taken notice elſewhere (33) of the Speech which Charles V made at Rome in 1536. Let us here add, that the copies he ſent of it to the Princes of the Empire, and the Imperial cities, were different, and even contrary to one another (34). He ſuppreſſed ſuch particulars, in thoſe copies he ſent to the Proteſtants, as might diſpleaſe them, and added ſuch as were likely to be acceptable to them. He ſent Emiſſaries into all the Circles of the Empire, to publiſh in them, that the King of France barbarouſly put to death all "ſuch ſubjects of the "Empire, who were in his Kingdom on account of "traffic, or upon his travels; and had uſed with "the like inhumanity all ſuch Frenchmen as had "lived in Germany: that he had made a league both "offenſive and defenſive with the Turks; and that it "was in concert with them he had uſurped Savoy and "Piedmont, in order to draw all the forces of "Chriſtendom into thoſe two Provinces; and to give "Soliman an opportunity of invading Germany, at "a time that the Emperor ſhould be attacked towards "the Alps. Theſe arrant falſhoods which at firſt "were only whiſpered about, became afterwards the "ſubject of Sermons, and a ſanction was given to "them by Libels, approved by Magiſtrates both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil. This calumny, though ſo "very groſs, had yet ſurprizing effects; and all "Germany was ſpirited up in leſs than a fortnight "againſt the King of France. The moſt famous of "all theſe Libels was that which was publiſhed at Nu"remberg, with the Emperor's permiſſion. It had, "for its device, a ſword ſurrounded with flames, "and contained a challenge from the Emperor to "the King; and threatened him and the whole "French nation with fire and ſword, if they did not "within a fortnight break their alliance with the "Turks. This Libel was followed by another of "the ſame kind, which denoted the day on which "this pretended challenge had been made; and "the name of the Herald, with ſome circumſtances which were ſaid to be taken from his verbal "proceſs; and as no one attempted to diſcover the "impoſture, it had its utmoſt effect; ſince it inſpired "people with a hatred againſt France, which even "continued after they had perceived the cheat . . . . . "Langey, at his arrival in Francfort found theſe "Libels, and wrote two anſwers to them; the one "in German and the other in Latin. He made an "excellent advantage of the time in which the Mer"chants of all the Circles of the Empire returned from "the fair at Lyons. He brought them before the "Magiſtrate of Straſburg, and taking their depoſi"tions, they were printed, and diſperſed every where. "They declared, that the Deponents had met with "the greateſt kindneſs and humane treatment in "France, that the Emperor's challenge was a mere "fiction; and that the French ſo far from injuring "and inſulting the Germans without a cauſe, did "not even queſtion them about their Religion. In "this manner calumny and impoſture gave way to "truth (35)."

(33) Remark [E] of the Article CHARLES V.

(34) Varillas, Hiſt. of Francis I, Book 8. pag. 310. ad ann. 1536.

(35) Ibid.

But here follows a ſtill more aſtoniſhing cheat. "Fregos (36) and Rincon (37) had conveyed away "their papers at the deſire of Langey; and thoſe who "had murthered them (38), chiefly for the ſake of "getting thoſe papers, were greatly ſurprized not to "find any of them. They however would not have "been much concerned at this, had the murther been "kept ſecret; but after that Langey had proved this "murther as clear as the day, the Emperor's council "in Italy foreſaw that France would reap a great "advantage from that aſſaſſination all over Europe, "particularly in Germany, where the public faith "was more regarded than in any other country, if "they did not diſſuade the belief of it by employing "a cheat. They therefore feigned that ſome fiſher"men had found, in the Po, the clothes and trunks "belonging to the Embaſſadors, and on this falſity "they forged inſtructions and cyphers at pleaſure, "and publiſhed them as collated with the originals. "The inſtructions aſcribed to Fregoſo, contained all "the means which policy could invent, to excite the "Senate of Venice to abandon the Emperor's intereſt. "It was therein propoſed, to divide the Dukedom of "Milan between the French and Venetians, and not "the leaſt mention was made of preſerving the ſove"reignty of that ſtate to the Emperor; on the con"trary, cities and their dependencies were diſpoſed "of, as if they were to be incorporated in the demeſnes "of the Republic of the French Monarchy, which "were quite independent on any other power. The "inſtructions aſcribed to Rincon were ſtill worſe, be"cauſe they were not only malicious but even impious. "It was therein propoſed to Soliman, to join with "France in attacking, at one and the ſame time, and "at two different parts, the Houſe of Auſtria; and, "to ſhew him the neceſſity of this correſpondence, "he was privately informed, that Hungary, which "he had conquered juſt before, would certainly be "won back the next ſummer, ſhould he give the Em"peror time to draw his forces out of Sicily, Naples, "Milan, and the Low-Countries, and join them to "the formidable army which the Diet of Ratiſbon "would not fail to vote him; whereas, if his High"neſs, the Grand Signior, would promiſe to march "in perſon, in ſpring, at the head of three hundred "thouſand men, in order to enter Germany, the "King would march fifty thouſand men into the "Dukedom of Milan, and thus give a diverſion to "the Emperor's forces, during which his Highneſs, "attacking

(36) This was a Genoeſe, whom Francis I was ſending to Venice, as his Embaſſador in ordinary. Varillas, Hiſt. of Francis I, Book 9. pag. 403.

(37) He was born a ſubject of the King of Spain; had negotiated privately for Francis I, with Soliman; and was then going to the Port in quality of Embaſſador from the French King. Varillas, ibid.

(38) The Marquiſs du Guaſt cauſed them to be murthered on the Po, as Langey will prove. Varillas, ibid. pag. 407, & ſeq. ad ann. 1541.

this Prince had taken to the Turkiſh Sultan. Nothing was ever more horrid, more impious, and more abominable than this oath [I]; from which circumſtance, and ſome others, we may believe that the whole is an impoſture, that is not ſupported by the leaſt

" attacking unexpectedly the Germans, and finding " them divided in matters of Religion, would gain as " much advantage over them as he had had over the " Hungarians the preceding campaign. The ar- " tifice of the Imperialiſts was ſo very groſs, that a " perſon of the leaſt capacity might eaſily ſee through " it, becauſe, they not only did not offer to produce " the originals, but alſo, becauſe they gave occaſion " to a ſuſpicion of their having committed the mur- " ther, by owning, in ſo nice a juncture, that they " had taken advantage of it. Nevertheleſs, it pro- " duced the wiſhed for effect in the Diet of Ratiſbon, " and Francis I was there conſidered, as a Prince who " would readily renounce his Religion and forfeit his " Honour, provided any power would aſſiſt him in " diſmembring the Dukedom of Milan from the Em- " pire. Olivier his Ambaſſador was heard with ſo " much prepoſſeſſion, that all his words were taken " in a ſenſe quite contrary to their meaning; and " this Miniſter had the diſſatisfaction to return back " without being gratified in any of his demands, after " having heard a reſolution paſs, by which near four- " ſcore thouſand men were granted to the Empe- " ror, with liberty for him to employ them as he " pleaſed (39)."

(39) Varillas, Hiſt. of Francis I, pag. 409, & ſeq.

I refer to Mr. de Wicquefort (40) all thoſe who are deſirous of forming a true judgment of this affair; but I don't know to whom I can refer ſuch perſons as will be diſpoſed to grieve, on their reflecting that ſuch groſs and diabolical ſlanders have been of advantage to the Authors of them. It muſt be confeſſed that this is extremely ſhocking to all perſons of probity and honour; but ſuch is the courſe of things: we therefore muſt adore thoſe great, thoſe profound myſteries of Providence, without repining. I will conclude with a little reflection; the preſent age does not furniſh one example of artifices like to thoſe related by Varillas; for among ſuch multitudes of Libels, in which the anonymous Authors of them introduce whatever their fancy may ſuggeſt, we do not find any falſe ſuppoſitions enforced by authority, like to thoſe which the Court of Charles V knew ſo well how to invent.

(40) Remark [G] of the article BRUN (Anthony le).

[I] Nothing was ever more horrid . . . than the oath which Francis I was ſuppoſed to take to the Grand Signior.] There is no one but remembers the ſpeech which the Marquis de Rebenac made to the Pope, anno 1692, to repreſent the evils which might accrue to the Romiſh Religion, from the alliance of the Emperor and King of Spain with Proteſtant Princes. The anonymous Writer who publiſhed an Anſwer to this Speech, did not forget to object, that Francis I had concluded a league with the Grand Signior againſt the Emperor Charles V. The reader, adds he (41), will perhaps not be ſorry, to peruſe here the formulary of the oath, which that Prince took to Sultan Solyman, to confirm that infamous alliance which ſtill ſubſiſts, and which ſeems to have been bound by indiſſoluble tyes under Lewis XIV. I know you will not bluſh at it: for if there was found, at that time, none but Chancellor du Prat religious enough to diſapprove of it; it may be ſuppoſed that in the preſent age, as that Court tramples on all laws both divine and human, the moſt ſacrilegious and impious action is not capable of inſpiring it with horror. I muſt only beg my reader to pardon me, for exhibiting an object which it will be impoſſible for him to behold without ſhuddering; and which an everlaſting darkneſs ſhould have hid for ever from the eyes of all Chriſtians. Here follows the oath: Per Deum magnum & altum, miſericordem & benignum, Formatorem Cœli & Terræ, & omnium quæ in eis ſunt: & per ſancta hæc Evangelia: per ſanctum Baptiſma, per ſanctum Joannem Baptiſtam, & per fidem Chriſtianorum, promitto & juro, quod omnia quæ novero, aperta erunt altiſſimo domino Sultano Solimano, cujus Regnum Deus fortificet. Ero amicus ſuorum unicus, & inimicus inimicorum. Ero redemptor captivorum Turcarum ex vinculis hoſtium ejus; nihil in mea parte fraudulentum erit. Quòd ſi hoc neglexerim ero apoſtata, & mandatorum ſancti Evangelii Chriſtianæque fidei Prævaricator. Dicam Evangelium falſum eſſe; negabo Chriſtum vivere, & Matrem ejus Virginem fuiſſe; ſuper fontem Baptiſmatis porcum interficiam, & altaris preſbyteris maledicam; ſuper altare fornicabor cum luxuria; & ſanctorum Patrum maledictiones in me recipiam. Ita me Deus reſpiciat ex alto. I believe there will be no occaſion for me to enlarge on the enormity of this oath.

(41) Anſwer to a ſpeech made before his Holineſs, by Mr. de Rebenac, pag. 18, 19.

In my opinion two things may be objected to the conduct of this Writer, firſt his not quoting any perſon, and ſecondly his not tranſlating the Formulary given by him into the vulgar tongue. When he wanted to declare only in general that Francis I had concluded an alliance with the Ottoman Port, he (42) did not fail to cite Ribier's Memoirs. Wherefore then, when he was to relate a much more heinous circumſtance, did he not quote any Author? To act a juſt part he ought to have cited either a French Writer, or one who was intirely neuter with regard to the Houſe of Auſtria and France; at leaſt he ſhould have told us that ſuch an Author, whether a Spaniard, a Fleming or German, has inſerted this oath in his work, and laid open the methods by which this fine myſtery had been diſcovered. But as the anonymous Writer in queſtion not having done any thing like this, it ſhows, that he durſt not declare whence he got this formulary; and that he plainly ſaw that ſuch a declaration would have invalidated his whole authority. He ſeems alſo to have employed an artifice, in not giving a French Tranſlation of the formulary; imagining, very probably, that this would diſcover the forgery to too many people. Be this it will, here follows a verſion of the Latin oath above. " By the " great and high God, merciful and kind, Creator of " heaven and earth, and of all things in them; and " by theſe holy Evangeliſts, by the holy baptiſm, by " St. John Baptiſt, and by the Chriſtian faith, I pro- " miſe and ſwear, that whatever I ſhall know, ſhall " be revealed to the moſt high Lord Sultan Soliman, " whoſe kingdom may God ſtrengthen. I will be " the only friend of his friends, and the enemy of his " enemies. I will redeem ſuch Turkiſh captives as " are in bonds with his enemies, and there ſhall be " no fraud on my ſide. If I neglect theſe things I " will be an apoſtate, and a prevaricator of the pre- " cepts of the holy Goſpel and of the Chriſtian Faith. " I will ſay that the Goſpel is falſe; I will deny " that Chriſt lives, and his mother to have been a " virgin; I will kill a hog on the baptiſmal font, and " curſe the Prieſts of the altar. I will commit whore- " dom on the altar, with luxury; and will receive, on " my own head, the curſes of the holy Fathers. Thus " may God behold me from on high." I queſtion whether any man of ſenſe and experience could believe that it was poſſible for ſuch a formulary to have ever been drawn up between the French Miniſters and thoſe of the Ottoman Port (43). Every part of it is improbable, and no circumſtance in it is worthy of the gravity either of Soliman or of Francis I. The Grand Signior would have been very well ſatisfied with the ordinary forms; and was too judicious a Prince not to know that ſuch an ally would have been of great advantage to him.

(42) Ibid.

(43) Such an oath ſeems to have been required from Lewis IX. See Paulus Æmilius, Book 7. folio 271 verſo.

It perhaps will be objected to me, that it is the cuſtom of the Mahometans to preſcribe an oath in this form; and I own that the Venetians were reproached with having taken ſuch a one in the perſon of the baſtard of Cyprus; but the moſt this could do would be to elude the additional obſervation I juſt now propoſed by the way. Beſides, it is a queſtion whether the Venetians agreed to the formulary, and whether authentic proofs can be brought. However this be, as the work in which they were thus reproached, at the time they were engaged in war with Lewis XII is pretty ſcarce, I will here give the tenor of this oath. " The ſaid Baſtard took an horrible, execrable, and moſt " damnable oath to the ſaid Sultan, which was after- " wards tranſlated out of Arabic and Latin, and " brought to Pope Pius by ſome Knights of Rhodes; " for which reaſon he would never receive the Em- " baſſadors of the ſaid James as Embaſſadors of the " Chriſtian King, but reprimanded them in the ſharpleaſt ſhadow of probability. Nevertheleſs the terms of this oath have been inſerted as an authentic piece, in one of the little books that were publiſhed againſt France during the laſt war (g). Another falſhood was ſpread, equally abſurd as the former, and relating to a pretended deſign of recovering the hoſtages which had been given by Francis [K]. I have read another very groſs falſhood relating to the troubles in which this Prince was involved, anno 1544 [L]. I have mentioned elſewhere (h), a fiction relating to the journey

(g) See the remark [I].

(h) In the remark [I] of the Article CHARLES V.

" eſt terms. Since therefore the Venetians are his " heirs, ought they not to take the ſame oath which " the ſaid James did in manner following ?

" Firſt he invoked the name of Almighty God " forty times, and then ſaid; By the great and high " God, merciful and benign, Creator of heaven and " earth and of all things in them; and by theſe holy " Goſpels, by the holy Baptiſm, by St. John Baptiſt " and all the Saints; and by the Chriſtians Faith, I " promiſe and ſwear that all the things I ſhall know " ſhall be diſcovered to my ſovereign Lord Alleſeraph " Aſnal, Soldan of Egypt and Emperor of all Arabia, " whoſe Kingdom may God ſtrengthen; and that I " will be a friend to his friends, and an enemy to " his enemies. I will not conceal any thing from " him, will not ſuffer any corſairs or pirates in my " Kingdom, nor furniſh them with ſuccours or provi- " ſions. All ſuch Egyptians as are ſlaves in my " Kingdom, I will redeem and ſet them at full li- " berty. I will offer every year, the firſt day of " October or November, by way of tribute, to the " ſovereign Temples of Jeruſalem and Mecca, the " ſum of five thouſand ducats of gold: I will prevent " the Rhodians from furniſhing the pirates with arms. " Whatever new thing may happen that ſhall be " worthy of being made known, I will inform the " Soldan of it truly and without fraud. And if I " break my promiſe in any of the particulars above- " mentioned, I will be an apoſtate from the Chriſtian " faith, and of the commandments of the holy Goſ- " pels; I will deny that Jeſus Chriſt lives, and that " his mother was a virgin; I will ſlay a camel on " the baptiſmal font, and curſe the Prieſts of the " Church; I will deny the Divinity and adore the " Humanity: and I will commit fornication, on the " high altar, with a Jeweſs; and receive on my own " head all the curſes of the holy Fathers ... Was not " Mark Corrario a Venetian, whoſe daughter the ſaid " baſtard King afterwards married to his loſs, preſent " at the adminiſtring of the ſaid oath and homage? " It is therefore probable, that they poſſeſs Cyprus " upon the ſame conditions ſince they have uſurped " the title (44)."

(44) John le Maire de Belges, Legende des Venetiens, pag. 75. Lions edit. 1549.

[K] A falſhood was ſpread ... relating to a pretended deſign of recovering the hoſtages which had been given by Francis.] Francis I, at his releaſe from his confinement, gave up his two ſons to the Spaniards. He could not get them back except on a condition, which would be diſadvantageous to him, for the Spaniards would detain them till ſuch time as the treaty of Madrid was executed. Some people were either ſo ſtupid, or ſo malicious, as to ſpread a report that he had ſent for a German Necromancer, who could convey from Spain into France, the two hoſtages unperceived by any one; and perform a vaſt many more miracles. The Reader will find this ridiculous incident in one of Agrippa's Letters; for this Letter was written by him, though it is intitled, in the octavo edition, Amicus ad Agrippam. But here the words are tranſpoſed for the true reading is this Agrippa ad Amicum. It was printed under this title, with the three books of his occult Philoſophy anno 1533. as Gabriel Naudé obſerves, pag. 410, of his apology for great men &c. Agrippa's words are as follow. Accerſitus eſt è Germania non modicis ſumptibus vir quidam dæmoniorum, hoc eſt Magus, in quo poteſtas dæmonum inhabitat, ut, ſicut Jannes & Mambres reſtiterunt Moyſi, ſic iſte reſiſtat Cæſari. Perſuaſum enim eſt illis à patre mendaciorum, illum futurorum omnium præſcium, arcanorum quorumcumque conſiliorum conſcium, ac deliberatarum cogitationum interpretem: tanta præterea præditum poteſtate, ut poſſit regios pueros reducere per aëra, quemadmodum legitur Abakuk cum ſuo pulmento traductus ad lacum leonum, poſſetque, ſicut Heliſæus obſeſſus in Dothaim, oſtendere montes plenos equorum & curruum igneorum, exercitumque plurimum: inſuper & revelare ac tranſferre theſauros terræ, quaſque volet, coget nuptias amoreſque, aut dirimet, deploratos quoque curabit morbos ſtygeo pharmaco (45). i. e. " From Germany there was ſent for, " at no little expence, a certain necromancer, endued " with a diabolical power, that, as Jannes and Mam- " bres reſiſted Moſes, he alſo might reſiſt the Emperor. " The father of lies perſuaded them, that this man " had the gift of foreknowledge; was privy to the " moſt hidden ſecrets, and could interpret the thoughts " of men: farther, that he was endued with ſuch mighty " power, that he could bring back the young Princes " through the air, in the ſame manner as we read " that Habakkuk was with his pottage, wafted to " the Den of Lions: and that he could, as Eliſha " when beſieged in Dothaim, ſhew mountains full of " horſes and fiery chariots, and a mighty army; " moreover, that he could find out and remove hid- " den treaſures; and could make up or break off any " Hymæneal or Love-Affairs; and cure, by an infernal " medicine, ſuch diſeaſes as were deſperate." This Letter was written from Paris the 23d of February 1528. He even obſerves, that the Cardinals and Biſhops conſented to have the magician ſent for, and contributed towards rewarding him. Huic tam nefario idololatriæ & ſacrilegorum artifici audaciam præſtat, quæ iſtis tam impenſè favet orthodoxa illa mater, & Chriſtianiſſimi filii accommodatur autoritas, & è ſacris pecuniis largiuntur munera, conniventibus etiam atque tam nefariam operam conducentibus columnis Eccleſiæ, Epiſcopis & Cardinalibus, & impietatis Miniſtro impii applaudunt proceres, quemadmodum operibus lupi congratulantur corvi (46). i. e. " This bold and wicked ar- " tificer of idolatry and ſacrilege is greatly favoured " by the orthodox mother, and authority of her moſt " Chriſtian ſons; and the Church's money is em- " ployed for that wicked purpoſe, by the connivance " and even encouragement of thoſe pillars of the " Church the Biſhops and Cardinals; and the impious " Nobles beſtow their applauſes on this miniſter of " impiety, in the ſame manner as the crow hails the " actions of the wolf."

(45) Agrippa Epiſt. 26. lib. 5. pag. 913.

(46) Ibid. pag. 914.

John Wierus, Agrippa's diſciple, tells part of theſe fine ſtories, I mean the circumſtance relating to the carrying off the two hoſtages. Quemadmodum dicitur, quo tempore Franciſci primi Regis Galliæ filii detinebantur obſides in Hiſpania, magum in Galliam evocatum è Germania fuiſſe, qui tanta credebatur præditus poteſtate, ut poſſet regios pueros per aëra reducere, theſauroſque inveſtigare & transferre (47). i. e. " As it is ſaid, that " at the ſame time that the ſons of Francis I King of " France were kept in Spain, as hoſtages, a necro- " mancer was ſent out of Germany into France, who " was ſuppoſed to be inveſted with ſo much power, " that he could bring back the King's ſons through " the air, and find out and carry off treaſures." Count de la Roca (48) was not unacquainted with this paſſage of John Wierus; not by his reading of that Author, but by ſeeing Bodin's citation from him there; however, he ſhould not have barely ſaid that Bodin took notice of this, but ought to have added, that Bodin rejects it as fabulous. It will be enough for me, theſe are the very words of this French Civilian (49), *to refute Wierus by his own words and books. For he himſelf * writes, that he has ſeen men carried into the air by devils, and that there is no abſurdity in it; and in the ſame place he writes a falſity, viz. that a magician was ſent for out of Germany, who promiſed to take away from the caſtle of Madrid the children of Francis I; and cauſe them to be conveyed, from Spain into France, through the air: but that his propoſal was not accepted, for fear they ſhould break their necks.* I have not met with the laſt circumſtance in John Wierus. I make uſe of the Amſterdam Edition of 1660.

(47) Jo. Wierius, de Lamiis, lib. 3. cap. 12. num. 7. pag. m. 195.

(48) See his Hiſtory of Charles V, pag. 171. Bruſſells edit. 1663.

(49) Bodin's Refutation of the opinions of John Wierus, pag. m. 513.

* Lib. 2. cap. 12. de Præſtigiis, pag. 6.

[L] I have read another very groſs falſhood relating to the troubles in which this Prince was involved, anno 1544.] journey the Emperor made through France, in order to punish the inhabitants of Ghent. This is not the only one that was spread with respect to that period [M]. Francis I introduced some innovations, among which we must chiefly reckon the custom then begun by the Ladies, of going to Court [N]. Though this did not change the Salick Law, by which women are forbid to sway the Scepter of France; it yet may be said, that from this period, to about the close of the sixteenth Century, France was governed by women (i). Francis I has been accused very unjustly, of treating the Lutherans of his Kingdom with too great indulgence [O]. This is one of the falshoods which ought to be censured

(i) See Mezerai's words in the remark [Z].

1544.] John Saxon, Rector of the University of Wittemberg, having caused a Programma to be set up the 12th of October 1544, declared, among other particulars, that the calamities with which France was overwhelmed, were not owing to chance, but the effect of God's justice. The Emperor, says he, advanced near Paris; the Queen of France and the Dauphin went out to meet him, to implore his mercy in the most humble manner. Non casu jam Gallia miserabiliter vastatur, & Rex potens venit in tantum discrimen ut cum Carolus Imperator accesserit ad Lutetiam usque, supplices occurrerint Regina & Delphinus, ut ante paucos annos ad Carolum Burgundum venit supplex rex Franciæ Ludovicus, cui induit dux Carolus Burgundicum Thoracem cui confessio victoriæ inscripta erat, VIVAT DUX BURGUNDIÆ (50). i. e. "In the same manner as, a few years before, Lewis the French King came, in a suppliant manner, to the Duke of Burgundy; Duke Charles putting on him the Burgundian breast-plate, on which the following confession of victory was inscribed, LONG LIVE THE DUKE OF BURGUNDY." The two incidents here, put in a parallel, are false: the former is absolutely so and without the least mixture of truth, and the latter is so with respect to the principal circumstances of it; for when Lewis XI was constrained to follow the Duke of Burgundy to Liege, he did not go as a suppliant, but had demanded a conference in hopes of over-reaching him. It is a shame that the Rector of a famous University should have published, in a Programma, a falsity that would have been unworthy of a newspaper.

(50) See the book intitled, Scriptorum publice propositorum a Professoribus in Academia Witebergensi, ab anno 1540, ad ann. 1553. Tomus primus, folio 96, verso.

[M] This is not the only falshood that was published with respect to this period.] "What a number of romantic stories have been told of Francis I? Has "it not even been asserted, that he fought a duel with "the Emperor, and that this Prince passing through "France, the King, with unparallel'd generosity offered him his Kingdom? That Charles had sat one "day upon King Francis's throne; had ordered a "criminal to be condemned, and afterwards pardoned "him, to shew his authority (51)?

(51) Chappuzeau, Specimen of a new historical Dictionary, pag. 11.

[N] He introduced the custom then begun by the Ladies of going to Court.] The reader will doubtless peruse the following quotation with the highest pleasure. One day, says Brantome (52), as I was discoursing with a great Prince concerning the glorious virtues of Francis I, . . . he bestowed the highest encomiums on him; but at the same time blamed him very much for two things, which had done much mischief to the Court, and the whole Kingdom of France, not only during his own reign, but during that of the Kings his successors; the first, for having introduced to Court, the great assemblies, resort, and ordinary residence of the Ladies; and secondly, for having invited thither, provided for, and kept so great a concourse of Ecclesiasticks. As for the Ladies it must be confessed that, before his reign, but very few came to Court, and those very seldom: Queen Anne, indeed, began to form her Court of a greater number of Ladies than the preceding Queens; and the King her Consort would have had very little regard for them, had it not been on her account; but when the said King Francis came to the throne, he considered that Ladies form all the ornament of a Court, and therefore would have a greater number than formerly frequent it. Brantome tells us the arguments which this critical Prince made use of. Had none but the Court-Ladies, said he (53), been dissolute, it had been no great matter; but they set such an example to the rest of the Ladies in France, that copying their dress, their graces, their manners, their dances and way of life, they would likewise imitate them in their intriguing and whoring; for, said these imitators, the Court Ladies dress, dance and whore in such and such a manner, and we may do the same. With regard to the Prelates he used to say (54), that as they then began to grow loose and irregular, they set an example for the imitation of the rest in France; but that they ought much rather to have been in their several Dioceses, preaching to their flocks (55). Brantome refutes all these reasons, he asserting, that the women and the clergy were no less depraved before the reign of Francis I. His words are as follow. "I have not heard or read, that they "were better before, or lead more regular lives; they "being as dissolute in their Bishopricks and Abbies as "so many soldiers (56);" and that nothing but heresies and divisions had been seen in France, ever since preaching was so common (57). See Jurieu's Reflections on all these particulars (58).

(52) Brantome, Memoires, tom. 1. pag. 277.

(53) Idem, pag. 280.

(54) Brantome, Mem. tom. 1. pag. 282.

(55) Idem, pag. 285.

(56) Idem, tom. 1. pag. 282.

(57) Idem, pag. 285.

(58) Jurieu, Apology for the Reformers, cap. 7. pag. 121, & seq.

[O] He has been accused very unjustly, of treating the Lutherans of his Kingdom with too great indulgence.] This accusation is very strongly refuted in the following words of Mezerai. "The contagion of erroneous o-"pinions increasing, that King caused the fires to be "again lighted, to purge France of those tenets. "Some leaven of them was left in Meaux, ever since "Bishop Briçonnet had given a reception there to le "Fevre and the Roussels. Above threescore were "taken there, who were brought to Paris, fourteen "whereof were burnt, and the rest hang'd, whipped or "banished. Which incidents, added to all those of the "same kind, I have taken notice of above, manifestly "convict, of falshood, that Italian Author, who wrote "the History of our civil Wars, of Religion, and of the "League (59), which Author either through gross for-"getfulness or egregious malice has declared in his first "Book; that in this King's reign Calvin's belief began "to spread itself, whether it were that he permitted it, "or took no notice of it; and that it was received with in-"dignation and scorn, rather than with fear and cau-"tion. What! was the publishing of five or six ri-"gorous Edicts to suppress it; calling together the "Clergy several times, assembling a Provincial Coun-"cil, sending every day Embassadors to all the Chri-"stian Princes, in order to get a general one assem-"bled; burning the hereticks by dozens, sending "hundreds of them to the gallies, and banishing thou-"sands of them; tell me, I beseech you, is this per-"mitting, or not taking notice of these things; are "these bare resolutions, or are they real performances? "Hence, judicious reader, you will be admonished, "to read this foreigner a little more cautiously; and "it perhaps will give you occasion to take notice of a "great many more errors which the Literati ought "not to pardon him, since he has spoke so ill of the "parent and encourager of learning (60)." It were to be wished, for the glory of this Monarch, that part of what Mezerai says of him were not true. An Historian who was not so far blinded by prejudice, as not to perceive the ideas of justice and the universal laws of order, would wish that Davila's reproaches were not so well grounded. Juvat, would he say, hæc opprobria nobis, & dici potuisse, & non potuisse refelli (61); but, unluckily, I have but too much reason to charge this Italian with slander. Why have I so many proofs of his being a calumniator (62)! Every man who has formed to himself an idea of true glory, and has any regard to the memory of Francis I, will speak after this manner, whether he be a Protestant or a Roman Catholick; for nothing can be more abominable, than to put to death those who quit a Religion for no other view than the fear they are under of offending God, and who, in all other respects behave as very good subjects; nothing can be more just and rational, than to leave to God alone the empire over conscience.

(59) Mezerai means Davila. Here follow the words of that Italian Author, pag. m. 52. of Book 1. Comincio l'origine di questa dissensione insino al tempo del Rè Francesco il Primo, il quale benche facesse tal volta qualche severa risolutione, occupato nondimeno del continuo nel travaglio delle guerre straniere ò permesse, ò non si avidde, che andassero all' hora serpendo i principii di questa piu tosto dispregiata & odiata che temuta ò avertita credenza.

(60) Mezerai, History of France, tom. 2. pag. 1038.

(61) Ovid. Met. lib. 1. ver. 758. but he says juvat instead of pudet.

(62) O utinam arguerem sic, ut non vincere possem: Me miserum! quare tam bona causa mea est? Idem, Amorum lib. 2. Eleg. 5. ver. 7.

I will now contrast the following passage of Brantome to that of Davila. The Lutherans, and those who profess the new Religion, have been greatly incensed against Francis I, which perhaps was the cause why so many, both of his time, and in this age, have defamed him so much; for he burnt them, and spared very few censured in our Dictionary. Had it been asserted, that this Prince had done great service to the Protestants [P] of Germany, this would be true. I have taken notice elsewhere (k) of the idle excuses he made to them, to justify himself for putting some Lutherans to death. Varillas is guilty of an anachronism on this occasion [Q]. The latter years of the reign of Francis I were grievous to him. The effects of his impure amours (l), and the remembrance of the misfortunes which the ill conduct of his Ministers had brought upon him, plunged him into so deep a melancholy as would not suffer him to know his true interest; he being deeply afflicted at a circumstance which he ought to have considered as very happy for him: I mean the death of Henry VIII King of England § (α), a Prince who had joined so often in confederacy against France, and would, on all occasions, have been ready to oppress that Kingdom, in order to divide it with Charles V. The children of Francis I brought great affliction upon him [R]. I do not relate of those he could discover. It is related that he was the first Monarch who brought these burnings into vogue, they being seldom spoken of under his predecessors. Heaven be praised that Luther had not yet appeared in the world, who was the first heretic of this kind, tho' some had started up before, whose principles made so great progress in the Christian world. But I shall leave this matter to those who are better acquainted with it than my self. Nevertheless this great King, notwithstanding he had burnt so many people, did nevertheless protect Geneva when Charles Duke of Savoy would lay siege to, and have taken it; a circumstance that lost him part of his territories of which the people of Bern dispossessed him; for these things his said Majesty was very much censured, as also for having sent to the succour of that city the troops commanded by the Lord Rance de Lore. Reconcile, if you can possibly, these burnings with the protection he gave on the last mentioned occasion (63).

(k) The remark [B] of the article BELLAI (William of).

(l) Mezerai, Hist. de France, tom. 2. pag. 1039.

(63) Brant. Vie de François I, tom. 1. of the Mem. pag. 231.

[P] Francis I had done great service to the Protestants.] The reader has just now heard, that he saved the Republic of Geneva, the metropolis of those of the Reformed Religion, their Mother-Church which sent its Apostles and Books to France, and its Councils into all parts for the support of the Protestant cause. This conduct of Francis I enlarged the Canton of Bern, of which the Reformation to this day feels the benefit. He did very great services, directly, to the League of Smalcalde, but many more indirectly; for he was the cause that Charles V, on many occasions, shewed great favour to the Protestants of Germany, in order to prevent their adhering to France. As it is more agreeable to the principles of religion and piety, to acknowledge the hand of the Almighty, I mean a particular influence of Providence in the establishment of the Reformation, I approve those who judge of it in this manner; but I cannot forbear saying, that some persons of good sense are of opinion, that the bare competition or emulation between Charles V and the King of France was more than sufficient, to furnish the Protestants with means to support themselves; and that the reason why Luther has succeeded better than so many other Reformers his predecessors, was because he made his appearance under favourable auspices, I mean the emulation between Francis I and Charles V, two Princes who, to thwart one another, favoured this new Sect alternately. Now when it was once well settled in Germany, it sent such succours to the Calvinists in France as were sufficient for them to keep their ground &c. The query put by Brantome, with regard to the inconsistency of burning an hundred hereticks, and protecting their nest, their center, their metropolis, puzzles all such as do not know, that this is one of the most common scenes of the grand Farce of the world. Princes have in all ages sported with Religion in this manner; they still play the same Farce, and persecute, in their own dominions, a Religion which they support to the utmost of their power abroad. It must not be inferred from thence that themselves have no Religion. Such an assertion would be false, they being sometimes even bigots to it. What then can be the reason of this? They have a greater regard for their temporal dominions than for Christ's Kingdom (64). I do not except the Pope himself; and it is my opinion that he was almost as much dissatisfied at the Emperor's progress against the League made by the Protestants, as Francis I could be. Let us now hear Mezerai. "The noise of the Emperor's arms frighted "every part of Christendom; and the Pope himself "trembled for fear lest, after having subdued Ger-

How useful the emulation between Charles V and Francis I, was to the Protestants.

(64) See the remark [H] of the article AGESILAUS II.

"many, he should march into Italy. After Francis "had therefore well weighed the consequences of the "ruin of the Protestants, he changed his opinion and "made an alliance with them; obliged himself to "receive the Duke of Saxony's eldest son in France, "and to allow him the exercise of his Religion; pro-"mis'd to send 100000 crowns to his father, and as "many to the Landgrave of Hesse, till such time as he "should be able to assist them with troops (65)." Did he not here discover a glorious zeal for the Religion he professed? He used to burn some inconsiderable private persons, because they refused to go to Mass, and sent powerful succours to Princes who had abolished the Mass in their Dominions. This was attacking only the weather-cocks of the party; it was carrying off some of their tiles and stones, or plundering some hamlets, at the same time building fortresses and magazines of arms for them (66). Add to this the remark [AA] of the article HENRY II, and the remark of the article SURGIER.

(65) Mezer. Chronol. Abridgment, tom. 4. pag. 637. ad ann. 1547.

[Q] Varillas is guilty of an anachronism on this occasion.] He supposes (67) that when Francis I put to death six Lutherans the 19th of January 1535, the French Monarchy was more dangerously shaken by Calvin's Institution, than it had ever been by the English and the House of Austria. We have shewn above (68), that Calvin resolved to publish this work, to refute the slanders which were spread against those whom Francis I put to death; which were spread, I say, in order to pacify the Protestants of Germany, who were greatly exasperated at the last execution of the six Lutherans.

(66) Francis I preserved Geneva, when the Duke of Savoy would have destroyed the Reformation, had he not been prevented by this Monarch. The following words may be applied to those who adhere to such a policy. Urbem (philosophiæ) mihi crede proditis, dum castella defenditis. i. e. "Believe "me, you betray "the city, of "Philosophy, "whilst you de-"fend the cita-"del." Cicero, de Divinat. lib. 2. cap. 16.

§ (α) This death of a Prince, who was but a little older than himself, whispered to him that himself would not be long after him; and this reflection, among others, quite sunk his spirits. See Mem. de du Bellai, at the end of Book X; and Thuanus, Tom. I. pag. 85. B. C. of the Edition 1626. REM. CRIT.

(67) Hist. of Francis I, liv. 7. pag. 248.

[R] The children of Francis I brought great affliction upon him.] The name of the eldest was Francis. He was born in the castle of Amboise the 28th of February 1518 (69); was poisoned with a cup of fresh water by Sebastian Montecuculi, and died in the castle of Tournon, the 10th of August 1536 (70). The King his father was so deeply afflicted at his death, that it was a long time before he could recover himself, he having conceived very great hopes, and entertained a very good opinion of this son. De Bellai relates this very well in his Memoirs (71). The second son of Francis I swayed the sceptre after him, and was called Henry II. There is no doubt but he afflicted his father greatly, when he held a correspondence with Mommorency who was in disgrace, and made a cabal against the Duchess d'Etampes, his father's favourite mistress. He formed this cabal in concert with Diana de Poitiers his own mistress; and words could never express the evils which the jealousy of these two women occasioned (72). If the dissensions that reigned between the father's mistress and that of the son, made the King uneasy; the discord broke out between the Dauphin and his brother the Duke of Orleans, involved him in no less affliction, and proved as prejudicial to him. The Duchess d'Etampes's faction sided with the Duke of Orleans; whilst that of Diana de Poitiers opposed this Prince, and at last poisoned him. Let us see what Mezerai says on this occasion. The Duke of Orleans, a Prince of whom great hopes was conceived, died the 8th of September at Forest-Moustier, either of the plague, or of poison, which it was suspected had been given him by his

(68) At the beginning of the remark [F] of the article CALVIN.

(69) Father Anselme, Hist. de la Maison royale, pag. 136.

(70) Idem. He says that he was poisoned in Valence, but Brantome, tom. 1. pag. 336. says more truly that he was poisoned in Lions.

(71) Brantome, tom. 1. pag. 338.

(72) See the article ETAMPES.

relate the ſeries of his actions, becauſe I then ſhould be forced to repeat what is related amply enough in other Dictionaries. The ſirname of GREAT, beſtowed upon him after his death, was not of long continuance [S]: he deſerved this title on ſome accounts, and eſpecially for his valour, and that frank and undiſguiſed generoſity which is ſo rarely found in perſons of his exalted ſtation. His courage and reſolution were not equally conſpicuous on all occaſions. He did not behave manfully enough under the rigours of his impriſonment; the thoughts of it brought him almoſt to his end, and he betrayed too much fear at his return to Francis [T]. I look upon what I have read in a little book publiſhed ſome time ſince (m), as a fiction, viz. that he killed, in Madrid, a Nobleman of great quality for being wanting in reſpect to him, and that the Emperor did not take it ill.

(m) It is intitled, Avis à l'Auteur du Mercure Hiſtorique & Politique. It was printed, (if I miſtake not) in 1689; and wrote in oppoſition to ſome particulars which the Author of the Mercure had advanced concerning Chriſtina Queen of Sweden. I have not been able to recover this Avis.

Here follow the particulars I ſhall add to the preſent article in this ſecond edition. It has been falſly reported that Francis I was born many years after his mother had been barren [U]. He has been ranked among the Princes, who after their coming to the throne, his brother's creatures. Theſe could not bear to ſee the King ſo fond of him; and at the ſame time be ſo angry becauſe the Dauphin, in oppoſition to his commands, held a correſpondence with the Conſtable of Montmorency, whoſe return they wiſhed, becauſe their Sovereign was ſo earneſtly deſirous of it (73). What a trouble muſt it be to Francis I, to ſee that his own ſon, by intermeddling more than he ought to have done in State-affairs, forced him to take ſuch precautions as were neither agreeable nor advantageous to him? It was owing to the Dauphin's faction that the King was obliged to agree to the treaty of Creſpy. The Dauphin had writ a Letter to his father, with the conſent of the chief officers of the army, to beſeech his Majeſty to ſend the Conſtable to the army, there to exerciſe his employment; and that it could not fail of being invincible, were he to head it. . . . The King never ſhewed ſo much reſentment as he did at the reading of this Letter. He complained that his ſon anticipated his authority, and that his officers preſumed to preſcribe Laws to him. He told his diſcontent to every perſon who approached him, and reprimanded very ſeverely all thoſe who had angred him. He told the Dauphin angrily that it was his duty to ſhow his ſubjects a perfect pattern of obedience, and not to cenſure his conduct, by propoſing to him, at a dangerous juncture, the recalling of a favourite who had been juſtly diſgraced. He threatned the reſt with his hatred, in caſe they continued to act ſo imprudently; and the Ducheſs d'Etampes's faction taking advantage of his uneaſineſs, repreſented to him ſo effectually, that the only way for him to rid himſelf for ever of the importunity of petitions that might be made in favour of the Conſtable, would be to make peace immediately, that his Majeſty commanded Admiral de Annebaut to conclude it &c. (74), "This peace being of greater advantage to the Duke of Orleans than to the French "Nation; the Dauphin, who could not bear either "the aggrandizing of his brother, or ſuffer any pre"judice to be done to the Kingdom, proteſted againſt "it in the caſtle of Fontainebleau, in preſence of the "Duke de Vendome, Count d'Enghien his brother, "and Francis Count d'Aumale, the 2d of Decem"ber (75)." We may naturally ſuppoſe that the King of France met at that time with the fate of many other great Princes, I mean, to be very unhappy in his family; and extremely jealous of his ſucceſſor, and conſequently to be very much tortured. Thoſe who poiſoned the Duke of Orleans, ſaved, perhaps, the lives of two hundred thouſand perſons; and perhaps they alſo ſecured France from the fatal ſhame of diſturbing the order of the ſucceſſion (76).

(73) Mezerai, Chronol. Abridgment, tom. 4. pag. 635, ad ann. 1545.

(74) Varillas, Hiſt. of Francis I, Book 11. pag. 108. ad ann. 1544.

(75) Mezerai, Chronol. Abridgment, tom. 4. pag. 631. ad ann. 1544.

(76) See the remark [S] of the article HENRY II.

[S] The ſirname of GREAT beſtowed upon him after his death, was not of long continuance.] Theodorus Beza (77) informs me, that this name was given him after his death; but I conclude that it did not continue long, becauſe every one ſays, and writes, Francis the firſt, and not Francis the great. We ſay and write Henry the fourth or Henry the great, which is the ſame thing. It would be the ſame with reſpect to Francis the firſt and Francis the great, had not that latter title been laid aſide almoſt as ſoon as given. It will be needleſs to obſerve, that the great King Francis the firſt, and Francis the great have a different ſignification.

(77) Hiſtory of the Reformed Churches, Book 1. ad fin. pag. 66.

[T] He betrayed too much fear at his return to France.] I will employ Mezerai's words on this occaſion, The King was no ſooner got on this ſide the river, but he leaped upon a Turkiſh horſe, as though he had been afraid of ſome ambuſcade, and galloped with the utmoſt ſpeed towards St. John de Lux, which is four leagues from that place; and having refreſhed himſelf half an hour, he flew with the like ſpeed towards Bayonne (78). This King muſt have met with very ſhameful treatment during his impriſonment, ſince he commanded his children, upon pain of having his curſe fall upon their heads, to revenge it. This I have read in a letter written by Admiral Chabot's Secretary (79), publiſhed by Mr. le Laboureur. It was written from London the 5th of February 1535, and contains, among other particulars which Henry VIII told this Secretary, that he remembered very well when they had the laſt interview, that the ſaid Prince (80) ſpeaking one day to the Dauphin and the Duke of Orleans and Angouleſme, his ſons, in preſence of the ſaid King, ſaid theſe very words to them: that did he know they ſhould ever obliterate the wrongs and the inhuman treatment both himſelf and they had received from the ſaid Emperor, and did not revenge them, in caſe it was not in his power to do it (which he yet hoped) from that time he would wiſh his curſe on them (81).

(78) Hiſtory of France, tom. 2. pag. 950. ad ax. 1596.

(79) His name was Palamedes Gontier.

(80) i. e. Francis I.

(81) Addit. aux Mémoires de Caſtelnau, tom. 1. pag. 420.

[U] It has been falſely reported, that Francis I was born many years after his mother had been barren.] Many of the writers of the Life of St. Francis de Paule, have aſſured us, that the Princeſs Louiſa of Savoy, wife to Charles of Valois, bewailed, to this holy man, her unhappineſs in being barren; and ſhe had long (82), added they, been ſenſible of this imperfection. Francis de Paule, by his prayers, removed her ſterility; for which reaſon ſhe gave the name of Francis to the boy whom ſhe brought into the world. This is their relation of that matter. Theophilus Raynaud, upon the credit of theſe Writers, told the ſame incident in his Trinitas Patriarcharum, a work in which he makes the Elogium of St. Bruno, Patriarch of the Carthuſians, of St. Ignatius, Patriarch of the Jeſuits, and of St. Francis de Paule, Patriarch of the Minims; but he was told that this was a great untruth, ſince Louiſa of Savoy was a widow at nineteen years of age, and that ſhe before had brought into the world Princeſs Margaret and Prince Francis, which is an inconteſtable proof that ſhe could not have bewailed her long ſterility to Francis de Paule. Hoc correctione indiget, ſays he (83). Neque enim longam ſterilitatem ſuam deplorare potuit Ludovica, quæ anno ætatis undeviceſimo vidua relicta, duplicem jam prolem enixa erat, Margaritam filiam natam Engoliſmæ XI Aprilis anno 1492, & Franciſcum, Cognaci editum anno 1494 12 Septembris. He adds, that Hilarion de Coſte, who wrote afterwards, had mentioned this in the Life of the Founder of the Minims, and that the Sammarthani had confirmed it (84), they ſaying that Louiſa of Savoy was born in 1477, married Charles of Orleans, Count of Angoulême in 1488, was delivered of Francis the 12th of September 1494, and loſt her huſband the 1ſt of January 1496. Here then we have a falſity refuted demonſtratively, and at the ſame time we have a proof of the inadvertency with which a crowd of miracles are aſcribed by Writers to a Saint in his Legend, without their taking the pains to conſult the Genealogical or Chronological Tables. Had they been conſulted on this occaſion, the Writers would not have aſſerted, that a woman who is delivered of a girl at fifteen years of age, and of a boy at ſeven-

(82) Diu ſterili. Theoph. Raynaud. Syntagm. de Libris propriis, Art. 56. pag. 63. Apopompæi.

(83) Idem, ibid.

(84) Aſtipulantur FF. Sammarthani, tom. 1. lib. 10. pag. 627. Idem, ibid.

throne, would not revenge the injuries they had received, when in a private condition. It is pretended, that under the reign of Lewis XII, he ſent a challenge to Charles of Bourbon, who, by ſome reports, had endeavoured to ſet the King againſt him; and it is added, that having ſucceeded that Monarch in the throne, he had ſo little remembrance of the enmity he had entertained againſt this Charles of Bourbon, that he made him Conſtable of France (n). Every one has heard of his great fondneſs for learning; but few are acquainted with an incident found in a letter of Andrew Alciat, which was not publiſhed till 1697 [X]. There is another peculiar, and more important incident, that was known but lately, viz. that the Duke of Orleans, ſecond ſon to Francis I, offered the Proteſtant Princes of Germany, to allow the exerciſe of their Religion [Y]; and it is conjectured that he made this propoſal with his father's conſent (o). I took notice in the remark [N], of the diſorders occaſioned by the new cuſtom introduced by Francis I, viz. of admitting the Ladies to his court. It is impoſſible to deſcribe this diſorder better than Mezerai has done, and I therefore will tranſcribe the words employed by him on this occaſion [Z]. The Author (p) of ſome dialogues, (in that which he ſuppoſes between this teen had bemoaned her long barrenneſs, and that it had been removed only by the prayers of a holy man. Would to God there may be nothing more than ſimplicity and credulity in the ſtory of this falſe miracle, and that the wants and intereſt of the community which I mention elſewhere (85), may not have prompted the Minimes to ſtrew this falſe glory round their Patriarch.

(n) See Camerarius, Meditat. Hiſt. tom. 2. cap. 45. ſub fin. pag. m. 194. He cites du Ferron in Vita Franciſci I.

(o) See the remark [I] towards the cloſe.

(p) It is ſaid to be Mr. Fenelon (Archbiſhop of Cambray) Author of the Adventures of Telemachus.

(85) In the remark [N] of the article FRANCIS of Aſſiſi.

[X] Few are acquainted with an incident, found in a Letter of Andrew Alciat, which was not publiſhed till 1697.] This Letter was written from Bourges, the 3d of September 1530. Alciat relates there, that one Julius Camillus, a learned man, had offered Francis I, to teach him to ſpeak Greek and Latin, in a month's time, both in proſe and verſe, with as much elegance as Demoſthenes and Cicero, Homer and Virgil. Camillus was to employ but one hour in a day in inſtructing this Monarch, but then he required to be alone with him; he thinking that ſo great a ſecret ought to be communicated to none but crowned heads (86). He alſo required for his reward, two thouſand crowns per annum in good benefices. This man ſpoke ſo confidently to Francis I, that he imagined there was ſome truth in his extraordinary promiſes; however, he was diſmiſſed after the ſecond leſſon, ſix hundred crowns being given him at the ſame time (87).

(86) Nolle enim ea arcana cuiquam inferiori à Rege patefieri. Alciat. Epiſt. 23. inter Gudianas, pag. 109.

(87) Ex Alciato, ibid.

[Y] The Duke of Orleans, ſecond ſon to Francis I, offered the Proteſtants of Germany, to allow the exerciſe of their Religion.] We are obliged to le Vaſſor for the diſcovery of this extraordinary circumſtance. He has publiſhed it in the ſecond edition of de Vargas's Letters, which he tranſlated from the Spaniſh, and embelliſhed with ſeveral very ſolid obſervations. He found (88), among Cardinal de Granvelle's Papers, the Inſtruction which the Duke of Orleans gave his Secretary and Valet de Chambre upon his ſending them to the Dukes of Saxony, the Landgrave of Heſſe, and other Proteſtant Princes, that were to aſſemble in Francfort (89). It is dated at Rheims the 8th of September 1543, and begins thus: "Shall declare to them "the great deſire which, by the Grace of God, we "have that the holy Goſpel be preached throughout "the whole Kingdom of France, where we would "gladly ſee a beginning of it. And foraſmuch as "fear and filial reverence and fraternal honour which "we bear to the moſt Chriſtian King, our moſt honoured Lord and Father, and to the Dauphin our "elder Brother, prevent our ſuffering it to be preached "freely in our Dukedom of Orleans, becauſe it is "ſubject to, and in the juriſdiction of our ſaid Lord "and Father; beſides that the Pope, the Emperor, "and other Princes might oppoſe us; and other rea"ſonable cauſes, the relation of which we reſerve to "a more proper ſeaſon, we have faithfully applied to "the moſt illuſtrious and moſt excellent Princes the "Duke of Saxony, the Landgrave of Heſſe, and "other Proteſtant Princes, to acquaint them that we "are determined, and promiſe to them expreſly and "without any regard, to cauſe it to be preached in "the Dukedom of Luxemburg, whereof we hope the "ſaid Lord the King will leave us in quiet poſſeſſion "of, as well as of our territories which belong to us "by the Law of Arms. But we intreat the ſaid Pro"teſtant Princes to receive us into an offenſive and "defenſive confederacy and alliance with them, and "earneſtly intreat them not to refuſe us ſo very juſt "and reaſonable a requeſt; not to aid us with their "forces and protection againſt any particular Prince, "but only in what concerns the affairs of the Chriſtian "Religion, whoſe increaſe we greatly, and above all "things deſire, which by this means, may eaſily be "known in our other territories and in the ſaid "Kingdom, when the ſaid Lord the King our Father "ſhall ſee us in alliance with the ſaid Princes, who "will cauſe him to declare his good zeal in this "matter; and we ſhall be ever able to excuſe our"ſelves to him, and defend our ſelves againſt our "adverſaries. May it therefore pleaſe the ſaid Princes, "that the inſtant we begin to cauſe the ſaid Goſpel to "be preached in the ſaid Dukedom of Luxemburg, "our alliance and confederacy may begin with them "at that very time (90)." Here follows le Vaſſor's reflection. It is highly probable that the Duke of Orleans did not take this ſtep without his father's privity. He ſpeaks too confidently of the good zeal of Francis I, he offers too freely this King's whole power; he gives too great hopes of what will be done the inſtant the Proteſtants ſhall have admitted him into their alliance. Theſe ſeveral things ſuppoſe, that the father and ſon acted in concert (91). Thoſe who ſay that the Ducheſs d'Etampes was a Lutheran in her heart, and caballed in favour of the Duke of Orleans, againſt the Dauphin (92), will not fail to aſſert, that ſhe excited this young Duke, unknown to Francis I, to hold a correſpondence with the Princes of the League of Smalcald, and afterwards induced him to joyn with the Emperor (93), when ſhe found that fortune ſeemed to incline that way. Some may perhaps imagine, that the King joined clandeſtinely in this plot of his ſon, without any ways intending to favour the new Religion in France; and that he propoſed only to reap a greater benefit from the ſuccours of Germany, by flattering theſe Lutheran Princes with the hopes, that he would one day embrace the Proteſtant Religion, in caſe it ſhould be for his intereſt. I am of opinion, that le Vaſſor's diſcovery will prompt the curious to ſift out the bottom and drift of this affair, and that they will find ſome papers which will give light into it.

(88) Le Vaſſor, Letters and Memoirs of Vargas, pag. 24. edit. 1700.

(89) Idem, pag. 25.

(90) Ibid.

(91) Idem, pag. 27.

(92) See the remark [H] of the Article ETAMPES.

(93) See the remark [F] of the Article ETAMPES.

[Z] I will tranſcribe the words employed by Mezerai on this occaſion.] "King Francis I, who had a noble "paſſion for all things of an auguſt kind, was won"derfully delighted with magnificence, imagining "that they contributed to diſplay his grandeur; and "being perſuaded that the beauty of the Ladies "would heighten the ſplendor of his pomp, and as "he was amorouſly inclined, he firſt accuſtomed the "fair-ſex to frequent the Court. At firſt this change "had a very good effect, this lovely ſex having "brought politeneſs and courteſy thither, and inſpi"ring noble ſouls with generous ſentiments; but "when uncleanneſs crept in, and the example of the "greateſt people had given a ſanction to corruption, "that which till then had been a beautiful ſource, "whence honour and virtue flowed, became a filthy "ſink of all vice. Infamy then grew into credit, "proſtitution was the path to favour, and by this "means men got to be favourites, and continued "ſuch; in a word, poſts and employments were beſtowed this Prince and Lewis XII) printed at the Hague anno 1700, has very well deſcribed the defects of this Monarch. It is pity this Dialogue is ſo ſhort, that being the only circumſtance that can be found fault with in it. Francis I made a regulation which deſerves a remark. I mean his aboliſhing the cuſtom of drawing up inſtruments relating to law-ſuits) in Latin [AA]. Naudæus (q) has touched upon this, and ſeveral other particulars relating to the erudition of this Prince, his writings, and his affection for learned men. The laſt particular I ſhall mention is remarkable enough. It is pretended (r) that Francis de Paula, a little before he died, ſpoke as follows to Louiſa of Savoy, Your ſon will be King of France; and will ſurpaſs all the Princes of his age in glory, in riches and in felicity, provided he does but endeavour to reform the Church; but, if he does not attempt this, he will be very unhappy. It is to obſerved, that Francis de Paule died the 2d of April 1507, and that Lewis XII, who then ſwayed the Scepter of France, lived near eight years after this, and that his Queen was not barren (s).

(q) Naudé, Addit. à l'Hiſtoire de Lewis XI, pag. 369.

(r) See Richer, Hiſt. Concil. lib. 4. pag. 101.

(s) See the article FERRARA, Rem. [A].

Here follow ſome particulars which I have collected ſince the ſecond edition. It has been falſely reported, that after Francis I had been taken priſoner before Pavia, he was conveyed to the caſtle of Ambres near Inſpruck [BB]. Among the ſeveral elogiums which have been given him for the great encouragement he gave to learning and learned men, I muſt not omit the compliments which have been paid him by the Literati, for his cauſing ſuch beautiful editions to be made of books [CC]. The paſſage he cut through a mountain

" beſtowed merely at the caprice of women. And " becauſe theſe, when they are once grown diſſolute, " commonly degenerate to injuſtice, fraud, revenge, " and malice in a much more barefaced manner than " even the men; they were the cauſe that ſeveral very " bad maxims were introduced into the Government, " and the antient Gallic candour was baniſhed ſtill " farther than chaſtity. This corruption begun under " Francis I, was become almoſt univerſal under " Henry II, and was arrived at its higheſt pitch un- " der Charles IX and Henry III (94)."

(94) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France under Henry III, tom. 3. pag. 446, 447.

[AA] He aboliſhed the cuſtom of drawing up Inſtruments, relating to Law ſuits, in Latin.] I will borrow Varillas's words. " Juſtice had, till that time, " been adminiſtred in Latin, throughout the whole " Monarchy of France, at leaſt in the greateſt part " of it; and this language had been ſo corrupted, " that it was ſcarce known but by the termination of " the words, whether this was owing to ignorance, " or the Judges pretended they could thereby be better " underſtood. But this abuſe was no longer to be " borne with, at a time when endeavours were em- " ployed ſo ſucceſsfully to reſtore the antient polite- " neſs; and ſince the French Monarchy had never " been dependent on the Roman, it was not fit that its " moſt authentic Acts ſhould be preſerved in this " tongue. It would have been ridiculous to tranſlate " them into proper Latin, ſince they then would have " been unintelligible to moſt people; and the King " was of opinion, that it were better to expreſs them " in good French than in bad Latin. Thus an or- " dinance was made for this purpoſe in 1539; and " none of all thoſe enacted by Francis I, have been " more univerſally or more conſtantly obſerved than " this (95)." This Hiſtorian obſerved juſt before, that Chancellor Poyet had procured this reformation in the Laws, a little before his fall. Germany had been reformed, in this particular, near three Centuries. Here follows a paſſage from Camerarius's Hiſtorical Meditations. The Emperor Rodolphus I... moved by various complaints of the German nation, and finding himſelf, under the yoke as it were, of foreign Secretaries, verſed in the Latin tongue, whom he was forced to employ to the great prejudice of his affairs, becauſe theſe people often betrayed him; held a Diet at Nuremberg anno 1252, in which it was enacted, with the general conſent of all the States of the Empire, that thenceforward the German language ſhould be uſed in the chancelleries and in public contracts. This it was that gave the Germans an occaſion of improving their language, which is now arrived to ſuch a perfection, that any Hiſtory or Science may be perſpicuouſly and elegantly expreſſed and underſtood in it, either in manuſcript or in print (96). Obſerve, that it has been ſaid, that the circumſtance which prompted the King of France to baniſh the Latin tongue from the Law-Courts, was, his being told that the firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Paris had made uſe of a ſurprizingly barbarous word, in procuring ſentence. Scripſerat morem Galliæ fuiſſe, leges Regni ſemper Latino ſermone ſcribi, donec Franciſcus Rex ejus nominis primus id vetuit anno 1539. Sed debuerat Matharellus cauſam addere: quoniam videlicet Præſes Curiæ Parlamenti in arreſto pronunciando dixerat, debotamus & debotavimus: quod Gallice jam pronunciatur, Avons debouté & deboutons (we have rejected and reject). De quo Rex Franciſcus (ut quidam dicunt) multum riſerat: ut alii, multum iratus fuerat (97).

(95) Varillas, Hiſt. of Francis I, Book 9. pag. m. 381.

(96) Camerarius's Hiſtorical Meditations, vol. 3. lib. 4. cap. 5.

(97) Matagonis de Matagonibus adverſus Italogalliam Antonii Matharelli, pag. m. 226.

[BB] It has been falſely reported... that he was conveyed to the caſtle of Ambres near Inſpruck.] I will here quote the Hiſtorical Mercury for March 1702. " By Letters from Vienna, dated the 4th of this " month, we are informed, that Marſhal de Villeroy " (98), by the Emperor's order, had been conveyed " from Inſpruck to the caſtle of Ambres, a league's " diſtance from it; and that he is in the ſame apart- " ment in which Charles V confined Francis I, after " taking him priſoner before Pavia." Some of the Dutch News-Papers had mentioned this circumſtance before. I wiſh that the Author of the Mercury, inſtead of copying thoſe News-Writers had refuted them. It is certain that Francis I was carried priſoner into Spain, not into Germany. Bouchet obſerves, that the Viceroy of Naples (99) gave the Lord Alarcon Governor of Apulia and Calabria, the charge of the King of France's perſon, and that he carried this King priſoner to the caſtle of Piſqueton (100). Paradin, Mezerai and ſeveral other Hiſtorians, give the name of Piſqueton to the caſtle in which that Prince was confined, before he was carried to Spain. This caſtle is ſituated on the river Adda in the Milaneze, and is called the Italian Picighitone. See Leander Alberti's Deſcription of Italy (101).

(98) He was taken priſoner in Cremona, the 1ſt of Feb. 1702.

(99) It was Charles de Lanoi.

(100) Bouchet, Annals of Aquitaine, folio m. 217.

(101) Folio 407 verſo. Venice edit. of 1561.

[CC] I muſt not omit the compliments which have been paid him by the Literati, for his cauſing ſuch excellent Editions to be made of Books.] We need but read the following words of Peter Victorius (102). Veritas quoque non patitur, ut reticeam egregiam voluntatem atque operam, inferioribus temporibus in hac re poſitam à Franciſco primo Gallorum rege, qui ut erat omnibus in rebus magno animo ac vere regio præditus, procliviſque in humanum genus juvandum, rectaque ſtudia ſumma ope avgenda, curavit, ut quidquid antiquorum ingenii monumentorum reſtaret in afflicta Græcia, ad ſe mitteretur: cui beneficio magno addidit alterum, & ipſum valde utile ad hanc ipſam honeſtam artem ornandam: ſtuduit enim, magnis præmiis præpoſitis, ut lepidæ admodum formæ litterarum, & Græcarum & Latinarum, fingerentur; in quo etiam fælix fuit: ita enim pulchræ atque politæ fabricatæ fuere, ut non videantur ab humano ingenio venuſtiores, & exquiſitiores ullo pacto conformari poſſe; librique ipſis excuſi, non invitent tantum, ſed etiam aliquo modo rapiant ad ſe legendos. i. e. " Truth will not per- " mit me to conceal the ſignal obligations we owe of " late years, in this reſpect, to Francis I King of " France, who, as he diſplayed a greatneſs of ſoul, " and a truly royal diſpoſition in all things, was ſtu- " dious of promoting the good of mankind; and en- " couraged, to the utmoſt of his power, all uſeful " learning; ſo he took care to have all ſuch antient " monuments of wit and genius, as ſtill exiſted in " widowed Greece, to be ſent him. To this noble " piece of ſervice he joined another, of the higheſt " importance mountain is very ſurprizing [DD]. I have ſomething to add with regard to the pretended oath which certain ſatyrical writers ſuppoſe he took to the grand Signior [EE], the very words of which I have copied (t).

(102) Petrus Victorius, Præfat. Comment. in VIII Libros Ariſtotelis de optimo Statu civitatis.

(t) See the remark [I].

" importance for carrying on this excellent deſign ; " he endeavouring, by offering very ample rewards, " to get beautiful Greek and Latin types founded. " The King was extremely ſucceſsful in this attempt ; " ſuch beautiful and elegant ones being caſt, that it " was impoſſible for human art to ſurpaſs them : and " the Books which were printed with them, not only " invited, but forced, in ſome meaſure, men to per- " uſe them." To this may be added, what I relate in the article VERGERIUS (Angelus) (103), and the following paſſage from the Antiquities of Paris : " It " appears that, anno 1541, Angelus Vergerius, Greek " Secretary to the King, had a penſion of 450 livres " Tournois, charged on the Exchequer (104)."

(103) Citation (b).

(104) James du Breul, Antiquitez of Paris, pag. m. 568.

[DD] The paſſage he cut thro' a mountain is very ſurprizing.] Leger affirms (105), that mount Viſol which is thought to be the higheſt in Europe, and where the Po takes its riſe, is the mountain which, (we are told in Hiſtory) Francis I cauſed to be cut quite thro', in order to open a paſſage into Italy. " But, adds this Author, altho' " the French, ſince they have found out the ſecret to " open the paſſage of Mount Genevre, which is much " ſhorter and more commodious, make no farther uſe " of this hole, it ſtill exiſts, and will doubtleſs do ſo " to the end of the world, the greateſt part of it be- " ing cut quite thro' the rock. It takes up about two " hours to paſs thro' it, which may be done with load- " ed mules. The only inconveniency is, it is ſo very " dark, that there is no going into it but by torch- " light." As this Author has not ſpecified the date of this ſurprizing work, nor named any Hiſtorians who mention it ; the reſearches I my ſelf have made, induce me to think, that the expedition of Francis I into Italy, anno 1515, is the Æra of this. I imagined that Martin du Bellai had given an ample relation of the difficulties which the French ſurmounted in their paſſage over the Alps ; but I find that he makes only a very curſory mention of it (106), and does not give any idea of the prodigious labour it muſt have coſt. I conſulted Guiccardine (107) much more to my ſatisfaction, and was almoſt as well pleaſed with Varillas who writes thus (108), " Lautrec and Navarre, with " the flower of the French Army, left Geneva (109) " to the left ; forded the river Durance, and entred the " Argentaires (110) by a way called Gilleſtre, from " whence they pierced as far as the rock St. Paul, " which they were forced to open with iron inſtru- " ments and with fire. The two ſucceeding days, " moſt of the pioneers were uſeleſs ; for as now every " mountain was ſeparated from the reſt by abyſſes, the " mine and ſap were no longer of uſe, and they had " recourſe to bridges of communication to carry over " the Artillery. The ſoldiers and pioneers drew it " along in places inacceſſible to beaſts of burthen. " They filled up with faſcines, ſuch places as were ca- " pable of it ; and, when theſe were too wide, the " void was made up with props and large trees. In " this manner they reached Mount Pied-de-Porc, " which they deſpaired of being ever able to pierce " thro' becauſe it conſiſted of one entire ſolid rock, " ſteep and craggy on all ſides ; but Navarre, who exa- " mined every part of it, diſcovered one vein more " ſoft than the reſt ; and traced it ſo exactly, that he " opened himſelf a way thro' the middle of it. Thus " by the induſtry of the engineers, the labour of the " ſoldiers, and the perſeverance of the Chiefs, the " French Army arrived, about the cloſe of the eighth " day, in the Marquiſate of Saluces (*). " But how good ſoever the deſcription may be, it will be found flat and inſipid, if compared to that of Paulus Jovius (111), between whom and Varillas there is a remarkable difference. The latter does not make the leaſt mention of Trivulcio, to whom Paul Jovius aſcribes the glory of having found out this new paſſage, and being the principal director of the execution.

(105) John Leger, Hiſt. des Egliſes Vandoiſes, Part 1. pag. 2.

(106) Martin du Bellay, Memoir, liv. 1. ad ann. 1515, pag. m. 28.

(107) Guiccard. liv. 12. folio m. 356.

(108) Varillas, Hiſt. of Francis I, Book 1. pag. 43. Hague ed. 1690.

(109) He ſhould have ſaid Mount Genevre.

(110) He ſhould have ſaid le col de l'Argentiere. i. e. " the defile of " Argentiere."

(*) In the relation of the paſſage ſent to the King's mother by Count de Morette.

(111) Jovius, Hiſt. ſui temp. lib. 15. folio m. 301, & ſeq.

[EE] I have ſomething to add, with regard to the pretended oath . . . he took to the Grand Signior.] The reader has ſeen the reproach which John le Maire de Belges made to the Venetians, I add that the Saracens, who took the King St. Lewis priſoner, propoſed to him the formulary of an oath, much ſhorter than that which it is ſuppoſed the baſtard of Cyprus did not ſcruple to take, and which is the ſame that Francis I is falſely ſuppoſed to have taken. It is manifeſt that the one was copied from the other ; but St. Lewis would not ſubmit to this harſh condition.

(112) In the remark [I].

FRANCISCA or FRANCES, a devout Lady who was canonized in 1608, was born at Rome about the year 1384. She diſcovered, from her infancy, that her heart was inclined to celeſtial things ; ſhe loving ſolitude and prayer, and abhorring the pleaſures and diverſions ſo much coveted at that age. Being eleven years of age ſhe meditated a deſign of taking the veil ; but her father would not conſent to it, and married her to a wealthy Gentleman (a). In this change of condition ſhe ſtill loved retirement and prayer, and therefore devoted to them all the hours ſhe could ſpare from the duties of her family. She did not frequent ſhows, feaſts, houſes where weddings were kept, nor even viſited her relations, her only pleaſure being to go to Churches and Hoſpitals. She prevailed with a great number of maidens to leave the ſecular life, and founded a convent for them in Rome, according to St. Benedict's rule. They were called Oblates, and were of the Congregation of the Olivetans. Having loſt her huſband, ſhe begged, with the utmoſt humility, to be received into this Community ; where having taken the veil, ſhe diſcharged her ſeveral duties with wonderful exactneſs and punctuality. She died there the 9th of March 1440. Several miracles were wrought by her in her life-time, and ſoon after her death ; ſo that ſome months after this, the preliminaries of her canonization were begun (b). This affair was reſumed at different times at the requeſt of the Citizens of Rome, but was not concluded till the Pontificate of Paul V, anno 1608 [A]. I have met

(a) Named Laurence Pontiani.

(b) Extracted from the Bull of Canonization, inſerted by Bzovius in vol. 16. of his Eccleſiaſtical Annals, pag. 730, & ſeq. ad ann. 1440.

[A] This affair was reſumed at different times . . . but was not concluded till . . 1608.] The regular procedures were begun under Pope Eugenius IV, anno 1440. A Biſhop and a Prior of the Carthuſians were appointed to examine witneſſes, with regard to the life and miracles of St. Frances. Two years and ſome months after, the affair was referred to Cardinal Alberti ; and the teſtimony of thirty eight witneſſes were taken, on eighty articles. Nicholas V, ſucceſſor to Eugenius IV, cauſed new enquiries to be made by two Biſhops, who received judicially the depoſition of two hundred and thirty two witneſſes. The affair ſtopt here, till the Pontificate of Clement VIII, and nevertheleſs the devotion for the deceaſed Frances did not cool, and the day ſhe died was ſolemnized in Rome. Clement VIII, being ſollicited by the inhabitants of Rome to complete this work, ordered it to be diſpatched with all poſſible diligence. The Commiſſioners appointed by him examined all the proceedings and the ſeveral inſtruments from the beginning ; and made freſh informations or enquiries till the year 1604. The Pope dying during this interval, could not gratify the deſires of the people of Rome. Paul V, his ſucceſſor, being urged to put an end to this affair, ſet about it with great vigour ; and at laſt, after the formalities requiſite in ſuch caſes were over, he canonized our Frances the 29th met with a very odd incident in Nicholas Vignier [B], and have ſought for the foundation of it, but to no purpoſe.

I have at laſt found in Volaterranus the words which occaſioned Vignier to mention this ſtrange incident. The public has been informed of it, and may be ſenſible that this hardly excuſes the writer in queſtion [C].

FRANCUS

of May 1608, and appointed the 9th of March as her feſtival (1). The Citizens of Rome defrayed the expences of this great ceremony, which amounted to above an hundred thouſand crowns (2).

(1) Extracted from the Bull of the Canonization, inſerted by Bzovius in tom. 16. of his Eccleſiaſtical Annals, pag. 730, & ſeq.

(2) Continuat. Hiſt. Thuani, lib. 1. pag. 30. ad ann. 1603, in fine.

[B] I have met with a very odd incident in Nicholas Vignier.] Here follow his words, I not making the leaſt alteration in them, as indeed I ought not to do (3). A Roman Matron was rank'd among the Saints by the Pope, becauſe ſhe uſed to check her ſtimulations of the fleſh, by dropping ſcalding bacon on the pudenda. Volaterranus. You ſee he cites Volaterranus after a very random manner, without ſpecifying the title, number of the book, chapter or ſection. This is pretty much his cuſtom; but methinks he ſhould have deviated from it on this occaſion, conſidering the oddneſs of the incident; and ought to have given the reader all the opportunity poſſible of verifying that paſſage eaſily. I look'd for it in Volaterranus (4), in every part where the Table of Contents, which is a very indifferent one, and the diſtribution of the ſubjects could ſerve as a guide to me, but could not find this paſſage. A man of letters had before told me, that he had not found any thing like this in Volaterranus's work. This is not the only reproach I have to make Vignier. I cannot conceive why he ſpeaks of this Roman Matron under the year 1505; for this is not the Æra in which ſhe either lived, died, or was canonized. Bzovius, under the year 1505, ſpeaks of two women who were reputed Saints at their death, the one dying in Bourges, the other in Ravenna; but neither of theſe were our Frances, the one being Joan of France, Foundreſs of the Nuns of the Annunciade, and the other's name being Margaret. Laſtly, I obſerve, that I could never believe that Vignier's citation is faithful, unleſs I ſaw thoſe very expreſſions in Volaterranus. It is altogether improbable, that Volaterranus ſhould have aſſerted, that Frances was canonized anno 1505, this not being till 1508; and it is leſs probable he ſhould have affirmed, that her canonization was founded merely on the reaſon aſſigned by Vignier. He was too well acquainted with the ſtyle and method of the Court of Rome, to advance a thing ſo diſtant as this is from the practice of canonizations. They are never founded ſolely on the virtue of perſons, how conſpicuous and eminent ſoever it may have been; it muſt likewiſe have been accompanied with true or falſe miracles, that is, witneſſes muſt be heard, and theſe muſt affirm that the interceſſion, relicks &c. of the perſon canonized, have been productive of miraculous cures &c. I would not alledge, againſt Vignier, the ſilence of Pope Paul the Vth's Bull; for I can eaſily conceive, that tho' it had been proved, by the enquiries made into the Life of St. Frances, that ſhe had mortified herſelf in the ſevere manner abovementioned, this would not have been expreſly inſerted in the canonizing Bull. I confeſs that ſome particular acts of auſterity, leſs ſurprizing than that in queſtion, are inſerted in it; but theſe bore no relation to obſcene images, which ought never to be introduced in ſuch a Bull. Nec minori virtute in Chriſto Jeſu, theſe are the words of Pope Paul V, cum hoſte domeſtico pugnavit, ſed exemplo electorum Dei, admirabilem in modum caſtigavit corpus ſuum, & in ſervitutem redegit. Cibum illi ſemel in die herbæ, & legumina, aqua potum præbuerunt; ſive vigilaret, ſive dormiret, aſperum laneum induſium non exuebat, duroque cilicio, ac ferreo cingulo ſuper nudum membra mortificabat; accedebant flagella ferreis aculeis aſpera, quibus corpuſculum, quamquam aliunde attritum, ſeveriſſime atterebat (5). Theſe Latin words inform us, that ſhe eat nothing but herbs and pulſe, and drank nothing but water; that ſhe wore night and day a woollen ſhift, a hair cloth, an iron girdle next her ſkin, and uſed to ſcourge herſelf in a moſt cruel manner. Perſons who act in this manner, have no occaſion for the ſcalding lard mentioned by Vignier, eſpecially when, after the example of Frances, they ſhun the company of worldly perſons, their viſits, their marriage feaſts, their profane diverſions &c. To this let us add, that ſhe was not a widow till a few years before ſhe died (6), and that ſhe died in the 56th year of her age. Here are ſeveral reaſons which may induce us to believe, that this Saint had no occaſion to employ ſo violent a remedy againſt uncleanneſs.

(3) Nicholas Vignier, Recueil de l'hiſtoire de l'Egliſe, pag. 626. ad ann. 1505.

(4) i. e. in the work intitled, Commentariorum Urbanorum libri octo & triginta. I have at laſt met with the paſſage. See the remark [C].

(5) Literæ decretales Canonizationis S. Franciſcæ, apud Bzovium, Ann. Eccleſ. tom. 16. pag. 732.

(6) Defuncto marito, paucis annis ante ſuam dormitionem. Ibid. pag. 731.

After all, had Frances made uſe of it, ſhe would not only merit the applauſe, but likewiſe the admiration of all good people. She would have diſplayed ſuch a love for chaſtity, as would be infinitely ſtronger and more lively, than if ſhe had imitated St. Aldhelme (7), and ſuch raſh devotees who blow up the fire of luſt, in order that they may acquire the greater merit in quenching it: a bad victory, which is not only dangerous, but of ſuch a caſt that there is no gaining it but at the expence of virtue itſelf, for whoſe ſake all thoſe ſtruggles are made. A bare thought, an image, or an impure emotion triumphed over, all theſe are a ſtate of impurity, and an object that can be no ways pleaſing in the eyes of the ſupreme Lawgiver, nor in thoſe of his holy Angels. St. Paul's, words (8), which ſignify according to moſt verſions, that the widow who paſſed her days in pleaſure, is dead while ſhe liveth, ought, according to Melanchthon to be interpreted in a different manner. The Apoſtle does not mean, that a widow who is fond of feaſting, gaming, parties of pleaſure, &c. has loſt the Holy Ghoſt, and the Life of Grace; his words imply, that this ſpiritual death belongs to ſuch widows as are expoſed to the unchaſte emotions of the fleſh; but do not mean ſuch temptations as lead them to the accompliſhment of their deſires, but ſuch temptations as divert the ſoul from meditating on heavenly things, and turn it to impure images. Melanchthon's words are as follow. Accuſat Paulus illas mulieres non levibus verbis: Pruriens viva mortua eſt. Nam vocabulum σπαταλῶσα propriè ſignificat prurientem, quod plus eſt quàm appetere delitias ciborum, ſed eſt habere incendia libidinum, σπάτος, cutem ſignificat, σπατίζειν, σπάτος τίλλειν, vellicare cutem, ſeu titillare, σπατάλη pruritus ſeu titillatio cutis. Deinde καταστρηνιᾶν, ſignificat turgere ſeu diſtendi, ſaginatum & tumefactum eſſe contra Chriſtum. His infignibus verbis multi turpes motus pugnantes cum caſtitate ſignificantur. Hac ſalacitate dicit veram fidem expulſo Spiritu Sancto extingui. Hæc eſt nativa ſignificatio verborum Pauli (9). What is properly to reſiſt theſe temptations? It is to wiſh yourſelf free from unchaſte deſires, and emotions; but ſtill you have them. The ſafeſt way therefore, is, to bring one's ſelf to ſuch a ſtate as may exclude all theſe deſires; and this our Frances did, if Vignier's ſtory be true (10).

(7) See the article FRANCIS d'Aſſiſi, remarks [C] and [D]. See alſo the article FONTEVRAUD, remark [M] and [N].

(8) Ἡ δὲ σπαταλῶσα ζῶσα, τέθνηκε. i. e. "She that liveth in pleaſure, is dead while ſhe liveth." 1 Epiſtle to Timothy, chap. v. ver. 8.

(9) Melanchthon, Reſponſio ad impios articulos Bavaricæ Inquiſition. Art. 26. folio m. H. 2.

[C] I have at laſt found, in Volaterranus, the words which occaſioned Vignier to mention this ſtrange incident . . . but this hardly excuſes the Writer in queſtion.] The Public has ſeen in a Letter, which I wrote the 6th of May 1702, this whole affair cleared up. Obſerve, I intreat you, Sir, theſe are the very words of my Letter (11), that I did not charge Vignier with citing Volaterranus falſely; I ſaying only that I look'd for it (the paſſage in queſtion) in Volaterranus, in every part where the Table of Contents, which is a very indifferent one, and the diſtribution of the ſubjects, could ſerve as a guide to me, but could not find this paſſage. You yourſelf confeſs, that you have hitherto conſulted that Author's huge volume to no purpoſe; but add, that you are nevertheleſs perſuaded that Vignier had there read what is related by him. You are in the right, in general; and I am extremely glad, both for your ſatisfaction and that of all my readers, to inform the Public in this place, that happening to conſult Volaterranus, two days ago, upon another occaſion, I met with the paſſage in queſtion. It is in Book XXII, pag. 810 of the Frankfort Edition of 1603, where mention is made of Pope Urban V. We there find the following words: Quam (Catharinam Virginem filiam Brigidæ) Julius jamjam in catalogum referre una cum Franciſca Romana matrona ſtatuit, quæ & ipſa ſub Eugenio claruit prodigiis & a ſanctitate: voluptatem inviti coitus ardente ſupra vulvam larido reprimebat. I had copied, in my Dictionary, pag. 1286, Vignier's tranſlation of this paſſage (12). Examine my criticiſm thoroughly, and you'll find it juſt; for it is true that Volaterranus obſerves, that Julius II intended to canonize this Lady, but not that he had canonized her &c.

(10) Confer quæ ſupra Rem. [A] of the article CORONEL (Alphonſus).

(11) Journal of Trevoux, for May 1702, Amſterdam edit. pag. 380, 381.

(12) See the citation (3) above.

FRANCUS (SEBASTIAN) an Anabaptiſt in the ſixteenth Century, publiſhed ſeveral pieces filled with errors, which the Lutherans refuted. He was a true fanatic. He taught that all ſins are equal, and attempted to invalidate the authority of the Scriptures, for he aſſerted, that men ought to ſeek for the ſuggeſtions or inſpirations of the Holy Ghoſt, without regarding the revealed Word. He alſo was of opinion, that the true Church is a medley of ſeveral ſects, and that the Papiſts are as much included in it as the Proteſtants. The Divines of the Confeſſion of Augſburg, aſſembled at Smalcald in 1540, appointed Melanchthon to refute the chimeras of this man, and thoſe of ſome other fanaticks (a). Our Francus publiſhed a very ſatyrical piece againſt the fair-ſex, which John Frederus, and Luther refuted [A].

(a) Extracted from Seckendorf, Hiſt. Lutheran. lib. 3. pag. 268, 269.

I will add, that he drew very ſtrange conſequences from an axiom of Servetus with regard to the divine Preſence; he pretending, that not only beaſts, but likewiſe inanimate creatures, partook of a general ſoul that was divine. Mr. de Saincte Aldegonde who informs me of this, wiſhed that the principle whence theſe conſequences were drawn, might be thoroughly examined [B]. I am to obſerve that, according to him, Francus was

[A] He publiſhed a very ſatyrical piece againſt the fair ſex, which John Frederus and Luther refuted.] John Frederus wrote a Dialogue on marriage, to refute Francus's Satyr, and dedicated it to Dorothea Queen of Denmark (1) on whom he beſtowed a noble elogium. Luther wrote a Preface to this refutation, and exclaimed vehemently againſt Francus. He ſays, among other particulars, that he was a ſlanderer, who rak'd together all the filth of mankind, and publiſhed impudent relations of them. He compares him to flies &c. But I had better quote the words of the Author who furniſhes me with all theſe particulars. Oppoſitus ille (Dialogus de Conjugio) eſt maledicentiæ Sebaſtiani Franci . . . qua fœmininum ſexum edito libello protervè inſectatus eſt. Lutherus in præfatione fatetur, ſe Francum hominem peſſimum reſponſo indignum judicaſſe, certum, quod ſcripta ejus lucem haud diu ſint latura, cum non niſi ſatyris & convitiis indulgeat, & aliorum detegat & exagitet vitia, illitaſque turpitudinum illarum inverecunda relatione chartas mundo obtrudat; comparat eum cum muſcis & veſpis, quæ fœdiſſima quæque pervolitantes & perrepentes, poſtea inquinatæ & fœtentes, naſo, oculis, genis, & labiis hominum impudenter inſidere velint. Taxari quidem merito vitia etiam à piis doctoribus, ſed non cum petulantia aut inſultatione, aut quod delectentur in eorum enarratione, ſed ut odium flagitiorum excitent, & viam ad emendationem oſtendant (2). i. e. "The Dialogue relating to Marriage, is oppoſed to "Sebaſtian Francus's ſlanders . . . that Author having "written a little Book, in which he inveighs ſtrongly "againſt the female ſex. Luther owns, in the Preface, that he look'd upon Francus, a worthleſs "wretch, as unworthy of a reply, being firmly perſuaded, that his writings would not be long-liv'd, "becauſe he gives himſelf up to nothing but ſatyr "and railing; lays open and cenſures the vices of "others; and forces his books on the public, books "ſtuffed with immodeſt accounts of ſhameful actions. "He compares him to flies and waſps, which winging "their way up and down, creeping into the filthieſt "things, and being by this means polluted and ſtinking, audaciouſly attempt to ſettle on the noſe, eyes, "cheeks and lips of men. It is with juſtice that pious Teachers cenſure vice, but not with petulancy "and inſolence; or to ſhew that they are pleaſed with "what they relate, but to excite an averſion to vice, "and to ſhew the way that leads to amendment."

(1) King Chriſtian the IIId's Queen.

(2) Seckendorf, Hiſt. Lutheran. lib. 3. pag. 593. col. 1. ad ann. 1545.

[B] Mr. de Saincte Aldegonde . . . . wiſhed that the principle whence theſe conſequences are drawn might be thoroughly examined.] In a Letter which he wrote to Theodorus Beza, anno 1566, we find the following words. Sebaſtianus Francus homo Germanus, qui mirifica hujuſmodi portenta congeſſit in ſuas farragines, ac in primis in eum, quem Paradoxa inſcripſit, librum, Axioma illud Serveti de Dei reali vel eſſentiali in omnibus & rebus & locis præſentia ita urget, ut ex eo colligat non modo brutas pecudes, ſed ipſa etiam corpora inanima, tamen anima quadam communi atque divina vel cæleſti vegetari, quæ niſi fallor à Virgilio mundi ſpiritus, ab hoc verbum internum, ſermo, ſpiritus, lux, potentia, vis, ac denique Filius ipſe Dei nominatur. Eam cùm hominum omnium animos communi quadam vi fovere, tum præſertim in piis viris facultatem quandam præcipuam ac ſingularem exerere. Eòque rectè illos vel Deos vel certè deificatos appellari. Quo ſenſu vult Chriſtum ipſum dici Filium Dei, cui Socratem ac Mercurium Trismegiſtum alioſque hujus ſtirpis nonnullos, tanquam æquales ac ſocios adjungit. Ejus infinitas blaſphemias ſtatuerunt quidam refutare, ſed hoc unum eos remoratur, quod haud ſatis illis conſtare poſſit quid de primo illo axiomate Servetico, ex quo cætera omnia manant, ſit judicandum. Mihi certè haud dubium ſit, quin ex eo multa non modo falſa, ſed prorſus etiam impia conſequantur. Tamen neque Joannes Calvinus neque ex veteribus (quod quidem ſciam) quiſpiam argumenta ad illius ipſius refutationem ſuppeditat. Quinimò verò veteres illi Theologi videntur mihi præſentiam illam realem Divinæ eſſentiæ in immenſum plerunque extendiſſe (3). i. e. "Sebaſtian Francus a "German who heaped up in his Miſcellanies, many "wonderful portents of this ſort, eſpecially in that "Book to which he gave the title of Paradoxes, "wherein he urges the axiom of Servetus, with regard to the real or eſſential preſence of God in all "things and in all places, in ſuch a manner, as to "infer from thence, that not only brutes, but even "inanimate bodies, are vegetated or informed as with "one common, divine or celeſtial ſoul; which, if I "am not miſtaken, is called by Virgil, the ſpirit of "the world; and by this Writer, the internal word, "the ſpeech, breath, light, power, ſtrength, and "laſtly, the Son of God himſelf. He declares, that "this ſoul not only cheriſhes the ſouls or minds of "all men by a certain common force or energy, "but that it exerts a ſpecial and peculiar faculty or "ſtrength in pious men; and that theſe are therefore "juſtly called Gods or deified men. In this ſenſe he "aſſerts, that Chriſt himſelf is called the Son of "God, with whom he joyns as equals and companions, Socrates, Mercurius Triſmegiſtus, and ſome "others of that claſs. Some Writers intended to refute his numberleſs blaſphemies, but were reſtrained "from this ſingle conſideration, viz, that they know "not well what judgment to form of that firſt axiom "of Servetus, whence all the reſt flow. As to my "ſelf, I am certain, that not only many falſe, but "even impious conſequences will reſult from it. Nevertheleſs, neither Calvin, nor any of the old Writers, ſo far as is come to my knowledge, furniſh "any arguments to refute it. Nay, thoſe antient "Divines ſeem to me to have extended immenſely, "for the moſt part, that real preſence of the Divine "Eſſence." I omit what he obſerves afterwards, and which ſhews that the received opinion of God's immenſity puzzled him, and ſeemed to him as adapted to produce a great number of chimæras. I likewiſe paſs over the anſwer which Beza made to him (4); but ſhall obſerve by the way, that the opinion of the Divines, which declares, that the eſſence and ſubſtance of God is diffuſed in all bodies, is ſubject to numberleſs difficulties, as the Carteſians ſhow evidently. Read what Wittichius (5) obſerves againſt Suares, who has endeavoured to explain the manner in which God may be preſent in imaginary ſpace. Mr. Arnauld cenſured in this manner a Miniſter, who had made uſe of the common hypotheſis or received opinion, to prove, by an argument ad hominem, that marble or ſtone might be worſhipped (6). The Miniſter in his anſwer, ſaid many things, and the following among the reſt (7); that the Theology of Vaſques, according to which all inanimate and irrational things may

(3) Epiſt. 6. Th. Bezæ, tom. 3. Oper. pag. 206, 207.

(4) Ibid. Epiſt. 7. pag. 208, 209.

(5) Wittichius, in Conſenſu Veritatis, pag. 86, & ſeq. edit. 1682.

(6) Arnaud, Reflexions ſur les Preſervatifs, pag. 59, & ſeq.

(7) Le Janſeniſte convaincu de vaine Sophiſtiquerie, pag. 194.

was a German, but others declare him a native of Woerden, a city of Holland (b). He is ſirnamed Werdenſis, in the Abridgment of Geſner's Bibliotheca (c), where the titles of ſeveral of his works are given, among which I muſt not omit a German chronicle, wherein he relates a great number of ſurprizing particulars (d). Some Authors, even when they write in Latin, call him Franck. Moreri mentions him under this name, but ſays little or nothing of him, though Spondanus, whom he cites, might have furniſhed him with ſome particulars, and this among the reſt, that Francus was driven from Straſburg; that his chronicle was condemned there; and that he was the firſt who publiſhed, that there were above forty four ſects of the Anabaptiſts (e).

(b) Crenius, Animadverſ. Part 11. pag. 92.

(c) Pag. m. 746.

(d) Quia homo fuit deditus Swenckfeldii phantaſiis, ideo mira ſubinde admiſcet. Keckerm. de Hiſtor. pag. 209.

(e) Spond. Ann. ad ann. 1529, num. 9.

may be worſhipped, becauſe God is, by his eſſence, in all things, and ſupports them, is ſhocking; but that it is no ways irrational, nor ill connected with his principles...; that "Vaſques * argues admirably well upon "the ſubject of man, according to the doctrines of "the Church, of which he is a member, in order to "prove that man, who is the lively image of the "Deity, may be worſhipped with the ſame act of "adoration by which we worſhip God (8)." We are not to wonder after this, that the Sieur de Saincte Aldegonde (9) feared the ill conſequences which would flow from the doctrine of Servetus, adopted by Sebaſtian Francus.

* In III Them. Diſp. CX. Quæſt. xxv. cap. 3.

(8) Janséniſte convaincu &c. pag. 195.

(9) Epiſt. 6. Th. Bezæ, pag. 207.

FRANGIPANI, a very antient Roman family, and allied to the greateſt houſes in Europe [A], owes its name to ſome extraordinary acts of charity exerciſed towards the poor during a famine [B], One branch of this illuſtrious family ſettled glorioufly in Hungary ſome ages ſince [C]. MUTIO FRANGIPANI ſerved in France in the Pope's troops

[A] A very antient Roman family, and allied to the greateſt Houſes in Europe.] Le Laboureur (1) relates, that the Marquiſs Frangipani, whom he had ſeen in Rome, reckoned "among the younger branches of his family, "the Archdukes of Auſtria and the Kings of Spain, "grounded on the opinion of Raphael Volaterranus, "which opinion he would have been very ſorry to "have been undeceived in; and he was very trouble-"ſome to the new Princes of Rome, by the advan-"tage he pretended to have, on account of the anti-"quity of his family, to which, according to him, "none could be compared." This Author having deſcribed the dreſs and equipage in which he had ſeen the ſame Marquiſs in a great ceremony (2), adds (3) that this "gave him notions very oppoſite to "the eſteem which is due to the firſt and moſt antient "name in Rome, and to the moſt illuſtrious Houſe in "Dalmatia and Friuli, ſince that, about the year 1120, "one of this family married the daughter of Engilbert "Marquis of Friuli, ſiſter of Mahaut, wife to Thibaut IV "Count of Champagne and Brie, aunt to Alice of "Champagne wife to Lewis the younger, and mo-"ther to Philip Auguſtus of France. Zazzera, who "has writ concerning ſeveral families of Italy, and "was ignorant of that alliance, adds another which "he proves, viz. with the niece of an Emperor "of Conſtantinople, who, anno 1170, was ſent in "great pomp, attended by ſeveral Biſhops and great "Lords of Greece, to marry Eudes Frangipani. It "appears by the Hiſtory he has written of this il-"luſtrious Houſe, that it was the moſt powerful in "Rome; and that it there ſaw the riſe of the gran-"deur of all the reſt, who, by the abuſes of "the times have aſſumed to themſelves the title of "Princes." We ſhall ſee below (4), that the Frangipani pretend to be related to St. Gregory.

(1) Addit. aux Mem. de Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 704.

(2) See the remark [G].

(3) Addit. a Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 705.

(4) In the remark [F].

(5) Apud Menagium, Origini della lingua Italiana, pag. 231.

(6) Godefrid. Vindocinenſis, lib. 1. Epiſt. 8. apud Menagium, ibid.

(7) Vetuſtiſſimæ ac nobiliſſimæ apud Romanos familiæ nomen nunc paululum inflexum; Frangipanes enim dicuntur. i. e. "The name "of a moſt an-"tient and moſt "noble Roman "family is now "a little chang-"ed, it being "called Frangi-"pani" Sirmondus, Not. in Ep. VIII. lib. 1. Godefr. Vindoc. apud Menag. ibid.

(8) Ad ann. 1179, apud Menag. ibid.

[B] ... Owes its name to ſome extraordinary acts of charity, exerciſed towards the poor during a famine.] Frangipani in Italy, bears Azure, two hands Argent, holding a Loaf, Or, cut into halves; becauſe one of his predeceſſors was extremely bountiful, during the time of a famine, to all indigent perſons. Theſe are the words of Father Gilbert de Varenne in his Theatres des Armoiries (5). They were at firſt called Fricapani, as appears from the following words of Geofroi de Vendome: Primo anno, quo, Deo volente vel permittente, nomen Abbatis ſuſcepi, audivi piæ recordationis Dominum Papam Urbanum in domo Joannis Fricapani latitare (6). i. e. "The firſt year, in "which, by the will or permiſſion of God, I aſſumed "the name of Abbot, I was informed that Pope "Urban, of pious memory, lay hid in the houſe of "John Fricapani." See Father Sirmond's note on this paſſage (7). The name Frangipani was already in vogue in the twelfth Century; for we find the following words in the Chronicle of the Monaſtery of Anchin (8) Schiſmatici quietem non ferentes Eccleſiæ, iterum quemdam Clericum de progenie illorum quos Frangipanes Romani vocant contra Papam Alexandrum, Antipapam ſtatuunt, quem mutato nomine, Innocentem III vocitarunt. i. e. "The ſchiſmaticks being exaſpe-"rated at the tranquillity which the Church enjoyed, "again ſet up, in oppoſition to Pope Alexander III, "an Eccleſiaſtic, deſcended from thoſe whom the peo-"ple of Rome call Frangipani, which Anti-Pope's "name being changed, he was often called Innocent "III." Conrad Abbot of Urſperg makes uſe of the word Frangentes panem. Here follow his words. Imperator convocavit ad ſe de civibus Romanis potentiſſimos & nobiliſſimos de familia eorum qui dicuntur Frangentes panem, & aliis ad quos præcipue habebat reſpectum populus Romanus (9). i. e. "His Imperial "Majeſty ſent for the moſt powerful and moſt noble "of the Roman Citizens, of the Frangentes panem "(breaking bread) and of thoſe for whom the inha-"bitants of Rome had a more immediate reſpect."

(9) Conrad. Abbas Urſperg. ad ann. 1227, apud Menag. ibid.

[* There is, however, a different Etymology of that name of this family mentioned by other Writers. Frangipani, ſay they, ſignifies the Frank Lord †, and was the appellation given to a Roman Gentleman who entred into the ſervice of the Kings of Hungary during their firſt wars with the Turks. He ſettled in Croatia, and founded the family of the Frangipani. From this houſe was deſcended John, the ſon of Bernardine, who after the death of Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, revolted from Ladiſlaus, and Duke John, the natural ſon of Matthias. The Duke, who was Ban of Croatia, beſieged Frangipani in the town of Brevia, and reduced him to ſuch extremity that he forced him to throw himſelf into the arms of the Turks; which gave Bajazet the Second an opportunity of making himſelf Maſter of Croatia, in the year of the Hejra 899, and of Chriſt 1493 §. ADD. REM.]

† Pan, or Pani, is a Sclavonian word, and ſignifies Lord; but is frequently uſed by the Turks, ſpeaking of the Sclavonians.

§ See D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. pag. 355.

[C] One branch of this illuſtrious family ſettled gloriouſly in Hungary ſome ages ſince.] Scioppius has produced an inſtrument or deed dated anno 1260, by which Bela King of Hungary acknowledges, that in the calamities which the Tartars brought upon his Kingdom, he was greatly comforted by Frederic and Bartholomew Frangipani, who, with their relations devoted themſelves to his ſervice, and aſſiſted him with a large ſum of money; in return for which, he made over to them the poſſeſſion of a maritime city, with all the rights and lands that belonged to him. See page 215 of the Book intitled Oporini Grubinii Amphotides Scioppianæ, Scioppius declares (10), that this deed was communicated to him by George Antigonus Frangipani, Gentleman of the bed chamber, and Maſter of the horſe to the Archduke Maximilian Erneſt. Here follows ſome part of it (11). Deus totius conſolationis, qui conſolatur ſuos in omni tribulatione, etiam nobis fontem aperire dignatus eſt, & ad conſolandum nos Feldericum & Bartolomæum illuſtres & ſtrenuos viros de Frangipanibus, Nobiles de Weglia, quaſi de cœlo projecit, qui nobis cum omni parentela adhærentes inter actus promiſcuos, fideles exhibuerunt famulatus & non modicam pecuniam eorum, quæ ultra xx. marcarum millia tranſcendunt, in vaſis aureis & argenteis atque aliis rebus pretioſis nobis de bonis eorum præſentaverunt, & præſentando donaverunt. Demum nos, cum à nobis

(10) Scioppius, Amphot. pag. 214.

(11) Ibid. pag. 218.

troops, in the reign of Charles IX [D]. One of his grandſons poſſeſſed employments in the ſame Kingdom, under Lewis XIII (a). One of his ſmart ſayings was made uſe of; but the perſon who cited it in a letter was ſeverely cenſured for it [E]. This grandſon of Mutio Frangipani invented the compoſition of perfumes and odours, which ſtill retains the name of Frangipani (b) [F]. He thought it an honour to be the laſt of this illuſtrious name, and did not ſcruple to ſay, that he led a ſingle life out of neceſſity, becauſe his quality did not allow him to mix his blood with upſtart families of fortune, which diſhonours the antient Majeſty of Rome (c). He was equipped, after a remarkable manner, in a cavalcade in Rome [G].

(a) See Balzac's words in the remark [F].

(b) Le Laboureur, Addit. aux Mem. de Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 705, where it is ſaid that the Marquis of Frangipani's own brother joined with him in inventing this compoſition.

(c) Ibid. pag. 704.

FRATRICELLI,

nobis Deus ſuam indignationem amoverit, recompenſantes eorum ſervitia & dona, de conſilio dominæ Mariæ, chariſſimæ conſortis noſtræ, & Baronum noſtrorum fidelium, quandam civitatem noſtram, circa littus maris exiſtentem, SEGNIAM vocatam, cum omnibus ſuis utilitatibus & pertinentiis univerſis, ſimul cum tributo ſeu Telonio, & aliis circumferentiis, & in eadem libertate, ſicut nobis ſervire conſueverant, dedimus & donavimus, & contulimus ipſis Felderico & Bartolomæo in filios filiorum perpetuo & irrevocabiliter poſſidendum. i. e. "The God "of all conſolation, who comforts his children in "every tribulation, deign'd to open a fountain even "to us; and ſent us, as it were from heaven, to "conſole us, Felderic and Bartholomew, illuſtrious "and valiant men, of the houſe of the Frangipani; "Noblemen of Weglia, who adhering to us with all "their relations, ſent their faithful ſervants, and gave "us no inconſiderable ſhare of their wealth, amounting to upwards of twenty thouſand marks, in gold "and ſilver veſſels and other precious things. But "heaven having now averted his wrath from us, "we, to reward theſe ſervices and gifts, do, by the "counſel and advice of our moſt dear conſort Mary, "and of our faithful Barons, give and beſtow upon "the ſaid Felderic and Bartholomew, and their heirs "for ever, the irrevocable enjoyment and poſſeſſion of "one of our cities, ſtanding on the ſea ſhore and "called SEGNIA, with all and every its profits and "appurtenances, together with the tribute or cuſtom, "&c, as paid till this time to us." This Prince, by another inſtrument, granted them ſeveral privileges and immunities; and ſome of the reaſons he gave, why he indulged them, reflect the greateſt honour on thoſe who were the objects of his beneficence on this occaſion. For this reaſon I am under a neceſſity of citing his words, which will be as ſo many hiſtorical incidents ſuitable to this part of my work. Deus ad refulciendum & corroborandum nos, Feldericum & Bartholomæum de Frangipanibus, illuſtres & ſtrenuos viros, Nobiles de Weglia alta ex proſapia urbis Romanæ ſenatorum ortos, tanquam angelos protectionis de arce Polorum miſit, qui nobis cum eorum parentela & familiarium caterva armigera in opem & noſtræ perſonæ ſaluberrimam tutelam adhærendo, per eorum ſtrenua certamina, quoſdam ductores ipſorum Tartarorum, ſequaceſque eorum diræ necis exterminio necari, & quoſdam captos nobis offerre, ubi etiam crebra ſtigmata, & gravia ſuſtulere, & multos ex eorum charis proximos & familiares amittere, ſupraque omnibus prænarratis copioſam pecuniarum ipſorum in auro etiam & argento ac rebus pretioſis quantitatem ad xx millia marcarum ſe extendentem nobis pro aſſumendis ſtipendiariis & expeditionibus variis offerre maluerunt &c (12). i. e. "God, to ſtrengthen and ſupport us, "ſent from heaven, as guardian Angels, Felderic and "Bartholomew Frangipani, illuſtrious and valiant "men, Nobles of Weglia, ſprung from the exalted "lineage of Roman Senators; who adhering to us "with their kindred and armed friends, happily protected us with the greateſt vigour; and fought ſo "valiantly, that they ſlaughtered ſome of the Tartar "Generals and their followers, and brought us others "whom they had taken priſoners. In theſe engagements, they were frequently and very dangerouſly "wounded, and loſt ſeveral of their neareſt relations "and friends. Beſides all theſe ſervices, they preſented us, for the levying of troops and various expeditions, a large ſum of money in gold, ſilver and "valuable things, amounting to twenty thouſand "marks &c." See in the Supplement to Moreri, the tragical end of an Hungarian Nobleman of great diſtinction called Frangipani, who had engaged in a conſpiracy againſt the Emperor, anno 1671.

(12) Apud Scioppium, Amphotid. pag. 217, 218.

[D] Mutio Frangipani ſerved in France . . . in the reign of Charles IX.] "The Pope engaging warmly "in the wars, occaſioned by Religion in France, ſeveral perſons of high diſtinction among the Italians paſſed the Alps; ſome being officers in the troops which "he ſent; and others being volunteers, and who "were prompted to ſerve merely from the high regard "they had to this Crown. The Lord Mutio Frangipani thought himſelf the more obliged to engage "in this expedition, in as much as he was a partizan "of France, and had there a great many relations by "Julia Strozzi his wife, ſiſter to the Counteſs de "Fieſque, and who likewiſe had the honour of being "related to the Queen. He exhibited proofs of his "valour in the battle of Jarnac where he was wounded; after which he returned home, to enjoy peaceably the fame he had acquired in this war (13).

(13) Le Laboureur, Addit. à Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 704.

[E] The perſon who cited . . a ſmart ſaying . . . of Frangipani . . was ſeverely cenſured for it.] Coſtar, in a Letter to Mr. Colbert (14) has the following expreſſions: How will it be poſſible for me to go to court? It is now almoſt five years ſince I retired into the country, becauſe I am no longer able to live as people do in Paris, and to frequent awful places, where a man muſt ſtand perpetually in that troubleſome poſture which ſeemed intolerable to the Marquis de Frangipani, when he was at the court of France, which made him ſay ſo agreeably, ſtar ſempre dritto & ſcapellato (to ſtand for ever upright and uncovered.) You know the reſt, Sir; and if you do not, you muſt not expect to be informed of it by an Archdeacon (15). Let us now ſee in what manner he was cenſured for it. "Theſe words have no need of "an explication, ſince they are underſtood by every "one. This is an old jeſt, which is often repeated "by all who glory in their lewdneſs; and if my adverſary has been aſhamed to explain it, what man "will attempt it (16)?

(14) He was then only Steward of the Houſhold to Cardinal Mazarine.

(15) Coſtar, cited by Girac, Replique, pag. 27.

(16) Girac, ibid.

[F] He invented the compoſition of perfumes and odours, which ſtill retains the name of Frangipani.] Here follow the words of Menage (17): Da uno di que' Signori Frangipani, (l'abbiam veduto qui in Parigi) furono chiamati certi guanti perfumati, Guanti di Frangipani Lodovico Balzacio in una ſua lettera a Madama Deſloges. i. e. "From one of thoſe Lords Frangipani, "(we have ſeen him here in Paris,) certain perfumed "Gloves were called Frangipani's Gloves. Balzac in "a Letter to Madam Deſloges. "He yeſterday be"came willingly your Tributary, and obliged him"ſelf to ſend you, every year a pretty good quantity "of his paſtils (an odoriferous compoſition.) In caſe "you ſhould approve of them, they will become more "renowned than Frangipani's Gloves. But as your "people of Limouſin might very poſſibly miſtake on "this occaſion, you'll inform them (if you think pro"per) that the Perfumer in queſtion has thirty thou"ſand livres per annum, and enjoys the chief dignity "of this Province; and that this glover is a Roman "Lord, Camp-maſter or Major-general in the King's "armies, and related to St. Gregory the Great; and, "a circumſtance I value much more than all this, "one of the worthieſt men in the world." Menage afterwards quotes ſome Latin verſes of Ceriſantes which are very pretty. They are taken from an Ode which he addreſſed to Voiture, and printed at the end of Balzac's Latin Epiſtles.

(17) Origini della Ling. Italiana, pag. 231.

(18) Amice, nil me, ſicut antea, juvat Pulvere vel Cyprio Comam nitentem pectere: Vel, quas Britannus texuit ſubtiliter, Mille modis varias Jactare ventis tænias: Vel, quam perunxit Frangipanes ipſemet, Pelle manum gracilem Coram Puellis promere, i. e. "My friend, I "no longer delight as before, "to adorn my "ſhining hair "with powder "fetched from "Cyprus; or to "wear the fillets "wove ſo artfully by the Britons, and "which wanton "in the wind; "or in the fine "hand, ſcented "by Frangipani's "gloves, to "court the Ladies with."

[G] He was equipped, in a remarkable manner, in a cavalcade, at Rome.] Le Laboureur, who was an eye-witneſs on this occaſion, ſpeaks of it in the manner following: "I cannot forbear relating alſo, "concerning this laſt Marquis of Frangipani, that I "once ſaw him in a cavalcade, which is performed on "the Feſtival of St. Peter, conduct the Pope from "the Vatican to Montecavallo, extremely well mounted, and ſitting his horſe gracefully, but in a garb, "very unſuitable to this warlike ſolemnity, which "was celebrated by the firing of all the guns of caſtle

FRATRICELLI, hereticks who aroſe in Italy about the end of the thirteenth Century. They performed their devotions in ſecret places, where they uſed to aſſemble in the night; and there, after ſinging ſome hymns, they put out the candles, when every male dallied with his female as chance jumbled them together (a). The children that ſprung from this commerce were carried into the aſſembly, and handed round till they expired. The perſon in whoſe hands it breathed its laſt was choſen high Prieſt. They uſed to burn one of theſe children, and throw the aſhes into a veſſel, where they poured wine, and gave a cup of it to all thoſe whom they initiated into their fraternity. They exclaimed againſt ſeparate property; aſſerted that the faithful ought not to accept of any magiſterial dignity; and that the ſouls of the bleſſed will not ſee God till after the reſurrection (b). Madam des Jardins has given a very probable origin to this ſect [A]; for it is difficult to believe, that moſt of theſe religious hypocrites, who ſet up ſuch conventicles upon pretence of a reformation, have not the enjoyment of women chiefly in their view. They perſuade themſelves that the fair-ſex will be ſoon catched in the ſnare; and that their inclination to the exterior exerciſes of religion, and that of nature, which maintains an admirable correſpondence with the other, will give them an opportunity of obliging the women to comply with their wiſhes.

(a) Noctu in abditis locis ſacra operari ſoliti poſt quoſdam hymnos ſeu cantilenas extinctis luminibus, promiſcuis ac fortuitis coïtibus ſeſe inquinabant. Spondan. ad ann. 1297, num. 9. He cites Sabellic. 9. en 7. Prateolus, Sanderus, Gaultier.

(b) Idem, Spondanus, ibid.

But that I may obſerve the maxim, audi & alteram partem (hear both parties) I muſt here take notice, that an illuſtrious Proteſtant informs us, that the Fratricelli were not guilty of the infamous actions which were aſcribed to them [B]; but that the true reaſon, both

" St. Angelo. He was dreſſed in black taffety, his " cloak on his ſhoulder and turned up under his arm; " his clothes of the ſame materials, with hanging " ſleeves to his doublet. He was ſeated on a very " deep ſaddle; wore ſilk ſtockings, and garters roſe-" ways, and a ſwitch in his hand. Though I knew " him, I yet was reſolved to be certain that it was he; " it appearing to me very ſtrange, for him to appear " in this Citizen-like manner, on ſo very ſolemn an " occaſion as that I am ſpeaking of (19).

(19) Le Laboureur, Addit. à Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 705.

[A] Madam des Jardins has given a very probable origin to this Sect.] She ſuppoſes, that (1) the fame of amorous atchievements having alarmed jealous huſbands, increaſed the number of ſpies, by which means this intercourſe was quite interrupted. Some young ſparks were extremely afflicted at this reformation. Seeing therefore that the noiſe their gallantries made, had occaſioned this diſorder, they reſolved to carry on their amours ſecretly, in order to ſave appearances, which nettled huſbands to ſuch a degree. Accordingly thoſe ſparks affected to lead a retired life; they ſtudiouſly aſſumed a mortified exterior, and founding a new Order of Monks, under the name of Fratricelli or Brethren, ſo much veneration was ſoon paid them, on account of their ſeeming ſanctity, that they now were always ſpoken of as new anchorets. Some of the moſt reſtleſs huſbands, and whoſe wives were none of the chaſteſt, had the curioſity to go and viſit theſe devout brethren. Perſons diſtracted with domeſtic cares, reap great benefit by conferences; and being very much edified by the converſation of the Fratricelli, there were none of them but hoped they ſhould complete the converſion of the moſt coquettiſh wives, by the charitable remonſtrances of the brotherhood. They were impatient to go home, to trumpet the praiſe of this new inſtitution or order; and the wives looking upon every pretence of making viſits, as ſo many ſteps towards recovering their liberty, expreſſed as earneſt a deſire to viſit the Fratricelli as the huſbands had that they ſhould do this. Thus are the brotherhood agreeably viſited, and the huſbands extremely well pleaſed at it: for, in order to eſtabliſh their new power, they preached on nothing but conjugal fidelity, on the obedience which women owe their huſbands, and a great number of other precepts, all very neceſſary for domeſtic peace, and exceedingly edifying to huſbands: but as the exhortations that were proper for ſome, did not ſuit the reſt, they intreated the Ladies to come and ſee them in private, in order, ſaid they, that we may put the ax to the root of the tree, and to labour effectually at their entire converſion. The brotherhood eaſily obtained, from the married women, this mark of their deference; they thoſe much rather to come to their Sermons than not go out at all; and as the ſecret inſtructions of the Fatricelli did not appear ſo hard to be followed as thoſe of the common ghoſtly Fathers, they received them with docility, and ſubmitted to them without reluctance.

(1) Annales Galantes, Part. 3. Hiſt. 7. pag. 156. Dutch edit. 1677.

ENQUIRY into the cauſes, why ſo many women are drawn to fraternities or brotherhoods of an auſtere devotion.

It is an undoubted fact, and which has been verified by experience in all ages, that one of the ſureſt ways to draw the fair ſex, and make them run after men, is to eſtabliſh male communities of a ſevere reformation, and to make an outward ſhew of devotion in certain conventicles. Thoſe who ſearch for the cauſes of events, have not forgot to meditate on the reaſons of that in queſtion. Theſe divide our female pupils into two principal ſchools. Some go to the ſex inviting them thither. Others have been told a thouſand times, that there is a great deal of hypocriſy in the actions of theſe founders: that they are men as much as others; and that the only motive of their acting the hypocrites, is that they may carry on their amours without giving ſcandal, and under the veil of ſecrecy. There is no doubt but people have long ſung, in all countries, (but in other expreſſions) the following ſong.

Bourgeois de Sodome,
Voyant Don Côme
Dit en courroux,
Ces Bigots ſont tous en priere,
Ils ſont tous au ciel les yeux doux,
L'oraiſon ne leur ſert de guiere,
En amour ils ſont tous
Moins bêtes & plus fripons que nous.

The ſenſe is,

" A Citizen of Sodom ſpying Father Como, cried a-" loud in a rage, thoſe bigots are all at their prayers; " they caſt up the whites of their eyes to heaven: " But their devotion is to very little purpoſe; for all " theſe ſanctified brothers are, in love-affairs, better " ſkilled, and more wanton than we."

Hence it is that many women hope to meet with happy adventures in addreſſing theſe falſe devotees, and are overjoyed to put themſelves under their direction: they hope to be no loſers in the article of pleaſure, and to be great gainers in that of renown. They even hope, in caſe they are not hypocrites, that they ſhall have the art to tempt them ſtrongly and victoriouſly; for, of all vices, none is more ungovernable than uncleanneſs (2), nor that more eaſily throws off the yoke. As for the female pupils of the other claſs, they entertain ſo high a veneration for the pretended devotee, and even ſo much tenderneſs, that they blind themſelves in his favour. If it be neceſſary for him to perſuade them, that it is no crime to do certain things, he turns them on that ſide; and let what will happen, tenderneſs and affection will not ſuffer them to oppoſe the deſires of the holy man. Be this as it will, there never was any head of a Sect, nor founder of conventicles, how abominable ſoever their practices in them might be, but met with very tractable diſciples in the other ſex (3); and when we ſee the prodigious pains this ſort of men take, to draw women to them, we muſt have a very charitable way of thinking, not to perſuade ourſelves, that the ſcope of their devotion is directed rather to the gratification of the body which they received from nature, than to the ſalvation of their ſouls.

(2) What Seneca ſays in general, nunquam bona fide vitia manſueſcunt, is applicable in a particular manner to that in queſtion.

(3) See the remark [A] of the article GUILLEMETE.

[B] An illuſtrious Proteſtant informs us, that the Fatricelli were not guilty of the infamous actions which were aſcribed to them.] Du Pleſſis conſiders them as a branch of the Waldenſes. But beſides that the Waldenſes, both of the ſlanders which were thrown upon them, and the ſeverity with which they were perſecuted, was their teaching doctrines in oppoſition to the Romiſh Religion. The anſwer which has been made to this Proteſtant will inform us, that according to ſome Authors, the Fratricelli did not lie with women in the view of enjoying them, but only to give a greater merit to their continence [C]. I muſt not omit that ſeveral among them called themſelves Monks of the Order of St. Francis. Bzovius, who ſtudiouſly affected to make this remark, was cenſured for it by the Franciſcans. We will give part of the particulars which have been alledged in his juſtification [D]. I muſt alſo obſerve that denſes, ſays he (4), continued in France, we trace them into Italy and Germany by their blood which was ſhed by the Inquiſitors. In Italy, where Boniface extirpated, by every kind of rigour, thoſe whom they called Fratricelli (brothers), whoſe teachers were Gerard Sagarolli of Parma, and Dulcino of Novarra, diſciples of Herman, who was look'd upon as a Saint in Italy, and whoſe body was afterwards dug up, by Boniface's order, in Ferrara. Theſe poor people, who, as is uſual, are charged with a thouſand infamous actions that have already been ſo much inveighed againſt, but who, in reality, taught, that the Pope is Antichriſt, and the Church of Rome the Babylon mentioned in the Revelations; theſe pretended inſpired men, people caſt out by the Lord, cenſured a great number of Romiſh Abuſes and Traditions; and their having been perſecuted by Boniface, one of the lewdeſt and profane Popes that ever lived, may make us preſume that it was not for their having committed lewd and infamous actions. We alſo find them at the ſame time in Germany.

(4) Du Pleſſis Mornai, Myſtere d'Iniquité, pag. 412. He cites Guido Perpinia, de Hereſib Blond. dec. 2. lib. 9. Guillau. de Nangis.

[C] The Fratricelli did not uſe to lie with women, in the view of enjoying them, but only to give a greater merit to their continence.] Cœffeteau, in anſwer to this paſſage in the Myſtery of Iniquity aſſerts (5): that the fautors themſelves of the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, and even of theſe Fratricelli, relate ſuch things of them, as give an air of probability to what others ſay of them. Vignier ſpeaks of them as follows: "Pope Clement, ſays he (*), being told that the aſſemblies and congregations of the people called Fratricelli, whoſe habitations and retreat were in the mountains of Piedmont and Lombardy, and even in the neighbourhood of Verſeil (Verceil) and Novara, increaſed more and more, inſomuch that they could not be ſuppreſſed; cauſed the Dominicans and Franciſcans to preach a cruſade againſt them. So that a great number of Croiſes (†) went in ſearch of them even to their mountains, and there killed, that year, by hunger, cold, or the ſword, upwards of 400, and burnt 140 of them; among whom were Dulcino their principal Miniſter, and Margaret his wife, who alſo were put to death. Some gave them the name of Dulcins or Dulcini, from the ſaid Dulcino, and others Freraux or Fratricelli, becauſe they called one another Brethren, and the women who accompanied them, ſiſters in Chriſt Jeſus, with whom (according to Platina and other Hiſtorians) they dwelt and whored indiſcriminately in their conventicles, after the ſame manner as thoſe called Adamites and Nicolaïtes, extinguiſhing the candles. But the Author of the Mare Hiſtoriarum ſays only, that they made no ſcruple of lying together, without having carnal knowledge of each other; they thinking ſuch a continence as meritorious, as the raiſing a perſon from the dead &c. But does this lying together indiſcriminately, this beſtial indifference, more than half prove their obſcenities, unleſs we can ſuppoſe them to have been mere ſtocks and ſtones? But Vignier ſpares them as well as du Pleſſis. Public fame declares, that they uſed to commit a thouſand lewd actions, for which they deſerved to be extirpated as ſo many monſters, who reflected diſhonour on the Chriſtian name. Maſſæus, ſo often cited by du Pleſſis, ſpeaks of them as follows (‡). In 1308, in Lent time, were ſought for, and taken, above 400 Dulcini, in the mountains of Novara and the neighbourhood of Verceil. Now theſe were a remnant of thoſe whom St. Bernard, on Solomon's ſong, takes notice of. Men and women uſed to mix indiſcriminately, lying in the ſame bed; the men ſaying, that they uſed to converſe with them in this manner, in order that being expoſed to thoſe temptations of ſinning, their continence might be more meritorious, by their leaving theſe women virgins, &c." "I omit ſome little errors which have been cenſured. Rivetus, in his anſwering Cœffeteau, declares himſelf the Advocate of the Fratricelli. He does not own the fact, viz. that they endeavoured to ſignalize their continence, by lying in bed with a woman without going farther; he acknowledges that had they acted in this manner, they would have deſerved cenſure; but he nevertheleſs extenuates that fault in ſome meaſure. His words are theſe (6): The witneſſes againſt the Fratricelli, agree like the witneſſes of Suſanna. What Vignier writes, and what Cœffeteau takes from him is a proof of this aſſertion; for what Platina charges them with, is more than the Author of Mare Hiſtoriarum ſays of them. And altho' I do not approve that men and women ſhould lie together indiſcriminately, to make their continence more painful, and conſequently more commendable; yet Cœffeteau might have cited ſeveral antient Clerks, as warranting this indecent conduct, againſt whom St. Cyprian and Jerom inveighed: for they had their Agapetæ, and companions of celibacy, whom they uſed to lie with, as I have ſaid elſewhere. However, I will not own what is ſaid of them in the Mare Hiſtoriarum, which is often a ſink of lies. We may obſerve, by the way, that the indecent conduct with which Robert d'Arbriſſel has been reproached, is very ancient; and that it would be common to him with many who have lived both before and after him.

(5) Cœffeteau, Réponſe au Myſtere d Iniquité, pag. 1015, 1016.

(*) Vig. pag. 3. de la Bib. Hiſt. in the year 1308.

(†) Thoſe who engaged in the Cruſade.

(‡) Maſſæ. Cb. maud. li. 17.

(6) Rivet's Remarks on the anſwer to the Myſtery of Iniquity, Part. 2. pag. 478.

[D] We will give part of the particulars which have been alledged in Bzovius's juſtification.] The complaints of the Franciſcans, their anſwers and apologies, are found (7) in the work entitled, Nitela Franciſcanorum contra Bzovium; and in Waddingus, Tom. III, of the Annals of the Friars Minors or Franciſcans (8). The Reply for Bzovius, is found in a piece written by Nicholas Janſenius a Dominican. I ſhall refer my readers to it, and only obſerve, that Father Vincent Baron has ſhewn, by the teſtimony of Oderic Raynaldi, the continuator of Baronius, that the Fratricelli had obtained confirmations and privileges from Pope Celeſtine V, as being Monks of the Order of St. Francis. Illi (Bzovio) aſſentitur, . . Odericus Raynaldus tomo quinto decimo ſuorum Annalium ad ann. 1317. n. 56. & ſequent. ita habet; variæ fuerunt Fratricellorum ſectæ; & certum eſt ex extravag. Joannis XXII Sancta Rom. de Relig. Domib. Fratricellorum alios prætexuiſſe, habitum ſe, & vitæ ritum ab Epiſcopis, aut Eccleſiarum prælatis accepiſſe; alios jactaſſe ſe tertii Ordinis ſancti Franciſci, pœnitentium vocati, habitum induiſſe; finxiſſe alios ordinem Fratrum Minorum profiteri, & ſancti Franciſci regulam ad litteram obſervare, & objecto eo fuco, ipſos à Cæleſtino quinto hujuſmodi vitæ, & ſtatus privilegium obtinuiſſe: quamvis ea ratio non valeat; cum Bonifacius octavus conceſſa à Cæleſtino reſciderit, ac poſteriori decreto ſtandum eſſet: Hæc Odericus (9). i. e. "Odericus Raynaldus agrees with Bzovius; the former, in Tom. XV, under the year 1317, n. 56 & ſeq. having the following words: There were various ſects of the Fratricelli; and it is certain from the extravagants of John XXII, that ſome of the Fratricelli pretended, that they had received their habit and rule of life from the Biſhops and other Prelates of the Church; others boaſted, that they had aſſumed the habit of the Order of St. Francis, called Penitents; others feigned, that they profeſſed the Order of Friars Minors, and that they ſtrictly obſerved the rule of St. Francis; and by theſe inſidious pretences, they obtained a privilege with regard to the rule &c.. However, this reaſon does not avail, ſince Boniface VIII annulled Pope Celeſtine's grant, and they were obliged to abide by the latter Decree." He alſo cites a paſſage from Alvarez Pelagius, a Franciſcan Monk, in which, it is ſaid, that many Seculars and Franciſcan Friars, becauſe of their carnal ſpirit of liberty, were impriſoned by the Inquiſitors. Multi ſæculares

(7) Ad ann. 1317.

(8) Ibid.

(9) Vincent. Baronius, Apologet. lib. 4. Sect. 3. Art. 2. pag. 107.

that Prateolus, who ſtrongly affirms all the diſadvantageous things that have been related of the Fratricelli, owns that they oppoſed the Court of Rome, and the papal authority [E].

lares & Fratres Minores pro iſto carnali ſpiritu libertatis, per Inquiſitores hæreticæ pravitatis incarcerati fuerunt (10). Take notice that this paſſage of Raynaldi confirms what is obſerved by Hoſpinian, viz. that the Popes have differed in their judgment of the Fratricelli. De Fratricellis à Johanne XXII condemnatis, à Gregorio XI & Eugenio approbatis, refert Hoſpinianus de Monachis lib. 6. cap. 32. Vides judiciorum Papalium auctoritatem (11). i. e. "Hoſpinianus de Monachis, "Book 6. chap. 32, relates concerning the Fratricelli "condemned by John XXII, and approved by Gre- "gory XI and Eugene. You may here ſee the au- "thority of Decrees made by the Popes."

(10) Alvar. Pelagius, de Planctu Eccleſiæ, lib. 2. cap. 52. apud Vinc. Baron. ibid. pag. 108.

(11) Gisb. Voetius, deſperata cauſa Papatus, pag. 211.

[E] Prateolus, who ſtrongly affirms all the diſadvantageous particulars which have been related of the Fratricelli, owns that they oppoſed the Court of Rome and the Papal authority.] The things related by him, are interſperſed with various particulars which have not appeared in the foregoing remarks; and for that reaſon I believe I ought to tranſcribe from him, in order to give the reader a more ample account of theſe heretics. "Some, who were deſirous of being thought of the "third Order of St. Francis's inſtitution, and were "called by the Italians, Sicilians and inhabitants of "the Province of Narbonne, Fratriculi, Fratricelli, "or Fratres de paupere vita (brothers who profeſſed a "life of poverty) Beſochi, Beguini, and other names, "were, at this time, charged with, and condemned "for hereſy, by Pope Boniface VIII; though ſome "ſay that this was firſt done by Pope John XXII. "Theſe people deſpiſed the Sacraments of the Church. "They aſſerted, that it was not lawful for Chriſtians "to poſſeſs any thing as their immediate property, "nor to concern themſelves with the adminiſtration "and government of Commonwealths. Farther, "that the ſouls of the Bleſſed had no fruition and enjoyment of the beatific viſion till the day of Judgment. In their aſſemblies (in like manner as the Adamites of this age, who declare that all women are common) after the ſolemnization of their myſteries, they uſed to immerſe themſelves in carnal luſt, with the firſt woman that came in their way, in oppoſition to the virtue of the marriage-ſtate; and this they uſed to do in the night-time, after having put out the candles. The Writers of Chronicles relate the manner in which the people of this Sect were diſcovered, viz. by a Merchant, named Conrad, of Milan, who perceiving his wife got up often in the night, would know whither ſhe went, and why ſhe roſe. Accordingly he once followed her ſecretly, and entred their ſynagogue, where, after their rites and myſteries had been performed and the candles extinguiſhed, he held her ſo cloſe that he enjoyed her; when taking a ring from her finger as a token, he afterwards declared the whole to ſome people, and likewiſe to the Inquiſitor. All the women of this Sect had a crown like to the Clerks and Monks, by which means they were all diſcovered. See the Supplement to the Chronicles. They likewiſe aſſerted, that the power of the Church, becauſe of the irregularities of Churchmen, had been long annulled and extinct; and that themſelves only formed the Church of God, and imitated the Apoſtles. That the Church of Rome was a whore, and that the Popes, ever ſince the time of Silveſter I, had been all wicked, becauſe they had not led a life of poverty, and therefore that people ought not to pay tithes to them. They were ſo impudent, that they declared that one Margaret, concubine of one of their chief Miniſters and Preachers called Dulcino, had conceived of the Holy Ghoſt (12).

(12) Du Preau (or Prateolus,) Hiſtory of the State and Succeſs of the Church, tom. 2. folio 2 verſo & fol. 3. ad ann. 1300.

FRAUWENLOB (HENRY) a German Author, who died at Mentz in 1317, was buried after a very odd manner. The women carried him from his houſe to the great Church, weeping and groaning through all the ſtreets, after which they poured ſo great a quantity of wine over his grave, that they quite overflowed the Church. All this was done out of gratitude for the encomiums he had beſtowed on their ſex in his writings. See the remark [A].

[A] See the remark.] This article is extracted from Albertius Argentinenſis, one of the Writers of the Hiſtory of Germany (1). I am perſuaded that the Reader will not be diſpleaſed at ſeeing his own words. Anno Domini 1317 ſepultus eſt Henricus dictus Frauwenlob in ambitu majoris Eccleſiæ ... qui deportatus fuit à mulieribus ex hoſpitio uſque ad locum ſepulturæ, & lamentationes & querelæ maximæ auditæ fuerunt ab eis propter laudes infinitas quas impoſuit omni generi fœmineo in dictaminibus ſuis. Tanta etiam ibi copia fuit vini fuſa in ſepulchrum ſuum, quod circumfluebat per totum ambitum Eccleſiæ.

(1) It is in the Collection of Scriptores rerum Germanicarum, by Uriſtiſius.

FREIGIUS (JOHN THOMAS) the grandſon of a peaſant, and the ſon of a Civilian [A], lived in the ſixteenth Century. He was born at Friburgh in Briſgaw, and acquired great reputation by his learned labours. He ſtudied the Law in his native country

[A] He was the grandſon of a Peaſant, and ſon of a Civilian.] This Civilian's name was NICHOLAS FREIGIUS, whoſe father was an honeſt peaſant or huſbandman who lived near Baſil.

Me pater aggreſti genuit ſub rure colonus,
Hic ubi Rauriacos Rhenus adurget agros (1).

"My father got me in a rural hutt,
"Near Baſil, where the Rhine conveys it ſtream."

(1) Jo. Thomas Freigius, Triſtium Libro, Eleg. 4. pag. m. 366. He ſuppoſes his father ſpeaking here. Extracted from Melch. Ad. in Vit. Juriſcon. pag. 252.

The love he had for ſtudy, carried him as far as the degree of Doctor of Laws. He married at Friburg at Briſgaw, and made himſelf known to the public by ſome works of Zaſius, the editions of which he procured. He was a Counſellor of Law at Enſheim in Alſatia; and afterwards removing with his family to Ulm, was one of the Counſellors of that city. He died of a dropſy in 1550, and his wife buried him in a Convent of Nuns at Sefflingen near Ulm. Melchior Adamus cites the Latin verſes of John Thomas Freigius (2), which contain theſe particulars; and nevertheleſs he had ſaid before, that Nicholas Freigius ſurvived his wife, who died in 1564 (3); & matrem quidem primo amiſit (Jo. Thomas Freigius) peſte ſublatam cum duabus ſororibus (4) anno Chriſti milleſimo, quingenteſimo, ſexageſimo, quarto. Has ſubſecutus eſt pater. Had he examined theſe verſes, he would have found that they were writ in 1569, fourteen years after the death of Nicholas Freigius.

(2) Extracted from Elegy IV above cited.

(3) Melch. Adam. in Vit. Juriſc. pag. 252.

(4) He ſhould have ſaid cum tribus. See Elegy 3. of John Thomas Freigius.

Hic jam namque, pater, bis ſeptimus ingruit annus
Ex quo te triſti fata tulere nece (5).

"My father, twice ſeven years have run their "courſe,
"Since relentleſs fate bereaved me of thee."

(5) Joh. Thomas Freigius, Eleg. 4. Libri Triſtium, pag. 365.

Moreri is guilty of ſeveral errors, he ſaying, I, that Nicholas Freigius, died of the plague; II, that it was in 1564; III, that it was with his wife; IV, and with two of his daughters (6); V, that he had made great diſcoveries in both civil and canon Law; VI, that his ſon ſtudied the Law under the greateſt men of that

(6) Three died with their mother.

try under the famous Zaſius, and had likewiſe Henry Glarean and Peter Ramus for his maſters. He was ſtrongly attached to the principles and method of the laſt mentioned. He firſt taught at Friburgh and afterwards at Baſil; but finding himſelf not favoured by fortune, he was going to diſengage himſelf from the ſociety of the Muſes, and turn peaſant. He was revolving this thought in his mind, when the Senate of Nuremberg, at the deſire of Jerom Wolfius, offered him the Rectorſhip of the new College at Altorf, which employment was become vacant, by the death of Valentine Erythreus, the firſt who had exerciſed it. Freigius took poſſeſſion of this employment the 30th of November 1575. He diſcharged the duties of it with ardour, he explaining the Hiſtorians, Poets, Juſtinian's Inſtitutes, &c. He returned to Baſil, and died there of the plague anno 1513 (a) [B]. This contagious diſeaſe had a little before bereaved him of a very promiſing ſon, and of two daughters, one of whom had already made ſome progreſs in her ſtudies [C]. Freigius publiſhed a great number of books [D]. Moreri has committed ſome errors (b).

(a) Extracted from Melch. Adam. in Vit. Juriſconſ. pag. 252, & ſeq.

(b) See the remark [A] at the cloſe.

that age. This is ſuppoſing falſely that Glareanus and Ramus taught him Law. VII, He calls his Chriſtian name Thomas, whereas he ſhould have called him John Thomas.

[B] He died of the plague anno 1583.] It was the 16th of January, if Melchior Adamus may be credited, who adds, that according to others, it was in 1582. The Abridgment of Geſner's Bibliotheque (7) affirms, that he died in the College of Altorf, anno 1582. I am of opinion that Melchior Adamus is not miſtaken, and that there is an error in the date of the Dedication of Joan. Thomæ Freigii Quæſtiones Geometricæ & Stereometricæ. The Author himſelf dedicated this work to ſix Mathematicians his good friends. It is a Book which was printed at Baſil, by Sebaſtian Henricpetri, in March 1583. The Dedication is dated from Baſil the 1ſt of March of the ſame year, which cannot agree with the advertiſement printed at the end of the Book. This advertiſement relates to the Elegies which Freigius had publiſhed anno 1564, whereof he made a new Edition which was added to the Quæſtiones Geometricæ &c. He dedicates this new Edition to his two ſons, and dates his Dedication from Baſil, the laſt of December 1582. It is declared in the advertiſement, that whilſt theſe Elegies were reprinting, the Author was ſeized with the plague, which, in 40 hours carried him off, the 16th of January. It is added, that the two ſons to whom the work had been dedicated, died of the ſame diſeaſe a week after. The date of the impreſſion, at the foot of the page, is this month of March 1583.

(7) Pag. m. 503.

[C] The plague had a little before bereaved him of a very promiſing ſon, and of two daughters, one of whom had made ſome progreſs in her ſtudies.] He informs us of this in the Epiſtle Dedicatory to the ſecond Edition of his Elegies. Cum hoc anno, ſays he to his two ſons, ſorores duas veſtras Urſulam & Barbaram, ac fratrem Matthiam peſte acerba nobis ex oculis eripuiſſet (fatum meum) &c. . . . amiſi ego in Barbara noſtra Oeconomiæ meæ fidelem adminiſtram & diſpenſatricem: amiſiſtis vos in eadem ſtudiorum veſtrorum ſociam: quæ ſi diutius hujus lucis uſura frui potuiſſet, aliam Cæliam (8), aliam Fulviam Moratam habuiſſemus. Jam enim puella XII ferè annorum Latinæ & Græcæ Grammaticæ, aliarumque artium rudimenta ita peragraverat, ut Latinè quædam ex vernaculo ſermone convertere, Græce declinare & conjugare, precationem Dominicam Hebraicè recitare, poëtarum verſus ſcandere, Arithmeticos numeros addere & ſubducere, Muſicas melodias artificioſè canere, teſtudinem tractare poſſet. Hanc Matthias frater, puer ſeptem annorum, non longe ſecutus eſt, qui qua fuit naturali indole præditus, ſororem paucis annis ſuperaſſet. Is mane quamprimum è ſomno experrectus erat ſtatim ad libros ultro ſe transferebat, & aut Geographicas tabulas aut urbes, homines, animalia tam ſolerter, tamque graphicè depingebat: in abaco Pythagoræ tam ſtudioſè ſe exercebat, ut vos ad laudem puerilis & præcocis ingenii, ejus manuum monumenta conſervare ſoliti ſitis, ego vero mihi omnia ſumma polliceri de eo auſus fuerim. i. e. " When I was ſo unhappy, ſays he to his " two ſons, as to loſe this year, by the plague, your " two ſiſters Urſula and Barbara, and your brother " Matthias, &c. . . In Barbara I loſt a faithful ma- " nager of the affairs of my family; and both of you " loſt in her, a companion of your ſtudies; and had " ſhe not been ſnatched away by death, we ſhould " have enjoyed in her another Cælia and another " Fulvia Morata. For this girl, though ſcarce " twelve years old, had yet made ſuch a progreſs " in the Latin and Greek Grammars, and the rudi- " ments of other ſciences, that ſhe could tranſlate out " of her mother tongue into Latin, decline and con- " jugate Greek, repeat the Lord's Prayer in Hebrew, " ſcan verſes; underſtood addition and ſubſtraction, " could ſing by note, and play on the lute. Her " brother Matthias, though but ſeven years of age, " was not far behind her; and ſo great was his genius " and capacity, that he would have ſurpaſſed his " ſiſter in a few years. This boy, the inſtant he " waked in a morning, uſed to go of his own accord " to his books, and there draw very artfully and " neatly either Geographical maps, or cities, or men " or animals. He exerciſed himſelf ſo ſtudiouſly in " Pythagoras's Tables, that you your ſelves uſed, in " applauſe of his forward though infant genius, to lay " up and keep his handy work; whilſt I dared to " promiſe my ſelf the greateſt things from ſo hopeful " a child &c." It would be unjuſt, and a ſort of inhumanity, to reproach this good parent, as diſcovering a weakneſs, becauſe he endeavours to procure ſome conſolation, by informing the public of theſe little domeſtic particulars.

(8) See remark [C] of the article CURION.

[D] He publiſhed a great number of Books.] The firſt was his Liber Triſtium, or the Elegies ſpoken of above (9). I ſhall only point out, among others, his Supplement to the Hiſtory of Paulus Æmilius and Ferron, as far as the year 1596. His Logica Conſultorum, a Latin Tranſlation of Forbiſſer's Voyages, and of the Africans wars in which Don Sebaſtian King of Portugal loſt his life. His Orations of Cicero, perpetuis Notis Logicis, Arithmeticis, Ethicis, Politicis, Hiſtoricis, Antiquitatis illuſtratæ, in 3 volumes, 8vo, at Baſil, 1583. See the reſt of the particulars in the Abridgment of Geſner, and in Melchior Adamus.

(9) In the remark [B].

☞FREIND (JOHN), a moſt learned Engliſh Phyſician and Writer in the 18th Century, was born at Croton in Northamptonſhire in 1675. His father was Rector of that pariſh, and a man of great learning, piety, and integrity (a). Our Author, with his brother Robert Freind, D. D. ſince maſter of Weſtminſter-School, was educated at that ſchool under Dr. Richard Buſby; from whence he was elected into Chriſt-Church College in Oxford in 1691, where he proſecuted his ſtudies with ſuch vigour, as ſoon diſtinguiſhed him to great advantage. In 1696 he publiſhed, in conjunction with Mr. P. Foulkes, an edition of two Greek Orations, one of Æſchines againſt Cteſiphon, and the other of Demoſthenes de Coronâ, with a new Latin Verſion [A]. In 1699 he wrote a letter

(a) Joanni Wigan M. D. Præfatio ad Opera Medica Joannis Freind; London, in fol.

[A] In 1696 he publiſhed, in conjunction with Mr. P. Foulkes, an Edition of two Greek Orations, one of Æſchines againſt Cteſiphon, and the other of Demoſthenes de Corona, with a new Latin Verſion.] It was printed letter to Dr. Sloan concerning an Hydrocephalus, publiſhed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions (b); and another letter in Latin to the ſame Gentleman de Spaſmi rarioris hiſtoria, printed in the ſame Tranſactions (c). In 1703 his Emmenologia appeared [B], which gained him a very great reputation. It was tranſlated into Engliſh by Thomas Dale, M. D. and printed at London 1729 in 8vo. In 1704 he was choſen Profeſſor of Chymiſtry in the Univerſity of Oxford; and his Lectures were greatly frequented. In 1705 he attended the Earl of Peterborough to Spain, as Phyſician to the army there, in which poſt he continued two years; and upon his return in 1707 publiſhed an Account of the Earl's

(b) Num. 256. for September 1699.

(c) Num. 270. for March and April 1701.

ed at Oxford 1696 in 8vo, under the following title: Æſchinis contra Cteſiphontem & Demoſthenis de Coronâ Orationes, Interpretationem Latinam & Vocum difficiliorum Explicationem adjecerunt P. Foulkes & J. Freind, Ædis Chriſti Alumni. The Authors of the Acta Eruditorum of Leipſic (1) in their Account of this Edition, ſtyle the Editors Viri doctiſſimi, and their Edition nitida; and compare their Verſion of the firſt Paragraphs of Æſchines's and Demoſthenes's Orations with the Tranſlation of Jerom Wolfius, which is much inferior in point of elegance.

(1) For September 1696, pag. 439.

[B] In 1703 his Emmenologia appeared.] It was printed at London 1703 in 8vo under the following title: Emmenologia, in quâ Fluxus muliebris menſtrui Phænomena, Periodi, Vitia, cum medendi Methodo, ad rationes mechanicas exiguntur. Authore Johanne Freind, M. B. Æd. Chriſti Alumno. In the 2d Chapter he recounts the various opinions concerning the cauſes of the Menſes, both final and efficient. With regard to the final Cauſes, Authors have aſſigned theſe two, either for the rendering females more capable of conception, or after conception for affording nutriment to the fœtus. The laſt of theſe is Galen's opinion, who writes thus in his Phyſical Definitions, τὰ καταμήνια παρέχεται τῇ γυναικὶ πρὸς ὑγίειαν ἐκκενούμενα, ἐπιχεθέντα δὲ διὰ τὴν σύλληψιν, τῷ ἐμβρύῳ τὴν τροφὴν παρέχει. i. e. Tribuuntur mulieri menſtrua, quæ ſanitatis gratiâ vacuentur; Embryoni autem nutrimentum præbeant, per conceptum ſuppreſſa. Our Author agrees to this opinion of Galen, and defends it from two exceptions, which are made to it. As to the efficient cauſe of this Profluvium, Writers differ much about it, ſome aſcribing it to the Moon, others to a certain Ferment, and others to a Plethora. The two former of theſe opinions he rejects, and gives his reaſons for ſo doing; but to the laſt, which is Galen's, he adheres. But tho' many have been of this opinion, yet our Author obſerves, that this point has not yet been fully cleared up. For the better underſtanding therefore of the nature of this purgation, he inquires firſt into the origin of it, how the plethora grows to ſuch an height in females: ſecondly, by what force and by what cauſe it diſcharges the blood thro' the uterine veſſels: laſtly, he adds ſome arguments to prove and illuſtrate the periodical recourſe of this Profluvium. In the 3d chapter he treats of the cauſes of the Plethora. Soon after the publication of this Treatiſe, our Author's opinion, that the Menſes are occaſioned by a Plethora, was attacked by Snellenus, a Flemiſh Chymiſt, who aſcribes that purgation to a Ferment. And in 1712 Peter Freſart, a Phyſician of Liege, publiſhed an Emmenologia, in which he rejects our Author's notion as well as that of a ferment, and aſſerts the cauſe of the Menſes to be Sal evectum purgaminis uterini in vaſis collecti. And ſince Dr. Freind's death Dr. Thomas Simſon, Chandos-Profeſſor of Phyſic and Anatomy in the Univerſity of St. Andrews, in his Syſtem of the Womb: with a particular Account of the Menſes, independent of a Plethora: to which are ſubjoined a few obſervations relating to cold and its effects upon the body, printed at London 1730 in 8vo. has declared againſt the doctrine of a Plethora, and aſſigns another cauſe of it. Monſieur Tellier, the Younger, Phyſician at Peronne, in his Reflections Critiques ſur l'Emmenologie de Mr. Freind, printed at Paris 1730, recommends our Author's Emmenologia, on account of its perſpicuity, ſtrength of argument, and the uſeful obſervations contained in it; and owns that the Plethora contributes not a little to the menſtruous purgation; but differs with Dr. Freind in this among other points, that the latter ſuppoſes the flux to be occaſioned by the rupture of the capillary veſſels, whereas Monſr. Tellier affirms it to be done by the influx of the blood into the lymphatic veſſels, or, as Helvetius calls them, the lymphatic arteries. But Dr. John Wigan (2) obſerves, that tho' Dr. Freind often ſpeaks of the rupture of the veſſels, yet we are not to imagine, that he meant a preternatural or violent breaking of them, ſince he expreſly ſays, that "the orifices of the veſſels open upon the impulſe of "the blood:" Per impulſum ſanguinis eorum orificia diſſilire. Upon this view Dr. Wigan does not perceive any great difference between the Theories of our Author and Monſieur Tellier. He acknowledges, that Freſart, Simſon, and Tellier have raiſed ſome difficulties againſt Dr. Freind's doctrine, which deſerve to be ſolved; and that the Doctor has been miſtaken in ſome points of leſs importance, and advanced ſome things in this Treatiſe not altogether conſiſtent with what he wrote afterwards in his riper years; and he aſſures us, that the Doctor deſigned in the ſecond Edition publiſhed at London, to have corrected ſome things, added others, and anſwered ſome objections, but was prevented by buſineſs from executing that deſign. But Dr. Wigan thinks, that none of the objections are of ſuch weight but that the ſubſtance of his doctrine, namely the Hypotheſis of a Plethora, ſtill ſtands firm and unſhaken. Non inficior quin Viri tres poſtremo memorati contra Freindi Doctrinam nodos nectant, qui ſolvi mereantur; hunc in levioribus quibuſdam lapſum eſſe, & quædam hic iis quæ maturiore ætate ſcripſit haud uſque congruentia reperiri facile concedo. Ac pro certo habeo, in ſecundâ, quæ Londini prodiit, hujus operis Editione quædam illum reformare, quædam adjicere, quibuſdam objectionibus reſpondere voluiſſe; ſed negotiorum mole præpeditus conſilium illud abjicere coactus eſt. Verum ea, quæ contra dicuntur, haud ita magni momenti ſunt, ut non etiamnum ſumma ejus doctrinæ, ſcilicet Plethoræ Veritas, ſtabilis & inconcuſſa maneat. In 1735 there was publiſhed an Academical Exercitation upon Dr. Freind's Emmenologia under the following title: Exercitatio Academica ad Emmenologiam Freindianam: quâ Fundamenti loco ſuppoſitæ quædam Doctrinæ modeſte examinantur. Præſide Jo. Friderico Herelio, Medicinæ Doctore & Phyſico Reipublicæ Norimbergenſis deſignato, placidæ Eruditorum diſcuſſioni A. D. Martii CIↃ IↃCCXXXV ſubjicienda, reſpondente Jo. Philippo Zellmano Hertzbergæ-Hannoverano: Halæ Magdeburgicæ, in 4to pagg. 26. Dr. Herelius in his Preface obſerves, that though a great many Foreigners as well as Engliſh extoll Dr. Freind's Book as a compleat work, and adhere to his doctrine; yet that when he ſtudied Phyſic under Dr. John Henry Schulze, he perceived many reaſons, which weakened the authority of that Book, and ſhewed its inſufficiency both in theory and practice. Theſe reflections were confirmed by Monſieur Tellier's Treatiſe abovementioned; upon which Dr. Herelius tranſlated it into Latin, and wrote notes upon it, and deſigned to publiſh his Tranſlation with an Appendix containing further Animadverſions upon Dr. Freind's Emmenologia; but was prevented for the preſent from executing this deſign by his travels. However he committed the Exercitation abovementioned to Dr. Schulze in order to be publiſhed, which was accordingly done. It contains five Theſes, which the Author amply explains and illuſtrates, and which are as follow. I. Freindi Syſtema non ſuppeditat ullam rationem, cur fluxus menſtruus ſit periodicus, & non perpetuus. II. Freindius nihil agit, quando ſolis humanis fœminis purgationes uterinas vindicatum it, ideoque uteri ſitum perpendicularem in mulieribus, in quadrupedibus horizontalem urget. III. Freindius Plethorâ ſuâ, quam a Galeno adoptat, rem minimè expedit, nec alii expedient, quamdiu nihil aliud niſi Plethoræ imminuendæ viam interpretantur menſtruæ evacuationis negotium. IV. Freindius nullam rationem indicavit, cur ſuppoſitâ Plethorâ vim potius in vaſa capillaria, uſque ad diſruptionem eorum, edat, quam majores truncos, quos tamen prius debet ingredi, antequam ad capillares perveniat. V. Freindius

(2) In Præfatione ad Opera Medica Joannis Freind.

Earl's Conduct in that Kingdom [C]. June the 12th the ſame year he was created Doctor of Phyſic by Diploma. In 1709 he publiſhed his Chymical Lectures [D]; which being animadverted upon by the writers of the Acta Eruditorum at Leipſic in 1710, he wrote a defence of them in Latin, printed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions N° 331, for July, Auguſt, and September 1711, and afterwards tranſlated into Engliſh. In 1712 he was elected a Member of the Royal Society, and the ſame year attended the Duke of Ormond in Flanders as his Phyſician, and returned from thence within a year after. July the 3d 1713 he paſſed through his firſt examination before the College of Phyſicians in London, and was admitted a candidate on the 30th of September following, and was elected a Fellow on the 9th of April 1716 (d). The ſame year he publiſhed the firſt and third books of Hippocrates de Morbis Popularibus, with a Commentary on Fevers, written by himſelf, and divided into nine parts [E]. This work being animadverted upon by Dr. John contendit, quod in gravidis menſtrua ceſſent, quia ſanguis alendo fœtui inſumitur. Id ſi verum eſt, concipi non poteſt, cur fœmina paupercula, laborioſa, & non plethorica, non diutius uterum gerat, aut minores fœtus excludat, quam fœmina ſanguine ad modulum Freindianæ Hypotheſeos abundans, tantamque abundantiam ſuo fœtui impendens.

(d) From the Regiſter of the College of Phyſicians; for the favour of conſulting of which we are obliged to the very learned Dr. Thomas Pellet, Preſident of that College, and F. R. S.

[C] In 1707 he publiſhed an Account of the Earl's Conduct in that Kingdom.] The third Edition was printed at London in 1708 in 8vo under the following title: An Account of the Earl of Peterborow's Conduct in Spain, chiefly ſince the raiſing the Siege of Barcelona 1706. To which is added the Campaigne of Valencia. With Original Papers. In the Dedication to the Earl, he obſerves, that "his Lordſhip had put ſome of his Original Papers into his hand; and that the Facts related in this "Account are ſo important, and the Evidences of "them ſo bright and glaring, that a bare repreſentation of them (by how unequal a hand ſoever) muſt "needs command the eſteem and acknowledgment of "every true Engliſhman."

[D] In 1709 he publiſhed his Chymical Lectures.] They were printed at London in 8vo under the following title: Prælectiones Chymicæ, in quibus omnes fere Operationes Chymicæ ad vera principia & ipſius Naturæ leges rediguntur. Anno MDCCIV, Oxonii in Muſæo Aſhmoleano habitæ a Johanne Freind, M. D. Æd. Chriſti Alumno. Theſe Lectures are dedicated to Sir Iſaac Newton, and are nine in number, beſides three Tables. In the firſt Lecture, after having obſerved the great defects of all Chymical Writers in the Theory of Chymiſtry, he proceeds to take notice, that no perſon had contributed more to the improvement of this art, than Mr. Boyle, who did not ſo much lay new foundations of it, as deſtroy the old ones; and though he left ſufficient materials, from whence to deduce a true explication of things, yet his explications themſelves are very defective. As to the way of deducing the Operations in Chymiſtry from the true Mechanical Principles, this he aſcribes to Dr. John Keil, as its firſt diſcoverer. Our Author's deſign is from theſe principles to diſcourſe ſomewhat largely upon ſuch things as tend moſt to the illuſtration of the nature of Chymiſtry, and to explain as clearly as he can its principal Operations. This method he thought the moſt proper to be made uſe of, becauſe it is the moſt natural and ſimple, and alſo becauſe he found by experience, that the common confuſed Courſes were of ſuch little advantage, as not to leave the leaſt tolerable idea of Chymiſtry upon the minds of thoſe, who hear them. Upon this account he proceeds in the following method. Firſt, to explain all the Operations in their natural order, and to ſhew by what Laws of Mechaniſm they are produced, and to what uſes and purpoſes they are principally ſubſervient. Secondly, to ſhew all the ways, in which they either are or may be performed. Thirdly, to record all the experiments relating to this ſubject under their proper heads, and to reduce them to the general Theory.

[E] In 1716 he publiſhed the firſt and third Books of Hippocrates de Morbis popularibus, with a Commentary on Fevers written by himſelf, and divided into nine parts.] This Book was printed at London in 8vo under this title: ΙΠΠΟΚΡΑΤΟΥΣ ΕΠΙΔΗΜΙΩΝ τὸ ΠΡΩΤΟΝ, καὶ τὸ ΤΡΙΤΟΝ. Hippocratis de Morbis popularibus Liber primus & tertius. His accomodavit novem de Febribus Commentarios Johannes Freind, M. D. Coll. Med. Lond. & Soc. Reg. Socius. The Dedication to Richard Frewin M. D. is dated December the 1ſt 1716; and in it our Author obſerves, that the antient Phyſicians were not only well ſkilled in their profeſſion, but likewiſe in all other parts of Learning, and diſtinguiſhed for the elegance of their ſtyle. They applied themſelves to give an exact account of diſeaſes and their different ſymptoms, and explain them with the utmoſt perſpicuity and accuracy. Among the Latin Phyſicians he particularly extols Celſus as an admirable Writer, as well as an excellent Phyſician; and obſerves, that Cælius Aurelianus would deſerve a place among the principal Phyſical Writers, if his ſtyle had been leſs barbarous. Among the Greek Writers, he commends Alexander Trallianus, who expreſſes himſelf politely enough, except with regard to ſome few words. We find ſome things in him which ſavour of the Empiric and the Man of Superſtition, and he is too diffuſe upon the remedies; but he gives a very clear and exact account of the diſeaſes. Dr. Freind ſeems to doubt whether Galen is to be ranked among the Phyſicians, who have explained the nature of diſeaſes, ſince this does not appear to be his deſign in any one of his Books, though he was himſelf an excellent Phyſician, and delivers the notions of his predeceſſors, and eſpecially of Hippocrates, with great ſubtilty and elegance. Our Author recommends Aretæus, and then proceeds to the character of Hippocrates, whom he ſtyles the moſt compleat Phyſician of all Antiquity, and is ſurprized that ſeveral moderns neglect the ſtudy of him, as if he was of little conſequence, and prefer ſeveral later Writers to him. He remarks, that thoſe who abandon the Antients, do not underſtand the ſubjects, which they treat of, or expreſs themſelves in a very bad manner; and that the reaſon why we ſee ſo few good Writers among the vaſt number, who have treated of diſeaſes in the two laſt Centuries, is, that they never read the Antients, and formed their ſtyle merely upon the Moderns; and not content with writing ill, have added to the explication of diſtempers ſo many vain chimera's of Philoſophy that they ſeem rather to have compoſed Fables than Hiſtories of diſeaſes; for being infatuated with their own Hypotheſes, they lay down not only uſeleſs, but even falſe and pernicious rules of the cure of them. Nec aliam cauſam reperio, cur in infinito penè Scriptorum numero, qui his duobus proximis ſeculis hunc de morbis locum attigerunt, tanta ſit benè ſcribentium paucitas; niſi quod veterum ſcripta minus verſaverint, ſtylumque vel ad nullam, vel ad recentiorum quorundam normam effinxerint. Ad quæ ſane exempla quicunque ſe nimium ſtudioſe componit, multa inde vitia, tum in ſcribendo, tum in judicando contrahit; priſcamque illam ſcriptionis Medicæ ſanitatem haud usquam aſſequetur. Neque enim ſermonem ſolummodo inquinatum, & verborum quaſi monſtra recentiores intulere, ſed morborum explicationem omnem ita commentis Philoſophicis referſere, ut fabulas potius Medicas, quam Hiſtorias concinnaſſe videantur. Hinc fit, ut, ſi medendi ſcientiam ſpectes, vel futilia tradunt præcepta, vel etiam, quod legentibus magis fraudi eſt, vitioſa; quippe quæ ut plurimum ad ipſorum Hypotheſes, ita quippe loqui amant, accomodata ſint & conficta. Dr. Freind does not pretend to deprive the Moderns of the honour due to them; he owns, that they have cultivated Anatomy, and inriched it with a great many new diſcoveries, and explained the vertues of medicines with great diligence and accuracy. But perhaps, ſays he, the uſe which Anatomy may be of in Phyſic, has not yet been ſufficiently

John Woodward, Profeſſor of Phyſic in Greſham College, in his State of Phyſick and of the Diſeaſes [F], printed at London 1718 in 8vo, our Author wrote a letter to Dr. Richard Mead in Latin concerning the advantage of purging in the ſecond fever of the confluent kind of ſmall-pox [G], printed at London in 1719 in 4to. He is likewiſe ſuppoſed to be the Author of a pamphlet, intitled, A Letter to the learned Dr. Woodward: By Dr. Byfielde [H], London 1719 in 8vo, pagg. 51. It is dated December the 14th 1718.

ciently ſhewn. And with regard to medicines it may be affirmed, that they frequently perplex the Phyſician, and the vaſt multitude of them is a great obſtacle to the cure of diſeaſes. In the Preface our Author informs us, that all the Editions of Hippocrates's Works are full of errors. That of Aldus Manucius is very defective, but Frobenius's is more correct. Jerom Mercurialis has followed the latter ſo implicitly, that he has ſometimes copied even the faults. Though Foeſius's Edition is not exempt from miſtakes, it is more correct. Charterius's is the moſt erroneous. There is but one manuſcript in England of Hippocrates de Morbis popularibus, which was of great advantage to Dr. Freind, who, in order to publiſh the text as correct as poſſible, conſulted all the Editions, without adhering to any one in particular. After the Preface follows Hippocrates's Treatiſe in Greek with Foeſius's Latin Verſion at the bottom of the page. Dr. Freind's Commentary is divided into eight parts, the titles of which are as follow. I. De Ratione ſcribendi, quam in Epidemiorum Libris tenuit Hippocrates. II. De ſanguinis miſſione, præſertim de Venarum jugularium ſectione. III. De Sudoribus. IV. De Vomitione. V. De Excreatione purulentâ: De Pleuritide, item & de Peripneumonia. VI. De Abſceſſu; Deque Coli & Veſicæ ulcere. VII. De Purgatione: Quam vim habeat in febri putridâ, quæ Variolis confluentibus ſupervenit, inque Capitis Eryſipelate. Quædam etiam de Excretione Inteſtinali. VIII. De Urinæ profluvio. IX. De Veſicantibus, quæ Cantharidas recipiunt.

[F] Animadverted upon by Dr. John Woodward ... in his State of Phyſic, and of the Diſeaſes.] Dr. Woodward tells us (3), that his book, "together with "Remarks upon ſome of the other heads treated of "by Dr. Freind in his Commentaries, were drawn up "in the winter of the year 1716, ſoon after theſe "Commentaries came out;" and in the ſecond Section (4) he writes thus: In every thing that Dr. Freind hath hitherto publiſhed, and particularly the preſent Commentaries, he hath advanced ſeveral hypotheſes, ſome of which are rightly ſupported, and the reſt all ſo ingenious, that I cannot but be pleaſed with them. But then I can ſee no reaſon to debar my ſelf of the ſame pleaſure from thoſe of Dr. Willis, Dr. Sydenham, Dr. Morton, and other Phyſicians, to whoſe hypotheſes Dr. Freind (*) is ſo very averſe, he having not, excluſive of others, the ſole privilege of entertaining the world in this way. Dr. John Quincy (5) remarks upon this paſſage of Dr. Woodward, that "every one, who "has read Dr. Freind, will find it very difficult to "underſtand what is here meant by hypotheſes. That "Gentleman has advanced many propoſitions, which "he has fully proved; but for hypotheſes, in the common acceptation, he diſclaims them, and is an utter enemy to them. But yet in this ſenſe Dr. "Woodward muſt uſe the word, becauſe he ſays juſt "after: But then I can ſee no reaſon to debar my ſelf of "the ſame pleaſure from thoſe of Dr. Willis &c. "Yet here again we are in a contradiction; for "Willis's works are profeſſedly an hypotheſis, being "founded upon ſuppoſititious principles, ſuch as Sulphur, Salt, &c. and Dr. Morton accounted for "diſeaſes and their cures from a ſuppoſition of their "ſeat being in the animal ſpirits. But then Dr. Sydenham went upon no hypotheſis, but utterly diſclaimed all ſuch deluſory conceits, and drew no "concluſions except from facts and experience." Dr. Woodward particularly excepts againſt the method propoſed by Dr. Freind, of purging upon the acceſs of the ſecond fever in the confluent Small-Pox (6), and conſiders the purges made choice of by that Gentleman and the other Phyſicians, whoſe Letters are publiſhed with his Commentaries (7); and inquires into the ſucceſs of the purges uſed in the caſes related by them (8); and remarks (9), that Dr. Freind's accounts are full and diſtinct, but the others perplexed and defective. Dr. Quincy in the Tract (10) above quoted has conſidered Dr. Woodward's charge againſt Dr. Freind and the other Phyſicians for introducing a new practice, which Dr. Woodward diſguiſes under the name of purging in the ſmall-pox; and he tells us (11) "that thoſe Phyſicians have adviſed that evacuation "only in ſome particular circumſtances of that diſ-"temper; that is, chiefly in ſuch caſes of the con-"fluent kind, where the whole load of humours "cannot be thrown off by the ſurface and glands "about the mouth, but ſtopping when the puſtules "grow hard, returns back into the blood, and raiſes "a ſecondary fever, which proves often fatal; and "their reaſons for thus doing they have communicated to one another in the Latin language, as a point "in practice of great importance. But Dr. Woodward in Engliſh has harangued the populace, and "endeavoured to frighten people with a belief that "their general practice in this diſtemper is by purging; and from inſtances of its impropriety in ſome "caſes, takes occaſion to be very compaſſionate for "his country, to weep over the weekly bills, and inveigh as bitterly againſt purges, as a crafty Enthuſiaſt would againſt the Scarlet Whore, by this means "proſtituting the honour of the profeſſion, and marking out thoſe of greateſt eminence therein to "public reſentment. He traduces theſe Gentlemen "alſo by a deluſory name; for purging in the common acceptation in Engliſh has a very different "idea from thoſe terms of the learned, whence it is "tranſlated. Solliciting the diſcharge of an overload "of bad humours by ſtool, which the conſtitution is "not of itſelf able to ſtruggle with, is amongſt them "expreſſed in terms, which may bear the Engliſh "word purging in a reſtrained ſenſe; but in the moſt "inlarged acceptation of it, and as Dr. Woodward "uſes it, it is not true of their writing or practice... "After all, ſo far as theſe Phyſicians adviſe purging "in the ſmall-pox, it is alſo practiſed by common "conſent in many other caſes of fevers: that is, "where-ever nature makes an imperfect criſis, and "the efforts of the conſtitution are not able to bring "the peccant matter to a head, or throw it off the "principal parts; and where-ever ſuch matter threatens miſchief to ſome noble part. Theſe happen "frequently in inflammatory fevers; and evacuation, "often by ſtool, is promoted, both to eaſe the conſtitution of the overload, and draw off the humours "that would be otherwiſe troubleſome, And this aſſiſtance in ſome particular caſes of the ſmall-pox "ſeems ſo conſonant to nature and reaſon, that an "omiſſion of it can ariſe only from an unacquaintance "with the true procedure of the diſtemper."

[G] Our Author wrote a letter to Dr. Richard Mead in Latin concerning the advantage of purging in the ſecond fever of the confluent kind of the ſmall-pox.] The title of it is, Johannis Freind M. D. de Purgantibus in ſecundâ Variolarum confluentium febre adhibendis, Epiſtola. It is dated at London Sept. 20, 1719.

[H] Suppoſed to be the Author of a Pamphlet, intitled, A Letter to the learned Dr. Woodward. By Dr. Byfielde.] Dr. Wigan informs us (12), that he publiſhed a pamphlet under the name of a certain Empiric, in which he ridiculed his antagoniſt. Huic (13) Freindus nihil reſpondit ſeriò: id idem fuiſſet ac cum umbrâ pugnare. Libellum autem ſub Empirici cujuſdam nomine edidit, ubi riſu lepidiſſimo acrem exagitavit hominis præfervidi bilem, & acerbiſſimas injurias elegantibus facetiis propulſavit. About the ſame time there was likewiſe publiſhed another pamphlet againſt Dr. Woodward, intitled, A Letter from the facetious Dr. Andrew Tripe at Bath to his loving Brother the profound Greſhamite, ſhewing, that the Scribendi Cacoethes is a diſtemper ariſing from the redundancy of bilioſe ſalts, and not to be eradicated but by a diurnal courſe of oils and vomits. With an Appendix concerning the Application of Socrates his Clyſter, and the Uſe of clean Linen in controverſy. London 1719 in 8vo, pagg. 48. In anſwer to this and

(3) In his Preface.

(4) Pag. 54.

(*) Epiſt. Dedic. pag. 15, & ſeqq.

(5) Examination of Dr. Woodward's State of Phyſick and Diſeaſes. By John Quincy, M. D. pag. 2. edit. London 1719 in 8vo.

(6) State of Phyſic, pag. 130.

(7) Ibid. pag. 145.

(8) Ibid. pag. 151.

(9) Ibid. pag. 158.

(10) Pag. 72, & ſeqq.

(11) Ibid. pag. 73-75.

(12) Ubi ſupra.

(13) Woodward

1718. In this piece Dr. Woodward is rallied with great force and ſpirit. March the 7th 1717 he read the Gulſtonian Lecture in the College of Phyſicians; and on the 30th of September 1718 he was choſen one of the Cenſors of the College, which place he held for two years. March the 25th $17\frac{10}{20}$ he gave fifty pounds towards the repairs of the College (e). October the 18th 1720 he made the anniverſary Oration in Latin before the College of Phyſicians in London, which was afterwards printed [I]. He ſate as a Member for the Borough of Launceſton in Cornwall in the Parliament, which was called in 1722, where he diſtinguiſhed himſelf by ſeveral ſharp ſpeeches in oppoſition to the meaſures of the adminiſtration. But on Tueſday March the 12th $172\frac{2}{3}$ he was taken into cuſtody, and on the 15th of the ſame month was committed priſoner to the Tower on a charge of High-Treaſon. June the 21ſt following he was admitted to bail. While he was under this confinement he wrote a Latin Epiſtle to Dr. Mead de quibuſdam Variolarum Generibus (f), and began his Hiſtory of Phyſic from the time of Galen to the beginning of the ſixteenth Century, the firſt part of which was publiſhed in 1725, and the ſecond in 1726 in 8vo [K]. It was tranſlated into French, and afterwards into Latin by John Wigan, M. D. It was animadverted upon in a pamphlet, ſaid to be written by Dr. William Cockburn, and intitled, Obſervations on Dr. Freind's Hiſtory of Phyſick; ſhewing ſome falſe Repreſentations of ancient and modern Phyſicians. By C. W. M. D. Fellow of the Royal College of Phyſicians in Edinburgh [L], London 1726 in 8vo, and in the Bibliotheque

(e) From the Regiſter of the College.

(f) It is dated March the 20th 1723.

the Letter by Dr. Byfielde there was publiſhed, The two Sofias: or the true Dr. Byfielde at the Rainbow Coffee-Houſe to the Pretender in Jermyn-Street; in anſwer to a Letter, wrote by him, aſſiſted by his two Aſſociates. With a Preface relating to the late famous exploits of the facetious Dr. Andrew Tripe. As alſo an account of the new Creed of theſe Phyſicians, deſigned as an Appendix to the Religio Medici. London 1719 in 8vo pagg. 58. In this pamphlet Dr. Freind is every where repreſented as the Author of the Letter from Dr. Byfielde, and ſeverely reflected upon, and his Account of the Earl of Peterborough's Conduct in Spain is particularly cenſured (14).

(54) See pag. 55, 56.

[I] October 18th 1720 he made the Anniverſary Oration in Latin before the College of Phyſicians in London, which was afterwards printed.] It was publiſhed under this title: Oratio Anniverſaria in Theatro Collegii Regalis Medicorum Londin. habita ex Harveii Inſtituto, in eorum commemorationem, qui ſuâ in hoc Collegium beneficentiâ claruerunt. Die XVIII Octobris, Anno 1720.

[K] His Hiſtory of Phyſic . . . the firſt part of which was publiſhed in 1725, and the ſecond in 1726 in 8*vo.*] The title of this work is, The Hiſtory of Phyſick from the time of Galen, to the beginning of the ſixteenth Century. Chiefly with regard to practice. In a Diſcourſe written to Doctor Mead. By J. Freind, M. D. In the Preface to the firſt part he obſerves, that theſe papers were for the greateſt part written, juſt as they now appear, ſome time before, only to paſs away a few leiſure hours, and without any deſign of making them public; but that he had ſince been perſuaded to review them, and had made ſome Additions here and there, as he found occaſion. The firſt part is dated May 10th 1723. His obſervation (15), that "St. "Luke's Greek comes nearer to the antient ſtandard "than that of the other Evangeliſts," is ſaid to have been communicated to him by Dr. Francis Atterbury, Biſhop of Rocheſter. But Monſr. Armand de la Chapelle in his Account of this Work (16), having quoted this paſſage of our Author obſerves (17), that he does not doubt that Dr. Freind is maſter of all the delicacies of the Greek Language; but that he cannot tell whether there is not a little partiality in this place, and whether the firſt profeſſion of St. Luke did not prejudice a Phyſician in his favour. The Doctor had remark'd (18) that the woman, who had the iſſue of blood, is deſcribed by St. Mark, as παθοῦσα ὑπὸ πολλῶν ἰατρῶν καὶ δαπανήσασα τὰ παρ' ἑαυτῆς, καὶ μηδὲν ὠφεληθεῖσα, ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον εἰς τὸ χεῖρον ἐλθοῦσα; all which particulars are omitted by St. Matthew; but St. Luke, tho' he mentions them, gives them quite another turn, and ſoftens the paſſage very much in regard to his faculty; and inſtead of relating how much ſhe ſuffered by the ſeveral Phyſicians, or how much ſhe grew worſe upon her remedies, he ſays only that her diſtemper was above the reach of any of them to remove it: οὐκ ἴσχυσεν ὑπ' οὐδενὸς θεραπευθῆναι; "and when he comes to ſpeak of "the charges the woman had been at, he uſes a very "proper expreſſion προσαναλώσασα, whereas the word "δαπανήσασα uſed by St. Mark properly ſignifies ſpend-"ing only in a riotous and luxurious manner; and ſo "St. Luke applies it in the caſe of the prodigal ſon." Monſr. de la Chapelle (19) objects to this critical remark, and tells us, that δαπανᾶν is not always taken in a bad ſenſe, ſince Ælian (20) uſes it in the ſame ſentence in a good as well as a bad ſenſe, where ſpeaking of Demetrius Poliorcetes, who had raiſed himſelf an annual income of twelve hundred talents, he adds, ἐκ τούτων ὀλίγα μὲν εἰς τὸ στρατόπεδον ἐδαπάνα, τάδε λοιπὰ εἰς τὴν ἀκολασίαν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ, i. e. "he ſpent a ſmall part "of it in maintaining of his troops, and the reſt in his "own luxury and extravagance." Xenophon likewiſe, a model for purity of ſtyle, does not ſeem to have been acquainted with this nice diſtinction of Dr. Freind, as appears from two paſſages in the eighth Book of his Cyropædia; in the former of which (21) that Author repreſenting the noble uſe, which Cyrus made of his riches, writes thus: Ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἐγένετο αὐτῷ ὥστε χρήμασιν εὐεργετεῖν, δόκει ἡμῖν γνῶναι, πρῶτον μὲν, ὡς εὐεργέτημα ἀνθρώποις πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἥδιόν ἐστιν ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς δαπανῆς ἐπιχαριτώτερον ἢ σίτων καὶ ποτῶν μετάδοσις. The ſecond paſſage is ſtill more preciſe than this. It is part of the admirable Dialogue, which Xenophon ſuppoſes to have been between one of the Courtiers, whom Cyrus had raiſed to a conſiderable fortune, and a common Sacian Soldier (22). Ἀνάγκη δέ τοι ἐστιν, ἔφη, ὦ Σάκα, τὸν πολλὰ ἔχοντα πολλὰ καὶ δαπανᾶν, καὶ εἰς θεοὺς, καὶ εἰς φίλους, καὶ εἰς ξένους. Ὅστις δ' ἂν ἰσχυρῶς χρήμασιν ἥδηται, ἴσθι τοῦτον καὶ δαπανῶντα ἰσχυρῶς ἀνιᾶσθαι· μὰ δία, ἔφη ὁ Σάκας, ἀλλὰ σὺκ ἔγωγε τούτων εἰμὶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ εὐδαιμονίαν τοῦτο νομίζω, τὸν πολλὰ ἔχοντα, πολλὰ καὶ δαπανᾶν. Monſr. de la Chapelle then obſerves (23), "that it appears "from hence, that Dr. Freind is ſo little inclined to "betray the cauſe of his profeſſion, that he ventures "ſometimes to ſerve it by inſtances, which are very "doubtful. Some will perhaps conſider in the ſame "light the little critical diſſertation, in which he en-"deavours to ſhew the Hiſtorian Procopius to have "been a Phyſician, becauſe he has applied the terms "of art properly, and appears to have underſtood them.

(15) Pag. 221, & ſeqq.

(16) Biblioth. Angloiſe, tom. 12. Part. 2. Art. 9.

(17) Pag. 522.

(18) Hiſt. of Phyſic, pag. 222.

(19) Bibl. Angl. pag. 522, & ſeq.

(20) Var. Hiſt. lib. 9. cap. 9.

(21) Pag. 164. edit. Baſil. 1595.

(22) Ibid. pag. 173.

(23) Pag. 527, 528.

[L] Animadverted upon in a Pamphlet . . . intitled, Obſervations on Dr. Freind's Hiſtory of Phyſic &c.] This piece is written with prodigious warmth and aſperity of ſtyle, as appears from the firſt paragraph of it, which is as follows. "Dr. Freind's principal "ſcheme in writing his Hiſtory of Phyſic was to repre-"ſent himſelf firſt, and after him Dr. Mead, as the "only Phyſicians at this time, in London eſpecially. "As for Hiſtory, that is made ſubſervient to the men-"tioned deſign; and indeed that part of the perform-"ance is very imperfect and ſuperficial, he ſeeming to "contrive how to corrupt the Hiſtory of Phyſic, and to "abuſe men by a corrupted Hiſtory. Did I propoſe "to examine the Book, it might be made very mani-"feſt, that he was little acquainted with his Authors, "and leſs in what they excelled. His great unhap-"pineſs is moſt commonly to propoſe their errors, or "their weakeſt performances, to our imitation; ſo "that the miſtake ſhould not be great, if I affirmed, "that his end ſeems to be a banter on the ancient as "well as our own Phyſicians. All theſe his talents "will ſufficiently appear in the following examinati"on

(g) Vol. 27. Part. 2. Art. 8.

otheque ancienne & moderne (g) [M]; but it was defended by Mr. John Baillie in A Letter to Dr. . . . . in Anſwer to a Tract in the Bibliotheque ancienne & moderne, relating to ſome paſſages on Dr. Freind's Hiſtory of Phyſic; with Remarks upon the Ages of the Greek Phyſicians, the Introduction of Chymiſtry into Phyſick, the Antiquity of compound Medicines, the Age of Fallopius, &c. printed at London 1728 in 8vo (h) [N]. Upon the acceſſion of (g) Pagg. 30.

" on of that part of the Book, which at preſent falls " under our conſideration." He proceeds afterwards to refute what Dr. Freind had advanced, that the antient Phyſicians never had a Noſtrum or a ſecret medecine, and that a Noſtrum is the peculiar and diſtinguiſhing mark of a Quack; and affirms (24), that Phyſicians of every ſect, both rational and empirics, had their Noſtrums, and that from antient times down to this day; and among the moderns he particularly inſtances in Dr. Cockburn, a moſt rational Phyſician, ſays he (25), who has always vindicated this antient practice, and has an Arcanum. The Author defends likewiſe Dr. Cockburn's Book concerning the Gonorrhœa, and his Tables of Doſes (26), in oppoſition to what Dr. Freind had (27) urged from Avenzoar, that it is vain and uſeleſs, to " pretend to find out the proportio- " nable quantity and quality of any purge, ſo as to " ſquare it exactly to the conſtitution of the patient, " and the nature of the humours to be diſcharged, and " calculate it ſo as not to be even a hair under or over; " ſince ſuch ſpeculations contribute very little to form " a judgment about any right method of cure."

(24) Pag. 7.

(25) Pag. 9.

(26) Pag. 34, & ſeqq.

(27) Hiſtory of Phyſick, vol. 2. pag. 77.

[M] It was animadverted upon in the Bibliotheque Ancienne & Moderne.] Theſe Animadverſions were written in defence of Dr. Daniel Le Clerc, the three parts of whoſe Hiſtory of Phyſic Dr. Freind had highly extolled, but had ſpoken with ſome contempt of the Supplement to that Work publiſhed in the new Edition of 1723, and repreſented it as not only a very imperfect and ſuperficial performance, but in many particulars inaccurate and erroneous. The Author of the Memoir in the Bibliotheque obſerves, that it will be no difficult matter to ſhew that Dr. Freind had not a juſt idea of the piece, which he ſo raſhly condemns; but that he is miſtaken in ſeveral points. For firſt he did not underſtand what Dr. Le Clerc's meaning was by theſe words, Eſſay d'un Plan pour ſervir à la Continuation de l' Hiſtoire de la Medicine, which Dr. Freind thought to be the ſame thing as if Dr. Le Clerc had ſaid that that Plan was a Continuation or a Sequel of the Hiſtory of Phyſic, whereas the Author only meant it as a Plan or Rough-Draught, which might be of uſe to ſuch as would undertake to bring that Hiſtory down to the time, which he has mentioned. The Author of the Memoir proceeds then to vindicate Dr. Le Clerc from the particular exceptions of Dr. Friend, and concludes with obſerving, that as the Plan of the former contains but ſix or ſeven ſheets, if it were true, that there are as many errors in it, as the latter pretends, one might juſtly conclude as Dr. Friend has done, that it is a very imperfect, ſuperficial, inaccurate and erroneous performance. " But I think, ſays the Writer, " that I have ſufficiently demonſtrated, that nothing " could be charged on Dr. Le Clerc with leſs reaſon, " not to ſay with more folly; ſince if there are faults, " they are few and inconſiderable. However ſuch as " they are, if Dr. Freind had contented himſelf with " ſetting him right, he was at liberty to do it; but " to endeavour, as he has done, to find errors where " there are none, it is what one ſhould not have ex- " pected, and what has occaſioned this anſwer."

[N] Defended by Mr. John Baillie in A Letter to Dr. * * * in anſwer to a Tract in the Bibliotheque Ancienne & Moderne, relating to ſome paſſages in Dr. Freind's Hiſtory of Phyſic.] Mr. Baillie obſerves (28), that one would imagine, upon viewing the number of pages in the piece abovementioned, Dr. Freind had certainly been guilty of a great many miſtakes, and that Mr. Le Clerc had been very groſly miſrepreſented. Yet upon looking into this Critic, ſays he, we find nothing like this; and that however vigorous in general he appears in Mr. Le Clerc's Defence, he nevertheleſs acknowledges moſt of the errors alledged againſt him, and this not faintly (29), but in full as ſtrong expreſſions as the Doctor himſelf uſes. He then conſiders ſeveral parts of that piece, and remarks (30), that the Author is very fond of repreſenting Dr. Freind as a Plagiary, when he has but the leaſt ſhadow of a reaſon to give; but that notwithſtanding what he may ſay, he will never perſuade a judicious reader, that the Dr. is not an original Writer. " Any man, ſays he, " who has taken pains in conſidering ſtyles, will ea- " ſily perceive, that an equal uniform one is utterly " inconſiſtent with the patched-up works of plagiaries. " Nor is that ſtrength of reaſoning and acuteneſs of " judgment, which appear with ſo equal a tenor " through the whole of the Doctor's writings, any " thing like the breaks and inconſiſtencies in the " reaſonings and language of thoſe, who intirely de- " pend on the fragments of other Authors. However I " would not be miſunderſtood, nor have you imagine, " that I repreſent the Doctor as one who does not ac- " knowledge himſelf obliged to other men's labours; " for he already in his Hiſtory has fully declared his " opinion of thoſe, who ſo arrogantly ſcorn the aſſiſt- " ance of Authors, and value themſelves in ſuch a " manner as to think, that, like ſpiders, they can " work all things out of their own bowels. Never " to ſearch into other men's writings is undoubtedly " a very wrong way to form an original Writer. It " is enough to avoid the character of a plagiary, if, " whatever a man culls from different Authors, he " can by reflection and judgment ſo aſſimilate to his " own thoughts, that at laſt they ſhall even appear " his own; ſomewhat in imitation of a bee, who " forms from different flowers and different mixtures " one ſimple unmixed ſweet." Mr. Baillie at the cloſe of his Pamphlet (31) tells us, that the defender of Dr. Le Clerc ſet out with the mighty appearance of running down every thing, which was objected againſt the Plan; and yet in the iſſue yields up every thing. This certainly muſt appear a very burleſque Defence to the greateſt favourers of the Supplement. For what can be more ridiculous than to pretend he would defend an Author, and yet in almoſt every inſtance to own he is in the wrong? To be convinced, that he does this, you need do no more than caſt your eye back on the three principal points of diſpute. Does he not acknowledge Mr. Le Clerc's error in the ages of Oribaſius, Aetius, Alexander and Paulus? And notwithſtanding his ſophiſtical ſubterfuges doth he deny that ſome of the Greeks mention Rhubarb, contrary to Mr. Le Clerc's aſſertion? Nay doth he not in expreſs terms own it? After the ſame manner doth not he confeſs, that Rhazes firſt introduced Chymiſtry into Phyſic? And as to the age of Fallopius, he ſays Mr. Le Clerc is deceived in it. Mr. Baillie ſeems to have been of opinion, that Mr. John Le Clerc brother of Dr. Le Clerc, was the Author of the Memoir in the Bibliotheque Ancienne & Moderne; as appears from the following paſſage (32). " I am " afraid the Doctor will have ſtronger reaſon to " complain of this negligence in not examining into " the original Writings of an Author. For while " ſuch numbers content themſelves with the ac- " counts they get of them in Journals, Bibliotheques, " &c. no wonder, if a great many paſs a wrong " judgment, and amongſt others, even on his " own Writings. For it is no ſuch uncommon " thing in theſe periodical writers to miſrepreſent " an Author; and however ſerviceable they may " be commonly eſteemed to learning, I cannot help " being of a very different opinion, having often " found their accounts exceedingly imperfect or exceed- " ingly unjuſt Whether from their ignorance in not " underſtanding the piece, or their careleſsneſs in " reading it, I will not ſay; but this I will affirm, " that none of this ſort of writings are more remark- " able for it than the Bibliotheque ancienne & moderne; " a glaring inſtance of which is the preſent piece I " am examining; where there appears net only the " want of candour, but likewiſe of knowledge in the " things treated of. And were it not foreign to my " purpoſe, I could inſtance in more Treatiſes than " one thus miſrepreſented." Mr. Baillie acknowledges (33) a miſtake in Dr. Freind in the ſpelling of Aetius with Æ, inſtead of an A and an e ſeparate.

(28) Pag. 4.

(29) Art. 1. pag. 395.

(30) A Letter to Dr. ——, pag. 24, 25, 26.

(31) Pag. 77.

(32) Pag. 12, 13.

(33) Pag. 36.

of his preſent Majeſty to the Throne, he was appointed Phyſician in ordinary to her Majeſty; who ſhewed the utmoſt regard and eſteem for him. He died at London July the 26th 1728 in the fifty third year of his age, and was interred at Hitcham in Buckinghamſhire; but a monument is erected to his memory in Weſtminſter-Abbey [O]. He left one ſon, who was educated in Weſtminſter-ſchool, and is now a Student in Chriſt Church in Oxford. Our Author's widow had a very handſome penſion ſettled on her by her Majeſty, out of regard to his merit. His Works were publiſhed together in Latin at London 1733 in fol. and dedicated by his brother Dr. Robert Freind to the Queen (h); and reprinted at Paris 1735 in 4to, under the following title: Joannis Freind M. D. ſereniſſimæ Reginæ Carolinæ Archiatri, Opera omnia Medica. Editio altera, Londinenſi multo correctior, & accuratior. His character is repreſented to great advantage in the Harveian Oration of Dr. Edward Wilmot, Phyſician to her Majeſty [P].

(h) The Dedication is dated Nov. 13, 1732.

FROISSARD

Every one knows it is Ἀέτιος in the Greek, and yet very commonly it is writ with an Æ in Latin, as you may ſee in ſeveral books. So the Iſland Aeria is very often writ Æria, though no doubt it is the Ἀερία of Stephanus. He believes (34) the Doctor likewiſe to be miſtaken, when he ſays, that Dr. Le Clerc ſuppoſes the Vena Medinenſis the ſame as another diſtemper deſcribed by the Arabians, the Affectio Bovina; and I dare ſay, continues he, the Doctor upon conſidering the paſſage in the Supplement again, will own, that theſe two diſeaſes are there plainly diſtinguiſhed. So far is true, and the Doctor's expreſſions are no doubt too general in this caſe, and what I believe he is not very often guilty of, a little unguarded. But what he intended, I ſuppoſe, was chiefly this, to ſhew, that even by the Affectio Bovina, deſcribed at large by the Arabians, and in a ſeparate article, was not a diſtemper unknown, as Mr. Le Clerc aſſerts, to the Greeks. For Aetius, as the Doctor remarks, mentions the little Dracunculi, as well as the great, which latter the Arabians call the Vena Medinenſis. And what Aven Zoar, Alſaharavius, and Albucaſis ſay of the former, amounts to nothing more than what Aetius had in general and in ſhort ſaid before, that the worms in this caſe were little. Monſieur Armand de la Chapelle in his account of this piece of Mr. Baillie (35) complains of its being written with too great an acrimony of ſtyle, and treating Dr. Le Clerc and his brother John Le Clerc in too contemptuous a manner. Dr. William Cockburn publiſhed at London 1728 in 8vo, a Tranſlation of the Memoir in the Bibliotheque ancienne & moderne, with a long Preface, in which he reflects with great ſeverity upon Mr. Baillie's Letter, and endeavours to anſwer moſt of the particulars contained in it. The title of this pamphlet is, An Anſwer to what Dr. Freind has written in his Hiſtory of Phyſick concerning ſeveral miſtakes, which he pretends to have found in a ſhort work of Dr. Le Clerc, intitled, An Eſſay of a Plan, &c. Tranſlated from the eighth Article of the Bibliotheque ancienne & moderne, Vol. 27. Part 2. by Mr. Le Clerc. To which is added, A Preface by W. Cockburn, M. D. Dr. Cockburn concludes his Preface with theſe words: "This Preface "is longer than I deſigned, though not ſo long as "Dr. Freind expected; yet I muſt add a piece of "Hiſtory, becauſe it ſhews the Doctor's applauded "exactneſs in relating the diſcoveries of Phyſicians; "for he reads every thing himſelf, as he pretends, "and never truſts to any other Hiſtorian in his ac"counts of Authors. Oribaſius, ſays the Doctor, "gives us the firſt account of the ſalivary glans, "which is either omitted by Galen, or is loſt together "with ſome of Galen's works. But it ſeems Galen "was not worthy Dr. Freind's reading, for if he had, "he might there have found (*) Oribaſius's account in "ſo many words. Oribaſius did well to copy Galen "in his accurate deſcription. Dr. Freind has nothing "to value himſelf on his reading."

(34) Pag. 37.

(35) Bibliotb. Angloiſe, tom. 15. Part. 2. Art. 9. pag. 487, & ſeqq.

(*) Book II. of the uſe of the Parts; and in the book of the Voice and Breath.

[O] A monument is erected to his memory in Weſtminſter Abbey.] The Epitaph is as follows.

JOHANNES FREIND, M. D.
Archiater
Sereniſſimæ Reginæ Carolinæ.
Cujus perſpicaci Judicio cum ſe approbâſſet,
Quantâ prius apud omnes Medicinæ famâ,
Tantâ apud Regiam Familiam gratiâ floruit.
Ingenio erat benevolo & admodum liberali,
Societatis & Convictuum amans,
Amicitiarum
(Etiam cum ſuo alicubi periculo) Tenaciſſimus.
Nemo beneficia
Aut in alios alacrius contulit,
Aut in ſe collata libentius meminit.
Juvenis adhuc ſcriptis cœpit inclareſcere,
Et aſſiduo tum Latini tum Patrii ſermonis uſu,
Orationem perpolivit.
Quam vero in umbraculo coluerat facundiam,
Eam in Solem atq; Aciem Senator protulit.
Humanioribus Literis domi peregreq; operam dedit;
Omnes autem, ut decuit, nervos intendit,
Suâ in arte ut eſſet verſatiſſimus.
Quo ſucceſſu Orbis Britannici
Cives & Proceres,
Quam multiplici ſcientiâ Viri omnium Gentium eruditi,
Quam indefeſſo ſtudio atq; induſtriâ
Id quidem non ſine lacrymis Amici loquentur.
Miri quiddam fuit,
Continuâ occupatione,
Inter tot circuitiones,
Scribendo etiam vacare poſſet:
Quod tanto oneri diutius ſuſtinendo impar eſſet,
Nihil miri.
Obiit ſiquidem, vigente adhuc ætate,
Annum agens quinquageſimum ſecundum,
Anno Æræ Chriſti 1728 26 Julii.

[P] His character is repreſented to great advantage in the Harveian Oration of Dr. Edward Wilmot Phyſician to her Majeſty.] We ſhall give an Extract of that elegant Oration, which was publiſhed at London 1735 in 4to under the following title, Oratio Anniverſaria in Theatro Collegii Regalis Medicorum Londinenſium, ex Harvæi Inſtituto habita die XVIII Octobris A. D. MDCCXXXV. dedicated to Dr. Thomas Pellet the Preſident, and the Fellows of that College. Dr. Wilmot having commended our Author's Writings, proceeds thus (36). Tanta de uno aliquo viro prædicari, magnum quidem eſt; majus autem, quod de tali Viro prædicantur, qui nihil ſuum eſſe duxit, quod aliis beneficio eſſe poſſit. Si quid eximii, ſi quid recondili habuit, (quid autem utriuſq; non habuit?) non ſolitariâ famâ contentus, in apertum liberè protulit. Scivit egregiè? ut alii itidem ſcirent, operam ſedulo dabat. Medicinæ peritus fuit? Ut alii etiam eſſent, ſtudio flagrabat. Gloriam attigit? ſi aliorum accenderet, lucro apponebat, alienæ inſerviens, ſuæ profuſus. Secundum divini Senis effatum, * ideo artem ſuam quamplurimum amans, quia hominum amantiſſimus. In malam rem abire jubebat, qui neſcio quod Arcanum ſuperbè venditabant; ſi non haberent, falſos; ſi celarent invidos; utroque nomine aut neglectui aut odio habendos. Id nimirum patriæ, id ſuo & artis commodo inſerviturum eſſe putabat, ſi alios ſui ſimiles inveniret, vel, quoad poſſet, faceret; & ut eſſent, omnia ſua cum illis communicabat, præceptis inſtituebat, exemplo præibat. Imperitiam Medico non opprobrio ſolum, ſed crimini vertere ſolebat; & mortuo nihil intereſſe, ſeu ignorantiâ ſeu fraude periret, benevole dictitabat. . . . Cum legendis, condendis libris incumberet, & quotidianis muneris ſui officiis occuparetur, nec ſuæ, nec alienæ mille curæ circa caput ſalientes, impedimento erant, quo minus Rempublicam capeſſeret: auſpicato die Regni ſenatum intravit Vir ad omnia natus, & ſedem ſuam dignitate implevit, eloquentiâ ornavit. Medicinam proſperè fecerat, ſcriptis illuſtraverat, famâ auxerat; deerat in laudis cumulum, ut perielitanti opem ferret, in diſcrimen adductam eriperet.

(36) Pag. 19, & ſqq.

* Ἦν γὰρ παρὰ φιλανθρωπίην, παρίεσι καὶ φιλοτεχνίην. Hippocrat.

FROISSARD (JOHN) a native of Valenciennes, Canon and Treaſurer of Chimai in Hainault, flouriſhed in the fourteenth Century [A]. His chief work is a hiſtory which extends from the year 1326 to 1399 (a). He took care to inform himſelf well of things; and, for this purpoſe, went to the Courts of Princes (b), either to collect memoirs, or to hear the diſcourſes of thoſe who had had the direction of affairs. He deſerved no leſs fame as a Poet than as an Hiſtorian, and yet few people are acquainted with his Poems. They were not known to Menage, though his memory was ſo ſtocked with theſe kind of works, and a numberleſs multitude of other things. Had he known that Froiſſard has compoſed a great number of love verſes, he would have added our Author to the liſt he publiſhed of Eccleſiaſticks who have written amorous Poems [B]. Moreri ſhould not have aſſerted, that John Sleidan tranſlated Froiſſard into Latin [C]. He has committed ſome other miſtakes which ſhall be pointed out in the firſt remark.

La Popeliniere accuſes Froiſſard of having beſtowed too many encomiums on the Engliſh (α), and too few on the French, becauſe the latter did not pay him for his labours, whilſt he received a very good ſalary from the former (c).

(a) Voſſius, de Hiſtor. Lat. pag. 543. Valer. Andreas, Bibl. Belg. pag. 503. is miſtaken, in ſuppoſing that this Hiſtory begins at the year 1355. La Popeliniere, Hiſtoire des Hiſtoires, pag. 434, makes it begin at the year 1335.

(b) See a curious detail concerning this in Bullart, Academ. des Arts & Sciences, tom. 1. pag. 125.

(c) La Popeliniere, Hiſt. des Hiſtoires, liv. 8. pag. 434. See alſo Bodinus, Meth. Hiſt. cap. 4. pag. m. 58.

eriperet. Nec in morâ res fuit; hanc etiam merendi partem oblatam avide arripuit, fortiter explevit: Collegii hujus jura, avita, ſanctiſſima, Regum dona, erant qui in jus vocabant, imminutum ibant. Accurrit, dixit, propugnavit, literarum fautor, artium patronus. Argumentis, auctoritate, gratiâ, ſuâ & Artis felicitate, omnes in unam ſententiam diſcedentes habuit, & privilegia noſtra, non tantum ſarta tecta ſervavit, ſed confirmata, ampliata reddidit. Stetit reipublicæ noſtræ fortuna, illibata, integra, ſplendida, præſtigiatorum opproprium; quod oppugnata fuerat, illuſtrior; quod inſidiis petita, munitior; quod à malevolis odia habita, bonis omnibus charior. T.

[A] He flouriſhed in the fourteenth Century.] I cannot conceive how Voſſius could miſtake in this place. He owns that Froiſſard reſided a conſiderable time in the court of the Princeſs Philippa, daughter of the Earl of Hainault, and wife of Edward III, King of England Diu ſectatus eſt regum principumque familias, imprimis Philippæ ... Eduardi III, Anglorum, regis, uxoris(1). Should he not therefore have conſidered him as an old man, in the beginning of the fifteenth Century (2)? Wherefore then does he ſay, that Froiſſard became to be famous under the Empire of Rupert, that is, ſince the year 1400? The reader is to know, that Froiſſard went and preſented the firſt Books of his Hiſtory to the Princeſs Philippa, wife of Edward III. Moreri, miſled by Voſſius, places this Hiſtorian in the fifteenth Century. La Croix du Maime is in the other extreme, by making him flouriſh anno 1326, that is, ſeven years before he was born (3). Moreri is the more excuſable, in that he ſays, that this Author dedicated his Chronicle to Edward III, King of England. It is univerſally known that this Monarch died in an advanced age, anno 1377: beſides as Moreri acknowledges, that this Chronicle extends to the year 1400, it is plain that he does not expreſs himſelf right with this reſpect to the Dedication in queſtion.

(1) Voſſius, de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 543, 544.

(2) Bullart, Academie des Sciences, tom. 1. pag. 126. ſays he was then 67.

(3) He was born about the year 1333, as appears from his writings, Bullart, Acad. des Sciences, tom. 1. pag. 126.

[B] Menage would have added our Author to the liſt he publiſhed of Eccleſiaſtics who have written Love Poems.] The bare title of Froiſſard's Poems, might inform him, that they were very proper to be inſerted in his liſt. Here follows what we meet with in Paſquier (4). He who, I find, has greatly improved this ſpecies of Poetry (5) was John Froiſſard, who alſo obliged us with that long Hiſtory extant of his, from the reign of Philip de Valois to the year 1400. I am ſurprized that he has not been recommended antiently for his being a Poet; for I have formerly ſeen, in the Library of the great King Francis in Fontainebleau, a large volume of his Poems, intitled as follows. "You "are to know, that this Book contains ſeveral ſayings "or treatiſes of love and morality, which Mr. John "Froiſſard, Prieſt and Canon of Canay, and native of "the city of Valentianes in the county of Hainault, has "dictated and compoſed with the aid of God and of "the Loves, for the contemplation of ſeveral Nobles "and Worthies, which works were begun by him in the "year of Grace 1362, and finiſhed in the year of Grace "1394... The Paradiſe of Love, the Temple of Honour, "a Treatiſe in which is an encomium on the month of May, "the Dazy, ſeveral amorous Lays, Paſtorals, the Love-"Priſon, Royal Songs in honour of our Lady, the Inſtructions "of the amorous Spinet, Ballades, Virelaix, Rondeaux, "the Plea or Speeches of the Roſe and the Violet." I purpoſely copied this title word for word, eſpecially as, ſince that time, all our Poetry conſiſted chiefly in this kind of prettineſſes. Menage's Liſt is in Tom. II of the Anti-Baillet (6).

(4) Paſquier, Recherches des de la France, lib. 7. chap. 5. pag. 612.

(5) That is Chants Roiaux, Ballades, Rondeaux, & Paſtorales.

(6) Pag. 334, & ſeq.

[C] Moreri ſhould not have aſſerted, that John Sleidan tranſlated Froiſſard into Latin.] Sleidan only abridged Froiſſard; and as this Hiſtorian is vaſtly prolix, and very much crowded with many, not very neceſſary, circumſtances; it has ſo happened that Sleidan, having ſelected ſuch particulars only as are eſſential, has reduced a huge book to the ſize of a pocket-volume. I have not this Latin abridgment now by me, and therefore make uſe of the French Tranſlation, to quote a paſſage from the Preface, whereby the Reader will ſee Froiſſard's method. "It is indeed true that "the French work is very voluminous; but I can juſtly "affirm, that I have not omitted in this little abridg-"ment, any hiſtory in the ſaid work that is worthy "of being known. The reaſon is, becauſe the Au-"thor relates every particular at large: and to ſay the "truth, he ſometimes dwells too long, and is very "redundant, when he deſcribes the military prepara-"tions, ſkirmiſhes, ſingle combats, ſtorming of places, "with the diſcourſes and converſations of Princes. "Now, as the recital of ſuch particulars are of little "moment, I thought it would be needleſs to inſert "them, confining my ſelf to ſuch things only as are "material, and may be of advantage to the reader."

[§ (α) I do not find that the Gothick Editions of this Hiſtorian, printed at Paris for John Petit, without the date of the year; and for Anthony Verard, Paris alſo, and undated likewiſe, differ in any conſiderable point from that of Denys Sauvage, publiſhed at Lyons in 1559, and at Paris in 1574; but theſe latter are not faithful nor accurate; they not giving the plain, unaffected language of the Author (*). As the French charge Froiſſard with ſhewing a partiality for the Engliſh Nation, they have caſtrated his Hiſtory in ſeveral places; nevertheleſs, a complete manuſcript of it, adorned with beautiful miniatures, is kept in St. Elizabeth's Library in the city of Breſlaw. Non nego magnam picturarum elegantiam eſſe, (he ſpeaks of the manuſcript in queſtion) ſed majora hic ſunt quæ animum meum afficiunt. Putat Orbis eruditus, ſe textum Froiſſardi egregie poſſidere quem Dionyſius Salvagius, Regis Henrici II juſſu quinquageſimo nono ſuperioris ſæculi anno Lugduni publicavit, ſed fæde decipitur, dum codex hic impoſturam detegit, & Salvagii manu omnia quæ Aulæ Galliæ diſplicebant, deleta, vixque decimam hiſtoriæ partem integram relictam eſſe manifeſtum reddit (†). i. e. "I do not deny but that the miniatures are very "beautiful, but there are ſome things of greater im-"portance, which give me much concern. The learn-"ed imagine they are poſſeſſed of the genuine text of "Froiſſard, publiſhed at Lyons, in 1559, by Denys "Saulvage, at the command of Henry II; but they "are baſely impoſed upon, ſince this manuſcript lays "open the cheat; and ſhews evidently, that all ſuch "paſſages as gave umbrage to the French Court were "erazed by Saulvage himſelf, and that ſcarce an in-"tire tenth part of the Hiſtory is left. REM. CRIT.

(*) Sorel, Biblioth. Fr. ch. 11. pag. 198. edit. of 1664.

(†) Gotleb Krantz, in his Memorabilia Bibliotheca Eliſabethana Wratiſlavienſis. Breſlau, 1699.

FRONTO (MARCUS CORNELIUS) (a) a famous Orator, was choſen, on account of his great eloquence, to inſtruct the Emperors Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus in Rhetoric (b), in recompence of which he was promoted to the Conſulate, and a ſtatue was erected in his honour [A]. His eloquence was of a grave kind [B]. He was maſter of a vaſt deal of erudition, and underſtood the Latin tongue in the utmoſt perfection (c). A ſect was formed of thoſe who looked upon him as a model of perfect eloquence, and theſe were called Frontoniani (d). It may be proved, by an inſcription (e), that his deſcendants were honoured with the Conſulate. It is not improbable that the Civilians, whoſe names are Fronto (f), mentioned in the Pandects, were deſcended from him; but there is no proof that the Orators of this name belonged to Aquitain, and in particular to Auvergne [C]. Some are of opinion that our Fronto is the

(a) I know not where Moreri has borrowed the pretended prænomen Priſcus, which he gives him.

(b) Capitolin. in M. Aurelio, cap. 2. & in L. Vero, cap. 2.

(c) See Aulus Gellius, lib. 2. cap. 26; lib. 19. cap. 8, 10 and 13.

(d) Frontoniani. Sidon. Apollinaris, Epiſt. 1. lib. 1.

(e) Apud Gruterum, pag. 369.

(f) See Bertrand. de Juriſperitis, lib. 2. pag. m. 290.

[A] He was raiſed to the Conſulate, and a ſtatue was erected in his honour.] Here follows a paſſage from Auſonius with regard to the Conſulate (1). Unica mihi amplectenda eſt Frontonis imitatio, quem tamen Auguſti magiſtrum ſic Conſulatus ornavit ut præfectura non cingeret. Sed Conſulatus ille cujuſmodi? ordinario ſuffectus, bimeſtri ſpatio interpoſitus, in ſexta anni parte conſumptus; quærendum ut reliquerit tantus orator quibus conſulibus geſſerit conſulatum (2). Theſe words inform us, that Fronto was Conſul but two months, that is, that he was only raiſed to the Conſulſhip in the room of one of the ordinary Conſuls, who either died, or was removed, two months before the year was expired. This made a wide difference between the favour of Marcus Aurelius and that of Gratian; for Auſonius was appointed ordinary Conſul by Gratian his pupil. This Poet was afraid that, in making this remark in the thanks he returned to Gratian, he ſhould be accuſed of comparing himſelf to Fronto, and therefore obviated very ingeniouſly this objection. I ſhall cite his words, becauſe they are a proof, both of Marcus Aurelius's gratitude to Fronto his Preceptor, and of the eſteem in which Fronto was held. Ecce aliud quod aliquis opponat. In tanti te ergo oratoris faſtigium glorioſus attollis? Cui talia requirenti reſpondebo breviter. Non ego me contendo Frontoni, ſed Antonino præfero Gratianum (3). i. e. "Some perſon may make this farther objection: Are you ſo vain, as to ſet yourſelf "in competition with ſo great an Orator? To ſuch a "queſtion I ſhall make the ſhort anſwer following. "I do not pretend to compare my ſelf to Fronto, but "prefer Gratian to Antoninus." Here follows another proof of the gratitude in queſtion. Multum ex his Frontoni detulit, cui & ſtatuam in Senatu petiit (here we have the ſetting up a ſtatue) Proculum vero uſque ad Proconſulatum provexit (4). That is, "He aſcribed to "Fronto much of this; and demanded of the Senate "to have a ſtatue erected in his honour; but as for "Proculus, he made him Proconſul." Since Capitolinus obſerves, that Proculus, one of the Grammarians who had taught Marcus Aurelius, was made Proconſul, and does not ſay that Fronto was raiſed to the conſular dignity, he muſt have been ignorant of the laſt circumſtance; and we therefore may charge him with having made a conſiderable omiſſion. Chariſius cites a Letter which ſhews the gratitude of Marcus Aurelius: Mihi ſatis abundeque honorum eſt quos mihi cotidiane tribuis. i. e. "The honours which you daily "beſtow upon me, ſatisfy me ſufficiently." Fronto writes this to this Emperor.

(1) Auſon. in Gratiarum Actione, pag. 714.

(2) See a like thought, citation (39) of the article BALEUS.

(3) Auſon. in Gratiar. Actione, pag. 714.

(4) Capitol. in Marco Aurelio, cap. 2.

[B] His eloquence was of a grave kind.] This we are told by St. Jerom (5). Ut poſt Quintiliani acumina, Ciceronis fluvios, GRAVITATEM Frontonis, & lenitatem Plinii alphabetum diſcerem. i. e. "That, after "Quintilian's wit, Cicero's flowing periods, Fronto's GRAVITY and Pliny's ſoftneſs, I might learn the "Alphabet." Macrobius ſays very near as much, tho' in a leſs obliging manner with reſpect to Fronto, whoſe eloquence he declares to be dry. Quatuor ſunt genera dicendi, ſays he, copioſum, in quo Cicero dominatur; breve, in quo Salluſtius regnat; ſiccum quod Frontani adſcribitur; pingue & floridum in quo Plinius Secundus quondam, & nunc nullo veterum minor noſter Symmachus luxuriatur (6). i. e. "Oratory, is of four kinds; "the copious, in which Tully excells; the conciſe, "in which Saluſt is ſupreme; the dry, which is aſcribed to Fronto; the florid and luxuriant, in "which Pliny Junior formerly, and, in this "age, our Symmachus, who is not inferior to any "of the antients, abounds." Sidonius Apollinaris gives a very high idea of Fronto's ſtyle. Nec Frontonianæ gravitatis aut ponderis Apuleiani fulmen æquiparem (7). i. e. "Nor would I pretend to equal the "thunder of Fronto's gravity, and Apuleius's weight "and dignity."

(5) Epiſt. ad Ruſticum Monachum.

(6) Macrob. Saturnal. lib. 5. cap. 1.

(7) Sidon. Apollinar. Epiſt. 3. lib. 4. pag. m. 235. See alſo Epiſt. 10. lib. 8. pag. 523.

[C] There is no proof that the Orators of this name belonged to Aquitain, and in particular to Auvergne.] Sidonius Apollinaris, in a Letter (8) to Leo Counſellor to a King of the Goths (9), delivers himſelf as follows: Suſpende perorandi illud quoque celeberrimum flumen quod non ſolum gentilitium ſed domeſticum tibi, quodque in tuum pectus per ſucciduas ætates ab atavo Frontone tranſfunditur. i. e. "Suſpend that renowned flow of elo"quence, which is peculiar, not only to your coun"try, but to your family; and has been transfuſed "into your breaſt, thro' a ſeries of ages, from Fronto "your great grandfather's grandfather." This proves nothing with reſpect to the Fronto's of Auvergne, whatever Savaron may ſay, who, on theſe words of Epiſtle XXI of Book IV, Hinc avus Fronto blandus tibi, ſibi ſeverus, gives us the following remark; Fronto ex veteri illa Frontonum familia, qui in arte Rhetorica principem locum tenuere, quos ſibi ſuos Aquitania jure vendicat, quantum ex L. 2. C. de Municip. & Originariis licet colligere, & ex Epiſt. 3. lib. 8. Sidonii Apollinaris. i. e. "Fronto ſprung from the antient family "of the Fronto's, who ſurpaſſed all others in Rhetoric, and who is juſtly claimed by Aquitaine as her "own; ſo far as can be collected from Lib. 2. C. de "Municip. & Originariis; and from Epiſt. 3. Lib. 8. "of Sidonius Apollinaris." Though it could even be proved, that the perſon to whom this third Epiſtle of Book VIIIth was writ, was a native of Auvergne; there yet would be no reaſon to infer from thence, that the Orator Fronto, his great grandfather's grandfather, was of the ſame country.

(8) The 3d of Book 8.

(9) His name was Evarix.

One of our moſt curious Antiquaries, for whom I have the higheſt eſteem, obliges me to ſtop here a moment. This Gentleman aſſerts (10), that Sidonius Apollinaris makes M. Cornelius Fronto the greateſt Orator of his age, ſpring from the illuſtrious family of the Fronto's of Aquitain. Sidonius, continues he, writing to Aper (it is in Epiſt. 21, of Book 4.) informs him, that Fronto, his grandfather on the mother's ſide, was born in Auvergne, that he might have ſerved as a model to thoſe who are propoſed to us as examples. . . He writes in another Letter (which is the 3d of Book 8.) to another perſon, and declares that the ſame Fronto was his great grandfather; and tells him, that he not only bears his name, but has alſo inherited his eloquence; that it is as natural to him, and comes to him, in a direct ſucceſſion, from that excellent Orator. The Author adds that, I, there was in Aquitain, in the reign of the Emperor Gordian, a family named Fronto, as we find by Law the 2d of the Code de Municip. & Origin. Lib. 10, where one A. Fronto, having, by a feoffment of truſt, been enfranchized by a woman, who was originally of Aquitain; and aſking, whether he ſhould follow the origin of the woman who had made him free, in that of the Teſtator, the Emperor anſwered in favour of the woman who manumitted him. II. That if Æmilius Fronto, who dedicated the monument of which an explanation is given, is not the ſame Fronto who was made free; we may very well believe, that he is the ſecond great grandſon of M. Cornelius Fronto, who lived under Antoninus the Philoſopher, and who taught him Rhetoric.

(10) Abbé Nicaiſe, who has been mentioned before in the remark [G] of the article ARETINE (Peter), in the explanation of an antient monument found on Guienne, printed at Paris in 1689, pag. 14, 15.

The Reader may have ſeen, in the preface to the plan or ſpecimen of my work, that there are no Writers on whom I more freely venture to make obſervations, than on thoſe for whom I have a particular eſteem; for, ſhould I ſcruple to propoſe my petty difficulties to them, it would intimate that I imagined they entertained the ſame whom the younger Pliny mentions, or who is ſpoken of in the 56th Epigram of the 1ſt Book of Martial. This is attended with ſome difficulty [D]. It would be a great entertained prejudices, which I look upon as a great fault. I repeat here this caution, and deſire that it may be remembred in every caſe of the like nature.

I, I obſerve, that it would be extremely agreeable to me, could it be proved that the illuſtrious Cornelius Fronto was a native of Aquitain. This would reflect a great honour on ancient Gaul, and add high luſtre to the liſt of learned and able men who were born in it. But it does not appear to me that this can be proved by the two Epiſtles of Sidonius Apollinaris abovecited. One of thoſe Letters was writ to Aper, and the other to Leo, Counſellor to a King. The firſt ſhews only this, that there had been in Auvergne, a man of very great worth, named Fronto, whoſe daughter was mother to the perſon to whom Sidonius wrote. The other Letter (ſo far as I can underſtand it) does not ſay that the Fronto in queſtion, a native of Auvergne, was great grandfather to the perſon to whom Sidonius addreſſes himſelf. Sidonius employs the word Atavus, which ſignifies great grandfather's grandfather; and thence it appears, that the Fronto mentioned in the firſt Letter, is not the Fronto of the ſecond; for it can hardly happen, that a man ſhould correſpond with two friends, the grandfather of one of whom is the great grandfather's grandfather of the other. Beſides, it ſeems evident to me, that the Fronto of the firſt Letter had been dead but a few years. He had been concerned in the education of his grandſon (11); and Sidonius Apollinaris had perhaps been acquainted with him. This cannot be ſuppoſed with reſpect to the Fronto of the other Letter; with reſpect, I ſay, to the Orator Marcus Cornelius Fronto, Preceptor of Marcus Aurelius; for it is he, who is hinted at by Sidonius. Now Sidonius lived in the fifth Century, and Marcus Aurelius in the ſecond. This is my firſt remark, and here follows a ſecond. I do not ſee how Æmilius Fronto, who dedicated the monument, could be at one and the ſame time A. Fronto, manumitted by a woman of Aquitain; and could have M. Cornelius Fronto for his great-great grandfather; for this Orator, left his family in exceeding good circumſtances, his pupil having been very munificent to him, and raiſed him to the Conſulſhip. His ſon, his grandſon, and great grandſon, were poſſeſſed of the higheſt employments in Rome (12); ſo that it does not appear, how one of his deſcendants could have been ſlave to a woman of Aquitain, a Province of the Roman Empire.

(11) Hinc avus Fronto blandus tibi.

(12) See the inſcription given by Gruter, pag. 369. and Bertrand, de Juriſperitis, lib. 2. pag. 291. Some are of opinion, that the grandſon's father was only ſon-in-law to our Fronto.

[D] This is attended with ſome difficulty.] He whom Pliny mentions was named Fronto Catius. He pleaded for Marius Priſcus, impeached by the Africans. It was a great and glorious cauſe, but difficult to maintain, both becauſe Marius was guilty, and that Pliny and Tacitus pleaded againſt him. Marius's Advocate employed his uſual talent, which was, to move his Judges to compaſſion. Reſpondit Fronto Catius deprecatuſque eſt, ne quid ultra repetundarum legem quæreretur, omniaque actionis ſuæ vela vir movendarum lachrymarum peritiſſimus, quodam velut vento miſerationis implevit . . . (13). Dixit pro Mario rurſus Fronto Catius inſigniter, utque jam locus ille poſcebat, plus in precibus temporis, quam in defenſione conſumpſit (14). i. e. "Fronto Catius anſwered, and humbly beſought the "Judges not to enquire farther than the Law enacted "againſt bribery and extortion; and as he had an ad- "mirable talent in raiſing pity, he exhibited the cauſe "in ſuch a light, as might incline the Court to mercy. ". . . Fronto Catius pleaded again admirably well in "favour of Marius; and, as the cauſe required, em- "ployed more time in endeavouring to awake the "compaſſion of the Court for his Client, than he did "in defending him." This cauſe was pleaded under Trajan. Our Cornelius Fronto muſt therefore have lived to a very old age, in caſe he was the ſame Fronto Catius whom we juſt now mentioned; for, between Trajan's death, and the beginning of Marcus Aurelius's reign, there was an interval of forty years; and we cannot ſuppoſe Marius's pleader to have been a young man. He doubtleſs, at the time that he defended this cauſe, was one of the moſt famous Orators of that age. To this we may add, that the character of pathetic which was given to his eloquence, does not ſuit very well with the dry and grave eloquence which diſtinguiſhed that of Cornelius Fronto: I therefore am of opinion that Cataneus is miſtaken (15) in affirming, that the Fronto Catius of Pliny is the ſame Cornelius Fronto who was Preceptor to Marcus Aurelius, and whom Juvenal mentions in his firſt Satire. Cataneus doubtleſs hints at the following verſe of Juvenal,

(13) Plin. lib. 2. Epiſt. 11. pag. m. 98.

(14) Ibid. pag. 105.

Frontonis platani convulſaque marmora clamant,

Which ſhows that this Fronto had a fine houſe, and that he let ſuch Poets as repeated their compoſitions have the uſe of it. Now as Juvenal flouriſhed under the Empire of Domitian, I leave the reader to judge whether he could ſpeak this of a man who was raiſed to the Conſulate by Marcus Aurelius. According to the moſt common opinion, the following verſe of Martial (36),

Clarum militiæ Fronto togæque decus,

" Fronto, the glory of both peace and war,"

is addreſſed to that Fronto, at whoſe houſe Poets uſed to go and read their works. In this caſe, methinks it ſhould not be ſaid that Martial has mentioned our Cornelius Fronto; for I do not find it related by any Author, that this Orator ever ſignalized himſelf in the field. Some are of opinion, that the perſon on whom Martial has beſtowed ſo fine an encomium in a ſingle line, is the ſame Fronto who was Conſul with Trajan, Anno Dom. 100 (17). He therefore was not Marcus Aurelius's Preceptor, ſince that Prince's Preceptor owed the enjoyment of the Conſulate entirely to the favour of his pupil. The reader muſt obſerve particularly, that Trajan's Collegue in the Conſulate Anno Dom. 100, was then made Conſul a third time; and that Marcus Aurelius's Preceptor, according to Euſebius's Chronicle, flouriſhed Anno Dom. 164. Here therefore in all probability, are two perſons, notwithſtanding the aſſertion of the Jeſuit who wrote the Commentary in uſum Delphini, upon Aulius Gellius (18). How was it poſſible for him not to perceive, that Auſonius would not have looked upon, as a ſignal favour, the Conſulſhip of two months, beſtowed by Marcus Aurelius on his pupil, had this pupil been ordinary Conſul a long time before, and that too in conjunction with a great Emperor? I obſerve that our Fronto ſurvived his Conſulſhip; which appears from Aulus Gellius (19), who ſpeaks of him as a perſon of Conſular Dignity, where he mentions the viſit he made him with Favorinus. The Delphin Scholiaſt ſuppoſes that Aulus Gellius, in Chap. VIII, Book XIX, ſpeaks of the Fronto who ſignalized himſelf both in the field and at the bar under Domitian, that is, of the ſame Fronto mentioned by Martial. But I am of a different opinion, and think that Aulus Gellius ſtill ſpeaks of him who taught Marcus Aurelius Rhetoric; and conſequently that he does not hint at a Fronto, who, as early as Domitian's reign, was a great ſoldier and a great ſtateſman. William Grotius is of opinion, that the perſon who was viſited by Favorinus and Aulus Gellius, is Marcus Aurelius's preceptor; but he declares him to have been Conſul, in the 6th year of Severus, that is, Anno Dom. 199. Cujus conſulatum in annum ſextum Severi rejiciendum puto (20). But this is a notorious error, ſince this Conſulſhip was owing to the favour of Marcus Aurelius; not to obſerve that our Fronto was certainly not alive in 199. Was he not the chief, and the moſt applauded Orator that was in Rome under the Emperor Hadrian? Ἀμέλει καὶ Κερνήλιος Φρόντων, ὁ τὰ πρῶτα τῶν τότε Ῥωμαίων ἐν δίκαις φερόμενος, ἐσπέρας ποτὲ βαδείας ἀπὸ δείπνου οἴκαδε ἐπανιὼν καὶ μαθὼν παρά τινος ᾧ συνηγορήσειν ὑπέσχετο, δικάζειν αὐτὸν, ἔν τε τῇ σολῇ τῇ δειπνίτιδι ὥσπερ εἶχε εἰς τὸ δικαστήριον αὐτῷ εἰσῆλθε (21). i. e. "Cornelius Fronto had alſo great "authority, and was conſidered as the fineſt pleader "in Rome. This perſon returning home late one "evening from an entertainment, and hearing "from one of his clients, that the Emperor was ſit- "ting upon cauſes, he, without changing his dreſs, "went into court." He therefore muſt have been forty years old at leaſt, when this Prince died anno 138.

(15) Fuit igitur Cornelius Fronto Catius orator nobiliſſimus, Romanæ eloquentiæ non ſecundum ſed alterum decus (quamquam illi Macrobius ſiccum dicendi genus aſcribat) Antonini Philoſophi præceptor. Cataneus in Plin. Epiſt. 11. lib. 2. pag. 98. Theſe words Fronto Romanæ facundiæ non ſecundum ſed alterum decus, are cited by Savaro in Sidon. Apoll. Epiſt. 10. lib. 8. pag. 524. as extracted from a Panegyric of Maximian.

(16) Epig. 56. lib. 1.

(17) This opinion does not agree with Pliny, who ſays in Panegyr. pag. m. 116. that Trajan, in his third Conſulate (that is Anno 100) choſe a man, for his collegue, who was not a warrior. See Tillemont, tom. 2. pag. m. 896.

(18) In Caput XXVI libri 2.

(19) Lib. 2. cap. 26. Obſerve that the perſon whom he here calls M. Fronto; and he whom he calls Fronto Cornelius, in chap. 8. and 10. of book 19. are the ſame perſon. He, mentioned in chap. 26 of book 2, has ſore feet, and he of chap. 10. book 19, is afflicted in the ſame manner.

(20) Grotius, de Vitis Juriſcon. pag. 188.

(21) Xiphilin. Hadriano, pag. m. 265.

great miſtake not to diſtinguiſh him from FRONTO, a Roman Conſul under the Emperor Nerva. He delivered an Apophthegm that is extremely ſolid [E]. Some writers pretend that our Cornelius Fronto compoſed a diſcourſe againſt the Chriſtians [F]. He not only taught Marcus Aurelius Rhetoric, but alſo inſtilled into him ſeveral excellent moral precepts (g), which had a near relation to the duties of Kings.

(g) M. Antel. de Seipſo, lib. 1. n. 8.

[E] He delivered an Apophthegm that is extremely ſolid.] It is an unhappineſs, ſaid he, to live under an Emperor, who will not permit a perſon to do any thing: but it is a ſtill greater unhappineſs to live under a Prince, who ſuffers all ſorts of perſons to behave and act as they pleaſe. The Epitomizer of Dion has preſerved this Apophthegm (22); but then he has broke the thread of the narration in ſuch a manner, that we are obliged to gueſs, in order to diſcover on what occaſion Fronto the Conſul ſpoke thus. Probably it was, upon his obſerving that, in remedying the irregularities and diſorders which informers had introduced under Domitian, ſuch exceſſes were committed as occaſioned ſtill greater confuſion. In all probability the caſe ſtood thus. Informers were ſtrictly called to account, and puniſhed ſeverely as they deſerved. But then, upon pretence of extirpating that deteſtable race of men, thoſe peſts of ſociety, every man, who wanted to rid' himſelf of an enemy, charged him with being an informer. The mild diſpoſition of Nerva, joyned to the hatred that was entertained againſt ſuch as had been creatures of Domitian, made way for the committing a numberleſs multitude of unjuſt actions; ſo that Fronto, comparing Nerva's reign with that of Domitian, judged the former to be the worſt. His Apophthegm was of good ſervice, the Emperor putting a ſtop to ſeveral proſecutions (33).

(22) Xiphilin. in Nerva. pag. m. 40.

(23) Ibid.

[F] Some Writers pretend, that our Fronto made a Speech againſt the Chriſtians.] This aſſertion is grounded on what follows. Cæcilius the heathen, in the dialogue of Minutius Felix, charges the Chriſtians with committing many abominable actions, and cites the teſtimony of an Orator, who was born in Cirta a city of Africa, & de convivio notum eſt: paſſim omnes loquuntur: id etiam Cirtenſis noſtri teſtatur oratio. i. e. "The practice at their entertainments is well "known; it is talked of by every one, and our Ora"tor of Cirta teſtifies it." The Chriſtians were accuſed of aſſembling on certain days in order to feaſt together. Perſons of both ſexes and of all ages were admitted indiſcriminately there; and after they had heated themſelves with drinking, bread was thrown to a dog that was tied to a candleſtick. The dog, leaping at the bread, beat down the candleſtick, when all being then in the dark, the two ſexes mixed indiſcriminately as chance huddled them together; and every man ſatiated his luſt with the firſt woman he laid hold of in the dark, though ſhe were his ſiſter, his daughter or mother. Ad epulas ſolemni die coeunt, cum omnibus liberis, ſororibus, matribus, ſexûs omnis homines, & omnis ætatis. Illic poſt multas epulas, ubi convivium caluit, & inceſtæ libidinis fervor ebrietate exarſit, canis, qui candelabro nexus eſt, jactu offulæ ultra ſpatium linea, qua vinctus eſt, ad impetum & ſaltum provocatur: ſic everſo & extincto conſcio lumine, impudentibus tenebris nexus infandæ cupiditatis involvunt per intertum ſortis: &, ſi non omnes opera, conſcientia tamen pariter inceſti; quoniam voto univerſorum appetitur, quicquid accidere poteſt in actu ſingulorum (24). When Octavius the Chriſtian, in the abovementioned Dialogue of Minutius Felix, refutes this impudent calumny, he obſerves, that the witneſs whoſe teſtimony had been alledged was named Fronto; and that he ought not to be cited as a witneſs who makes his depoſition, but as an Orator who throws out his invectives. Sic de iſto & tuus Fronto, non ut affirmator teſtimonium fecit, ſed convicium ut Orator aſperſit (25). We therefore cannot doubt, but that an Orator named Fronto made a very ſevere ſpeech againſt the Chriſtians; but the queſtion is, whether this Fronto, and he who taught Marcus Aurelius Rhetoric, are the ſame perſon. Francis Balduinus the civilian (26) inclines to the latter opinion, and chuſes to aſcribe this ſpeech to Cornelius Fronto the Orator, preceptor to Marcus Aurelius, rather than to Papyrius Fronto the civilian, mentioned in the Pandects. Rigaltius (27) approves the opinion of Balduinus. Some other Commentators, as Wower and Elmenhorſt, declare in poſitive terms, that Cornelius Fronto the Orator, and preceptor of Marcus Aurelius, is the perſon mentioned in the Dialogue of Minutius Fælix. Daillé makes the ſame aſſertion without once heſitating; he thereby ſettles the true age of Minutius Fælix, and clears himſelf of the anachroniſm with which he was reproached, and which was ſuppoſed to be occaſioned by the order in which he ſet down ſome names, he placing Minutius Felix before Irenæus and Clemens Alexandrinus. "I knew very well, "ſays he (28), that your Bellarmin places him after "Tertullian, and that the late Rigaltius, not to men"tion others, is of the ſame opinion; but I had my "reaſons for thinking otherwiſe, for this Author "ſpeaks * of the Orator Fronto, born in the city of "Cirta in Africa, as of a man who was his contem"porary, and a friend of that Cæcilius the heathen, "whom Octavius, in the ſame Dialogue converts to "Chriſtianity. Now it is certain that Fronto was "living under the firſt Antoninus, who died about "Anno Dom. 161; and that he was preceptor to "Antoninus Verus †, and Marcus Aurelius ‡, who "ſucceeded the firſt Antoninus, and lived, one till "the year 170, and the other till the year 180 of our "Lord." I ſhall make three obſervations on all this. I. That it is not certain that Minutius ſpake of Fronto the Orator, as of a man who was his contemporary, and of a friend of Cæcilius the heathen; for the words Cirtenſis noſtri may barely ſignify that Cæcilius, and the perſon to whom he ſpoke, were of the ſame country with that Orator. A Norman, who was born threeſcore years after the death of Malherbe, would not ſcruple to cite our Malherbe. It is very common for an Engliſhman, a German, and ſo of other nations, in quoting an Author of their country, to expreſs themſelves thus, our ſuch a one, although this ſuch a one had been dead many Ages. When Daillé in the above cited paſſage, ſays to Father Adam, your Bellarmine, he does not mean that thoſe two Jeſuits were contemporaries. II. The following expreſſion of Daillé It is certain that Fronto was living under the firſt Antoninus, does not ſuit a man who remembred that Fronto was the chief of the pleaders in Rome under the Empire of Hadrian (29). III. In the main, I join in opinion with Daillé: I believe that our Cornelius Fronto is the ſame with him who is cited by Minucius Felix, and we therefore know his native country, he being a native of Cirtha in Numidia. Let it not be objected to me, that it is improbable ſo able a man, ſo famous an Orator ſhould have interſperſed a Book with the ridiculous ſtories and infamous calumnies, which ſome ignorant and paſſionate men of that time vented againſt the Chriſtians. We ſhould judge of thoſe Ages by the ſixteenth and ſeventeenth Centuries. What ſett of people ſpread with greater fury the moſt falſe and moſt bitter accuſations againſt their adverſaries, than Orators and ſuch like? Was it not they, in the ſixteenth Century, who calumniated the Proteſtants with the greateſt boldneſs. Let this inſtance ſerve for all the reſt: Sit unum inſtar omnium.

(24) Minucius Felix, pag. m. 89, 90.

(25) Ibid. pag. 303.

(26) In Prolegom. ad Minuc. Felicem.

(27) In notis ad Minuc. Felicem, pag. m. 89. He quotes Lampridius inſtead of Capitolinus; for it is the latter, and not the former, who relates that Cornelius Fronto taught Marcus Aurelius Rhetoric.

(28) Replique à Adam & à Cottiby, Part 3. chap. 8. pag. m. 187. I ſhall tranſcribe his quotations without making the leaſt alteration in them; obſerving only that that of Marcus Aurelius, de Vita ſua, Book 12. is not juſt. He ſhould have cited book 1. chap. 8.

* Minut. in Octav. pag. 23 and 92.

† Hier. in Melit. Lib. de Scrip. Eccl.

‡ Marc. Aurel. de Vita ſua, lib. 12.

(29) See above, citation (21).

FUGGER (HULDRIC) born at Augſburg of a family conſiderable for its antiquity and riches [A], deſerves a place in this work, for the affection he diſcovered for learning and

[A] Of a family conſiderable for its antiquity and riches.] See the Supplement to Moreri in the Article Foukers, and the Remark [EE] above of the Article CHARLES V. Thuanus (1) relates, that when this Emperor changed the Government of Augſburg anno 1548, he nominated the family of the Fuggers, among thoſe and learned men. He had been Chamberlain to Pope Paul III, and afterwards turned Proteſtant. He laid out great ſums in purchaſing good manuſcripts of ancient Authors, and getting them printed; and for this purpoſe he allowed, for ſome time, a ſalary to the learned Henry Stephens. His relations were ſo incenſed at him for the monies he expended on theſe occaſions, that they brought an action againſt him for it, and got him to be declared incapable of managing his affairs. Some Writers, without mentioning the repealing of this decree obſerve, that the ſentence pronounced againſt Fugger plunged him into a deep melancholy which accompanied him almoſt to the grave (a): but it is declared in his epitaph, that he was unmoved at this ſhock; that he was reſtored to his eſtate, and inherited that of his brother [B]. He had retired to Heidelberg, and died there in June 1584, aged fifty eight years, bequeathing his Library, which was very conſiderable (b), to the Elector Palatine, and a fund for the maintenance of ſix ſcholars. He alſo left ſome foundations for the poor, as is manifeſt from his epitaph. He had bought the Library of a Phyſician, Achilles Gaſſarus by name, and had a good purchaſe; this Phyſician, according to Melchior Adam, being a helluo librorum, having a raging paſſion for books (c). By the way, Huldric Fugger was not the firſt of his family who poſſeſſed a fine Library; for we read in Melchior Adam (d), that Jerom Wolfius being in Augſburg, was entertained there very kindly by ANTHONY FUGGER; and that the famous Library of JOHN JAMES FUGGER was committed to his care [C]. The latter had diſcovered a ſtrong love for learning. He cauſed ſome pieces of James Ziegler to be printed (e). Cardinal de Granvelle uſed to write often to, and had a great eſteem for him. In 1692 (f) was publiſhed an Italian Letter he wrote to him, dated the 21ſt of July 1564.

(1) Thuan. lib. 5. pag. m. 99.

(a) Patrimonii aviti ampliſſimi adminiſtratione dejectus eſt, unde mœrore contracto in melancholiæ morbum incidit quo fere tota vita conflictatus eſt. Thuan. lib. 80. ſub fin.

(b) Inſignem Bibliothecam mille aliquot voluminibus manuſcriptis Græcis, Latinis, Hebraïcis, ſpectatiſſimam. Gruterus, Chron. Eccleſ. lib. 2. pag. 1306.

(c) Melch. Adam. in Vit. Medicor. pag. 234.

(d) Melch. Adam. in Vit. Philoſoph. pag. 305.

(e) Thuan. lib. 6. pag. 118.

(f) See Peliſſon's Treatiſe concerning the Toleration of Religions, pag. 96 of the additions, and the remark [A] below.

Beatus Rhenanus gives us a very grand idea of the magnificence and good taſte of ANTHONY and RAYMOND FUGGER. He deſcribes the beauty of their houſes and gardens, where excellent pictures were ſeen, the moſt conſiderable plants in Italy, and a great number of antiques [D]. Read the Letter he wrote to the Elector of Mentz's Phyſician, dated the 6th of March 1531. It is the fiftieth of the Century of Philological Letters, collected and publiſhed by Goldaſtus.

FULGINAS

thoſe who thenceforward were to be raiſed to the dignity of Senators. Abbé Boiſſet ſending Peliſſon the copy of a Letter extracted from the Memoirs of Cardinal de Granvelle, writes as follows. The perſon who wrote it, was one of the Fuggers, thoſe famous and illuſtrious Merchants of Augſburg, very little inferior, in credit and ſplendor, to thoſe whom an univerſal commerce, which was altogether noble, and great riches that attended it, have ſometimes raiſed to all the moſt exalted ſtations in Commonwealths. This man held a very great correſpondence with the Cardinal, and often gave him extreme good counſels (2). Rabelais writing from Rome in 1536 to the Biſhop of Maillezais, tells him, that next to the Fourques of Augſburg, Philip Struſſi is reputed the richeſt Merchant in all Chriſtendom (3). Now the following Hiſtorical Note has been made on theſe words of Rabelais. "The family of the Foucres or "Fuggers, Fuggerana, makes at this time a conſi- "derable figure in Germany, in the Dioceſe of "Conſtance, where it is poſſeſſed of the Baronies of "Kircberg and Weiſſenhorn. They lived firſt in the "city of Augſburg, and were the richeſt Merchants in "Germany about an hundred and fifty years ago. "By the Emperor's munificence they were honoured "with the dignity of Baron anno M. D. X. in the "perſons of Raymond Foucre Baron of Kircberg and "Weiſſenhorn, and of Anthony Fugger, whoſe "grandſon was James, Biſhop and Prince of Conſtance, "anno 1604. The circumſtance which darts the "greateſt luſtre round this family, is its being allied "to the beſt families in Germany, viz. with "the Counts of Zollern, Schuartzemberg, Eber- "ſteyn, Koningſeck, Montfort, Ottingen, and "Truceſes; with the Barons of Madruce, the Counts "of Lodron, and other perſons of the higheſt qua- "lity in Bavaria." Hippolitus à Lapide obſerves (4), that the Fuggers were created Counts, but that they were not inſerted in the Rolls or Records of the Empire till the year 1582. I have ſeen a German Book printed anno 1620, conſiſting of the engraved heads of the perſons of both ſexes of that family, with a ſhort Diſcourſe upon each of them. The firſt mentioned there is JAMES FUGGER, ſirnamed the antient, who died the 14th of March 1469. All the Genealogical Writers of Germany take notice of this illuſtrious family, and do not ſcruple to confeſs, that it ſprung from a weaver, who, in 1370 was made a freeman of the city of Augſburg (5), and was born in the village of Geggingen, at half a league's diſtance from that city (6).

(2) Peliſſon, Traité de la Tolerance des Religions, pag. 95. of the Additions.

(3) Rabel. Epit. pag. 9.

(4) De Rat. Stat. in Imp. Germ. Part. 2. cap. 7. Sect. 8. pag. m. 458.

[B] It is declared in his epitaph that he was unmoved at the ſhocks that he was reſtored to his eſtate, and inherited that of his brother.] This is what we are aſſured of. The Reader may credit it ſo far as he pleaſes, for the friends of deceaſed perſons do not ſcruple very much to tell a little officious lie. Apud Fridericum III Electorem Palatinum fortunam conſtantia & æquanimitate ſuperavit. Suis interea reſtitutus, fraternis quinetiam bonis auctior, eundem in re lauta quem in afflicta vultum animumque retinuit. See Mr. Teiſſier (7).

(5) See Mr. Hoffman, tom. 3. of his Dictionary, pag. 773. I cannot reconcile with the German book in queſtion, what he relates of James Fugger, a weaver's ſon. He declares that he was Counſellor to Maximilian I. Now the German book places his death at 1469: and Maximilian aſcended the Imperial Throne in 1493.

[C] The famous Library of John James Fugger was committed to the care ... of Jerom Wolfius.] Wolfius wrote ſome Greek verſes, in which he declares that this Library, containing as many Books as there are ſtars in the ſky, was a place in which he uſed to paſs whole days in gathering fruits and flowers, in diverting and inſtructing himſelf, and that he preferred it to all others.

Ἀντὶ μὲν ἓξ πάντων αἱρεῖμαι βιβλιοθήκην
Φυκκαρίην, ψυχῆς κρείσσονα τήνδε φιλῶ (8).

That is,

"No Library affords ſuch ſweets as thine,
"And with ſuch various Learning ſtores my mind."

(6) Cruſ. Part. 3. Annal. Suev. lib. 5. cap. 9. apud Magirum, Eponym. pag. 366.

(7) Eloges, tom. 2. pag. 4.

(8) Script. Publ. Academ. Witteb. tom. 3. folio 121. apud Lomier. de Bibliotb. pag. 398.

[D] They had a great number of Antiques.] Raymond Fugger ſpared no coſt to procure as many of them as he could. He himſelf had ſome Learning, and was very fond of Antiquity. Narrabatur vero nobis ex toto propemodum orbe convecta fuiſſe ea vetuſtatis monumenta, præcipue tamen ex Græcia atque Sicilia. Adeo nullius ſumptus Raimundum pœnitet ob amorem, quem literarum minime expers erga antiquitatem gerit, modo poſſit talibus rebus potiri. Id quod vere nobilem & generoſum hominis animum oſtendit (9). i. e. "It is "related that thoſe monuments of antiquity were "fetched from almoſt every part of the world, and "eſpecially from Greece and Sicily. Raymond, who "was a Scholar, was ſo fond of antiquity, that he "ſpared no coſt in purchaſing the monuments of it: "a circumſtance that ſpeaks his truly noble and gene- "rous mind."

(9) Beat. Rhenan. apud Goldaſt. Centuria Epiſt. Philolog. pag. 212.

FULGINAS, or DE FULGINEO (SIGISMUND) is ranked among the learned men of the fifteenth Century. He wrote a hiſtory of his own times. Felinus (a) refers to it, with reſpect to the diſputes between Sixtus IV and Ferdinand King of Naples. Voſſius might have diſcovered, better than by this citation, the period in which Fulginas lived, had he called to mind the firſt chapter of Book VI of the Geniales Dies of Alexander ab Alexandro. We are there informed, that the latter had been extremely intimate from his youth with Fulginas, a learned man, who had been very much employed by the Popes, and who ſtole as much time as he could from buſineſs, either to read good books, or to write the annals of his time. The idea which is given us of his riches and the table he kept is very mean [A], and vaſtly beneath that of his genius and learning. He wrote ſome Latin verſes on the death of Bartholomew Platina; on which occaſion he entitles himſelf Apoſtolical Secretary. Thoſe verſes were publiſhed at the end of Platina's works who died in 1481; which circumſtance I remark only for this reaſon, that my reader may know the better in what period Fulginas lived. He is little known to Bibliographers.

(a) Epitom. de Sicil. & Apul. Regib. cap. 29. and not 39. as is cited by Voſſius, de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 661.

He was not dead in 1511, as is manifeſt from a Letter, the third of the fifth book, which Bembus wrote to him. The preceding epiſtle, dated the 25th of November 1510, ſhews that Fulginas was in the ſervice of Julius II, and that he is one of the chief interlocutors in Bembus's dialogue de Urbini Ducibus.

[A] The idea which is given us of his riches, and the table he kept is very mean.] The Reader may judge of this from the following words of Alexander ab Alexandro (1). Nonnunquam in ſuo prædiolo in monte Janiculo, miro proſpectu & collibus amœno, ubi ædiculas habebat, cum amicis ſe recipiebat, ibique lepidis jucundiſque ſermonibus, id quod erat laxamenti, una familiariſſime conferebat. Præſtabat nonnunquam nobis ipſe cœnulam, ut non nimis inſolentem, ſic profecto ſobriam & modeſtam, ac temporibus conſentaneam: & ut erat ipſe comis, faciliſque natura, ita facilem nobis victum non exquiſitis valde obſoniis apparabat, ſiquidem aſparagos altiles acido vino & pipere conditos cum juſculo tepidulo, ac ferculum cucurbitæ, cum immatura uva ibidem expreſſa, & decocta largo ſucco, quibus perlibenter veſcebatur, obſonia nobis exhibebat: addebat etiam pyrum pomumque Perſicum miro odore fragrantia. Poſt cœnulam &c. i. e. "He would ſometimes retire with his "friends, to his little eſtate on mount Janiculum, "where he had a lovely proſpect, (the hills being de-"lightful,) and a ſmall country ſeat. Here they uſed "to converſe together, and unbend their minds with fa-"cetious diſcourſes. He has ſometimes entertained me "there with a ſupper, which was altogether ſober and "modeſt, and ſuitable to the times; and as he himſelf "was of an affable and eaſy temper, ſo he uſed to give "us an eaſy repaſt, in which no dainties were ſeen; "his entertainment being compoſed of aſparagus ſea-"ſoned with vinegar and pepper, and warm ſauce; "a meſs of gourd, with the juice of unripe grapes "ſqueezed therein, and a large quantity of ſoup; "of which he eat very heartily. To all this was "added pears and peaches, of exquiſite odour. Af-"ter this little ſupper &c."

(1) Alexander ab Alexandro, Genial. Dier. lib. 6. cap. 1. pag. m. 391, 392.

☞FULLER (THOMAS), a learned Engliſh Divine and Hiſtorian in the ſeventeenth Century, was ſon of Mr. Fuller Miniſter of All-Wincle near Oundle in Northamptonſhire, and born in that town (a) about the year 1608 [A]. The chief aſſiſtance he had in grammar-learning was from his father; and at twelve years of age he was tranſplanted to Queen's College in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he purſued his ſtudies with ſuch vigour, that he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1624, and that of Maſter in 1628 (*), at ſo early an age, that ſuch a commencement was not within memory (b). During his reſidence in this College (c) he ſtood Candidate for a vacant Fellowſhip, prompted thereto by a double plea of merit and intereſt, beſides the deſire of the whole houſe; but a ſtatute of the College prevailing againſt them all, which admitted not two Fellows of the ſaid County of Northampton, he quitted his pretenſions and deſignation to that preferment. And though he was well aſſured of a diſpenſation from the ſtrict limitation of that ſtatute to be obtained for him, yet he totally declined it, as not willing to owe his advancement to an ill precedent, which might uſher in more immodeſt intruſions upon the privileges and laws of the College (d). But this gave him a fair occaſion to transfer himſelf to Sidney College, whither by ſome of his learned friends he had often been invited. He had not been long there before he was choſen Miniſter of St. Bennet's Pariſh in the town of Cambridge, in which Church he offered the firſt fruits of his miniſterial functions, being univerſally admired as an excellent Preacher. He was now about three and twenty years of age (e), when his uncommon merit procured him a Fellowſhip in Sidney-College, and a Prebend in Saliſbury, to which he was collated June the 18th 1631 (f). He was ſoon after ordained Prieſt by the Biſhop of Saliſbury, and preſented to the Rectory of Broad Windſor in Dorſetſhire, where he married a young Gentlewoman, by whom he had ſeveral children (g). In 1635 he took the degree of Bachelor of Divinity (h). It was during his receſs at his Rectory that he began to compleat ſeveral of his works, the foundations of which he had laid at the Univerſity (i). But growing weary of the narrow limits of a country-pariſh, and uneaſy at the unſettled ſtate of public affairs, he removed to London, where he preached with great applauſe in the

(a) Life and Death of that reverend Divine and excellent Hiſtorian, Dr. Thomas Fuller, pag. 1, 2. edit. Oxon. 1662. and Fuller's Mixt contemplations in better Times, Part 2. p. 64. edit. London 1660.

(*) From the Univerſity Regiſter.

(b) Life and Death of Dr. Fuller, pag. 3, 4.

(c) He tells us in his Hiſtory of the Univerſity of Cambridge, pag. 82. that he continued eight years in this College.

(d) Life, &c. pag. 4.

(e) Ibid. pag. 4, 5.

(f) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 556. 2d edit. London 1721.

(g) Life of Dr. Thomas Fuller, pag. 8-13.

(h) From the Univerſity Regiſter.

(i) Life &c. pag. 7 and 12.

[A] Born . . . about the year 1608.] This we may collect from the Account of Mr. David Lloyd *, who tells us, that he was 53 years of age, when he died in 1661. The Author of his Life, printed at Oxford 1662 in 12mo, likewiſe informs us (1), that his great ſufficiencies (being now but about the age of twenty three years) tendered him a Prebendary of Saliſbury, and at the ſame time a Fellowſhip in Sidney-College. Now as it appears, that he was collated to the Prebend of Netherbury in Eccleſia in the Cathedral of Sarum on the 18th of June 1631 (2), it follows that he was born in the year 1608.

* Memoirs of the Lives &c. of thoſe noble, reverend, and excellent Perſonages, that ſuffered Death, &c. in our late inteſtine wars, pag. 524. edit. London 1668 in fol. (1) Pag. 5. (2) Hiſtory and Antiquities of the Cathedral Church of Saliſbury, and the Abbey Church of Bath, pag. 332. edit. London 1719 in 8vo. and Wood, Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 556.

the moſt eminent pulpits, eſpecially in the Inns of Court; and at laſt was invited by the Maſter and Brotherhood of the Savoy, as well as earneſtly intreated by that ſmall pariſh, to accept of the Lecturer's place (k), which he diſcharged with prodigious ſucceſs [B]. In 1640 he publiſhed his Hiſtory of the Holy War [C]; and in 1642 his Holy State [D]. He continued at the Savoy to the great ſatisfaction of his people, and the neighbouring Nobility and Gentry, till the breaking out of the civil wars; labouring all that while in private and public to ſerve the King's intereſt [E]; and in April 1643, upon the preſſing of the Covenant, he retired to Oxford where he preached before the King at St. Mary's [F], and afterwards attended Sir Ralph Hopton, afterwards Lord Hopton, as his Chaplain in the army [G]. With the progreſs of the war he marched from place to place; and wherever there happened for the better accommodation of the army any reaſonable ſtay, he allotted it with great ſatisfaction to his ſtudies, and

(k) Ibid. pag. 13, 14.

[B] The Lecturer's place, which he diſcharged with prodigious ſucceſs.] He had a great concourſe of hearers from diſtant congregations, inſomuch, ſays the Writer of his life (3), that his own Cure were, in a ſenſe, excommunicated from the Church, unleſs their timous diligence kept pace with their devotions; the Doctor affording them no more time for their extraordinaries on the Lord's Day, than what he allowed his habituated abſtinence on all the reſt. He had in his narrow chapel two audiences, one without the pale, the other within; the windows of that little church and the ſextonry ſo crowded, as if bees had ſwarmed to his melliſluous diſcourſe.

(3) Pag. 15.

[C] In 1640 he publiſhed his Hiſtory of the holy War.] It was printed at Cambridge 1640 in fol. with the following title: The Hiſtorie of the Holy Warre; by Thomas Fuller, B. D. Prebendarie of Sarum, and late of Sidney-College in Cambridge. The Dedication to the honourable Edward Montagu, and Sir John Powlet, ſons and heirs to Edward Lord Montague of Boughton, and John Lord Powlet of Hinton St. George, is dated at Broad-Windſor March 6th 1638. In the Preface he obſerves, that in this work he can challenge nothing but the compoſing of it; the materials were found to his hand; "which if any Hiſtorian, ſays he, will "make, let him be commended for wit, but "ſhamed for falſhood. If every where I have not "charged the margin with the Author's names, it is "either becauſe the ſtorie is the Authour for itſelf, (I "mean generally received) or to avoyd the often citing of the ſame place. Where I could not go abroad my ſelf, there have I taken air at the "window, and have cited Authours on others citations; yet ſo that the ſtream may direct to the fountain." There are commendatory Verſes prefixed to it by Robert Gomerſall, Vicar of Thorncombe in Devon, Robert Tyrling, James Duport, B. D. of Trinity College, J. Booth, D. D. of Chriſt-College Cambridge, H. Atkins, H. Hutton, M. A. of Jeſus-College, H. Vintener, Tho. Jackſon, William Johnſon of Queen's College, and Clement Bretten of Sidney-College.

[D] His Holy State.] It was printed at Cambridge 1642 in fol. with this title: The Holy State. By Tho. Fuller, Bachelour of Divinitie, and Prebendarie of Sarum, late of Sidney-College in Cambridge. In the Preface he tells us, that with regard to the characters, he has "conformed them to the then ſtanding laws of "the Realm (a twelvemoneth agoe were they ſent to "the preſſe) ſince which time, ſays he, the wiſdome of "the King and State hath thought fitting to alter many things, and I expect the diſcretion of the Reader "ſhould make his alterations accordingly." He afterwards obſerves, that if God ſhould be pleaſed to diſcloud theſe gloomy times with the beams of his mercy, it will then encourage me, ſays he, to count it freedome to ſerve two apprenticeſhips (God ſpinning out the thick thread of my life ſo long) in writing the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory from Chriſt's time to our dayes, if I ſhall from remoter parts be ſo planted, as to enjoy the benefit of walking and ſtanding Libraries, without which advantages the beſt vigilancie doth but vainly dream to undertake ſuch a taſk.

[E] Labouring all that while in private and public to ſerve the King's intereſt.] His exhortations to peace and obedience were his conſtant ſubjects in the church, while his ſecular days were ſpent in vigorouſly promoting the King's affairs either by a ſudden reconciliation or powerful aſſiſtance. To this end on the Anniverſary of his Majeſty's Inauguration on the 27th of March 1642 he preached at St. Peter's Weſtminſter on this text, 2 Sam. xix. 30. Yea, let him take all, ſo that my Lord the King return in peace. This Sermon, which was printed at London in 4°, gave great offence to thoſe, who were engaged in the oppoſition to his Majeſty (4). We are told (5) that "there were few or none of the "orthodox Clergy then remaining within the Lines "of Communication (new invented limits for the city's old liberties,) ſome being dead in reſtraint, or "through more harſh and cruel dealing, the reſt outed "and ſilenced; ſo that their inſpection and ſpyall "was confined almoſt to the Doctor's pulpit as to public Aſſemblies; where nevertheleſs he deſiſted not, "nor altered his main courſe, the doctrine of Allegiance, till ſuch time as the Covenant was obtruded "upon his conſcience, and muſt through his perſuaſions be likewiſe preſt upon his people. Several "falſe rumours and cavils there are about his carriage "and opinion touching that ſacrilegious thing, by perſons, who were diſtanced as far from the knowledge "of thoſe paſſages, as fortunately from being concerned and engaged within the reach of that ſnare. It "was not only eaſy, but moſt prudential for other "eccleſiaſtical perſons to quit their livings, who were "out of the gripes and clutches of thoſe ravenous Reformiſts, in order to keep their conſcience inviolable. "But it was difficulty enough of itſelf for the Doctor "to eſcape and get out of that place, where the next "preferment would have been a dungeon. Some velitations, tranſient diſcourſes he made about that "frequent and thumb'd ſubject of the Reformation, "the rather to ſuſpend the buſy cenſures of the Parliament and their party; wherein though he ſeemed "to comply (but as far as the rule and example would "allow) and indulge the miſapprehenſion of thoſe "men, yet theſe his charitable diſguiſes could not obſcure him from the ſevere animadverſions of ſeveral "Miniſters eminent in thoſe reforming times, particularly Mr. Saltmarſh." The occaſion of the diſpute between our Author and Mr. Saltmarſh was on account of Dr. Fuller's Sermon of Reformation, preached at the Savoy on Heb. ix. 10. and printed at London 1643 in 4to; againſt which Mr. Saltmarſh wrote Animadverſions on Mr. Tho. Fuller's Sermon, in which he chargeth him with Popery. Upon this our Author publiſhed at London in 4to, a Vindication of himſelf under the title of Truth maintained.

(4) Life &c. pag. 16, 17.

(5) Ibid. pag. 17, & ſeqq.

[F] Where he preached before the King at St. Mary's.] In this Sermon he laid open the bleſſings of an accommodation, as being too too ſenſible, and that ſo recently of the virulency and impotent rage, though potent arms, of the diſloyal Londoners, which, as the Doctor then Chriſtianly thought, could not better be allayed than by a fair condeſcenſion in matters of Church Reformation. It ſeems ſome particulars in that Sermon gave offence to ſome at Court, as if the good Doctor were a luke-warm Royaliſt, and did not throughly own his Majeſty's cauſe; which ill grounded conceit, (though he were well ſatisfied in that his plea for compoſure) did not a little trouble him. To explain and free himſelf, an opportunity was wanting both of preſs and pulpit, and the hurry of the war gave not his prejudiced hearers leiſure for his particular vindication (6).

(6) Pag. 23, 24.

[G] Afterwards attended Sir Ralph Hopton . . . as his Chaplain in the Army.] Sir Ralph Hopton, though as glorious and expert and ſucceſsful a General, as any the King had, was never averſe to an amicable concluſion of the war upon fair and honourable terms; and therefore well approved of our Author and his deſires and purſuit after peace †.

† Ibid. pag. 24, 25.

and collecting materials for his History of the Worthies General of England [H]. After the battle at Cheriton-Down, March the 29th 164$\frac{3}{4}$, the Lord Hopton drew down his army and artillery to Basing, where he left our Author; who animated the garrison to so vigorous a defence of that place, that Sir William Waller was obliged to raise the siege with considerable loss (l). But the war hastening to an end, and part of the King's army being driven into Cornwall under the command of Lord Hopton, Mr. Fuller took refuge at Exeter, having his leave of that Nobleman, where he resumed his studies, and preached constantly to the Citizens. During his residence here he was appointed Chaplain to the Princess Henrietta Maria (m), and the King soon after gave him a patent for his presentation to the Living of Dorchester in Dorsetshire, worth four hundred pounds per ann. This favour our Author declined, continuing his attendance on the Princess till the surrender of Exeter to the Parliament in April 1646 (n); notwithstanding he accepted not the Living of Dorchester, because he determined to remove to London upon the expiration of the war, as the most proper place for finishing his Worthies (o). Accordingly he came to that city, but found his Lecturer's place at the Savoy filled by another. In 1647 he published at London in 4to, A Sermon of Assurance fourteen years agoe preached at Cambridge &c [I]. The death of King Charles struck him with prodigious grief. Not long after he was presented by the Earl of Carlisle to the Living of Waltham-Abbey, and was appointed Lecturer of St. Clement's, where he preached every Wednesday in the afternoon to a very numerous audience; and, shortly after was removed to the Lecture of St. Bride's in Fleetstreet, the day being changed to Thursday (p). Having continued a widower for twelve years, (the war finding him so,) he married one of the sisters of the Viscount Baltinglasse, by whom he had issue one only son (q). In the year 1655 the Lord Protector Cromwell published an interdict against ecclesiastical persons, schoolmasters, and others, who had adhered to the late King, or assisted his son Charles II, prohibiting them to perform any ministerial office, teach school, &c. upon several pains and forfeitures. However, notwithstanding this, our Author continued to preach as before. In 1656 he published at London in fol. his Church-History of Britain [K]. About (l) Life of Dr. Fuller, pag. 29, 30.

(m) She was born at Exeter June 16, 1643.

(n) Memorials of the English Affairs. By Bulstrode Whitelock, Esq; pag. 200. edit. London 1732 in fol.

(o) Life &c. pag. 34, 35.

(p) Ibid. pag. 40, 41.

(q) The Author of the Life of Dr. Fuller, pag. 42. says he was six years old in the year 1662.

[H] Collecting materials for his History of the Worthies General of England.] This Work was not printed till 1662 at London in fol. after the Author's death. Archdeacon Nicholson observes (7), that tho' this Work pretends to give an account of the native commodities, manufactures, buildings, proverbs, &c. of all the Counties of England and Wales, as well as of their great Men in Church and State; yet "this latter looks like "the principal design, and makes up the greatest part "of the volume. It was huddled up in haste (c) for "the procurement of some moderate profit to the Author, "tho' he did not live to see it published. It corrects "many mistakes in his Ecclesiastical History; but "makes more new ones in their stead. The best "things in it are the Catalogues of the Sheriffs, and "the Lists of the Gentry, as they were returned from "the several Counties (twelve only excepted) in the "12th year of Henry the sixth. His chief Author "is Bale for the Lives of his eminent Writers, and "those of his greatest Heroes are commonly mis-shapen "scraps, mixed with tattle and lies."

(7) English Historical Library, Part 1. pag. 14. edit. London in 8vo.

(c) Pag. 2.

[I] In 1647 he published at London in 4*to* A Sermon of Assurance fourteen yeares agoe preached in Cambridge, since in other places. Now by the importunity of his friends exposed to publike view.] In the title he styles himself late Lecturer in Lombard-Street. In the Dedication to the Honourable and nobly accomplished Knight, Sir John D'Anvers, he observes, that "it had been the pleasure of the present Authority "(to whose commands, says he, I humbly submit) "to make me mute, forbidding me till further or-"der the exercise of my public preaching." In the Preface to the Christian Reader he writes thus: Were I finally interdicted my calling without the hope of recovery, I would bespeak thy pity to bemoan my estate. But lying as yet in the marshes between hope and fear, I am no fit subject to be condoled for, or congratulated with. Yet it is, I trust, no piece of Popery to maintain, that the prayers of others may be beneficial and available for a person in my purgatory-condition. Which moves me to crave thy Christian suffrages, that I may be rid out of my present torment on such terms as may most tend to God's Glory, mine own good, and the edification of others. However matters shall succeed, it is no small comfort to my conscience, that in respect of my Ministerial function I do not die felo de se; not stabbing my profession by mine own laziness, who hitherto have, and hereafter shall improve my utmost endeavours by any lawful means to procure my restitution... Some perchance would persuade me to have the pulpit carried after me along with me to my private lodgings; but hitherto I have refrained from such exercises as are subject to offence, hoping in due time to be brought back to the pulpit.

[K] In 1656 he published at London in folio his Church-History of Britain.] The whole title is as follows, The Church-History of Britain; from the birth of Jesus Christ until the year 1648. Endeavoured by Thomas Fuller. In the Preface dated from his chamber at Sion-College in London, he observes, that the three first Books of this Work were for the main written in the reign of King Charles I, "as appeareth by "the passages then proper for the Government. The "other nine Books were made since Monarchy was "turned into a State." To this Work are subjoined, The History of the University of Cambridge since the Conquest. London 1655; and The History of Waltham-Abby in Essex founded by King Harold. By Thomas Fuller, Curate thereof. London 1655. Our Author's Church-History was animadverted upon by Dr. Peter Heylin in the first Part of his Examen Historicum; or a Discovery and Examination of the Mistakes, Falsities, and Defects in some modern Histories. Occasioned by the Partiality and Inadvertencies of their severall Authors. London 1659 in 8vo. In this first Part, containing necessary Animadversions on the Church-History of Britain, and the History of Cambridge, Dr. Heylin observes, that Mr. Fuller in the Preface to his Holy State, printed in 1642, had declared, that he should "count "it freedom to serve two apprenticeships (God spin-"ning out the thick thread of his life so long) in "writing the Ecclesiastical History from Christ's time "to our Days." The Doctor therefore examines whether our Author's Church History is agreeable to his promise and such a tedious expectation. Dr. Heylin remarks, I, That the Reader might expect from the former passage, that our Author designed the General History of the Church from the first preaching of Christ, and the calling of the twelve Apostles to the times, in which we live; whereas he hath restrained himself to the Church of Britain, "which he conceives "to be so far from being founded in the time of "Christ, that he is loth to give it the antiquity of "being the Work of any of the Apostles, of any of "the seventy Disciples, or finally of any Apostolical "spirit of those oldest times." II. That though he intitles it by the name of the Church-History of Britain,

About this time he became Chaplain to the Lord Berkley, having quitted Waltham, for the Living of Cranford in Middleſex, to which he was preſented by that Nobleman. He was a little before ſollicited to accept of a Living in Eſſex, in which he continued till his ſettlement at London, where ſome time before the Reſtoration he was invited to his former place of Lecturer at the Savoy. Upon the Reſtoration he recovered his Prebend in the Cathedral of Saliſbury, and was appointed Chaplain in extraordinary to tain, yet he purſues not his deſign agreeably to that title, there being little ſaid of the affairs of the Church of Scotland, which certainly makes up a conſiderable part of the iſle of Britain, and leſs (if any thing at all) of Ireland, which antiently paſt in the account of a Britiſh Iſland. III. Nor is it a Church-Hiſtory rightly and properly ſo called, but an Aggregation of ſuch and ſo many heterogeneous bodies; that Eccleſiaſtical affairs make the leaſt part of it. The name of a Church-Rhapſody had been fitter for it ... for ſuch and ſo many are the impertinencies, as to matters of hiſtorical nature, more as to matters of the Church, that without them this great volume had been brought to a narrower compaſs, if it had taken up any room at all. The firſt particular of this kind, which Dr. Heylin notes, is " a mere extrinſical and " outſide unto thoſe impertinencies, which are couched " within; conſiſting of Title-pages, Dedicatory Epiſtles, " and ſeveral intermediate Inſcriptions unto every " ſection." In the next rank of impertinencies, which are more intrinſical, part of the ſubſtance of the Work, Dr. Heylin accounts our Author's Heraldry, Blazons of Arms, Deſcents of noble Families, with their Atchievements intermingled as they come in his way, not pertinent to a Church Hiſtorian, unleſs ſuch perſons had been founders of Epiſcopal ſees or Religious houſes; or that the Arms ſo blazoned had belonged to either. The next kind of impertinencies are the verſes and old ends of Poetry ſcattered in all parts of the Hiſtory; for which our Author hath no precedent in any Hiſtorian, Greek or Latin, or any of the national Hiſtories of theſe later times. The next impertinency is his raking into old Popiſh Legends written in the darker times of ſuperſtition; and his introducing of merry Tales, and ſcraps of Trencher Jeſts, which is inconſiſtent with the gravity of a Church-Hiſtorian, and indeed the nature of a ſober argument. In the laſt place Dr. Heylin mentions our Author's " manifold excurſions about the antiquity " of Cambridge, built on as weak authority as the " Monkiſh Legends, and ſo impertinent to the matter " in hand, that the moſt reverend Matthew Parker " (though a Cambridge man) in his Antiquitates Britannicæ makes no buſineſs of it: the more impertinent, in regard that at the fag-end of his Book " there follows a diſtinct Hiſtory of that Univerſity, " to which all former paſſages might have been reduced ... All theſe extravagancies and impertinencies (which make up a fifth part of the whole volume) being thus diſcharged, it is to be preſumed, " that nothing ſhould remain but a meer Church-Hiſtory, as the title promiſeth. But let us not " be too preſumptuous on no better grounds; for " on a melius inquirendum into the whole courſe of " the Book, which we have before us, we ſhall find " too little of the Church, and too much of the " State; I mean too little of the Eccleſiaſtical and too " much of the Civil Hiſtory." Dr. Heylin afterwards obſerves, that it were well, if only Aberrations from Hiſtorical Truth were to be met with in our Author; in whom we find ſuch a continual vein of Puritaniſm, ſuch dangerous grounds for inconformity and ſedition to be raiſed upon, as eaſily may pervert the unwary Reader, when the facetiouſneſs of the ſtyle (like a hook baited with a painted fly) may be apt to work on. The Doctor aſſures us, that upon reading this work of Mr. Fuller, he found himſelf poſſeſs'd with much indignation, " and long expected, ſays he, when ſome " Champion would appear in the liſts againſt this " Goliah, who ſo reproachfully had defied the whole " tribes of Iſrael. And I muſt needs confeſs withall, " that I did never enter more unwillingly upon any " undertaking, than I did on this. But being ſollicited thereunto by letters, meſſages, and ſeveral " perſonal addreſſes by men of all orders and dignities " in the Church, and of all degrees in the Univerſities, I was at laſt overcome by that importunity, " which I found would not be reſiſted." To theſe Animadverſions is ſubjoined an Appendix containing the Apology of Dr. John Coſins, Dean of Peterborough: in anſwer to ſome paſſages in the Church-Hiſtory of Britain, in which he finds himſelf concerned. In the Introduction to this Appendix Dr. Heylin tells us, that his Animadverſions were finiſh'd and fitted for the preſs before Michaelmas 1657; but that the reaſons why they had lain ſo long unpubliſhed were theſe two eſpecially: Firſt, a report that the taſk was undertaken by a Cambridge man, who had more knowledge of Mr. Fuller than the Doctor could pretend to, who deſired rather that the burthen of it, the public ſatisfaction to all parties intruſted, ſhould be born by any than by himſelf. Secondly, there was a general opinion, ſays Dr. Heylin, ſpread abroad in all places (to what ends I know not, nor much care) that the Church Hiſtorian was in hand with a Review of the Work before us, in which he was reſolved to make ſome fair amends to truth, to correct the errors of his pen, and to make reparation to the injured Clergy .... But the reports being thought at laſt to have ſomewhat in them of deſign or artifice to ſtave off the buſineſs, I was ſollicited with greater importunity to publiſh the foregoing Animadverſions, than I was at firſt to undertake them. Dr. Coſins's Letter in anſwer to Mr. Fuller's charge, in his Church Hiſtory, B. XI. fol. 173. with regard to the former's uſage of Mr. Smart, a Prebendary of Durham, for a Sermon againſt ſuperſtitious Innovations, is dated at Paris April 6th 1658; and in it he complains of the injury done no leſs to truth than to himſelf in that paſſage of Mr. Fuller's Hiſtory, " which I be- " lieve, ſays Dr. Coſins, he inſerted (as he doth many " things beſides) upon the falſe reports and informati- " ons of other men, that were loth to let an old ma- " licious accuſation die, as it might well enough have " done, if he had not kept it up ſtill alive, and re- " corded it to poſterity; whereof he is ſo ſenſible al- " ready himſelf, that by his own Letter directed to " me more than a year ſince he offered to make me " amends in the next Book he writes; but he hath " not done it yet. Having never been acquainted " with him more than by his Books, which have " many petulant, light, and indiſcreet paſſages in them, " I know not how to truſt him; and therefore if the " Authors of the intended Animadverſions, which you " mention, will be pleaſed to do me right, you may " aſſure them there is nothing but truth in this enſu- " ing relation." Mr. Fuller wrote in anſwer to Dr. Heylin's Animadverſions, a piece, intitled, The Appeal of injured Innocence to the learned and impartial Reader. London 1659 in fol. This Appeal is replied to by Dr. Heylin in his Appendix to his Certamen Epiſtolare; which Appendix contains the Exchange of Letters between Mr. Thomas Fuller of Waltham and Dr. Peter Heylin of Abingdon: with an Examination of ſome paſſages in Mr. Fuller's late Appeal for injured Innocence. (8) Pag. 312. London 1659, in 8vo. In this Appendix Dr. Heylin obſerves (8), that Mr. Fuller's Appeal is " a well ſtu- " died Anſwer, compoſed with ingenuity and judg- " ment, not ſtanding wilfully in an error, of which " he finds himſelf convinced, though traverſing many " points in debate between us, which with more ho- " nour to the truth might have been declined." With the Appeal Mr. Fuller ſent a Letter to Dr. Heylin, tending eſpecially, ſays the Doctor, to the begetting of ſuch a friendly correſpondence betwixt us, as may conduce to the eſtabliſhment of a following peace. In this Letter he aſſures the Doctor that he was " cordial to " the cauſe of the Engliſh Church, and that his hoary " hairs would go down to the grave in ſorrow for her " ſufferings." Upon which Dr. Heylin in his Letter (9) Ibid. pag. to him dated at Lacies-Court in Abingdon May 16th 392. 1659 writes thus (9): " I am confident, there are very " few true ſons of the Church of England, who could " make any other judgment of you out of your Hi- " ſtory, than was made by me; and therefore you muſt " thank to his Majeſty (r), and was made Doctor of Divinity by the King's letter to the Univerſity of Cambridge dated Auguſt 2, 1660 (s). Upon his return from Saliſbury in Auguſt 1661, he brought with him a feveriſh diſorder, which proved fatal to him on Thurſday the 16th of that month. He was interred at the coſts of the Lord Berkley at his pariſh of Cranford in Middleſex in the Chancel of the Church, his body being attended thither by at leaſt two hundred of his brethren of the Miniſtry; and his funeral ſermon was preached by Dr. Hardy Dean of Rocheſter. Beſides his writings already mentioned, he publiſhed ſeveral others [L]. We ſhall give his character in the note [M]. He had ſo

(r) Life of Dr. Fuller, pag. 52, 53.

(s) Kennet's Regiſter and Chronicle Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, &c. pag. 220. edit. London 1728, fol.

" thank yourſelf, if any greater noiſe hath been made " about it, than you could willingly have heard... " What mean thoſe dangerous poſitions, and thoſe " many inconvenient expreſſions (that I may give them " no worſe name) which occur ſo frequently in your " Book, and which no man, who is cordial to the cauſe " of the Engliſh Church, can either read with patience, " or paſs over with pardon." The Doctor obſerves (10), that the reaſons why he has made ſo ſhort a Replication to ſo long an Anſwer, were, becauſe three parts in five of the Appeal are the very words of his Animadverſions; and in the two remaining parts there are many things, in which Mr. Fuller confeſſeth himſelf to have been formerly miſtaken, of which he promiſes a reformation in the next Edition of his Hiſtory. Some other paſſages there are, ſays the Doctor, in the Animadverſions, to which the traverſes of the Appellant are ſo ſlight and perfunctory, that they are tantamount to a plain acknowledgment, and theſe are to paſs in the Account of Confeſſions alſo. But his Avoidings, as they make up the greateſt part of his own Diſcourſes, ſo I conceive they will appear no otherwiſe to a learned and judicious Reader than as Subterfuges and Avoidings only, not to be qualified by the name of ſatisfactory and ſufficient Anſwers; and therefore no eſpecial Replication to be needful to them. Archdeacon Nicholſon obſerves (11), that " Mr. Fuller's Worthies were ſent abroad to apologize " for the miſtakes in his Church-Hiſtory; and we have " here an ample inſtance of the truth of that Remark. " Upon the King's Reſtoration, Dr. Coſin was deſerv- " edly advanced to the See of Durham; and it was " then high time to harp upon another ſtring, and to " turn his eloquence another way. The late waver- " ing Doctor (12) is now the very (a) Atlas of the " Proteſtant Religion, confirming the ſame with his piety " and learning, &c. But to what purpoſe ſhould we " inſiſt upon particulars? Through the whole he is ſo " full of his own wit, that he does not ſeem to have " minded what he was about. The gravity of an Hi- " ſtorian (much more an Eccleſiaſtical one) requires a " far greater care both of the matter and ſtyle of his " Work, than is here to be met with. If a pretty " ſtory comes in his way that affords ſcope for clinch " and droll, off it goes with all the gaiety of the " ſtage, without ſtaying to enquire whether it have " any foundation in truth or not; and even the moſt " ſerious and moſt authentic parts of it are ſo interlaced " with pun and quibble, that it looks as if the man " had deſigned to ridicule the Annals of our Church " into fable and romance. Yet, if it were poſſible to " refine it well, the work would be of good uſe; " ſince there are in it ſome things of moment, hardly " to be had elſewhere, which may often illuſtrate " dark paſſages in more ſerious Writers. Theſe are " not to be deſpiſed, where his authorities are cited " and appear credible. But otherwiſe, in matters " where he is ſingular, and without his vouchers, μείμ- " νησο ἀπιστεῖν."

(10) Ibid. pag. 388, 389.

(11) Engliſh Hiſtorical Library, Part 2. pag. 92, 93. edit. 1697 in 8vo.

(12) Cofins.

(a) Fuller's Worthies, pag. 295. in Durham.

[L] He publiſhed ſeveral others.] Beſides ſeveral Sermons, printed ſeparately, or in volumes, he publiſhed, Andronicus, or the Unfortunate Politician, London 1649 in 8vo. A Piſgah-Sight of Paleſtine. London 1650 in fol. Abel Redivivus: or Lives and Deaths of the modern Divines. London 1651 in 4to. A triple Reconciler ſtating three Controverſies, I. Whether Miniſters have an excluſive power of barring Communicants from the Sacrament. II. Whether any perſon unordained may lawfully preach. III. Whether the Lord's Prayer ought not to be uſed by all Chriſtians. London 1654 in 12mo. Speeches of the Beaſt and Flowers, in 8vo. Mixt Contemplations in better times. By Thomas Fuller, B. D. London 1660 in 12mo. The Dedication to the Lady Monk is dated at Sion College, May 2d 1660. He began alſo a Tract in Latin concerning the Church, but did not compleat it; and wrote a Life of Dr. John Colet, Dean of St. Paul's, prefixed to an Edition of that Divine's Daily Devotions: or the Chriſtian's Morning and Evening Sacrifice.

[M] We ſhall give his character in the Note.] He was of ſtature ſomewhat tall, with a proportionable bigneſs to become it, but no way inclining to corpulency; of an exact ſtraitneſs of the whole body, and a perfect ſymmetry in every part thereof. His complexion was florid; his hair of a light colour and curling. He was careleſs in his dreſs, temperate in his diet, and indulged himſelf in but little ſleep. He was a kind huſband, and a tender father, a good friend and neighbour, reſpectful to his Superiors without ceremony or officiouſneſs, to his equals without neglect or unſociableneſs, and courteous to his inferiors without pride or diſdain. He had a memory of that vaſt comprehenſiveneſs, that he is deſervedly known for the firſt Inventor of that noble art, whereof having left behind him no rules or directions, except only what fell from him in diſcourſe, no farther account can be given but a relation of ſome very rare experiments of it made by him. He undertook once in paſſing to and fro from Temple-Bar to the fartheſt conduit in Cheapſide, at his return to tell every ſign as it ſtood in order on both ſides of the way, repeating them either backward or forwards, as he ſhould be deſired; which he exactly did, not miſſing or miſplacing one, to the admiration of thoſe, who heard him. The like he would alſo do in words of different languages, and difficult to be pronounced, to any number whatſoever. But that which was moſt ſtrange and very rare in him, was his manner of writing, which ſomething like that of the Chineſe, was from the top of the page to the bottom. The manner was thus: He would write near the margin the firſt words of every line down to the foot of the paper; then by beginning at the head again fill up every one of theſe lines, which without any interlineations or ſpaces, but with the full and equal length, would ſo adjuſt the ſenſe and matter, and ſo aptly connect the ends and beginnings of the ſaid lines, that he could not do it better, as he ſometimes ſaid, if he had written all out in a continued ſeries (13). The treaſury of his happy memory was a great advantage to him in his preaching; but being aſſiſted with as rich an invention, and extraordinary reading, abſolutely compleated him for the pulpit; ſo that upon ſome emergent occaſions, upon two hours warning, and upon a ſubject of his friends choice, which was knotty and very difficult, he hath performed his taſk with great accuracy (14). He uſed a conſtant form of prayer in his family, as well as in his public Miniſtry (15). He was very zealous againſt Popery; and oppoſed the ſchemes of Preſbytery and Independency with vigour, tho' his zeal againſt the Profeſſors was allayed with a greater compaſſion than to the Papiſts (16). He uſed to call " the controverſies concerning Epiſcopacy, " and the new invented arguments againſt the Church " of England, with the anſwers and refutations there- " of, Ἡμερόβια, things of a day's life and no perma- " nency. The Church being built upon a rock, as no " ſtorms could ſhake or move it, ſo needed it not any " defences of art and learning: being of the ſame " mind with Sir Henry Wotton, Diſputandi pruritus, " ſcabies Eccleſiæ. He was wholly converſant, during " the broils and diſſenſions of the Clergy in the " thoughts and conſiderations in that text; Let your " moderation be known to all men; on which place he " once preached a while before his Majeſty's Reſtitu- " tion to a very great auditory.... In this he was the " ſame ſtill, but more ſollicitous in the glimmering " of that happy Revolution, when he plainly ſaw how " indiſpenſably neceſſary the mutual condeſcenſions of " all parties were to the eſtabliſhment and conſolidat- " ing of peace (17)." There were very few Sundays in the year, in which he preached not twice, beſides

(13) Life &c. pag. 66-77.

(14) Ibid. pag. 78, 79.

(15) Ibid. pag. 79.

(16) Ibid. pag. 85.

(17) Ibid. pag. 86, 87, 88.

ſo uncommon a ſtrength of memory, that he was able to repeat five hundred ſtrange words after twice hearing of them, and to make uſe of any man's exerciſe or ſermon verbatim, if he once but either ſaw it or heard it (t).

(t) Memoirs of the Lives &c. of thoſe noble, reverend and excellent Perſonages, that ſuffered by Death, &c. for the Proteſtant Religion, and, the great Principle thereof, Allegiance to their Sovereign in our late inteſtine Wars, by David Lloyd, M. A. pag. 523. edit. London 1668, fol.

the duties performed in his own houſe, or in his attendance upon thoſe noble perſons, to whom he was ſucceſſively Chaplain (18). He was a perfect walking Library, and thoſe, that would find delight in him, muſt turn him. He was to be diverted from his preſent purpoſe with ſome urgency; and when once unfixed and unbent, his mind freed from the incumbency of his ſtudy, no man would be more agreeable to civil and ſerious mirth; which limits his moſt heightened fancy never tranſgreſſed. He had the happineſs of a very honourable and that numerous acquaintance; ſo that he was no way undiſciplined in the arts of civility; yet he continued ſemper idem, which conſtancy made him always acceptable to them (19). However Mr. James Harington (20) ſtiles Dr. Fuller and Mr. David Lloyd, mean and fanciful Authors. And Mr. White Kennet, afterwards Biſhop of Peterborough, having mentioned our Author's friendſhip with Mr. William Somner, obſerves (21), that if Dr. Fuller had been guided by Mr. Somner, "he would never have defiled his writings with "puns and tales."

(18) Ibid. pag. 99, 100.

(19) Ibid. pag. 69.

(20) Preface to the 2d vol. of Wood's Athen. Oxon.

(21) Life of Somner, pag. 114. prefixed to Somner's Treatiſe of the Roman Ports and Forts in Kent, edit. 1693, in 8vo.

T.

FULVIA, a Roman Lady, who diſcovered the conſpiracy of Catiline. See the Remark [D] of the following Article.

FULVIA, wife of Marc Antony, had no more of her ſex than her body (a), for her mind and her courage breathed nothing but war, and public affairs. After the victory gained at Philippi over Brutus and Caſſius by Octavius and Marc Antony, this laſt went over into Aſia to ſettle the affairs of the Eaſt. Octavius returned to Rome, where he ſoon fell out with Fulvia, and could not decide the quarrel but by the ſword. This woman took arms, and engaged Lucius Antonius, her huſband's brother, to do the ſame [A]. Their levying of war was favourable to Octavius alone, who obtained a complete victory over his enemies, after which Fulvia went into Greece, and died there of a diſeaſe occaſioned by her grief [B]. She left two ſons (b). Female paſſions had a part in the war which ſhe raiſed againſt Octavius [C]. She had had two huſbands before ſhe married

(a) Nihil muliebre præter corpus ferens. Paterculus, lib. 2. cap. 74. See the Remark [A].

(b) See the Remark [L] at the end.

[A] This woman took arms, and engaged Lucius Antonius, her huſband's brother, to do the ſame.] Underſtand this in the moſt literal ſenſe; for it is certain ſhe was ſeen with a ſword by her ſide. She was not ſatisfied with retiring to Prænеſte, and making it her place of arms: ſhe was not ſatisfied with drawing thither the Senators and Knights of her party, and to hold council with them there, and frequently to publiſh Edicts according to the exigency of affairs. She armed herſelf in perſon: ſhe gave the word to the ſoldiers; and made ſpeeches to them on ſeveral occaſions. Καὶ τί ταῦτα θαυμάσειεν ἂν τις ὁπότε καὶ ξίφει παρεζώννυτο, καὶ συνθήματα τοῖς στρατιώταις ἐδίδου, ἐδημηγόρει τε ἐν αὐτοῖς πολλάκις. Id quidem mirandum adeo non eſt quum gladio etiam ſe accinxerit ipſa, teſſeram militibus dederit, ſæpenumero concionem apud eos habuerit (1). The Hiſtorian who informs me of theſe things, ſays that in the year 713 Publius Servilius and Lucius Antonius were Conſuls in name, and that the latter and Fulvia were Conſuls in effect. We are afterwards told that Lucius Antonius had no authority but by Fulvia's means, and that it was ſhe who procured him the honour of a triumph; for he could not obtain it till after he had engaged her, by his ſubmiſſions, to give him her intereſt. For which reaſon ſhe was more vain of that triumph, than the perſon himſelf who triumphed (2). It may be proper to hear what Plutarch ſays of Fulvia (3). Φουλβίαν ἀγάμενος τὴν Κλωδίῳ τῷ δημαγωγῷ συνοικήσασαν, οὐ πάλαισαν, οὐδὲ αἰχμὰν φρονοῦν γύναιον, οὐδὲ ἀνδρὸς ἰδιώτου κρατεῖν ἀξιοῦν, ἀλλὰ ἄρχοντος ἄρχειν, καὶ στρατηγοῦντος στρατηγεῖν βουλόμενον· ὡς τε Κλεοπάτραν διδασκάλια Φουλβίᾳ τῆς Ἀντωνίου γυναικοκρατίας ὀφείλειν, πάνυ χειροήθη καὶ πεπαιδαγωγημένον ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ἀκροᾶσθαι γυναικῶν, παραλαβοῦσαν αὐτόν. Fulviam Clodii, plebis concitatoris, viduam (4) uxorem duxit, mulierem non ad lanificium aut ad rei familiaris adminiſtrationem factam, neque in virum contentam dominari privatum, ſed quæ imperanti imperare & ducem vòlebat ducere: ut mercedem Fulviæ, quod ancillari Antonium docuiſſet fœminis, debuerit Cleopatra, quæ plane cicurem atque à tyrocinio inſtitutum ad obtemperandum mulieribus recepit. i. e. "He marries Fulvia the widow of Clodius (4), the "great ringleader of the people, a woman not born "for ſpinning or houſewifry, nor one that could be "content with the power of ruling a private huſband, "but a Lady capable of adviſing a Magiſtrate and of "ruling the General of an army; ſo that Cleopatra "had great obligations to her for having taught Anthony to be ſo good a ſervant, he coming to her "hands tame and broken in all obedience to the commands of a miſtreſs." Here is a woman who, ſetting chaſtity aſide, was not much unlike Virgil's Camilla (5): the diſtaff did not ſuit her; domeſtic cares were not her occupation: to govern her huſband at home was not an advantage that would content her; ſhe wanted to govern him abroad alſo; that is, with regard to the great offices which he bore in the State. Cleopatra had no great trouble to reduce him under the obedience of a woman; he had learned that ſubmiſſion at a good ſchool.

(1) Dio, lib. 48. pag. m. 414.

(2) Idem, ibid. pag. 409, 410.

(3) Plutarch. in Antonio, pag. 920, D.

(4) Fulvia had loſt another huſband ſince Clodius; wherefore Plutarch is not ſo exact as he ought to be.

(5) Non illa colo calathiſve Minervæ Fœmineas aſſueta manus, ſed prælia virgo Dura pati. i. e. "Unbred to "ſpinning, in "the loom un-"ſkill'd, "She choſe the "nobler Pallas "of the field." Æneid. lib. 7. ver. 805.

[B] She died in Greece, of a diſtemper occaſioned by grief.] Marc Antony, having heard of the diſorders in Italy, was on the road to go and remedy them. Being arrived at Athens, he there found his wife, who had been forced to fly out of Italy. He extremely blamed the authors of that war; that is, Lucius Antonius, Fulvia, and Manius (6). When he continued his journey, he left Fulvia ſick at Sicyon (7). She died there ſome time after, and the news of it was brought to her huſband during the ſiege of Brunduſium, in the year 714. It is very probable that he received it with joy: for he had put himſelf into a violent paſſion againſt Fulvia; and tho' he knew, when he departed from Sicyon, that ſhe was fallen ill becauſe he had chid her, he made her no viſit, which haſtened the death of that proud woman (8).

(6) Appian. lib. 5. Bell. Civil. pag. m. 409.

(7) Ibid. pag. 411.

(8) Ibid. pag. 414. See alſo Dion, lib. 47. pag. 407.

[C] Female paſſions had a part in the war which ſhe raiſed againſt Octavius.] The daughter ſhe had by Clodius was married to Octavius, and repudiated ſome time after. Octavius ſwore that he had not conſummated the marriage; but this oath was the moſt likely thing in the world to affront Fulvia. Motherly affection ſuffers very much by the thought that a daughter bears the name of a wife, without any of the reality. Wherefore Fulvia could not think on the divorce of her dear child without grief: ſhe ſaw her deprived of the realities of marriage; and this deprivation was a mark of extreme contempt; for Octavius was of a very amorous complexion. She very well knew that few people would give credit to Octavius's oath, and ſo her daughter, who had been deſpiſed by her huſband ſo far as to preſerve her virginity with him a conſiderable time, would nevertheleſs paſs for one who could grant nothing but the leavings of a firſt huſband. Fulvia might conſider, beſides, that Octavius had not entred into an alliance with her, but with a diſtruſtful mind, which had prevented him from enjoying his ſpouſe, to the end that, according to the courſe affairs might take, he might be at liberty to diſmiſs her, and to declare on oath that he had not touched her. Dion (9) obſerves that Octavius, when he made this oath, put himſelf in very little pain whe-

(6) Dio, lib. 47. pag. 410.

married Marc Antony; the firſt was Clodius, that great and mortal enemy of Cicero; the ſecond was Curio, who was killed in Africa on Cæſar's ſide, before the battle of Pharſalia. It is not true that ſhe had been married to Catiline [D]. She had the ſatisfaction to wreak her vengeance on the tongue of Cicero [E], who had uſed her huſband ſo ther it would be believed that he had kept the young Lady with him ſo long without enjoying her, or that he had abſtained from her; becauſe he had deſigned beforehand to prepare his way to a divorce. Theſe precautions, too captious and full of artifice, are not pleaſing to a mother; and conſequently a female paſſion might have a part in the deſign which Fulvia formed of making war on Octavius. And here is another paſſion of the ſame kind. Fulvia knew her huſband was captivated by the beautiful Cleopatra; jealouſy induced her to free Marc Antony from this new engagement; ſhe eaſily believed thoſe who told her that her unfaithful huſband would never return to her, while Italy was quiet (10); but that a war in Italy would oblige him to come back. So Fulvia carried matters to extremity againſt Octavius (11). But if Auguſtus's Epigram, which is to be ſeen among thoſe of Martial, was an hiſtorical Narration (12), we might then boldly aſſert that Fulvia engaged in the war thro' female paſſions.

(10) Manius, Marc Antony's agent, Appian. lib. 5. Bell. Civil. pag. m. 395, told Fulvia this. Idem pag. 397.

(11) Appianus, ibid.

(12) See the Remark [C] of the Article of the firſt GLAPHYRA.

[D] It is not true that ſhe had been married to Catiline.] The reaſon which Glandorpius makes uſe of to refute this (13) ſeems to me a very good one. He takes it from Cicero's ſecond Philippic. Cujus (P. Clodii) quidem te fatum ſicuti C. Curionem manet, quoniam id domi tuæ eſt, quod fuit illorum utrique fatale. Cicero means that Marc Antony, having at home the ſame wife who had been fatal to Clodius and Curio, would not fail coming to an unhappy end, like them. He repeats the ſame thought at the end of his Oration. Eripiet & extorquebit tibi iſta populus Romanus: utinam ſalvis nobis: ſed quoquo modo nobiſcum egeris, dum iſtis conſiliis uteris non potes (mihi crede) eſſe diuturnus. Etenim iſta tua minime avara conjux, quam ego ſine contumelia deſcribo, nimium debet diu populo Romano tertiam penſionem (14). i. e. "The Roman people will force "and extort theſe things from you: I wiſh it may be "with our ſafety: but in whatever manner you treat "us, while you make uſe of thoſe counſels, believe "me, you cannot continue long. For that wife of "yours, who is not at all covetous, and whom I de"ſcribe without ill language, has for too long a time "owed a third payment to the Roman people." Every body muſt plainly ſee that if Fulvia had been married to Catiline, the tragical death of that huſband would have been added to thoſe of the other two, in Cicero's Oration. Both general and particular reaſons would have engaged the Orator not to forget Catiline on this occaſion. The error which Glandorpius refutes had its riſe, perhaps, from not ſufficiently attending to the circumſtances of a ſtory in Salluſt. That Hiſtorian informs us that a great Lady (15) named FULVIA diſcovered the conſpiracy of Catiline. Q. Curius, one of the accomplices, who had long carried on a criminal correſpondence with her, had by his ſtarts of paſſion and rodomontades given her an opportunity of diſcovering the plot. He was reduced to want, and immediately the Lady became extremely cold in her behaviour to him. To warm her again, he preſently bragged of a thouſand things, and promiſed her mountains and wonders; he behaved inſolently, and threatened to kill her if ſhe continued to act the coy one. She penetrated the cauſes of theſe new bravado's, and informed ſeveral perſons of what ſhe had learned concerning the deſigns of Catiline. Erat ei (Q. Curio) cum Fulvia, muliere nobili, ſtupri vetus conſuetudo, cui cum minus gratus eſſet, quod inopia minus largiri poterat, repente glorians, maria, monteſque polliceri cæpit, minari interdum ferro, ni ſibi obnoxia foret; poſtremo, ferocius agitare, quam ſolitus erat. At Fulvia, inſolentiæ Curii cauſſa cognita, tale periculum reipublicæ haud occultum habuit; ſed, ſublato auctore, de Catilinæ conjuratione, quæ quo modo audierat, compluribus narravit (16). In all probability ſeveral Readers have had the luck in this paſſage to miſtake one perſon for another, and to think it was Catiline who kept Fulvia (17). After this miſtake, nothing was more eaſy than to ſay that Catiline was betrayed by Fulvia, his miſtreſs, or concubine; and then it was no hard matter to go on, and ſay that his wife Fulvia diſcovered the conſpiracy. They who are acquainted with the malice of Marc Antony's wife, might eaſily imagine her capable of whatever was attributed to the other Fulvia; and ſo they might make one and the ſame perſon of theſe two Fulvia's. I muſt add here, in order to make the miſtreſs of Curius better known, that ſhe had ſo much diſcretion, and fidelity for her gallant, as not to ſay that he was an accomplice, or that ſhe had learned from him what was plotting againſt the State. She did not break with him; on the contrary, it ſeems ſhe entred into a ſtricter intimacy with him. She was made uſe of to gain her gallant by a thouſand fair promiſes (18); and he made uſe of her to diſcover the deſigns of the conſpirators to Cicero. Curius ubi intelligit quantum periculum Conſuli impendeat, propere per Fulviam Ciceroni dolum qui parabatur enunciat (19). i. e. "When Cu"rius knew what danger hung over the Conſul, he "immediately acquainted Cicero, by Fulvia, of the "plot which was contriving." So true it is that every thing has its uſe in a State, and that Curtezans, and Ladies of gallantry, in particular, ſometimes do great ſervices to the public, by the dexterity they have of getting the moſt important ſecrets communicated to them. It is true by this means they ſometimes ruin the affairs of their country, by revealing the ſecrets of the cabinet to a liberal enemy; but ſuch is the condition of human affairs, that what may do hurt, may alſo do ſervice. I cannot well ſay whether the Fulvia of whom Valerius Maximus makes mention, is the ſame with her whom Salluſt ſpeaks of. Glandorpius is not far from that opinion: but others chuſe rather to attribute this adventure to our Fulvia, ſo capable do they judge her to be of all manner of irregularity. However it be, the ſtory is thus. One Gemellus, an Officer of the Tribunes of the people, made an entertainment for his Maſters, and the Conſul Metellus Scipio, and regaled them with an infamous diverſion: he brought two Roman Ladies to them who had each a father and a huſband; one of whom was named Mucia and the other Fulvia. Æque flagitioſum illud convivium quod Gemellus tribunicius viator ingenui ſanguinis, ſed officii intra ſervilem habitum deformis, Metello Scipioni conſuli ac tribunis plebis magno cum rubore civitatis comparavit. Lupanari enim domi ſuæ inſtituto, Muciam & Fulviam, tum à patre tum à viro utramque abductam, & nobilem puerum Saturninum in eo proſtituit (20). The Conſulſhip of Metellus Scipio falls on the year of Rome 701, eleven years after the conſpiracy of Catiline. What probability is there that the Fulvia of Salluſt had then both a father and a huſband? Our Fulvia was then purſuing the avengement of Clodius: and the cauſe of Milo, the murtherer of Clodius, was determined in the year 701. What likelihood is there that his widow ſhould be married again under the ſame Conſul? Beſides, we know that in the year 696 her father was dead, and her mother married again to Murena (21).

(13) Gland. Onomaſt. pag. 84.

(14) Cicero, Philipp. II, ſub fin.

(15) Mulier nobilis, γυνὴ τῶν ἐπιφανῶν, according to Plutarch in Cicer. pag. 868, C. from whence it appears that Florus, who in the 1ſt Chapter of the 4th Book calls her viliſſimum ſcortum, i. e. "a "moſt baſe pro"ſtitute," did not well know who ſhe was.

(16) Salluſtius, in Bello Catil. pag. m. 63.

(17) The perſon who made the Table to the Salluſt Variorum, has committed this miſtake. Fulvia, ſays he, nobilis mulier cum qua Catilinæ vetus ſtupri conſuetudo fuerat, conjurationem ejus, clam noctu profecta, Ciceroni detexit.

(18) Neque Ciceroni ad cavendum dolus aut aſtutiæ deerant, namque principio conſulatus ſui multa per Fulviam pollicendo effecerat, ut Q. Curius, de quo paulo ante memoravi, conſilia Catilinæ ſibi prodederet. Salluſt. in Bello Catilin. pag. 70.

(19) Idem, ibid. pag. 75.

(20) Valer. Maximus, lib. 9. cap. 1. num. 10.

(21) See Cicero, Orat. pro domo ſua.

[E] She had the ſatisfaction to wreak her vengeance on the tongue of Cicero.] She admirably ſeconded her cruel huſband during the maſſacres of the Triumvirate: ſhe put ſeveral perſons to death of her own head, either out of avarice, or a ſpirit of revenge; and even people whom her huſband did not know. Marc Antony cauſed the heads of thoſe whom he had proſcribed to be brought to table, and fed his eyes a long while with that unhappy ſpectacle. The head of Cicero was one of thoſe which were brought to him; he ordered it to be fixed on the Roſtrum from whence Cicero had made ſo many ſpeeches againſt him. But before that order was executed, Fulvia took the head, and ſpat on it, and placing it on her lap, drew out the tongue, which ſhe pierced ſeveral times with her bodkins, uttering at the ſame time the moſt opprobrious language of all ſorts againſt Cicero. Ἡ δὲ δὴ Φυλσία ἔς τε τας χεῖρας αὐτὴν πρὶν ἀποκομισθῆναι ἐδέξατο, καὶ ἐμπικραναμένη οἱ καὶ ἐμπλύσασα ἐπί τε τὰ γόνατα ἐπέθηκε, καὶ τὸ στόμα αὐτῆς διοίξασα τήν τε γλῶσσαν ἐξείλκυσε, καὶ ταῖς βελόναις αἷς ἐς τὴν κεφαλὴν ἐχρῆτο κατεκέντησε πολλὰ ἅμα ſo ill in the Philippics. Thoſe who ſay ſhe was Marc Antony's firſt wife are miſtaken [F]. If they had had the patience to examine things exactly, they would have known ἅμα καὶ μιᾷ προσεπισκώπτουσα. Fulvia autem id caput acceptum priuſquam auferretur, inſultanſque amarulentis verbis & conſpuens, genibus ſuis impoſuit, orique ejus aperto linguam extractam acubus (quales ſecum comendi capitis cauſa mulieres ferunt) compunxit, additis crebris ac turpibus opprobriis (22). Behold a wicked woman of a ſtrange ſpecies. There are ſome villains whom we are almoſt forced to admire, becauſe they ſhew a certain greatneſs of ſoul in their crimes; but here is nothing to be obſerved but brutality, baſeneſs, and cowardiſe, and one cannot help conceiving an indignation full of contempt. Yet Moreri acquaints his Readers, that Fulvia is ſaid to have had ſome generoſity.

(22) Dio, lib. 47. pag. 378.

[F] Thoſe who ſay ſhe was Marc Antony's firſt wife are miſtaken.] Moreri and Chevreau have been guilty of this fault: the firſt in the Article ofMarc Antony, and the other in his Hiſtory of the World, page 105 of the ſecond volume. I make uſe of the Dutch Edition. Marc Antony's firſt wife was named Fadia: he married her becauſe ſhe was rich, and made no ſcruple of her giving him a father-in-law who was as deſpicable on account of his perſonal defects, as the baſeneſs of his extraction. Tuæ conjugis bonæ fœminæ, locupletis quidem certe, Bambalio quidam pater, homo nullo numero. Nihil illo contemptius, qui propter hæſitantiam linguæ, ſtuporemque cordis, cognomen ex contumelia traxerit. At avus nobilis, Tuditanus nempe ille qui cum palla & cothurnis nummos populo de roſtris ſpargere ſolebat. Vellem hanc contemptionem pecuniæ ſuis reliquiſſet. i. e. "The "father of the good woman your wife, who was rich "at leaſt, was one Bambalio, a fellow of no account. "Nothing was more contemptible than he, who had "an opprobious ſurname given him, by reaſon of "his ſtuttering and ſtupidity. But ſhe had a noble "grandfather, namely that ſame Tuditanus who in "his fidler's mantle and his buſkins uſed to ſcatter "money from the Roſtra among the people. And "I wiſh this contempt of money had deſcended to "his poſterity." This is what Cicero advances in his third Philippic, page 782 of my Edition. A little after he tells us this wife of Marc Antony was the daughter of a freed-man (23): Ipſe ex libertini filia ſuſceperit liberos. He had ſaid the ſame thing towards the beginning of the ſecond Philippic. Hoc idcirco commemoratum à te puto, ut te infimo ordini commendares: cum te omnes recordarentur libertini generum, & liberos tuos, nepotes Q. Fadii (24) libertini hominis fuiſſe. i. e. "This, I ſuppoſe, you mentioned that you might "recommend your ſelf to the moſt inferior people; "when every body called to mind that you was the "ſon-in-law of a freed-man, and your children the "grandchildren of Q. Fadius (24), a perſon who "had been made free." Glandorpius (25) is in the right to ſuſpect that the children of Marc Antony and Fadia did not live long, ſince neither Cicero nor any other Writer mentions their names. We only know that the hoſtage ſent by Marc Antony to the aſſaſſins of Cæſar, was the ſon of Marc Antony and Fadia. This Cicero ſuffers us not to doubt of. Pacem haberemus quæ erat facta per obſidem puerum nobilem Marci Antonii filium, M. Bambalionis nepotem (26). i. e. "We ſhould "have the peace which was made on giving in hoſtage "a noble youth, the ſon of Marc Antony, and grand-"ſon of M. Bambalio." Glandorpius was greatly miſtaken when he ſuppoſed that Bambalio was the father of Fulvia, and that the paſſage of the third Philippic does not wholly relate to Fadia. This falſe imagination has occaſioned him raſhly to cenſure Maturantius, for not having divided Cicero's words between two wives of Marc Antony. Ex iis quæ retulimus quivis facile perſpexerit quam probe Franciſcus Maturantius, vir alioquin doctiſſimus, Fadiæ Bambalionem patrem tribuat, eamque fuiſſe Tuſculanam aſſerat. Deinde quæ Ciceroni Philipp. 3. de Fulvia ſeorſim & Fadia dicuntur, ipſe cuncta miſcens ad unam Fadiam omnia referat (27). i. e. "From what we have "ſaid any one may eaſily perceive how juſtly Francis "Maturantius, a man otherwiſe of very great learn-"ing, makes Fadia the daughter of Bambalio, and "aſſerts her to have been of Tuſculum; and then "confounds every thing, by referring to Fadia alone "whatever Cicero has ſaid in the third Philippic of "Fulvia and Fadia ſeparately." Maturantius is here perfectly in the right, and I cannot ſufficiently wonder how Paul Manutius could fancy that theſe words of the third Philippic, at avus nobilis, &c. belong to Fulvia. If it were ſo, it might be juſtly ſaid that Cicero has diſpoſed both his words and his thoughts very ill. But, with ever ſo little attention, it is plainly ſeen that Cicero reproaches Marc Antony only with his marrying Fadia. He obſerves, 1, that the father of that woman was a worthleſs fellow: 2, he propoſes an objection to himſelf; that her grandfather was noble: 3, he relates the extravagancies and public follies of the grandfather. Nothing could have been more ridiculous than to ſuppoſe, with reſpect to the marriage with Fulvia, that if Marc Antony had not married beneath himſelf, the reaſon of it was becauſe Fulvia's grandfather by the mother's ſide was noble: now it is viſible that if the objection which Cicero makes to himſelf relates to the marriage with Fulvia, the proof that M. Antony would not have matched himſelf would be founded on the nobleneſs of his wife's maternal grandfather (28); it is by no means credible, therefore, that the objection concerns this marriage. I have ſaid it would be ridiculous to have recourſe to the nobility of the maternal grandfather of Fulvia, to juſtify Marc Antony from having miſmatched himſelf, and I prove it eaſily. Fulvia was of one of the moſt ancient and moſt illuſtrious families of Rome. The Fulvii drew their deſcent from a diſciple of Hercules in matters of Religion: ſuch was the nobility of Fulvia. Her father ought not to be expelled the family of the Fulvii, as he has been ſerved by Glandorpius: this woman had a brother who was really of that ancient family: he was Pontif ex Maximus, and was obliged for it to Clodius his ſiſter's huſband (29): his wife had been married again to Murena (30). Theſe facts we have from Cicero. Te ad tuum affinem non delectum à te, ſed relictum à cæteris contuliſti, quem ego tamen credo, ſi eſt ortus ab illis, quos memoriæ proditum eſt, ab ipſo Hercule perfuncto jam laboribus ſacra didiciſſe, in viri fortis ærumnis, non ita crudelem fuiſſe, ut &c. (31). i. e. "You repaired to your kinſman, who "was not choſen by you, but abandoned by the others, "who nevertheleſs, I believe, if he is deſcended "from thoſe who, as tradition goes, learned ſa-"cred rites from Hercules, after he had gone thro' "his labours, would not have been ſo cruel, during the "troubles of a worthy man, as to &c." Muſt he not have been drunk, if he had pretended that Marc Antony could not alledge the paternal nobility of Fulvia, againſt thoſe who ſhould accuſe him of having married beneath himſelf?

(28) Manutius and Glandorpius ſuppoſe that Sempronia, the daughter of Tuditanus, was the mother of Fulvia.

(29) Cicero, pro domo ſua, folio 180, A.

(30) Ibid. folio 181, A.

(31) Idem, ibid. He ſpeaks to Clodius: he had related, folio 180, A. how Clodius had employed his wife's brother, whom he had made Pontif. He ſays in the Oration pro Murena, folio 148, A. that the ſon of Murena's wife is ſummo loco adoleſcens, a young man of a very great family.

There remains a conſiderable difficulty. Aſconius Pedianus relates that the laſt witneſſes, who were examined againſt Milo the murtherer of Clodius, were Sempronia Tuditana, and Fulvia; the latter the widow of Clodius, and the former the mother of Fulvia. Ultimæ teſtimonium dixerunt Sempronia Tuditani filia, ſocrus P. Clodii, & uxor Fulvia, & fletu ſuo magnopere eos qui adſtabant, commoverunt (32). I anſwer that this difficulty, as great as it is, cannot ſupport the opinion of Manutius, ſo much as my objections batter it in breach. What hinders but that Fadia and Fulvia might both be deſcended from a Sempronius Tuditanus? There might be ſeveral brothers of them, and ſeveral couſin germans, who all bore the name of Sempronius Tuditanus, and they were only diſtinguiſhed by their prænomens. Fadia's mother might be the daughter of one of them; and Fulvia's mother might be the deſcendant of another. At the worſt, I ſhould rather ſay that Cicero confounded the maternal grandfather of Fulvia with the maternal grandfather of Fadia, than that he looked on the marriage of Marc Antony with Fulvia as a diſhonourable match. I muſt not forget to ſay that Glandorpius condemns what he does himſelf. He thinks it wrong that the whole paſſage of the third Philippic ſhould be underſtood of one ſingle wife of Marc Antony, and yet he applies it intirely to Fulvia; for he pretends that ſhe was the daughter of Bambalio, and grandaughter of Tuditanus, and by that means leaves nothing in Cicero's words which can relate to Fadia. Beſides, it (32) Aſcon. Pedian. Argum. Orat. pro Milone, pag. m. 192.

(23) Or granddaughter; for the appellation of Libertinus, which properly ſignified only the ſon of a Freedman, was afterwards given indifferently to the Freedman himſelf, by the ill cuſtom of extending titles of honour, and ſhewing civility at the expence of words.

(24) He calls him Caius Fadius, Epiſt. 11. ad Attic. lib. 16. Conſult Corradus on that paſſage, who gueſſes that the Tranſcribers have changed the C into a Q, or vice verſa. But what ſhall we ſay when we ſee that Cicero below, Citation (26), calls him M. Bambalio? There are ſome MSS, which inſtead of Q. Fadii, have M. Fundi.

(25) Gland. Onomaſt. pag. 83.

(26) Cicero, Philipp. II.

(27) Gland. Onomaſt. pag. 83.

known that when he married her he had had as many wives as ſhe had had huſbands [G]; and that he had divorced Antonia, his ſecond wife, on a pretence of adultery, without having any regard to his uncle, who was the father of Antonia. He did not ſhew him much reſpect on other occaſions [H]. As brave, as violent, and as brutal as he is a great abſurdity to imagine that Bambalio, the vileſt fellow in the world (33), was the father of Fulvia. It is charging Cicero with the greateſt faults a Writer can be guilty of. It is to ſuppoſe he retorted the reproach of miſalliance (34), by accuſing Marc Antony with having married a Lady of the firſt quality: for ſuch he himſelf repreſents (35) the Fulvian family, when he examines an action of Clodius's brother-in-law. It is ſaying he could not draw any advantage from the baſeneſs and ſtupidity of a father, to form prejudices againſt the conduct of the ſon, and that among ſo many abuſes with which he loaded Clodius, he has never reproached him with an alliance which furniſhed ſo much matter for ſatire. Let us conclude from the whole, that Glandorpius has wrongly cenſured Maturantius; and here are freſh proofs of it. He has paſſed over three groſs miſtakes of his on theſe words of Cicero, At avus nobilis, Tuditanus nempe ille. Maturantius imagines, in the firſt place, that this grandfather was the grandfather of Bambalio (36): 2, that this grandfather reſembled Tuditanus, but was not Tuditanus himſelf (37): 3, that he was the grandfather of the wife of Marc Antony. The laſt of theſe three miſtakes is but a few lines diſtant from the firſt; ſo true it is that Authors are ſubject to contradict themſelves in the ſame page. It is becauſe every period ſometimes takes up their whole attention; for which reaſon they cannot think on the foregoing words.

(33) Homo nullo numero: nihil illo contemptius.

(34) Cicero, in this paſſage of the III Philippic, refutes what M. Antony had reproached Octavius with, viz. that he was the ſon of a country woman. Aricinam Matrem.

(35) In Orat. pro domo ſua.

(36) Occurrit dicens Bambalionis hujus avum nobilem fuiſſe. Reſpondet, ſtultumque fuiſſe dicit, Tuditano illi ſimilem de quo Valerius Maximus. Maturant. in III Philipp. folio m. 101.

(37) Vellem ita contemneretis & vos pecuniam, ſicut ille contempſit uxoris tuæ avus. Ib.

Reflection on a falſhood in Dion.

I am much more concerned at a miſtake I have found in Dion. That Hiſtorian has inſerted in his Work a direct Oration of Cicero againſt Marc Antony. It cannot be denied that he himſelf is the Author of it, ſince we have Cicero's Philippics yet extant, and we may convince our ſelves by comparing them with the words of Dion, that the Oration of this latter is by no means a Tranſlation of any of the Philippics. It is Dion, therefore, who has forged the Oration. I will ſuppoſe this to be allowable in him; but at leaſt he ought to have ſaid nothing but what was taken from the Latin of Cicero. Now here are two things which he has manifeſtly falſified: I have not examined the reſt. He ſuppoſes that Cicero reproaches Marc Antony with not having recalled his uncle, either during the life of Cæſar, or after his death; and with loving Bambalio, a man ſufficiently diſgraced by his name. Τίς γὰρ οὐκ οἶδε ταῦθ' ὅτι πολλὰς φεύγοντας καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ Καίσαρος, καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα, ἐκ τῶν γεγραμμάτων δὴ τῶν ἐκείνου ἀναγνὼν, οὐκ ἐπεκέρασε τῷ Θείῳ . . . καὶ τὸν Βαμβαλίωνα τὸν καὶ ἀπ' αὐτῆς τῆς ἐπωνυμίας ἐπιδόητον ἀγαπᾷ. Id vero neminem latet, quod quum multos in exilium miſſos non Cæſare modo ſuperſtite, ſed defuncto etiam, ex libellis ſcilicet ejus in urbem reduxerit, patruo ſuo non ſubvenerit . . . Bambalionem etiam ipſius cognomenti ratione infamem diligit (38). Cicero did not make his adverſary ſuch reproaches. Does he not expreſly take notice that Caius Antonius was in the Senate, when his nephew ſpoke againſt Dolabella? Cæſar was then alive. Marc Antony was not reproached with being a friend of Bambalio, who in all likelihood was dead. Cicero contented himſelf with telling him that he who married the daughter of an inhabitant of Tuſculum, the daughter of Bambalio, who had that name given him out of ignominy, was much in the wrong to alledge that Octavius's mother was a woman born at Aricia. Ought not theſe falſifications to give us a diſtruſt with relation to a thouſand things which Dion has ſaid, the Originals of which are now loſt?

(38) Dio, lib. 45, ſub fin.

[G] Marc Antony had had as many wives as ſhe had had huſbands.] We ſhall ſee preſently that thoſe who have ſaid that Fulvia was Marc Antony's ſecond wife (39), have only been miſtaken a little leſs than Chevreau. Marc Antony's ſecond wife was named Antonia: ſhe was his couſin german, and daughter of Caius Antonius, Cicero's Collegue in the Conſulſhip. He did not keep her long: for under pretence that ſhe carried on a criminal correſpondence with Dolabella, he divorced her. He was not aſhamed to publiſh himſelf the injury his wife had done him before the Senate, and in the preſence of his father in law; and he made that injury one of the reaſons for which he had broke with Dolabella. We muſt ſee how Cicero handles him on this occaſion; Cicero, I I ſay, who pretends Antonia was not guilty. Omnibus eum (Caium Antonium) contumeliis oneraſti, quem patris loco, ſi ulla in te pietas eſſet, colere debebas: filiam ejus, ſororem tuam, ejeciſti, alia conditione quæſita, & ante perſpecta. Non eſt ſatis, probri inſimulaſti pudiciſſimam fœminam: quid eſt, quod addi poſſit? Contentus eo non fuiſti: frequentiſſimo ſenatu Kalendis Jan. ſedente patruo, hanc tibi eſſe cum Dolabella cauſſam odii dicere auſus es, quod ab eo ſorori, & uxori tuæ ſtuprum eſſe oblatum comperiſſes. Quis interpretari poteſt, impudentiorne, qui in ſenatu; an improbior, qui in Dolabellam; an impurior, qui patre audiente; an crudelior, qui in illam miſeram tam ſpurce, tam impie dixeris (40)? i. e. "You "have loaded your uncle with all manner of affronts, "whom, if you had any natural affection, you ought "to reſpect as a father: you have turned away his "daughter, your ſiſter, in order to another match "which you had before in view. Nor is this enough; "you have accuſed a moſt modeſt woman of an infamous "crime. What greater inſult could be added? Yet this "would not ſatisfy you: you had the aſſurance to ſay "on the Calends of January, in a full Senate, and in "the preſence of your uncle, that the reaſon why "you had fallen out with Dolabella was, becauſe you "had diſcovered he had debauched your ſiſter and "wife. Who can determine which was greater, your "impudence in declaring this in the Senate; your "injuſtice, in charging Dolabella with it; your "baſeneſs, in doing it in the preſence of her father; "or your cruelty, in expoſing an unfortunate Lady?" Plutarch will help us to diſcover at what time Marc Anthony was divorced from Antonia. He ſays (41) that Dolabella, being Tribune of the people, had a mind to get ſome Laws paſſed, and deſired his friend Marc Antony to ſecond him. Marc Antony refuſed to do it: he thought his wife Antonia had ſuffered herſelf to be debauched by Dolabella; wherefore he divorced her, and joining that Tribune's adverſaries, overthrew his deſigns. Cæſar, on his return to Rome, pardoned Dolabella; and having been made Conſul the third time, he took Lepidus for his collegue, and not Marc Antony (42). This ſhews us that the troubles of Dolabella preceded the year of Rome 707 (43): we may place them, therefore, a year after the battle of Pharſalia, and the ſame will alſo be the year of Antonia's divorce. Now as Marc Antony had another match in view before he diſmiſſed Antonia (44), it is very probable that one of the reaſons which occaſioned that divorce was the deſire he had to marry Fulvia. If we believe Plutarch this wedding was celebrated while Cæſar made war in Africa, in the year 707: and thus Fulvia became the third wife of Marc Antony. It is without any foundation that Glandorpius (45) aſſerts that Marc Antony having repudiated her married Antonia, and that ſoon taking a diſlike to the latter, he diſmiſſed her and took Fulvia again.

(39) Glandorpius, Onomaſt. pag. 83, aſſerts it.

(40) Philipp. II. pag. m. 758, edit. Manut. in 8vo.

(41) Plut. in Anton. pag. 919.

(42) Ibid. pag. 920.

(43) This was the year of Cæſar's third Conſulſhip.

(44) Alia conditione quæſita & ante perſpecta. Cicero, Philipp. II. pag. 758.

(45) Gland. Onomaſt. pag. 86.

[H] . . . . He did not ſhew Caius Antonius much more reſpect on other occaſions.] I make this Remark to quit my ſelf of my promiſe (46). We have heard Cicero reproaching Marc Antony with having had the cruelty to ſet forth the lewdneſs of Antonia in a full Senate, when the father of that Lady was preſent. It was a great mortification to that unhappy father; but it was not the firſt time his nephew had uſed him ill. Had he not left him in baniſhment when he recalled a great number of exiles? Cicero did not forget to reproach him with it (47): Omnia perfecit quæ Senatus ſalva republ. ne fieri poſſent perfecerat: cujus tamen ſcelus in ſcelere cognoſcite: reſtituebat multos calamitoſos, in his patrui nulla mentio. Si ſeverus, cur non in omnes? ſi miſericors, cur non in ſuos? i. e. "He did every thing "which the Senate had taken care ſhould not be done "while the Commonwealth was ſafe: yet I ſhall "mention one vile action, which exceeds the reſt: he "reſtored many unhappy exiles to their native coun-"try, but took no notice of his uncle. If he muſt "be ſevere, why not towards all? If compaſſionate, "why

(46) See above, Remark [A] of the Article of the firſt ANTONIUS (CAIUS).

(47) Philipp. II. pag. 734.

he was, he met with his maſter in Fulvia: ſhe made him ſerve ſo hard an apprentice-ſhip of obedience (c), that Cleopatra, who found him quite tamed and broken to this manage, had no great trouble to get the better of him. He had at length the courage to be in a terrible paſſion with Fulvia, and to give her ſuch evident marks, either of his contempt, or of his hate, that ſhe fell ſick and died (d). A Rhetorician, who had rallied her becauſe ſhe had one cheek thicker than the other, became for that reaſon more acceptable to Marc Antony than he had been before (e): an evident proof that ſhe had no great ſhare in the affection of her huſband. She would have deſerved it, had nothing more been required to make her worthy of it than to be able exactly to imitate the eagerneſs with (c) See the Remark [B].

(d) See the Remark [B].

(e) Ejuſdem uxorem Fulviam, cui altera bucca inflatior erat, acumen ſtili tentare dixit, nec eo minus, immo vel magis ob hoc Antonio gratus. Sueton. de claris Rhetor. cap. 5.

" why not to his own relations?" Here are other affronts. Cicero ſets them forth on mentioning a Law for the recalling of the exiles, which had been publiſhed after Cæſar's death, as if made by him. Cicero aſks, among other things, why three or four perſons were ſtill left in baniſhment (48). Cur tua miſericordia ſimili non fruuntur? Cur eos habes in loco patrui, de quo ferre, cum de reliquis ferres, noluiſti? Quem etiam ad cenſuram petendam impuliſti, eamque petitionem comparaſti quæ & riſus hominum & querelas moveret. Cur autem ea comitia non habuiſti? An quia tribunus plebis fulmen ſiniſtrum nunciabat? Cum tuâ quid intereſt, nulla auſpicia ſunt, cum tuorum, tum ſis religioſus. Quid? eundem in ſeptemviratu nonne deſtituiſti? Intervenit enim, cum metuiſti credo, ne ſalvo capite negare non poſſes. Omnibus eum contumeliis oneraſti quem patris loco. . . i. e. " Why do they not partake of the like mercy? " Why do you treat them as you did your uncle, " whom you would not include in the general Law? " whom you alſo perſuaded to ſtand for the Cenſorſhip, and procured him ſuch competitors as raiſed " every body's laughter and indignation. But why " did you not hold the Court at that time? Was it " becauſe the Tribune of the people declared that it " had thundred inauſpiciouſly? When your own intereſt is concerned, omens are nothing; but when " your relations are concerned, you then become ſuperſtitious. What? did you not abandon him likewiſe as to the Septemvirate? For he came in when " you was afraid, I believe, that you could not ſafely " deny him. You have loaded him with all manner " of affronts &c." You will find the reſt of this paſſage above (49). Manutius thinks this full of obſcutity. Hic mihi, quod aiunt, tenebræ ſunt. Non enim video, quo modo C. Antonius Kalendis Jan. vivo Cæſare in ſenatu eſſe potuerit: cum eum poſt Cæſaris interitum, id eſt, poſt latam ab Antonio de exſulibus legem, exſulare, ex iis verbis intelligatur; cur eos habes in loco patrui? de quo ferre, cum de reliquis ferres, noluiſti (50). i. e. " This is all darkneſs to me. For I do not ſee " how Caius Antonius could be in the Senate on the " Calends of January, during Cæſar's life; when it " appears from Cicero's words that he was in baniſhment after Cæſar's death, that is, after the Law concerning the exiles was publiſhed by Antony." Here is Caius Antonius, on the one hand, neglected by his nephew, when after Cæſar's death all the exiles except three or four were recalled; and here he is, on the other hand, in the midſt of the Senators, when Marc Antony makes a ſpeech againſt Dolabella, before the death of Julius Cæſar. Thus Manutius conceived the matter; and no wonder he found contradictions in it: but it is eaſy to remove them, by ſhewing him the ſource of the ſuppoſed obſcurity. He imagines that when Marc Antony, after Cæſar's death, publiſhed a pretended Law of that Emperor for the recalling of the exiles, Caius Antonius was left in baniſhment. But he miſtakes Cicero's meaning. That Orator's thought is this: Marc Antony had excluded three or four wretches from the benefit of that pretended Law. Cicero aſks him the reaſon of it; and in order to remind him of ſome other faults, he maliciouſly compares the exception of thoſe three or four perſons with the exception which he, Marc Antony, had made of his uncle in the time of his Tribuneſhip. Why do you treat theſe three or four perſons, ſays he, as you treated your uncle, whom you did not propoſe to call from baniſhment, when you propoſed the recalling of others? This ought to be referred to Marc Antony's Tribuneſhip, I ſay, which he exerciſed while Cæſar was in Spain againſt Pompey's Lieutenants, before the battle of Pharſalia. In a word, it is the ſame fact which we have ſeen above, in theſe words of Cicero. Reliquæ partes Tribunatus principiis ſimiles . . . . reſtituebat multos calamitoſos: in his patrui nulla mentio. We muſt not wonder therefore that the ſame Cicero ſays Caius Antonius heard in the Senate his nephew's invective againſt Dolabella, in which his daughter was ſo ignominiouſly mentioned. I acknowledge this is a proof of his return from baniſhment before the death of Cæſar, ſince that Invective was pronounced to hinder the deſign which Cæſar had formed of reſigning his fifth Conſulſhip to Dolabella (51): but there ariſes thence no juſt reaſon to cenſure Cicero; for there is nothing in his Philippics which import that Marc Antony left his uncle in baniſhment after Cæſar's death. It is certain Caius Antonius muſt have been recalled during the time which elapſed between the beginning of Cæſar's Dictatorſhip, and his fifth Conſulſhip. He was Conſul the fifth time in the year 709, and he had been made Dictator on his return to Rome after the defeat of Pompey's Lieutenants. He began the functions of his Dictatorſhip by recalling the baniſhed (62): I do not know whether Caius Antonius was comprized in the recall at that time; but I know Dion (53) aſſures us that Milo was the only perſon who was not recalled. Glandorpius aſſerts that Caius Antonius, after the death of Julius Cæſar, was reſtored by Marc Antony his nephew, who was Conſul. This is not true with regard to his return to Rome, and his right of going to the Senate, ſince Caius Antonius ſat among the Senators, and heard his nephew's Invective againſt Dolabella in Julius Cæſar's life-time. We learn from Strabo that this exile ſtaid in the Iſle of Cephalonia, and kept it under his obedience. He was building a city there, but had not time to finiſh it; for having obtained leave to return home he formed greater deſigns, and died during theſe tranſactions (54).

(48) Ibid. pag. 757.

(49) In the preceding page, Citation (40).

(50) Manutius, in II Philipp. pag. 761.

(51) Ἐπεὶ δὲ τὸ πέμπτον ἀπεδείχθη Καῖσαρ ὕπατος, προσεῖλετο μὲν εὐθὺς συνάρχοντα τὸν Ἀντώνιον, ἐβούλετο δὲ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀπειπάμενος Δολοβέλλα παρεγγυῆσαι. καὶ τοῦτο πρὸς τὴν σύγκλητον ἐξήνεγκεν. Ἀντωνίου δὲ τραχέως ἀντιπισύντος καὶ πολλὰ μὲν εἰπόντος κακὰ Δολοβέλλαν, οὐκ ἐλάττονα δὲ ἀκουσαντος, τότε μὲν αἰσχυνθεὶς τὴν ἀκοσμίαν ὁ Καῖσαρ ἀπηλλάγη. Creatus Cæſar quintum conſul, illico coptavit collegam Antonium. Intendit autem abdicare ſe magiſtratu, & tedere Dolabellæ, idque ad ſenatum retulit: verum repugnante aſpere Antonio, multaque maledicta in Dolabellam congerente, nec pauciora audiente, illius indignitatis Cæſar pudore rem in præſentia omiſit. Plutarch. in Antonio, pag. 921, A.

(52) Idem, in Cæſare, pag. 725, D.

(53) Lib. 41. pag. 191.

(54) Strabo, lib. 10. pag. 314.

(55) Made by F. P. G. an Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, and printed at Paris in the year 1685.

(56) In Philipp. II, folio 82.

(57) See Dion, lib. 38. pag. 71. and Cicero, in Orat. pro Cœlio & in Vatinium.

I have read a French Tranſlation of the ſecond Philippic (55), wherein there is ſome confuſion with regard to the fact I am here ſpeaking of. It is ſaid in the 166th page, that Caius Antonius was one of thoſe three or four unhappy perſons whom his nephew had left in exile: but in page 168 we are aſſured he was preſent at the ſpeech which Marc Antony made in a full Senate the firſt of January. It is needleſs for me to ſhew theſe two things to be inconſiſtent; every body muſt perceive it, and I have already ſaid all that is neceſſary to remove the whole difficulty. Maturantius (56) has committed a great many more faults than this Tranſlator. I, He thinks Caius Antonius was baniſhed by Julius Cæſar, for having followed Pompey's party; than which nothing is more falſe. Caius Antonius was accuſed in the year 694 of two crimes; of being an accomplice with Catiline, and of public extortion (57). Cicero, who pleaded for him, loſt his cauſe. In the ſecond place, Maturantius affirms that Marc Antony, when he recalled the exiles after Cæſar's death, took no care to get Caius Antonius recalled. III, He aſſerts that Marc Antony, having at length recalled his uncle, perſuaded him to ſtand candidate for the Cenſorſhip, and ſet up very worthleſs competitors againſt him, in order to expoſe him to deriſion. This is aſcribing a ſenſeleſs impertinence to Cicero: for if he had ſaid that Caius Antonius was not recalled from his baniſhment, when his nephew, after Cæſar's death, recalled almoſt all the exiles, he would have advanced two things which are contradictory in the ſame Oration: 1, That at the time he was ſpeaking, Marc Antony had not yet recalled his uncle; for it is evident that the three or four wretches whom Marc Antony had not ſuffered to partake of the benefit of the pretended Law of Julius Cæſar, were actually in exile when Cicero pronounced the ſecond Philippic: 2, That ſome time before, Marc Antony, having recalled his uncle, had fraudulently engaged him to ſue for the Cenſorſhip.

with which he ſcraped up money by the moſt unjuſt means. It was in Fulvia's chamber that Kingdoms and Provinces were put up to auction [I]. It is thought that ſhe incited Marc Antony to repudiate his ſecond wife [K]: yet it ſeems ſhe did not marry him

Was I not convinced of it by experience, I could never believe it was poſſible for thoſe who have written Commentaries on the Claſſic Authors, not to perceive the contradictory abſurdities which they tack together.

[I] It was in Fulvia's chamber that Kingdoms and Provinces were put up to auction.] Every body knows the revolution which happened in the minds of the Roman people after Cæſar's death. At firſt Marc Antony did not think himſelf ſafe in Rome, and a few days after it was he who was dreaded there; it was on his account that Cæſar's murtherers durſt not ſtay. It is impoſſible to tell the unjuſt actions he committed to heap up money, under the falſe pretence that Cæſar had ordered ſuch and ſuch things. He forged them himſelf, and took care to be well paid for it. It was in that manner that he cheated the Embaſſadors of Dejotarus. He forged a pretended order of Cæſar, by vertue of which Dejotarus was to be reſtored; but he made the Embaſſadors ſign a note for a large ſum of money, in his wife's chamber (58). Cicero has deſcribed, with his uſual eloquence, the prodigious venality to which Marc Antony and his wife ſubjected the Commonwealth. And when we know Fulvia's character beſides, we are ready to fancy, on reading Cicero's words, that we ſee her ſelling Provinces and Kingdoms in her chamber, with the ſame eagerneſs after gain that is obſerved in women who ſell the ribbons and linnen &c. of their ſhop. Quid illi immanes quæſtus? ferendi ne? quos M. Antonii tota exhauſit domus. Decreta falſa vendebat: regna, civitates, immunitates in æs, accepta pecunia, jubebat incidi. Hæc ſe ex commentariis Cæſaris, quorum ipſe auctor erat, agere dicebat. Calebant in interiore ædium parte totius reipubl. nundinæ: mulier ſibi felicior, quam viris, auctionem provinciarum, regnorumque faciebat (59). i. e. "What "ſhall we ſay to thoſe monſtrous gains which Marc "Antony's whole family has ſwallowed? Are they to "be born with? He ſold forged Decrees: he granted "Kingdoms, Cities, and Immunities for money. Theſe "things he pretended to do in purſuance of Cæſar's "orders, which were of his own contrivance. A "thronged fair was held for the whole Commonwealth "in the inner apartment of his houſe; where his wife, "more lucky for herſelf than her huſbands, put up Pro-"vinces and Kingdoms to auction". I think both huſband and wife were equally of Catiline's character, Alieni appetens, ſui profuſus (60): they knew as well how to ſquander away money, as to get it. Fulvia had not a groat left, a year after theſe rich auctions; ſo that Pomponius Atticus was obliged to paſs his word for her to every body, and to lend her large ſums (61).

(58) Syngrapha H S centies per legatos viros bonos, ſed timidos & imperitos, ſine Sexti, ſine reliquorum hoſpitum regis ſententia facta in Gynæceo: quo in loco plurimæ res venierunt & veneunt. Cicero, Philipp. II. pag. 756. See alſo Epiſt. ad Attic. XII lib. 14.

(59) Cicero, Philipp. V. pag. 814.

(60) Salluſt. in Catilina.

(61) Corn. Nepos, in Vita Attici, cap. 10.

[K] It is thought Fulvia incited Marc Antony to repudiate his ſecond wife.] This opinion is grounded on the following words of Cicero: Filiam ejus ſororem tuam ejeciſti alia conditione quæſita & ante perſpecta; which ſignify that, before Antonia's divorce, her huſband had ſo well taken his meaſures, that he was well acquainted with the perſon of the new wife he deſigned to marry. It is, at leaſt, very probable that Cicero had ſome ſly meaning in his ante perſpecta, and that when he mentioned a certain deſign deviſed by Marc Antony in Clodius's houſe (62), he meant that he had tried to lie with Fulvia, the wife of Clodius. However, I reject Manutius's thought with relation to the word conditio, which Cicero makes uſe of. That learned Commentator imagines Cicero meant that Marc Antony had himſelf viewed, or cauſed another to view for him, all the parts of the body of the woman he had a mind to marry. He thinks the Latin phraſe quærere conditionem, does not merely ſignify to look out for a match, but likewiſe to inſpect the moſt hidden parts which are the object of love, and take an exact view of them, in order to avoid all ſurprizes and miſtakes, to which thoſe may be expoſed who buy a pig in a poke, if I may be allowed to uſe that vulgar expreſſion. As long as the paſſage of Manutius is, I think my ſelf obliged to tranſcribe it, leſt my Reader ſhould object to me that it is very eaſy to reject a man's opinion, when his reaſons are ſuppreſſed or enervated. Invenio apud veteres uſurpari ſolitum hoc loquendi genus, conditiones quærere, de iis, qui mulieres ad concubitum appetentes, prius vel ipſi, vel per amicos inſpiciebant quales eſſent, num candor in corpore, num lævitas, num ſucci plenæ; denique num appetentis libidini reſponderent, ut eas ne acciperent, aut admitterent, niſi prius hoc tanquam experimentum cepiſſent. Id, ut dixi, vocabant, conditiones quærere. Itaque exprobravit Antonius Auguſto, id, quod Suetonius litteris prodidit, conditiones quæſitas per amicos, qui matres familias, & adultas virgines denudarent, atque perſpicerent, tamquam Thoranio mangone vendente. Et, quod apud eundem Suetonium ſcriptum eſt, Cæſar ad retinendam Pompeii neceſſitudinem, ac voluntatem, Octaviam, ſororis ſuæ neptem, conditione ei detulit: facta ſcilicet inſpiciendi poteſtate, ut niſi probatam non acciperet. Arnobius quoque, ſcriptor in primis eruditus & reconditarum rerum notitiæ refertus, libro IV. adverſus gentes, Dei uxores, inquit, ducunt conditionibus ante quæſitis. Sic de Fauſtina quærente ſibi conditiones in viris, ut cum iis, quorum conditiones probaſſet, concumberet, dixit Capitolinus in Antonino Philoſ. multi ferunt, Commodum omnino ex adulterio natum: ſiquidem Fauſtinam, ſatis conſtet, apud Cajetam conditiones ſibi & nauticas, & gladiatorias elegiſſe. Et Lampridius in Heliogabalo: Romæ denique nihil egit aliud, niſi ut emiſſarios haberet, qui bene vaſatos (ſic n. lego, non, naſatos) perquirerent, eoſque ad aulam perducerent, ut eorum conditionibus frui poſſet. Nec multo poſt: Lavacrum publicum in ædibus aulicis fecit, ſimul & palam populo exhibuit, ut ex eo conditiones bene vaſatorum hominum colligeret. Nec alio ſenſu accipiendum illud pro Cœlio: Habes hortos ad Tiberim: ac diligenter eo loco præparaſti, quo omnis juventus natandi cauſſa venit, hinc licet conditiones quotidie legas. Quibus adductus exemplis, Quæſita, & Perſpecta, ad conditionem malo, quam ad mulierem referre: ut ſit: quæſiviſti, & ante perſpexiſti aliam conditionem, non contentus ea, quam in ſorore tua jam perſpexeras. Jam enim conſtat, conditionem eſſe partem corporis, quam vel in muliere vir, vel in viro mulier, explendæ libidinis cauſſa quærit, & qua inventa fruitur (63). i. e. "I find the ancients made "uſe of this phraſe, Conditiones quærere, in ſpeaking "of thoſe who, having a deſire to enjoy women, firſt "examined, either by themſelves or by their friends, "their perſonal qualifications; as whether they had a "fair and ſmooth ſkin, or a plump body; in a word, "whether they might anſwer the deſire of a lover; "being determined not to accept of them without "making this previous experiment. This, I ſay, "they termed conditiones quærere. Antony therefore, "as Suetonius writes, reproached Auguſtus with conditiones quæſitas per amicos, employing his friends "to examine women's perſonal beauties and defects, "to ſtrip matrons and marriageable virgins naked, and "to ſearch them, as if they were ſelling by the cock-"bawd Thoranius. The ſame Suetonius informs us "that Cæſar, to keep up his relation and friendſhip "with Pompey offered him Octavia his ſiſter's grand-"daughter, conditione, that is, with liberty of view-"ing her, and if ſhe was not approved, of rejecting "her. Arnobius alſo, a very learned Writer, and "full of recondite knowledge, in his IVth Book ad-"verſus Gentes, ſays the Gods marry conditionibus an-"te quæſitis, having previouſly examined their ſpouſes. "So likewiſe Capitolinus, in the Life of Antoninus "the Philoſopher, ſpeaking of Fauſtina, quærente "conditiones in viris, who examined the men ſhe had "a mind to lie with, ſays, it was reputed by ſeveral "that Commodus was certainly the fruit of adultery; "ſince it was well known that Fauſtina, at Cajeta, "made choice of ſailors and gladiators after ſhe had "examined them, conditiones ſibi & nauticas & gla-"diatores elegiſſe. And Lampridius, in the Life of "Heliogabalus, has this paſſage: In ſhort, he did no-"thing elſe at Rome but keep emiſſaries, whoſe bu-"ſineſs it was to look out for perſons properly furniſh-"ed, and bring them to Court, that he might make "uſe of them, ut eorum conditionibus frui poſſet. And "a little after he ſays: He built a public bath in the "palace

(62) Intimus erat in tribunatu Clodio . . , cujus etiam domi jam tum quiddam molitus eſt: quid dicam ipſe optime intelligit. Philipp. II. pag. 730. Maturantius ſays thereupon, Fulviam credo Clodii uxorem de coitu appellavit, aut eam adulteravit. Manutius ſays, De ſtupranda ejus uxore.

REFUTATION of Manutius's opinion as to the phraſe, Quærere conditiones.

(63) Paulus Manutius in II Philipp. pag. m. 759, 760.

him immediately after the divorce; I ſhould rather ſay that he continued for ſome time to love a concubine [L]. Several Dictionaries (f) have aſſerted that he divorced Fulvia at (f) Thoſe of Charles Stephens, Lloyd, Hofman, and Calepine.

" palace, and openly admitted the people into it, that " he might have opportunities of judging what men " were for his purpoſe, ut conditiones hominum colligeret. " Nor are we to underſtand in any other ſenſe theſe " words in Cicero's Oration pro M. Cælio: You have gar- " dens on the Tiber; and have there made proper con- " veniencies, where all the youth come to ſwim, that " you may daily examine their qualifications, ut con- " ditiones legas. By which examples I am induced to " refer the words Quæſita and Perſpecta rather to con- " ditio than to mulier; that the ſenſe may be: Quæ- " ſiviſti & perſpexiſti aliam conditionem, You have " made another view and examination of parts or qua- " lifications, not being ſatisfied with thoſe you had " already found in your ſiſter. For it is now evident " that conditio ſignifies a part of the body, which a " man ſeeks for in a woman, or a woman in a man, " for the ſake of ſatisfying their inclination, and which " each enjoy when found." Among all theſe paſſages I ſee none which hinders me from being fully perſuaded that the terms quærere conditiones ſignified the ſame as our phraſes, to look out for, to chooſe a match, a gallant, or a miſtreſs, and nothing more. The firſt example which Manutius alledges plainly ſhews it; for if his opinion took place, it would not have been neceſſary for Suetonius (64) to add to conditiones quæſitas per amicos theſe other words, qui matres familias, & adultas virgines denudarent atque perſpicerent tanquam Thoranio mangone vendente. This addition ſhews that the preceding words imported no more than this, he employed his friends to look out for miſtreſſes for him; and becauſe that did not expreſs the infamous practice which Antony deſigned to reproach his adverſary with, it was neceſſary to deſcend to the particular explications of the enquiries which Auguſtus ordered his friends to make. Thus, to repreſent the cuſtom in Moſcovy with regard to the choice of the maid whom the Grand Duke is to marry, it would not be ſufficient to ſay that perſons are ſent into all the Provinces, with orders to look out and chooſe the moſt charming and the moſt lovely maids; but it would be neceſſary to go farther, and ſay in what manner thoſe maids are viewed, ſearched, and examined. Solent autem Moſchovitæ quum de uxore ducenda deliberant, omnium toto Regno puellarum virginum delectum habere, ac forma, virtuteque animi præſtantiores ad ſe perduci jubere, quas demum per idoneos homines, fideleſque matronas inſpiciunt, ita diligenter, ut ſecretiora quoque ab iis contrectari explorarique fas ſit. Ex iis vero, magna atque ſolicita parentum expectatione, quæ ad Principis animum reſponderit, regiis nuptiis digna pronunciatur. Cæteræ verò, quæ de formæ pudicitiæque, & morum dignitate contenderant, ſæpe eadem die, in gratiam Principum, proceribus atque militibus nubunt, ſic ut mediocri loco natæ plerunque, dum Principes regiæ ſtirpis clara ſtemmata contemnunt, ad ſummum regalis thori faſtigium, uti & Turcas Ottomannos ſolitos eſſe videmus, pulchritudinis auſpiciis evehantur (65). i. e. " It is the cuſtom of the Moſcovites, when they are " determined to marry, to ſelect all the young maids " in the whole Kingdom, and to order thoſe who ex- " cell in beauty, and the virtues of the mind, to be " brought to them, whom they cauſe to be ſo carefully " examined, by proper men and truſty matrons, that " they are allowed to touch and ſearch even the more " ſecret parts: and of theſe, the parents, in the " mean time, being in great and ſollicitous expecta- " tion, ſhe who pleaſes the Prince moſt, is declared " worthy of the royal bed. And the others, who " had vied with her in beauty and accompliſhments, " are frequently, in compliment to the Princely pair, " married the ſame day to the Nobles and Officers; ſo " that while the Princes of the royal blood deſpiſe high " birth, virgins of mean extraction are uſually raiſed to " the throne by their beauty, as we ſee it alſo frequently " happen among the Turks." I cannot ſufficiently wonder that Manutius ſhould paraphraſe his ſecond example as he has done; could he really believe Cæſar ever had ſo little ſpirit, or ſo little honour? For, without inſiſting on the violence which muſt have been offered to Octavia's modeſty, would it not have been a baſe condeſcenſion in Cæſar, and enough to expoſe him to contempt, to allow Pompey, when he offered him his niece, the liberty of refuſing her, if he did not find her to his mind, after he had ſeen her naked? But to ſhew how abſurd Manutius's opinion is, I need only refer him to theſe words of Suetonius, in the LXIII Chapter of the Life of Auguſtus: Hoc (Agrippa) quoque defuncto multis ac diu etiam ex equeſtri ordine CIRCUMSPECTIS CONDITIONIBUS, Tiberium privignum ſuum elegit. i. e. " Agrippa alſo being dead, after long " deliberating on many MATCHES among thoſe of " the Equeſtrian Order, he pitched upon Tiberius for " his ſon-in-law." According to Manutius, we ought to ſay that Auguſtus, having a mind to marry again his daughter Julia, the widow of Agrippa, ſpent a conſiderable time in cauſing ſeveral Roman Knights to be ſtripped naked, and that at laſt he made choice of Tiberius. I ſhall not ſtand to ſhew the extravagance of ſuch a ſuppoſition; neither ſhall I cite a hundred paſſages of good Writers which prove that conditio, in ſpeaking of marriage, ſignifies nothing more than what we call a match: bona conditio, a good match. I ſhall only quote a few words out of the CCLVIIth Declamation of Quintilian. They are as good as a definitive ſentence againſt Manutius: Sed neque in me ille (ſocer) probavit aliud quam pietatem: vidit fletus meos, vidit totius animi atque etiam corporis defectionem: ſic homini inter principes noſtræ civitatis numerando cæpi bona eſſe CONDITIO. i. e. " Neither did he approve of " any thing in me beſides my pious affection; he ſaw " my tears, he ſaw my great affliction both in mind " and body: thus I began to be eſteemed a good " MATCH by one who is deſervedly reckoned among " the principal perſons of our city." See Gronovius's Obſervations, in the ſixth Chapter of the firſt Book, page 62 and 63. It muſt be allowed that Manutius would aſcribe a very obſcene form to the ancient Law-ſtyle; for the old Lawyers made uſe of this phraſe in divorce, conditione tua non utor. Conſult Torrentius's Commentary on Suetonius, in the XXVIIth Chapter of the Life of Cæſar. I am greatly ſurprized that a learned Jeſuit did not find this Erudition of Manutius to be falſe, after he had produced ſo many fine examples of the ſignification of the word Conditio. Quid ſit autem ante perſpicere conditionem malo te ex Pauli Manutii in hunc locum quam ex meis verbis addiſcere. i. e. " What the meaning of ante perſpicere conditionem " is, I had rather you ſhould learn from Paul Manu- " tius on this paſſage than from me." Theſe are the words of Father Abram, in his Commentary on Cicero's ſecond Philippic, page 725.

(64) In Auguſt. cap. 69.

(65) Paulus Jovius, in Moſchovia, pag. m. 32, 33.

But, to come to the point, are we to believe Cicero meant that Marc Antony caſt his eyes on Fulvia before he put away Antonia? I ſhould willingly come into that opinion, though it ſeems there was a conſiderable diſtance between Antonia's divorce and Fulvia's wedding. This is the ſubject of the following Remark. Maturantius and Lambin have been both miſtaken here: the former imagines Marc Antony had Calpurnia in view; and the latter that he had thoughts of Octavia. I do not know who this Calpurnia is; but as for Octavia, I know ſhe was Auguſtus's ſiſter, and that ſhe did not marry Marc Antony till after Fulvia's death.

[L] ... Marc Antony continued ſome time in love with a Concubine.] This Concubine was an Actreſs. Cicero calls her Cytheris, and obſerves that Marc Antony carried her with him in an open litter. Hic tamen Cytheridem ſecum lectica aperta portat, altera uxorem; ſeptem præterea conjunctæ lecticæ amicarum ſunt, an amicorum? vide quam turpi leto pereamus (66). i. e. " Yet here he carries Cytheris with him in one " open litter, and his wife in another: and the ſeven " litters which are joined to theſe, do they carry his " miſtreſſes or his friends? See what a ſhameful death " we are dying." Cicero wrote this while Cæſar was going into Spain againſt Pompey's Lieutenants, that is, the firſt year of the war. Marc Antony was then Tribune of the people, and had been left at Rome to keep Italy in awe, and in Cæſar's intereſt. This is the equipage with which he travelled. Theſe were the men to whom God thought fit to deliver up as a prey the moſt illuſtrious perſons in the Roman Republic. But that is not the preſent queſtion. With this equipage of his Marc Antony was reproached to his face,

(66) Cicero, Epiſt. XI. lib. 10. ad Atticum. In the XVIth Letter of the ſame Book he ſpeaks thus: Hoc quidem melius quam collega noſter Antonius, cujus inter lictores lectica mima portatur. See alſo the XXIId Letter of the 15th Book, where hic autem noſter Cytherius is Marc Antony, according to the Commentators.

at the beginning of the Triumvirate, to marry Octavia. This is falſe; for he did not wed face, in the ſecond Philippic, cap. 23 and 24, in the following elegant terms: Ecquid enim unquam in terris tantum flagitium exſtitiſſe auditum eſt? tantam turpitudinem? tantum dedecus? vehebatur in eſſedo tribunus plebis: lictores laureati antecedebant: inter quos aperta lectica mima portabatur: quam, ex opidis municipales homines honeſti obviam neceſſario prodeuntes, non noto illo, & mimico nomine, ſed Volumniam conſalutabant. Sequebatur rheda cum lenonibus (67), comites nequiſſimi: rejecta mater amicam impuri filii, tamquam nurum, ſequebatur. O miſeræ mulieris fœcunditatem calamitoſam! Horum flagitiorum iſte veſtigiis omnia municipia, præfecturas, colonias, totam denique Italiam impreſſit. i. e. "Was there ever ſo ſhameful a behaviour heard "of in the world? ſuch baſeneſs? ſuch diſgrace? A "Tribune of the people rode in a chariot: lictors, "crowned with lawrel, marched before: amidſt "whom an Actreſs was carried in an oppen litter, "who was ſaluted by the honeſt inhabitants of the "municipal towns, who were obliged to come out to "meet her, not by her well-known theatrical name, "but by that of Volumnia. A coach followed with "a ſcandalous retinue of pimps: the neglected mo"ther followed her lewd ſon's miſtreſs, as if ſhe had "been her daughter-in-law. O the fatal fruitfulneſs "of that unfortunate Lady! The marks of theſe vile "actions did he leave in every borough, prefecture, "and colony; in a word, all over Italy." Note, that, among other indignities, Marc Antony is here reproached with having obliged his mother to follow the litter of Cytheris in another convenience. In the letter which I have quoted, Cicero does not ſay this of the mother, but of the wife of Marc Antony (68). It is hard to conceive why Cicero ſhould ſay nothing of the indignities done to the wife, and ſuppreſs them in an Oration wherein he had made it his endeavour to cover his adverſary with ſhame. He might have ſaid in three words, that Marc Antony had allowed neither his mother nor his wife a place in his own coach, but had obliged them to take up with other coaches which followed the litter wherein he had put his Concubine. The treatment of the wife ſerved no leſs than that of the mother to render the man's behaviour odious; and therefore no good reaſon can be given for the Orator's ſilence but this, that Marc Antony's wife did not bear him company in this progreſs, and that inſtead of reading altera uxorem, in the Letter to Atticus, we ſhould read alteram uxorem: and the ſenſe will be, that our Tribune carried Cytheris along with him, as if ſhe had been his wife; as if ſhe had been his ſecond wife. Boſius (69), and Lipſius (70), have adopted this correction. Popma maintains the contrary (71): he is of opinion, not only that Cytheris and the lawful wife were in different carriages; but alſo that the lawful wife was Fulvia; which is likewiſe the opinion of Manutius. They quote the ſecond Philippic to a wrong purpoſe (72), ſince that Oration does not acquaint us that Marc Antony placed his wife among the attendants of Cytheris. Grævius has preferred Popma's opinion to that of Lipſius (73). It is certain, at leaſt, that Fulvia was not then Marc Antony's wife; I have ſhewn he did not marry her till after Antonia's divorce: now Antonia was ſo far from being divorced when Marc Antony made his progreſs through the towns of Italy with his Cytheris, that it is very likely ſhe was not yet his wife. He repudiated her at the time that he oppoſed the deſigns of Dolabella; that is, ſome time after he was returned to Rome, after the battle of Pharſalia (74). Now the progreſs he made with Cytheris was antecedent to that return to Rome; it is probable, therefore, that when he made that progreſs he was not yet married to his couſin Antonia; for he did not keep her long. We may add that Fulvia was not a woman to bear that a Concubine ſhould receive the honours due to the lawful wife, during her huſband's progreſs. She was too haughty to follow, in a ſeparate coach, the litter of the favorite Cytheris. Let us confirm the conjecture of Boſius and Lipſius. If it had been ſaid in the Letter to Atticus, Cytheridem portat alteram uxorem, there would have been nothing but what would agree with other expreſſions which are to be met with in the ſecond Philippic. At etiam quodam loco facetus eſſe voluiſti: quàm id te, dii boni, non decebat! in quo eſt tua culpa nonnulla, aliquid enim ſalis ab ÜXORE MIMA trahere potuiſti (75). i. e. "Once alſo you endea- (75) Philip. 2. cap. 2.

"voured to be witty: good Gods! how ill it became "you! in which you are ſomewhat to blame, ſince
"you might have learned a little wit from your
"THEATRICAL WIFE." When Cicero relates that Marc Antony at laſt broke with Cytheris, he makes uſe of the terms which were employed in divorcing one's wife (76). It is probable, therefore, that we ought to read alteram uxorem in the Letter to Atticus. We muſt not forget that the diſmiſſion of Cytheris was poſterior, not only to the battle of Pharſalia, but even to the war of Alexandria. Marc Antony, after the battle of Pharſalia, was ſent back into Italy, in order to keep matters in ſubjection to the conqueror, while Cæſar purſued Pompey. The Actreſs Cytheris went to meet her gallant as far as Brunduſium, and returned with him to Rome, almoſt in the ſame equipage which Cicero has deſcribed above. Veniſti Brunduſium, in ſinum quidem, & in complexum tuæ mimulæ: quid eſt? num mentior? quam miſerum eſt, id negare non poſſe, quod ſit turpiſſimum confiteri. Si te municipiorum non pudebat, ne veterani quidem exercitus? Quis enim miles fuit qui Brunduſii illam non viderit? Quis, qui neſcierit veniſſe eam tibi tot dierum viam gratulatum? quis, qui non indoluerit tam ſero ſe, quam nequam hominem ſecutus eſſet, cognoſcere? Italiæ rurſus percurſatio, eadem comite mima (77). i. e. "You arrived at (77) Ibid. cap. 25.
"Brunduſium, to throw your ſelf into the boſom and "embraces of your Actreſs: what! do I bely you?
"How wretched is it that you cannot deny what is "moſt diſgraceful to confeſs! If you were not aſhamed
"of behaving ſo before the municipal towns, did not
"your veteran troops make you bluſh? For what ſol"dier was there who did not ſee her at Brunduſium?
"Which of them knew not that ſhe came ſo many "days journey to congratulate you? And which of "them was not ſorry to find out ſo late what a ſcan"dalous leader he had followed? You again traverſed
"Italy, in company with the ſame Actreſs." While Cæſar was, at Alexandria, inveſted a ſecond time with the Dictatorſhip, Marc Antony was made General of the Horſe, and committed a thouſand extortions at Rome: he proceeded by degrees to the enormous audaciouſneſs of ſelling Pompey's goods by auction. By this means he became poſſeſſed of the houſe and furniture of that great man, and ſoon ſquandred away in that houſe all the riches he had gotten by the aforeſaid ſale: for he daily abandoned himſelf to the moſt expenſive debaucheries. He had his Cytheris ſtill with him; he had already lodged in Pompey's houſe, when he ſent away that proſtitute (78). I obſerve this in order to ſhew that it is very probable he kept her ſome time after Antonia's divorce; for Pompey's goods were not ſold till after Cæſar had left Alexandria (79). Plutarch, deſcribing the debaucheries of Marc Antony, his paſſion for Cytheris, &c. plainly inſinuates that thoſe diſorders continued after the battle of Pharſalia; and as he ſays that Cæſar, on his return to Rome, ſhewed himſelf very much diſpleaſed with Marc Antony, which produced two notable effects, he gives us reaſon to believe that ſome time paſſed between the divorce of Antonia, and the marriage of Fulvia: for the two effects I ſpeak of are, the one that Marc Antony would not follow Cæſar in his expedition to Africa; the other that he threw off his debaucheries, he changed his courſe of life, reſolved to marry, and made choice of Fulvia (80). However, I would not deny that, when he put away his ſecond wife, he had already taken meaſures to marry a third: for an engagement with a curtezan does not hinder great Lords from marrying: but in all probability, he made no great haſte in the matter; it was neceſſary that Cæſar's diſpleaſure ſhould ſerve him for a ſpur. Therefore I do not cenſure thoſe who apply to Fulvia theſe words of Cicero; Sororem tuam (that is, Antonia) ejeciſti alia conditione quæſita & ante perſpecta.

I know ſome able men who apply them to Cytheris; but they are miſtaken: for there is no likelihood that Marc Antony ever thought of marrying that creature. It was enough for them both to do all that married folks do, to eat, drink, and lie together; and as to living

(67) Some celebrated Critics will have it that we ought to read leonibus, becauſe it is certain that in theſe progreſſes Marc Antony had a chariot drawn by Lions. See the Article LYCORIS, Remark [C].

(68) Cytheridem ſecum lectica aperta portat, altera uxorem. Cicero, Epiſt. XI. Libri X. ad Atticum.

(69) In Epiſt. ſupra dictam Ciceronis ad Atticum.

(70) Epiſtolicar. Quæſt. 11. lib. 4.

(71) In eam Epiſtolam Ciceronis.

(72) It is Popma who quotes it.

(73) Sed rectius Popma cui adſtipulantur, &c. Grævius in Ciceron. ad Atticum, tom. 2. pag. 164.

(74) This is plain from Plutarch, in Antonio, pag. 919.

(76) Frugi factus eſt: illam ſuam ſuas res ſibi habere juſſit ex duodecim tabulis: claves ademit: exegit. Quam porro ſpectatus civis, quam probatus, cujus ex omni vita nihil eſt honeſtius, quam quod cum mima fecit divortium. Ibid. cap. 23.

(78) See Cicero, II Philipp. cap. 25, & ſeq.

(79) Cæſar Alexandria ſe recepit... haſta poſita pro æde Jovis Statoris, bona Cn. Pompeij... voci acerbiſſimæ ſubjecta præconis. Ibid. cap. 26.

(80) Ἔοικε μέντοι τὸ πολὺ τῆς ἀβελτηρίας αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀσωτείας ἀφελεῖν ὁ Καῖσαρ, οὐκ ἀναισθήτως τὰ πλημμελήματα δεξάμενος, ἀπαλλαγὴς γὰρ ἐκείνου τοῦ βίου, γάμῳ προσέσχε, Φουλβίαν ἀγάμενος. Apparet tamen multum de Antonii amentia & intemperantia Cæſarem, peccata ejus non diſſimulando, detraxiſſe. Siquidem explicuit ſe illa vita, animoque ad nuptias applicato Fulviam duxit. Plut. in Anton pag. 920, C.

wed the latter till after the death of Fulvia. It is not true that Joſephus has ſpoken of this Fulvia [M].

living with a Concubine, and all the exceſs of complaiſance which a gallant may ſhew a miſtreſs he enjoys, Marc Antony could add nothing, after Antonia's divorce, to what he had already practiſed before the battle of Pharſalia. Father Abram has ſtumbled in this place: Marc Antony, according to him (81), had a mind, when he divorced his ſecond wife, to marry Cytheris, and did actually marry her; and afterwards he put her away, and married Fulvia. Father Abram's proofs are very bad ones. He pretends Cicero and Plutarch aſſert that Marc Antony, ſoon after the divorce of Antonia, carried Cytheris in proceſſion through the towns of Italy. He thence concludes that the marriage with Fulvia was not yet celebrated, it being very improbable that the new married man would have ſo ſoon given his bride ſuch a mortification. But he ſhould have conſidered that Cicero plainly gives us to underſtand, that all the progreſſes of Marc Antony and Cytheris, through the towns of Italy, preceded Antonia's divorce. Cicero obſerves that Concubine made two ſuch progreſſes: 1, before the battle of Pharſalia; 2, when Marc Antony returning to Rome, after that memorable action, met his miſtreſs Cytheris at Brunduſium, whither ſhe was come to receive him. It is certain that the quarrels of Marc Antony and Dolabella did not break out till after this ſecond progreſs of Cytheris through the towns of Italy. It is equally certain that the divorce of Antonia, and her huſband's quarrel with Dolabella, happened at the ſame time. The Author whom I refute ought not to rely ſo much on the word uxor made uſe of by Cicero with regard to Cytheris; for the words which follow a little after in Cicero, rejecta mater AMICAM impuri filii TANQUAM nurum ſequebatur, evidently ſhew that there was no true marriage.

(81) Certè cum, ut ex Plutarcho & Cicerone conflat, ſtatim poſt repudiatam Antoniam Italiæ oppida obierit cum illa mimula, non videtur adhuc de Fulviæ nuptiis cogitaſſe, ne recentem uxorem iis flagitiis offenderet. Quare nihil obſtat quo minus ille Cytheridem verè tum uxorem acceperit, ut loquitur Orator, à qua tamen paulò poſt fecit divortium, & Fulviam duxit uxorem. Abram. in Cicer. Oration. tom. 2. pag. 553.

I doubt not but the reaſon which obliged Marc Antony to ſend away Cytheris, was becauſe he plainly ſaw, without that, he could not conclude his marriage with Fulvia. I place this marriage in the year of Rome 707, when Cæſar was in Africa. Two years after there was reaſon to ſuſpect that Marc Antony was ſtill in love with Cytheris; for the Letter which he delivered himſelf to Fulvia, and which he feigned to bring as a meſſenger from Marc Antony, contained little elſe beſides aſſurances and proteſtations that he was no longer in love with that Actreſs, and that all the paſſion he had for her was now turned towards Fulvia. Confeſtim ad eam, cujus cauſſa venerat, deducitur, eique epiſtolam tranſdidit, quam cum illa legeret flens, (erat enim amatorie ſcripta: caput autem litterarum, ſibi cum illa mima poſthac nihil futurum, omnem ſe amorem abjeciſſe illinc, atque in hanc transfudiſſe) cum mulier fleret uberius, homo miſericors ferre non potuit, caput aperuit, in collum invaſit (82). i. e. "He is immediately introduced to her, on whoſe account he came, and delivered her the Letter, which when ſhe read with tears (for it was written in very affectionate terms, and chiefly imported that he would have nothing to do with that Player for the future, that he had thrown off all love to her, and transferred it to the other;) when the Lady wept heartily, my tender-hearted Gentleman took compaſſion on her, diſcovered himſelf, and fell on her neck." This was on his return from Narbonne, whither he went to meet Julius Cæſar, who had defeated Pompey's ſons in Spain. Cæſari ex Hiſpania redeunti obviam longiſſime proceſſiſti (83). We ſhall ſee in the Article LYCORIS that he ſoon forgot his promiſe. What Plutarch has obſerved as to the time of Marc Antony's marriage with Fulvia, is confirmed by the obſervation Dion has made, that Antyllus, their eldeſt ſon, received the virile gown after his father was defeated at Actium and was returned to Egypt (84). According to Plutarch the marriage was celebrated in the year 707, and Dion aſſures us that Antyllus received the virile gown in the year 724; at which time he might very well be ſixteen years old. He had been betrothed to the daughter of Auguſtus (85); but they cauſed him to be put to death, and it was his virile gown that expoſed him to that fatal misfortune (86). Auguſtus judged it not proper to ſuffer him to live, ſince the Egyptians might conſider him as a man grown. Marc Antony had another ſon by Fulvia; of whom I have ſpoken above (87).

(82) Cicero, II Philipp. cap. 21. See alſo Plutarch, in Antonio, pag. 920.

(83) Cicero, ibid. cap. 32.

(84) Dio, lib. 51. pag. 511.

(85) Ibid. pag. 519.

(86) Ibid. pag. 511.

(87) Article ANTONIUS (Marcus Julius).

[M] It is not true that Joſephus has ſpoken of this Fulvia.] Glandorpius (88) has committed two faults in this particular: he refers us to the Vth Chapter of the XVIIIth Book of the Jewiſh Antiquities, to learn news of Fulvia the wife of Marc Antony; and he ſays in the ſame page that Joſephus in that paſſage ſpeaks of a Fulvia who lived in the time of Tiberius. This is deceiving the Reader twice; it is making him believe that the Jewiſh Hiſtorian has ſpoken of two Fulvia's in the ſame chapter, and that one of them is ſhe who was married to Marc Antony. The truth is, he ſpeaks but of one Fulvia, a Roman Lady married to Saturninus, who had embraced the Jewiſh Religion at the ſollicitation of four raſcals. She gave them whatever they aſked of her under the ſpecious pretext of Religion; but when her huſband found that they had converted to their own uſe all the preſents which ſhe intended ſhould be ſent to the Temple of Jeruſalem, he complained of it to Tiberius, who, without diſtinguiſhing the innocent from the guilty, ordered all the Jews to depart Rome.

(88) Onomaſt. pag. 358.

FUNCCIUS (JOHN) a Lutheran Preacher, ſon-in-law to Oſiander, and his ſecond in the controverſies relating to imputative juſtice, diſturbed the tranquillity of the public by other methods, I mean by engaging in State cabals, for which he was beheaded at Konigſburg in Pruſſia, the 28th of October 1566 (a). He was then in his forty ninth year (b). See Moreri for the two verſes which, it is ſaid, he compoſed the day of his execution. They contain a Greek word which Moreri has tranſlated into French (c); but having tranſlated that word only, he has made nonſenſe of it. He ſhould have ſaid, that theſe two verſes admoniſhed all men to profit by the example of Funccius, in order to ſhun, as one would the plague, the itch of meddling with too many things. Moreri has committed another error [A], and Voſſius is miſtaken with regard to that of Funccius [B].

(a) Melch. Adam. in Vitis Theolog. pag. 412.

(b) See the Remark [B].

(c) Πολυπραγμοσύνη, de qua voce vide A. Gellium, lib. 11. cap. 16.

FURIUS

[A] Moreri has committed another error.] He ſays that Funccius carried on his Chronology as far as 1352, and afterwards to 1560. But he ſhould have ſaid that Funccius printed, anno 1544, the firſt part of his Chronology, which extended from Adam to the birth of Jeſus Chriſt (1); and that, anno 1554, was publiſhed his whole Chronology, which began from the Creation of the world, and ended anno Dom. 1552. He extended it as far as the year 1560, in a new Edition reviſed and corrected.

(1) See the Dedication to this Chronology.

[B] Voſſius is miſtaken with regard to the age of Funccius.] He ſays that he was beheaded in the 40th year of his age (2): But we will aſcribe this error to the Printers, and only blame Voſſius for having ſent them a very needleſs addition. He had ſaid, page 231, that Funccius being born in 1518, loſt his life at 48 years of age; and he ordered that, in page 454, an addition ſhould be printed, declaring that Funccius was beheaded in 1566. Now could any thing be more needleſs than this? Was it not plain enough to all his readers, from page 231, that Funccius died in 1566? The only way to excuſe him would be to ſay, that he was deſirous of ſhewing by this Addition, that Funccius was beheaded in the 49th year of his age; but that the Printers, inſtead of 49 compoſed 40.

(2) Voſſius, de Scient. Mathem. pag. 454.

It is certain that Melchior Adamus is not accurate: for, having fixed the birth of Funccius to the month of February 1518, and his execution to the 28th of October 1566; he ſhould have ſaid that he died in his 49th year, and not at 48 yearr of age.

FURIUS (FREDERICK) ſirnamed Cæriolanus, becauſe he was a native of Valentia in Spain [A], flouriſhed in the ſixteenth Century. He ſtudied at Paris under Audomarus Talæus, Hadrian Turnebus, and Peter Ramus (a); and afterwards came to Louvain, where he publiſhed a treatiſe of Rhetoric; and aſſerted, in oppoſition to a Doctor of Divinity (b), that the Scriptures ought to be tranſlated into the vulgar tongue (c). He wrote, in this city, a very fine treatiſe on that ſubject [B], and went into Germany to print it. This brought him into trouble (d); but the Emperor Charles V being informed of his learning, piety and candour, he was ſheltered from the ſtorm. This Prince ſent him into the Low-Countries, and placed him near Philip his ſon (e), and he was appointed Hiſtorian (f). Furius devoted the remainder of his life to the ſervice of this maſter; and having accompanied him to the States of Arragon, he died in Valladolid anno 1592 (g). I cannot ſet down his age very exactly [C]. He employed his utmoſt endeavours in order to pacify the troubles of the Low-Countries (h) [D]. Furius was never married (i), nor was he Chancellor to the King of Poland (k). His treatiſe of the Counſellor has been very much eſteemed [E]. GABRIEL

(a) And. Schottus, Bibl. Hiſpan. pag. 615.

(b) He was a Sicilian called Bononia, and a Divinity Profeſſor in Louvain. Thuan. lib. 104. pag. 486. I have written an article concerning him.

(c) Idem Schottus, Biblioth. Hiſpan. pag. 615.

(d) Thuan. lib. 104. pag. 486.

(e) Idem, ibid.

(f) Schottus, Biblioth. Hiſpan. pag. 615.

(g) Idem, ibid.

(h) Thuan. lib. 104. pag. 486.

(i) Idem, ibid.

(k) See the laſt remark.

[A] Sirnam'd Cæriolanus, becauſe he was a native of Valentia in Spain.] Nicholas Antonio (1) relates, that the inhabitants of the Kingdom of Valentia are vulgarly called Seriols; and that our Furius had, for this reaſon, the ſirname of Seriolanus. He nevertheleſs does not ſpell this name ſo, for at the beginning of his Book intitled, Bononia, he writes it Cæriolanus. In the Catalogue of Thuanus's Library (2), he is miſcalled Coriolanus.

(1) Nichol. Anton. Biblioth. Hiſpan. tom. 1. pag. 277.

(2) Page 500. Part 1.

[B] He wrote . . . a very fine Treatiſe on this ſubject.] It is intitled, Bononia, ſive de Libris ſacris in vernaculam linguam convertendis, libri duo ad Franciſcum Bovadillium Mendozium, Cardinalem Burgenſem; and was printed at Baſil by John Oporinus, anno 1556, in 8vo. It contains 365 pages, and the reading of it was prohibited by the Index Expurgatorius of the Council of Trent.

[C] I cannot ſet down his age very exactly.] The following words of Thuanus are no ways determinate. Ad meliorem vitam haud paullum Montano ſenior hoc anno migravit (3). They inform us only, that Furius died in a much more advanced age than Montagne, who lived but till threeſcore years of age (4). Theſe words were not underſtood in the Elogia of Teſſier, it being ſaid there, that Furius died at about ſixty years of age.

(3) Thuan. lib. 304. pag. 486.

(4) Montanus haud ſexagenario major vitæ ultimum diem clauſit. Idem, ibid.

[D] He employed his utmoſt endeavours in order to pacify the troubles of the Low Countries.] The Reader will find in Thuanus, the ſubſtance of a plan or propoſals for peace, which Furius publiſhed in 1575. The conditions which he propoſed to the Provinces that had revolted, appeared very reaſonable; but the Prince of Orange replied that there was no truſting to them, and that they were offered too late; and he therefore preferred war to ſo ſuſpicious a peace (5).

(5) Ex Thuano, lib. 60. pag. m. 108, 109, ad ann. 1575.

It is to be obſerved that Furius made the ſtrongeſt aſſeverations, that the King of Spain would ratify the conditions contained in his plan; and that in caſe it was thought neceſſary to bind this Monarch more ſtrongly to the obſervation of the Treaty, it ſhould be ſigned by the Nobles of the higheſt quality in Spain as well eccleſiaſtical as ſecular; by the Princes of the Empire, and by ſome of the moſt conſiderable cities of the Low-Countries. The Author of the Plan gives his word, that the Inquiſition ſhould not be ſet up; that the impoſition of the tenth penny ſhould be taken away; that the Edicts againſt the new Religion ſhould be mitigated by certain proviſo's, which ſhould be amicably agreed by both parties; and that ſuch as ſhould not be ſatisfied with theſe proviſo's, ſhould have full liberty to go and ſettle elſewhere, without loſing any part of their goods and chattels; that the foreign ſoldiers ſhould be diſbanded, and ſent out of the Low-Countries, if deſired by the male-contents &c. Furius offered to ride poſt, in order to carry to the King of Spain the acceptance of theſe conditions of peace; however, he had no occaſion to undertake this journey, the overtures in queſtion not being accepted. Ad ea Arauſionenſis, quoniam jam conventus delegatorum diſſolutus erat, pridie Non. Maias reſpondet, quæ in pacis formula proponantur, de promiſſis ſervandis cautiones, qua in re totius negotii cardo vertitur, eas non ita prudenti viro tutas videri, quin P. R. ſi non ſerventur, diſpenſare poſſint, & violatores abſolvere; ea diffidentia fieri, & quoniam formula hæc ſerius tranſmiſſa ſit, ut ipſe abjecta omni meliori ſpe certum licet dubii eventus bellum incertæ atque adeo inſidioſæ paci præferendum duxerit (6). i. e. "The Prince of Orange, as the aſſembly of the Commiſſioners was already diſſolved, anſwered, the day "before the nones of May, that a prudent man could "not ſafely rely on the promiſes given in the Plan "or Propoſals of Peace, which was the hinge on "which the whole affair turned; becauſe the Pope, "in caſe they were not fulfilled, could grant a Diſpenſation, and abſolve thoſe who ſhould violate the "articles on this occaſion; that the Plan had been "ſent too late; ſo that himſelf, rejecting all better "hopes, concluded that a certain war, tho' doubtful "as to the iſſue of it, was preferable to an uncertain, "and therefore inſidious peace."

(6) Thuan. lib. 60. pag. 109, C.

The ſame happens to hiſtorians as to travellers; they ſometimes meet with certain ſubjects, which are either as quagmires, or like a ſmooth, broad, and well paved road &c. Furius's Plan of Peace is a favourable ſubject with reſpect to the Hiſtorians who write for Spain, and diſadvantageous with regard to the Hiſtorians of the oppoſite party. It is fair and bright for the former, but dull and ſad for the latter; for what nobler field could an Hiſtorian deſire; in order to diſplay the clemency of a Prince, and caſt an odium on the ſtubbornneſs of his revolted ſubjects, than this ſtep which was taken by Furius, and the conſequences that enſued upon it? What greater perplexity than for ſubjects to be forced to declare, that they dare not rely on the promiſes of a Sovereign who promiſes to redreſs all their grievances, and remove all thoſe things which forced them to the neceſſity of taking up arms? Nevertheleſs, in this particular caſe, the Prince of Orange had good reaſons to miſtruſt the King of Spain. Matters were come to ſuch a paſs, that he was forced to practiſe, (as he was very able to do) the following maxim, that when a ſubject has once drawn his ſword againſt his Prince, he muſt throw away the ſcabbard.

[E] His treatiſe of the Counſellor has been very much eſteemed.] He intitled it del Conſeio y Conſeiero. Simon Schardius was the firſt who tranſlated it into Latin, and his verſion was publiſhed at Colen in 1618, by Andrew Schottus, with the Treatiſes of Peter Magnus and Hippolytus à Collibus on the ſame ſubject. Chriſtopher Warſevicius gave another Latin Verſion of it, and publiſhed it with his Treatiſe de Legato & Legatione. It was publiſhed at Dantzick in 1646, according to Nicholas Antonio, who doubtleſs was miſtaken, Warſevicius not being then living; and we have ſome pieces of his printed in 1582, and an Edition of his Treatiſe de Legato & Legatione, in 1595. Nicholas Antonio took, by miſtake, for the edition procured by the Pole in queſtion, that which was made after his death. But be this as it will, Warſevicius has beſtowed the following encomium on Furius's book. Hoc opus multis multorum vel longiſſimis commendationibus eſt præferendum. Sic enim reſpondet acumen ingenii pectoris candori, & diſputandi ſubtilitas ſententiarum gravitati, ut tales Ceriolæ Conſiliarii omni ævo optari quam ſperari videantur mihi magis potuiſſe (7). i. e. "This work is preferable to all Commen- "taries whatſoever, tho' of ever ſo great a length: for "the Author's wit and ſenſe anſwer ſo well to his "candor, and the ſubtlety of his reaſoning to the "gravity and dignity of his ſtyle, that it is my opi- "nion ſuch Counſellors as our Author deſcribes, are "to be wiſhed, rather than expected, in every age."

(7) Warſevicius, apud Nicol. Antonium, Biblioth. Hiſpan. tom. 1. pag. 277.

A Latin Tranſlation of this work was printed at Baſil anno 1563 in 8vo, and at Straſburg in 12mo (8). By the way, Gaſpar Eſcolanus, who, in his Hiſtory of Valentia, ſays that Furius was Chancellor to the King of Poland (9), was probably led into this miſtake by ſome book, which contained both the Treatiſe of the Counſellor, and ſome other Diſſertation dedicated to the Chancellor of Poland.

(8) See the Catalogue of Thuanus's Library, pag. 500. tom. 1.

(9) See Nicholas Ant. Biblioth. Hiſpan. tom. 1. pag. 277.

G.

GABRIEL (GILES DE), Licentiate of the Univerſity of Louvain, Prieſt, Monk of the third Order of St. Francis, Definitor General, and Apoſtolic Commiſſary in the Netherlands, was a native of Liege, who publiſhed at Bruſſels in 1675, a book intitled Specimina Moralis Chriſtianæ & Moralis Diabolicæ. i. e. "Specimens of Chriſtian Morality and Diabolical Morality." This title alarmed the Court of Rome, and obliged the Author to go thither to juſtify his doctrine, which being found to be perfectly ſound, he thought himſelf obliged to communicate it again to the public, reforming the Title a little (a). He therefore cauſed his Work to be reprinted, and intitled it Specimina Moralia, i. e. Moral Specimens. This ſecond Edition is of Rome 1680. There is a third, which is in French, reviſed, corrected, and inlarged. It is intitled Les Eſſais de la Theologie Morale, or Eſſays on Moral Divinity, and contains 316 pages in 12mo. This Author approaches infinitely nearer to the ſevere, than to the relaxed ſcheme of morality. I believe he is no friend to the Jeſuits, nor, conſequently, beloved by them.

(a) Journ. des Savans of the 14th of April 1681, pag. 139, of the Dutch Edition. See alſo Mr. Baillet in the 1ſt Tome of the Jugemens des Savans, pag. 506.

GAFFAREL (JAMES), a learned man who has been much talked of in the ſeventeenth Century, was a Provençal (a). He underſtood the Oriental and ſeveral other Languages, and pretended to know every thing, but principally the occult and cabaliſtic Sciences. Cardinal Richelieu made choice of him for his Library-keeper (b), and ſent him into Italy to collect the beſt manuſcripts and printed books that could be found (c). Mr. de la Thuillerie, Ambaſſador of France at Venice, had a mind to have him near him as his learned companion [A]. Gaffarel publiſhed a Book intitled Curioſitez Inouïes, i. e. Unheard of Curioſities, which made a great noiſe, and was cenſured by the Sorbonne [B]. He was obliged to make ſome retractations; for being poſſeſſed of Eccleſiaſtical Benefices [C], he could not ſafely bring his orthodoxy into queſtion. Before that time he had been expoſed to many untoward ſuſpicions [D], and it is highly probable he

(a) He was born at Mannes in Provence, Merc. Galant, for the month of January 1682, pag. 159.

(b) Ibid. pag. 160.

(c) Father Jacob, Traité des Biblioth. pag. 479. See alſo pag. 704, where he cites what Gaffarel has ſaid in the Preface to the Hiſtory of the War of Conſtantinople, by Paul Rammuſio.

[A] Mr. de la Thuillerie ... had a mind to have him near him as his learned companion.] Gaffarel did not propoſe to live with the Ambaſſador (1) on the foot of a man who was only proper to divert him at his leiſure hours by learned converſation. He did not believe Politics to be above his ſphere: he thought he might be of uſe to Mr. de la Thuillerie even in the affairs of his embaſſy; for which reaſon he deſired his good friend Mr. Naudé to ſend him a liſt of thoſe Authors who had written on Politics; and this was the occaſion which gave birth to the Bibliographia politica of Gabriel Naudé, which has been ſo often reprinted. To prove it, let us quote the beginning of that book. Quæris à me, mi Gaffarelle eruditiſſime, atque etiam frequentibus literis vehementius urges, ut pro ea, quam in me non ſemel deprehendiſti, diverſorum Librorum ac Scriptorum cognitione, eorum nomenclaturam aut potius œconomiam ad te tranſmittam, quos inſtituendis tractandiſque cum recta ratione, & methodo, Politicæ ſtudiis, non inutiles fore cenſeo. Quandoquidem ipſa tibi in præſentiarum maximopere eſſe neceſſaria, vel te ipſo tacente cæteri omnes facilè intelligunt, quos minimè fugit, te unum præ multis, non ut liberalibus modo diſciplinis excultum, imbutumque ſanctioris linguæ facultate præclariſſima, ſed tanquam ad reliquas omnes diſciplinas factum à naturâ, & diligenti arte expolitum, ab Illuſtriſſimo, Sapientiſſimoque viro Domino THUILLERIO, Chriſtianiſſimi noſtri Regis ad Sereniſſimam Rempublicam Venetam Oratore Excellentiſſimo, ſelectum fuiſſe; quo cum de rebus graviſſimis communicare, & ſubciſivis horis ſermones literarios miſcere poſſet (2). i. e. "You deſire of me, my learned "friend Gaffarel, and earneſtly requeſt, as you have "more than once found me acquainted with a great "variety of Books and Writers, by repeated Letters, "that I would ſend you a Catalogue, or rather a "regular Series of ſuch as I think may be of uſe in "ſetting about and purſuing the ſtudy of Politics in a "rational and methodical way. How very neceſſary "ſuch a courſe of ſtudies is for you at this juncture, "may be eaſily conceived, though yourſelf were ſi-"lent, by every body who is apprized that the illuſtri-"ous and diſcerning Mr. de la Thuillerie, Embaſſador "from the moſt Chriſtian King to the Serene Republic "of Venice, has made choice of you, preferably to a "great many others, not only on account of your "ſkill in the Liberal Sciences, and your perfect ac-"quaintance with the Hebrew Tongue, but as one "framed by nature, and fitted by art, for the ac-"quiring all other kinds of knowledge; and a per-"ſon with whom he may communicate the moſt im-"portant affairs, and paſs his leiſure hours in learned "converſation."

(1) It appears from The Life of Peireskius that Gaffarel was at Venice in the year 1633.

(2) Naudæus, in Bibliographia Politica, init.

[B] He publiſhed a Book ... which was cenſured by the Sorbonne.] Here is the title at length: Curioſitez inouïes ſur la ſculpture taliſmanique des Perſans, Horoſcope des Patriarches, & lecture des eſtoiles. i. e. "Unheard of Curioſities concerning the Taliſmanic "Sculpture of the Perſians, the Horoſcope of the Pa-"triarchs, and Reading of the Stars." The Author "pretended to ſhew that Taliſmans, or conſtellated "figures, had the vertue to make a man rich and "fortunate, to free a houſe, and even a whole coun-"try, from certain inſects and venomous creatures, "and from all the injuries of the air (3)." Sorel, under the feigned name of the Sieur de l'Iſle refuted Gaffarel's work; and his Refutation met with a good reception from the public. You will find in it (4) Gaffarel's Recantation. The firſt Edition of the Unheard-of Curioſities is that of Paris 1629. There was another printed at Roan in the year 1631; and two others, without the name of the Printer, or of the place where they were printed, in the years 1637, and 1650, in 8vo. The laſt has additions to it. This Work was alſo printed in Latin at Hamburg, in the year 1676, with the notes of Gregory Michael.

(3) See Sorel's Bibliotheque Françoiſe, pag. 415.

(4) In page 305, teſte Colomeſio, Gall. Orient. pag. 154.

[C] Being poſſeſſed of Eccleſiaſtical Benefices.] I ſhall ſet down in this Remark all the titles which I find to have been given him. He was Doctor of Divinity and Canon Law, Protonotary of the Holy Apoſtolic See, and Commendatory Prior of St. Giles (5). When he died he was Dean of Canon Law in the Univerſity of Paris, Prior of le Reveſt de Brouſſe in the Dioceſe of Ciſteron, and Commander of St. Omeil (6). Konig ſtiles him, Sigonciæ apud Gallos Abbas.

(5) See F. Jacob, Traité des Biblioth. pag. 704, 705.

(6) Merc. Galant, Jan. 1682, pag. 159.

[D] Before that time he had been expoſed to many untoward ſuſpicions.] This appears from the Preface to the Unheard-of Curioſities. A perſon of quality, ſays he, whoſe deſire it is a crime to refuſe, has drawn them he held ſome very peculiar opinions. It is ſaid that Cardinal Richelieu deſigned to employ him in his grand project for the reunion of Religions; and that, in order to try if it were feaſible, he authorized him to preach againſt the Doctrine of Purgatory [E]. Gaffarel died at Sigonce in the year 1681, at the age of fourſcore (d). He had almoſt finiſhed the Work upon which he had been employed a good many years [F]: I do not know whether his friends will publiſh it. I ſhall not give an exact Liſt of his Works [G].

(d) Merc. Galant, Jan. 1682, pag. 160.

them out of my cloſet, where they ſhould for ever have remained, ſince I had determined, after ſuffering ſo many calumnies, never to publiſh any more; having a thouſand times ſighed out theſe words formerly familiar to a Roman Prince, Utinam neſciſſem literas! i. e. "O "that I had never learned to write!" How many Authors are there who would make the ſame wiſh, if they had not reſolution enough to deſpiſe the unjuſt cenſures of certain people?

[E] It is ſaid that Cardinal Richelieu ... authorized him to preach againſt the Doctrine of Purgatory.] "When, in one of the cities of Languedoc the Mi-"niſters of the place did themſelves the honour to "pay their reſpects to him (7), the converſation turn-"ing upon the project for a reunion in matters of "Religion, which he ſaid he wiſhed for, ſince it had "been happily reſtored in matters of State; they an-"ſwered him, that they ſaw but little appearance of "effecting it, ſo long as the Pope inſiſted on retain-"ing his authority in its utmoſt extent, and his abſo-"lute infallibility: to which he mildly replied, that "means might be eaſily found out to bring the Pope "to reaſon. And as the Gazettes then publiſhed what "the Sieur Gaffarel, a man of known learning and "reputation, authorized by his Eminence, had pub-"licly preached in Dauphinè againſt Purgatory; we "likewiſe knew, in proper time, of the ſecret nego-"ciations which by his direction were entred upon "by Father Audebert, a famous Jeſuit, with ſome of "our moſt celebrated Miniſters, in order to a-"gree upon certain propoſitions, which might be "adjuſted between both parties, concerning their "principal differences." This I take from a Preface of Samuel Des-Marets (8). I know Gaffarel publiſhed a Book about the Pacification of Religions.

(7) That is, to Cardinal Richelieu.

[F] He had almoſt finiſhed the Work upon which he had been employed a good many years.] "He had been "labouring for ſeveral years on a Hiſtory of the ſub-"terranean world, wherein he treated of the caves, "grotto's, mines, vaults, and catacombs, which he had "met with in thirty years travels thro' all parts of "the world. He had almoſt finiſhed this Work; "plates for it were already engraven, and it was juſt "going to the preſs, when death prevented the exe-"cution of his deſign. We are put in hopes that thoſe "two learned friends (9) of Mr. de Gaffarel who ſurvive "him, and whom he entruſted with his laſt deſires, "will not deprive the public of ſo rare and curious a "Work (10)."

(8) Prefixed to The Summary Anſwer to the Method of Cardinal Richelieu. This Anſwer was printed at Groningen, in the year 1664. A new Convert, couſin to Father Maimbourg, was the Author of it. He there takes the name of the Sieur R. de la Ruelle.

(9) That is, the Abbot Pecoil, a great traveller, and Mr. Chorier, Advocate at Grenoble.

(10) Merc. Galant, Jan. 1682, pag. 161, 163.

[G] I ſhall not give an exact liſt of his Works.] Here are only the titles of ſome of them: Abdita divinæ cabalæ myſteria contra Sophiſtarum logomachiam defenſa, at Paris, 1623, in 4to. Ars nova & perquam facilis legendi Rabbinos ſine punctis. De Muſica Hebræorum ſtupenda libellus. In voces derelictas V. T. centuriæ duæ. De ſtellis cadentibus opinio nova. Quæſtio Hebraico-Philoſophica, utrum a principio mare ſalſum exſtiterit. Mr. Colomies (11) refers us to the Apes Urbanæ of Allatius, from whence he has taken theſe titles, and where he has left ſeveral others. The Widow of Sarepta and a Treatiſe of good and evil Genii, are two of Gaffarel's productions (12).

(11) Colomeſii] Gall. Orient. pag. 260, 261.

(12) Merc. Galant, Jan. 1682, pag. 161.

GAIGNEUR (WILLIAM LE) was of Angers (a), and lived at the beginning of the ſeventeenth Century. We have ſeen his name (b) among thoſe who have excelled in the Art of Writing. I have read in a Deſcription of France, that he was the firſt of all the Writers of the Kingdom, and that he paved the way for a great many men, who at that time profeſſed the Art of Writing (c). There are ſome verſes in praiſe of him among the Poems of Peter le Loyer, who ſtiles him Secretary to Monſieur the King's brother (d).

(a) François des Rues, Deſcript. de la France, pag. 283, of the Edition of Conſtance, 1608. (b) In the Remark of the Article ROCCO. (c) Fr. des Rues, Deſcript. de la France, pag. 283. (d) See the Works and Miſcellany Poems of P. le Loyer, folio 248, verſo, of the Paris Edition 1579.

☞GALE (Dr. THOMAS) a very learned Engliſh Writer in the ſeventeenth Century, was born at Scruton in Yorkſhire in the year 1636, and educated at Weſtminſter-ſchool, from whence he was removed to Trinity College in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he took the degrees of Bachelor and Maſter of Arts, and at laſt that of Doctor of Divinity, and was elected Fellow of that College, and Profeſſor of the Greek Language in that Univerſity. July 12, 1669 he was incorporated Maſter of Arts into the Univerſity of Oxford (a). In 1671 he publiſhed at Cambridge in 8vo a Collection of Opuſcula Mythologica, Ethica, & Phyſica, in Greek and Latin [A]; which was afterwards reprinted at Amſterdam

(a) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 177.

[A] He publiſhed a Collection of Opuſcula Mythologica, Ethica, & Phyſica, in Greek and Latin.] This Collection contains the following Tracts. I. Palæphatus de incredibilibus Hiſtoriis, & ejuſdem Fragmenta duo de Inventione purpuræ, & de primo Ferri Inventore. II. Heraclitus de Incredibilibus, cum Verſione Latinâ Leonis Allatii. III. Anonymi longè Heraclito recentioris libellus de Incredibilibus, cum Leonis Allatii Verſione Latinâ. IV. Phornuti Commentarius de Naturâ Deorum, Latine redditus a Conrado Clauſero. Mr. Gale in his Preface obſerves, that Aldus in the title page of his Edition calls this Writer Phurnutus, but in the end of it Cornutus; and that there is the ſame uncertainty in the Manuſcripts at Oxford; but that the moſt antient of them, as well as one in the Vatican Library, gives the inſcription of the Work thus, Κορνῦτυ ἐπιδρόμη τῶ κατὰ τὴν Ἑλληνικὴν θεωρίαν παραδιδομένων, in the ſame manner as Diocles Magneſius is likewiſe ſaid to have inſcribed his Book Ἐπιδρομὴ φιλοσόφων. Mr. Gale therefore inquires who this Cornutus is; and remarks, that Annæus Cornutus, a Greek, and a Stoic, flouriſhed at Rome under Nero, and had for his auditors in Philoſophy Claudius Agaternus, a Lacedemonian Phyſician, Petronius Ariſtocrates Magneſius, Annæus Lucan, and A. Perſius. He appears to have been a conſiderable critic, ſince Nero deſired his judgment upon a Poem of his, which Cornutus giving too freely, he was baniſhed. The Author of the Life of Perſius the Satyriſt informs us, that he left ſeveral Philoſophical Writings. Mr. Gale then endeavours to ſhew, that this Cornutus is the Author of the Commentarius de Naturâ Deorum from the manner of writing, and the principles of his Philoſophy, which he diſcovers in this Tract. V. Salluſtius Philoſophus de Diis & Mundo, cum Leonis Allatii Verſione Latinâ. Mr. Gale has collected ſome Notes upon this Author from Jamblichus de Myſteriis Ægyptiorum, Syrianus, & Damaſcius περὶ ἀρχῶν. VI. Ocellus Lucanus Philoſophus de Univerſâ Naturâ, with the Latin Tranſlation of Lodovico Nogarola, and his Notes upon Ocellus, and his Epiſtle concerning the illuſtrious

Amſterdam 1688 in 8vo. In 1672 he was choſen Head-Maſter of St. Paul's School in London, in the room of Mr. Samuel Crombleholme; and had the honour of being employed by that City in writing thoſe elegant inſcriptions on the monument erected in memory of the conflagration in 1666; for which he was preſented with a piece of plate (b). In 1675 he publiſhed at Paris in Greek and Latin Hiſtoriæ Poeticæ Antiqui Scriptores, in 8vo; and the year following at Oxford in 8vo in Greek and Latin Rhetores Selecti: Demetrius Phalereus, Tiberius Rhetor, Anonymus Sophiſta, Severus Alexandrinus [B]. June the 7th 1676 he was collated to a Prebend in the Cathedral of St. Paul's He was likewiſe elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, to which he preſented a Roman Urn with its aſhes. In 1678 he publiſhed at Oxford in fol. Jamblichus Chalcidenſis de Myſteriis. Epiſtola Porphyrii de eodem Argumento. Græcè & Latinè ex Verſione Thomæ Gale; and likewiſe Pſalterium juxta Exemplar Alexandrinum, Editio nova Græcè & Latinè. Oxon. 1678 in 8vo. The year following his edition of Herodotus was printed at London in fol. under this title: Herodoti Hiſtoria. Ejuſdem Narratio de Vitâ Homeri. Excerpta ex Xenophonte, Cteſiâ, &c. Græcè & Latinè. Henrici Stephani Apologia pro Herodoto, &c. ex Editione Thomæ Gale. In 1687 he publiſhed at Oxford in fol. Hiſtoriæ Anglicanæ Scriptores quinque ex vetuſtis Codicibus MSS. nunc primum in lucem editi [C]; and in 1691 Hiſtoriæ Britannicæ, Saxonicæ, Anglo-Danicæ Scriptores quindecim illuſtrious Italians, who have written in Greek. VII. Platonis Timæus Locrus de Animâ Mundi, id eſt, Naturâ. VIII. Demophili, Democratis, & Secundi, veterum Philoſophorum, Sententiæ Morales. IX. Sexti Pythagorei Sententiæ è Græco in Latinum à Ruffino verſæ, & Xyſto Romanæ Eccleſiæ Epiſcopo falsò attributæ. Mr. Gale tells us, that the Author of theſe Sentences lived in the time of Julius Cæſar, and was that Sextius the Roman Philoſopher, who is commended by Plutarch in his Morals, and by Seneca in his LIXth Epiſtle, where he ſtyles him Virum acrem, Græcis verbis, Romanis Moribus philoſophantem. He was a Pythagorean, as appears from Seneca de Irâ, L. III. c. 36. and St. Jerom's Epiſtle to Cteſiphon. X. Theophraſti Notationes Morum, with the Latin Verſion of Iſaac Caſaubon, and the various Readings collected from a Manuſcript in Trinity College Cambridge, and the beſt editions. Mr. Gale obſerves, that with regard to the Notes at the end, he can ſcarce acknowledge them for his own, ſince there are ſo many typographical errors in them occaſioned by his abſence from the preſs. XI. Pythagoreorum Fragmenta, partim apud Stobæum, partim alibi reperta. The Pythagoreans, whoſe fragments are here publiſhed, are Hippodamus Thurius, Eurypha-mus, Hipparchus, Archytas, Theages, Metopus, Clinias, Crito, and Polus; to which are ſubjoined Diſſertations by an unknown Author, Fragments of Archytas from Jamblichus's Protrepticon, two Epiſtles of Pythagoras, an Epiſtle of Lyſis to Hipparchus, three Epiſtles of Theano, an Epiſtle of Meliſſa, and another of Mya. XII. Heliodori Lariſſæi Capita Opticorum, ad Hetruſci Codicis fidem Græcè & Latinè edita & recenſita.

(b) Life of Dr. John Colet, Dean of St. Paul's. By Samuel Knight, D. D. pag. 382. edit. London 1724, in 8vo.

[B] His Rhetores Selecti.] This Collection is dedicated to the Mercer's Company, and the Dedication is dated ex Ædibus Coletinis September the 1ſt 1676. This Volume contains, I, Demetrius Phalereus de Elocutione, corrected by Mr. Gale. II. Tiberius Rhetor de Schematibus apud Demoſthenem. This Writer, who, according to our Editor in his Preface, is an antient, elegant, and conciſe one, was never publiſhed till Mr. Gale has here done it with a Latin Verſion. Suidas ſtyles this Tiberius a Philoſopher and Sophiſt, and tells us, that he wrote "De Formis ſivè Generibus Ora-"tionis lib. 3; De Apparatu; De Commutatione; "De Hiſtoriâ; De Diſpoſitione & Compoſitione Ora-"tionis; De Civilis Orationis Mutatione; De de-"monſtrativis Orationibus; De Præfationibus & Pro-"œmiis; De Augmentis; De Demoſthene & Xeno-"phonte; De Herodoto & Thucydide." He is likewiſe cited ſometimes by the Scholiaſt upon Hermogenes; but what he quotes is out of another Work. Father Labbe likewiſe in the tenth Supplement to his Bibliotheca Nova mentions him after Geſner, and tells us, that Leo Allatius publiſhed at Rome in 1643 Tiberius the Sophiſt and other Writers de Figuris Grammaticis Græcè & Latinè. Labbe acknowledges that he had not then ſeen this Collection, and Mr. Gale obſerves that he knew nothing more of it; and that he was therefore greatly in doubt whether Tiberius ever treated de Figuris Grammaticis. "Perhaps, ſays he, the title "was de Schematibus. It is uncertain, whether Suidas "ſpeaks of this piece; but it is not improbable that "Tiberius treated περὶ σχημάτων παρὰ Δημοσθένει, when "he wrote περὶ Δημοσθένους." II. Anonymus Sophiſta de Rhetoricâ. Mr. Gale tells us, that this Writer was joined in his Manuſcript to Tiberius; and he has given us a Latin Verſion of it. IV. Severi Sophiſtæ Alexandrini Ethopœiæ. This piece had been publiſhed by Frederic Morell in Greek and Latin at Paris in 1591; and Leo Allatius having procured better Manuſcripts of it publiſhed it intire, as he thought, with a new Latin Verſion. But Mr. Gale has given us here a more correct and perfect Edition, with a new Tranſlation. He has illuſtrated all theſe Writers with Notes.

[C] In 1687 he publiſhed at Oxford in fol. Hiſtoriæ Anglicanæ Scriptores quinque ex vetuſtis Codicibus MSS. nunc primum in lucem editi.] Dr. Gale's Preface is dated at London May 1ſt 1687. This volume contains I. Annales Marganenſes, written in the Monaſtery of Margan in Wales; but by whom, or when, is uncertain. Theſe Annals give a ſhort account of the tranſactions not only in England, but likewiſe in France and Paleſtine, from the year 1066, in which Edward the Confeſſor died, to the year 1232, when Henry III aſcended the throne. II. Chronicon Thomæ Wikes. This Writer flouriſhed about the year 1290, and is highly applauded by Bale and Pits on account of his extenſive learning. His Chronicle begins at the ſame time with the Annales Marganenſes, but extends to the end of Edward I's reign. III. Annales Waverleienſes. Theſe Annals were written by divers perſons, who probably all belonged to the Monaſtery of Waverly of the Ciſtercian Order, ſince they are ſo diligent in relating the affairs of that Monaſtery. Dr. Gale conjectures, that the Writer of the firſt part was originally Saxon; and it is certain, that he lived in the time of William the Conqueror, ſince he tells us, that he ſaw that Prince, and was at his Court. Theſe Annals begin with the year 1066, and conclude with the year 1291. IV. Itinerarium Regis Anglorum Richardi & aliorum in terram Hieroſolymorum, auctore Gaufrido Viniſauf. Dr. Gale aſſerts, that Geoffrey Viniſauf was the Author of this Itinerarium, in oppoſition to Trithemius, Blondus, and the Editor of Geſta Dei per Francos, who aſcribe it to Rupert a Monk. This Geoffrey lived at the latter end of the twelfth Century under King Richard I and John; and had the ſurname of Viniſauf or de Vino ſalvo given him, on account of his having written a Book upon the Method of managing of Vines and keeping of Wine, which is ſaid to be ſtill extant at Cambridge. He left likewiſe ſeveral other Works, and was a man of conſiderable learning for that time, and dedicated to Pope Innocent III, a Book written by him in proſe and hexemeter verſe de arte dicendi. To this Itinerary is ſubjoined an Account of the taking of Damietta, found by Dr. Gale in the ſame manuſcript, but it is uncertain who was the Author. V. Chronica Walteri Hemingfort, Canonici de Giſſeburne, de Geſtis Regum Angliæ. This Writer is ſaid to have died in 1347. His Chronicle extends from the year 1066 to 1308, that is, from William the Conqueror to the time of Edward II; but it is not inſerted intire in this collection, but only to the year 1273, in which Henry III died. Dr. Gale tim ex vetuſtis Codicibus MSS. editi, opera Thomæ Gale [D], Oxford in fol. About the year 1697 he gave to the new Library at Trinity College in Cambridge a great number of Arabic manuſcripts (d). September the 16th 1697 he was admitted Dean of York (e), where he kept an hoſpitable table, and was particularly remarkable for his care and good government, and repairing and beautifying the fabric of the Cathedral (f). He died at York April the 8th 1702 in the ſixty ſeventh year of his age, and was interred in the Cathedral there, and over his grave is a black marble with an inſcription [E]. He was a learned Divine, a great Hiſtorian, and one of the beſt Greek ſcholars of his age. He had a correſpondence with the moſt learned men abroad as well as at home, particularly

(d) Dr. Knight, ubi ſupra.

(e) Survey of the Cathedrals of York, &c. By Browne Willis Eſq; pag. 70. edit. London 1727 in 4to.

(f) Dr. Knight, ubi ſupra.

tells us, that he reſerved the remaining part of this Chronicle for another volume, which he deſigned to begin with King Edward I.

[D] In 1691 he publiſhed Hiſtoriæ Britanniæ, Saxonicæ, Anglo-Danicæ, Scriptores quindecim &c.] The Imprimatur is dated February 3d 1690. In the Preface Dr. Gale tells us, that Dr. John Fell, Biſhop of Oxford, was very importunate with him, even at his death, to proceed in publiſhing the Writers of the Britiſh Hiſtory, which had never been printed. This volume contains, I. Gildas de Excidio Britanniæ, publiſhed from an ancient manuſcript at Cambridge, with the various readings, and an Epiſtle, in which that Writer ſeverely remonſtrates againſt the vices of the Britons. II. Vita S. Wilfridi Epiſcopi Eboracenſis, written by Eddius or Heddius, a Monk of Canterbury in the eighth Century under Ofric King of Northumberland. III. Hiſtoria Britonum, written by Nennius or Ninnius, Abbot of Bangor, who in the ſeventh Century propagated the Chriſtian Religion over Wales and the Iſlands of Scotland. IV. Aſſerii Menevenſis Chronicon Fani Sancti Neoti, written in the 9th or 10th Century. V. Ranulphi Higdeni Polychronicon, written in the 14th Century. This Chronicle contains ſix Books, and extends from the Creation to the year 1343. Dr. Gale has retrenched every thing, which does not relate to the Engliſh Hiſtory. Voſſius tells us (1), that John Treviſa tranſlated this Polychronicon into Engliſh, and continued it to the year 1398. VI. Gulielmi Malmſburienſis Liber de Antiquitate Eccleſiæ Glaſtonienſis, written in the twelfth Century. The Author died in 1142. Sir Henry Savile publiſhed five Books of this Writer de Rebus geſtis Anglorum, two Hiſtoriæ novellæ, and four de geſtis Pontificum Anglorum, at London 1596 in fol. VII. Vita S. Aldelmi, written by the ſame William of Malmeſbury, and cited by Bale (2) under the title of Antiquitates Malmeſburienſes, who thinks it a different work from the Life of St. Aldelm; whereas in reality they are the ſame. VIII. Hiſtoria Rameſienſis, or an Account of the Foundation and Benefactions of the Monaſtery of Rames, written by an anonymous Author, not inelegantly. It contains 121 chapters, which are compriſed in three parts; but the fourth, which gave an account of the ſtate of that Monaſtery after the entrance of the Normans, could not be diſcovered by Dr. Gale, tho' he made great enquiry for it. IX. Hiſtoriæ Elyenſis Eccleſiæ Liber primus, written by a Monk of that Monaſtery in the twelfth Century. It gives an acconnt of the Life and Miracles of St. Æthelwold Biſhop of Wincheſter, and his Benefactions to that Monaſtery. X. Hiſtoriæ Elyenſis Eccleſiæ Liber ſecundus, written by Thomas a Monk of that Monaſtery in the twelfth Century. It gives an account of the Dedication of the Church of Ely; the Donations to it; the Lives of the Abbots Brithnod, Ælſin, Leofwin, Leofric, and Wulfric; the Privileges granted to it by King Edgar in 970, and Æthelred in 974; and the tranſlation of the relicks of St. Wendrede the Virgin thither. XI. Chronica Jo. Wallingford. This Writer was Abbot of St. Alban's, and his Chronicle gives an account of the Saxon and Daniſh Kings, who made themſelves maſters of Britain, and of ſome of their actions, from the time of Wortigern in 449 to the reign of Edward the Confeſſor in 1026. XII. Radulphi de Diceto Hiſtoria de Regibus Britonum. This Writer was Dean of St. Paul's in London, and his Hiſtory ſeems to have been written in the XIIIth Century. It mentions ninety eight Kings from Brutus to Cadwaladar, who died in the year 689. XIII. De Partitione Provinciæ Angliæ, written by an anonymous Author. It treats of the Diviſion of England into thirty two Shires, twenty Biſhoprics, two Archbiſhoprics viz. that of Canterbury and that of York. It informs us, that after the expulſion of the Giants there reigned ninety nine Britiſh Kings, the firſt of whom was Brutus; ninety ſix German, the firſt of whom was Hengiſt; and fifteen Engliſh, the firſt of whom was Alfred. XIV. Joannis Fordun Scoti-Chronicon ſive Scotorum Hiſtoria, written in the fourteenth Century. It begins from the Origin of the World, and mentions one Geythelos King of the Scots, when they fled from Egypt, and his ſon Hyber, from whom Hybernia took its name; and relates the manner of the Scots paſſing over into the Iſland of Albion. This is the ſubject of the firſt Book. In the ſecond Book the Author tells us, that Brutus, the great-grandſon of Æneas, and ſon of Silvius, who was Aſcanius's ſon, had three ſons, Locrine, Albanact, and Camber, who divided the Kingdom of Britain between them. And he gives an account of the bold anſwer given by the Scots to Julius Cæſar's Embaſſadors; the Birth of Chriſt; and the Converſion of the Scots to the Chriſtian Religion under Pope Victor I, in the year 203. In the third Book he treats of Palladius, the firſt Inſtructor and Biſhop of the Scots, the Invaſion of the Saxons, the inteſtine Diviſions of the Britons, the Prophecies of Gildas; of King Arthur, St. Columb, Colman, Merlin, &c. In the fourth Book he diſcourſes of the Wars againſt the Picts, and the Kings of the Picts and Scots. In the fifth he treats of the Advice given by Macduff to Malcolm, and the Death of Edward. This whole Hiſtory is extracted from Beda, Geoffrey of Monmouth, and William of Malmeſbury. XV. Flacci Alcuini Poema de Pontificibus & Sanctis Eccleſiæ Eboracenſis, written in the eighth Century. Dr. Gale has added an Appendix to this Collection, in which, beſides ſeveral paſſages concerning Britain, which he has extracted from Pliny, Ptolomy, and Antoninus's Itinerary, and illuſtrated with Notes, he has inſerted from the Notitia Dignitatum Imperii, and the Geography of an anonymous Writer of Ravenna printed at Paris in 1688, what relates to the Provinces of Britain; and given a Catalogue of the Hydes in ſome countries on this ſide of the Humber, with an Account of the Cuſtoms and Laws of the Anglo-Saxons from Doomes-Day Book, and an alphabetical Liſt of the antient people, cities, rivers, and promontories, from Camden, and a Genealogy of the Britiſh Kings from the Textus Roffenſis. To the whole is ſubjoined a copious Index.

(1) De Hiſt. Latin. lib. 3. cap. 2.

(2) Centur. II. cap. 73.

[E] With an Inſcription.] It is as follows:

Æ. M. S.
THOMÆ GALE, S. T. P. Decani Ebor.
Viri, ſi quis alius
Ob multifariam Eruditionem
Apud ſuos Exteroſque celeberrimi.
Quale Nomen & ſui Deſiderium
Poſteris reliquit,
Apud Cantabrigienſes
Collegium SS. Trinitatis &
Græcæ Linguæ Profeſſoris Regii Cathedra;
Apud Londinates
Viri litteratiſſimi in Rempublicam
Et patriæ commodum
Ex Gymnaſio Paulino emiſſi;
Apud Eboracenſes
Hujus res Eccleſiæ
Heu! vix quinquennio,
At dum per mortem licuit,
Sedulo & fideliter adminiſtrata;
Et ubicunque agebat donata luce
Veneranda Linguæ Græcæ
Et Hiſtoriæ Anglicanæ
Monumenta,
Marmore loquaciora,
Perenniora,
Teſtantur.
Ob. Aprilis VIII. A. S. H. 1702. ætatis ſuæ LXVII.

particularly Mabillon, Allix, Baluze, Jacobus Cappellus, Ludolfus, Grævius, and Huetius, Biſhop of Avranches (g), who has given him a very advantageous character in his Commentarii de Rebus ad eum pertinentibus (h), and the Huetiana printed at Paris in 1722 in 12mo. Since his death there have been publiſhed from his manuſcripts, Sermons preached upon ſeveral Holy Days obſerved in the Church of England, by Thomas Gale, Dean of York. London 1704 in 8vo; and Antonini Iter Britannicum Commentariis illuſtratum Thomæ Gale, S. T. P. nuper Decani Eboracenſis. Opus poſthumum reviſit, auxit, edidit R. G. Acceſſit Anonymi Ravennatis Britanniæ Chorographia cum Autographo Regis Galliæ MS. & Codice Vaticano collata. Adjiciuntur Conjecturæ plurimæ cum Nominibus locorum Anglicis, quotquot iis aſſignari potuerint [F]. London 1709 in 4to. He left likewiſe behind him in manuſcript Jamblichus de Vitâ Pythagoræ, & Origenis Philocalia, variis

(g) Roger Gale Eſq; has a great number of Letters of this learned man to his father.

(h) Lib. 5. pag. 315. edit. Amſtelod. 1717. Quem utraque dote, & modeſtiæ & doctrinæ . . . omnibus hominibus, quos quidem noverim, anteferendum puto.

[F] Antonini Iter Britannicum Commentariis illuſtratum Thomæ Gale, S. T. P. &c.] Mr. Roger Gale, the Editor, tells us, that the Manuſcripts which his father made uſe of in this Work, were two, which belong to the King of France's Library: that he has taken ſome Readings out of a Book printed at Cologne in the poſſeſſion of Dr. Richardſon, Maſter of Peter-Houſe in Cambridge, which was compared with Iſaac Voſſius's Manuſcript; and that for ſome Readings he was obliged to Dr. Bentley. And whereas ſome of the Readings are marked as taken out of Dr. Gale's own Manuſcript, Mr. Gale informs us, that he was not able, ſince his father's death to diſcover what was become of this Manuſcript, having met only with that part of the Itinerary, which relates to Africa, Sardinia, Sicily, and Italy, which could be no way ſubſervient to the illuſtration of the Itinerary of Britain. As the diſtances of places in the Itinerary are given us in Roman miles, Mr. Gale has put in the map of Britain, drawn from the Itinerary itſelf, the exact Ratio betwixt a Roman and an Engliſh mile, as it is determined by Dr. Edmund Halley. Dr. Gale's firſt Notes are upon the title of the book, which he comments on, viz. Antonini Iter Britanniarum, (though his own Manuſcript reads it Itinerarium & Antonii, and Dr. Bentley Antonii Auguſti) and he obſerves, that it is juſtly made a doubt to which of the Roman Emperors under the name of Antoninus this work is to be aſcribed, or indeed whether to any of them all. To him it ſeems to have been compiled by ſeveral perſons; which is undeniable, if any part of it belonged to any one of the Antonines, the laſt of whom lived long before Conſtantinople and ſeveral other cities mentioned in this Work, were founded. He conjectures, that it might have been begun by ſome or other of theſe Emperors, and augmented by others, as they had occaſion to viſit and take particular notice of theſe parts of the world. Upon the word Britanniarum Dr. Gale obſerves, that the Romans called this iſland indifferently Britannia or Britanniæ, before it was divided into Provinces. The firſt Roman diviſion of it was in Severus's time by the famous High-way, which extended from Clauſentium to Gabroſentum. This in another place our Author calls the Foſſed-Way, and ſays, that it runs to the North through Leiceſterſhire and Lincolnſhire, and appears afterwards at a village called Spittle in the Street, paſſing on thro' Hibberſtow, Gainſtrop, Broughton, and Applebey, till at laſt it terminates not far from Wintringham on the Humber ſide. From this diviſion all that part of Britain, which lay on the Eaſt ſide of the way, was called Britannia Prima, being that which lay neareſt the ſea with reſpect to Rome, and is called by Dio ἡ κάτω. And that part, which lay on the Weſt ſide of the way, was called Britannia Secunda; and Dio calls it ἡ ἄνω. Dr. Gale gives us a ſhort account of the ſubſequent Roman diviſions of Britain; and then tells us, that the order of the Britiſh Provinces was as follows: Firſt, Britannia Prima, or Lower Britain, which was in Severus's time the Eaſtern part of the iſland. Secondly, Britannia Secunda, or Upper Britain, which was in Severus's time the Weſtern part of the iſland. From theſe diviſions Conſtantine the Great made two others, which were called Flavia Cæſarienſis and Maxima Cæſarienſis, the former extending itſelf through the middle of England, and taking its riſe from Glouceſter; and the other including as many of the Northern inhabitants of the iſland, as were ſubject to the Romans; the remoter part of which betwixt Sterling-Fort and the Picts-Wall, which was recovered by Theodoſius, was called Valentia in honour of the Emperor Valentinian. The firſt journey in Antoninus's Itinerary runs thus: A Limite, i. e. A Vallo Prætorium uſque, M. P. CLVI. viz. A Bramenio Corſlopitum M. P. XX. Vindomora IX. Vinovia XIX. Cataractoni XXII. Iſurium XXIV. Eburacum Leg. VI. Victrix XVII. Derventione VII. Delgovitia XIII. Prætorio XXV. We ſhall give the Reader the ſubſtance of the Doctor's Commentary upon this journey, from whence he may form an idea of this performance. After enumerating the various Readings of the title of this Journey, A Limite, &c. Dr. Gale takes the meaning at large to be, A LIMITE [ut nunc conſtituimus] PER VALLUM [Severi] PRÆTORIUM USQUE. And his firſt inquiry is, what this Limes is; and in order to diſcover this, he quotes pag. 49 of the London Edition of Camden's Britannia of 1607 for this paſſage: Antoninus Caracalla, the ſon of Severus, in ſome meaſure proſecuted the remains of the war in Britain, but was ſoon brought to terms of peace, and to give up the fields and caſtles to the enemy: Upon this our Author remarks, that from this time the Romans kept chiefly within the circumference of Severus's wall, where they had their caſtles and towns, and a wall with a deep ditch, with guards or garriſons at due diſtances, who ſhould be upon the watch againſt any ſudden invaſions of the enemies. From one of theſe Garriſons Dr. Gale begins this Limit, from which Antoninus began his Journey: and if this Itinerant was really an Antonine, he looks upon it as probable, that it was Antoninus Caracalla. As the firſt ſtage of this Journey is a Bramenio Corſlopitum twenty Italian miles, Dr. Gale makes Bramenium, Brampton upon the river Bramiſh in Northumberland; and Corſlopitum, Corbridge. Under this head he produces and explains ſeveral old Roman inſcriptions, which ſerve for the illuſtration of his aſſertion. The ſecond ſtage is to Vindomora nine miles. This Vindomora Camden calls Wallſend; and Dr. Gale ſays, that the Roman caſtles were ſo frequent near the wall, and moſt of thoſe have ſo utterly loſt their names, that it is exceedingly difficult to compare them with Antoninus's Stations; and what increaſes the difficulty is this, that Antoninus's numbers are often corrupted, it being read even to this very place ſometimes nine, and ſometimes but five miles; beſides that none but Antoninus makes mention of this Vindomora. However, as this Journey tended Southward, and conſequently as ſuch muſt leave the wall, Dr. Gale cannot conceive how it ſhould bend ſo much back again as to return to Wallſend. But as the Notitiæ Imperii read Vindolana, and the anonymous Geographer of Ravenna in his Chorography of Britain ſtyles it Vindolanda, Dr. Gale takes a place about five miles from Corbridge called Dolande to be Vindolanda, both from the ſound of the word, and from its lying almoſt in a ſtrait line betwixt Corbridge and Vinovia. The third ſtage is to Vinovia nineteen miles. Vinovia, according to Dr. Gale, is the true Reading, which Camden makes Binchеſter near Biſhop's Aukland in the Biſhopric of Durham. The fourth ſtage is Caractoni twenty two miles. This Dr. Gale ſays is Catarick a village upon the river Swale, about three miles on this ſide Richmond. He has given ſome inſcriptions under this head. The fifth ſtage is to Iſurium twenty four miles. This place he tells us is Aldburrough; and obſerves, that the river, which paſſes by this town, is there called Yure or Yore; but a little after it leaves that place, changes its name for Ouſe. Under this head he gives an account of the three famous ſtones, which are ſituate to the Weſt of this town, which Leland looks upon as Roman Trophies, and others think to have been Britiſh Gods; but Dr. Gale eſteems them Hermæ, the nature and deſign of which he explains. He mentions alſo ſeveral Roman Antiquities, which he met with at Aldburrough, as Monies, Aqueducts, Tracts of Walls, and ſays, that variis MSS. collecta, emendata, & novâ Verſione donata. He left two ſons and a daughter ſtill living. The elder of his ſons is the very learned Roger Gale Eſq; late one of his Majeſty's Commiſſioners of Exciſe, Treaſurer of the Royal Society, and Vice-Preſident of the Antiquarian Society London, to whom the world is obliged for ſeveral excellent works. The younger ſon is the ingenious Samuel Gale Eſq; Treaſurer of the Antiquarian Society.

that there is to be ſeen in the Veſtry of the Pariſh Church a ſtone-ſtatue, with horns on its head, hoofed feet, &c. The ſixth ſtage is Eboracum. Leg. VI. Victrix, ſeventeen miles. Dr. Gale tells us, that there is extant a coin of the Emperor Severus with this inſcription, Col. Eboracum, Leg. VI. and that ſome Manuſcripts of Antoninus read thus, Eburacum. M. P. M. VI. Victr. M. P. M. XVII. i. e. Eburacum Municipium Sextæ Victricis. Mill. Paſſ. XVII. He obſerves, that theſe inſcriptions do not at all claſh with each other, ſince the ſame town is often called both Colonia and Municipium. With regard to the word Eboracum or Eburacum, he remarks, that it is derived from the Britiſh Wruch, Uruch, Ebrauch, Effreoch, which ſignifies ſuper Urum, i. e. upon the Youre, as the river Ouſe was called formerly as far as York; ſo that the Latins might call it from Ebrauch, Eburacum. The Doctor is not of opinion, that this city was ever called Brigantium by any Author, who was a competent judge; for he is apprehenſive, that the paſſage uſually produced out of Ptolomy's Magna Syntaxis will not prove this point, ſince that Writer proceeds after this manner: firſt he puts Brigantium in the 22d parallel; then the middle of Britain in the 23d; and Cattarick in the 24th; whence it is evident that York and Cattarick are not at ſo great a diſtance. The Doctor therefore thinks, that in this paſſage Brigantium is put inſtead of Segontium or Brecannioc, Brecknoc, to which place Ptolomy's parallels much better agree. He brings ſome teſtimonies to prove that York was once the metropolis of all England; and then gives us an account of ſeveral antient inſcriptions, which are to be met with there. The ſeventh ſtage is Derventio ſeven miles. This Derventio the Dr. takes to be Aldby upon the Darwent; and for ſeveral reaſons reckons Petuaria for the ſame place, though Camden takes the latter for Beverly. The eighth ſtage is Delgovitia thirteen miles. Dr. Gale obſerves, that the latter is a Britiſh name, in Saxon Godmundigaham, i. e. The Tent of the Gods. The name of the town is now Weighton. By finding that Weightelberg in the woods of Germany is recorded by Conradus Celtes to be a moſt famous place belonging to the Druids, our Author is brought to ſuſpect, that theſe temples at Weighton were in the poſſeſſion of our Druids, &c; and he makes no doubt, but that Dryfield, a town in the Wolds of Yorkſhire, not far diſtant from Weighton, ſignifies the ſame as the Field of the Druids. And whereas Camden tranſlates Delgovitia, Deorum Gentilium ſtatuas, for which he appears to have no authority, Dr. Gale chooſes to deduce it from Pywylhgoedh, which ſignifies a ſhady grove, which the Druids always had in the greateſt veneration. The ninth and laſt ſtage is Prætorium twenty five miles. The ſound of the words, and the diſtance of the towns induce the Dr. to wiſh that Antoninus had added whoſe Prætorium this was, as he does upon other occaſions when he ſays Aritium Prætorium, Longovicorium Prætorium &c. He believes this Prætorium to have been in a maritime town, where a Prefect was placed to adminiſter the Laws to thoſe, who traded in thoſe parts of Britain; and he looks upon no place within diſtance ſo fit for this purpoſe as Patrington. He concludes this Journey with a ſhort account of an inſcription, which he borrows from Camden, found in a little village called Eaſtneſs in Rhydale. There are beſides fourteen more Journeys in Antoninus' Itinerary, with the Doctor's Commentaries upon them. T

☞GALE (Dr. JOHN), a learned Engliſh Divine of the eighteenth Century, was born May the 26th 1680 at London, of which City his father was an eminent and worthy Citizen. From the firſt proofs which he gave of his capacity, his father devoted him to the great work of inſtructing mankind; and to fit him for it ſpared no expence in giving him a generous education (a). Having made himſelf in a good degree maſter of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew Languages (b), he was ſent to the Univerſity of Leyden in Holland to finiſh his ſtudies; and ſoon after his arrival there, when he was little more than ſeventeen years of age, he received the melancholy news of his mother's death, upon which occaſion, in a letter ſent to his father, he adminiſters to him the moſt rational and manly conſolations (c). In 1698, when he was in the nineteenth year of his age (d), he was honoured by the Univerſity of Leyden with the degrees of Maſter of Arts, and Doctor of Philoſophy; upon which occaſion, when he publiſhed his Theſis De Ente ejuſque Conceptu, dedicated to his father, and his two uncles, Sir John and Sir Joſeph Wolf, the famous Adrian Reland ſubjoined a noble teſtimony of his merit in a Latin Panegyric [A]. And the learned Burcher de Volder gave him a very great character in an Oration, which he pronounced, when the Doctor took his degrees in the moſt ſolemn and public manner [B]. This affair being finiſhed he went to Amſterdam, where he ſeveral times

(a) An Account of the Life of Dr. John Gale, pag. 3. prefixed to his Sermons preached upon ſeveral ſubjects, in four volumes, 2d edit. London 1726, in 8vo.

(b) Ibid. pag. 6.

(c) Ibid. pag. 4.

(d) Funeral Sermon occaſioned by the death of the reverend and learned Dr. John Gale, preached Dec. 31, 1721. By John Kinch, LL. D. pag. 25. edit. London 1722, in 8vo; and A Sermon preached at Barbican in London, Dec. 24, 1721, upon the death of the Reverend Dr. John Gale. By Joſeph Burroughs pag. 25.

[A] Adrian Reland ſubjoined a noble teſtimony of his merit in a Latin Panegyric.] It concludes thus, alluding to the Carteſians, whom Dr. Gale had always oppoſed:

Vince tuos hoſtes, & murus aheneus eſto,
Ut referat laudes Anglica terra tuas.
Summe Ens perfectum cœptis magis annuat iſtis,
Ut ſæcli noſtra lucida ſtella fores.

[B] Burcher de Volder gave him a very great character in an Oration, which he pronounced, when the Doctor took his Degrees in the moſt ſolemn and public manner.] This Oration was publiſhed after de Volder's death by Dr. Boerhaave, under the following title, Burcheri de Volder Philoſophi Oratio de Novis & Antiquis, habita cum virum doctiſſimum Johannem Gale, Londin. Britan. voce Senatus Academici Lugduno Batavi more majorum pronunciaret A. L. M. & Doctorem Philoſophiæ, tertio Julii A. 1698. Poſt exceſſum Auctoris omnium ex voto edita. "If that be new, ſays he, "which has not been done for many years, which no "one of the Profeſſors in this Univerſity has ſeen in "his time; then it is new to declare a Doctor of Philo-"ſophy from this place; tho' if you conſider the cere-"monies, with which this ſolemnity is performed, it "appears antient. But I wiſh the noble and very lauda-"ble deſign of this Candidate in proſecuting his ſtudies, "was a thing cuſtomary; who, after he had applied his "mind to them, thought it his buſineſs, not accord-"ing to the new, but very bad method, to reſt ſatis-"fied with a ſlight and ſuperficial knowledge of the "liberal arts; but to look into their inmoſt receſſes "and acquaint himſelf with what lay moſt concealed "in thoſe of them, which he converſed with. Where-"fore in the firſt place, with great labour he gained "the knowledge of the Tongues, that he might af-"terward, with more eaſe and advantage apply him-"ſelf to the ſciences themſelves. For this purpoſe times viſited Monſieur Le Clerc, with whom he fixed a correſpondence (e), and ſtudied under Mr. Limborch (f). Upon his return to England he purſued his ſtudies with equal ardour, and read over the great models of antiquity, and improved his knowledge in the Oriental Languages, by which means he gained a critical ſkill in the ſacred books of the Old and New Teſtament, and digeſted them thoroughly in his mind. He alſo read over and conſidered the primitive Writers of the Chriſtian Church. After he had been in England about four years, he received a letter from the Univerſity of Leyden, offering him the degree of Doctor in Divinity, upon the condition of giving his aſſent to the Articles of Dort; which he refuſed (g). He was ſcarce entered upon his twenty ſeventh year, when he had finiſhed his Reflections on Mr. Wall's Hiſtory of Infant Baptiſm [C], an hiſtory ſo well received by men of character for learning, that it gained the Author the thanks of (e) Account of the Life, &c. pag. 8.

(f) Burrough's Sermon, pag. 25.

(g) Account, pag. 8, 9.

" he not only carefully ſtudied the Latin Tongue, but " what in this age is very rare and unuſual, the Greek " and Hebrew. I ſay nothing of the Latin, in which " he has often ſpoken publicly at London, that fa- " mous city; for you have heard with what elegance, " propriety, and force of perſuaſion he commended " the ſtudy of wiſdom. But I can by no means omit " to obſerve, that he ſo applied himſelf to the Greek " Language, as not only to underſtand it, but be able " to declaim in it publicly. To theſe he added like- " wiſe the Hebrew, thinking the knowledge of the " Greek inſufficient without this, and that he muſt de- " pend upon the credit of others for the interpretati- " on of the ſacred Writings. Furniſhed with theſe " helps, he entered upon the ſtudy of Philoſophy, " being induced to it partly by the pleaſure, which a- " riſes from inquiries into things obſcure; and partly " by the advantage, which thoſe ſtudies afford both " in life and other ſciences; and partly likewiſe as " thinking it the beſt method to cultivate his mind, " and diſpoſe it more readily and clearly to diſtinguiſh " truth from falſhood in every ſubject. And before " he had purſued theſe ſtudies full two years, (ſee, I " beſeech you, what penetration of mind, joined with " incredible diligence, is capable of performing!) he " was willing to give ſome public proof of his pro- " ficiency therein. Nor has he failed in the attempt; " for both in his private and public examinations he " diſcovered ſo acute a genius, and ſuch knowledge " of things natural, divine, and moral, that, agree- " ably to his great merit, the higheſt honours in Phi- " loſophy have been decreed to be conferred on him " in a ſolemn manner, and according to antient " cuſtom."

[C] He was ſcarce entered upon his twenty ſeventh year, when he had finiſhed his Reflections on Mr. Wall's Hiſtory of Infant-Baptiſm.] This we are informed of by the Author of the Account of his Life (1), Mr. Burroughs (2), and Dr. John Kinch (3). And Dr. Gale tells us in the Advertiſement prefixed to his Reflections, that they were written in the years 1705 and 1706, tho' they were not printed till 1711 under this title: Reflections on Mr. Wall's Hiſtory of Infant-Baptiſm. In ſeveral Letters to a Friend. London in 8vo. In the Advertiſement our Author obſerves, " that as " theſe Letters were originally deſigned for the private " peruſal of a friend, ſo it is not to be thought ſtrange, " that they were not publiſh'd ſooner, but rather that " they are publiſh'd at all; for the Author, though he " was urged to it pretty early, had no thought nor " inclination in the leaſt, to have given the public " this trouble." In the firſt Letter he obſerves, that Mr. Wall's Hiſtory is not ſo formidable as is pretended, though the beſt defence of Infant-Baptiſm, which he had ſeen, and that for thoſe reaſons, on which Mr. Wall recommends it himſelf in his Preface. He then tells us, that Mr. Wall is not much to be depended on; and that his real aim and deſign was only to eſtabliſh the Baptiſm of Infants; and that he takes all occaſions to blacken the Anti-Pædobaptiſts, diſguiſing his deſigns with pretences to moderation. That Mr. Wall endeavours to poſſeſs his Readers with an opinion of his learning by ſeveral needleſs digreſſions, and to gain reputation by quarrelling with ſeveral of the greateſt men for learning, &c. as particularly Archbiſhop Tillotſon, Biſhop Burnet, Rigaltius, Gregory Nazianzen, both father and ſon, St. Chryſoſtom, Monſr. le Clerc, and Grotius. That he has not acted the part of a faithful Hiſtorian towards the Anti-Pædobaptiſts, but ſeveral times, on no ground at all, takes for granted ſome things, merely becauſe they favour his deſign; and charges the Anti-Pædobaptiſts with whatever he had heard any one among them to have believed or ſaid. In the ſecond Letter Dr. Gale endeavours to juſtify his brethren from the charge of ſchiſm; and obſerves, that in order to an union, it would be requiſite, and I think, ſays he (4), none can except againſt it, that ſome fit perſons were choſe on both ſides, to examine the Scriptures impartially, and the Fathers of the three firſt Centuries, who followed their great Maſter thro' ſufferings, and whoſe writings are undoubtedly by far the beſt Commentary on the ſacred Books; and with theſe helps to collect from the Word of God the true doctrine and diſcipline of the primitive Catholic Church. And to what ſhould be thus ſincerely deduced, every one ſhould reſolve to conform without reſerve. And I doubt not, if a union were endeavoured on this expedient, it would be accompliſhed much more eaſily than is imagined. In the third Letter our Author remarks, that the diſpute between the Engliſh Pædobaptiſts and Anti-Pædobaptiſts may be caſt under two heads; one relating to the Mode of Baptiſm, whether it is to be adminiſtred only by dipping; and the other, who are the true ſubjects of it, whether adult perſons alone, or infants alſo. He tells us, that ſo far as the Scriptures are clear, the practice of the Anti-Pædobaptiſts is allowed to be agreeable therewith; and that therefore if they err, they are however on the ſafer ſide. He obſerves that the Greek word for baptize always ſignifies to dip only into any manner of thing, but is more commonly uſed for dipping into liquids; which obſervation he confirms from ſeveral paſſages of antient Writers. In the fourth Letter he remarks, that the Criticks conſtantly affirm the proper and genuine ſenſe of Βαπτίζω to be immergo; that Mr. Wall is conſcious, (notwithſtanding his pretence,) that the opinions of learned men are againſt him; and that whereas that Writer appeals to the Scriptures for the ſenſe of the word, it is evidently never there uſed in his ſenſe, but the contrary. In the fifth Letter he obſerves, that tho' it is very unreaſonable to appeal to the Scriptures only for the ſenſe of a word, yet it is clear from them, the Greek word muſt always ſignify to dip; that if the word Βαπτίζω were otherwiſe ever ſo ambiguous, yet as it relates to Baptiſm, it is ſufficiently determined only and neceſſarily to mean to dip, by the doctrine and practice of St. John, of the Apoſtles, and of the ſucceeding Church for many Centuries, which urged a trine immerſion. He affirms likewiſe, that the antient Church of the firſt Centuries did not practiſe affuſion; that all who were baptized in the times of the Apoſtles, were baptized by immerſion; that Clinical Affuſions do not appear to have been introduced till about 250 years after Chriſt, at which time their validity was much doubted of; and that all allow immerſion to have been inſiſted on antiently as the only regular way in all common caſes. In the ſixth Letter he proceeds to the other chief article in diſpute between the Anti-Pædobaptiſts and their Antagoniſts, relating to the perſons who are the true ſubjects of Baptiſm, whether adult perſons alone, or infants alſo. He obſerves, that Mr. Wall's attempt, tho' the beſt in its kind, falls very ſhort of anſwering the deſign of it, and that this Writer allows, it cannot be made appear from Scripture, that infants are to be baptized, and therefore recurs to theſe as the only expedients: 1. To the practice of the Jewiſh Church: 2. To the practice of the antient Chriſtians. Dr. Gale remarks upon this, that from Mr. Wall's conceſſion, that it cannot be proved from Scripture, it unavoidably follows, that it is no inſtitution of Chriſt; and that to ſuppoſe it may be included in ſome of the more general expreſſions, is only to beg the point in diſpute; and

(4) Pag. 86, 87.

(1) Pag. 9.

(2) A Sermon preached at Barbican in London, Dec. 24, 1721. upon the death of the Reverend Dr. John Gale. By Joſeph Burroughs pag. 25. edit. London 1722, in 8vo.

(3) Funeral Sermon, occaſioned by the death of the reverend and learned Dr. John Gale, preached Dec. 31, 1721. By John Kinch, LL. D. pag. 25.

of the Lower Houſe of Convocation. How conſiderable Dr. Gale's anſwer to that performance was eſteemed, even by thoſe who were not of his ſentiments, appears from hence, that Mr. Wall's Defence of his Hiſtory [D], after ſeveral years, procured him the honour of a degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Univerſity of Oxford (b). Dr. Whitby and that unleſs Mr. Wall can ſhew, that Infant-Baptiſm is ſo much as mentioned in Scripture, the Anti-Pædobaptiſts will not believe it inſtituted there. He obſerves likewiſe, that the Baptiſm of Infants is unlawful, if Chriſt has not inſtituted it; that true Proteſtants ſhould adhere to the Scripture, as the only infallible guide in all religious controverſies; and that the ſilence of the Scripture is a good argument againſt Infant-Baptiſm. In the ſeventh Letter he ſhews from Matt. xxviii. 19. that the Scripture does not leave Infant-Baptiſm ſo undetermined as ſome would pretend; and that the commiſſion neceſſarily obliges to teach all, whom it intends ſhould be baptized; and that therefore infants cannot be included in that commiſſion; and he aſſerts, that μαθητεύειν is conſtantly uſed to ſignify nothing leſs than to teach. In the eighth Letter he remarks that μαθητὴς is only ſaid of ſuch as are at leaſt capable of being taught; and that the moſt judicious have always agreed, that the word in the commiſſion particularly ſignifies to teach and inſtruct; and that this appears evidently to be the true ſenſe of the place from the authority of the Scriptures themſelves, from the practice of the Apoſtles, and from parallel places. The ſum of the Doctor's reaſoning on this head is this: that the commiſſion obliges to teach all that are to be baptized; and therefore that the Scriptures are not ſo ſilent concerning the baptizing of Infants as the Pædobaptiſts would perſuade us; ſo that if Mr. Wall ſhould prove the Jews and Chriſtians did baptize their children, the Anti-Pædobaptiſts have ſtill reaſon enough not to admit the practice. In the ninth Letter he obſerves, that Mr. Wall's aſſertions, "that "the Jews did initiate their proſelytes and their in-"fants by Baptiſm, and that the Apoſtles and primi-"tive Church baptized the infants of believing pa-"rents," are miſtakes; and that the arguments brought to prove theſe two points, are no better. Dr. Gale examines firſt Mr. Wall's pretences from the Jews in this and the following Letter, in which he endeavours to ſhew from many conſiderations, that the arguments of the Pædobaptiſts do not make it appear to have been the cuſtom of the Jews at our Saviour's time to baptize proſelytes and their children; and urges ſeveral arguments to evince the contrary. He remarks likewiſe, that even ſuppoſing the fact could be demonſtrated, it is no rule in the adminiſtration of a Chriſtian Sacrament, as being only the tradition of their Elders, and not grounded on Scripture, nor derived from Moſes. In the eleventh Letter Dr. Gale proceeds to the other kind of evidence produced by Mr. Wall, viz. the authority of the primitive Fathers, which the Doctor obſerves ought to be valued more than Monſr. Daillé and ſome others ſuppoſe. "It is an ill return, (5) Pag. 395, 396. "ſays he (5), for the great leſſons and examples of "piety they have given us, and for their having been "ſo inſtrumental in tranſmitting to us the knowledge "of our moſt holy Religion. And there is yet a "greater evil attends this method; for all the abuſes "and affronts put upon the Fathers of the firſt Cen-"turies, do in the end reflect on Chriſtianity itſelf, "which thoſe great men have handed down, and "which therefore muſt needs be in ſome degree of but "doubtful authority, if it depends upon ſufficient te-"ſtimony. It would not be difficult to defend the "writings of the Fathers from the reproaches caſt on "them by theſe men, and by Daillé their Oracle, not-"withſtanding he has taken ſuch pains in the matter, "and puſh'd it with all the vigour he could. But it "is a nice ſubject, and much too copious to be treated "here at large. I ſhall therefore only ſay, that in "many caſes the rejecting the authority of the Fathers "is a very wild extreme, which men are driven to, "only becauſe they have nothing better to ſay for "themſelves, and cannot brook to ſee their opinions "contradicted in their writings. That the Fathers "of the firſt Churches were honeſt faithful men, and "every way capable to acquaint us with the true po-"ſture of affairs in their own churches and times, "and therefore are to be depended on as far as they "relate facts within their proper cogniſance, muſt be "allowed on all hands; and I don't ſee how their "greateſt enemies can have the face to deny this." The Doctor then obſerves, that Mr. Wall's argument from the Fathers turns upon a ſuppoſition, which cannot eaſily be granted him; viz. That the primitive Church believed and practiſed nothing but what they had received from the Apoſtles themſelves. But Dr. Gale tells us, that, without any reflection on the honour and fidelity of the Fathers, their teſtimonies cannot ſupport Infant-Baptiſm, tho' they ſhould afford Mr. Wall ever ſo many and full citations; for if the Fathers only prove Fact in the Church, and not Right, and the Church was not wholly pure from innovations, how does this prove the Baptiſm of Infants was no innovation, but an inſtitution of Chriſt? And yet this is the thing our Author ſhould have done, tho' he takes no notice of it. It is irkſome to remember the inſtances of human frailty, which even the moſt antient Church was liable to. They were men ſubject to like paſſions with us, and therefore no wonder they were ſometimes in the wrong, and their zeal for God's honour was not always according to knowledge; which, tho' it might keep them from loſing the chief thing our Lord had commanded, might however expoſe them to the inconveniency of ſuperadding ſeveral things he never authorized. The Apoſtles undoubtedly kept cloſe to his directions in all things without deviation either in defect or exceſs; for they had the immediate aſſiſtance, in a moſt extraordinary manner, of the Spirit of God†. But that the Chriſtians of the very next Age made ſeveral Additions, Tertullian confeſſes in his Book de Corona. And Euſebius from Hegeſippus notes, that the Church continued all the Apoſtles times a pure Virgin and undefiled.... But when thoſe holy men were dead ....then errors began to ariſe thro' the miſtakes of other Teachers. Ὡς ἄρα μέχρι τῶν τότε χρόνων παρθένῳ καθαρᾷ καὶ ἀδιάφθορος ἔμεινεν ἡ Ἐκκλησία .... Ὡς δὲ ἱερὸς τῶν Ἀποστόλων χορὸς διάφορον εἰλήφει τὸ βίου τέλος .... τηνικαῦτα δὴ ἀθέου πλάνης τὴν Ἀρχὴν ἐλάμβανεν ἡ Σύστασις, διὰ τῆς τῶν Ἑτεροδιδασκάλων Ἀπάτης *. Dr. Gale proceeds then to diſcuſs this grand queſtion, "Whether it can be proved from the authentic pieces "of the primitive Fathers, that the Church uſed In-"fant-Baptiſm in thoſe earlieſt times?" He conſiders in this and the twelfth and thirteenth chapters the paſſages produced by Mr. Wall. He remarks in the thirteenth chapter, that in St. Cyprian's time Infant-Baptiſm was practiſed in Africa, and probably took its firſt riſe there together with Infant-Communion; that the Africans were generally men of weak underſtandings; that the Greek Church probably had not yet admitted the error; that the practice of Infant-Baptiſm began at firſt, as all innovations do, with only ſome little variations in opinion, and then paſſed to as little in practice; and ſo by very ſhort ſteps at length attained unobſerved the great reputation it has now indeed for a long time enjoyed; that this was occaſioned in ſome meaſure by a zeal, which was not always according to knowledge; and that the earlieſt Pædobaptiſts admitted children to the Lord's Supper.

(b) Kinch's Funeral Sermon, pag. 25.

† Rigaltius in Cyprian. Epiſt. 64. pag. 279. b. At Chriſtianos ævi proximè ſequentis addidiſſe pluſcula, fatetur Tertullianus Libro de Corona.

* Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 3. cap. 32.

[D] Mr. Wall's Defence of his Hiſtory.] It was printed at London 1720 in 8vo under the following title, A Defence of the Hiſtory of Infant-Baptiſm againſt the Reflections of Mr. Gale and others. With an Appendix containing the Additions and Alterations in the third Edition of the Hiſtory of Infant Baptiſm, that are moſt material. By William Wall, Author of the ſaid Hiſtory. Mr. Wall obſerves (6), that Dr. Gale might have intitled his Book Reproaches rather than Reflections; that it is made up of declamation, inſulting, reproaches and untruths (7); and "that the greateſt "part of it is either of perſonal matters. Some about "my life, temper, actions, &c. ſays Mr. Wall (8), "not relating to the cauſe; and ſome about my way "of writing, when it is too long, or too ſhort, or "too cenſorious; or catching at here and there a paſ-"ſage of my Book, which he thought might be re-"repreſented

(6) Pag. 2.

(7) Pag. 40.

(8) Pag. 53, 54.

Whitby ſpeaking of Infant-Baptiſm among the primitive Chriſtians, ſays, " that Dr. " Gale's very learned Letters prove it to be doubtful and uncertain, whether that prac- " tice did conſtantly obtain (i)." Dr. Wotton likewiſe, though he writes expreſly againſt our Author in relation to the Jewiſh Talmud, ſays * thus much of him: " He ſeems to be well acquainted with thoſe books, and is a Writer ſo well verſed in " the arts of perſuaſion, and his way of writing is generally ſo very winning, that when " I had undertaken to treat of the true authority of this moſt antient text of Jewiſh Tra- " ditions to us Chriſtians, I ſhould have been wanting to my ſubject, if I had not taken " notice of what he had ſaid upon theſe matters." Mr. Whiſton in his Primitive Infant-Baptiſm revived, confeſſes that the firſt light which he received in that affair was from Dr. Gale's obſervation upon the paſſage of Irenæus, which laid the foundation of what he wrote upon that ſubject. The Doctor was preparing an Anſwer to Dr. Wall's Reply, when he was cut off by death [E]. He began ſtatedly to preach about the thirty fifth year of his age [F], and was choſen one of the Miniſters of the Baptiſt Congregation in Paul's Alley near Barbican, where his Sermons were prodigiouſly reſorted to by perſons of all perſuaſions (l) [G]. From July the 3d 1715 to Feb. the 10th $171\frac{5}{6}$ he was Chairman of a Society for promoting Primitive Chriſtianity, which met weekly at the Primitive Library at Mr. Whiſton's Houſe in Croſs-Street Hatton-Garden (m). Some time before his death he had

(i) Conſtanter obtinuiſſe, rem certè dubiam & incertam eſſe, ex Johannis Gale Literis ad invidiam doctis conſtabit. Whitbeii Diſſertat. de S. Script. Interpretatione, Præfat. § 5.

* Miſcellaneous Diſcourſes, vol. 1. cap. 8. edit. London 1718, 8vo.

(l) See The Plain Dealer, vol. 1. num. 52. for Sept. 18, 1724, 2d edit. London 1734, in 8vo.

(m) Hiſtorical Memoirs of the Life of Dr. Samuel Clarke. By William Whiſton, M. A. pag. 96. edit. London 1730, in 8vo.

" repreſented ſo as to put me out of favour with the " Anti-Pædobaptiſts (as are his firſt two chapters, which " he calls my Character;) or elſe on another ſubject, " viz. not the age or time of receiving Baptiſm, but " the way of adminiſtring it, with which I had med- " dled very little, (as are his three next,) yet he gave to " the whole the title of Reflections on my Book. And " tho' he goes no farther in any methodical way of an- " ſwering, than to the Introduction, and five firſt chap- " ters of my Book (not nigh one tenth part of it) " which anſwer begins at his ninth chapter (and he " has but thirteen in all) yet it has gone among the " men of his party as an Anſwer to it. He deals " not much with argument (which the others (9) aim " at) but writes in a way of declaiming and flouriſh, " and much addicted to reproaching, taking a pride " in ſhewing how eaſily and naturally he can expreſs " a contempt of his adverſary, or of any reaſon or " argument. He writes in a ſtyle indeed ſufficiently " fluent, and with a good ſtock of philological learn- " ing; but does not keep very cloſe to the rules of " candour, modeſty, or truth, but delights in vaunt- " ing, inſulting, ſlighting, and laying odious and " falſe imputations, not on me only, but on the Clergy " of England in general, and indeed our whole Church; " as that was a time, in which ſome people found " their advantage by raiſing ſuch ſlanders. His talent " in Rhetoric (which is not inconſiderable) he uſes to " falſe colouring, and gaining his point (as he calls it) " by wreſted repreſentations of things and paſſages. Of " his impertinencies (to name but one ſort of them) an " unparallelled inſtance is, his picking up ſtories of " things ſaid or done by me before he was born, and " naming the people, whoſe names one would never " have thought to have ſeen in print. Nothing, thanks " be to God, of which one need be aſhamed. But it " is a great ſhame to ſee ſuch impertinent ſtuff brought " into a controverſy of Religion. Of his untruths, " I would beforehand inſtance in one flagrant and ma- " niſeſt one, (which, as I ſhall ſhew, he has affirmed " above twenty times over) his ſaying, that I have in " my book yielded and owned, that there is no Scrip- " ture-proof for Infant-Baptiſm; though near half his " Book be ſpent in refuting (as well as he can) thoſe " proofs, which I brought from Scripture. The Pro- " vince, which I had undertaken, was the Hiſtory of " the Times near following; but I did not altogether " omit thoſe of Scripture (10)." Mr. Wall afterwards obſerves (11), that Dr. Gale's third Letter was pub- liſhed a good while before the reſt, as a ſpecimen of what the Book would be; and that the Anti-Pædobap- tiſts ſeemed very well pleaſed and much taken with it, and encouraged him to go forward: which was an in- ſtance of very good nature; ſince it is ſo little to the pur- poſe, that if one were to expoſe him among judicious men, one would deſire them to read this chapter. But he is to be commended for doing them more juſtice, and making the goods to be delivered better than the ſample. For the following chapters are really ſomething more to the purpoſe and of a better ſtrain. Always except the VIth and IXth, in one of which he brings againſt ſome paſ- ſages in my Book an accuſation ſo palpably falſe, that every Reader muſt cry ſhame on him. In the other he brings (not trifling arguments out of Poets and Plays, but) the moſt loathſome and execrable blaſphemies out of ſome Jewiſh Libels, without any relation to the queſtion, with- out any occaſion given, without any advantage to his ar- gument, without any cauſe that can compenſate for the miſchief of publiſhing ſuch ſcandals, except a pride, which he may have in giving his admirers to underſtand that he is maſter of that ſort of reading With regard to Dr. Gale's fifth Letter, Mr. Wall tells us (12), " that " it ſeems to have been written, not by Mr. Gale, but " by ſome body elſe; and I think I have heard, " that ſome Dutch Miniſters have had a hand in this " work, ſome compoſing one part ſome another; ſo " that he does well to call them Letters."

(9) Mr. Tho. Emlyn in his Piece, intitled, Mr. Wall's Hiſtory of Baptiſm improved, London 1709 in 8vo. and Mr. Whiſton in his Primitive Infant-Baptiſm reviv'd.

(10) Ibid. pag. 54, 55.

(11) Pag. 100, 101.

(12) Pag. 126.

[E] The Doctor was preparing an Anſwer to Dr. Wall's Reply, when he was cut off by death.] This we are informed of by Mr. Burroughs, who tells us (13), that he had entered upon it a little before his death: and by Dr. Kinch (14); and the Author of the Account of his Life (15), who quotes the following paſſage from a Letter of Dr. Gale to his father: " Dr. Wall has written A Defence of his Hiſtory of In- " fant-Baptiſm, in which he has treated me very " roughly, and has endeavoured to enrage the Clergy, " as well as our own people, againſt me; beſides " which there appears not to be much in his Book. " However I am preparing an Anſwer."

(13) Sermon, pag. 26.

(14) Funeral Sermon, pag. 26.

(15) Pag. 20, 21.

[F] He begun ſtatedly to preach about the thirty fifth year of his age.] This appears from the Account of his Life (16); and Mr. Burroughs obſerves (17), that " he came later into the practice of preaching, than " was agreeable to the wiſhes of thoſe, who knew his " abilities for that work. But I have ſeen ſufficient " reaſon to aſcribe ſeveral years of his ſilence to the " goodneſs of his judgment, in reſolving not to come " into conſtant exerciſe too early; and the remainder " to a heavy burden of domeſtic affairs, which preſ- " ſed him for ſome years before he began ſtated " preaching, and prevented his coming into public " ſervice at a time when himſelf was inclined to it, " and when he might have been very uſeful to him- " ſelf and others."

(16) Pag. 11.

(17) Sermon, pag. 27.

[G] His Sermons were prodigiouſly reſorted to by per- ſons of all perſuaſions.] Dr. Kinch tells us (18), that " in his preaching, though he highly deſerved " the praiſe and commendation of his hearers, yet " what he ſought was their profit and advantage. It " was pleaſing and agreeable to a polite and ingenious " audience, which uſually attended him, and at the " ſame time plain and eaſy to perſons of a meaner " capacity; ſo that in his diſcourſes there was in- " ſtruction for the ignorant, and entertainment for " the moſt learned and judicious. His deportment " in the pulpit was eaſy, yet attended with a ſeriouſ- " neſs and gravity becoming the ſolemnity of the " Work, in which he was engaged. His method was " exact, his ſtyle elegant, but unaffected, his reaſon- " ing clear and ſtrong, and his arguments juſt and " nervous, which by his happy managing them, con- " ſtantly diſcovered freſh beauties to his hearers. " His voice was clear and melodious, which at once had formed several great designs, as particularly to go through an Exposition of the New Testament in the Pulpit [H]; to facilitate the knowledge of the Oriental Languages; and to give the world a Translation of the Septuagint, according to the edition published by Dr. Grabe at Oxford; as also an History of the Notion of Original Sin, wherein he intended to trace that opinion from its first rise, "and to have shewn upon "how little ground a God of infinite goodness and justice has been represented as do(n) Account, pag. 20. "ing that, which a good and wise man would have abhorred (n)." He embraced firmly the doctrine of the Trinity; "and did not run into this belief from any prejudices "of education, or bias put upon his mind in his youth; having been early introduced "into the conversation of those, who examined the several doctrines of the Christian "Revelation with the utmost freedom, amongst whom were some (foreigners as well as (o) Ibid. pag. 13. "others) of the first rank for learning and abilities (o)." He was seized by a slow fever in December 1721, which in about three weeks proved fatal to him. He died the latter end of that month. He bore his sickness with that calmness and patience, which became a man, who firmly believed the superintendence of a good and wise God, to whose Pro-

(18) Funeral Sermon, pag. 26.

(p) Ibid. pag. 21. vidence he always resigned himself and his affairs (p). We shall give his character in the Note [I]. He was honoured with the friendship of several eminent persons, particularly the Lord Chief Justice King, afterwards Lord Chancellor, and Dr. Hoadly, now Bishop

"charmed the ear, raised and fired the imagination, "and could not easily fail to gain the affections, and "engage a reasonable mind, not wholly sunk in sin, "and bound down with vitious habits, to receive the "Truth in Love... He strictly adhered to the Scrip-"tures as the perfect and only rule of his faith and "practice, and was a zealous asserter and patron "of universal liberty, where it tended not to licen-"tiousness; a warm opposer of all human impositions "in matters of Religion; and used earnestly to press "all Christians to stand fast in that liberty, where-"with Christ had made them free.

[H] To go through an Exposition of the New Testament in the pulpit.] He had so far prepared for this Work, that he had drawn up the Introduction to it, which
(19) Pag. 13, & seqq. is inserted in the Account of his Life (19), and in which he observes, that "his whole aim should be to "lay before his auditors the most sacred and awful "rule of our faith and practice, without any partial "disguises, and to the utmost of his power assist "them in opening their minds to receive and own "those great truths, which are able, says he, to make "you wise unto salvation; that you may upon a "mature and due consideration of things, judge for "yourselves with all that just liberty and true free-"dom of thought, which so well becomes all men, "and is the indispensable duty of every Christian, "and upon which it is the peculiar glory of the "Christian Religion to have spread itself through the "whole world... To give you what help I can in "this very important business, I intend to take this "as the most proper method for your assistance and "instruction. I will take in order intire portions of "Scripture, which comprehend a full and complete "sense. This I would, if it were proper, read to "you in the original language; but that not being "convenient, I shall read the common version, and "consider it carefully, comparing it with the paral-"lel places, where the same thing is handled, the "same words or phrases used, or any thing which "may give light; and shall consult also the several "opinions of learned men, with the reasons on "which they build; and compare the antient versions "in the learned languages, together with the inter-"pretations of the first Christians, and such remarks "from the antient Historians, and such accounts of "the Jewish and Greek Antiquities, as may give us "any light, at this distance from the time and place, "wherein the Scriptures were at first written. After "having thus examined every thing, which may "seem to need examination, from the whole I will "endeavour to give a very impartial and unbiassed "Translation and Paraphrase, and herein draw out "and make some rules and maxims for the conduct "of life, in order to fasten all upon your minds, "and leave it to your serious and diligent considera-"tion. Before I do this, I shall in general prove the "truth of the Christian rule. This comprehends, 1, "That the Books were written by those, whose "names they bear, and such as could not but know "whether what they writ was true or not. 2. That "they could not design to impose upon us. And I "will settle the authority of each Book just before I "enter upon the exposition of it."

[I] We shall give his character in the Note.] Dr. John Kinch tells us (20), that he entertained a sincere and hearty respect for all good men; and that the different apprehensions between him and other Christians did not in the least alienate his affections from them. "He had an even and composed temper, which dis-"covered itself in the constant serenity of his coun-"tenance. The different turns of his affairs seemed "to make little or no impression upon his mind. "He was truly pious, but without any thing of osten-"tation. He was a person of great integrity, and "preferred the peace of his own mind in the answer "of a good conscience, to all other considerations. "His thoughts were so fully employed about affairs "of the highest consequence, that he neglected se-"veral opportunities of advancing his temporal inte-"rests. He was a kind friend; and made it his "business to instruct and inform, to advise, and on "proper occasions to reprove those, with whom he "conversed; which most difficult office of friendship "he so well managed, that none could be offended "with him. He abounded greatly in those fruits of "the spirit, mentioned by the Apostle, Gal. v. "22, 23. Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, good-"ness, faith, meekness, and temperance. But that virtue, "wherein he peculiarly excelled, was his great humility. "Notwithstanding his valuable and uncommon abili-"ties, both natural and acquired, he always appeared "humble and modest, mild and courteous; and was "so far from having a vain and proud conceit of "his own endowments, that he knew how (without "the affected vanity of lessening his own qualifications) "to esteem others better than himself." The Author of the Account of the Life of our Author observes (21), that he was not less amiable, nor did he appear to less ad-vantage, in his private, than in his public character. As to his person, his countenance expressed the innocence, as well as greatness of his soul. It had nothing of that perplexity, which a confused or vitious mind often throws upon the face; but always appeared with that sweet calm, which springs from inward peace and sa-tisfaction of mind. He was rather tall than otherwise, and had a manly gracefulness, exceeded by nothing but his negligence in adorning it. His conversation was with the utmost sweetness and candour; and he was such a companion as a wise man would wish for, re-trenching all useless discourse, and saying much in few words. He was affable and courteous to all. He con-sidered that poverty made the heart tender, and apt to feel neglect; and therefore through fear of offending, he shewed great courtesy to the mean and despised. To the ignorant he would appear to know no more than would instruct them. With the afflicted he would sympathize, the indigent he would assist, as far as he was able, and pro-voke the wealthy to be rich in good works. "A tho-"rough knowledge of nature, joined to that of Re-"ligion, filled his mind with generous and noble "principles, and gave him that frankness and open-"ness of heart so necessary to complete a good and "amiable character. No man was ever more ready

(20) Funeral Sermon occasioned by the Death of the late reverend and learned Dr. John Gale, preached December 31, 1721, pag. 27, & seqq.

(21) Pag. 18, & seqq.

"to Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Dr. Samuel Bradford, late Biſhop of Rocheſter, the latter of whom declared in writing his eſteem for our Author "on account of his good underſtanding, "great learning, candour, and largeneſs of mind (q)." He publiſhed A Thankſgiving Sermon preached November the 5th 1713, on Pſalm cv. 1 and 15. which paſſed through ſeveral editions, and was reprinted in a Collection of his Sermons printed at London in four volumes in 8vo; to which is prefixed an Account of his Life, which was altered in ſeveral places in the ſecond edition.

(q) Ibid. pag. 10, 11.

"to do good from more exalted views than himſelf. "His whole ſoul was taken up with a ſtrong deſire "of infuſing into men a love of God and of virtue. "Hence have I known him, ſays the Writer above quoted, "expreſs more concern upon reflecting on the ways of "men, and the fearful conſequences of their vices, "than upon any other ſubject whatſoever. When I "look upon men's behaviour, (he once ſaid) I imagine "eternity a thing to be trifled with; but when I look "upon eternity, the behaviour of men aſtoniſhes me. He "was maſter of a ſolid morality, founded on conclu- "ſions drawn from the reaſon, nature, and order of "things; and which, ſtrengthened by Revealed Reli- "gion, made him proof againſt corruption and vice, "and led him to the practice of every virtue. From "this root ſprung his piety to God, his juſtice and "charity towards men, his affability and forgiveneſs "of injuries, his temperance and remarkable humi- "lity, his meekneſs in proſperity, and his patience in "adverſity. To ſum up all, in fourteen years con- "verſe with him, I never knew him maſtered by "anger, or diſturbed by any irregular paſſions. He "had been long uſed to ſubject himſelf to reaſon, "and vice appeared the hardeſt maſter a man could "ſerve. His virtues were built upon a rock, and "nothing could ſhake or remove them." The Au- thor of a Letter dated at London and printed in the Plain-Dealer (22), has given a very advan- tageous character of him under the name of Fa- vellus, and obſerves, that his character was a com- pound of all the good characters belonging to a Chriſtian, to a Divine, to a Gentleman. He had a moſt extenſive genius, which with his own education and induſtry made vaſt acquirements in all ſorts of Theological Literature. This will appear to a man of any ſagacity, that makes uſe of that and his Sermons, when publiſhed, which are now printing by ſubſcription. The firſt of thoſe Sermons that was preached in my hearing, gave me a moſt ſurprizing.... pleaſure.... in hearing at once a Demoſthenes, and an Euclid, a Chryſoſtom and a Bentley all met together, all ſpeaking in this accompliſhed Di- vine, who was himſelf a moſt powerful and moſt pa- thetic Orator, a moſt exact Reaſoner, a moſt perſua- ſive Theologer; in one word, an univerſal conſummate ſcholar... It is rare, remarkably rare to meet with the man, that writes, or indeed is capable of writing in that cloſe, that mathematical, that concatenating way he ex- celled in; or that has the ſame ſagacity in pointing out the intricacies of an argument, together with the ſame acuteneſs, the ſame clearneſs in removing them, putting prejudice to the bluſh, reconciling ſcripture to ſcripture, making error appear to be error, and truth to be truth. The Author then ſtyles him "an eminent Miniſter, an "eminent Writer, great in learning, great in good- "neſs, great in renown, of a meek, humble, win- "ning diſpoſition, a ſweet, ſober, edifying converſa- "tion, of a blameleſs unſpotted character, of ſtrict "Orthodoxy... living admirably in every thing, ad- "mirably every where, at home ſtudious, at home "frugal in all his oeconomy; abroad ſeldom, except "at his Church." T.

(22) Vol. 1. N° 52. for Sept. 18, 1724, 2d edit. London 1734, in 8vo.

GALES (PETER) in Latin Galeſius, a learned Spaniard [A], "who being put to "the rack at Rome, upon ſuſpicion of being a Proteſtant, loſt one of his eyes by it. "Afterwards coming to Geneva, he there taught Philoſophy, and was ſome time after "Rector of the College of Guienne at Bourdeaux. Having left that place on account "of the envy they bore him, he quitted France and went into Flanders, where being "diſcovered to be a Proteſtant, and put into the hands of the Spaniards his countrymen, "the mildeſt treatment he met at their hands was to be burnt, by a Decree of the Inqui- "ſition. This Galés had good books, and even ſome manuſcripts (a) [B]." It was the Leaguers who took him, and delivered him up to the Spaniards. See Meurſius (b).

(a) Tranſcribed from Colomiés, Melanges Hiſtoriques, pag. 73, 74, who without doubt had copied Meurſius, Athen. Bat. pag. 333.

(b) Meurſius, Athen. Bat. pag. 353.

[A] A learned Spaniard.] Florimond de Remond (1) makes him an Italian; but he is miſtaken.

[B] He had... ſome manuſcripts.] "Caſaubon, "who knew him at Geneva, ſpeaks in his works (2) "of ſome which he had communicated to him, and "even commends his conjectures. Cujacius, in his "Obſervations (3) calls him Doctiſſimum & acutiſſi- "mum virum; i. e. A moſt learned and acute Man, "upon account of a privilege of the Emperor Juſtinian "which he had furniſhed him with; and Father Labbe, "in his Bibliotheque of manuſcripts, cites (4) Orientii "Monita in Bibliothecâ Galeſianâ reperta (5)."

(1) Traité de l'Antechriſt, chap. 18. apud Colomiés, Melanges Hiſtoriques, pag. 73. (2) On Theocritus of the Geneva Edition: On Diogenes Laertius, pag. 59, 93, 105, 118, 119, of the Edition of 1594: On Sueton. pag. 9. and in his Preface to Athenæus, apud Colomiés, ibid. In the Preface to Athenæus we muſt read, Ejus etiam Codicem vidimus nos, inter alios neutiquam vulgares Petri Galeſii Hiſpani Libros, and not Gelaſii. (3) Lib. 10. cap. 11. apud Colomiés, Mélang. Hiſtoriq. pag. 73. (4) Pag. 63. apud eundem, ibid. (5) Colomiés, ibid.

☞GALILEI (GALILEO), an eminent Mathematician and Aſtronomer in Italy in the ſeventeenth Century, was born at Piſa, according to Vittorio Siri (a), or at Florence, according to Janus Nicius Erythræus (b), on the 19th of February 1564 (c). His fa- ther's name was Vincenzo Galilei [A]. According to the inclination of his own genius he

(a) Il Mercurio, ovvero Hiſtoria de correnti tempi, tom. 2. lib. 3. pag. 1720.

(b) Pinacotheca, pag. 279. edit. Lipſiæ 1712, in 8vo.

(c) Siri, ubi ſupra.

[A] His father's name was Vincenzo Galilei.] Tho- mas Saluſbury Eſq; in his Life of our Author (1), publiſh- ed in the ſecond Tome (2) of his Mathematical Collecti- ons and Tranſlations, printed at London 1665 in fol. tells us, that Vincenzo was a Nobleman of Florence, of conſiderable fortune, and eminent for his elaborate works; particularly five Dialogues concerning Har- mony and the Meaſures and Tones thereof, with Rules for compoſing, and other practical parts of antient and modern Muſic. The firſt Book is intitled, Foromimo, o Dialogo, nel quale ſi contengono le vere & neceſſarie Regole di intavolare la Muſica nel Lutto, Venice 1569 in fol. He wrote likewiſe a Defence of it, intitled, Dialogo della Muſica Antica & Moderna in ſuo Difeſo contra Joſeffo Zarlino, Florence 1602 in fol. Janus Nicius Erythræus informs us (3), that our Galileo Ga- lilei was born illegitimate: Florentiæ nobili ac vetere, non tamen legitimo toro natus. But Mr. Saluſbury in his Life of Galileo (4) obſerves, that in ſeveral Letters expreſly written to him concerning our Author from Padua, Florence, and Piſa, &c. he found not the leaſt word, upon which to ground any belief of this aſper- ſion; which Erythræus might caſt on him, in order to gratify the Barberini his patrons, who were implaca-

(1) Lib. 1. cap. 2. Sect. 2.

(2) Almoſt the whole impreſſion of this ſecond Tome was deſtroy- ed in the Fire of London in 1666. The only copy perhaps now extant, is in the curious Libra- ry of William Jones Eſq; F.R.S.

(3) Pinacotheca, pag. 279. edit. Lipſiæ 1712.

(4) Lib. 1. cap. 2. Sect. 3.

he gave himſelf wholly to the ſtudy of Euclid, and afterwards of other Mathematicians of beſt eſteem (d); and in this he made a vaſt progreſs almoſt intirely by the effort of his own genius (e). In 1592 he was made Profeſſor of Mathematics in the Univerſity of Padua, where he made his inaugural Oration Dec. 7, 1592 new ſtyle (f) [B], and continued in this poſt to the year 1611 (g), when Coſmo II, Grand Duke of Tuſcany ſent for him to be Profeſſor at Piſa, and ſettled on him a very conſiderable ſtipend (h). That Prince afterwards invited him to Florence, and gave him the title of Principal Philoſopher and Mathematician to his Highneſs (i). His aſſertion of the earth's motion expoſed him to the ſevereſt cenſure of the Inquiſitors, who obliged him to retract that opinion [C]. Being at Venice he was informed that a glaſs was found out in Holland, by means of which objects at a great diſtance were rendered as viſible as if they were near at hand. Without ever ſeeing this inſtrument he begun to conſider what the manner of its form might be, and how it might be made; and at laſt invented the Teleſcope (k), by the application of which to the heavens he made many important diſcoveries [D]. During the laſt eight years of his life he lived out of Florence, partly in ſome towns near that City, and partly at Sienna. By his continual obſervations of the heavens, and many injuries which he received by the nocturnal air, his ſight was much weakened; and three years before his death he became quite blind. He bore this misfortune with a true philoſophical reſignation, diverting himſelf with conſtant meditation and enquiry; and had prepared a great heap of materials, and begun to dictate his conceptions, when by a diſtemper of three months continuance inſenſibly decaying, he expired at Arcetri near Florence January the 8th 1642 new ſtyle, being ſeventy ſeven years ten months, and twenty days old (l). He wrote ſeveral works [E]. He was little of ſtature, but of a venerable

(d) Siri, ubi ſupra.

(e) Life of Galileo Galilei. By Thomas Salusbury Eſq; lib. 1. cap. 5. Sect. 1. publiſhed in Mr. Saluſbury's Mathematical Collections and Tranſlations: the ſecond Tome. London 1665 in fol.

(f) Gaſſend. de Vita Tychonis Brahei, lib. 4. pag. 147. edit. Paris 1654 in 4to.

(g) Saluſbury, lib. 2. Sect. 1.

(h) Jan. Nicius Erythræus, Pinacotheca, pag. 281.

(i) Siri, ubi ſupra.

(k) Idem, ibid.

(l) Idem, ibid.

ble enemies of Galileo. Sir John Finch in a Letter to Mr. Saluſbury dated at Leghorn April 17th 1664, writes thus: "The ordinary concernments of Galileo's "Life are ſo variouſly diſcourſed of in this place, "where all are either his profeſſed friends or enemies, "that it is no eaſy matter to be reſolved, whether he "were legitimate or not; men's paſſions, not the love "of truth, guiding their language."

[B] In 1592 he was made Profeſſor of Mathematics in the Univerſity of Padua, where he made his inaugural Oration Decemb. 7th 1592, new ſtyle.] Vittorio Siri (5) tells us, that "the firſt employment, which he undertook, was that of Profeſſor of Mathematics in "the Univerſity of Piſa, and then in that of Padua." But this is a miſtake, ſince he was not made Profeſſor at Piſa till the year 1611 (6).

(5) Il Mercurio, ovvero Hiſtoria de correnti Tempo, tom. 2. lib. 3. pag. 1720.

(6) Saluſbury's Life of Galileo Galilei, lib. 2. cap. 3. and lib. 3. cap. 2. Sect. 1.

[C] His aſſertion of the Earth's Motion expoſed him to the ſevereſt cenſure of the Inquiſitors, who obliged him to retract his opinion.] In 1615 he was cited to Rome to appear before the holy Office, and charged with hereſy for maintaining theſe two propoſitions, which they cenſured: I. Solem eſſe in centro mundi, & immobilem motu locali, eſt propoſitio abſurda & falſa in Philoſophia, & formaliter hæretica, quia eſt expreſſe contraria ſacræ Scripturæ. II. Terram non eſſe centrum mundi, nec immobilem, ſed moveri motu etiam diurno, eſt item Propoſitio abſurda, & falſa in Philoſophia, & theologicè conſiderata, ad minus erronea in fide. He was detained in the Inquiſition till February 1616; on the 25th of which month he had ſentence pronounced againſt him; and he was commanded by a Decree of the Inquiſitors to renounce his heretical opinions, and not to defend them either by word or writing, or inſinuate them into the minds of any perſon. Nor was he diſcharged till he had promiſed to conform himſelf to this order. But upon his publiſhing at Florence in 1632 his Dialogi delle due maſſime Siſteme del Mondo, Tolemaico & Copernicano, he was again cited before the holy Office, by whoſe order he was committed to the priſon of that Office at Rome; and upon the 22d of June, new ſtyle, that year the congregation convened, and in his preſence pronounced ſentence againſt him and his Book; and obliged him to abjure his errors in the moſt ſolemn manner, committing him to the priſon of the holy Office during pleaſure, and commanding him as a ſaving penance for three years to come to repeat once a week the ſeven Penitential Pſalms; but reſerving to themſelves the power of moderating, changing, and taking away, altogether or in part, the abovementioned puniſhment and penance. He was diſcharged from his confinement in 1634; but the impreſſion of his Dialogues of the Syſtem of the World was burnt at Rome (7).

(7) Idem, lib. 3. cap. 4.

[D] By the application of which to the Heavens he made many important diſcoveries.] He diſcovered the Surface of the Moon not to be ſmooth, but rough, and full of prominencies and cavities. He obſerved a new Motion of Trepidation, the Moon appearing to him ſometimes on one ſide, and ſometimes on the other. He found that Venus imitated the aſpects of the Moon, appearing now round, then one half, and afterwards forked. He demonſtrated a very ſenſible change in magnitude in the apparent diameters of Venus and Mars; a matter of no ſmall conſequence in the Theories of Copernicus and Tycho. He diſcovered ſpots in the Sun, which he ſaw were not fixed and conſtant, like thoſe of the Moon, but changeable, appearing as it were to move about the Sun. He found that about Jupiter four other Planets were moving, never before diſcovered by any perſon, which in honour of the Houſe of Medici, the Mecenas of all learned men, and his great patron, he called by the name of the Medicean Stars. By the very frequent eclipſes of theſe Stars, he had thoughts of finding out the Longitude much better than by the Lunar Eclipſes; upon which he compoſed his Tables of their Motions, leaving them with Vincenzo Renieri, a Mathematician of Piſa, who correcting and perfecting them, intended to commit them to the preſs. He imagined, that the Planet Saturn was tricorporate, or compoſed of three bodies; one ſpherical, eſpecially that in the midſt, and two other leſſer ones on the ſides. He demonſtrated, that the Via Lactea or milky Way, and the nubilous Stars, are no other than a multitude of little Stars ſo near each other, and ſo ſmall, that the naked eye cannot diſtinguiſh them ſeparately. All theſe obſervations were made by Galileo in a few years (8).

(8) Siri, ubi ſupra.

[E] He wrote ſeveral Works.] In giving an account of them we ſhall follow the method of the Catalogue, which Menoleſſi has prefixed to the two volumes publiſhed by him at Bologna in 4to under the title of L'Opere di Galileo Galilei Linceo, Nobile Fiorentino, gia Lettore delle Mathematiche nella Univerſita di Piſa & di Padoua, di poi Sopraordinaria nello ſtudio di Piſa, Primario Filoſopho, e Mathematico del' ſereniſſimo Gran Duca di Toſcana: dedicate al ſereniſſimo Ferdinando II. Gran Duca. Theſe two volumes are divided by Menoleſſi, the firſt into ten, and the ſecond into ſeventeen Treatiſes; and ſeven of the pieces in the latter volume were never before printed. Though theſe 27 Tracts be not all written by Galileo, yet they relate to him, being written in defence of him againſt ſeveral pieces publiſhed againſt his doctrine and obſervations. The firſt piece in the firſt volume is Le Operazioni del Compaſſi Geometrico & militare, written by Galileo, and printed at Padua in 1606, and afterwards at Straſburg, and by Matthias Bernegger in 1635 with Notes, and laſtly twice at Padua by Frambotto. The ſecond piece is Matthias Bernegger's Annotations on Galileo's Operazioni del Compaſſi. The third is Baldeſſar Capra's Uſus & Fabrica Circini cujuſdam Proportionis; per quem omnia fere tum Euclidis, tum Mathematicorum venerable aſpect, and vigorous conſtitution. His converſation was affable, and free, and full of pleaſantry. He took great delight in Architecture and Painting, and deſigned extremely well. He played admirably on the Lute. He took great pleaſure in Huſbandry, when he ſpent any part of his time in the country (m). His learning was very extenſive. Two qualifications, amongſt others, were obſerved to be wonderfully met in him, which ſeldom unite in other perſons, clearneſs and acuteneſs of wit. Monſieur Leibnitz in his Demonſtrationes novæ de Reſiſtentia ſolidorum (n) tells us, "that "from the time of Archimedes there was nothing done in mechanical Geometry till Galileo, "who being a man of excellent judgment and great ſkill in the moſt abſtruſe parts of "Geometry, firſt extended the boundaries of that Science, and began to reduce the re-"ſiſtance of ſolid bodies to the laws of it." Sir John * Finch in a letter to Thomas Saluſbury Eſq; dated at Leghorn April the 17th 1664 (o), obſerves, that many of his works

(m) Idem, ibid.

(n) Printed in the Acta Eruditorum Menſis Julii 1684, pag. 319.

(o) Communicated by William Jones Eſq; F. R. S.

Mathematicorum omnium Problemata facili negotio reſolvuntur; printed at Padua 1607. The fourth is intitled, The Defence of Galileo Galilei, againſt the calumnies and impoſtures of Baldeſſar Capra, printed at Venice in 1607. The fifth is, A Diſcourſe addreſſed to the moſt ſerene Coſmo II, Grand Duke of Tuſcany, concerning the ſwimming of bodies upon, and their ſubmerſion in water; twice printed at Florence in 1612. The ſixth is An Apologetical Diſcourſe of Ludovico delle Colombe concerning the laſt mentioned Diſcourſe of Galilei; wherein he endeavours to defend Ariſtotle againſt our Author. This Book was printed in Italian at Florence 1613. The ſeventh is Conſiderations of Vincenzio di Gratia upon the Diſcourſe of Galileo abovementioned. The eighth is An Anſwer to the Objections of Sign. Ludovico delle Colombe, and Sign. Vincenzo di Gratia, againſt the Treatiſe of Sign. Galileo Galilei: written by Benedetto Caſtelli, and printed in Italian in 1615. The ninth is Galileo's Mechanics; of the benefits derived from the ſcience of Mechanics, and from its inſtruments; together with a fragment concerning Percuſſion: printed in French by Merſennus at Paris 1634 in the firſt tome of Merſennus's Works. The tenth and laſt tract of the firſt volume of Menoleſſi's Edition is The Ballance of Galileo, in which imitating Archimedes's Problem of the Crown, he ſhews how to find the proportion of Alloy or mixt Metals; and how to make the ſaid inſtrument. To this are added, Domenico Mantovani's Annotations upon the ſaid Ballance. Galileo wrote the two laſt Treatiſes in 1586, and uſed to read them to his ſcholars, among other pieces concerning Mechanics and Statics, till 1593. Tho. Saluſbury Eſq; has tranſlated them into Engliſh, and publiſhed them among his Mathematical Collections and Tranſlations. The firſt Treatiſe of the ſecond Volume of Menoleſſi's Edition is Galileo's Sydereus Nuncius, printed in Latin at Venice 1610, and reprinted the ſame year at Paris, Francfort, and Prague with a Diſſertation of John Kepler. The ſecond Treatiſe is, The Continuation of the Nuncius Sydereus of Galileo: or an Eſſay of the Hiſtory of his laſt Obſervations of Saturn, Mars, Venus, and the Sun; together with his Opinion concerning the Light of the fixed Stars and Planets. This was collected from Letters between him and his correſpondents. The third is, A Letter of Galilei concerning the Trepidation of the Moon, lately diſcovered by him; written to Alphonſo Antonini, and dated Feb. 20, 1638, new ſtyle; with Antonini's Anſwer. The fourth is Galileo's Diſcourſe of the Solar Spots in three Letters to Marcus Velſerus, dated May 4th, Aug. 14th, and December 1ſt, 1612: with a Poſtſcript of the ſame Author, and the Predictions and Ephemerides for two months following of the Poſitions and Periods of the Medicean Planets. Printed in Italian at Rome in 1613. The fifth is intitled, De Maculis Solaribus tres Epiſtolæ. De iiſdem & ſtellis circa Jovem errantibus Diſquiſitio ad Marcum Velſerum, Aug. Vindel. Duum Virum: Præf. Apellis poſt Tabulam latentis. Written by Chriſtopher Scheiner the Jeſuit, and printed with the laſt mentioned Letters of Galileo at Rome in 1613. The ſixth is A Collection of certain Paſſages extracted from ſome original Letters of ſeveral perſons of honour, written upon ſundry occaſions to Galileo. The ſeventh is in Latin, and intitled, De tribus Cometis Anni 1618 Diſputatio Aſtronomica publicè habita in Collegio Romano Societatis Jeſu ab uno ex Patribus ejuſdem Societatis; written by Horatius Graſſus, and publiſhed in 1619. The eighth is an Oration on the ſame ſubject by a Diſciple of our Author, which is intitled, A Diſcourſe of Comets by Mario Guiducci, delivered by him in the Academy at Florence, and printed in 1619. The ninth is the famous Italian piece called Il Saggiatore, written by Galileo in form of a Letter to Virginio Ceſarini in vindication of Guiducci's Diſcourſe of Comets againſt Lothario Sarſi's * Libra Aſtronomica & Philoſophica. This was printed at Rome in 1623, and contains a compleat account of the Phyſiology and Aſtronomy of our Author. The tenth was publiſhed in Italian, ſoon after the Libra of Sarſi, under the title of A Letter of Mario Guiducci to Tarquinio Galluzzi S. J. in which he juſtifies himſelf againſt the aſperſions caſt upon him by the ſaid Sarſi in his Libra; dated at Florence June 20th 1620. The eleventh is, Ex Libro inſcripto, Letheoſphoros ſeu de Lapide Bononienſi Fortunii Liceti Philoſophi V. C. Caput quinquageſimum de Lunâ ſubobſcurâ Luce prope Conjunctiones & in Deliquiis obſervata, digreſſio Phyſico-Mathematica. The twelfth is, A Letter of Galileo to Prince Leopold of Tuſcany, examining the fiftieth Chapter of Licetus's Letheoſphoros. The thirteenth is, De Lunarium Montium Altitudine, Problema Mathematicum per habitum Mantuæ ab uno ex Patribus Societatis Jeſu in Templo ſanctiſſimæ Trinitatis in noſtrâ Aulâ coram ſereniſſimo Duce, & in cubiculo eorum illuſtriſſimo Cardinali Gonzaga, Anno 1611. To this are ſubjoined two Letters in Italian, one of Blancanus, the other of Greinbergerus, Jeſuits, concerning that point. The fourteenth is, A Letter of Galileo to Chriſtopher Greinbergerus, concerning the Montuoſity of the Moon, dated at Florence Sept. 1. 1611. This Letter, and the three concerning the Solar Spots, and that intitled Il Saggiatore, in oppoſition to three Jeſuits, raiſed the reſentments of that Society againſt Galileo. The fifteenth is, A Letter of Galileo to Beneditto Caſtelli, containing a Demonſtration of a Principle formerly ſuppoſed by the Author in his third Dialogue of Local Motions: Dated at Arcetri Decemb. 3. 1639. The ſixteenth is, Galileo's Solution of a Problem propoſed to him by Pietro Bardi de' Conti di Vernio, Whence it is that the water ſeems to one, who enters into it, firſt colder, and afterwards warmer than the temperate air. The ſeventeenth and laſt Treatiſe of Menoleſſi's Edition is, Galilei's mathematical Diſcourſes and Demonſtrations about two new Sciences, relating to Mechanics and Local Motions; together with an Appendix concerning the Center of Gravity of ſome Solids: firſt printed at Leyden by the Elzevirs in 1638, and tranſlated into Engliſh by Thomas Saluſbury Eſq; and printed in the ſecond Tome of his Mathematical Collections and Tranſlations. Our Author's Dialogi delle due ſiſteme del Mondo were printed at Florence 1632 in 4to; and tranſlated into Latin by Matthias Bernegger, Profeſſor of Hiſtory at Straſburg, and publiſhed under the title of Galilæus de Syſtemate Mundi Latinè verſus, at Straſburg 1635 in 4to. There was likewiſe a Latin Verſion printed at Leyden 1699 in two Volumes in 4to under the title of, Galilæi Galilæi Lyncei, Academiarum Piſanæ & Patavinæ Philoſophi ac Mathematici ſummi, Syſtema Coſmicum &c. In this Edition, there is added, beſides the Reconciliation of the places of holy Scripture with the Motion of the Earth, his Treatiſe of Motion, now firſt tranſlated into Latin from the Italian. The Dialogues were tranſlated into Engliſh by Thomas Saluſbury Eſq; and publiſhed in the firſt Tome of his Mathematical Collections and Tranſlations out of Galileus and others. London 1661 in fol. In theſe Dialogues Galileo examines, whether the Earth, according to the opinion of Ptolomy and the Ariſtotelians, occupying the Center of the World, remains immoveable; or whether, according to Pythagoras, and (a long time after him) Copernicus, it turns, together with the reſt of the Plaworks were unfortunately loſt through his wife's devotion ; who, ſollicited by her confeſſor, gave him leave to peruſe her huſband's manuſcripts, of which he tore and took away as many as he ſaid were not fit to be allowed. Dr. William Stokeham in a letter to Mr. Saluſbury dated at Padua Auguſt the 2d 1663 (p), obſerves, " that the Inſtrument or Machina, " with which the Venetians render their Laguna fluid and navigable, was Galileo's inven- " tion;" and that a Florentine Academico, in a little Tractate of his, aſſerts the Problem of the Cycloides to have been Galileo's, though the ſolution thereof was afterwards made by Torricelli, notwithſtanding the French Author of L'Hiſtoire de la Roulette aſcribes it to Merſenne, the Minim Friar. The ſame Gentleman remarks, that our Author " never " had any maſters of worth ſufficient to be remembered, he being brought up very " privately whilſt a boy, and after never had any peculiar inſtructor. His funeral was " as obſcure as his education ; for the Florentines thought to have buried him in the " Church of Santa Croce, by the tomb of Michael Angelo ; but knowing there was more " due to his memory, than the preſent times would admit to be given him, have left " his body in a private place till with ſolemnity they can own his interment." Vincenzio Viviani tells us (q) that he had a ſon named Vincenzio, a man of great learning and genius, who invented ſeveral things in Mechanics and Muſic. Dr. John Wilkins (r) joins our Author with Rothmannus and others, who aſſert the Comets to be exhalations from the earth carried up into the higher parts of the heavens. But this does not appear from any of Galileo's works now extant ; and in his Dialogi delle duo maſſime Syſteme del Mundo he expreſly maintains the contrary, viz. that Comets are not terreſtrial vapours ſet on fire, but generated, moſt of them, above the atmoſphere and orbit of the Moon. And Gaſſendus (s) cites his opinion in this point to the ſame purpoſe.

* Horatio Graſſi diſguiſed himſelf under this name.

(p) Communicated by the ſame Gentleman.

(q) Quinto Libro degli Elementi d'Euclide, ovvero Scienza Univerſale delle Proporzioni ſpiegata colla Dottrina del Galileo &c. pag. 101, 102. edit. Firenze 1674 in 4to.

(r) The Diſcovery of a new World : or a Diſcourſe tending to prove that it is probable there may be another habitable World in the Moon, lib. 1. cap. 12. pag. 177. 3d edit. 1640.

(s) Tom. 1. Phyſicæ, §. 2. lib. 5. pag. 702.

nets, round the Sun, who reſts in the Center. He proceeds in this method ; he propounds the moſt ſpecious and ſtrongeſt arguments for both opinions ; yet leaves the queſtion undecided ; but in ſuch a manner, that we may eaſily perceive, that he inclines to the Copernican Syſtem. He ſometimes introduces very agreeable ſtrokes of raillery, eſpecially againſt thoſe Philoſophers, who adhere ſo obſtinately to Ariſtotle's opinions, that they think it a crime to depart an hair's breadth from them. He tells us, that he knew a Nobleman ſo much devoted to the Ariſtotelian Philoſophy, that when he came to the houſe of an able Phyſician at Venice, whither a great many perſons reſorted to ſee a diſſection performed by a ſkilful Anatomiſt, who ſhewed a great many nerves proceeding from the brain, which afterwards paſſing by the neck were diſtended thro' the back-bone, and at laſt ſpread through the whole body, ſo that they touched the heart only with a ſmall thread ; the Nobleman being aſked by the Phyſician, whether he would now believe, that the nerves had their riſe from the brain, and not from the heart ? he anſwered, Indeed you have ſo plainly ſhewed the thing before my eyes, that unleſs Ariſtotle's Text were in the way, which deduces the nerves from the heart, I ſhould be of your opinion. He mentions another Profeſſor in a famous Univerſity, who, when he heard the deſcription of a Teleſcope, which he had never ſeen before, he made no doubt to ſay, that the invention was taken from Ariſtotle, and immediately produced Ariſtotle's Book, and ſhewed a place, wherein that Philoſopher gives the reaſon why the Stars are ſeen in the daytime from the bottom of a deep well ; and ſaid to the ſtanders-by, See here the well, which the tube of the Teleſcope reſembles. Here are the thick vapours, from which the invention of the Chryſtals was taken. Here the ſight is fortified, while the beams are tranſmitted more thick and obſcure thro' the chryſtalline. Galileo compares ſuch men to Alchymiſts, who dream that the art of making gold was known to the antients ; and that it was concealed under the fables and fictions of the Poets. The firſt Dialogue contains an examination of the arguments of the Ariſtotelians, whereby they attempt to ſhew, that celeſtial bodies are eternal and incorruptible, and conſiſt of a fifth eſſence very different from our elementary bodies. In oppoſition to this it is proved, that the earth hath the ſame perfections with the other bodies of the univerſe ; and that it does not differ from the Moon, Venus, Jupiter and other Planets. In the ſecond Dialogue he proceeds to prove the diurnal Motion of the Earth ; and in the third the annual Motion of it round the Sun. In this Dialogue almoſt all the principles of Aſtronomy are laid down, and many new obſervations made by the Aſtronomers of Galileo's age are either confirmed or refuted. In the fourth Dialogue he deduces the cauſes of the ebbing and flowing of the Sea from the double motion of the Earth ; and endeavours to ſhew, that if the Earth ſtood ſtill in the center of the World, the Sea could not ebb and flow ; and whatever difference there is in theſe ebbings of the Sea occaſioned by place and time, he attempts to account for by the nature of his Syſtem. Dr. William Stokeham in an original Letter of his to Mr. Saluſbury, dated at Padua Auguſt 2d 1663, obſerves, " that he left divers works in being, beſides " two that are ſtoln, one of which was a Treatiſe " Della Forza della percoſſa, the other, The Theory of " the four Stellæ Mediceæ and the Calculation of their " Motion. But there is one entire volume as big as " one of thoſe two printed at Bologna, of his Letters " to ſeveral learned Men, and Solutions to ſeveral Pro- " blems." There was alſo a Diſputation of our Author de Phænomenis Lunæ & de Luce ac Lumine ; printed at Venice in 1612 in 4to. Vincenzio Viviano in a Treatiſe intitled, Quinto Libro de gli Elementi d'Euclide, ovvero Scienza univerſale delle Proporzioni ſpiegata colla Dottrina del Galileo, con nuov' ordine diſteſa, e per la prima volta publicata da Vincenzio Viviani ultimo ſuo Diſcepolo, &c. printed at Florence 1674 in 4to, and dedicated to the Cardinal of Medici (9), has publiſhed Principio della quinta Giornata del Galileo da aggiugnerſi alle quattro ſtampate delle due nuove Scienze della Meccanica, e de' Movimenti Locali ; and Extracts from Galileo's Letters to a learned Frenchman, in which he gives an account of the Works, which he deſigned to have publiſhed ; and a paſſage from a Letter of Galilei dated at Arcetri Octob. 30. 1635 to John Camillo Glorioſi, a Mathematician of Naples, concerning the Angle of Contact. T.

(9) The dedication is dated at Florence Auguſt 10, 1674.

GALLARS (NICHOLAS DES), in Latin Gallaſius, Miniſter of Geneva, was one of thoſe who aſſiſted at the conference of Poiſſi. Thoſe of Geneva, when they were deſired by the Church of Paris, in the year 1557, to ſend them a Miniſter, lent them this des Gallars. The deputy (a) who conducted him was ſtopped with him at Auſonne, and ſome ſuſpicious books being found in his portmanteau he was carried to Dijon, where he ſuffered martyrdom. Des Gallars was permitted to purſue his journey, becauſe they found neither books nor letters about him, which might cauſe him to be ſuſpected (b).

(a) His name was Nicholas du Rouſſeau. Beza, Hiſt. Eccleſ. liv. 2. pag. 137.

(b) Beza, ibid. See alſo l'Hiſtoire des Martyrs, liv. 7. fol. 412 verſo.

He

He is the Author of ſome books [A], and of an Edition of St. Irenæus [B]. He was Miniſter of the Church of Orleans in the year 1564 (c). The dates of ſome of his Writings will be ſeen below [C]. Calvin eſteemed him highly, and he reciprocally eſteemed Calvin ſo far as to be his Tranſcriber (d). La Croix du Maine ſpeaks of another N. DES GALLARS [D], who was Miniſter of the French Church in London, in the year 1561.

(c) Beza's Preface to Calvin's Commentary on Joſhua, pag. m. 10.

(d) See the Remark [D], Citation (11).

[A] He is the Author of ſome Books.] He publiſhed at Geneva, in the year 1545, an Apology for Farel, and his Collegues, againſt Peter Charles. He tranſlated ſeveral of Calvin's Treatiſes into Latin. His Book of the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt againſt the new Arians was printed at Orleans, in 1565. Calvin's Commentary upon Iſaiah is only an Extract which des Gallars made out of the Lectures and Sermons of Calvin on that Prophet. He compoſed a Commentary on the Book of Exodus, and an Apology for Calvin againſt Cochleus. The Abridgment of Geſner's Bibliotheca, which informs us of this, does not take notice in what years theſe Works were printed; a defect too frequent in the Abridgment of Geſner, and in moſt compilations of that nature. Obſerve that the Commentary on Iſaiah was afterwards reviſed by Calvin, and therefore des Gallars's Edition is not the beſt. I prove this from Theodore Beza, who having ſaid that Calvin, though ſick in the year 1558, continued notwithſtanding to write, proceeds thus: Ejus rei teſtes ſunt ultima Chriſtianæ Inſtitutionis Editio tum Latina tum Gallica, & Commentarii in Iſaiam ab eo non tam emendati (quales illos Gallaſius ex ore prælegentis exceptos ediderat) quam novi prorſus emiſſi (1). i. e. "Witneſs the laſt Edition of his "Chriſtian Inſtitution, both in Latin and in French, "and his Commentaries on Iſaiah, not ſo much "corrected (in the manner des Gallars had publiſhed "them, as he took them down from his mouth at "his lectures, as new written and digeſted." Some believe (2) that des Gallars compoſed, together with Beza, the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of the Reformed Churches; but I believe they are miſtaken (a).

(1) Beza, in his Life of Calvin, under the year 1558.

(2) See Placcius, de Anonymis, num. 429. pag. 102.

[§ [a] They aſcribe to him the ſhort Prayers which are at the end of Marot and Beza's Pſalms, in ſeveral old Editions. REM. CRIT.]

[B] .... and of an Edition of St. Irenæus.] The Abridgment of Geſner is very good with regard to this particular: for we there find, not only where and in what year (3) the Miniſter des Gallars publiſhed this Edition, but we are alſo told wherein it differs from the other.

(3) At Geneva 1570.

[C] The dates of ſome of his Writings will be ſeen below.] In the year 1545, he tranſlated into Latin a ſmall Treatiſe which Calvin had publiſhed in 1540, on the Lord's Supper. Des Gallars was then Miniſter of the Church at Geneva (4). Some time after he made a Latin Tranſlation of what Calvin had publiſhed in 1544 againſt the Anabaptiſts and Libertines (5). In 1548 he gave a Latin Verſion of the Inventory of Relics, publiſhed by Calvin in 1546 (6). He publiſhed in 1551 the Commentary which he had extracted from the Lectures and Sermons of Calvin on the Prophet Iſaiah (7).

(4) Beza, Preface to Calvin's Commentary on Joſhua, pag. m. 10.

(5) Ibid pag. 15.

(6) Ibid.

(7) Ibid. pag. 18.

[D] La Croix du Maine ſpeaks of another N. des Gallars.] The Nicholas des Gallars whom he mentions in the 344th page, and the N. des Gallars of whom he ſpeaks in the 363d page, are the ſame Miniſter; and ſo he makes two Authors out of one. He has written in Latin (thus he ſpeaks concerning the latter) and ſince tranſlated into French the form of Eccleſiaſtical polity eſtabliſhed in the French Church at London, printed in the year 1561, at which time he dwelt and reſided in the ſaid city of London (8). It may be objected that, if la Croix du Maine be not miſtaken as to the time, it is probable here are two Miniſters; for Nicholas des Gallars was at Geneva in the year 1560 (9) and in France in 1561, at the time of the Conference of Poiſſi. I anſwer that this proves nothing. That Miniſter was ſent to London in the year 1560, to ſettle a French Church there: this is certain; but for all that des Gallars might be in France a year after, to aſſiſt at the Conference at Poiſſi (10). Eodem tempore, quum non pauci pii Galli poſt Mariæ reginæ mortem ſingulari Sereniſſimæ reginæ Elizabethæ pietate & humanitate freti in Angliam refugerent, peterentque, reverendi viri Edmundi Grindalli Epiſcopi Londinenſis aſſenſu, ut Geneva mitteretur qui Eccleſiam Gallicam illic conſtitueret, miſſus eſt eo Nicolaus Galaſius, familiariſſimus à multis jam annis Calvini collega, & cujus plurimum opera in excipiendis dictatis utebatur. Sed Calvino nihil antiquius Eccleſiarum ædificatione fuit (11). i. e. "At the ſame time, when "a great many devout Frenchmen, after the death "of Queen Mary, relying on the ſingular piety and "humanity of the moſt ſerene Queen Elizabeth fled "into England, and petitioned, by the conſent of Ed-"mund Grindal, Biſhop of London, that a perſon "might be ſent for from Geneva to ſettle a French "Church there, Nicholas des Gallars was ſent thi-"ther, who was very intimate with Calvin, and had "been his Collegue for many years, and whom he "chiefly employed in taking down what he dictated. "As for Calvin, he had nothing more at heart than "the edification of the Churches."

(8) He had ſaid before that N. des Gallars was Miniſter of the French Church in the City of London, in England.

(9) The Epiſtle dedicatory of his Commentary on Exodus is dated that year from Geneva.

(10) Beza, in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, Book 4, pag. 490, names him among the Miniſters who were at that Conference.

(11) Beza, in Vita Calvini, ad annum 1560.

GALLIGAI (LEONORA) was the daughter of a Joyner and of Mary de Medicis's nurſe (a). That Princeſs loved her tenderly, and carried her with her into France, when ſhe went thither to be married to Henry IV. Galligai, under the title of Bed-chamber-woman to that Queen, governed her juſt as ſhe pleaſed. She was exceſſively ugly, but had a vaſt deal of wit. She married Concino Concini, a domeſtic to the ſame Queen; and they made a prodigious fortune together. They were more ſtrongly united by intereſt than affection [A]. They had fomented the diſcord between Henry IV and the Queen (b); for their artifices and tale-bearing were the cauſe of the domeſtic jars which made life ſo bitter to Henry the Great. After that Prince's death, they found it ſtill more eaſy to govern their miſtreſs; they glutted themſelves with riches and places, [B], and (a) Le Grain, Decade de Louis le Juſte, liv. 4. pag. 154. Hilarion de Coſte, tom. 2. des Dames Illuſtres, pag. 477, denies ſhe was the nurſe's daughter.

(b) See Mr. de Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henri le Grand, pag. m. 399, ad ann. 1603. and Mezerai, Abrégé, Chron. tom. 6. pag. m. 301, 367.

[A] They were more ſtrongly united by intereſt than affection.] The Marſhal d'Ancre's wife received the news of her huſband's being juſt murdered without ſhedding a tear, and her firſt care was to ſave her jewels. She put them in the matting of her bed, and cauſing her ſelf to be undreſt, went to bed (1). The Provoſt's men who went into her chamber not finding her jewels, made her (2) get up that they might ſearch her bed, where they were found (3). She ſaid afterwards to thoſe who guarded her, Well, they have killed my huſband: is not that enough to ſatisfy them? Let me be allowed to leave the Kingdom (4). When ſhe was told they had hanged the Marſhal's dead body, ſhe appeared to be very much moved; without weeping however: yet ſhe ſaid he was un preſumptuos, un orguillos, a preſumptuous, inſolent man; that he had met with nothing but what he deſerved; that he had not been in bed with her for the whole three laſt years; that he was a bad man, and that to get rid of him ſhe had determined to retire into Italy that ſpring, and had prepared every thing for her journey, which ſhe offered to prove (5). When Meſſieurs Aubri and le Bailleul went to examine her what was become of her rings and other effects, ſhe anſwered them with as much aſſurance as if ſhe had had no manner of apprehenſion (6), and even told them ſhe hoped to be taken into favour again.

(1) Relation of the death of the Marſhal d'Ancre, in the Appendix to the Hiſtory of Favourites by Mr. du Puy, pag. m. 28.

(2) Ibid. pag. 30, 31.

(3) Theſe no doubt were the jewels ſhe meant when ſhe told Meſſieurs Aubri and le Bailleul, That ſhe had ſent the King, the day before, a box in which there were jewels to the value of above 200,000 Livres. Ibid. pag. 61.

(4) Ibid. pag. 31.

(5) Ibid. pag. 55.

(6) Ibid. pag. 61.

[B] They glutted themſelves with riches and places.] and were puffed up with monſtrous and unheard of pride [C]. But the end of all this proved extremely tragical. I have elſewhere told what befel the huſband, and ſhall now relate how they treated the wife. She was carried to the Baſtile, and afterwards committed to the Conciergerie, or priſon of the Parliament; by which Court ſhe was tried, and condemned to be beheaded and burnt to aſhes. This ſentence was executed the 8th of July 1617. She took courage at laſt, and died with great conſtancy, and like a Chriſtian (c). She was convicted, among other crimes, of having not only judaiſed [D], but alſo practiſed magical arts [E] to attain her ends. She ſuffered for high treaſon againſt

(c) Le Grain, Decade de Louis le Juſte, liv. 10. pag. 419.

See, above, the Article CONCINI, and conſider only that in the Marſhal's pockets (7) they found in aſſignments on the Treaſury, in receivers notes, or in bonds, the ſum of 1, 985, 000 livres. They found in his private apartments good aſſignments for 2 millions 500, 000 livres more (8). His wife told the Commiſſaries that ſhe had her pearls ſtill, to wit, a necklace of 40 pearls of 2000 livres a piece, and a chain of five rows of pearls of 50 livres each, and that in all they were worth above 120, 000 crowns (9). She had already ſent the King jewels to the value of 200, 000 livres. The Provoſt's men had not ſearched ſo narrowly, but that ſhe had a box of jewels left; for when they were carrying her to the Baſtile they aſked her, before they went ... whether ſhe had no more rings? She ſhewed them a box ſhe had ſaved, in which there were only ſome chains of amber: and being aſked if ſhe had none about her, ſhe lifted up her coats and ſhewed near as high as her breaſts; ſhe had on a pair of drawers of red Florence friſe: they told her, laughing, that they muſt then ſearch the drawers; ſhe anſwered, that at another time ſhe would not have ſuffered it, but in her preſent circumſtances they were allowed to do every thing; ſo du Hallier (10) felt a little about the drawers (11). There needed no other proofs of their crimes than this exorbitant wealth.

(7) Ibid. pag. 48.

(8) Ibid. pag. 62.

(9) Ibid. pag. 61.

(10) He was Captain of the Guards.

(11) Relation, &c. pag. 83, 84.

[C] ... and were puffed up with monſtrous and unheard of pride.] " She would not ſo much as allow " the Princes, Princeſſes, and greateſt Lords of the " Kingdom, to come into her chamber, or even " ſuffer any one to look her in the face, ſaying, that " people frighted her when they ſtared upon her, and " that they might bewitch her by looking her in the face: " for which reaſon ſhe abſolutely refuſed to ſee ſome " of her ſervants any more, only becauſe they had " looked on her; and towards the end of her favour " ſhe had even baniſhed from her chamber on this " account M. de Luſſon, and Faydeau, who had been " the laſt in her good graces (12)." This was yet more owing to her ſuperſtition with regard to witch- " craft, and her uglineſs, than her vanity.

(12) Ibid. pag. 65.

[D] She was convicted ... not only of having judaized.] Her huſband was likewiſe charged with this crime as well as ſhe. It was proved,

I. By the care they took to bring into France a certain Jew, a famous fortune-teller, named Montalto, by profeſſion a Phyſician. They employed in this affair Vincentio Ludovici, their Secretary. This was verified " by letters written from Venice to the ſaid " Vincentio, the 26th of April 1611, wherein they " give him hopes of procuring the ſaid Montalto to " come into France (13); and by the letters of the " ſaid Montalto himſelf, dated the 6th of May fol- " lowing, to the ſaid Leonora Galligai, wherein he " aſſures her that he is ready to come, by the aſſiſtance " of ſo benign and ſingular a Protectreſs: not meaning, " however, to diſguiſe himſelf, or to diſſemble his pro- " feſſion, but freely to exerciſe his Jewiſh Religion; ſince " he had refuſed very advantageous offers made him from " other quarters, as Bologna, Meſſina, Piſa, and even " to ſucceed the famous Mercurialis under the moſt gra- " cious protection of the Great Duke Ferdinand, that he " had alſo been offered the firſt Profeſſor's chair at Pa- " dua, adding, that they might know his intention by " one ſingle act, which was, that he will take no " money on the day he obſerves, that is, on the Sabbath. " Theſe letters have been produced and exhibited in " the proceedings againſt the ſaid Galligai, being " marked with the Letter K; and what deſerves " particular conſideration on this head, is the depo- " ſition of la Place, Gentleman Uſher to the ſaid " Galligai, who being confronted with her, main- " tained that ſince the coming of the ſaid Montalto " ſhe went no more to Church or to Confeſſion, but " ſpent her time in making little balls of wax, which " ſhe put in her mouth (14)."

(13) He died in the year 1616, and foretold that Galligai would die the year after. Le Grain, Décade de Louis le Juſte, liv. 10. pag. 419.

(14) Ibid. pag. 404.

II. It was alledged (15) that the accuſed perſons, by converſing with the ſaid Montalto, had left the obſervation of the Chriſtian Religion, and accuſtomed themſelves to Judaiſm; and thence it was that there were found in their houſe two Books, one of which, being a kind of Catechiſm, is intitled CHEINUC, that is to ſay in Hebrew * Cuſtom, and the other Machazar, that is, The courſe of the Annual Service, according to the uſage of the Spaniſh Jews, printed at Venice.

(15) Ibid. pag. 405.

* Or rather, Inſtruction.

III. It was alledged (16) that the conſequence of this converſation and catechiſing was their apoſtacy and deſertion of the Chriſtian Religion, to embrace Judaiſm, as they have actually done, practiſing the ſacrifices, oblations, and exorciſms, in uſe among the Jews. This is verified in the proceſs, as well by the teſtimonial and vocal proofs, as alſo by the confeſſion of the ſaid Galligai: and among other depoſitions, that of her coachman is remarkable, by which it appears how they made uſe of ſeveral Churches in Paris, to commit therein, in the night time, ſuch impieties, diſcovered by the cries and howlings heard in the ſame, when the ſaid Galligai ſacrificed a cock, which is an oblation uſed among the Jews on the feaſt of reconciliation, when they offer a cock for their ſins. And that this oblation of a cock is a Jewiſh ceremony, and practiſed by the Jews in thoſe places where they are allowed to reſide, appears from two Books produced by the King's Attorney General when the tryal was depending, the one inſcribed Baal Hatturim, that is, the chief and patron of orders; in the firſt part whereof, intitled Grachchaüm, that is, the way and path of life, or the manner of living which a man ought to obſerve, or the way of ſpending this life, mention is made of this oblation; and of which Book Rabbi Jacob, who calls himſelf a Gaul, is the Author: and the other intitled, The Jewiſh Synagogue *, in the 20th Chapter whereof is written what is done at the feaſt of Reconciliation during ten penitential days, and that on the ninth the Jews riſe very early, frequent the ſchool, ſing and repeat ſeveral prayers; and immediately on their return home, each male, as well old as young, takes a cock in his hand, and each female a hen, and the women with child both a cock and a hen together, and rehearſe out of the Pſalm of David theſe words: (a) Fools, becauſe of their tranſgreſſion, and becauſe of their iniquities, are afflicted: their ſoul abhorreth all manner of meat; and they draw near unto the gates of death. This oblation of the cock not only argues Judaiſm but Heatheniſm alſo, and declares the accuſed to be apoſtates, and conſequently guilty of ſacrilege: for an apoſtate is deemed to be a ſacrilegious perſon by the Imperial Conſtitutions (e), which puniſh ſuch capital crimes with abſolute confiſcation. And as to what the ſaid Galligai has ſaid in her excuſe, that ſhe had made ſuch a ſacrifice of a cock for her health, and the cure of a diſeaſe ſhe was afflicted with; it has been anſwered, that ſuch an impiety is puniſhed with death, though it be practiſed by way of remedy (i).

(16) Ibid. pag. 405.

* Synagoga Judaica edita Hanoviæ, anno 1514.

(a) Pſalm cvii. 17, 18.

(e) Tot. tit. C. de Apoſtatis.

(i) Novel. Conſt. Leonis Imp. 65.

IV. It was alledged, as a proof of their affection to Judaiſm, that they had uſed diligent endeavour to bring Jews into France, having ſent to Amſterdam in Holland, where many of them are, to invite ſome of them to Paris. (17).

(17) Le Grain, liv. 10. pag. 406.

[E] ... but alſo practiſed magical arts.] This likewiſe was an accuſation both againſt the huſband and the wife. It was proved (18):

(18) Ibid. pag. 406.

I. By a letter of a certain woman named Gondy, and others of the ſaid Galligai the accuſed, to the Lady Iſabella, a reputed witch; wherein ſhe deſires her to ſend againſt God and the King, and divers other particular crimes. There was even one accuſation in the proceedings againſt her, which implied treaſon both againſt God and the King [F]. Her mouth was ſoon ſtopped, when, to prolong her life, ſhe pleaded her belly [G].

ſend her word whether ſhe knows any thing BY HER ART which any way regards her perſon, or the intereſt of her family.

II. By three Books of Characters, with another ſmall Character, found in the ſaid Galligai's chamber, and a box containing five round pieces of velvet, which Characters the accuſed made uſe of to gain an aſcendant over THE WILLS OF THE GREAT. This is verified by the depoſitions of Melon, Charton, and Nicholas Viart, confronted with the ſaid Galligai. And as to the Books of Characters found in her houſe, they are mentioned in the verbal proceſs of Meſſieurs de Maupeou and Arnaud, Intendants of the Finances, containing the deſcription of the moveables, papers, and inſtructions found in the ſaid houſe.

III. By the depoſition of Philip Dacquin, formerly a Jew, and at preſent a Chriſtian, who ſays that when he was at the Lieutenant Criminal's at Molins, the Accuſed ſent him word, that they had made uſe of the Cabala, and the Books of the Jews, which helps to prove their Judaiſm and witchcraft; for it is to be obſerved that Dacquin depoſes, that Concini in the preſence of his wife would have taken an urinal out of her chamber on account of its impurity, and would have carried a crucifix out of the ſame chamber, leſt they ſhould hinder the effect which Concini and his wife expected to obtain by the reading of ſome verſes of the fifty firſt Pſalm in Hebrew, which reading they intended ſhould be performed for them by the ſaid Dacquin, in the manner it had been formerly done by Montalto.

IV. Becauſe they ſent for ſome ſorcerers, pretending to be monks, called Ambroſians, from Nancy in Lorrain, who aſſiſted the Marſhal's wife in the ſacrifice of the cock.

V. Becauſe there were found in their houſe ſeveral pieces of ſtuff which they uſed to hang about their necks (19), after the manner of the preſervatives by the Jews called Kamea, by the Greeks Philacteria, and Periapta, and by the Latins Amuleta and Ligaturæ; which are things condemned by the Holy Councils, particularly by the ſixty firſt Canon of the ſixth Synod in Trullo, and by a Roman Council under Pope Gregory III, and by another of Agatho cited by Gratian , and by Yvo Biſhop of Chartres (†) quoting a Council of Arles c. 5. which condemns Philacteria diabolica, and Characteres diabolicos.

(19) Ibid. pag. 407.

() Si quis ariolos, 26. q.

(†) Part. 11. c. 1, 54, & 58.

VI. It was proved againſt them that they made uſe of images of wax, and kept them in coffins.

VII. And that they conſulted Magicians, and employed Aſtrologers who profeſſed judiciary Mathematics; and that, among others, they made uſe of the diabolical ſcience of Coſmo Ruggieri, an Italian.

(20) Le Grain, Décade de Louis le Juſte, liv. 10. pag. 407.

VIII. " (20) But the moſt remarkable fact of all " is that concerning one Matthew de Montenay, " whom the ſaid Galligai ſent for to Paris, as a greater " and more expert magician than the Ambroſians, by " whom ſhe cauſed herſelf to be exorciſed in the " Church of the Auguſtins, in the Chappel of the " Spifames, and that by night, as ſeveral Monks of " the ſaid Monaſtery have depoſed, moſt of whom " were confronted with her and not excepted againſt " by her. It being obſervable that the exorciſm was " performed in a different manner than is uſed a- " mong Chriſtians; which was alſo done in the " Churches of St. Sulpicius in the ſuburbs of St. " Germain, and St. Antony the leſs in the city. To " this ſhe anſwered, that ſhe cauſed herſelf to be exor- " ciſed in that manner by night, that the diſtemper " for which ſhe was exorciſed might not be known, " ſaying that ſhe was ſometimes poſſeſſed. But this " ought to be done by men having the true character, " as by the Biſhop or his Vicar, that is to ſay, the " Curate of her pariſh, and not by unknown fright- " ful people, who have diſappeared, and never been " ſeen ſince; ſuch as were thoſe pretended Am- " broſians."

IX. " It is alſo to be obſerved that when thoſe Am- " broſians had a mind to perform any action of their " art or ceremonies in the houſe of the ſaid Galligai, " they made all the ſervants go out, burned incenſe in " the garden, and made ſeveral things in form of be- " nedictions on the earth, and the ſaid Galligai at " thoſe times eat nothing but cocks combs, and rams " kidneys, which ſhe cauſed to be bleſſed; and of this " there is a teſtimonial proof among the proceedings.

X. " It is likewiſe remarkable that every year on " the eve of Epiphany, or Twelfth-day, ſhe cauſed " the water which ſhe made uſe of as luſtral or holy " water to be bleſſed by Father Roger; which was " not done without ſome myſtery and deſign; and " being aſked for what reaſon ſhe did it, ſhe would " give no anſwer."

[F] One accuſation implied treaſon both againſt God and the King.] For the huſband and wife enquired after the King's life and health of perſons who profeſſed judicial Aſtrology. This was proved by the depoſition of John du Chatel, called Cæſar, who was a diviner and calculator of Nativities, confronted with the Accuſed, &c (21).

(21) Le Grain, liv. 10. pag. 408.

[G] She pleaded her belly.] Having heard her ſentence read, ſhe ſaid, I am with child; but it was repreſented that ſhe had declared, while a priſoner, and at her trial, that ſhe had not had her huſband's company for above two years laſt paſt; ſo that this could not be without prejudice to her honour; to which ſhe anſwered nothing, and inſiſted no more upon it (22).

(22) Ibid. pag. 418.

GALLONIUS (ANTONY), Prieſt of the Oratory at Rome, compoſed, among other Works, a Treatiſe de Martyrum Cruciatibus, which is very curious. We may there ſee the forms of the Inſtruments which the Pagans made uſe of to torture the Martyrs of the primitive Church. He died in the year 1505 (a). I ſhall give the Titles of ſome other Works which he wrote [A].

(a) Ludovicus Jacob, in Bibliotheca Pontificia, pag. 263.

A little Book printed in Holland in the year 1699 informs me of a particular which I think deſerves a place in this Dictionary. It relates to the diſpute which Gallonius became concerned in to defend Baronius againſt the Monks of Mount Caſſino [B].

[A] I ſhall give the titles of ſome other of his Works.] He wrote the Life of Philip Neri, the Founder of the Prieſts of the Oratory, and an Apology pro aſſertis in Annalibus Eccleſiaſticis Baronianis de Monachatu Sancti Gregorii Papæ, adverſus D. Conſtantinum Bellottum, Monachum Caſinatem, at Rome, 1604, in 4*to, ex Typographia Vaticana.* See the Bibliotheca of Proſper Mandoſio. He has taken care not to forget Gallonius, who was a native of Rome.

[B] He made himſelf a party in a diſpute to defend Baronius againſt the Monks of Mount Caſſino.] The little Book, which will furniſh me here with a Commentary, is intitled Critique du Livre publié par les Moines Benedictins de la Congregation de S. Maur, ſous le titre de Bibliotheque divine de S. Jerôme. It contains 66 pages in 12mo. The Bookſeller's Advertiſement informs us that we are beholden for this Critique to Father Simon's nephew, who wrote it from the Latin Memoirs of his uncle. What I am going to tranſcribe from this little Book is not the leaſt curious paſſage in it (1). The Monks of Mount Caſſino " are ſo liberal " of their habit that, having given it to S. Gregory " the Great, they could not bear this Cardinal (2) " ſhould aſſert in his Annals, that it was not true " that St. Gregory had been a Benedictin Monk, but " immediately publiſhed a Book under this title: Gre- " gorius Magnus inſtituto ſanctiſſimi Patris Benedicti re- " ſtitutus. i. e. Gregory the Great reſtored to the Order " of St. Benedict. But Antony Galloni, a learned " Prieſt of the Oratory at Rome, undertaking the " defence

(1) Critique de la Biblioth. divine de S. Jerôme, pag. 64, & ſeq. See alſo Father Simon's Critical Letters, publiſhed by a German Gentleman, pag. 118, & ſeq.

(2) That is, Baronius.

GALLUTIUS (JOHN PAUL), a learned Italian Aſtronomer, lived in the ſixteenth Century. He invented an Inſtrument to obſerve the celeſtial appearances (a); and he publiſhed ſeveral Aſtronomical Works, and ſome of Phyſic [A]. He was Member of an Academy at Venice.

(a) Quo inſtrumento nove excogitato cuncta cœli phænomena una cum horis omnis generis obſervantur ex ſole, luna, ac ſtellis, non longè ab ecliptica diſtantibus. i. e. "By which new-invented Inſtrument all the celeſtial phænomena, with all ſorts of hours, are obſerved "from the Sun, Moon, and Stars, not far diſtant from the Ecliptic." Voſſius, de Scient. Mathemat. pag. 386.

" defence of his brother Baronius, wrote them a very " ſmart anſwer; and as it is become ſcarce, I ſhall " give you ſome idea of it to entertain you till it be " reprinted with ſome other pieces on the ſame ſubject. " It is printed at Rome in 4to under the title of Apo-
(3) See the remainder of this Title in the Remark [A]. " logeticus Liber . . . (3). I own to you that if Fa" ther Galloni's piety, as well as that of Baronius, " was not well known on other accounts, one would " be apt to think there is too much paſſion in this " anſwer, wherein the Monks are charged with pro- " ducing, in ſupport of their cauſe, ſome pieces the Au- " thors of which deſerve the ſame puniſhment as Ci- " carella. A ſtrange compariſon! for Cicarella was † Fit i longum. " hanged † for his forgeries, by the order of Pope " Pius V. It is true, the ſame Galloni acknowledges " that he reveals things which ought never to have " come to the knowledge of the public; but he adds " at the ſame time, that the exceſſive impudence of " thoſe Monks had obliged him to publiſh them. He " reproaches them with a great number of falſe Deeds, " which had been forged at Monte Caſſino in the names " of Popes and Princes. All theſe Deeds were print- " ed at Venice in 4to, in 1513, at the end of the " Chronicle of that Monaſtery. The purport of thoſe " falſe Inſtruments was nothing leſs than the donation " of poſſeſſions, and even whole towns, to the Monks " of Monte Caſſino. It is true, the Monk Conſtan- " tine produced in defence of his Monaſtery ſome Acts " which were found in their Library, written in Longo- " bardic characters, and which conſequently could not " have been lately forged. But Galloni, who was " perfectly well acquainted with the practices of the " Benedictine Monks, anſwers, that whatever writings " they have in thoſe ancient characters ought not to " be credited as if they were ſealed with the ſeal of " the Revelations; that it is very well known they " want not Writers who have a pretty good hand at " counterfeiting the characters of the Lombards: Ac " ſi quidquid eo charactere (Longobardico) exaratum " invenitur tanquam ſigillo Apocalypſis ſit conſignatum in " dubitationem non liceat revocare, & deſint hodie quoque " ſcriptores qui eorumdem formam elementorum valeant " imitari, ut plus apud te probat genus characteris, " quam veritas manifeſtis rationibus confirmata."

I have not ſeen the anſwer which has been made to this little Book of Father Simon's nephew by the Benedictins of Paris. If I had, I ſhould have extracted from thence whatever might be of uſe to clear up this diſpute, and I ſhould have been the faithful reporter of what has been alledged on both ſides.

[A] He publiſhed ſeveral Works.] Here are thoſe which have come to my knowledge: Della fabrica & uſo di diverſi ſtromenti di Aſtronomia & Coſmografia, at Venice, 1597. Specimen Uranicum, at Venice, 1593. Cœleſtium corporum & rerum ab ipſis pendentium Explicatio, at Venice, 1605. This Work has been falſly aſcribed to Paulus Galvicius in the Catalogue of Thuanus's Library (1). Theatrum mundi & temporis, at Venice, 1589. De Themate erigendo, parte fortunæ, diviſione Zodiaci, dignitatibus Planetarum & temporibus ad medicandum accommodatis. Extat cum Joh. Haſfurto de cognoſcendis & medendis morbis ex corporum cœleſtium poſitione, cui argumenta & explicationem inſcripſit, at Venice 1584.

(1) Part. II, pag. 113.

GALLUTIUS (TARQUIN), born in Italy in the year 1574, entered himſelf among the Jeſuits in the year 1590, and became very famous in the Order. He taught Rhetoric in the Roman College ten years, and Ethics four years. He died at Rome the 28th of July 1649, in the Grecian College, of which he had been Director eighteen years (a). He is the Author of divers Works [A].

(a) Nathan. Sotuel, in Biblioth. Scriptor. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 753.

[A] He is the Author of divers Works.] He pronounced ſome Orations before the Pope, which have been printed. It was he who made the funeral Oration of Cardinal Bellarmin, which was alſo printed. Several other of his Orations, collected into two volumes, and ſeveral of his Poems, in three Books, have been likewiſe publiſhed. We have of him two Volumes of Commentaries on Ariſtotle's Ethics, printed (1) at Paris by Sebaſtian Cramoiſy, in folio. His Book intitled Vindicationes Virgilianæ, & Commentarii tres de Tragœdia, de Comœdia, de Elegia, printed at Rome in the year 1621 (2), is very curious. His deſign "was to juſtify " Virgil at any rate. To this end he produces all the " objections which he thinks may be made to divers " paſſages of that Poet. But there are ſeveral which " he has not propoſed in their full ſtrength, for fear " he ſhould find it too difficult for him to anſwer them. " However, among ſome arguments, there are ſome " very tolerable; which are alſo ſupported by a great " deal of erudition, and a great many fine maxims " concerning the Art of Poetry (3)." Mr. Baillet here takes notice of a piece of cunning which is but too frequent in all kinds of diſputes, and eſpecially with the Writers of religious Controverſy. When they find themſelves unable to anſwer an objection, they ſtrip it of the principal difficulty: this is diſarming their adverſary before they attack him. Father Gallutius publiſhed at Rome, in the year 1633, the Revival of the ancient Tragedy, and the Defence of Criſpus. This Work is in Italian (4).

This Jeſuit is, without doubt, the ſame Orator whom Balzac praiſes in the words you are going to read: I had learnt in Italy, ſays he (5), that to write well, a man ought to propoſe to himſelf good patterns; and that good patterns were confined within a certain circle of years, out of which every thing was either in the imperfection of infancy, or the corruption of old age. With this principle I happened to be preſent at Cardinal Bellarmin's funeral Oration, and I conſidered that great and admirable Jeſuit, who with the dignity of his geſtures, the graces of his pronunciation, and the eloquence of his whole body, which accompanied that of his mouth, tranſported my ſoul into the ancient Commonwealth.

(1) The firſt in the year 1632, and the other in the year 1645.

(2) Nath. Sotuel, Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jeſu.

(3) Baillet, Jugemens ſur les Poetes, tom. 1. num. 1067, pag. 51.

(4) Sotuel, ubi ſupra.

(5) Balzac, Oeuvr. diverſes, pag. m. 404.

GALLUTIUS (ANGELUS), a native of Macerata in Italy, became a Jeſuit in the year 1606, at the age of thirteen, and gained reputation by his Eloquence and Poetry. He taught Rhetoric in the Roman College four and twenty years, and died at Rome the 28th of February 1674, being above fourſcore years old (a). He is the Author of ſome Works [A].

(a) Sotuel, Biblioth. Script. Soc. Jeſu, pag. 61.

GAMACHE

[A] He is the Author of ſome Works.] Of ſome Latin Orations, and a Hiſtory of the Wars of the Low-Countries, from the year 1593 to the truce concluded in the year 1609. This Hiſtory is in Latin: it was printed at Rome, in the year 1671, in two Volumes in folio, and reprinted in Germany in 4*to* in the year 1677.

GAMACHE (PHILIP), in Latin Gamachæus, Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Paris, was reckoned one of the moſt able Divines of the ſeventeenth Century. He was born in the year 1586, and died the 21ſt of July 1623 (a). His Commentaries on Thomas Aquinas, intitled Summa Theologica (b), are much eſteemed. See above (c) what he ſaid of St. Auguſtin.

(a) Paul. Freherus, in Theatro, pag. 423.

(b) Printed at Paris, in 1627, in 3 Volumes in folio.

(c) Remark [C] of the Article ADAM (John).

GAMBARA (LAURENCE), born at Breſcia in Italy, was a good Latin Poet of the ſixteenth Century. He lived a long time at Rome with Cardinal Alexander Farneſe (a). He publiſhed in the ſame City a Collection of Poems, which Gyraldus, who was a good judge, and had not over much indulgence, greatly commends [A]. Manutius has ſpoken yet more amply in praiſe of Gambara's Poems [B]; but it muſt be conſidered that he beſtows thoſe great encomiums on him in the Letters he writes to him. Muretus fell into the other extreme [C]; for he treated this Poet's Works with the utmoſt contempt. It is ſaid (b) Gambara had made ſome verſes which were too free, and a little obſcene, but that ſeeing himſelf raiſed to the Prieſthood, he threw them into the fire in the preſence of ſeveral perſons, though the public was extremely impatient to ſee them. He compoſed a Work wherein he lays the Poets under a heavy reſtriction [D]; for he will not allow them to meddle with the heathen fables. He turned ſome of Bion's Idyllia into Latin Verſe, and ſucceeded ill enough, if we take Barthius's judgment (c). He died at Rome, towards the end of the year 1586, at the age of fourſcore (d).

(a) Thuan. lib. 84. pag. m. 76.

(b) See Mr. Teiſſier, Elog. tom. 2. pag. 71. He quotes Poſſevin's Apparatus.

(c) Barth. in Statium, tom. 3. pag. 1635.

(d) Thuan. lib. 84. pag. 76.

[A] He publiſhed a Collection of Poems, which Gyraldus, ... greatly commends.] Let us quote his words: Vivit adhuc Laurentius Gambara Riulanus ex Brixia, cujus poëmata nuper legi Romæ excuſa non indigna illa quidem lectione bonorum, nam & numeris poëticis, ac figuris, & varia eruditione habetur inſignis. Romæ verſatur Baſilio noſtro Zancho cariſſimus amicus, ut ex ejus carmine facile cognoſcimus, & Zanchi ipſius Epiſtolis (1). i. e. "There is yet living Laurence Gambara of Breſcia, whoſe Poems, printed at Rome, I lately read; they well deſerve the peruſal of good readers, the Author being celebrated for poetical numbers, figures, and a variety of erudition. He is the boſom friend of our Baſil Zanchius at Rome, as we eaſily perceive by his Poetry, and Zanchius's Letters." We ſhall ſee in the following Remark the confirmation of what has been juſt now read concerning the friendſhip of Gambara and Baſil Zanchius.

(1) Gyrald. de Poet. ſuor. tempor. Dial. 3. pag. m. 573, E.

[B] Manutius has ſpoken yet more amply in praiſe of Gambara's Poems.] He wrote him a Letter (2) ſoon after the death of Baſil Zanchius, at which he ſuppoſed him greatly afflicted, conſidering the intimacy there was between them. He obſerves that they were looked upon as the two firſt Poets of that time; but that it was not yet decided which of the two excelled the other. Fuit uterque veſtrûm ad poeticam facultatem natura propenſus, ac mirè factus, ingenio verò ita pares, ut, cùm nemo tam bonus poeta ſit, quin vobis primas in componendis verſibus partes tribuat, quam confeſſionem etiam ab invitis exprimit poematum comparatio, uter tamen utri præſtet, nondum ſatis judicare quiſquam poſſit (3). i. e. "Both of you were naturally inclined, and admirably formed for Poetry, but ſo equal in genius, that whereas all other Poets, be they ever ſo good, allow you the firſt rank, a confeſſion extorted from them, whether they will or no, on comparing your Poems with theirs, no one can yet determine which of you two deſerves the preeminence." In another Letter he exhorts him to continue the Poem of which he had ſeen the beginning with extreme admiration. Patavii dum eras, habebas in manibus egregium illud poëma de novis inſulis à Columbo inventis: cujus ego cùm exordium, multis præſentibus, legiſſem, admiratus gravitatem, & elegantiam carminis, exclamavi, Cedite Romani: in quo, adhuc, qui à me diſſentiret, inveni neminem, quo magis te hortor, quamquam, ut ſpero, currentem, ut approperes, habeaſque rationem non exſpectationis modò noſtræ, verùm etiam gloriæ tuæ, cujus habes à natura præclarum ſeminarium, quod etiam ſtudio excolis, ingenium tuum. Urge igitur, nec inſtitutum dimitte (4). i. e. "While you were at Padua, you had in hand that noble Poem of the diſcovery of the new Iſlands by Columbus; the beginning of which when I had read in the preſence of ſeveral perſons, being ſtruck with admiration at the dignity and elegance of the Poetry, I cried out, Give place, ye Roman Writers: wherein I have not yet met with one who diſſents from me. Wherefore I the more earneſtly exhort you to make haſte, tho' I ſuppoſe you do not ſtand ſtill, and to conſider not only our expectation, but your own glory, for which nature has furniſhed you with an excellent ſeed-plot, which you cultivate by ſtudy, I mean your genius. Proceed vigorouſly, therefore, and do not lay your deſign aſide." Mr. Teiſſier aſſures us that Gambara has publiſhed this Deſcription of the Diſcovery of the new World (5). If ſo, Manutius's exhortation was not in vain.

(2) It is the 28th Letter of the 4th Book.

(3) Paulus Manutius, Epiſt. 28. lib. 4. pag. m. 226.

(4) Idem, Epiſt. 48. lib. 4. pag. 261.

(5) Teiſſier, Elog. tom. 2. pag. 71. He only quotes Manutius's Letter.

[C] . . . Muretus fell into the other extreme.] There is certainly an exaggeration which deſerves cenſure in the flatteries of Paul Manutius; but the oppoſite exaggeration to which Muretus has abandoned himſelf is yet worſe. He wrote theſe two verſes at the beginning of his copy of Gambara's Poems:

Brixia, veſtratis merdoſa volumina vatis
Non ſunt noſtrates tergere digna nates (6).

" Breſcia, your Poets ſh—t—n verſes
" Are not ev'n fit to wipe our a——s."

(6) Menage, Anti-Baillet, tom. 2. pag. 9.

Father Sirmond had ſeen that copy in the Jeſuit's Library at Rome (7). Mr. Menage ſets againſt this judgment of Muretus the commendation which Thuanus has beſtowed on Gambara (8). If he had thought of Gyraldus and Manutius, he would have oppoſed their authority againſt the filthy diſtich he has quoted.

(7) Ibid.

(8) Ibid.

[D] He compoſed a Work wherein he lays the Poets under a heavy reſtriction.] Read theſe words of Mr. Baillet: He "has written a Latin Treatiſe touching the method of bringing Poetry to perfection, printed at Rome in 4*to* the year he died. He undertakes to ſhew in this Work, that every Poet, or every Verſifier and Rhimer who ſets up for a Poet, is under an indiſpenſible obligation, not only to retrench whatever may be indecent, wanton, and licentious in Poetry, but alſo whatever ſavours of fable, and the worſhip of falſe deities (9)." I refer you to the Reflection which Mr. Menage makes thereon (10).

(9) Baillet, Jugemens ſur les Poetes, tom. 1. num. 1091, pag. 112.

(10) Menage, Anti-Baillet, tom. 2. pag. 4, & ſeq.

GAMON (CHRISTOPHER DE) is no otherwiſe known to me than by a Work which he publiſhed in the year 1609. It is intitled, La Semaine ou Creation du Monde, contre celle du Sieur de Bartas; i. e. The Week, or Creation of the World, againſt that of du Bartas. See the Remark [A].

GANYMEDES,

[A] See the Remark.] The Sieur Bullart, after he has ſaid a good deal in commendation of du Bartas's Week, adds this: "But as men's opinions are various, Chriſtopher de Gamon, a perſon conſiderable for his learning, undertook to ſhew faults in this Book, and to leſſen the merit of it by another which he compoſed on the ſame ſubject, and which he publiſhed ſometime after the death of DU BARTAS: however, he diſputed the prize with him with ſome reſpect, and could not, after all, refuſe to pay the memory of that great man the praiſes which he acknowledged were ſo juſtly due to him (11)."

(11) Bullart, Academie des Arts & des Sciences, tom. 2. pag. 354.

GANYMEDES, ſon of a King of Troy [A], was the moſt beautiful boy in the world. Jupiter was charmed with him, and made him his cup-bearer in the room of Hebe (a), and made uſe of him for other very criminal purpoſes [B]. Some ſay he cauſed

(a) You will ſee in the Remark [D] the accident which was the pretext for depriving Hebe of her place. Charles Stephens relates it, and quotes Servius: Cum Jove, ſays he, apud Æthiopas cœnante, Hebe pocula illi adminiſtrans, perque lubricum minus cautè incedens, cecidiſſet, revolutiſque veſtibus obſcœna ſuperis nudaſſet, ab officio eſt amota, ejuſque loco Ganymedes ſubrogatus. Hæc Servius.

[A] Son of a King of Troy.] Tros, the ſon of Erichthonius, and grandſon of Dardanus, was the father of Ilus, Aſſaracus, and Ganymedes. Here are ſome Greek Verſes which acquaint us with this, and which deſerve to be quoted, becauſe they bear teſtimony to the beauty of this boy, his rape, and the office which was aſſigned him of Cup-bearer to Jupiter.

(1) Homer, Iliad. lib. 20. ver. 219.

Δάρδανον αὖ τέκεθ' υἱὸν Ἐριχθόνιον βασιλῆα (1),
- - - - - - - - -
Τρῶα δ' Ἐριχθόνιος τέκετο Τρώεσσιν ἄνακτα·
Τρωὸς δ' αὖ τρεῖς παῖδες ἀμύμονες ἐξεγένοντο,
Ἶλός τ', Ἀσσάρακές τε, καὶ ἀντίθεος Γανυμήδης,
Ὃς δὴ κάλλιστος γένετο θνητῶν ἀνθρώπων,
Τὸν καὶ ἀνηρείψαντο θεοὶ Διὶ οἰνοχοεύειν,
Κάλλεος εἵνεκα οἷο, ἵν' ἀθανάτοισι μετείη (2).

(2) Idem, ibid. ver. 230.

Dardanus rurſus genuit filium Erichthonium regem,
- - - - - - - - -
Troem autem Erichthonius genuit Trojanis regem,
Ex Troe vero rurſum tres filii inculpati nati ſunt,
Iluſque Aſſaracuſque & divinus Ganymedes,
Qui ſane pulcherrimus fuit mortalium hominum:
Quem etiam rapuerunt dii, Jovi ut pocillator eſſet,
Pulchritudinem ob ſuam, ut immortalibus intereſſet.

" From Dardanus great Erichthonius ſprings:
" - - - - - - - - -
" - - - - From him there came
" The ſacred Tros, of whom the Trojan name.
" Three ſons renown'd adorn'd his nuptial bed,
" Ilus, Aſſaracus, and Ganymed:
" The matchleſs Ganymed, divinely fair,
" Whom Gods enamour'd ſnatch'd to upper air,
" To bear the cup of Jove (ætherial gueſt)
" The grace and glory of th' ambroſial feaſt."
Pope.

Obſerve that Homer, in theſe verſes, does not ſay, as he does elſewhere (3), that Jupiter carried away Ganymede; but that the Gods took him up to heaven to ſerve as Cup-bearer to Jupiter. He adds that Ilus, Ganymede's eldeſt brother, begot Laomedon, who was the father of Priam. I take notice of this, becauſe it is neceſſary to examine whether Cicero be juſtly cenſured, when he is charged with a ſlip of memory, in having ſaid that the youth who was carried away was the ſon of Laomedon. Trois igitur fuit filius Ganymedes, non Laomedontis, ut videtur ſenſiſſe Cicero 1. Tuſcul. lapſus videlicet memoria (quo nomine ſolent magni viri laborare, qui gravioribus impediti curis, cùm citant vel autores, vel autorum teſtimonia, toto, quod aiunt, cœlo aberrant: id quod diligens lector ſæpe in Ariſtotelis deprehendet libris, præſertim de moribus.) Verba Ciceronis hæc ſunt: Nec Homerum audio, qui Ganymedem à Diis raptum ait propter formam, ut Jovi pocula miniſtraret: non juſta cauſa, cur Laomedonti tanta fieret injuria. Fingebat hæc Homerus & humana ad Deos transferebat, divina mallem ad nos (4). i. e. " Ganymede, therefore, " was the ſon of Tros, and not of Laomedon, as Ci- " cero, in his firſt Book of Tuſculan queſtions, ſeems " to have ſuppoſed, by a ſlip of memory, to which " great men are frequently ſubject, who being taken " up by more important concerns, when they quote " Authors, or the teſtimonies of Authors, commit e- " gregious miſtakes; as an attentive Reader will of- " ten diſcover in the Books of Ariſtotle, and eſpeci- " ally his Ethics. Cicero's words are theſe: Neither " do I regard Homer, who ſays Ganymede was car- " ried away by the Gods on account of his beauty, " that he might be Jupiter's Cup-bearer: for this " was no juſt reaſon why ſuch an injury ſhould be of- " ferred to Laomedon. Theſe are the fictions of Ho- " mer, who transfers human things to the Gods; I " had much rather he had transferred divine things to " us." Mr. le Fevre maintains this cenſure to be unjuſt, and to prove it he produces (5) a paſſage of the Scholiaſt on Euripides, where an ancient Writer teſtifies that Ganymede was the ſon of Laomedon. His meaning is, that ſince there are ſuch different opinions about the matter, Cicero might take the liberty either of following Homer, or of not following him; and conſequently that it is not thro' inadvertence, or forgetfulneſs, but choice, that he has made Ganymede the ſon of Laomedon. With ſubmiſſion to the Apologiſt, the cenſure ſeems to me to be well grounded; for Cicero in that place mentions a tradition delivered by Homer, and cites him, which is more. There is no likelihood therefore that he deſigned to contradict him with regard to the father of the beautiful youth who was ſtolen away. Let us conclude therefore that he ſuppoſed Homer made him ſon to Laomedon, and that his memory deceived him.

(3) In the Hymn to Venus. See the following Remark.

(4) Commentar. in Emblemata Alciati, p. m. 29. col. 1. Claudius du Verdier, Cenſur. in Author. pag. 105, has criticiſed this miſtake of Cicero.

(5) Hinc animadvertere poteſ ſatis improſpere Ciceronem a multis reprehenſum fuiſſe qui ... Ganymedem Laomedontis filium faciat. Tan. Faber, Epiſt. 58. lib. 2. pag. 153.

Note that when I uſed the indefinite expreſſion Son of a King of Troy, I had an eye to the various opinions of Authors in this particular. Hyginus tells us, in the CCXXIVth chapter, that Ganymede was the ſon of Aſſaracus, and in the CCLXXIſt chapter, that he was the ſon of Erichthonius. Some (6) make him the brother of Laomedon, and conſequently the ſon of Ilus. Others (7) will have him to be the ſon of Dardanus. The more received opinion is that of Homer.

(6) Tzetzes ad Lycophron. pag. 10.

(7) Lucian. in Charidemo, Oper. tom. 2. pag. 1019.

[B] Jupiter ... made him his Cup-bearer .... and made uſe of him for other very criminal purpoſes.] The verſes of Homer which have been ſeen in the foregoing Remark, do not import that any laſcivious motive occaſioned the rape of Ganymede. They only ſignify that the beauty of the youth engaged the Gods to tranſport him to heaven, that he might be Cup-bearer to Jupiter, and dwell among the immortal Beings. It is as much as to ſay, that they found him too beautiful not to be an ornament properly due to the celeſtial court, and judged that ſince the earth deſerved not to poſſeſs ſo important a treaſure, they ought to procure him a habitation more worthy of him, that is, an honourable place in the land of immortal happineſs. This does not intimate any laſcivious intention. Homer has kept exactly within theſe bounds, when he ſpeaks of Ganymede in the Hymn to Venus. He there changes indeed ſome other circumſtances; for he ſuppoſes Jupiter carried him off in order to make him Cup-bearer to the Gods; but he alters nothing farther:

Ἤ τοι μὲν ξανθὸν Γανυμήδεα μητίετα Ζεὺς
Ἥρπασ' ἑὸν διὰ κάλλος, ἵν' ἀθανάτοισι μετείη,
Καί τε Διὸς κατὰ δῶμα θεοῖς ἐπιοινοχοεύοι,
Θαῦμα ἰδεῖν, πάντεσσι τετιμένος ἀθανάτοισι,
Χρυσέῃ ὂν κρητῆρος ἀφύσσων νέκταρ ἐρυθρόν.

Hic quidem flavum Ganymedem conſultor Jupiter
Rapuit ſuam propter pulcritudinem, ut cum diis converſaretur,
Et Jovis in domo Diis vinum effunderet,
Mirabile viſu, ab omnibus honoratus immortalibus,
Aureo ex cratere hauriens nectar rubrum.

" Th' almighty thund'rer Ganymede the fair
" Did, for his beauty, ſnatch to upper air,
" Preferr'd with Deities to dwell above,
" And fill the goblet to the gueſts of Jove."

Apollonius does not depart from this idea, and we ſhould be too ſuſpicious if we judged otherwiſe under colour of the laſt words he has made uſe of. Nothing hinders but they may be reduced to the ſame ſenſe Homer had expreſſed:

Μετὰ καὶ Γανυμήδια, τὸν ῥά ποτε Ζεὺς
Οὐρανῷ ἐγκατένασσεν ἰφθίμοιο ἀθανάτοισιν
Κάλλεος ἱμερθείς.

Sed

caused him to be carried away by an eagle; and others affirm he was himself the ravisher under the form of that bird [C]. He deified this youth, and made a very fine present to his father [D]. Authors are not agreed either as to the place from whence Ganymede was Sed cum Ganymede, quem aliquando Jupiter In cœlo locarat, & deorum fecerat contubernalem Pulchritudinis cupidus (8).

(8) Apollon. Rhod. Argonaut. lib. 3. ver. 115, pag. m. 278.

" With Ganymede, whom Jove in heav'n had " plac'd,
" And with the converse of immortals grac'd,
" Smit with his beauty."

The other Poets have not been so scrupulous; they have plainly said that Jupiter fell in love with Ganymede, and carried him away to satisfy his pederasty. See the two verses of Plautus which I have quoted above (9), and the tenth Book (10) of Ovid's Metamorphoses. If Servius the Grammarian is to be trusted, rapti Ganymedis in Virgil is the same with stuprati, corrupti (11). I pass over several passages of Martial, and particularly these four verses:

(9) Citation (8) of the Article ADONIS.

(10) Versu 155, & seq.

(11) Servius, in hæc verba Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 28, & rapti Ganymedis honores.

Deprensum in puero tetricis me vocibus uxor
Corripis, & . . . . . te quoque habere refers.
Dixit idem quoties lascivo Juno tonanti?
Ille tamen gracili cum Ganymede jacet (12).

(12) Mart. Epigram. 44. lib. 11. See also the XXVII Epigram of the same Book.

" Caught with a boy, you chide me, rage, and " swell,
" And vow that you can please me full as well.
" Juno the same to wanton Jove may swear:
" Yet Jove still lies with Ganymede the fair."

I lay no small stress on the authority of Lucian; for though he was a libertine whose chief delight was to turn Religion into ridicule, yet his banters must have had some foundation: he would have made himself ridiculous if he had drolled on opinions, or ceremonies, forged out of his own brain, and injuriously imputed to Pagans. He took the ground-work of his Satires therefore from the traditions, and worship of the Gentiles: and consequently, since he has supposed that Ganymede was at the same time Jupiter's Cup-bearer, and his minion (13), we must conclude it was a very common opinion among the Heathens. But we do not stand in need of his authority: the single testimony of Plato would be sufficient. That great Philosopher condemns the fiction which the Cretans had established concerning Ganymede; and which they had been induced to propagate out of interest, that they might be provided with a great example to countenance their pederasty. Now the fable of Jupiter and Ganymede was very proper for their purpose; because their Laws were believed to be derived from Jupiter (14). They taught, therefore, that that Deity made use of Ganymede for the pleasures of love. I cannot here forbear citing Seneca, who has reckoned this action of Jupiter among the debaucheries which the Poets had sung of that God, and which served for nothing else but to remove all shame of vice from those who should form such an idea of the divine nature. Sic vestras hallucinationes fero, says he (15), quemadmodum Jupiter optimus maximus ineptias poëtarum: quorum alius . . . adulterum ipsum induxit . . . alius raptorem ingenuorum corruptoremque & cognatorum quidem . . . . .; quibus nihil aliud actum est quàm ut pudor hominibus peccandi demeretur si tales deos credidissent. i. e. " I bear with your errors " just as the great and good Jupiter does with the " impertinent fables of the Poets; of whom one . . . " has introduced him as an adulterer . . . another as a " ravisher and corrupter of ingenuous youths, and " even of those related to him . . .; the sole end of " which is to rid men of the shame of wicked actions, " if they should entertain such notions of the Gods." There is no doubt but he had in view the fiction of the rape of Ganymede; a fiction the more injurious to Jupiter, as he was the great great grandfather of that youth. This consanguinity made some affirm that Dardanus, the great grandfather of Ganymede, was not the son of Jupiter but of Coritus; for otherwise how could Jupiter have been guilty of so vile an action? Sed authores quidam tradunt, Dardanum, & Jasium Coriti filios fuisse, non Jovis; nec enim (si ita fuisset) ad usus impudicos Ganymedem pronepotem suum habere potuisset (16).

(13) See his Dialogue of Juno and Jupiter, Oper. tom. 1. pag. m. 128. I quote a passage of it in the Remark [D] of the Article LONGUS.

(14) Plato, de Legib. lib. 1. pag. m. 776, E.

(15) Seneca, de Vita beata, cap. 26. pag. m. 639.

This justifies the Fathers of the Church, who have upbraided the Pagans with this infamous action of the greatest of their Gods (17). This point will admit of no evasion, as if Clemens Alexandrinus, Arnobius, and Lactantius, had made use of any unfair dealing, or calumny, against the Heathens. They have reproached them with an established tradition, which extended even to their worship; for the same Jupiter, who was adored in the temples, was represented there with Ganymede, and the eagle which carried away that young boy. Read these words of Lactantius (18): Nam quod aliud argumentum habet imago catamiti, & effigies Aquilæ, cum ante pedes Jovis ponuntur in Templis, & cum ipso pariter adorantur, nisi ut nefandi sceleris, ac stupri memoria maneat in æternum? i. e. " For what else can be the meaning " of the images of the catamite, and the eagle, " which are placed at Jupiter's feet in the temples, " and are worshipped with him, but to perpetuate the " memory of an execrable crime, and scandalous " rape." Consult Tatian likewise (19). I have seen something in Juvenal which signifies that there was at Rome, either a temple of Ganymede, or a temple which contained the statue of that Cup-bearer to Jupiter. The Commentators give no great light to this passage:

(16) Lactant. lib. 1, sub fin.

(17) See above the Remark [B] of the Article CHRYSIPPUS, natural son of Pelops, and St. Augustin, de Civit. Dei, lib. 7. cap. 26.

(18) Lactant. Divin. Instit. lib. 1. cap. 11, pag. m. 34.

(19) See the Remark [G], in the Margin, Citation (59).

Nuper enim, ut repeto, fanum Isidis & Ganymedem
Pacis, & advectæ secreta palatia matris,
Et Cererem (nam quo non prostat fœmina templo?)
Notior Aufidio mœchus celebrare solebas (20).

(20) Juven. Sat. 9, ver. 22.

" Thy lust, more shameless than Aufidius', dares
" Pollute each fane; nor Isis' temple spares,
" Nor Ganymede, nor Berecynthia's shrine,
" Nor, Peace, thy temple, nor ev'n, Ceres, thine.
" For where's the place so sacred, as to be
" From wanton, prostituted women free?"

Pausanias mentions a statue of Jupiter and Ganymede which a certain Thessalian, named Gnothis, dedicated in the famous temple of Olympia (21).

(21) Pausan. lib. 5, cap. 24, pag. m. 440.

[C] Some say he caused him to be snatched away by an eagle; and others affirm he was himself the ravisher under the form of that bird.] Horace and Hyginus (22) are of the first opinion: Ovid and Lucian are of the last, Here are the words of Horace:

(22) Hygin. Poetic. Astron. lib. 2. cap. 16. See also Apollodorus, lib. 3. pag. m. 211.

Qualem ministrum fulminis alitem,
Cui Rex Deorum regnum in aveis vagas
Permisit, expertus fidelem
Juppiter in Ganymede flavo (23).

(23) Horat. Od. 4. lib. 4.

" The royal bird, to whom the King of heav'n
" The empire of the feather'd race has giv'n,
" For services already done,
" The rape of Tros's son."

As for Ovid, he has expressed himself in this manner:

Nulla tamen alite verti
Dignatur, nisi quæ portat sua fulmina terræ.
Nec mora: percusso mendacibus aëre pennis
Arripit Iliadem, qui nunc quoque pocula miscet, Invitaque Jovi nectar Junone ministrat (24).

(24) Ovid. Metam. lib. 10. ver. 157.

" No other feather'd shape he deigns to wear
" Than his who bears his thunder thro' the air.
" He darts, in borrow'd plumage, from the skies,
" And bears from earth to heav'n his Trojan prize;
" Who now the cup nectareous fills above,
" And ministers, tho' Juno frown, to Jove."

You will find Lucian's words in the Dialogue of Jupiter and Ganymede (25).

(25) Lucian. Oper. tom. 1. pag. 124, & seq.

[D] He deified this youth, and made a very fine present to his father.] Tros was inconsolable for the loss of his dear son; but having received some amends, and been acquainted that he whom he lamented would live for ever among the Gods, without growing old, he took was taken, or the youth's employment at that time [E]. Some ſay he was on Mount Ida, and others place him elſewhere: ſome pretend he was hunting, and others that he looked after a flock of ſheep. I ſhall not ſpend my time in giving an account of the allegorical explications which have been given (b): they are conceits which may be multiplied in infinitum, and by the help of which a man may find in every thing whatever he pleaſes. But I ſhall take notice that there are ſome Writers who have related this as an Hiſtorical fact. They aſſert that Ganymede was really ſtolen away by a Prince who was in love with him [F]. The Painters who repreſent him carried away on the eagle's back took comfort. Jupiter made him a preſent of ſome very ſwift horſes, which were ſome of thoſe which the Gods rode on (26). Note that Laomedon, the ſon * of Tros, promiſed Hercules the horſes which Jupiter had given by way of compenſation (27); but not having been ſo good as his word, he was beſieged in Troy, and there loſt his life. Hercules had demanded thoſe horſes in recompence for his ſervice in delivering Heſione, the daughter of Laomedon, who was expoſed to a ſea-monſter (28). Note alſo that Anchiſes had the addreſs to get ſome of the breed of thoſe horſes, without Laomedon's knowing any thing of the matter (29). And note, in the laſt place, that, according to ſome Authors (30), the preſent which Jupiter made to Ganymede's father was a golden vine, wrought by Vulcan. As to the other particular, if the authorities which have been produced above (31) concerning this youth's deification be not ſufficient, we may add to them the teſtimony of Pindar (32), and that of Lucian (33), and this Commentary of Servius. Honores dixit, vel propter miniſterium poculorum, ad quod receptus eſt, remota Hebe filia Junonis, quæ Jovi bibere miniſtrabat; vel ob hoc quod inter ſydera collocatus, aquarii nomen accepit, & non ab hoc tantum iraſcitur Juno, ſed quod violatus ſit ut divinos honores conſequeretur (34). You ſee in theſe words of Servius two remarkable things; the one, that Hebe, who had the office of ſerving wine to the Gods, was deprived of that employment, and Ganymede preferred to it in her ſtead; and the other, that he was placed among the ſtars, and became that ſign of the Zodiac which is called Aquarius. Hyginus obſerves this (35). What a mortification muſt it have been to poor Juno to ſee her huſband's favourite fill the place which had been taken from her daughter Hebe! The miſchance which had befallen Hebe was indeed the pretext for turning her out; but this was not the true cauſe. She fell down, while the Gods were at table, and diſcovered thoſe parts which modeſty requires to be concealed (36). Jupiter, who paſſionately wiſhed to make Ganymede his Cup-bearer, laid hold on this opportunity, and turned the poor girl away.

(b) See the Commentators on the 4*th Emblem of Alciatus.*

(26) Taken from Homer's Hymn, in Venerem.

* It ſhould be grandſon.

(27) Δαῶχ' ὕιος παυνΙανυμήδεος. Dedit pro filio compenſationem Ganymede. Homer. Iliad. lib. 5. ver. 266.

(28) Ex Apollod. lib. 2. pag. m. 123, 137.

(29) Homer. lib. 5. ver. 266.

(30) See Tanaq. Faber, Epiſt. 58, lib. 2, pag. 153. He cites the Scholiaſt on Euripides in Oreſt.

(31) In the Remark [B], and in the preſent Remark, Citation (26).

(32) Pindar. Od. 10. Olymp.

(33) Lucian. in Jove Tragœdo, Oper. tom. 2. pag. 205. & in Charidemo, ibid. pag. 1019.

(34) Servius, in Virg. Æn. lib. 1. ver. 28.

(35) Hygin. cap. 224. & Poet. Aſtron. cap. 16, & 29.

(36) See above Citation (a).

(37) Lucian. in Dial. Jovis & Ganym. Oper. tom. 1. pag. 124.

(38) Virg. Æn. lib. 5. ver. 252.

[E] Authors are not agreed either as to the place from whence Ganymede was taken, or the youth's employment at that time.] Lucian (37) ſuppoſes Ganymede performed the part of a ſhepherd on mount Ida, when Jupiter carried him away. Virgil ſuppoſes he was hunting there:

Intextuſque puer frondoſâ regius Idâ
Veloces jaculo cervos, curſuque fatigat,
Acer, anhelanti ſimilis, quem præpes ab Idâ
Sublimem pedibus rapuit Jovis armiger uncis (38).

" There, Ganymede is wrought with living art,
" Chaſing thro' Ida's groves the trembling hart:
" Breathleſs he ſeems, yet eager to purſue:
" When from aloft deſcends, in open view,
" The bird of Jove; and ſouſing on his prey,
" With crooked talons bears the boy away."
Dryden.

Valerius Flaccus (39), and Statius (40), have imitated this paſſage of the Æneid. But Strabo (41) affirms it was reported that Ganymede had been carried away from a place called Harpageia, ſituate on the confines of the territories of the cities of Priapus and Cyzicus; and that, according to others, he had been taken away from the promontory of Dardania. The Chalcidians (42) maintained that the rape happened in their country, that is, in the iſland of Eubœa; and they ſhewed the place where Jupiter had committed the fact. It was a place full of myrtles, and they called it Harpagium. Note, that they were a people exceſſively addicted to the ſin againſt nature. Περὶ τὰ παιδικὰ δαιμονίως ἐπλόηλαι. Prodigioſe in amore puerorum flagrant (43). It is very likely, therefore, that they gave out this tradition in order to ſkreen themſelves by the authority and example of the greateſt of the Gods. Plato had the ſame opinion of the inhabitants of Crete, as I have already ſaid (44). Suidas has preſerved us another hypotheſis concerning the place where this rape was committed: ſee the following Remark.

(39) Valer. Flaccus, Argon. lib. 2. ver. 414.

(40) Statius, Theb. lib. 1. ver. 548.

(41) Strabo, lib. 13. pag. 404. See alſo Steph. Byzant. voce Ἁρπαγία.

(42) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 601.

(43) Idem, ibid.

(44) In the Remark [B], Citation (14).

[F] There are ſome Writers who .... aſſert that Ganymede was really ſtolen away by a Prince who was in love with him.] Herodian relates that the place called Peſſinus in Phrygia had been ſo named, either becauſe the image of the mother of the Gods there fell down from heaven, or becauſe the battle which was there fought between Ilus and Tantalus coſt a great many perſons their lives. Thoſe two Princes, the one a Phrygian, the other a Lydian, made war on one another, either becauſe they could not agree about the limits of their dominions (45), or rather becauſe Tantalus had carried off Ganymede. The youth loſt his life in the field of battle, by the hands of his brother and thoſe of his raviſher; the one endeavouring to hold him, and the other to pull him away with all his might. His body not being found, his adventure was repreſented as marvellous and divine; and thence was invented the fable of his being taken away by Jupiter (46). We read in Euſebius's Chronicle (47), that the rape of Ganymede occaſioned a war between Tros, that youth's father, and Tantalus. This is aſſerted on the credit of a Writer named Phanocles. He was an Erotic Author (48), or, to expreſs my ſelf more clearly, a Compiler of amorous adventures, Oroſius has ſpoken of this action of Tantalus in the following words (49): Nec mihi nunc enumerare opus eſt Tantali & Pelopis facta turpia, & fabulas turpiores: quorum Tantalus Rex Phrygiorum Ganymedem Trois Dardaniorum regis filium cum flagitioſiſſimè rapuiſſet, majore conſerti certaminis fœditate detinuit, ſicut Phanocles Poeta confirmat, qui maximum bellum excitatum ob hoc fuiſſe commemorat: ſive quia hunc ipſum Tantalum, utpote aſſeclam Deorum, videri vult raptum puerum ad libidinem Jovis familiari lenocinio præparaſſe, qui ipſum quoque filium Pelopem epulis ejus non dubitarit impendere. i. e. " Neither is it neceſſary for me at preſent to enumerate the ſcandalous " actions, or more ſcandalous ſtories, of Tantalus and " Pelops; of whom Tantalus, being King of the " Phrygians, having moſt wickedly ſtolen away Ganymede, the ſon of Tros King of the Dardanians, " more villanouſly detained him by open force, as is confirmed by Phanocles the Poet, who ſays a very great " war was raiſed on that account; or elſe, perhaps, " becauſe he thought that Tantalus, being an attendant on the Gods, had, by a caſt of his office, procured the boy for Jupiter's luſt, ſince he made no ſcruple to ſerve up his own ſon Pelops at that God's table." Euſtathius (50), having ſaid that, according to ſome Authors, Tantalus had carried away Ganymede, adds that others imputed that rape to Minos. If we conſult Suidas, we ſhall learn a great many circumſtances of this attempt of Minos. We ſhall there ſee that the ſaid King of Crete went to viſit Tros, and being informed that the three ſons of that Prince were hunting, declared he had a mind to go and hunt with them. He had no ſooner ſeen Ganymede than he conceived a moſt violent affection for him: he cauſed him to be carried off, and putting him on board one of the veſſels which he had before-hand ſent up the Granicus, returned with him to Crete. Ganymede was ſo afflicted at his misfortune, that he ran himſelf through with his own ſword. Minos buried him in a Temple; and

(45) In Herodian it is περὶ ὁδῶν de vijs; but according to the conjecture of Meziriac, Commentaire ſur les Epitres d'Ovide, pag. 884, it ſhould be corrected περὶ ὁρῶν de finibus.

(46) Herodian. lib. 1. cap. 11. See alſo the Scholiaſt on Lycophron, pag. 50.

(47) Euſeb. num. 654.

(48) See Scaliger in Euſebium, pag. 41. He cites Plutarch, lib. 4. cap. 5. Συμπόσ.

(49) Oroſius, lib. 1. cap. 12. pag. m. 4, 45.

(50) Euſtath. in Lib. XX Iliad.

back are guilty of a miſtake, and do not conſult the ancient Authors [G]. It is pretended that Cicero did not well know who was the father of Ganymede (c). The Phliaſians from time immemorial had a particular devotion for a deity whom they firſt named GANYMEDA, and afterwards Hebe. This is what Pauſanias informs us of in his IId Book, page 140.

(c) See the Remark [A].

and thence it was given out that this youth converſed with the Gods (51). Euſtathius (52) relates the circumſtances ſomewhat differently. He ſays that Ganymede, having been forced, hanged himſelf; and that they made his father believe a whirlwind and a cloud had taken him up, to be Cup-bearer to Jupiter. You will find in Athenæus that Echemenes, who had written a Work touching what concerned the Iſle of Crete, aſſerted that Ganymede was not carried away by Jupiter, but by King Minos. Ludovicus Vives affirms that Tantalus, when he had ſtolen the boy, tranſported him to the Iſle of Crete, and gave him to Jupiter (53); which is a mere paraphraſe of Oroſius: but St. Auguſtin (54) has acknowledged that only the fable ſuited Jupiter, and that the reality belonged to Tantalus. Here is another tradition, which does not attribute the conduct of Tantalus to a motive of laſciviouſneſs. Suidas, on the word Ἴλιον, and Cedrenus alſo, relate that King Tros, having ſubdued ſeveral Princes his neighbours, ſent his ſon Ganymede, attended by fifty men, to offer a ſacrifice of thankſgiving in a certain temple of Jupiter, which was in the territories of Tantalus. But Tantalus, ſuppoſing Ganymede came as a ſpy, to inform himſelf of the ſtrength of his Kingdom, made him priſoner; and thereupon Ganymede fell ſick, and died (55).

(51) Extracted from Suidas in Μίνως.

(52) Euſtath. in Lib. XX Iliad.

(53) Lud. Vives, in Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, lib. 7. cap. 26. & lib. 18. cap. 13.

(54) Auguſtin. ibid. lib. 18. cap. 13.

(55) Meziriac, Comment. ſur les Epitres d'Ovide, pag. 885.

[G] The Painters, who repreſent him carried away on the eagle's back, are guilty of a miſtake, and do not conſult the ancient Authors.] Salmaſius (56) has cenſured this miſtake: he ſays that according to the ancient Poets the eagle took Ganymede by the hair with his talons. The Author whom he comments (57) ſays the ſame thing. Note, that Martial ſuppoſes the eagle was afraid of hurting Ganymede.

(56) Salmaſ. Not. in Achillem Tatium, pag. 583.

(57) Achilles Tatius, pag. m. 144.

Ætherias aquila puerum portante per auras,
Illæſum timidis unguibus hæſit onus (58).

(58) Mart. Epigr. 7. lib. 1.

" As with the boy Jove's eagle ſoar'd away,
" His cautious talons bore, unhurt, the prey."

An ancient Carver, named Leochares, repreſented this wonderfully well (59). A learned Engliſhman has followed the common error of the Painters in a Work, the French Tranſlation whereof was printed at Roan, in the year 1656, intitled The World in the Moon. His obſervation is this (60): " If there be ſo large a bird " in Madagaſcar as Paulus Venetus (*) relates, the quill-" feathers of whoſe wings are twelve paces long, and " which can take up a horſe and his rider into " the air, as eaſily as one of our kites would a little " mouſe, there needs no more to be done than to " teach one of thoſe birds to carry a man, and one " might ride on his back, as Ganymede does on an " eagle."

(59) Leochares aquilam ſentientem quid rapiat in Ganymede, & cui fuerat, parcentem unguibus etiam per veſtem. Plin. lib. 34. cap. 8. pag. m. 125. This piece of work was highly eſteemed. Τίνος δὲ χάριν καὶ Λεωχάρους Γανυμήδη τὸν ἀνδρόγυνον, ὡς τι σπουδαῖον ἔχοντες χτῆμα, τετιμήκατε; Cur propter Leocharis ſculptoris artificium Ganymedem illum effœminatum, tanquam eximium aliquid habentes, colitis? Tatian. Orat. ad Græcos, pag. 170. [In what is yet remaining of the portico of the noble Temple at Baalbek, there is a Ganymede and the eagle flying away with him, ſo lively done, that it excellently repreſented the ſenſe of that Verſe in Martial, Illæſum timidis &c. Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem, pag. 136. ADD. REM.]

(60) Le Monde dans la Lune, Part. 1. pag. 267.

(*) Lib. 3. cap. 40.

GARASSE (FRANCIS), a native of Angoulême, became a Jeſuit in the year 1601 (a). He made himſelf exceedingly talked of by the zeal he expreſſed againſt libertines, and the enemies of his Order. His invectives were levelled principally at the Poet Theophile, and Paſquier. He wanted neither genius nor reading; and having a great deal of fire, a vaſt imagination, and good lungs, he paſſed for a great Preacher. He was very fit to maintain a cauſe in the pulpit: his peculiar turn of wit, and his way of delivery, made very ſtrong impreſſions, conſidering the taſte of that age; but he ſhould not have meddled with writing, or if he could not renounce the title of Author, he ſhould only have made Latin Verſes, or have exerciſed himſelf on ſubjects of ſmall importance: for having ventured to write on the moſt ſublime myſteries which Libertines may call in queſtion, he has contributed leſs to the converſion of thoſe people, than the confirming them in their obſtinacy [A]; becauſe he was every moment departing from the

(a) Alegambe, in Bibliotb. Scriptor. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 124.

[A] He has contributed leſs to the converſion of Libertines than to the confirming them in their obſtinacy.] Here is the title of a Book which he publiſhed at Paris, in the year 1623. La Doctrine Curieuſe des beaux Eſprits de ce temps, ou prétendus tels, contenant pluſieurs Maximes pernicieuſes à l'Eſtat, à la Religion, & aux bonnes mœurs, combatue & renverſée par le P. François Garaſſus, de la Compagnie de JESUS. i. e. " The Cu-" rious Doctrine of the Wits, or pretenders to wit, of " this age, containing ſeveral maxims pernicious to " the State, Religion, and good manners, refuted and " overthrown by Father Francis Garaſſe, of the So-" ciety of Jeſus." He imagined he had quite confounded thoſe Libertines, but was ſoon acquainted that, in the judgment of the public, his Book was much fitter to foment Atheiſm, than to overthrow it. The judgment and cenſure of this Work was addreſſed to the Jeſuits (1); and the Author tells them, that it could not be believed that they, who were ſome of the firſt and ſtrongeſt champions of truth, ſhould have made choice of Father Garaſſe to defend it. This man, who is better qualified for a ſatirical Poet, or a Merry-Andrew, than for a Catholic Doctor, has lately written a Book which bears the ſpecious title of a Treatiſe againſt Atheiſts, and which, to ſpeak ſincerely, and as in the preſence of God, is a common ſhore of impiety, a ſink of prophaneneſs, a heap of buffooneries and facetious ſtories, and a malicious and ſlanderous ſatire againſt a great many people of probity and merit (2). Having ſaid ſeveral things in the ſame ſtrain, to characterize the Work, he aſks the Jeſuits, Whether theſe be the means of defending the venerable truth of our Religion; whether theſe be true weapons to combate Atheiſm; or whether they be not rather the inſtruments of the ruin of ſouls, and the inventions of the father of lies, to render truth more ridiculous and deſpicable among his wretched agents. The ſame year 1623, Naudé publiſhed a Book (3) wherein we find the following words (4): As for Father Garaſſe, it is true he has taken ſome of their Articles from Father Robert, which he has ſo aptly put in parallel with the ways of acting of the Libertines of this age, that as well on this account, as for his ingenuity, and variety of erudition, I am ſorry he ſhould undergo the cenſure which is paſſed on all thoſe who ſhew their learning on the ſame ſubject; to wit, that no man ever wrote better againſt the Atheiſts than the Clerks of the Courts of Juſtice, who draw up the ſentence of their condemnation: if, however, according to the ſaying of Tertullian, the Church, which is altogether merciful, non quærat potius pudorem ſuffundere, quàm ſanguinem effundere, i. e. ſeek not rather to work by putting to ſhame, than by ſpilling of blood. He returns to the charge in the laſt Chapter of his Book, in this manner: I have ſome monſters to encounter, ſays he (5), . . " who, by an " abominable induſtry, draw . . . . impiety out of the " Book of the Curious Doctrine, which, thro' an unpa-" rallelled raſhneſs and impudence, they brand with " the moſt pernicious title of Atheiſm reduced into an

(1) The Prior Ogier is the Author of the Book which appeared in 1623, under the Title of Jugement & Cenſure du Livre de la Doctrine Curieuſe de François Garaſſe.

(2) In the Epiſtle Dedicatory.

(3) Intitled, Inſtructions à la France ſur la Verité de l'Hiſtoire des Freres de la Roze-Croix, i. e. " Inſtructi-" ons to France, " concerning the " truth of the " Hiſtory of the " Fraternity of " Roſicrucians."

(4) Chap. 6. pag. 60.

(5) Ibid. pag. 113, 114.

the gravity which becomes ſuch matters, and made uſe of bad proofs, and falſe quotations. He ſaw himſelf expoſed to the Criticiſm of ſeveral formidable pens. Paſquier's ſons revenged their father with a great deal of haughtineſs [B]. But the perſon who wrote the moſt vehemently againſt this Jeſuit was the Abbot of St. Cyran [C]. It is pretended that, on this account, Father Garaſſe was the Helen of the war between the Jeſuits and the Janſeniſts [D]. He concluded his life with a very fine action. He earneſtly aſked leave of his Superiors to attend thoſe who were infected with the plague, during a terrible peſtilence which made a thouſand ravages in Poictiers: he obtained leave, and having caught the contagion in that charitable office, died in the Hoſpital among the infected [E], the 14th of June 1631, at the age of forty ſix (b). He

(b) Alegambe, Bibliotb. Script. Soc. Jeſu, pag. 124.

" Art. This gives me occaſion to deplore the calamity " of our age, which is arrived to ſuch a degree of " malice, that it deprives us even of the liberty of " oppoſing the greateſt impieties, and refuting them " by the moſt ordinary and lawful means; ſince the cor- " ruption is ſo great, that when religious Orders, zeal- " ous for the honour and integrity of their Religion, " voluerunt, as Lactantius ſays (*) poſteris etiam appro- " bare, quanta pietate defenderint Religiones, auctorita- " tem Religionum ipſarum, teſtando minuerunt; i. e. " would alſo teſtify to poſterity with what piety they " have defended their Religion, they by that very " means leſſen its authority."

(*) Lib. 1. de falſa Religione.

[B] Paſquier's ſons (6) revenged their father with a great deal of haughtineſs.] They ſuppreſſed their reſentment till Garaſſe had ſhewn his obſtinacy in railing at him (7). He had written a Book againſt his Recherches in the year 1622 (8). The year following he abuſed him in a hundred paſſages of his Doctrine Curieuſe: he went on in the ſame ſtrain the year 1624, in his Anſwer to the Prior Ogier. Then they loſt all patience, and publiſhed a very violent Book againſt our Jeſuit, which they addreſſed to him in what place ſoever he might be. The reaſon of this form of addreſs was, becauſe Francis Garaſſe had dedicated his Book to the late Stephen Paſquier wherever he may be; for (ſaid he) having never been able to find out your Religion, I know not the rout or way you took at your departure out of this life; and therefore I am forced to write to you at a venture, and to addreſs this packet WHEREVER YOU MAY BE. To pay him in the ſame coin, they accoſted him in this manner (9): This has made me uſe the ſame freedom with you, and forced me to addreſs this packet to you IN WHAT PLACE SOEVER YOU MAY BE. For not knowing whether you are at the Service-tree (which you call a Tavern of honour, and where you confeſs you have had many a meal at free-coſt) or at the town of Clamar in the ſuburbs of S. Germain (where your name is written in ſuch fair characters on all the mantle-trees of the chimneys) or in ſome other place of the ſame kind; I am conſtrained to ſend you this Book at a venture, and to direct it to you in what place ſoever you be.

(6) One was named Nicholas Paſquier Sieur de Minxe, and had been Maſter of Requeſts; the other was called Guy Paſquier Sieur de Buſſi, and was Auditor of Accounts. See the Licence of their Book.

(7) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Book intitled, Défence pour Etienne Paſquier, printed at Paris, in the year 1624.

(8) Intitled, Les Recherches des Recherches & autres Oeuvres d'Etienne Paſquier.

(9) Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Défence pour Etienne Paſquier.

[C] The perſon who wrote the moſt vehemently againſt this Jeſuit was the Abbot of St. Cyran.] He attacked the volume in folio which Garaſſe had publiſhed in the year 1625, under the title of La Somme Theologique des Veritez capitales de la Religion Chreſtienne: i. e. " The Theological Summary of the capital Truths of " the Chriſtian Religion:" his Critique (10) is intitled, La Somme des Fautes & Fauſſetez capitales contenues en la Somme Theologique du Pere François Garaſſe. i. e. " The Summary of the capital Faults and Falſehoods " contained in the Theological Summary of Father F. " Garaſſe." It was to contain four Volumes: I have ſeen only the two firſt and an Abridgment of the fourth; and if I am not miſtaken, there was no more printed. The firſt Volume contains the faults which Garaſſe had committed in quoting the Holy Scripture, St. Auguſtin, and St. Baſil of Seleucia. The IId contains his faults with regard to the quotations from the other Fathers, and ſecular Authors. The IIId was to contain the faults in Divinity, Philoſophy, Chronology, Coſmography, &c. The IVth was to contain ſeveral hereſies, errors, impieties, irreverences, buffooneries, and inſupportable boaſtings. The Author dedicates the Work to Cardinal Richelieu, and declares in his Epiſtle Dedicatory that he honours the Society of the Jeſuits, as one of the ſtrongeſt companies of the army of the Son of God, and which, on days of battle, ſurpaſſes in courage the invincible phalanx of Macedon, and the inſeparable band of lovers, who died together for the public good at Lacedæmon (11). In the King's Licence he takes the name of Alexander de l'Excluſe (12). I do not think it eaſy to meet with ſo ſtrong a piece of criticiſm as this. It ſhews an exact and profound erudition, a ſolid judgment, and an admirable ſagacity in diſcovering the faults of a Writer. It is one of the moſt uſeful Books a man can read, and eſpecially if he deſigns to ſet up for an Author who argues from authorities, alluſions, compariſons, &c.

(10) It is in quarto, and was printed at Paris in 1626.

(11) I think he ſhould have ſaid Thebes, and not Lacedæmon. See Plutarch, in the Life of Pelopidas.

[D] It is pretended that . . Father Garaſſe was the Helen of the war between the Jeſuits and the Janſeniſts.] It is what the Janſeniſts pretend; for here is what one of them has publiſhed (13). " It was in the year 1626 that " it (14) began by the Book of a Jeſuit named Garaſſe, " intitled, Somme des veritez capitales de la Religion " Chrêtienne. The late Abbot of St. Cyran, having " obſerved therein a prodigious number of falſifications " of the Scripture and the Fathers, and many here- " tical and impious opinions, thought the honour of " the Church required him to undertake to refute it, " tho' his modeſty determined him at the ſame time " to conceal his name, as he has always done in his " other Books. While the firſt part of this work was " in the preſs, the noiſe it made every where occa- " ſioned Garaſſe's Book to be more carefully examined. " The Rector of the Univerſity complained of it to " the Faculty, who named Commiſſaries to examine " that Book. But this ſtir having given the alarm " to the Jeſuits, they made it plainly appear that it is " no eaſy enterprize to cenſure the book of a Jeſuit. " For by their caballing they prevailed ſo far with the " Magiſtrates, as to get St. Cyran's Book ſtopped for " a long time." The Author adds, that Garaſſe himſelf choſe out of his Book 53 propoſitions, the moſt eaſy to maintain that he could find, and of which there were not three that were of the number of thoſe which the Abbot of St. Cyran charged him with in his Work; and having afterwards drawn up a cenſure of them to his own mind, he refuted it with great eaſe; and by this artifice he dazzled the eyes of the public for ſome time, and perplexed the examination of his Book which the Sorbonne was proceeding upon: ſo that " the Abbot of S. " Cyran had a thouſand difficulties to remove the ſtop " which the Jeſuits had put to the publiſhing of his " Refutation, and to undeceive the world, who had " ſuffered themſelves to be ſurprized by the artifice of " Father Garaſſe. However, he compaſſed it at laſt, " and in ſpite of the whole cabal of the Society, and " the long delays which had been granted Father Ga- " raſſe to retract what he had advanced, his Book " was cenſured, as containing ſeveral heretical, erro- " neous, ſcandalous, and raſh propoſitions, ſeveral falſi- " fications of paſſages of Scripture and of the holy Fathers, " falſly cited, and wreſted from their true ſenſe, and " an infinite number of expreſſions unfit to be written, " or read, by Chriſtians and Divines. The Jeſuits " ſhewed . . . . ſome ſort of prudence in this affair. . . " They did not obſtinately perſiſt in ſupporting their Fa- " ther Garaſſe, but baniſhed him far from Paris to one " of their houſes, where he was no more heard of; " and ſo they ended the buſineſs. Happy would they " have been if, by ſuppreſſing this quarrel, they had " alſo ſuppreſſed in their minds the reſentment they " conceived on that account againſt the Abbot of S. " Cyran, which has ſince engaged them in ſo many " horrible violences!"

(12) See Colomiés, Melanges Hiſtoriques, pag. 26.

(13) The Author of the Imaginaires, Letter 3. pag. m. 47.

(14) That is, the War between the Jeſuits and the Janſeniſts.

[E] He died among the infected.] " Cum Pictavii " ſæva lues graſſaretur, multis precibus exoravit Mode- " ratores ſuos, ut ſibi liceret tabe infectis inſervire; " quod cùm obtinuiſſet, in iis demum piis officiis, in " hoſpitali

He had reconciled himſelf with a good grace to the Prior Ogier [F], and to Balzac [G]. The title of his Rabelais reformed has led Placcius into a miſtake [H].

He made uſe of a maxim againſt the Poets which is in the main a very good one; but it was turned againſt himſelf [I]. He maintained that it is not a good excuſe for profane thoughts, to ſay they are not delivered in proſe, but in verſe.

I ought

" hoſpitali domo inter infectos, quos verbo & exemplo " etiam moriens hortabatur, ſanctiſſimè & religioſiſſi- " mè conſumptus eſt (15).

(15) Alegambe, Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 124. See alſo Leſcalopier in Ciceron. de Nat. Deorum, lib. 1. num. 64.

[F] He had reconciled himſelf . . . to the Prior Ogier.] So ſoon as Garaſſe's Apology was publiſhed, the Prior prepared for a Reply; but there were ſome Mediators of peace who put an end to that diſpute. The Jeſuit prevented his antagoniſt by a Letter full of civilities; and Ogier anſwered in the ſame way. The public was regaled with theſe Letters as ſoon as they were written (16). Father Alegambe has here committed a fault, for which the Prior Ogier would have demanded ſatisfaction, if he had been as nice as the relations of Janſenius (17): for it plainly follows from Alegambe's narrative (18), that Ogier had been a heretic, and was converted to the Romiſh Communion. Southwel has not corrected Father Alegambe's fault.

(16) In the year 1624.

(17) See their Factums, or Caſes, againſt the Jeſuit Hazart.

(18) He reckons among the Books of Father Garaſſe, Litteræ ad Dominum Ogier, & hujus ad illum, de ſua cum Eccleſia reconciliatione. Alegambe, ubi ſupra.

[G] . . . . and to Balzac.] The account of their reconciliation, and the Letters they wrote to one another, are to be ſeen prefixed to Father Garaſſe's Somme Theologique.

[H] The Title of his Rabelais reformed has led Placcius into a miſtake.] That Author has written a Book de Scriptis & Scriptoribus anonymis atque pſeudonymis: he had ſome reaſon to put Francis Garaſſe into the number of anonymous Writers; for there are divers Works of that Jeſuit to which the Author did not ſet his name. Such was the Book he intitled Le Rabelais reformé. Placcius imagines that Garaſſe did the ſame by Rabelais that ſeveral have done by Martial and Catullus, whoſe Books they have publiſhed after having expunged all the obſcene words out of them. The Works of Rabelais, ſays he (19), ut ut jucunda, ſic obſcœnis aliiſque ſcandaloſis plena, caſtigata imo caſtrata, titulo Rabeleſii reformati Pictavii & Bruxellis in 8 nomine reformantis Franciſci Garaſſi, ſcriptis aliis notiſſimi Jeſuitæ Galli, non adjecto prodiere, docente Alegambe pag. 124. The truth is, Father Garaſſe's Rabelais reformed is a Book of Controverſy, wherein he ſpeaks in a ſatirical manner of ſeveral Miniſters, and particularly of Peter du Moulin, whom he accuſes of being an imitator of Rabelais, and a Rabelais riſen from the dead. See what a man expoſes himſelf to, when he ſpeaks of a Book which he is only acquainted with by its title.

(19) Placcius, de Anonymis, cap. 14. num. 463. pag. 111.

[I] He made uſe of a maxim againſt the Poets which in the main is a very good one; but it was turned againſt himſelf.] In the Refutation of a Sonnet of Theophile's he begins thus: " To anſwer theſe impieties, " I muſt, by way of anticipation, enervate a ſilly and " weak defence which many have in their mouths, " with regard to the impieties of this Writer; that " provided they can ſay ſuch things are delivered in " Poetry, they imagine the crime is advantageouſly " covered, for as much as it is not in proſe; as if " rhime could blot out all impieties, and give people " a licence to pronounce blaſphemies. It is true, theſe " impieties and impertinencies which I am to attack, " I ſee plainly, are in verſe; but for this very reaſon " I think them more guilty than if they had been " only in proſe: for they are ſo much the more ſtudied, far fetched, and profoundly meditated, and conſequently expreſſed in more efficacious, powerful, " and elaborate terms, which make a deeper impreſſion on the minds of the Readers. Did not Cleanthes uſe to ſay that the voice which proceeds from " a flute, or a trumpet, is more powerful than that " which proceeds ſimply from the mouth, and that " the thoughts which are darted by a well-turned verſe, " are much more violent, durable, and forcible, than " thoſe which are expreſſed in a period of proſe, where " the words are uſually languiſhing and faint? I have " fully anſwered this ridiculous objection in the twentieth chapter of my Apology, where I have ſhewn " that an impiety in verſe is ſo much the more pernicious (20)." Obſerve well that I have ſaid this maxim is a very good one in the main; for I do not mean to adopt it ſo generally as the Jeſuit does, nor for all the reaſons which he alledges. I am fully perſuaded that in a thouſand inſtances there is much leſs harm in publiſhing bad morality in verſe than in proſe, and that great abatement ought to be made in the weight of a cenſure, becauſe it is a Poet who ſpeaks. A man who ſhould dogmatically maintain heretical propoſitions, would be a hundred times more criminal than if he inſerted them in a piece of Poetry: there is many a Poem wherein the Author advances a thouſand things which he does not believe, and which he would never reduce into Theſes to be maintained againſt every opponent, nor would even ſay in verſe, if he thought his Readers would conſider them, not as pieces of wit, but as dogms, and articles of faith. He takes more pains, I grant, in turning, and adorning them, than if he delivered them in proſe: he therefore applies his mind more attentively to them; he meditates more profoundly on them; but yet this is not always the true image of what paſſes in his heart; he does not pretend to give either his confeſſion of faith, or a model of belief to thoſe who read him; and it muſt be allowed, that men are not ſuch dupes as to ſuffer themſelves to be as eaſily perſuaded into a hereſy delivered by a Poet, as into a hereſy delivered from the pulpit, or in a dogmatical work. Wherefore I do not adopt Father Garaſſe's reaſons, tho' I agree with him in the main and foundation of his Hypotheſis; that is, that an ill maxim, either againſt good manners, or againſt ſpeculative doctrines of faith, is very much to be condemned in whatever kind of Poetry it is propoſed. I agree alſo that the licence a Poet takes of diſplaying ſeveral thoughts againſt Morality and Religion, may produce bad effects. I even acknowledge that the charms of Poetry ſometimes render the venom more pernicious than it would have been in proſe. We cannot ſufficiently deplore the evils which the poetical impieties of Homer, and his imitators, introduced among the Pagans. Men of ſenſe and penetration were well acquainted with the ſource of thoſe miſchiefs, and loudly complained of it. They murmured with reaſon againſt the Poets imputing to the Gods the ſame crimes as are committed on earth (21). I have elſewhere (22) quoted a paſſage of Plato, and ſhall here tranſcribe a fine one out of Cicero. Nec enim multo abſurdiora ſunt ea, quæ poëtarum vocibus fuſa, ipſa ſuavitate nocuerunt, qui & ira inflammatos, & libidine furentes induxerunt Deos, feceruntque ut eorum bella, prælia, pugnas, vulnera videremus: odia præterea, diſſidia, diſcordias, ortus, interitus, querelas, lamentationes, effuſas in omni intemperantia libidines, adulteria, vincula, cum humano genere concubitus, mortaleſque ex immortali procreatos (23). i. e. " Nor are thoſe things " much more abſurd, which being delivered in the " words of Poets, have done miſchief by their very " delightfulneſs; for they have introduced the Gods " inflamed with anger, and raging with luſt, and deſcribed to us their wars, battles, combats, and " wounds; as alſo their enmities, diſſenſions, quarrels, births, deaths, complaints, lamentations, intemperate luſts of all kinds, adulteries, bonds, commerce with women, and mortals begotten by an " immortal father." The dramatic pieces wherein the Gods were ſo unworthily repreſented, excited a thouſand irregular paſſions. Cicero did not diſſemble it; and St. Auguſtin ſtrengthened his own argument by his teſtimony. Quomodo tanta animi & morum mala, bonis præceptis & legibus, vel imminentia prohiberent, vel inſita extirpanda curarent Dii tales: qui etiam ſeminanda & augenda flagitia curaverunt, talia vel ſua, vel quaſi ſua facta per theatricas celebritates populis innoteſcere cupientes: ut tanquam autoritate divina ſua ſponte nequiſſima libido accenderetur humana: fruſtra hoc exclamante Cicerone, qui cùm de poetis ageret, ad quos cùm acceſſiſſet, inquit, clamor & approbatio populi, quaſi magni cujuſdam & ſapientis magiſtri, quas illi obducunt tenebras? quos invehunt metus? quas inflammant cupiditates (24)? i. e. " How ſhould ſuch Gods remedy ſo " great a corruption of mind and manners by whole-

(20) Garaſſe, Somme Theologique, pag. 370.

(21) See in Mr. Menage's Anti-Baillet, page 227 of the firſt Volume, ſome Verſes of Xenophanes quoted by Sextus Empiricus, pag. 57, and 341, adverſ. Mathematicos. See alſo Forcatulus, de Gallorum Imperio & Philoſ. lib. 4. pag. m. 537.

(22) In the Remark [I] of the Article JUNO.

(23) Cicero, de Nat. Deor. lib. 1. cap. 16.

(24) Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, lib. 2. cap. 14. pag. m. 188. What Cicero ſays here is not to be found in any of his Books now remaining; but ſee what he ſays againſt dramatical pieces, Tuſcul. Quæſt. lib. 4. cap. 22.

(c) Ogier, Jugement du Livre de la Doctrine Curieuſe, pag. 23.

(d) He reckons among his Writings Septem Sapientis.

(e) See the Remark [R] of the Article NAVARRE (Joan d'Albret Queen of).

I ought to have taken notice that he is the Author of a defamatory Libel, intitled, The Banquet of the Wiſe-men, written againſt the honour of one of the firſt Magiſtrates of France (c). He did not ſet his name to it; but he was known nevertheleſs to be the Author of it: Alegambe does not deny it (d). He was ſharply cenſured for having publiſhed the ſtory of the Tapeſtries of Joan d'Albret, which I have related in the Article of that Queen (e). It was pretended that his ſlanders in that reſpect were an injury done to Henry the Great, and to Lewis XIII (f). They maintained that he had called that Princeſs Libertine, profane, ridiculous, headſtrong, and had loaded her with a thouſand other calumnies (g). The accuſation was ill grounded, and he cleared himſelf ſufficiently (h). He was alſo boldly cenſured for having quoted ſome immodeſt paſſages [K]. We

(f) Ogier, Jugement de la Doctrine Curieuſe, chap. 11. pag. 143, &c.

(g) Défence pour Eſtienne Paſquier, liv. 4. Sect. 1. pag. 644.

(h) See l'Apologie de Garaſſe, chap. 15. pag. m. 177, &c.

" ſome laws and precepts, or either prevent incroach-
" ing evils, or extirpate thoſe which are implanted;
" who have taken care to propagate and increaſe vice,
" deſiring to have ſuch actions of theirs, or ſuppoſed
" to be theirs, publickly repreſented to the people on
" the ſtage; that human luſts, which are naturally
" violent enough, might be inflamed, as it were, by di-
" vine authority. This Cicero exclaims againſt in vain,
" who ſpeaking of Poets, ſays; When backed by the
" applauſe and approbation of the people, as of ſome
" great and wiſe maſter, what darkneſs do they in" troduce? what ſuperſtitions do they excite? what luſts
" do they inflame?" Cicero complains, in one of his Books, that the reading of the Poets effeminates the mind, and weakens all the nerves of virtue. Videſne poetæ quid mali afferant? Lamentantes inducunt fortiſſimos viros. Molliunt animos noſtros, ita ſunt deinde dulces, non ut legantur modo ſed etiam ediſcantur. Sic ad malam domeſticam diſciplinam, vitamque umbratilem, & delicatam, quum acceſſerunt etiam poetæ, nervos omnis virtutis elidunt. Recte igitur à Platone educuntur ex ea civitate, quam finxit ille quum moris optimos, & optimum reip. ſtatum exquireret (25). i. e. " Do you ſee what miſchiefs the Poets occaſion? They " introduce heroes whining; they ſoften our minds, " and are ſo delightful that they are not only read, " but learned by heart. Thus when to a bad dome- " ſtic education, and a lazy luxurious life, the read- " ing of Poets is added, all virtue is enervated. Where- " fore Plato juſtly baniſhed them out of his ideal " Commonwealth, when he was in ſearch after the " beſt manners, and the beſt conſtitution of govern- " ment." Preſently after he obſerves, as a great abuſe, the cuſtom of making the Roman Youth learn ſuch Authors. At vero nos docti ſcilicet à Græcia, hæc & à pueritia legimus & diſcimus. Hanc eruditionem liberalem & doctrinam putamus (26). i. e. " But theſe " things Greece has taught us to read and learn from " our childhood; and this we take to be liberal edu- " cation and learning." Plutarch was of a different opinion: he thought the reading of the Poets might be of great uſe (27); but nevertheleſs he is forced to own that it is only becauſe they contradict themſelves (28). Their doctrines, ſays he, are ſometimes good, and ſometimes bad; ſometimes impious, and ſometimes pious. This renders their authority doubtful, and not of weight enough to do harm; and it is our duty to chuſe what they advance in behalf of the preferable opinion. Αἱ δὲ τῶν ποιητῶν ὑπεναντιώσεις πρὸς αὐτὰς ἀνέλωμεν ἀφέρεσθαι τὴν πίστιν, ἐκ ἐῶσιν ἰσχυρὰν ῥοπὴν γενέσθαι πρὸς τὸ βλάπτον· ὅπου μὲν ἦν αὐτοῖς τὸ τιθέναι συνήγορος ἐκφανεῖς ποιεῖ τὰς ἀντιλογίας, δεῖ τῷ βελτίονι συνηγορεῖν. Poëtarum quoque contradictiones quibus fidem dictorum dubiam faciant, non ſinunt ea ad nocendum ſatis momenti habere. Ubi ergo juxta ſe poſita contraria dicta apud illos evidenter ſunt, meliori parti adſtipulandum eſt (29). This expedient of Plutarch is no extraordinary remedy; for the corruption of our hearts inclines us rather to chuſe what the Poets advance in favour of vice, than what they advance in favour of virtue. Beſides, their contradictions induce us to conclude, that their graveſt and moſt devout maxims are but conceits of fancy, which they are not perſuaded of themſelves. We imagine they utter them for no other reaſon than becauſe they find in them matter ſuſceptible of a beautiful form, and all the majeſty of Poetry. And in reality, there are Poets who, without having any piety, or any faith, have made magnificent and admirable verſes on the moſt ſublime truths of Religion. They made choice of that ſubject, becauſe it gave them an opportunity of diſplaying the fineſt phraſes, and the moſt ſhining figures of their art. Another day they would chuſe a quite contrary ſubject, provided it favoured the enthuſiaſms of their imagination; I mean, provided it furniſhed them with ideas which they thought themſelves able to expreſs nobly. What weight can the ſound doctrine have which we meet with in Authors whom we believe to be of this turn?

(25) Cicero, Tuſcul. Quæſt. lib. 2. cap. 11.

(26) Idem, ibid.

(27) See Plutarch's Treatiſe de audiendis Poetis.

(28) This calls to my mind what Mr. Saurin has ſaid in the 372d page of his Examen de la Theologie de Mr. Jurieu: There is nothing for which Mr. Jurieu has more reaſon to congratulate himſelf, than for his perpetual contradictions; becauſe it is by the help of them that he is Orthodox.

(29) Plutarch. de audiendis Poëtis, pag. 20, C.

Let us take notice, by the way, that modern Poetry has raiſed much murmuring. I have elſewhere (30) mentioned the complaints which Thuanus and Mezerai have made againſt the Poets of Henry the Second's Court. I might alſo have quoted the Sieur de la Planche; for here is a very good paſſage of his Work. What aggravated God's wrath in this particular was, that the knowledge of human learning (a ſingular means ordained by God to teach us to know him rightly, and conſequently for the preſervation of mankind) having been brought again into France by King Francis, more renowned on that account than for any other thing which happened in his time, was turned by miſchievous and curious wits into an occaſion of all ſorts of wickedneſs; which was principally found in certain great genius's, addicted to French Poetry, who at that time aroſe by ſholes: whoſe impure and obſcene writings, full of blaſphemies, are ſo much the more deteſtable, as they are ſweetened with every allurement which may intice, not only to all manner of filthy and abominable lubricity, but even to all manner of horrid impiety, thoſe who take them into their hands (31). Add hereto the bitter complaints of Gabriel de Puy-Herbeau (32), and the reaſons which induced Pope Hadrian IV not to favour Poets (33). If you want examples of their profanations, you need only read Sorel's Commentary on the Extravagant Shepherd (34).

(30) In the Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes, num. 126. pag. 366.

(31) Hiſtoire de l'Eſtat de France, tant de la Republique que de la Religion, ſous le regne de François II, pag. 7. Edit. 1576, in 8vo.

(32) Gabriel Putherbeus, in Theotimo, ſive de tollendis & expurgandis malis Libris, lib. 1. pag. 77. Edit. Pariſ. 1549, in 8vo. See Voetius, Diſputat. Theolog. tom. 2. pag. 1274.

(33) See the Remark [D] of the Article HADRIAN VI.

Let us now ſee how Father Garaſſe's principle was employed againſt him. He was cenſured (35) for having made verſes which contained an impiety; and he was reminded of his own words, that rhime does not blot out impieties .... and that an impiety in verſe is ſo much the more pernicious. The Latin verſes are blamed (36) which he made in praiſe of the Sun, and wherein he made uſe of the moſt idolatrous expreſſions: nor were thoſe ſpared wherein he addreſſes himſelf to Neptune, and Thetis, whom he calls numina, and ſpeaks to nature as a goddeſs. He is referred to his own maxim, and the Retractations of St. Auguſtin. That great Saint repented (37) of having given the Muſes the title of Goddeſſes, tho' he had not done it in a ſerious manner. The ſame Garaſſe is cenſured for having awakened heatheniſh and laſcivious ideas in the Poem he wrote, in form of an Epithalamium, on the divine and human nature of Chriſt. I ſay nothing of the reproaches made him with relation to his Prayers in proſe; wherein he ſpeaks of the wanderings of Ulyſſes, the laurels of Thrace, and his talent for Poetry.

(34) Page 644, 732, & alibi.

(35) By the Abbot of S. Cyran, in his Somme des Fauſſetez capitales contenues en la Somme de Garaſſe, tom. 4. pag. 34.

(36) Ibid. pag. 102.

(37) Auguſt. Retract. lib. 1. cap. 3.

[K] He was ... cenſured for having quoted ſome immodeſt paſſages.] He gives no quarter to obſcenities and debaucheries, ſays one Writer (38), which he cannot be acquainted with ſo perfectly without having practiſed them. He anſwered (39), that this was a very bad way of reaſoning; and proved it, among other inſtances, by that of the Lawyers, who ſet down at length the robberies committed which have been tried and condemned by the Court (40), and neither approve nor practiſe them; and by that of the Caſuiſts, who write down minutely all the ſpecies of lewdneſs, from ſimple thoughts even to inceſts and beſtiality; which they know only by theory, and the report of the guilty (41). " It was urged againſt him (42) that St. Auguſtin ſays " very elegantly, de pudendis rebus cogit neceſſitas loqui; honeſtas, circumloqui: that the weakneſs and " neceſſity

(38) Jugement de la Doctrine Curieuſe, in an Extract of the Letter of L. R. L.

(39) Garaſſe, Apologie, chap. 8. pag. m. 90.

(40) Ibid. pag. 92.

(41) Ibid.

(42) Jugement de la Doctrine Curieuſe, chap. 4. pag. 39, 40.

(i) In the Remark [K].

We ſhall ſee (i) how he defended himſelf.

" neceſſity of man oblige him frequently to ſpeak of " filthy and immodeſt things; but that decency re- " quires him to ſpeak with circumlocution and peri- " phraſes." Here is his Apology (43): " To omit " a hundred paſſages of this incomparable Doctor, " wherein he ſpeaks of the God Stercutius, and his " couſin Cloacina, he expreſſes himſelf in much " coarſer terms than thoſe they reprehend in me, who " never dreamed of any impurity in them. Let " them anſwer me with relation to this Obſervation " of St. Auguſtin, in the 14th Book de Civitate Dei, " chap. 24. Nonnulli ab imo ſine pudore ullo tam nume- " roſos edunt ſonitus, ut etiam ex illa parte cantare " videantur; and let thoſe who relate the pretty ob- " ſervations of Vives about the Aſs which had drank " up the moon, to ſhew me my aſinine impertinencies, take the pains to read Vives's words on " this ſubject, concerning the young German who " did wonders that way." He had ſaid in his Book (44), that in publiſhing theſe impious maxims, he did nothing but what had been practiſed by the Saints and Fathers of the primitive Church againſt the Gnoſtics and Carpocratians (45). His Cenſurer (46) found three diſparities in this compariſon: the firſt is, that the Gnoſtics and Carpocratians taught as Articles of faith what the Fathers impute to them. It was neceſſary therefore to refute, and conſequently to relate, thoſe obſcenities. But the profanations rehearſed by Garaſſe are only actions and words of debauched and abandoned wretches, who would never acknowledge they ſaid or committed them (47). The ſecond is, that the Fathers never relate the impure Hereſies which they are obliged to refute, but with reluctance. Garaſſe, on the contrary, has raked together a heap of ordure unneceſſarily (48). In the third place, the Fathers wrote for learned perſons (49). St. Irenæus, Biſhop of Lyons, wrote in Greek, which was neither the language of the Weſtern Empire, nor that of Gaul in particular (50). In thoſe days Books could not be ſo eaſily communicated as they are at preſent, by the help of printing (51), and the Chriſtians and Catholics led an angelical life.. They would have beheld thoſe obſcenities and heard all thoſe prophanations with incredible deteſtation and averſion (52). None of theſe circumſtances could excuſe Garaſſe. He did not reply with exactneſs: he ſuppoſed the firſt diſparity conſiſted in that the Fathers were forced to publiſh thoſe abominations; foraſmuch as they were public, and as it were authoriſed by the world (53): and he anſwered that " the impurities of Carpocrates " were not ſo well known in the towns of Greece, " as the obſcenities of Theophile, the blaſphemies of " Vanini, and the impieties of Charron, are known " through France (54)." You ſee he forgets the principal point of the difference; for the impieties and impurities of Theophile were not maintained by any one as Articles of Religion. This did not hinder but that one had a right to refute them; and I wonder Garaſſe ſhould not alledge, that a Faction of Debauchees, who impudently publiſh profane and lewd maxims, to corrupt youth, do not deſerve more countenance than dogmatizing Heretics; that it is neceſſary, therefore, to exclaim againſt the Books of thoſe Libertines, and to quote paſſages out of them, that it may not be ſuppoſed they are calumniated. He has ſaid nothing as to the ſecond diſparity, and even aſſerts (55) that his Cenſurer has alledged but two. He might nevertheleſs have defended himſelf two ways; by denying that he had made a collection of obſcenities unneceſſarily, and by maintaining that the repugnance with which the ancient Fathers produced them could be no excuſe, if it were, at the bottom, pernicious and criminal. He vigorouſly attacks the third diſparity, and there he triumphs. It is falſe and ridiculous, ſays he (56); for the Cenſurer " ſays " that the ancient Fathers who have publiſhed in " writing the abominations and uncleanneſſes of the " Carpocratians, did not do it in their mother tongue, " but in a language unknown, and uſed by few " people, and that it was only for the learned; and " he gives us an admirable inſtance of his reaſon: " foraſmuch, ſays he, as St. Irenæus, Biſhop of Lyons, " did not write in Latin, which was the language " then known in France, but wrote in Greek, that " he might not be underſtood by the vulgar, or ex- " poſe the ordures of the Heretics to the knowledge " of all the world. Now that St. Irenæus wrote in " Greek I will not diſpute: I thank God, I know " it very well; but I ſay it was not for the reaſon " which our Prior alledges, but becauſe he was a " Greek by birth, as his name teſtifies, and becauſe " that language was more familiar to him than Latin: " for at this rate, if the reaſon urged by our Prior " were to be allowed, St. Epiphanius and Theodoret, " who were Greeks by nation, and wrote among the " Greeks the impieties and turpitudes of the Atheiſts " and Heretics of their times, ought to have written " in Latin, or in German, that they might not be " underſtood by the vulgar; and yet they wrote in " Greek, which was familiar to all the people of " that nation, more abominations than are contained " in fifteen Volumes as big as mine. But what " would our Gentleman have ſaid to Doctor Coch- " leus, who has written a Book in German, in- " titled, Luther with ſeven heads, which was after- " wards tranſlated into Latin, wherein he relates, " in plain German, ſpeaking to Germans, all the im- " purities which Luther had propagated in Germany, " ſo far as to produce the infamous proverbs, and " horrible ſayings, which the lewd women had in " their mouths; even ſo far as to ſay, that in all " the towns of Germany they talked nothing but a " certain jargon of bawdry; and he quotes the par- " ticulars, which I forbear to produce, though I am " not ignorant of them, having read them in that " Doctor's Book with horror, they are ſo prophane " and filthy."

Note, he denies he has made uſe of the word lavement in the modern ſenſe (57). At this word, ſays he (58), my enemies write that I have indecent words in my mouth, and that I have no ſhame: to which I anſwer... in juſtification of my ſelf, that they make me more knowing and leſs innocent than I am; for they imagine I am converſant in the terms of Phyſicians and Apothecaries; but, I thank God, I underſtand no more of them than ordinary perſons may. By the word lavement I underſtand nothing but what I have groſly learned from vulgar uſage, and the old Books of Phyſic, which are not ſo refined as the modern; for in the old verſion of Leonard Fuſchius, I find the word lavement is taken only for gargariſms; as when he ſays, in the fifth, that for the tooth-ach we ſhould take un Lavement d'eau de Plantin, i. e. " A gargariſm of " Plantain water, and gargle the mouth with it. And if the modern Apothecaries have prophaned this word out of affected niceneſs, I am not obliged to make uſe of it in their indecent ſenſe: for otherwiſe, when I ſpeak of the Hypoſtaſis, in Divinity, I muſt take care not to uſe that term, becauſe the Apothecaries have profaned it, by diſhonourably applying it to the urine of their patients; and conſequently if I borrow a compariſon from the Hypoſtaſis, I am to be accuſed of ſpeaking impurely. This is pretending to great delicacy and innocence, for a man to deny he underſtands the modern ſenſe of the word lavement; which has been invented only to ſucceed other terms too groſs. It has been long in faſhion among the moſt polite perſons; but they begin to be out of conceit with it (59).

(43) Garaſſe, Apologie, chap. 9. pag. 109, 110.

(44) See the Doctrine Curieuſe, liv. 2. Sect. 15.

(45) Apol. de Garaſſe, chap. 12. pag. 151.

(46) Jugement de la Doctrine Curieuſe, chap. 9. pag. 106, & ſeq.

(47) Ibid. pag. 108.

(48) Ibid. pag. 112.

(49) Ibid. pag. 114.

(50) Ibid. pag. 115.

(51) Ibid. pag. 117.

(52) Ibid. pag. 118.

(53) Garaſſe, Apologie, chap. 12. pag. 151.

(54) Ibid. pag. 152.

(55) Ibid. pag. 151.

(56) Ibid. pag. 153, & ſeq.

(57) The word lavement, in the ſignification of clyſter, is not to be found either in Nicod, or in Monet, of which I have the Edition of 1635.

(58) Garaſſe, Apologie, chap. 9. pag. 106, 107.

(59) See the Explication concerning Obſcenities, Parag. 9.

GARDIE (PONTUS DE LA) great Marſhal of the armies of Sweden under King John III, was a French Gentleman of a more illuſtrious birth than ſome Authors have delivered [A]. He (a) was deſtined by his father to the Eccleſiaſtical profeſſion in the

(a) Mezerai, apud Claudium Arrhenium Oernhielm, in Vita Ponti de la Gardie, pag. 11.

[A] He was of a more illuſtrious birth than ſome Authors have delivered.] It has been certainly proved that he was deſcended from ROBERT DE LA GARDIE, Lord of Ruſſol and la Gardie, who, in 1382, married Ann de l'Eſtandart. The ſucceſſors of this Robert, down to JAMES DE LA GARDIE, father of our Pontus, the Monaſtery of Montoliou, in the Dioceſe of Carcaſſonne: but the ardour of his courage would not ſuffer him to be long confined in that cloiſter; he quickly left it to go to the wars. He ſerved firſt in Piedmont, under the Marſhal de Briſſac; then he went over to Scotland with the troops which Henry II ſent thither under the command of Henry Clutin d'Oiſel, to ſuccour the Queen-mother againſt her ſubjects. This Scotch war being at an end, he went over to Denmark, and ſignalized himſelf in the armies of King Frederic II againſt Eric King of Sweden. He changed his maſter ſome time after; for having obtained a very honourable diſcharge from the King of Denmark, he entered into the ſervice of the King of Sweden (b). This was in the year 1565. The year following he was ſent into France, with another Embaſſador, to aſk leave of Charles IX to raiſe ſome troops in his Kingdom: this buſineſs was ſo well managed that they carried to Sweden three thouſand foot, and as many horſe (c). At their return they found the affairs of that country in a bad ſituation, as well on account of the war which the Danes, the Poles, and the City of Lubeck, had declared againſt Sweden, as by reaſon of the miſunderſtanding between the King and John Duke of Finland, his brother. This fire, which was ſmothered at the firſt, had at laſt broke out. The Duke and his wife, who was ſiſter to Sigiſmund Auguſtus, King of Poland, had been confined in priſon; ſeveral perſons, ſuſpected of favouring them, were treated ill: the King ran into great exceſſes of cruelty; but being informed that people began to ſay that, of right, he had forfeited the government (d), he affected to ſhew a great inſtance of clemency, by reſtoring his brother to his former ſtate, and placing near him a Lord who was a man of prudence and courage [B], and might be ſerviceable to him on all occaſions. This was our Pontus

(b) Claud. Arrhenius Oernhielm, in Vita P. de la Gardie, pag. 11.

(c) Idem, ibid. pag. 14, 15.

(d) Certe, poſt patratas innocentium multorum cædes, jam non obſcuræ ferebantur voces populi, regnandi jure excidiſſe immitem principem. Idem, ibid. pag. 16.

Pontus, and huſband to Catherine de Sainte Colombe (1), married into very noble and ancient families, and particularly into that of Bellegarde, from which was deſcended, by the females, the Marſhal de Bellegarde, Governour of the Marquiſate of Saluces, under Henry III (2). You will find a particular detail of all this in the Life of Pontus de la Gardie, written by Monſieur Oernhielm, Hiſtoriographer of Sweden, and publiſhed in the year 1690. He quotes Thuanus, who ſays Pontus Gardius nobili loco apud nos in Petrocoriis natus (3); and Mezerai, whoſe words he tranſlates in this manner; Pater ejus (Ponti de la Gardii) illuſtri domo ortus prope Rueſium in Septimania. He falſely imagines the Petrocorii of Thuanus are now a part of Languedoc (4): he would have done better to cenſure that famous Hiſtorian, who meant, without doubt, that Pontus de la Gardie was born in Perigord, which is not true. His miſtake was occaſioned, perhaps, by his having heard that Pontus was born in Peiregoux; which is a Lordſhip in the Dioceſe of Caſtres: it belonged to the family of la Gardie, and was always the ſhare of the eldeſt ſon. Mr. Oernhielm takes notice of it (5), and adds that la Gardie is ſituated between Caſtres and the Albigeois. This is a pardonable miſtake in a perſon living at ſuch a diſtance from that country. Caſtres is in the Albigeois; ſo that the ſituation of la Gardie has not been well expreſſed: it ought to have been placed in the Dioceſe of Carcaſſonne. However it be, it cannot be denied that this Author quotes two very illuſtrious French Hiſtorians, who teſtify that Pontus de la Gardie was of a good family. It is alſo very true that he juſtly cenſures Father Maimbourg, who ſays that fortune took pleaſure to raiſe Pontus de la Gardie from a mean birth to the firſt poſts of the Kingdom of Sweden: for having quitted the village where he was born, near Rieux in Languedoc, he followed arms, to which his inclination led him, and went as a private ſoldier to Scotland under the Lord d'Orſel, the Lieutenant of Francis II (6). There is nobody but would imagine, on reading thoſe words, that our Pontus was at leaſt the ſon of a tradeſman, or of a country ſcrivener: for there is nothing in them which may induce one to ſuppoſe that his father was a Gentleman. Let us ſay, therefore, that Maimbourg has committed a groſs blunder; and it is not the only one which he has been guilty of. Mezerai affirms that Pontus commanded ſome troops of Horſe in Scotland: therefore he ſerved not there in quality of a private ſoldier. His General's name was Oiſel, and not Orſel; and as Oiſel was ſent to Scotland by Henry II, it would have been better to have ſaid nothing of Francis II: for this makes us loſe the true thread of Chronology. Note, that all theſe faults have been blindly copied from Florimond de Remond (7). If Mr. Varillas had copied them with the ſame exactneſs, he would not have increaſed their number; but venturing to walk ſome ſteps without his guide, he has loſt his way. La Gardie, ſays he (8), was a Frenchman born in the province of Languedoc, and in a village of the Biſhopric of Rieux, near that ſmall city. He had applied himſelf very young to the profeſſion of arms, and had ſerved long as a private ſoldier. He was ſtill in that capacity, when d'Oyſel, whom King Francis II ſent with ſome troops into Scotland, took him thither. He continued there till the peace of Caſteau-Cambreſis, on which being disbanded, he was reduced to liſt himſelf, with twenty of his comrades, under a Captain who led them into Denmark. It is a falſhood to ſay that he was born in a village near the Epiſcopal city of Rieux. The Hiſtorians who ſay that he was born at Rieux, or thereabouts, do not mean that city, but a place in the Dioceſe of Narbonne, or ſome other. Varillas ſhould not have ſaid that Francis II ſent troops into Scotland before the peace of Caſteau-Cambreſis; for Henry II, his father, ſurvived that peace, and it was properly he who ſent Clutin d'Oyſel to the Queen-regent of Scotland, mother-in-law to the Dauphin, who had married the heireſs of Scotland. However, the peace of Cateau-Cambreſis did not put an end to the diviſions in Scotland; for freſh troops were ſent to the Queen-regent ſoon after the concluſion of that peace.

All the proofs which Monſieur Oernhielm alledges againſt Father Maimbourg are not good ones. If Pontus de la Gardie, ſays he (9), had not been of noble deſcent, or had come from a village, Charles IX, and Henry IV, would not have uſed the ſtyle they did when they wrote to him. The Embaſſadors of France, to ſay nothing of the Emperor Rodolph, or Mary his mother, or of Frederic King of Denmark, or the Radzivils, or Zamoyſkis, would never have paid him all the honours which appear in their Letters, with an extreme deſire to cultivate his friendſhip. This reaſon is of no force: for ſo ſoon as a man is in poſſeſſion of the greateſt offices in the State, and of his maſter's favour, all the world ſhews him reſpect; foreign Princes leave no ſtone unturned to gain him; no regard is had to his extraction; but his preſent condition only is conſidered, and his ability to do ſervice or miſchief. Who knows not the flatteries of Charles V towards Cardinal Wolſey, the ſon of a butcher?

Let us conclude with ſaying, that moſt of the Gentlemen in France come from a village. They are born in a caſtle ſituate near ſome little Lordſhip which belongs to their father. And there are many families which have no title, and have never appeared at Court, or in the conſiderable offices of the province, and are notwithſtanding of very ancient nobility: they might produce pedigrees for three or four hundred years back, and are ſome how or other related to houſes which are diſtinguiſhed by the moſt magnificent titles. This is what may be ſuppoſed of our Pontus's family. I obſerve that neither the place nor the time of his birth could be ſpecified by Mr. Oernhielm; which is very ſurprizing.

[B] By placing near him a Lord, who was a man of prudence and courage.] Here are the words of Mr.

(9) Oernhielm, in Vita P. de la Gardie, pag. 13.

(1) He married her in the year 1511.

(2) Monſieur Oernhielm, in Vita Ponti de la Gardie, pag. 8. ſays he had been ſo before under Francis I, and Henry II; and that he obtained of Henry III the Office of Maſter of the Horſe. I believe he is miſtaken, and that, as to the laſt particular, he takes the Son for the Father.

(3) Thuanus, lib. 33. pag. m. 57.

(4) Nunc partem facientibus Septimaniæ, vulgo Languedociæ. Claudius Arrhen. Oernhielm, in Vita Ponti de la Gardie, pag. 11.

(5) Idem, ibid. pag. 10.

(6) Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Lutheran. liv. 6. pag. 251, of the Dutch Edition.

(7) Pontus de la Gardie, born in a village near Rieux in Languedoc, a poor ſoldier of fortune, having a mind to ſee the world, went over into Scotland under the command of the Sieur d'Orſel, Lieutenant for King Francis II. Florim. de Remond, Naiſſance & Progr. de l'Héréſie, liv. 4. chap. 16. pag. m. 495.

(8) Varillas, Hiſtoire de l'Héréſie, liv. 30. pag. 265. of the Dutch Edition.

tus de la Gardie. Some time after it was thought the King deſigned to make away with all his brothers during the ſolemnity of his nuptials: for which reaſon they were exhorted not to be preſent at them, and to deliver the Kingdom from oppreſſion [C]. They hearkened to this counſel, they took a tour through all the provinces, they raiſed forces

Mr. Oernhielm (10). Hujus (populi) iram ut mulceret inſigni aliquo ſpecimine clementiæ, fratrem Johannem Ducem, deterſo carceris ſqualore, libertati dignitatique priſtinæ reſtituit. Eidemque, præter cætera argumenta duraturæ in poſterum benevolentiæ, PONTUM DE LA GARDIUM concedit, virum in negotiis pacis ac belli ſpectatæ induſtriæ, ut ejus uteretur opera, ubicunque rerum magnitudo poſceret. A little after he quotes the following paſſage out of a Manuſcript Hiſtory of Sweden (11). " Duke John, a prudent and wiſe " Prince, who was well acquainted with the humour, " inclination, and infirmities of the King his brother, " ſubmitted at laſt to his commands, and accepted " the burthen of this great and painful office. It was " that of Vice-roy, Lieutenant General, and Gover- " nour of Sweden and the two Gothlands. But he " ſincerely remonſtrated to him, that his long impri- " ſonment had made him loſe, not only all his faith- " ful ſervants, but alſo the good and old acquaintance " he had at Court; and therefore he earneſtly beſought " his Majeſty to give him ſome faithful counſellour " and worthy ſecond, on whom his Majeſty could " aſſuredly rely, and who might be an illuſtrious wit- " neſs and companion of his actions and behaviour. " His requeſt being juſt, Eric willingly gave him " Pontus de la Gardie, or de la Garde, a French " Gentleman, whom he greatly loved for his under- " ſtanding and courage, and had raiſed ſo high in his " dominions, that he made uſe of his excellent ad- " vice in all affairs of great and important conſe- " quence." Florimond de Remond relates the ſame thing, but with a circumſtance which Jolivet has omitted. The King, ſays he (12), who during this diſcourſe ſaw the Duke kept his eye fixed on a Frenchman whom he loved, named Pontus de la Gardie, ſaid to him, by the ſuggeſtion of his evil genius, (for he was the author of his ruin,) Brother, I give you Pontus: make uſe of him, and rely on his valour and loyalty, of which I have made frequent trials.

(10) Idem, ibid. pag. 16.

(11) Idem, ibid. p. 17. He quotes Jolivet, Author of a Hiſtory of Sweden.

(12) Florimond de Remond, Naiſſance & Progr. de l'Héréſie, pag. 495.

[C] They were exhorted ... to deliver the Kingdom from oppreſſion.] A more preſſing motive could not be urged to induce them to it, than that which was made uſe of. Intelligence was ſent them from all parts, that the King deſigned to deſtroy them. Adferuntur ad Principes amicorum ab omni parte literæ, monentes, caverent ſibi à futuris inaugurandæ Reginæ, elocandæque ſororis ſolemnibus epulis, quibus haud aliter uſurus ſit Rex quam retibus, capturis everſuriſque haud dubiè ſuſpectos fratres Regnique Proceres, operoſâ aliàs conquirendos indagine. Ad hæc adjungunt ſe Ducibus aliquot, de ſuâ ipſorumque jam ſalute ſolliciti, decretam adſerentes omnium necem, certumque debere opprimi, ni opprimant. Fruſtra adhiberi fidem promiſſis totiens juratis violatiſque Erici, ludentis jam perjuriis, ut ſolent pueri aſtragalis (13). i. e. " Letters were brought " to the Princes from their friends in all parts, ad- " moniſhing them to beware of the approaching ce- " remony of the Queen's inauguration, and the mar- " riage of his ſiſter, which the King certainly intended " to make uſe of no otherwiſe than as a ſnare to en- " trap and deſtroy his brothers, and the Nobles of the " Kingdom, whom he ſuſpected, and whom it would " be otherwiſe very difficult for to him get into his " power. Theſe intimations were confirmed by ſome " leaders, already ſollicitous both for their own and " their ſafety, who aſſured them that their death was " reſolved on, and they would certainly be deſtroyed, " unleſs they prevented the blow; adding, that it " was in vain to truſt to the promiſes, ſo often ſworn " to and violated, of Eric, who played with perjuries, " as children do with bones at cockal." On theſe occaſions nothing muſt be done by halves: the diſcontented muſt not barely ſay there is ſome danger; they muſt poſitively aſſure a preſumptive heir that he is irrecoverably ruined, if he does not ruin his adverſary; that all depends on being beforehand with the tyrant, without regarding his fair promiſes, or ſubmiſſions, which the danger may extort from him. You ſee thoſe who conducted the plot in Sweden made uſe of this machine. Our Pontus, who was the principal director of it, bethought himſelf of an excellent ſtratagem; which was to animate the Dutcheſs to this enterprize, who was to be Queen in caſe the thing ſucceeded. He knew, without doubt, that ambition works more violently on the mind of a woman than of a man. He ſpoke to her in the following manner: The whole Court is aſtoniſhed, Madam, that my Lord your huſband does not take compaſſion on this miſerable Kingdom, wherein every body is infinitely offended, and weary of the inſolent cruelties and tyranny of the King his brother; he alone can eaſily remedy theſe diſorders. I aſſure you both great and ſmall caſt their eyes on him, to place the royal diadem on his head, if he pleaſes, He has deſerved it as juſtly as that barbarous Prince is unworthy of it, in the judgment of all the world. If my Lord your huſband will conſent, it is eaſy to render him maſter of theſe dominions, and to make him a great Prince inſtead of a Duke, as he now is, who undoubtedly cannot avoid either death or perpetual impriſonment, from which he and you have been already delivered, as it were by a miracle, when you thought of it the leaſt. I aſſuredly know from all the Captains, that the ſix thouſand Scots, whom Eric keeps in pay, are diſcontented, and deſire no better than to change their maſter, for want of their pay. Beſides, it is certain that the Dukes Magnus and Charles, his brothers, with the greateſt men in the Kingdom, are extremely offended and grieved that ſo great a King as their brother ſhould have married the daughter of a wretched bailiff, whoſe profeſſion is odious. Therefore, Madam, lay hold on the occaſion, which ſo favourably preſents itſelf, by the forelock, for the good of the ſtate, the quiet of the people and provinces, and the advancement of your dear huſband and family (14). Monſieur Oernhielm, who relates this diſcourſe, owns there are no traces to be found of it in the Hiſtory of that nation: he might have read them in Florimond de Remond, with the Dutcheſs's Anſwer: This is fine talk, Pontus, ſaid ſhe, but difficult to be put in execution: however be wiſe and diſcreet; I will ſpeak of it to the Duke my huſband (15). Florimond declares (16) that he found theſe words in the Manuſcript Memoirs of the Embaſſador of France ſent to Sweden in the year 1566, who was an eye-witneſs of the ſtrange changes which happened in that country (17). Let us not forget this circumſtance. While preparations were making for the nuptials, a report was ſpread among the people, that the ruin of the King's brothers, and of the Grandees of the Kingdom, was reſolved on. It was not known whether this rumour was chimerical or well grounded; but it became probable ſome time after, through the caprices of the King; and at laſt the Letters, which were written from all parts to his brothers, put it out of all doubt. (18). Dum hæc parantur, manat in vulgus ſtruendarum in Principes fratres proceresque Regni inſidiarum rumor, verus an vanus, ab initio non ſatis ſciebatur: Quem tamen ſimillimum vero mox fecerunt ingenium Erici ſuſpicax, infidum, in modum Euripi æſtuans, & mobile ſemper ad obſequia pravè conſulentium .... (19). Tot rebus adſtructâ primo rumori fide.

(13) Oernhielm, in Vita P. de la Gardie, pag. 16, 17.

(14) Idem, ibid. pag. 17. He quotes a manuſcript Hiſtory of Sweden, written by Jolivet, an Advocate in the Parliament, and bought of a ſon of the Author by Count Magnus de la Gardie. It is in the Library of Upſal.

(15) Florim. de Remond, Naiſſance & Progr. de l'Héréſie, pag. 497.

(16) Ibid. pag. 496.

(17) Ibid. pag. 494.

(18) Oernhielm, in Vita P. de la Gardie, pag. 16.

(19) Ibid. pag. 17, 18.

Theſe are uſually the preparations towards revolutions: reports are firſt ſpread abroad; they are carried from ſtreet to ſtreet, from town to town: there are ſpeculative people to ſupport them, and at laſt grave men confirm them by their Letters. I do not pretend to ſay there is always a deſign in this behaviour: ſuch reports are ſometimes true, and ſupported with no private view, but out of a commendable zeal for the public good; and I even obſerve that we have an inſtance of it in the caſe before us. It was Florimond de Remond's intereſt to excuſe King Eric, in order to render more odious the conduct of Pontus de la Gardie, whom he very much abuſes, looking on him as the cauſe which hindered Sweden from returning to the obedience of the Pope: nevertheleſs he relates a thouſand abominable crimes of that King, and aſſures us that he advances nothing but what he has from good hands (20). He cites, in particular (21), the Letter which the new King wrote to Charles IX. Does he not make himſelf ridiculous, after this, by concluding with theſe words? But frequently falſe reports are raiſed

(20) Florim. de Remond, ubi ſupra, pag. 494.

(21) Ibid. pag. 499.

forces there, and put themſelves in a condition to depoſe the King. They marched ſtrait to Stockholm, entered the City, and after ſome parlies, and ſkirmiſhes, wherein de la Gardie, one of the Commanders of the troops of John Duke of Finland, was wounded in the arm, they carried their point. King Eric was dethroned, and impriſoned, in the year 1568. His brother John was elected to ſucceed him, and immediately gave la Gardie the poſt of High Steward of his Houſhold, and committed to him the whole care of his coronation, which was not performed till the 10th of July 1569. No perſon had contributed more than la Gardie to the ſucceſs of this revolution; wherein his vigilance, his addreſs, and his firmneſs of mind admirably ſhone. The new King, not being able to conclude a good peace with the King of Denmark, marched againſt him; and a battle was fought wherein la Gardie, being much wounded, was taken priſoner. He did not recover his liberty till the treaty of peace, which was ratified the 16th of March 1571. He had been made a Knight (e) the day of the coronation, and he acquired a new Title the 27th of July 1571; it was that of Baron of Eckholm, with large poſſeſſions annexed. At the ſame time he was ſent (f) on an Embaſſy, with two others, to ſome Imperial Cities, to the Biſhop of Munſter, the Count of Eaſt Friſeland, the Duke of Alva, the King of France, the King of Navarre, and the King of Spain; and ſoon after his return he was employed in military affairs: for he was ſent into Livonia in the month of Auguſt 1573, to ſtop the progreſs of the Great Duke of Muſcovy (g). He was recalled three years after, to be entruſted with an important Embaſſy, of which he acquitted himſelf extremely well. He firſt negotiated with ſome Imperial Cities, &c. and afterwards at the Court of Rodolph, lately elected Emperor. He then paſſed the Alps to go to Rome, where he had ſeveral audiences of Pope Gregory XIII; after which he went to Naples, to get in what was due to his maſter (h) for his ſhare of the effects of Bona Sforza, mother to the Queen of Sweden. He came back to Rome, and there had ſome conferences with Cardinal Hoſius; but it is not known what affairs he treated about with the Pope (i) [D]. He did not return to Sweden till nineteen months were expired. In January 1580, he married a natural daughter of the King of Sweden, and received orders ſome months after to make an irruption into the dominions of the great Duke of Muſcovy with all the troops he ſhould find in Finland, and the neighbouring provinces. In this expedition he commanded as General (k): his Inſtructions directed him, among other (e) Eques auratus. Oernhielm, in Vita P. de la Gardie, pag. 19.

(f) Idem, ibid. pag. 23.

(g) Idem, ibid. pag. 111.

(h) Idem, ibid. pag. 164.

(i) Idem, ibid. pag. 165.

(k) Summi militiæ præfecti titulo. Idem, ibid. pag. 174.

raiſed againſt the Great, to draw on them the hatred of their ſubjects, and incite them to rebellion; as was practiſed againſt Eric, who miſerably periſhed in priſon (22).

(22) Ibid.

The Reflection made by Mr. Oernhielm is a very good one: viz. that a Prince who hearkens only to his paſſions, without regarding what is due to God and his ſubjects, deprives himſelf of the moſt neceſſary ſupports of his greatneſs: for he does not find in his people a fidelity ſufficient to oppoſe thoſe who attack him. Prævenit adventum Ducum fama collecti in Regem exercitus, ad quam ille excitus, implorat opem civium, quorum plerique pertæſi acerbi regiminis, ſurdas obvertunt aures precanti, hilares, adveniſſe tempus, quo jugi in dies ingraveſcentis leventur onere, antequam ſuccumbant penitus interituri. Itaque ſubnixus ope paucorum, in quorum animis nondum obſoleverat Majeſtas ſui Principis, congreſſuſque cum pluribus ac fortioribus, non poterat non redigi ad anguſtias. Atque tum præferoci Regi adparuit, & favore civium, & ſucceſſu fulciendæ potentiæ deſtitui potentes rerum, cum exutâ reverentiâ Numinis, ex amplâ poteſtate uſurpant nil præter trucem quidvis in ſubjectos agendi licentiam. Id Erico Regi accidit. Quem ſolio ſublimem vidit ſol oriens, eundem occidens vidit provolutum ad aliena genua (23). i. e. "The news of the army "raiſed againſt the King reached him before the arrival of the Dukes; at which being alarmed, he "implored the help of the Citizens, moſt of whom, "weary of his tyrannical government, turned a deaf "ear to his intreaties, being glad that the time was "come, wherein they ſhould be eaſed of the burthenſome yoke which grew every day more heavy, before they quite periſhed and ſunk under it. Relying therefore on the aſſiſtance of a few, whoſe minds "yet retained ſome loyalty towards their Prince, and "engaging with men ſuperior in number and courage, "he could not avoid being reduced to ſtraits. Then "the fierce King became ſenſible that Monarchs loſe "the affections of their people, and deprive themſelves of the only means of ſupporting their dignity, "when, throwing off all regard to the Deity, they "make uſe of no other part of their extenſive power "than the cruel licence of treating their ſubjects as "they think fit. This was the caſe of King Eric: "the ſame perſon whom the riſing ſun ſaw exalted "on a throne, the ſetting beheld proſtrate at the feet "of another." The number of Princes who have been aſſaſſinated (24), or impriſoned, on account of their tyranny is ſo great; and the number of thoſe who have been able to maintain themſelves in a wicked adminiſtration, and have not haſtened the coronation of a ſon, or a brother, &c. by their violent conduct, is ſo ſmall; that we cannot ſufficiently admire there ſhould be any who do not take warning by theſe examples. Moreover, the Revolutions of States, whereby crowns are transferred from one head to another, have always been ſo frequent that there is reaſon to wonder they have not been much more ſo: for, in ſhort, the worſt that can be feared is to miſs one's blow; a hundred ways will always be found out to defend one's ſelf againſt the reproaches of injuſtice, and provided a man ſucceeds, he will never want either approvers or alliances.

(23) Oernhielm, in Vita P. de la Gardie, pag. 18.

(24) Ad generum Cereris ſine cæde & ſanguine pauci
Deſcendunt reges & ſicca morte tyranni. i. e.
"Few Tyrants
"to th'infernal
"ſhades deſcend
"By a dry death,
"or with a quiet end."
Juvenal, Sat. 10. ver. 112.

[D] It is not known what affairs he treated about with the Pope.] Mr. Oernhielm confeſſes that he could diſcover nothing of them. Quid Regis nomine cum Pontifice egerit non perinde liquet, cum regiorum mandatorum nihil ea de re videre contigerit (25). He treats as a fable what Father Maimbourg relates (26), that Pontus de la Gardie was ordered to treat with Pope Gregory XIII about the reduction of Sweden to the obedience of the Church on certain conditions; which were, 1, (27) that the Nobility ſhould not be diſturbed in the enjoyment of the Church-lands they were poſſeſſed of: 2, that the Biſhops and Prieſts ſhould be allowed to keep the wives they had married: 3, that the Laity ſhould be permitted to receive the Communion in both kinds: 4, that divine ſervice ſhould be celebrated in the vulgar tongue. This is taken from Florimond de Remond, who adds (28) that la Gardie, on his return, found the King alarmed, and apprehenſive leſt, on account of his meddling with religion, thoſe ſhould pluck the crown from his head, who had ſet it there. That poor King, not being able, or not daring, wholly to reſtore the Catholic Church, was deſirous of making a compromiſe with the Lutheran Archbiſhops and Biſhops, who were principal Lords, by leaving them their wives for life, the Communion under both kinds, and the Maſs in the vulgar tongue. The Eccleſiaſtics might have been prevailed with, ſince their bedfellows were not meddled with; but thoſe who wore ſwords by their ſides would not let go their hold. So this deſign miſcarried, not without ſuſpicion that la Gardie himſelf had put ſome ſtop to it, being intereſted on account of the large poſſeſſions which he enjoyed by the favour of his maſter, whom he abſolutely governed.

(25) Oernhielm, in Vita P. de la Gardie, pag. 165.

(26) Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Lutheraniſme, liv. 6. pag. 251.

(27) Idem, ibid. pag. 253.

(28) Florim. de Remond, Naiſſance & Progr. de l'Hereſie, chap. 17. pag. 502.

other things (l), to do no hurt to the Muſcovites who ſhould ſubmit, and to allow the Monks and Nuns full liberty of conſcience, without taking away their images, or other religious furniture [E]. He made himſelf maſter of the Province of Carelia in a very ſhort time (m). He was made (n) Governor of Livonia and Ingria the year following; and he purſued his conqueſts on the Muſcovites with great prudence and ſucceſs. He took from them the important place of Nerva, and ſeveral others, and (o) obliged them, in 1583, to conſent to a truce for three years, without recovering any of the towns they had loſt. During this truce he employed himſelf in the moſt effectual means to make his government flouriſh. He was alſo (p) ſecond Plenipotentiary of Sweden at the Conferences which were held at Pernow, in the year 1585, with the Embaſſadors of Poland, to ſettle the peace between the two Kingdoms: they were ſoon broken off; after which a negotiation was entered upon with the Embaſſadors of Muſcovy, either for prolonging the truce, or for a treaty of peace. He unfortunately periſhed in a river [F], during the courſe of theſe negotiations, the 5th of November 1585 (q). They interred him at Revel, where, four years after, a marble tomb was erected to his memory (r). His poſterity ſtill continues to be very flouriſhing in Sweden [G]. I ſhall ſay ſomething, in another place (s), which has a relation to this Article.

(l) Idem, ibid. pag. 175.

(m) Idem, ibid. pag. 176.

(n) Ibid. pag. 178.

(o) Idem, ibid. pag. 190.

(p) Idem, ibid. pag. 196.

(q) Idem, ibid. pag. 213.

(r) Idem, ibid. pag. 214.

(s) In the Article TYPOT, Remark [A].

[E] Without taking away their images, or other religious furniture.] Such a prohibition was neceſſary; for this had been ill obſerved before. Omninò autem vis omnis ac injuria abeſſe deberet à corporibus ac bonis ipſorum, qui ſe ritè huic Regno ſubmitterent, præcipuè verò ab his, qui peculiari ſolitoque ei genti ritu, etiamſi à ſacris penes nos receptis nonnuſquam recederent, ſexu utroque incolerent monaſteria, quorum ornamenta, imagines, cæteramque ſacram ſupellectilem intacta inviolataque eis linqui præcipit, SECUS QUAM FACTUM HACTENUS (29). This order of the King's was not complied with; for they took out of the Church of Carelgrod the images, ſtatues, and ſacerdotal veſtments, and carried them away into Finland, for the uſe of the Pariſhes there. The King was diſpleaſed at it, and threatened with death thoſe who ſhould violate his prohibition for the future. Let us once more hear the Swediſh Hiſtorian. Utcunque non probârit, quod, privato auſu, ſculptas pictaſque tabulas aris impoſitas, ſtolaſque, quibus ſacra peracturi ſacerdotes amiciuntur, templo arcis Kexholmenſis detractas, nonnulli in vicinam Finlandiam, ad earum, in quibus habitarunt, paræciarum templa iis exornanda, avehi curaverint, quas reductas in ſacrario templi arcis Viburgenſis locari præcepit, donec ipſe de eis aliter conſtitueret: interminatione mortis prohibens, ne quis Regno ſe ſubmittens ex hoſtibus, ulla adficeretur injuria, aut horum devictorum templis ac monaſteriis ulla vel minima vis fieret (30).

(29) Oernhielm, ubi ſupra, pag. 175.

(30) Idem, ibid. pag. 176.

[F] He unfortunately periſhed in a river.] He and his collegues had parted with the Embaſſadors of Muſcovy, without having agreed on any thing more than a truce for fifteen days. He embarked on the river to go to Nerva; but when the veſſel was arrived within half a league of that city, they fired ſome cannon: this made a plank ſtart; and the water entring thro' the hole, the more timorous threw themſelves on the other ſide, and overſet the boat. La Gardie was one of thoſe who were drowned (31). Thus Mr. Oernhielm relates the accident. There is in this part of his Book a marginal note, wherein Father Maimbourg's account is cenſured. As Pontus de la Cardie, theſe are that Father's words (32), in his return from his Embaſſy of Muſcovy, was entring the Port of Revel, the Capital of Swediſh Livonia, of which he was Vice-roy, the veſſel, in the ſtern whereof he ſat in an elbow chair, ſtriking with great violence againſt a rock, the prow was raiſed ſo high by the blow that two of his Gentlemen, who were ſtanding before him, were thrown down and tumbled over his chair, which cauſed the ſtern to ſink yet lower, ſo that in an inſtant they all three fell into the Sea, and were ſeen no more. Florimond, who furniſhed him with this narrative, has added two falſhoods to it which Maimbourg has not copied: the firſt is, that la Gardie had an audience of the great Duke: the 2d, that having finiſhed his negotiation, he put to ſea with his ſhips. In the marginal note Father Maimbourg is charged with ignorance in Geography. He ſuppoſes there is a river on the frontiers of Muſcovy, which goes down to Revel. This is falſe. He is alſo blamed for having called Revel the Capital of Livonia; he ſhould have ſaid of Eſthonia. He is blamed for having ſaid that Pontus was Governor of Livonia; for, ſays Mr. Oernhielm, that Province did not then belong to Sweden; but was conquered ſince by Guſtavus Adolphus. This cenſure appears to me to be unreaſonable, ſince Mr. Oernhielm expreſly ſays that Pontus de la Gardie was made Governor of Livonia and Ingria in the year 1581 (33). I ſhould have contented my ſelf with criticizing the word Vice-roy, which Maimbourg took from Florimond de Remond.

(31) Oernhielm, pag. 213. Confer Thuan. lib. 83. pag. 57. & Joliwet, apud Oernhielm, pag. 214.

(32) Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Lutheraniſme, tom. 2. pag. 260, 261.

(33) Etiam auctus novo ſupremi per Ingriam ac Livoniam Gubernatoris titulo ac munere loca priora repetiit. Oernhielm, in Vita P. de la Gardie, pag. 178.

As the article GARDIE in the Supplement to Moreri was extracted from Father Maimbourg, you will eaſily find in theſe Remarks wherein it is defective.

[G] His poſterity ſtill continues to be very flouriſhing in Sweden.] He left two ſons and a daughter. JOHN DE LA GARDIE, the eldeſt ſon, had none but daughters, who were very advantageouſly married. JAMES DE LA GARDIE, the younger, was made a Count (34), Senator, and Great Conſtable of the Kingdom, Preſident of the Council of War, &c. His eldeſt ſon, MAGNUS GABRIEL DE LA GARDIE, married the ſiſter of Charles Guſtavus, King of Sweden, and was the father of GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS DE LA GARDIE, Senator of the Kingdom, and Preſident of the ſupreme Council of Sweden. The brothers of Gabriel Magnus had likewiſe very great employments, and left children. See the Pedigree of this Family prefixed to the Life of our Pontus. The latter left two brothers in France, who married; but their male iſſue is now quite extinct (35).

(34) Maimbourg, and after him the Supplement to Moreri, erroneouſly give that quality to Pontus de la Gardie.

(35) Oernhielm, pag. 5.

GARISSOLES (ANTONY), Paſtor and Profeſſor of Divinity at Montauban, the place of his birth, was a very able man. He was born about the year 1587, and admitted to the miniſterial office at the age of three or four and twenty; and was appointed Miniſter of the Church of Puylaurens. He was made Profeſſor of Divinity at Montauban in the year 1627, after he had been nominated to that employment by ſeveral Synods of his Province, and particularly directed by a National Synod, held at Caſtres, to go and perform the functions of it, which he worthily diſcharged till 1650, the year of his death. He compoſed a great many Books, ſome of which have been publiſhed [A], and

[A] He compoſed a great many Books, ſome of which have been publiſhed.] He publiſhed a Volume of Sermons, intitled La Voie du Salut, i. e. "The Way of "Salvation." His other printed Books are in Latin: ſeveral Theſes in Divinity; a Treatiſe De imputatione primi peccati Adæ; another De Chriſto Mediatore; the Explanation of the Catechiſm. This laſt Work had been begun by Mr. Charles, the collegue of Mr. Gariſſoles. There is this to be obſerved as to the Book De imputatione peccati Adæ, that the Author compoſed and the reſt were moſt of them loſt in the laſt perſecution. He took extreme delight in Latin Poetry, and had the pleaſure to ſee printed the Epic Poem in which he had undertaken to celebrate the great exploits of Guſtavus Adolphus [B]. I ſhall ſpeak of it below (a). He was Moderator of the national Synod of Charenton, in the year 1645 (b) (α).

(a) In the Remark [B].

(b) Taken from a manuſcript Memoir.

it by order of his Synod, after having had an amicable conference on that ſubject with Mr. Amyrault, before the National Synod of Charenton. Mr. Amyrault was only proxy for Mr. de la Place, his collegue (1); he did not defend his own opinions, but thoſe of Mr. de la Place, who had deſired him to explain them to the Aſſembly, and to ſupport them. Mr. Gariſſoles, having dedicated his Book to the four Evangelical Cantons, cauſed it to be preſented to them by his eldeſt ſon, who was every where received with great honour. A year after they made the Author a fine preſent; they ſent him four large cups of ſilver gilt, of exquiſite workmanſhip, accompanied with a Letter full of encomiums, and ſigned by the four Syndics of the four Cantons (2).

(1) See, above, the Article AMYRAULT, between the Citations (g) and (b).

(2) Taken from the manuſcript Memoir.

[B] He ſaw the Epic Poem in print which he had undertaken for . . . . Guſtavus.] It was intitled the Adolphis. The Author had dedicated it to Queen Chriſtina, and the five Grandees of the Kingdom; but he was obliged to alter the Dedication, becauſe his eldeſt ſon wrote him word from Stockholm, that it would be impoſſible to preſent that work, unleſs it were dedicated to the Queen alone. Therefore he wrote a new Epiſtle Dedicatory, addreſſed only to that Princeſs, and the Work was preſented. The Queen received it in the moſt obliging and gracious manner, and expreſſed a great deal of civility to the Author's ſon. She told him that certain people had laboured, more than once, to give her an ill opinion both of the Poem and of the Poet; but that having read it, ſhe was charmed with it, and was filled with veneration and admiration for its Author. Theſe were her words. Grotius was ſuſpected of having endeavoured to do this ill office; tho' when he was deſired to give his opinion of the Work, even before it was printed, he had ſpoken very advantageouſly of it, and declared it to be almoſt an accompliſhed piece. However it be, the Book was highly commended by the Queen, the Author was honoured with a fine gold medal, and his eldeſt ſon was amply paid the expences of his journey (3). Note, Mr. Gariſſoles wrote a Poem on the Coronation of this Queen.

(3) Taken from the ſame Memoir.

§ (α) At that Synod, they ſay, on occaſion of ſome underhand dealing of the famous la Milletiere, Gariſſoles, the Moderator, gave a check to that falſe Brother in theſe terrible words of our Saviour: That thou doeſt, do quickly. Do you take me then for a Judas? ſaid Milletiere to him. Not abſolutely ſo as yet, replied Gariſſoles; for Judas had the purſe, but you ſeek it. REM. CRIT.]

GARNACHE (FRANCES DE ROHAN, LADY DE LA) was daughter of Renatus de Rohan, the firſt of the name, by Iſabella d'Albret, daughter of John d'Albret King of Navarre. She was conſequently couſin-german to Joan d'Albret (a), mother of Henry the Great. Her relation to ſo powerful and illuſtrious a family, joined to the very ancient nobility of the Houſe of Rohan, could not ſecure her from the moſt grievous injuſtice which can be done to a perſon of her ſex. The Duke of Nemours had promiſed her marriage, and by that means had obtained of her all the favours he could expect: in one word, and to be plain, he had gotten her with child. When he was ſummoned to perform his promiſe, he made a jeſt of it with the greater confidence, becauſe he ſaw that Antony King of Navarre, though firſt Prince of the blood, had neither reſolution nor authority enough to force him to repair the Lady's honour. It was a great deal worſe after the King of Navarre, who had ſome ſort of intereſt during the Triumvirate, was killed. The Duke of Nemours, who had left France at the beginning of the troubles, becauſe it had been diſcovered that he deſigned to ſteal away the Duke of Anjou, brother of Charles IX (b), was ſoon recalled, and did conſiderable ſervice againſt thoſe of the reformed Religion. This and the death of the King of Navarre encouraged him to preſs the Court of Rome to declare his engagement void. He obtained whatever he deſired (c): the juſt right of Mademoiſelle de Rohan was utterly oppreſſed, becauſe ſhe had declared her ſelf for the Huguenot party [A]; ſo that ſhe was forced to ſit down with the diſgrace of being a mother without having been married, and the diſpleaſure of ſeeing her faithleſs gallant married to the Duke of Guiſe's widow, and as highly reſpected by every body, and careſſed by the Ladies, as if he had been a man of the greateſt honour in the world. All the comfort ſhe had left was the title of Prince of Genevois, which ſhe gave her ſon [B]: and as to her ſelf ſhe was called the Lady de

(a) Henry d'Albret, King of Navarre, the ſon of John, and brother of Iſabella d'Albret, was father of this Joan d'Albret.

(b) Le Laboureur, Addit. à Caſtelnau, tom. 1. pag. 808, tom. 2. pag. 34.

(c) Varillas, Hiſt. de Charles IX, tom. 2. pag. 34, ex Thuan. lib. 39.

[A] She had declared herſelf for the Huguenot party.] If this is not believed on the credit of d'Aubigné, his teſtimony muſt be corroborated by that of Thuanus. The affair of the clandeſtine marriage between the Duke of Nemours and Frances de Rohan was again brought on the carpet; but only in order to decree againſt the Complainant, and to enable the other to marry the Dowager of Guiſe (1). Let us now ſee Thuanus's Latin. Eodem tempore, that is in 1566, lis olim agitata inter Franciſcam Roanam & Jacobum Sabaudum Nemoroſium, & ſuperſtite Navarro qui Roanæ cognatæ patrocinabatur intermiſſa demum renovata, & prævalente hinc Nemoroſii gratia, inde ODIO RELIGIONIS PROTESTANTIUM cui Roana addicta erat, prægravante, interventu Pontificis deciſa eſt, ſchedula Nemoroſii de matrimonio præſentibus verbis contracto irrita pronunciata (2). i. e. "At "the ſame time the cauſe formerly commenced by "Frances de Rohan againſt James Duke of Nemours, "the proceedings wherein had been ſuſpended while "the King of Navarre, who favoured his kinſwoman "de Rohan, was living, was at length revived, and "through the prevailing intereſt of the Duke on the "one hand, and HATRED TO THE PROTESTANT "RELIGION, to which the Lady was addicted, on "the other, the ſame was decided by the Pope's in-"tervention, and the paper which the Duke had ſign-"ed, purporting a contract of marriage by words de "præſenti, was declared void."

(1) D'Aubigné, tom. 1. liv. 4. chap. 6. ad ann. 1566.

(2) Thuanus, lib. 39. pag. m. 795.

[B] All the comfort ſhe had left was the title of Prince of Genevois, which ſhe gave her ſon.] If I had followed Virgil's notions, I ſhould have ſaid that this Lady's ſorrow for the infidelity of her gallant was mitigated by the ſon he left her; but our Ladies have long been of a different humour from the Dido of that great Roman Poet. One of her moſt ſenſible afflictions was that her perfidious lover had forſaken her without leaving her any of his iſſue; and if ſhe had had a little bantling, or at leaſt had found herſelf with child by him,

(d) It is the name of a Town in Poitou.

de la Garnache (d), or the Dutcheſs of Loudunois (e). She dextrouſly maintained her ſelf in poſſeſſion of her eſtate during the civil wars [C]. In all likelihood it is of her adventure that Brantome ſpeaks [D]. Monſieur Varillas has related it at large, and has committed a great many miſtakes in his narration [E], ſome him, her grief would have been vaſtly leſſened.

(e) This Dutchy was erected in the year 1579.

Saltem ſi qua mihi de te ſuſcepta fuiſſet
Ante fugam ſoboles, ſi quis mihi parvulus aula
Luderet Æneas, qui te tantum ore referret,
Non equidem omnino capta ac deſerta viderer (3).

(3) Virgil. Æn. lib. 4. ver. 327.

" —— —— Ah could I, e're
" This flight, at leaſt by thee but boaſt an heir,
" Within my Court a young Æneas ſee,
" One that in feature but reſembled thee,
" I ſhould not all betray'd, not all forſaken be.
Mr. Sherburn.

A ſentiment of ſuch extreme tenderneſs would not be approved now even in a Romance, it is ſo contrary to cuſtom. The moſt ſenſible affliction of thoſe Ladies to whom a gallant proves faithleſs, is not for having granted him more than they ought, but for not having been able to prevent the conſequences. A great belly, or a child, are ſuch convictions of diſhonour as no chicanery can elude: they are ſpeaking proofs, & luce meridiana clariores; they are witneſſes not to be excepted againſt, & omni exceptione majores. This, therefore, is the principal ſource of the misfortune and anguiſh. Queſto e quel che piu inaſpri i miei martiri. And I am really of opinion, it is Brantome who is ſpeaking (4) of the Ladies he had ſeen at Court, that the beſt time they have ever had, (aſk them if it be not true,) was when they were maids: for they had their free will to be Votaries as well of Venus as of Diana; but they ſhould have had the prudence and cunning to know how to keep their bellies from ſwelling. It muſt be confeſſed that in ſome reſpects the fate of Madam de la Garnache pretty much reſembled that of Dido; for her gallant pretended, as well as Æneas, that he never thought of marriage (5).

(4) Diſcours de Cather. de Medicis, pag. 100.

(5) Nec conjugis unquam Prætendi tædas, aut hæc in fœdera veni. i. e. " I ne're pre- " tended to the " nuptial band; " No ſuch alli- " ance drew me " to your land." Virgil. Æneid. lib. 4. ver. 338.

[C] She dextrouſly maintained herſelf . . . . during the civil wars.] D'Aubigné ſhall be the only Author I will quote on this occaſion. We muſt here add, ſays he (6), " that the Lady de la Ganache, ſiſter to the Duke " of Rohan, held the town of Ganache, and the " caſtle of Beauvois on the ſea, in neutrality; ſecur- " ing herſelf by thoſe ſubmiſſions and artifices which " cannot be blamed in one of her ſex and condition. " Her ſon (called the Prince of Genevois, on pretence " of his mother's marriage with the Duke of Nemours) " having ſeized on Ganache by intelligence with the " domeſtics who had a dependance on him, hoped to " make it a place of arms for his party, and his own " occaſions. He alſo attempted to take Beauvois " by intelligence; but being betrayed on his ſide, he " found himſelf his mother's priſoner. The iſſue of " all this was that the King of Navarre, interceding " for his liberty, obtained it, and by the ſame means " got poſſeſſion of the place, when the Lady of it, " who was alſo called the Dutcheſs of Loudunois, ſaw " the affairs of the country tolerably favourable for the " Religion ſhe profeſſed; for from that time they could " reckon eight places there which held for the Prote- " ſtants." He ſpeaks at large of the ſiege of la Garnache (7): the Proteſtant Garriſon was conſtrained at laſt to ſurrender to the Duke of Nevers. We may boldly reckon among the ſubmiſſions and artifices of this Lady, the Letters ſhe wrote to her brother, who was beſieged in Luſignan (8). She did all ſhe could to perſuade him to ſurrender on the advantageous conditions offered him by the Duke of Montpenſier: but ſhe could not prevail.

(6) D'Aubigné, tom. 3. liv. 1. chap. 13. ad ann. 1587, pag. 65.

(7) Ibid. liv. 2. chap. 12, & 16.

(8) Thuan. lib. 59. ad ann. 1574, pag. 99.

[D] In all likelihood it is of her Adventure that Brantome ſpeaks.] He ſays that he knew a young Lady of very great quality, who happened to be with child by a very brave and gallant Prince . . . King Henry was the firſt who knew it, and was extremely concerned at it; for ſhe was ſomething related to him . . . . . One evening, at a Ball, he would needs lead her the dance of the torch, and afterwards, he made her dance with another the Galliard and other dances, wherein ſhe ſhewed her nimbleneſs and addreſs better than ever, with her ſhape, which was very fine, and which ſhe adjuſted ſo well that day that there was no appearance of a big belly; inſomuch that the King . . . . came and ſaid to a very great perſon, one of his moſt intimate familiars, They are very malicious and wicked people to go and invent a ſtory that this poor girl is with child . . . . . They lie, and are greatly to blame. Thus the good Prince excuſed that fair and courteous Lady, and ſaid as much to the Queen at night, when in bed with her: but the Queen, not truſting to that, cauſed her to be ſearched the next morning in her preſence, and found her ſix months gone with child; the young Lady owning and confeſſing the whole, and that what had paſſed was on a promiſe of marriage. However, the King, who was all good nature, cauſed the myſtery to be kept as ſecret as poſſible, without expoſing the Lady; tho' the Queen was very angry. They ſent her very privately to her neareſt relations, where ſhe was brought to bed of a fine boy; who was nevertheleſs ſo unhappy as never to be owned by his ſuppoſed father: there was a law-ſuit long depending about this affair, but the mother could never make any thing of it (9). It is no hard matter to diſcover that the Author here means the Lady de la Garnache, who was maid of honour to Catherine de Medicis at the time when this accident happened (10). She was not the only one who got a great belly in that Queen's ſervice.

(9) Brantôme, Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. m. 370.

(10) Brantôme, in the Diſcourſe of Catherine de Medicis, puts Madamoiſelle de Rohan at the head of the maids of honour whom he had ſeen attending on the Queens of France.

[E] Mr. Varillas . . . . has committed a great many miſtakes.] Theſe are his words (11): James the firſt Duke of Nemours, ſurnamed, by way of excellence, the fair and gallant Knight, had been in love with Frances de Rohan, who appeared at Court under the name of Madamoiſelle de Leon . . . . He had given her a promiſe of marriage in due form; and the Lady added that he had married her by words de præſenti, and that the marriage had been conſummated. No children came of it; and matters ſtill continued in uncertainty when Poltrot killed the Duke of Guiſe . . . . . The paſſion of the Duke of Nemours for the Dutcheſs of Guiſe rekindled ſo ſoon as ſhe became a widow, and he married her before Madamoiſelle de Leon had taken all her meaſures which were neceſſary to form an oppoſition to it. Her relations, who had aſſiſted her but faintly before the infidelity of the Duke of Nemours, grew warm when they ſaw him married; and the King of Navarre, her ſecond couſin, thoſe of the Houſe of Rohan, and all the other Lords of the Kingdom who were related to them, gave the Duke of Nemours to underſtand that if he did not do Mademoiſelle de Leon juſtice, he muſt fight a duel with them all, one after another. This was a terrible extremity: and tho' the Duke of Nemours was one of the moſt valiant men in the world, it was not poſſible for him to give ſatisfaction to ſo many people, without falling at laſt in the quarrel. For which reaſon he took thoſe precautions which exempted him from fighting for ſome years. . . The Dutcheſs of Nemours was delivered of two ſons, ... and Mademoiſelle de Leon undertook to prove them illegitimate. The cauſe was prepared for trial with great ſolemnity. The moſt famous Profeſſors of Civil Law in Europe were conſulted, as well as the moſt celebrated Advocates of the Parliaments of France; and the greater part of both of them anſwered, that the queſtion appeared difficult, and that the beſt way would be to compromiſe the matter. The quarrel on account of Religion which followed that about the Marriage ſerved only to increaſe it; for on one ſide the Houſe of Rohan turned Calviniſts. . . . Mademoiſelle de Leon was a younger ſiſter of Britany, and conſequently had but a ſmall fortune. She loved expence; and it was by ſupplying her with the means of ſupporting it, that the Duke of Nemours had inſinuated himſelf into her favour. She was attacked on this weak ſide; and the Queen Mother offered her, that provided ſhe would deſiſt from her pretenſions, the town of Loudun and its Juriſdiction ſhould be diſmembred from the Royal Demeſne; and if the whole was not worth fifty thouſand livres a year, ſome adjacent eſtates ſhould be bought and added to it, till that ſum was compleated; that the whole ſhould be erected into a Dutchy and Peerdom, and that the Patent ſhould declare, in expreſs terms, that this Dutchy and Peerdom ſhould deſcend from Mademoiſelle de Leon to her children, male and female, for ever, ſuppoſing ſhe had any; and in caſe ſhe had none, to all the males and females of the Houſe of Rohan likewiſe for ever. Mademoiſelle ſome of which are ſo groſs that one cannot help being ſurprized at them.

(11) Varillas, Hiſt. de Henri III, liv. 5. pag. 18, &c. of the Dutch Edition.

moiſelle de Leon at firſt rejected the propoſal of the Queen Mother. . . . . She was ſo perſecuted by her relations that ſhe durſt no longer openly oppoſe an accommodation; but new obſtacles were daily raiſed, when they thought they had got over the former. The Parliament of Paris, who were to regiſter the Patent for erecting Loudun into a Dutchy and Peerdom, made a difficulty of it, alledging that in order regularly to ſettle a Dutchy and Peerdom, it was neceſſary to find out an eſtate of which the intended Duke and Peer might be incommutable Lord, that is, might be ſo abſolutely poſſeſſed thereof, that none ſhould have a right to deprive him of it; which could not be with regard to the Lordſhip of Loudun, ſince it was part of the Royal Demeſne; and whatever precautions might be taken to ſeparate it from the Demeſne, the King would ſtill be at liberty to reunite it; and tho' his Majeſty ſhould neglect it, yet as he was only uſufructuary of his Kingdom, his ſucceſſors would always have a right to do it. This argument was not eaſy to be refuted by an oppoſite one of equal force: but the Queen Mother, rather than fail, would have made uſe of all her intereſt, and all the authority of the King her ſon, if the change which happened in the perſon of the Duke of Nemours had not prevented it. That Prince was . . . ſeized with the palſy . . . . He languiſhed two whole years in bed, and then died (12). As his indiſpoſition raiſed every body's compaſſion, Mademoiſelle de Leon ſuſpended the proſecution ſhe was carrying on againſt him at Law; and the Judges would hear no more of it after the death of him who had been the cauſe of it. The King was overjoyed he was no longer under any obligation to alienate his Demeſne, and to create a new Dutchy and Peerdom on ſo unworthy an occaſion . . . . . And as he had conſented to the alienation of Loudun merely out of neceſſity, and in complaiſance to the Queen Mother, he was glad the death of the Duke of Nemours had diſpenſed with the performance of his promiſe.

(12) He died at Anneſſi, in the County of Foucigny, the 19th of June 1583. Hilarion de Coſte, Elog. des Dames, tom. 1. pag. 79.

In the firſt place, I obſerve that the Lady in queſtion is called by Brantome Mademoiſelle de Rohan (13), and not Mademoiſelle de Leon. II, I have ſhewn (14) by the teſtimony of Thuanus, that the Lady's Cauſe was definitively decided againſt her, in the year 1566. The promiſe of marriage which ſhe produced was declared void. Monſieur Varillas knew it very well when he wrote his Hiſtory of Charles IX. See the words which I quote in the margin (15): they formally declare that the marriage of the Duke of Nemours with the Dutcheſs of Guiſe was preceded by the ſentence which declared the pretenſions of Mademoiſelle de Rohan null (16). How comes he, therefore, to ſay here that before that Lady had taken all her meaſures which were neceſſary to form an oppoſition to it, the Duke of Nemours had married the Duke of Guiſe's widow? III. What likelihood is there that the Lady ſhould renew her proſecution, after the birth of the two ſons which the Duke of Nemours had by that widow? Their marriage was poſterior to the definitive ſentence which deſtroyed Mademoiſelle de Rohan's pretenſions, and conſequently there was no more to be ſaid againſt the iſſue of that marriage. IV. And therefore thoſe conſultations of the Profeſſors and Advocates, and thoſe ſolemn preparations for a trial with regard to the quality of the Duke of Nemours's two ſons, are chimæra's. V. The quarrel on account of Religion was not poſterior to the birth of thoſe two children: for the Duke did not marry the Dowager of Guiſe till after his ſuit with Mademoiſelle de Rohan was determined in the year 1566, and there had already been a very bloody war about Religion. VI. The Houſe of Rohan did not turn Calviniſts after the birth of the Duke of Nemours's two children; for Mr. Varillas obſerves (17) that in the year 1562 the Viſcount de Rohan embraced Calviniſm, in hopes of marrying the heireſs of Soubize. VII. The compaſſion which, we are told, obliged Mademoiſelle de Rohan to ſuſpend her proceedings againſt the Duke of Nemours, when ill of the palſy, is likewiſe a chimæra. VIII. According to Mr. Varillas, King Henry III did not erect Loudun into a Dutchy; but the death of the Duke of Nemours excuſed him from performing his promiſe. Yet it is certain that erection was made in favour of Mademoiſelle de Rohan. IX. The moſt enormous of this Author's faults is his ſaying that the Duke of Nemours had no children by that Lady. See above (18) the paſſage of the Sieur d'Aubigné (19).

(15) As ſoon as the definitive ſentence was ſignified to Mademoiſelle de Rohan, the Duke of Nemours married the Dowager of Guiſe. Varillas, Hiſt. de Charles IX, tom. 2. pag. 34, ad ann. 1566.

(16) See Hilarion de Coſte, Eloges des Dames, tom. 1. pag. 76.

(17) Hiſt. de Charles IX, liv. 3. at the beginning.

(18) In the Remark [C].

(19) See alſo Le Laboureur, Additions aux Memoires de Caſtelnau, tom. 1. pag. 808.

CENSURE of this paſſage of Varillas.

(13) Diſcours de Catherine de Medicis, pag. m. 100.

(14) In the Remark [A].

GARONNE, in Latin Garumna, one of the four great Rivers of France. Papyrius Maſſo (a) will furniſh you with ſeveral paſſages of Poets concerning this River. Add thereto the pretty and diverting fiction of Meſſieurs de la Chapelle and Bachaumont (b) with regard to its flux and reflux. I ſhall content my ſelf with obſerving ſome faults of Moreri [A].

(a) In Deſcriptione Franciæ per Flumina.

(b) In the Relation of their Journey.

[A] I ſhall content myſelf with obſerving ſome faults of Moreri.] I. He ſays the Garonne traverſes the plain of Aran in the country of Comminges. This ſhews he did not underſtand the Latin which he copied; for theſe are the words of Mr. Baudrand, the Author whom Moreri quotes: Oritur (Garumna) in montibus Auræ in Arania valle Hiſpanicæ ditionis in confinio Aragoniæ. Mr. Baudrand does not ſpeak of the plain of Aran, but of the valley of Aran, and he ſays it belongs to Spain on the frontiers of Aragon, and not that it makes a part of the country of Comminges. II. He ſhould not have ſaid that the Garonne runs to Rieux, but near Rieux. The Sieur Coulon has avoided this fault, by ſaying it runs by the Biſhopric of Rieux in the County of Foix (1). Theſe laſt words are worth nothing; for the City of Rieux does not belong to the County of Foix, and that part of the Dioceſe of Rieux by which the Garonne runs, is not in the County of Foix. III. It is not true that the Garonne receives the little Lers at Toulouſe; thoſe rivers meet a great way below that city. IV. He ſhould not have forgotten that a league above Toulouſe the Garonne receives a river much more conſiderable than the little Lers; I mean the river Ariege. Inde patentes & fertiles campos rigans duobus milliaribus à Tholoſa in vinculo (2) S. Crucis Aurigeram (3) fluvium excipiens, arenulis aureis intermicantem, jam ſuis aquis & externis valentior Tholoſam Teſtoſagum Metropolim alluit. i. e. "Thence watering "open and fertile plains, two miles from Toulouſe, at "the little village of S. Croix, it receives the river "Ariege, which here and there glitters with golden "ſands, and being now grown more conſiderable by "its own waters and the acceſſion of others, waſhes "Toulouſe, the capital of the Tectoſages." Theſe are the words of Papyrius Maſſo (4). V. To ſay, as Moreri does, that the Garonne runs near Bourdeaux, ſeems as if he deſigned his Readers ſhould fancy that it does not touch the walls of that city which would be a very falſe imagination. VI. The Garonne and the Dordogne, ſays he, forment un ſeul Canal de la Garonne qui paſſe à Blaye, i. e. "form one ſingle channel "of the Garonne which goes to Blaye." This is ſo barbarous a way of ſpeaking that the moſt ignorant Walloon would have expreſſed himſelf better. VII. He ſhould not have ſaid that there is on the right ſide of the Garonne, and on the ſhore of Xaintonge, a town called Marmande; it ſhould have been Mortagne. VIII. Inſtead of Pavillac and Soulac, he ſhould have ſaid Paulliac and Souillac. The ſecond and fifth faults are in the Geographical Dictionary of Mr. Baudrand.

(1) Traité des Rivieres de France, Part 1. pag. 475.

(2) It ſhould be viculo.

(3) The Author does not well tranſlate this Word by that of la Riege.

(4) In Deſcriptione Franciæ per Flumina, pag. 433. Edit. Paris, 1685.

☞GARTH (Sir SAMUEL), an excellent Engliſh Poet and Phyſician, was deſcended of a good family in Yorkſhire. After he had paſſed through his ſchool education, he was removed to Peter-Houſe in Cambridge, where he was created Doctor of Phyſic July the 7th 1691. His firſt examination before the College of Phyſicians was on the 12th of March 169$\frac{1}{2}$; and he was admitted Fellow June the 26th 1693 (a). On the 17th

(a) From the Regiſter of the College of Phyſicians.

17th of September 1697 he made a Latin Oration before the College [A], to the great ſatisfaction of the Auditors, and his own honour, as it is expreſſed in the Regiſter of that College. In 1696 he zealouſly promoted and encouraged the erecting the Diſpenſary, being an apartment in the College, for the relief of the ſick poor, by giving them advice gratis, and diſpenſing medicines to them at low rates (b). This work of charity having expoſed him and many other Phyſicians to the envy and reſentment of ſeveral perſons of the ſame faculty as well as Apothecaries, he ridiculed them with a peculiar ſpirit and vivacity in a Poem called the Diſpenſary [B] in ſix Canto's; which, though it firſt ſtole into the world incorrect in the year 1699, yet bore in a few months three impreſſions, and was afterwards printed ſeveral times with a Dedication to Anthony Henley Eſq; and commendatory verſes by Mr. Charles Boyle, afterwards Earl of Orrery, Colonel Chriſtopher Codrington, Thomas Cheek Eſq; and Colonel Henry Blount. This Poem raiſed our Author a prodigious reputation; which together with his great learning and ſkill in his profeſſion, his politeneſs, agreeable converſation, and good humour, procured him a vaſt practice, and gained him the friendſhip and eſteem of moſt of the Nobility and Gentry of both ſexes. He was one of the moſt eminent Members of a famous Society, called the Kit-Cat-Club, which conſiſted of above thirty Noblemen and Gentlemen, diſtinguiſhed by their excellent parts, and affection to the Proteſtant ſucceſſion in the Houſe of Hanover. October the 3d 1702 he was elected one of the Cenſors of the College of Phyſicians. He was in particular favour and eſteem with the Duke of Marlborough, whoſe diſgrace and voluntary exile abroad he lamented in a fine copy of verſes. In 1711 he wrote a dedication for an intended edition of Lucretius to his

(b) See A Short Account of the Proceedings of the College of Phyſicians, London, in relation to the ſick poor. London 1697.

[A] On the 17th of September 1697 he made a Latin Oration before the College.] It is intitled, Oratio Laudatoria, in Ædibus Collegii Regalis Med. Lond. 17mo die Septembris, habita à Sam. Garth. Col. Reg. Med. Lond. Soc. London 1697 in 4to pagg. 16. In it we have a long and beautiful Compliment to King William III. of which we ſhall give the Reader an Extract, ſince the Oration itſelf is very difficult to be met with. Ad te nunc Coronidis loco convertimur, Gulielme Auguſte, Regum invictiſſime, non tam Collegii hujuſce Jupiter Stator & Cuſtos, quam Orbis Chriſtiani liberator, & publicæ quietis Reſtitutor. Quod regna Europæa meliora expectant, tuum eſt; quod Agricolæ tempeſtates anni lætas ſperant, tuum eſt; quod Caſtitatem matres, quod pudorem filiæ jam tuentur, tuum eſt. Te venerantur Angli, te obſervant Hiſpani, te mirantur Germani, te colunt Batavi, & te verentur Galli. Si geſta Majorum tuorum illuſtria, ſi genus antiquum ſpectemus, ecquid non veteres loquuntur Faſti & Annales? Tot principes & Heroas è ſtirpe Naſſoviâ oriundus numeremus, quot vix homines è ſuâ poſſunt alii. Ignorat nemo, niſi qui neſcire mallet, vim Gallicam viginti, & eo amplius retro annis, toti Europæ tremendam incubuiſſe. Belli enim deſuetudo ſocordiam, ſocordia ſervitutem ſæpius parit, adeò ut de libertate publicâ deſperandum eſſet, ni juvenis Auriacus, majorum more, venienti morbo occurrere feſtinâſſet. Quæ & quanta planè ſtupenda in Flandriâ geſſiſti, teſtatur inter alia prælium Montibus dimicatum, ubi hoſtilem Exercitum penitus fudiſti, ubi militarem Divi Julii ſcientiam, Alexandri annos nondum prætergreſſus, impleviſti, tu penè impubis & jam triumphator. Te de novo conſervatorem petiit concuſſa ſalus publica, & in ſinum tuum confugit ſuſpirans Anglia. Non te propria Ambitio Imperatorem fecit, ſed noſtræ Anguſtiæ. Britanniam languentem & extrema jam perpeſſam, vel ipſâ præſentiâ tuâ reſtituiſti; Hiberniam ferè exanimem adventu tuo refocillaſti . . . . " Ecquid eſte Auguſte, quod pro utilitate publica non " molireris? Cum Coclite natares, cum Fabio cunctareris, & cum Mario contra Hoſtium agmina, ſolus " licet, decertares. Non proſperis ſupra quam Majeſtati convenit, elatus es, neque rebus ſiniſtris infractus: ſed ſi a tuis in prælio derelictus fores, uno animo, ſed forti, ſed magnifico, univerſos ſuſtinere " quum non poſſes, ſingulos vinceres. Cœli inclementiam, ventorum impetum, Oceani furorem, hyemem & æſtatem juxta perpeti dignaris. Prælium, " ut primus inis, ſic ab eodem ultimus deſiſtis. Dii " interim immortales te melius, quam ipſe ſoles, curent, ne nimium audendo crudelis ſis in eos quos " ſervâſti; præſertim cum ex tua unius fortitudine & " prudentia tot populorum ſalus, tot Principum ſecuritas pendere videatur. Si jubes eſſe fælices, ſumus: " non tuos, ut alii reges, deprimis, ſed demulces, ſed " attollis, neque vis tibi plura licere, quam nobis omnibus, tu ſolus tuimet Victor! . . . . . Ne miretur " aliquis me finem collaudandi ignorare, quum tu finem mira præſtandi neſcias; ſed in hoc minus ſtupenda ſunt, quia tua, Monetam noſtram diminutam " & adulterinam inveniſti; probam (ſed ferò ſit utinam) relinques. Britanni etiam ſub adventum tuum " molles & enerves, nil hodie, Cæſare duce, niſi Victoriam ſpirant, nil niſi turpem famam metuunt. " Dies me ante deficeret, quam geſta tua percurrerem, " & qui tota recenſere velit, quos tu emereris annos, " habeat neceſſe eſt." Talia de Hercule, de Scipione, de Marcello finguntur; ſed de te vel majora certa ſunt. Fama profecto tua uſque adeo ſe diffudit, ubique gentium ſic inclaruit, ut bellicoſus ille Ruſſiæ Imperator, geſtorum æmulus, & nominis tui cultor, te viſendi gratiâ, ab ultimo Septentrione venerit, tuo malens frui Hoſpitio, tuas virtutes Heroicas mirari, quam dignitatem Imperatoriam exercere, &, qui eum domi manent triumphos, de Turcis Tartariſque debellatis agere: & mox cum eum tu, Prometheus alter, igne cæleſti animaveris, tuo afflatus genio, tuo numine plenus, ad implenda Græcorum vota & vaticinia redibit, Imperium Orientale auſpicaturus. Regna interim hæc uſque ad invidiam ſub auſpiciis tuis effloreſcunt, qui tam optimi Regis, quam maximi Ducis omnes Numeros impleviſti. Reliqua inſuper Europa, quin & ipſa Gallia, tam longis belli infortuniis vexata, ad Regiam tuam Legatos mittunt, & finem miſeriarum expetunt. Precibus eorum annuens, ut Jupiter olim, nutu tuo Orbem pacâſti. Nunc ſilent Litui, nunc rubiginem trahunt arma, nunc redeunt ſæcula, ut olim, aurea, conquieſcunt cives, nec hoſtium incurſionibus divexantur Coloni. Deſinamus tandem omnes querelarum, & trophæa tua unanimes concinnamus, dum te demum reducem, ſellæ curuli inſidentem, ſpoliis decoratum, tunicâ palmatâ purpuràque indutum, lauro coronatum, captivorum agmine pone veniente, expectant regna tua; Galliâ denique in terminos proprios redactâ, Hiſpaniâ liberatâ, Belgiâ in tuto poſitâ, & Aquilæ Germanicæ alis ad Hungariæ fines expanſis, tibi ludos publicos inſtituemus, teque Orbis Europæi vindicem, te propugnatorem, te ſtatorem grati nuncupabimus. Nec jactent Galli Regem ſuum dediſſe Pacem, quam tot urbium, tot provinciarum redditione impetravit. Emit ergo ſibi Pacem Ludovicus decimus quartus, dedit Gulielmus verè Magnus, idemque Chriſtianiſſimus, Orbi Chriſtiano.

[B] A Poem called The Diſpenſary.] The ſixth Edition of it, with ſeveral Deſcriptions and Epiſodes never before printed, was publiſhed at London 1706 in 8vo. In the Preface he obſerves, that it had been objected to him, that he had imitated the Lutrin of Monſ. Boileau. " I muſt own, ſays he, I am proud of the " imputation; unleſs their quarrel be, that I have " not done it enough. But he that will give himſelf " the trouble of examining, will find I have copied him in nothing but in two or three lines " in the complaint of Moleſſe, Canto II. and " in one of his firſt Canto; the ſenſe of which " line is entirely his, and I could wiſh it were not " the only good one in mine." Major Richardſon Pack obſerves (1), that this Poem hath loſt and gained in every Edition. Almoſt every thing that Sir Samuel left out was a robbery from the public; every thing he added hath been an embelliſhment to his Poem.

(1) Miſcellanies pag. 102, 2d edit. in 8vo.

his late Majeſty, then Elector of Brunſwick [C], upon whoſe acceſſion to the Throne he had the honour of Knighthood conferred upon him by his Majeſty with the Duke of Marlborough's ſword. He was likewiſe made Phyſician in ordinary to his Majeſty, and Phyſician General to the Army. As his own merit procured him a great intereſt with thoſe in power, ſo his humanity and good nature inclined him to make uſe of that intereſt, rather for the ſupport and encouragement of other men of letters, than for the advancement of his own fortune. He wrote ſome other pieces beſides thoſe abovementioned [D]. He died January the 18th $171\frac{8}{9}$, and was interred on the 22d of the ſame month in the Church of Harrow on the Hill in a vault there built by him for the interment of his family. Mr. Pope in one of his Letters (c) ſtiles him, the beſt natured of men; and tells us, that "his death was very heroical, and yet unaffected enough to "have made a Saint, or a Philoſopher famous. But ill tongues and worſe hearts have "branded even his laſt moments, as wrongfully as they did his life, with irreligion. "You

(c) See Letters of Mr. Pope and ſeveral eminent Perſons from the year 1705 to 1735. pag. 261-263. edit. London 1735.

[C] In 1711 he wrote a Latin Dedication for an intended Edition of Lucretius to his late Majeſty, then Elector of Brunſwick.] This piece being rarely to be met with, ſince the Edition of Lucretius, to which it was deſigned to be prefixed, was never publiſhed; we ſhall preſent it to the Reader. It is as follows:

"Sereniſſimo Principi GEORGIO LUDOVICO, Brunſ. "& Lun. Duci, &c.

"Princeps Sereniſſime,

"Scriptorem perlectu non indignum, ſummâ, ut "par eſt, obſervantiâ tuos ob oculos pono. Erudi- "atnè utilius, an delectet elegantius, jure dubitemus. "Quam plurimi forſan putent, Dignitatis tuæ me pa- "rum Rationem habere, qui, quicquid forte delira- "verim, auguſto tuo Nomini conſecrare voluerim: "ſed & clementiam tuam & tenuitatem meam juxta "novi. Eâ es humanitate, ut dum Heroem te probas "maximum, Patronum te præbes optimum. Incer- "tum ſi in oppugnantem ſis vehementior, an ſuppli- "canti facilior. Si Lucretius his temporibus vixiſſet, "& de rebus quas fortiter ſuſceperis & feliciter perfe- "ceris, certior factus eſſet, Providentiam divinam ge- "ſtis tuis annuentem, ipſe ultro agnoſceret, & geren- "dis non defuturam facile prædicaret. Neque adver- "ſus mortis timorem validius quicquam ſtatueret, "quam Animi tui magnitudinem; neque dulcius ſo- "latium, quam Vitæ Integritatem. Si magna, quæ "molitus fuiſti admodum adhuc Adoleſcens, & ad ar- "dua quæque ſubeunda natus, enumeranda foret; ex- "pugnatam Treverim, Viennam liberatam tranſire ne- "fas eſſet; quorum altera Coronam obſidionalem tibi "donavit, Muralem altera. Neque te in Hungaria "præliantem tacerem, ubi in id Bellum incidiſti, cu- "jus altera pars ſudoris nimium habuit, altera Felici- "tatis parum. Atqui res Imperatorias tu, Romani "Imperii Vindex, privato commodo habuiſti potio- "res. De Rebus in Holſatiâ geſtis & compluribus "aliis non ſilerem; neque quæ in Flandriâ, nupero "exardente Bello, ſunt notiora, prætermitterem. Nun- "quis etiam ignorat, quanta ad Rhenum, Legionibus "belli inexpertis, recens geſſeris? Famâ propriâ Eu- "ropæ ſaluti poſthabitâ, Victoris perſonam poſuiſti, "ut Patriæ Conſervatoris indueres; & pulchrè ſtatuiſti "te, cedendo gloriæ aliorum, auctarum tuam. Ex- "ercitum inſtructiſſimum dimiſiſti alio ducendum, & "tumultuario per ſingulas Provincias cenſu conſcripto "præeſſe inſtituiſti; eo certe conſilio, ut nihil velles "quod poſſes; eo exitu, ut ubique potueris quantum "volueris: & prudenter conſulta tibi tam feliciter "ceſſere, ut de Gallis tandem triumphâris. Sed vereor "ne celſitudini tuæ ſim moleſtior, qui magna moliri, "quam maxima de te recenſeri malis; in appetenda "Gloria ardentior; in ferenda moderatior; & licet "Victorias novas prioribus cumules, verecundia tua "uſque adhuc reſtat invicta. Non tibi, ſed tuis te "natum arbitraris, & otium, quod aliis paras, tibi "ſoli denegas. Non de Imperio proferendo certas, "ſed de Libertate vindicanda. Quis in Hoſtem gra- "vior? Quis in civem benignior? In caſtris diſcipli- "nam inſtituis; in Tribunali Juſtitiam; & Jus cui- "que ſuum Dux & Princeps reddis, quod Miles & Ci- "vis exoptares. Voluntas Principum eſt aliquando "pro Legibus. Tu illis ſolutum te nolles; ſed ſalu- "briter latæ ſive utiliter emendatæ tibi præcipuè arri- "dent; & tales conſtitui, quibus tui pareant, & quas "ipſe etiam ſerves, curas. Si quid imperant, impe- "ras; ſi quid vetant, vetas; inde tibi cautum eſt, hoc "ne agas, illud ut exequaris. Te genus avitum & "Jus a Majoribus acceptum, tot ſeculorum inſuper "conſuetudine approbatum, ſuper cæteros extulerunt. "Sed ea eſt moderatio tua, vix quicquam ut tibi, qui "omnia potes, niſi quod jure fiat, permiſſum velis. "Non jus vi obrui ſinis; potentiores, ne humiliores op- "primant, prohibes. Si ſtudia leniora minus valeant, "aſperioribus invitus coerces; & ſeveritatem Clemen- "tiâ uſque eo temperas, ut metus frequentior, & pœna "rarior eveniat. Non deſunt Principes, qui vix quic- "quam, ſi dominationi conducat, turpe exiſtimant. "Quicquid æquum eſt averſantur; quicquid ni æquum, "gratum habent; & probant improbantque, non pro- "ut Ratio poſtulat, ſed quemadmodum hortatur Am- "bitio. Ipſe id ante omnia conſulis, rectumne ſit an pra- "vum; & ne vectigalibus tuos, ne Armis Vicinos op- "primas, caves. Plerique inani Dignitatis imagine "adducti, memores ſe eſſe Principes, ſe eſſe Homines "ſunt obliti. Tu, cum ab Aulicis Curis vaces, non "alio, quoquo te vertis, ſatellitio, niſi piis intuenti- "um votis ſtipatus incedis; & eo aliis es major, quo "aliis te reddis magis parem. Nonnulli in conſiliis "capiendis mobiles, non niſi blanditiis inſidiantibus "aurem admovent, & aliorum merita non proprio "judicio, ſed adulatorum arbitrio metiuntur. Tu in "ſententia conſtans, & Adulationem procul amovens, "ad aliorum nutum te minimè convertis. Inſontes te "habent propugnatorem; abſentes vindicem; facino- "rum præclarè geſtorum ii te prædicatorem inveni- "unt, quibus antea fueras exemplo; & quicquid fieri, "ut Dux juſſeris, facto, ut commilito, gratularis. "Te maximè laudat qui veriſſima refert, ſive Virtu- "tes tuas, ſive Majorum recordetur. Erat tibi Pater "Heroum genere natus, Bellicorum pariter Munerum "atque Civilium ſummè peritus. Supereſt Mater lon- "go Regum ordine genus deducens, & animi magni- "tudine ſupra fœminam conſpicua, nihil muliebre præ "ſe ferens, præter hilaritatem priſcam & gratam oris "venuſtatem. Juvat denique Filium memorare, Eu- "ropæ ſpem alteram, optimâ Indole Principem, ar- "tibus omnigenis inſtructiſſimum; & ob mores ama- "biles æquè infimis atque ſummis charum. Qui "gloriam, Virtutis tuæ æmulus, more tuo adipiſci- "tur; adeptam more tuo parvi ducit. Neſcio an fa- "mæ curſum impleveris jam ipſe magis fortiter, an "inchoaverit ille feliciter, pro mortalitate a Parente "acceptâ immortalitatem redditurus. Quantus in ar- "mis ſit, certò ſcimus; quantus evaſurus, augura- "mur; proinde quo optimè laudemus Patrem, Fili- "um oportet nominemus. Quid Votorum ſupereſt, "niſi ut benè meritus eſt ab omnibus, ſummo in ho- "nore habeatur ab omnibus? Quæ de te vulgavit fa- "ma, læti accipimus, grati recognoſcimus. In mo- "ribus ineſt humanitas, in officiis probitas, in verbis "fides; & qualis haberi velis, talem te eſſe lætaris. "Cum Regina proinde optima (quum Dii immortales "diutiſſimè ſervent) extremum reddiderit ſpiritum, te "tuoſque Senatus Populuſque Britannus certatim ad ſe "accerſent, genti univerſæ quam feliciſſimè impera- "turos."

[D] He wrote ſome other Pieces beſides thoſe abovementioned.] I. Claremont, addreſſed to the Right Honourable the Earl of Clare, now Duke of Newcaſtle. This was printed in 1715, and reprinted in the Sixth Part of Miſcellany Poems by the moſt eminent Hands. Publiſhed by Mr. Dryden. In the Preface our Author obſerves,

" You muſt have heard many tales on this ſubject; but if ever there was a good Chri-
" ſtian without knowing himſelf to be ſo, it was Dr. Garth." Mr. Granville, afterwards Lord Lanſdowne, wrote a fine copy of verſes to our Author in his illneſs [E]. He had an only daughter, who was married to Colonel Boyle, brother to Henry Boyle Eſq; the preſent Speaker of the Houſe of Commons in Ireland, and one of his Majeſty's Lords Juſtices, and Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Revenues in Ireland.

obſerves, that " this Poem was written upon giving " the name of Claremont to a village, now belong-
" ing to the Earl of Clare. The ſituation is ſo a" greeable and ſurprizing, that it inclines one to think
" ſome place of this nature put Ovid at firſt upon the " ſtory of Narciſſus and Eccho. It is probable he had " obſerved ſome ſpring ariſing amongſt woods and
" rocks where eccho's were heard, and ſome flower
" bending over the ſtream, and by conſequence re" flected from it." There was an Edition of this Poem printed at London in 8vo under the following title; Claremont: addreſſed to the Right Honourable the Earl of Clare. With Remarks and Annotations Variorum. II. To the Lady Louiſa Lenos with Ovid's Epiſtles. Printed in the Sixth Part of Dryden's Miſcellanies. III. To the Earl of Burlington, with Ovid's Art of Love. IV. A Tranſlation of the Fourteenth Book of Ovid's Metamorphoſes, and of the Story of Cinnus in the Fifteenth Book. Theſe Tranſlations are printed in the Engliſh Verſion of Ovid's Metamorphoſes by ſeveral hands, and publiſhed by our Author with a Preface by him, and a Dedication to the then Princeſs of Wales, her preſent Majeſty. Dr. George Sewell in the Dedication to a Tranſlation of the ſame Work of Ovid by ſeveral Hands, dated Auguſt the 1ſt 1716, tells us, that he had " ſeen one Book of Sir Samuel
" Garth in Manuſcript, which at leaſt comes up to
" the purity and happineſs of the beſt Tranſlators." V. A Prologue deſigned for Mr. Rowe's Tamerlane, but never ſpoke. It is publiſhed in the ſecond Volume of Dryden's Miſcellanies. VI. Prologue to the Muſick-Meeting in York-Buildings. Printed in the third volume of Dryden's Miſcellanies. VII. Prologue at the opening of the Theatre in the Hay-Market. VIII. Epilogue to Mr. Addiſon's Cato. IX. Verſes to the Earl of Godolphin. X. Verſes on Lady Carliſle, Lady Eſſex, Lady Hyde, and Lady Wharton, printed among the Verſes written for the Toaſting-Glaſſes of the Kit-Kat-Club in the year 1703, and publiſhed in the fifth Volume of Dryden's Miſcellanies.

[E] Mr. Granville, afterwards Lord Lanſdowne, wrote a fine Copy of Verſes to our Author in his illneſs.] They are intitled; Verſes ſent to Dr. Garth in his illneſs; and are as follow:

" Machaon ſick! in every face we find
" His danger is the danger of mankind,
" Whoſe art protecting, nature could expire
" But by a deluge, or the general fire.
" More lives he ſaves than periſh in our wars;
" And faſter than a plague deſtroys, repairs.
" The bold carowſer and adventurous Dame,
" Nor fear the fever, nor refuſe the flame;
" Safe in his ſkill, from all reſtraint ſet free,
" But conſcious ſhame, remorſe, or piety.
" Sire of all arts, defend thy darling ſon;
" Reſtore the man, whoſe life's ſo much our own;
" On whom, like Adam, the whole world's reclin'd;
" And by preſerving Garth, preſerve mankind."

H.

☞GATAKER, or GATACRE [A] (THOMAS), a very learned Engliſh Writer in the ſeventeenth Century, was deſcended of an antient and good family in Shropſhire [B], and ſon of Mr. Thomas Gataker [C], Domeſtic Chaplain to Robert Earl of Leiceſter, and Miniſter of St. Edmund's the King in Lombard Street London, by Margaret of the family of the Pigots in Hertfordſhire. He was born in the Parſonage-Houſe of St. Edmund's September the 4th 1574 (a). In his childhood he was remarkable for his excellent genius, vaſt memory, and uncommon application to learning; and having paſt through the Grammar School, before he had compleated ſixteen years, in 1590, was ſent to St. John's College in the Univerſity of Cambridge. His father dying ſoon after left him, though not wholly deſtitute, yet not ſufficiently provided for any long continuance of his ſtudies there. However he found friends to ſupport him; and for his diſtinguiſhed learning was choſen Scholar of that Society (b), wherein he proſecuted his ſtudies with unwearied diligence [D], till he, with abilities anſwerable to his degree, commenced Maſter of Arts. He became now ſo highly eſteemed for his learning and piety,

(a) Narrative of the Life and Death of Mr. Gataker, pag. 41, 42. ſubjoined to his Funeral Sermon by Simeon Aſhe, Miniſter of the Goſpel in London. London 1655 in 4to.

(b) Ibid. pag. 42, 43.

[A] GATACRE.] Thus he wrote his name, till in later years, to prevent miſcalling occaſioned frequently by the view of the letters, he changed it into Gataker (1).

(1) Narrative of the Life and Death of Mr. Gataker, pag. 41. ſubjoined to his Funeral Sermon by Simeon Aſhe, Miniſter of the Goſpel in London. London 1655 in 4to.

[B] Deſcended of an antient and good family in Shropſhire.] The ſtock of this family had continued in the ſame houſe, carrying the name of its owner, and known by the name of Gatacre-Hall, by an uninterrupted ſucceſſion from the time of King Edward the Confeſſor (2).

(2) Ibid.

[C] Son of Mr. Thomas Gataker.] He was a younger ſon of Mr. William Gataker, and deſigned by his parents to the ſtudy of the Law, in order to which he was a ſtudent at the Temple. During the courſe of that inſtitution, he occaſionally coming to viſit ſome of his relations, who were then high in power and place, " was often preſent at the " Examination of ſome Chriſtian Confeſſors of the " Goſpel in thoſe ſevere times, wherein Satan armed
" all his forces to ſuppreſs that dawning Light, which " threatned ruin to his Kingdom of Darkneſs. The " harſhneſs of thoſe Proceedings, together with the " conſtancy of the good, though ſimple Chriſtians,
" that with evidence of truth and reſolution of mind
" maintained faith and a good conſcience, were of " great moment with him to facilitate the entertain" ment of that purer Doctrine of the Goſpel, which " began to ſhine into his ſoul (3)." This being apprehended by his parents, they jealous of his change ſent him over to Louvain in Flanders, and to win him to a compliance in Religion, ſettled upon him an eſtate in leaſe of 100 l. per ann. old rent. But his father perceiving his unchangeable ſtedfaſtneſs in that choice, which had nothing to prejudice it but the ſeeming novelty, recalled him, and with great diſpleaſure revoked his own grant, which yet could not take effect without the ſon's conſent, who to preſerve his conſcience gave up that which had been the bait of Apoſtacy. But by the aſſiſtance of friends he purſued his ſtudies at Oxford, and in proceſs of time, when the Reformation was eſtabliſhed, took upon him the public Miniſtry of the Goſpel, and became Domeſtic Chaplain to Robert Earl of Leiceſter, and Miniſter of St. Edmund's the King in Lombard-ſtreet London (4).

(3) Ibid.

(4) Ibid. pag. 41, 42.

[D] Proſecuted his ſtudies with unwearied diligence.] He was a conſtant auditor of Mr. John Bois, who read a Greek Lecture in his bed to certain young Students, who preferred antelucana ſtudia before their reſt and eaſe. The Notes of theſe Lectures Mr. Gataker kept as a treaſure; and being viſited by Mr. Bois many years after, he produced them to the no ſmall joy of the good old man, who profeſſed himſelf made ſome years younger by that entertainment (5). He tells us himſelf, that he was much obliged to Mr. Bois for his knowledge in the Greek (6), and to Mr. Edward Lively for that of the Hebrew (7).

(5) Ibid. pag. 43.

(6) Cinnus, lib. 1. cap. 9.

(7) Ib. l. 2. c. 9.

piety, that a College being then to be erected by the munificence of the Counteſs of Suſſex [E], the Truſtees of that Foundreſs choſe him to be one of that Society even before the College was finiſhed. During this interval he retired to Mr. William Ayloff's Houſe in Eſſex, whom he inſtructed in the Hebrew tongue (c), as he did that Gentleman's eldeſt ſon in Literature proper to his age (d). While he reſided in this family, he was ſollicited by Dr. Stern, then Suffragan of Colcheſter, to enter into Holy Orders [F], which at laſt he complied with, and was ordained by the ſaid Suffragan (e). The fabrick of Sidney-Suſſex College being finiſhed, about the year 1599 (f), he betook himſelf to the ſtation aſſigned him, and inſtructed the young Students there with great ſucceſs (g). About this time he was engaged in a deſign ſet on foot by Mr. Abdias Aſhton of St. John's College, and Mr. William Bedel of Emanuel College, afterwards Biſhop of Kilmore in Ireland, of preaching in places adjacent to the Univerſity, in order to ſupply the want of able Miniſters in thoſe parts. Accordingly Mr. Gataker preached every Sunday at Everton, a village in the confines of the Counties of Cambridge, Bedford, and Huntington, the Vicar of which pariſh was reported to be an hundred and thirty years old (h). After half a year thus employed, finding ſome reaſons to retire from the Univerſity, at the motion of Mr. Aſhton abovementioned, who had been his Tutor, he removed to Sir William Cook's family then reſiding in London. This place and employment placing him in a more conſpicuous light with regard to the exerciſe of his miniſterial functions, introduced him to the acquaintance of many perſons of eminence; and the Preacher's place at Lincoln's-Inn becoming vacant, ſome principal perſons of that Society, who had occaſionally been his Auditors, inviting him to it, he was choſen Preacher there [G], in which ſtation he continued ten years. But notwithſtanding this engagement he did not wholly abandon the family of Sir William Cook, to whoſe Lady he was nearly related by blood; and therefore in the vacations being diſengaged from attendance at Lincoln's-Inn, reſided in that family [H], preaching in their Chapel or in the Pariſh Church, as occaſion required (i). While he continued at Lincoln's-Inn, he was offered a conſiderable Benefice by Sir William Sidley, which he refuſed, becauſe he thought one Cure of ſouls ſufficient for one man. In 1611 he quitted Lincoln's-Inn for the Rectory of Rotherhith

(c) Ibid. pag. 44. and Mr. Tho. Gataker's Vindication of the Annotations on Jerem. ch. x. ver. 2. pag. 56, 57.

(d) Narrative, pag. 44.

(e) Ibid. pag. 44, 45.

(f) See Fuller's Hiſtory of the Univerſity of Cambridge, pag. 153.

(g) Narrative, pag. 45.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Ibid. pag. 46.

[E] A College being then to be erected by the munificence of the Counteſs of Suſſex.] This Lady was Frances, daughter to Sir William, and ſiſter to Sir Henry Sidney, Lord Deputy of Ireland. She died March the 9th 158$\frac{8}{9}$, as appears by the epitaph on her monument in Weſtminſter-Abby, to which Church ſhe gave a ſtipend of twenty pounds a year for a Divinity-Lecture. By her will dated December the 6th 1588 ſhe left to her Executors, Henry Gray, Earl of Kent, and to her nephew Sir John (afterwards Lord) Harrington, five] thouſand pounds, beſides her goods unbequeathed, for the erection of a College, and purchaſing of competent lands, for one Maſter, ten Fellows, and twenty Scholars. But in caſe the legacy was not ſufficient, it was appointed to go to the enlarging of Clare-Hall; for the maintenance of ſo many Fellows and Scholars therein, to enjoy all liberties, cuſtoms, and privileges, with other Fellows and Scholars of that foundation. She appointed Dr. John Whitgift, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Dr. Gabriel Goodman Dean of Weſtminſter, Overſeers of her Will. The firſt ſtone of Sidney College was laid on the 20th of May 1596, and the whole fabric was finiſhed three years after (8).

(8) Fuller's Hiſtory of the Univerſity of Cambridge ſince the Conqueſt, pag. 153. edit. London 1655.

[F] While he reſided in this family, he was ſollicited by Dr. Stern, then Suffragan of Colcheſter, to enter into holy orders.] In this family he uſed to expound a portion of Scripture every morning; and in this exerciſe diſpatched the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, the Prophecies of Iſaiah, and a good part of the Book of Job, rendering the Text out of the Original Languages, and thence delivering clear explications and uſeful Obſervations. Dr. Stern viſiting the miſtreſs of the family, to whom he was nearly related, happened to be preſent at this exerciſe, when Mr. Gataker was explaining the firſt chapter of St. Paul's Epiſtle to the Epheſians. And the Doctor being ſatisfied with the performance, and admiring the endowments of Mr. Gataker, exhorted him inſtantly to take holy orders, whereby thoſe gifts might be authoriſed for public uſe; and offered him his aſſiſtance in that buſineſs. But he well weighing the burthen of that calling, and modeſtly judging of his own abilities, thanked the Doctor for this kind offer, but deferred the matter to further conſideration. But afterwards by the advice of the Reverend Mr. Henry Alvey, formerly his tutor, and the reiterated ſollicitations of Dr. Stern, he conſented to be ordained by that Suffragan (9).

(9) Narrative, pag. 44, 45.

[G] The Preacher's place at Lincoln's Inn becoming vacant, ſome principal perſons of that ſociety, who had occaſionally been his auditors, inviting him to it, he was choſen Preacher there.] Thoſe Gentlemen offered him their aſſiſtance upon the vacancy, and alledged the facility of his introduction to that place by the Lord Chief Juſtice Popham's intereſt, whom they knew to have had a great reſpect for Mr. Gataker as well as for his father, who had been his intimate friend, and contemporary in the ſtudy of the Law. But our Author according to his uſual modeſty declined the undertaking, and reſiſted the importunities even of his friend Mr. Stock, till Dr. Montague, Maſter of Sydney-College, repairing to London, and being acquainted with the deſign in hand, (though he had it in his thoughts to invite Mr. Gataker back to the College, that he might read an Hebrew Lecture, which had a ſalary annexed by the Lord Harrington), preſſed him with arguments and authority, encouraged him againſt his own diffidence, and gained him at laſt to conſent, that without any ſuit made by him, the Lord Chief Juſtice Popham ſhould recommend him to that ſociety. Thus he was choſen Preacher of Lincoln's Inn.

[H] In the vacations being diſengaged from attendance at Lincoln's Inn, reſided in that family.] He preached in the Chapel or in the Pariſh Church, as occaſion required; "and this with an Apoſtolical mind, not for "filthy Lucre, but freely, making the Goſpel a bur-"then only to the Diſpenſer. Yet ſuch was the devotion "of that Religious pair (12), that they alſo would not "ſerve God without coſt, for they afterwards in conſide-"ration of thoſe pains freely taken, ſettled upon Mr. "Gataker an annuity of 20 l. per ann. which he indeed "received for ſome few years, but after (for certain "reaſons) remitted unto the heir of that family, for-"bearing to uſe the right he had, and forbidding his "executor to claim any arrears of that annuity. "This is mentioned the rather, that the generous tem-"per of his Chriſtian ſoul, aiming at the higheſt good "of others more than his own temporal advantage, "and infinitely removed from ſordid acquiſition of "gain, or the proſtitution of his ſacred function unto "ſecular deſigns, may be oppoſed to ſtop the impu-"dent clamour of ſome, whoſe conſciences being both "galled and cauterized, prompted them to calum-"niate him as guilty of covetouſneſs. But his own "pen writ the beſt apology, as indeed (according to "that of Nazianzen) they that give him a juſt cha-"racter and due commendation, had need to have al-"ſo his eloquence (11)."

(10) Sir William Cook and his Lady.

Greg. Epitaph. Baſil.

(11) Narrative, pag. 46, 47.

hith in Surry [I]; and in the diſcharge of his function his induſtry was conſtant and great; notwithſtanding an almoſt perpetual head-ach, with which he had been troubled from his youth (k). In 1616, and ſome of the following years he held a correſpondence by letters with Dr. James Uſher, afterwards Archbiſhop of Armagh [K]. In 1619 he publiſhed his Diſcourſe of the Nature and Uſe of Lots [L]; and the year following made a tour

(k) Ibid. pag. 47, 48, 49.

[I] In 1611 he quitted Lincoln's-Inn for the Rectory of Rotherhith in Surry.] The grounds, motive and manner of his removal he has given us an account of in his Diſcourſe Apologetical againſt Mr. Will. Lilly (12), of which this is the ſubſtance. That Rectory being void, a perſon of an infamous life uſed his utmoſt efforts to ſucceed in it, in order to which he before the incumbent's death had made terms with the mother of ſome orphans, in whoſe hands the patronage was ſuppoſed to be. Upon this ſome of the religious inhabitants caſt their eyes upon Mr. Gataker, to gain whom they added to their ſollicitations the mediation of his friend Mr. Richard Stock. And when he had by many reaſons remonſtrated to him, that it was of importance to Religion, that an unworthy perſon ſhould not intrude into the living, he was at laſt prevailed on to accept it. This being repreſented to Sir Henry Hobart, then Attorney General, by Mr. Randolph Crew, afterwards Lord Chief Juſtice, Sir Henry, who before favoured other pretenſions, to gratify ſome tenants of his in the Pariſh, readily embraced the motion concerning the ſettling of Mr. Gataker there, and wrote a Letter to the Biſhop for the removal of all obſtructions, which lay in the way, or might hinder the acceptance of the Preſentation of Mr. Gataker, which ſigned with the hands of all the three brethren, who had a right in that Advocation, was tendered on his behalf. The report of his remove was no welcome news to many of that Society [of Lincoln's-Inn], who fain would retain him; ſome whereof offered an enlargement of his maintenance for an argument to keep him, and others repreſented the conſiſtence of both employments by the help of an aſſiſtant. But he that made not his Miniſtry ἀφορμὴν τοῦ βίου, a mere trade of his living here, (as Gregory Nazianzen complained as ſome did in his time, and too many in our times do,) nor would multiply burthens, when he deemed himſelf unfit for the leaſt, would not be wrought to a new reſolution (13).

(12) Pag. 44-48. edit. London 1654, in 4to.

(13) Narrative, pag. 48.

[K] In 1616, and ſome of the following years, he held a correſpondence by Letters with Dr. James Uſher, afterwards Archbiſhop of Armagh.] We have ſeveral Letters of his to that great Man publiſhed by Dr. Richard Parr in the Collection of three hundred Letters ſubjoined to his Life of that Prelate (14). The firſt Letter of Mr. Gataker is dated at Rotherhith March 18th 1616, in which (15) he informs Dr. Uſher, that he had in his hands a manuſcript, containing, among others, certain Treatiſes, which he could not then learn to have been printed, viz. Gulielmus de Sancto Amore de periculis noviſſimorum temporum; as alſo divers things of Robert Groſthead, ſometime Biſhop of Lincoln, viz. An Oration delivered in writing to the Pope at Lyons, (whereof he found a piece recorded in Catalogus Teſtium;) Excerpta quædam ex ejuſdem Epiſtolis; Tractatus de oculo morali; de Modo confitendi; & Sermones quidam. "Some "of theſe," ſays he, peradventure, if they be not abroad already, might not be unworthy to ſee the "light; nor ſhould I be unwilling, if they ſhould be "ſo eſteemed, to bend my poor and weak endeavours "that way. But of that Oration to the Pope, certain "lines, not many, are pared away in my copy, tho' "ſo as the ſenſe of them may be gueſſed and gathered "from the context; and in the other Treatiſes there "are many faults, that cannot eaſily or poſſibly, ſome "of them, without help of other copies, be amended. "My deſire is to underſtand from you, whether at "your being here in England (for I wot well how "careful you were to make inquiry after ſuch monu-"ments,) you lighted upon any of theſe, and where, "or in whoſe hands they were. There are beſides in "this manuſcript a Commentary on Auguſtin de Ci-"vitate Dei, and a Poſtil on Eccleſiaſtes, with a Trea-"tiſe de Modo prædicandi; but theſe two imperfect of "nameleſs Authors; beſides Guilielm. Pariſ. de Præ-"bendis, & Malachiæ Minorith de Veneno ſpirituali; "which two laſt I underſtand to have been publiſhed." In another Letter to Dr. Uſher dated at Rotherhith June 24th 1617 he writes thus (16). "I eſteem my "ſelf much beholden unto you, as for your former "love, ſo for this your late kindneſs in vouchſafing "me ſo large a Letter, with ſo full inſtructions con-"cerning this buſineſs, that I was bold to break unto "you, tho' the ſame, as by your information it ap-"peareth, were wholly unneceſſary. True it is, that "tho' not fully purpoſed to do ought therein my ſelf, "willing rather to have offered mine endeavours and "furtherance to ſome others, I ſuppoſed that thoſe "two Treatiſes, viz. that Oration of the Biſhop's, and "that of Wilhelm of S. Amore might not be unworthy "the publiſhing, had the one been perfect, and the "other not yet publiſhed, (for as for that of Pariſien-"ſis de Præbendis, I had heard to be already abroad, "and Geſner in his Bibliotheca hath Tractatus 2. Ar-"gentin. impreſſ. 1507. de collatione & pluralitate Ec-"cleſ. beneficiorum, which may ſeem the ſame, one "of them, with this; as it is ſaid to be gemmâ pre-"cioſior in that manuſcript you ſpeak of, ſo to be auro "pret. in mine. But I perceive now by your inſtruc-"tions, that the one is out already, and the other per-"fect and fit for the preſs, in the hands of one better "furniſhed and fitter for the performance of ſuch a "work than my ſelf, whom I would therefore incite "to ſend what he hath perfect abroad, than by his "perfect copy having pieced out mine imperfect one, "to take his labours out of his hand. I have heard "ſince I wrote to you by Mr. Bill, that Sir Henry Sa-"vill is about to publiſh Biſhop Groſthead's Epiſtles out "of a manuſcript remaining in Merton-College Li-"brary. That Treatiſe de Oculo morali I lighted "lately on in another manuſcript bound together with "Groſthead in Decalog. having this title before it, Inci-"pit Liber de Oculo morali, quem compoſuit Magiſter "Petrus de Sapiere Lemovicenſis. And I find it cited "by Petrus Reginaldeti, a Friar, in his Speculum fina-"lis retributionis under the name of Johannes de Pecha-"mo, as the Author of it. Neither ſeemeth it, tho' "written honeſtly, yea wittily and learnedly, as the "wit and learning of thoſe times was, to be of the "ſame frame and ſtrain for gravity, that the other "works of that Biſhop are; which alſo maketh me "ſuſpect thoſe Sermons, that in my manuſcript go "under his name, ſhould not be his, having lately at "idle times run over ſome of them. If I meet with "your countryman Malachy at any time, I will not "be unmindful of your requeſt. And if any good "office may be performed by me for you here, either "about the impreſſion of your learned and religious "labours (ſo eſteemed and much deſired, not of my "ſelf alone, but of many others of greater judgment than "my ſelf) or in any other employment, that my "weak ability may extend itſelf unto, I ſhall be ready "and glad upon any occaſion to do my beſt therein. I "lighted lately upon an obſcure fellow, one Hierony-"mus Dungerſheim de Ochſenfart, who in anno 1514 "publiſhed a Confutation dedicated to George, then "Duke of Saxony, of a Confeſſion of the Picards, "which whether it be the ſame with that which Gretſer "ſaith Luther ſet out with his Preface, I wot not. "The title of it is, Totius quaſi Scripturæ Apologia, "and the beginning of it, In ſummi Dei maximo no-"mine & terribili, Amen, Nos Homines in terræ orbe "quanquam ad ima ſubacti, &c. And tho' it be not "entirely inſerted by him in his anſwer, yet ſo much "is picked out of it, and ſet down in their words, "as may ſhew in divers main points their diſſent from "them, and conſent with us. But it is not likely, "that this Author, though obſcure and not worthy "the light, had eſcaped your curious eye. Geſner "ſeemeth miſtaken in him, when he ſaith, Hierony-"mus Dungerſheim ſcripſit Apologiam ſacræ Scripturæ "Boemorum; for he wrote not it, but againſt it." Another Letter of Mr. Gataker's is dated at Rotherhith Sept. 29th 1621 (17).

(14) Printed at London 1686 in fol.

(15) Collection of Letters, pag. 37.

(16) Ibid. pag. 56.

(17) Ibid. pag. 76.

[L] In 1619 he publiſhed his Diſcourſe of the Nature and Uſe of Lots.] It is intitled, Of the Nature and Uſe of Lots; a Treatiſe Hiſtoricall and Theologicall; written by Thomas Gataker B. of D. ſometime Preacher tour through the Low-Countries [M]. In 1624 he publiſhed at London in 4to a book intitled, Tranſubſtantiation declared by the Confeſſion of Popiſh Writers to have no neceſſary Foundation in God's word, and demonſtrated to be againſt Scripture, Nature, Senſe, Reaſon, &c. By Tho. Gataker, B. D. He wrote likewiſe a Defence of this Diſcourſe. In 1642 he was appointed one of the Aſſembly of Divines; "where his endeavours, ſays Mr. "Simeon Aſhe (l), for promoting truth and ſuppreſſing errors were ſincere and ſerious; and "his ſtudy of peace with modeſty was ſo remarkable, that when his reaſons delivered "concerning Chriſt's obedience in order to our juſtification (wherein he differed from his "brethren) could not obtain aſſent from the major part, which determined the queſtion "contrary to his ſenſe, his own love of unity impoſed upon him ſilence, and wrought "him likewiſe unto reſolutions not to publiſh his Diſcourſes of the ſubject from Rom. "iii. 28. that he might not publikely diſcover his diſſent from the votes of that reverend "Aſſembly." He was engaged with them likewiſe in writing Annotations upon the Bible, and particularly wrote thoſe upon Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and Lamentations. During his attendance upon that Aſſembly, the Earl of Mancheſter offered him the Maſterſhip of Trinity College in Cambridge, which is the greateſt preferment of that Univerſity; but he at Lincolnes Inne, and now Paſtor of Rotherhith. London 1619 in 4to. It is dedicated to the Society of Lincoln's-Inn. In the Preface to the judicious and ingenuous Reader, he obſerves, that how backward he had ever heretofore been to publiſh ought by the Preſs, they beſt know, ſays he, who having oft preſſed me thereunto, have never hitherto therein prevailed. Now a twofold neceſſity is impoſed upon me of doing ſomewhat in this kind, partly by the importunity of divers Chriſtian friends, religious and judicious, who having either heard, being partakers of my public Miniſtry, or heard of by the report of others, or upon requeſt ſeen ſome part of this weak work, have not ceaſed to ſollicit the further publiſhing of it: as alſo partly (and more ſpecially) by the iniquity of ſome others, who being of a contrary judgment on ſome particulars therein diſputed, have been more forward than was fit by unchriſtian ſlanders and uncharitable cenſures to tax and traduce both me and it. From whoſe unjuſt and undeſerved aſperſions no way ſeemed better and readier to clear either, than by offering to open view to all, what I had before delivered in an obſcure auditory (to ſpeak of) among but few. And this thou haſt here, good Reader, for effect and ſubſtance the ſame, that was then and there delivered, inlarged only with ſuch matter of hiſtory and humanity as was not fit to peſter the pulpit, or incumber that auditory withal. He remarks then, that if any ſhall ſurmiſe, that writings in this kind may occaſion too much liberty, a thing that little needeth in this over-licentious age, he anſwers briefly: "firſt that [b] it is unequal, that for the "looſeneſs of ſome diſſolute, the conſciences of thoſe "that be godly diſpoſed ſhould be intangled and en-"ſnared: and ſecondly, that whoſoever ſhall take no "more liberty than by me is here given, ſhall be ſure "[c] to keep within the bounds of piety and ſobriety, "of equity and of charity; than which I know not "what can be more required. For no ſiniſter end, I "proteſt before God's face and in his fear, undertook "I this taſk; neither have I averred or defended ought "therein but what I am verily perſuaded to be agree-"able to God's Word. The firſt chapter treats of what a Lot is, and of Lottery in general: the ſecond of Chance or Caſualty, and of caſual Events: the third of the ſeveral ſorts or kinds of Lots: the fourth of ordinary Lots ſerious: the fifth of the Lawfulneſs of ſuch Lots; with cautions to be obſerved in the uſe of them: the ſixth of ordinary Lots luſorious, and of the lawfulneſs of them: the ſeventh contains an Anſwer to the principal objections againſt luſorious Lots: the eighth an Anſwer to the Arguments uſed againſt them leſs principal: the ninth treats of cautions to be obſerved in the uſe of them: the tenth of extraordinary or divinatory Lots: the eleventh of the Unlawfulneſs of ſuch Lots: the twelfth contains an Admonition to avoid them, with an Anſwer to ſome Arguments produced in defence of them; and the concluſion of the whole. In the ninth chapter (18) he tells us, that he was at firſt induced to deliver his judgment in theſe points the more largely, (having entered into this diſcourſe on Lots in general by purſuit of that Scripture (19), which he was then treating upon, tho' far at that time from any purpoſe to publiſh any thing of this argument) upon theſe conſiderations. Firſt, that there is a fault as well in ſtraitning as in widening of God's way, and a ſubtilty of Satan as well in the one as in the other; and "that it is not "good therefore by poſſeſſing men's minds with unne-"ceſſary ſcruples either to diſcourage thoſe, that be "coming on to ſome love and liking of the good "ways of God; or to caſt thoſe, that are alrea-"dy come on, into ſnares of men's knitting, tying "them in ſtricter and ſtraiter bonds than God him-"ſelf hath done, and making more things unlawful "than the Word of God hath made. Yea that it is "in truth a ſpice and a branch of ſuperſtition, as well "for a man to ſuſpect that thoſe things diſpleaſe God, "which indeed do not, as for a man to ſuppoſe, that "the creature can do that, which indeed it cannot "do." Secondly, that many perſons truly fearing God, and ſincerely religious, have uſed, and do commonly uſe luſorious lots or games; and that many well affected are and have been conſtrained in regard of ſcruple in this kind to ſtrain themſelves to ſome inconveniences by the refuſal of them, when by thoſe whom they have had dependance upon or familiarity withall, they have been urged occaſionally thereto. Thirdly, that the arguments and grounds, whereupon theſe games are condemned, have made many ſtagger in the neceſſary uſe of ſerious civil lots, which by occaſion of bargains bought in common between them and others they are oft inforced to uſe, but have doubted whether they might lawfully give conſent unto or not. Fourthly, "that great offence and ſcandal is taken by "divers of contrary judgment againſt thoſe, that uſe "theſe games, though never ſo ſoberly and ſeaſona-"bly, as they ſuppoſe, on good ground; a means oft "of much heart-burning and of breach of Chriſtian "affection, yea of peremptory, uncharitable, and un-"chriſtian cenſuring either other." Conſidering thereſore, ſays Mr. Gataker, that theſe games can hardly be wholly removed, being ſo common, ſo general, ſo uſual with the moſt every where, I ſuppoſed it would not be unfit to aſſay, if by diſcovery of the ground of them, ſuch ſcandal and offence might be ſtayed, and Chriſtian concord and amity in part procured and maintained between ſuch, as were before diverſly minded in this matter; ſo many of them at leaſt as might hear and apprehend the force and weight of the former arguments, and be brought to ſee the invalidity and inſufficiency of their own grounds againſt them. The ſecond Edition of this Treatiſe, reviſed, corrected, and enlarged, was printed in 1627. He publiſhed likewiſe in vindication of it, A juſt Defence of certain paſſages in a former Treatiſe concerning the Nature and Uſe of Lots, againſt ſuch exceptions and oppoſitions as have been made thereunto by Mr. J. B (†). Wherein the inſufficiencie of his Anſwers given to the Arguments brought in defence of a Luſorious Lot is manifeſted; the imbecillitie of his arguments produced againſt the ſame further diſcovered; and the point itſelf in controverſie more fully cleared. By Thomas Gataker, B. of Divinity, and Author of the former Treatiſe. London 1623 in 4to. To this piece is prefixed a Letter from Dr. Daniel Featly, dated at Croyden Sept. 2d 1623, and addreſſed to his loving and much reſpected Friend Mr. Tho. Gataker. Our Author publiſhed likewiſe, Thomæ Gatakeri Londinatis Antitheſis, partim Gulielmi Ameſii, partim Giſberti Voetii de ſorte Theſibus repoſita. London 1637 in 4to.

(l) Narrative, pag. 52.

(†) J. Balmford.

[b] See Gerſon. in regul. mor. & Nider in conſolat. timor. conſcient. Part. 3. c. 20. ad cap. 9. §. 10.

(c) Read the whole 9th chapter.

(18) §. 10. pag. 264, & ſeqq.

(19) Jonah, c. i.

(m) Ibid. pag. 52.

he refuſed it, his health now greatly declining (m); though in the midſt of his indiſpoſitions he ſtill proſecuted his ſtudies, for while he was confined to his chamber he drew up his Diſſertation De Nomine Tetragrammato [N], printed at London 1645 in 8vo, and his Diſcourſe De Diphthongis ſive Bivocalibus [O], London 1646 in 8vo. After a conſiderable time he recovered ſo much ſtrength as to go to Church, and ventured again into the pulpit, where he ſpent himſelf ſo far, that he ſtrained a vein in his lungs, for which, being then about ſeventy three years old, he ſuffered an emiſſion of blood, by which and other means he eſcaped that danger. But when he had recruited his health he reſumed his preaching, till a relapſe into that ſpitting of blood (for which he again permitted a vein to be opened for revulſion) laid him under a neceſſity of forbearing the pulpit; though he never gave over the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, nor his uſual ſhort Diſ-

(n) Ibid. pag. 53.

courſes at funerals ſuitable to the occaſion (n). The chief part of his time was now ſpent in ſtudy, and in compoſing ſeveral learned works [P]. He was firſt ſeized by a fainting fit

[M] The year following he took a tour through the Low-Countries.] He was accompanied with his friends Capt. Joſua Downing and Mr. Roger Hughs, and a nephew of his, who was a young Student. His mother, who was then alive, had ſome fears, leſt he being a known adverſary to the Popiſh cauſe, ſhould be expoſed to danger; but within a month (20) they returned ſafe, having viewed the moſt conſiderable places in the Low-Countries. "In this travel he gave better "ſatisfaction to the Engliſh Church at Middleburgh, "where he gave way to the importunity of friends, de- "ſiring to hear him as well as glad to ſee him, than "he did to the Engliſh Papiſts in Flanders, with whom "he had divers debates, wherein he drove ſome to a "confuſion, whom he could not gain to a conver- "ſion (21)."

(20) They ſet out July 13, and returned Auguſt 14.

(21) Narrative, pag. 51.

[N] His Diſſertation de Nomine Tetragrammato.] It was printed at London 1645 in 8vo under the following title: De Nomine Tetragrammato Diſſertatio, quâ vocis Jehovah apud noſtros receptæ uſus defenditur, & a quorundam cavillationibus iniquis pariter atque inanibus vindicatur. There was another Edition of it in 1652, and it was reprinted among his Opera Critica at Utrecht 1698 in fol. and with ſeveral other Diſſertations by different Authors upon the ſame ſubject publiſh'd at Utrecht 1707 in 8vo by Hadrian Reland under the following title, Decas Exercitationum Philologicarum de verâ pronunciatione nominis Jehovah, quarum quinque priores Joan. Druſii, Sixtini Amamæ, Lud. Capelli, Joh. Buxtorfii, & Jac. Altingii lectionem nominis Jehovah impugnant, poſteriores quinque Nic. Fulleri, Tho. Gatakeri ſingulæ, & ternæ Joh. Leuſden tuentur.

[O] His Diſcourſe De Diphthongis, ſive Bivocalibus.] It was printed at London 1646 in 8vo under the following title: De Diphthongis ſive Bivocalibus Diſſertatio Philologica, in qua Literarum quarundam ſonus germanus, natura genuina, figura nova, & ſcriptura vetus veraque inveſtigatur. It is reprinted among his Opera critica at Utrecht 1698 in fol. In this Diſſertation our Author endeavours to ſhew, that there are no diphthongs, and that two vowels can never unite in ſuch a manner as to form one ſyllable.

[P] In compoſing ſeveral learned Works.] We ſhall here give an account of his Writings, which are not already mentioned. I. Several Sermons printed at firſt in 4to, and afterwards collected into one volume in fol. the titles of which are, David's Inſtructor; The Chriſtian man's Care; The ſpiritual Watch; The Gain of Godlineſs, with Self-Sufficiency; The juſt man's Joy, with ſigns of ſincerity; Jacob's Thankfulneſs; David's Remembrances; Noah's Obedience; An Anniverſary Memorial of England's Delivery in 1588; Sorrow for Sion; God's Parley with Princes, with an Appeal from them to him; Eleazer's Prayer, a Marriage Sermon; A good Wife God's Gift; A Wife indeed; Marriage Duties; Death's Advantage; The Benefit of a good name, and a good end; Abraham's Deceaſe, delivered at the Funeral of Mr. Richard Stock, late Paſtor of All-Hallows Bread-Street, dedicated to Sir Henry Yelverton Knt.; Jeroboam's Son's Deceaſe; Chriſtian Conſtancy crowned by Chriſt. Beſides theſe we have three other Diſcourſes in 4to intitled, The Deceaſe of Lazarus; St. Stephen's laſt Will and Teſtament; God's Eye on Iſrael. II. A ſhort Catechiſm, London 1624 in 4to. III. A Defence of Mr. Bradſhaw againſt J. Canne, 4to. IV. Franciſci Gomari Diſputationis Elenctice de Juſtificationis materiâ & formâ Elenchus, 1640, in 8to. V. Animadverſiones in J. Piſcatoris & L. Lucii ſcripta adverſaria de cauſa meritoria Juſtificationis, cum reſponſione ad L. Lucii vindicias, 1641 in 12mo. VI. Mr. Anthony Wotton's Defence, 1641 in 8vo. VII. A true Relation of paſſages between Mr. Wotton and Mr. Walker, 1642 in 4to. VIII. An Anſwer to Mr. G. Walker's Vindication, 1642 in 4to. IX. A miſtake, or miſconſtruction removed. (Whereby little difference is pretended to have been acknowledged between the Antinomians and us.) And Free Grace, as it is held forth in God's Word, as well by the Prophets in the Old Teſtament, as by the Apoſtles and Chriſt himſelf in the New, ſhewed to be other than is by the Antinomian party in theſe times maintained. In way of anſwer to ſome paſſages in a Treatiſe of Mr. John Saltmarſh concerning that ſubject. By Thomas Gataker, B. of Divinity, and Paſtor of Rotherhith. London 1646 in 4to. This is written in anſwer to Mr. Saltmarſh's Free Grace; or the Flowings of Chriſt's Blood freely to ſinners, being an experiment of Jeſus Chriſt upon one, who hath been in the bondage of a troubled ſpirit at times for twelve years till now &c. London 1645 in 12mo. Mr. Gataker in his Tract obſerves (22), that "it ſeems a thing much to be fear- (22) Pag. 42.
"ed, that this courſe (which, ſays he, I ſee ſome affect,
"and many people are much taken with) of extract-
"ing Divinity in a kind of chymical way into quaint
"and curious, but groundleſs and uſeleſs ſpeculations,
"and (as I may well ſay of them) even chimerical
"conceits, will, if it hold on, as much corrupt the "ſimplicity of the Goſpel, and the doctrine of Faith,
"as ever the quirks and quillets of the old Schoolmen
"did." X. Shadows without Subſtance, in the pretended new Lights, London 1646 in 4to, in anſwer to Mr. Saltmarſh's Shadows flying away, London 1646 in 4to. XI. Myſterious Clouds and Miſts &c. London 1648 in 8vo, in anſwer to Mr. J. Simpſon. XII. Thomæ Gatakeri Londinatis de Novi Teſtamenti Stylo Diſſertatio: qua Viri doctiſſimi Sebaſtiani Pfochenii de Linguæ Græcæ Novi Teſtamenti Puritate, in qua Hebraiſmis, quæ vulgo finguntur, quam plurimis larva detrahi dicitur, Diatribe ad examen revocatur; Scriptorumque qua ſacrorum qua profanorum, loca aliquammulta obiter explicantur atque illuſtrantur. Cum Indicibus neceſſariis, London 1648 in 4to. It is reprinted among his Opera Critica at Utrecht 1698 in fol. In the Preface he obſerves, that this Diſſertation was with two other Tracts the fruits of his vacant hours occaſioned by his indiſpoſition; and that he deſigned to have ſubjoined it to the Six Books of his Cinnus, which he had then in his hands; but which, when he had written a conſiderable part of that Work, he had been obliged to lay aſide on account of his attendance for two years on the Aſſembly of Divines, in order to conſult concerning the Settlement of the Church. And afterwards being detained by ſickneſs from any public employment, when he reſumed that Work, he thought proper to publiſh this Diſſertation firſt, to try the judgment of the learned World. Pfochenius in his Diatribe printed at Amſterdam 1629 in 8vo had undertaken to ſhew that the ſtyle of the Greek Teſtament is entirely agreeable to that of the beſt Writers in that Language; which aſſertion Mr. Gataker endeavours to refute in his Diſſertation. Pfochenius (23) (23) Sect. 12.
had affirmed, that the Greek, Latin, German, Illyrian, &c. tongues were cardinal or original Languages; but our Author declares (24), that it is uncertain what (24) Cap. 1.
Languages were original, but that the Latin is un- pag. 2. doubtedly not ſo, ſince it contains many words of the Sabine and Oſcan tongues, and for the greateſt part owes fit on Friday night July the 7th 1654, and died on the 27th of that month in the eighteenth year of his age. He was interred Auguſt the 1ſt at his own Church; and his Funeral Sermon was preached by Mr. Simeon Aſhe, and printed at London 1655 in 4to; owes its origin to the Greek, eſpecially to the Æolic Dialect; for which purpoſe he cites Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, Antiq. Roman. L. 1. Euſtathius upon Homer's Odiſſey L. 1. Quintilian Inſtitut. L. 1. c. 5. & 6. Varro de Ling. Latin. L. 4 & 9. Verrius; Suidas in voce Νάϝω; Julius Scaliger de Plant. L. 1. Joſeph Scaliger in Feſtum; Dan. Heinſius de Satyr. Horat. Hugo Grotius de Satisfact. Chriſti c. 8. Jo. Meurſius in Mantiſſa ad Luxum Romanum c. 12. Voſſius in Præfat. ad Lib. de Vitiis Sermonis: Laur. Ramirez Pentecontarch. c. 6. Conrad. Geſner in Mithridate; and Jerom Megiſerus in Præfat. Polyglott. To prove this, he obſerves (25), that if we take any Latin Writer, we ſhall ſcarce find a line in him, in which there are not ſeveral words, which evidently diſcover a Greek original. He inſtances in the firſt five Verſes of Virgil's firſt Eclogue. We ſhall give the two firſt Verſes with Mr. Gataker's obſervations.

(25) Pag. 3, 4, 5.

Tityre, tu patulæ recubans ſub tegmine fagi
Sylveſtrem tenui muſam meditaris Avena.

He ſays nothing of Tityrus, becauſe it is a proper name. "Tu eſt Doricum τὺ. Patulus, a pateo, πετάω. Recubo, "cubo, κύπτω. Ὑπὸ ſub, ut ὑπὲρ ſuper. Στέγω tego, "& inde Tegmen. Φᾶγος, Dorice φᾶγος, fagus. Ὕλη, "ſylva, ſylveſtris. Τείνω tendo, extendo, tenuis. Μῶσα, "muſa. Μελετῶ meditor, ut ſedeo, ſella. Servius; "nam μελέτη meditatio,

"Μελέτη τὸ πᾶν, Periandri eſt Corinthii,
"Meditationem eſſe qui totum putat.
Auſon. Lud. 7. Sapient.

"Et rurſus:

"Μελέτη τὸ πᾶν, qui dixi, & dictum probo,
"Meditationem ineſſe totum quod geras.

"Αυος, ſiccus, aridus. Itaque Homero Odyſſ. 6. tria "ilia ξύλων lignorum epitheta κάγκανα, ἄυα, ταυτὸν ἐν "τῷ παραλλήλῳ δηλῶν, idem plane pollere monet Eu"ſtathius. Inde Heraclito ἄυη ψυχὴ anima ſicca & "ſobria; de qua alibi dicemus. Ab ἄυος ἄυω verbum, & ἀυαίνω, exicco, arefacio. Solon. Eleg. 9;

"Ἀυαίνει δ' ἄτης ἄνθεα φυόμενα.
"At noxæ exiccat germina enaſcentia.

"Neque poſſum aſſentiri Lexicographorum principi, "qui citra codicum fidem & matricis ipſius affectum, "ἄυω & ἀυαίνω cum ſpiritu aſpero ſcribendum cenſet, "eo quod ἀφάυω & ἀφαυαίνω in compoſitis habeantur. "Siquidem uſus in nonnullis obtinuit, ut compoſita "ſpiritum mutent, quod in ἀϊτήλιος, ἀπηλιώτης, aliiſ"que patet; potiuſque videtur, ut primigenii proles, "quod ut compoſiti ſimplex, ſpiritum ſequatur. Ab "ἀυαίνω itaque ἀυαλεὸς ſiccus, ἀυαλέη, & λ in ν rede"unte, ἀυανέα; unde, ab ariditate potius, quam, ut "Grammaticum vulgus, ab aviditate, ſic dicta avena, "avena inquam, ut cicuta, ambitûs latioris vox, nec "ad ſpeciem ſingularem reſtricta." In the XLIVth Chapter Mr. Gataker gives us a recapitulation of the whole diſpute between him and Pfochenius, and obſerves, that the true ſtate of the queſtion is, Whether the ſtyle of the New Teſtament in Greek is every where the ſame with that uſed by the antient Writers of thoſe times, when the Language was in its greateſt purity? Or, Whether it is not ſuch as frequently admits of Hebraiſms and Syriaſms? Pfochenius affirms the former, and denies the latter; and in order to maintain his point, produces about an hundred places, in which he aſſerts, that the phraſes and modes of expreſſion, which are accounted Hebraiſms or Syriaſms, are to be found among thoſe antient Writers. But Mr. Gataker, in anſwer to this, obſerves, I. That with regard to ſome of thoſe expreſſions, which are propoſed as Hebraiſms, it is not certain from Pfochenius, that any Author had ever repreſented them as ſuch, ſince he names none; and it is by no means probable with relation to ſome of thoſe phraſes; nor, if any Writer ſhould ſay, This expreſſes that Hebrew manner of ſpeaking, or, This is taken from that of the Hebrews, does he therefore neceſſarily affirm it to be an Hebraiſm, any more than if a perſon ſhould ſay, This expreſſion of Virgil anſwers to that of Homer, or, Horace borrowed this from Callimachus, would he therefore aſſert that Virgil or Horace adapted themſelves to the Greek Idiom in thoſe places. II. That there are not a few expreſſions, which Pfochenius does not prove to have been in uſe among the antients; ſince he either cites Writers only of the lower age, or miſtakes the ſenſe of thoſe antient ones, whom he quotes, and often gives them an oppoſite meaning to the true one. III. That Pfochenius endeavours to prove ſeveral expreſſions to have been uſed by the Antients merely from the writings of the Poets, eſpecially the Tragic Writers; whereas the Idioms of Languages cannot juſtly be fixed from the expreſſions of Poets, eſpecially Tragic Authors; for otherwiſe many paſſages in Catullus, Horace, Silius, and Statius, would not be accounted Helleniſms, when they really are ſo. If theſe paſſages be deducted from Pfochenius's hundred, they will make a conſiderable abatement of the number. IV. That with reſpect to ſome expreſſions, which are ſometimes found among the Antient Greek Writers, but are acknowledged to be very common with the Hebrews, why may not they be juſtly ſuppoſed to have been derived from the Hebrew manner of ſpeaking into other Languages? Pfochenius indeed (26) affirms that "it is not at all probable, that "Plato, Euripides, Lucian, &c. who were greatly "averſe to the Jews and their manners and cuſtoms, "would abandon the elegance and propriety of their "own language, and imitate the Hebrews in their "ſtyle." But Mr. Gataker thinks that there is no ſtrength in this reaſoning; ſince we may call upon Pfochenius to ſhew, whence it appears that Plato and Euripides (to omit Lucian, an Atheiſt, who ridicules all Religion) were averſe to the Jews and their manners and cuſtoms. With reſpect to Plato, the contrary is very evident from the teſtimony of not a few, and thoſe conſiderable Writers. Beſides, every perſon, who is converſant in the Books of the old Pagans, will ſee that they have borrowed many things from the Jewiſh Writings, Laws, Rites, and Inſtitutions. It is very abſurd therefore to ſuppoſe, that they could not, or would not imitate any of their modes of ſpeaking, when they ſtudiouſly followed their Cuſtoms and Inſtitutions in a variety of reſpects. But ſuppoſing, in order to gratify Pfochenius, that all the Greeks had a prodigious averſion to the Jews, it was never heard, that men of learning, and deſirous of knowledge, ever conceived ſo great an hatred to any nation, as not to ſearch into the Writings and Monuments of it, and extract thence whatever they found for their own purpoſe. But not to inſiſt upon theſe points, we may aſk, whether the Greeks were always averſe to the Phœnicians, and Syrians, and other nations bordering upon the Jews, as they are repreſented by Pfochenius to have been to the Jews? But by means of thoſe nations, though the Greeks had had no commerce with the Jews, ſeveral modes of ſpeaking might have been derived from the latter to the former; ſince it is well known to thoſe, who are converſant in the Oriental Tongues, that the Languages of the nations abovementioned are merely deſcended from the antient Hebrew. What Pfochenius mentions of the abſurdity of ſuppoſing the Greeks to abandon the elegance and propriety of their own language, and imitate the Hebrew ſtyle, is of no weight; ſince it does not follow, that thoſe people muſt violate the elegance of their mother-tongue, who admit into it modes of expreſſion not common to it before; this being uſual among all nations in all ages. But granting to Pfochenius, that of all the expreſſions, which he cites, there is not one peculiar to the Hebrews, or which he has not ſhewn to be familiar to the antient Greek Writers; yet it will not follow from hence, that the ſtyle of the New Teſtament is every where the ſame with that of the Antients, or free intirely from Hebraiſms or Syriaſms. For if a perſon ſhould aſſert, that Herodotus did not

(26) Sect. 131.

4to; to which are ſubjoined ſeveral Poems in Engliſh and Latin to his memory, by William Dillingham, B. D. James Duport, Fellow of Trinity-College, Tho. Dugard, M. A. J. Stillingfleete, W. Twyne, Will. Dugard, and others. He would never ſuffer his picture to be taken. He was of a middle ſtature, a thin body, a lively countenance, and freſh complexion; of a temperate diet, a free and chearful converſation, addicted to ſtudy, but not ſecluding himſelf from uſeful company; of a quick apprehenſion, ſharp reaſon, ſolid judgment (o), and ſo extraordinary a memory, that though he uſed no common-place book, yet he had in readineſs whatever he had read, as his prodigious number of quotations ſhew (p). His piety and charity were very exemplary, and his modeſty ſo great, that "he declined not only large means in the country, but alſo Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, and Court-Preferments, and ſtudiouſly waved the counſel of ſome "that had given notice of him to Prince Henry, and had it in deſign to make way for "his being admitted Chaplain to his Highneſs (q)." His houſe was a private ſeminary for divers young Gentlemen of this Nation; and many foreigners reſorted to him and lodged at his houſe, in order to receive from him advice in their ſtudies (r). His extenſive learning was admired by the great men abroad, as Salmaſius and others, with whom he held a correſpondence. Axenius (s) ſtiles him a man of infinite reading and exact judgment;

(o) Ibid. pag. 61, 62.

(p) Ibid. pag. 55.

(q) Ibid. pag. 56, 57.

(r) Ibid. pag. 54.

(s) Epiſt. ad Gœdium, pag. 112. apud J. Hallervord, Bibliotheca Curieſ. pag. 338.

write in the Ionic Dialect, nor Theocritus in the Doric, and to prove this, ſhould produce an hundred or two hundred words from the Writings of both, which are of the common Dialect; would this be admitted as a ſolid argument, when ſix hundred or more words might be urged on the contrary ſide, which are remote from the common Dialect, and intirely Ionic or Doric. Mr. Gataker concludes with obſerving, that notwithſtanding all that Pfochenius has urged, he does not doubt, but that near ſix hundred phraſes might be produced from the New Teſtament, and a much greater number from the Greek Verſion of the Old Teſtament, (the purity of which Pfochenius (27) ſeems tacitly to maintain), in which there are plain characters of the Hebrew or Syriac tongues, and not the leaſt reſemblance of the antient Greek tongue, as far as has been hitherto diſcovered by men of the greateſt learning and diligence. Et certe omnibus in univerſum rejectis ac ſepoſitis iſtis, quæ in Diatribâ hac a te ſunt diſceptata, nihil ambigo, quin ſexcenta ferè ex Novo Teſtamento, ex Veteris autem Interpretatione Græcâ, (cujus puritatem Pfochenius Sect. 157 etſi apertè nolit cum illo parem præſtare, tacitè tamen pariter aſſertum it) ſumma etiam longè amplior poſſit depromi, in quibus ſermonis Hebræi aut Syri characteres ſatis clari, Græci priſci (quantum ex monumentis reliquis poteſt erui, à viris ſaltem doctiſſimis ſimul ac diligentiſſimis, qui curioſiſſimè illa, in forulos quoſque anguloſque induendo ruſpati ſunt, eſt hactenus deprehenſum) nec vola, nec veſtigium ullum comparet. Mr. Gataker has quoted at the end of his Book two eminent Writers, who are of his opinion. The former is Salmaſius, whoſe words are, Evangelium, ut multos Hebraiſmos habet, ita etiam non pauca loquendi genera exhibet merè Latina (28). The latter is Daniel Heinſius, who writes thus (29): Quemadmodum longè ab eorum abeſſe nos ſententiâ fatemur, qui eandem eſſe Linguam, qua conceptum Fœdus Novum eſt, cum eâ quâ utuntur Græci Scriptores, exiſtimant; cum perpetuis altera abundet Hebraiſmis, altera recepto Græcis more loquatur; ita non negarim συνιμπλώσεις eſſe quaſdam, etiam earum, quæ diverſæ ſunt Linguarum, quæ ſubinde tamen fallunt. XIII. Thomæ Gatakeri Londinatis Cinnus, ſive Adverſaria Miſcellanea; Animadverſionum variarum Libris ſex comprehenſa: quorum primores duo nunc primitùs prodeunt, reliquis deinceps (Deo favente) ſeorſim inſecuturis, London 1651 in 4to. This Book contains corrections and obſervations upon ſeveral paſſages of the Old Teſtament, and the Greek Fathers, and occaſionally upon ſome of the profane Writers. It is reprinted among his Opera Critica at Utrecht 1698 in folio. In the Preface he tells us that he was prevented from publiſhing this Work ſooner by his being engaged by public authority in writing his Annotations on Iſaiah and Jeremiah, publiſhed with the Annotations on the Bible by the Aſſembly of Divines. XIV. De Baptiſmatis infantilis vi & efficaciâ Diſceptatio, privatim habita inter V. C. Dom. Samuelem Wardum, Theologiæ ſacræ Doctorem, & in Academiâ Cantabrigienſi Profeſſorem, & Thomam Gatakerum. London 1651 in 8vo. It is reprinted with his Opera Critica. XV. Marci Antonini Imperatoris de Rebus ſuis, ſive de iis quæ ad ſe pertinere cenſebat, Libri XII, cum Verſione Latinâ & Commentariis Gatakeri. Cambridge 1652 in 8vo. It is reprinted among his Opera Critica. His Commentary is likewiſe publiſhed by Dr. George Stanhope, afterwards Dean of Canterbury, in his Edition of Marcus Antoninus at London 1697 in 4to. This Commentary is an admirable one, and is an excellent Repertory of the morality of the Stoics, which Mr. Gataker collected with prodigious labour out of the Antients, and compared with that of the other Pagan Philoſophers. XVI. Vindicatio Diſſertationis de Nomine Tetragrammato, contra Ludovicum Cappellum. London 1652 in 8vo. XVII. Structuræ in Barth. Wegelini Sangallenſis de Obedientiâ Chriſti Diſputationem Theologicam. London 1653 in 8vo. XVIII. A Vindication of the Annotations on Jerem. Chap. xv. verſ. 2. againſt the ſcurrillous aſperſions of that grand Impoſtor Mr. William Lillie; as alſo againſt the various Expoſitions of two of his Advocates, Mr. John Swan, and another by him cited, but not named. Together with the Annotations themſelves; wherein the pretended Grounds of Judiciary Aſtrologie and the Scripture-Proofes produced for it are diſcuſſed and refuted. By the Author of the Annotations. London 1653 in 4to. Mr. Gataker in his Annotations upon that paſſage of Jeremiah had reflected upon Mr. William Lilly, the Aſtrologer, repeating verbatim, ſays Mr. Lilly (30), ten or twelve times an Epiſtle of mine in one of my former Anglicus. The ſubſtance of my Epiſtle was, that I did conceive the good Angels of God did firſt reveal Aſtrology unto mankind, &c. But he in his Annotations calls me blind Buzzard, &c. Upon this Mr. Lilly wrote againſt our Author, who publiſhed in defence of himſelf the piece abovementioned; in which he informs us *, that being acquainted with Mr. Henry Brigges, while he was Mathematical Lecturer in St. John's College Cambridge, and afterwards at Greſham College, he deſired him to declare his judgment concerning Judicial Aſtrology; upon which Mr. Brigges returned a very round and ready anſwer, that he conceived it to be a mere Syſtem of groundleſs conceits. To this piece Mr. Lilly replying, Mr. Gataker wrote, XIX. A Diſcourſe Apologetical. London 1654 in 4to. XX. Structuræ ad Epiſtolam Joannis Davenantii de Baptiſmo Infantum. London 1654 in 8vo. XXI. Adverſaria Miſcellanea Poſthuma, in quibus ſacræ Scripturæ primò, deinde aliorum Scriptorum locis multis Lux affunditur. London 1659 in folio. His ſon Charles Gataker publiſhed this Work, which is reprinted among his Opera Critica. XXII. An Antidote againſt Errour concerning Juſtification. Or the true Notion of Juſtification and of Juſtifying Faith, cleared by the Light of Scripture and ſolid Reaſon, from ſeveral Miſtakes of the Words; which Miſapprehenſions prove the ſeeds of dangerous Errours. By the late Reverend and Learned Divine Thomas Gataker of pious memory. In a Diſcourſe on Rom. iii. 28. too precious to be buried in Obſcurity. To which is added, The Way of Truth and Peace: or a Reconciliation of the Holy Apoſtles St. Paul and St. James, concerning Juſtification by Faith without Works; Rom. iii. 28: by Works, and not by Faith only, James ii. 21, 24. By Charles Gataker, Rector of Hoggeſton in the County of Bucks. London 1670 in 4to. Mr. Charles Gataker in his Preface obſerves, that this piece was the laſt of his father's undertaking.

(27) Sect. 157.

(28) De Helleniſticâ, Part. 1. ad quæſt. 1. rat. 2. pag. 140.

(29) Exercitat. Sacr. ad Rom. c. II. p. 328. Edit. Cantabrigiæ, 1640 in 4to.

(30) Mr. William Lilly's Hiſtory of his Life and Times from the year 1602 to 1681, written by himſelf, pag. 82. edit. London 1715.

* Pag. 87.

judgment ; and Colomies tells us (t), that of all the Critics of that age, who have written for the advancement of polite learning, there is none ſuperior to him in the talent of explaining Authors ; and that he was a man of extraordinary application and exactneſs ; but the ſame Writer in another place (u) obſerves, that his ſtyle is a little too affected. An original manuſcript of his containing a Latin Verſion of a Commentary upon Galen's Λογὸς προτρεπτικὸς was unfortunately loſt a few years ago in the fire which happened in the Strand in London. He was four times married [Q], and by his ſecond wife had a ſon whoſe name was Charles, of whom we ſhall give an account in the following Article.

(t) Cimel. Literar. cap. 23. pag. 49. where however he criticizes upon him in ſome paſſages.

(u) Melang. Hiſt. pag. 72.

[Q] He was four times married.] Not long before he left Lincoln's Inn he married the widow of Mr. William Cupper, "to whoſe two daughters he was "ſo providently kind in their education and diſpoſing "in marriage to two Divines of note, and continuing "ſuch a fatherly love to them and theirs, that the "world miſtook them for his own children (31)." That wife died in childbed of a ſon, who bore his father's name, and after he had ſeen the moſt remote parts of the world, returned home to his father, at whoſe houſe he died. His next wife was the daughter of the Reverend of Mr. Charles Pinner, who died in childbed of a ſon Charles, afterwards an eminent Divine. He remained for many years a widower, and then married a Gentlewoman of a conſiderable family, being ſiſter to Sir George and Sir John Farwel; by whom he had three children, whereof a ſon and daughter died before their mother, but the third, a daughter, ſurvived her father. His laſt wife was the widow of a Citizen. He lived with her twenty four years, but without iſſue by her, and ſurvived her two years within a few days (32). T

(31) Narrative, pag. 49, 50.

(32) Ibid. pag. 50, 51.

☞GATAKER (CHARLES), ſon of the preceding, was born at Rotherhith in Surrey about the year 1614 [A], and educated at St. Paul's ſchool, from whence he was ſent to Sidney College in the Univerſity of Cambridge at about ſixteen years of age, and put under the tuition of Mr. Richard Dugard, B. D. Fellow of that College, and afterwards Rector of Fulleſby or Fulletby in Lincolnſhire. After he had taken the degree of Bachelor of Arts he retired to Oxford, and was entered a Commoner of Pembroke College (a), and took the degree of Maſter of Arts June 30, 1636. About that time he became acquainted with Lucius Lord Viſcount Falkland, who having a reſpect for his ingenuity and learning made him his Chaplain, with intention to procure him preferment ; but the civil wars breaking out, in which that Nobleman loſt his life, the expectation of our Author was fruſtrated. At laſt by the favour of Charles Earl of Caernarvon he became Rector of Hoggerſton or Hoggeſton near Winſlow in Buckinghamſhire about the year 1647, and continued there till his death, which happened on the 20th of November 1680, in the ſixty ſeventh year of his age. He was interred in the Chancel of the Church of Hoggerſton. He wrote ſeveral Treatiſes [B]. He

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 669.

(b) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col.

[A] Born ... about the year 1614.] It appears from his epitaph in the Chancel of Hoggerſton Church in Bucks, that he was in the 67th year of his age, when he died November the 20th 1680.

[B] He wrote ſeveral Treatiſes.] I. At the end of his father's Antidote againſt Errour concerning Juſtification, which he publiſhed at London 1670 in 4to he ſubjoined a piece written by himſelf, intitled, The Way of Truth and Peace: or, A Reconciliation of the holy Apoſtles, St. Paul and St. James, concerning Juſtification &c. The Imprimatur is dated December the 6th 1669. It is dedicated to Charles Earl of Carenarvon. Mr. Wood tells us (1), that our Author "in "his Way of Truth ſignifies his diſlike of Harmonia "Apoſtolica, written by Mr. Bull (2), and propounds "a third way to reconcile St. Paul and St. James." But that Hiſtorian is not very accurate in this paſſage ; for Mr. Gataker in that piece itſelf makes no mention of Mr. Bull's Book ; but in the Advertiſement at the end of it has the following paſſage : "If any "induſtrious ſearcher of truth do ſo deeply concern "himſelf in obſerving the various iſſues of Religi-"ous conceptions, wherewith this age abounds, as "to take notice of the wide difference (at leaſt) be-"tween the courſe, that is here taken to ſhew the "agreement of the Holy Apoſtles, and the way, "which another and that a learned Divine hath lately "choſen and ſet out to make up the harmony ; let "that ingenuous Reader know, that this brief diſ-"courſe was prepared for the public, and indeed ſub-"mitted unto cenſure ſome months before that Book, "called Harmonia Evangelica, was expoſed to the "world. I did not therefore by a prophetic ſpirit "oppoſe a Book then unborn ; but it falls out, that I "having heard too much of the opinion, have directly "croſſed the way, in which that Writer walks. I think "not fit at preſent to enlarge my Diſcourſe with any "reflection upon thoſe Diſſertations in particular, be-"cauſe I am unwilling to ſtir, or to increaſe the "waters of ſtrife. I do alſo humbly conceive, that "I have already held forth ſo much light, as may "direct an attentive traveller to diſcover and diſcern "the right way of truth from the by-paths of errour." II. An Anſwer to five captious Queſtions propounded by a Factor for the Papacy, by parallel queſtions and poſitive Reſolutions. London 1673 in 4to. To which is added A Letter to Mr. Fr. M. ann. 1636, written by Lucius Viſcount Falkland. This Fr. M. is the ſaid Factor for the Papacy. III. The Papiſts Bait ; or their uſual Method in gaining Proſelytes anſwered. London 1674 in 4to. To which is added A Letter of the Lord Viſcount Falkland to the ſame Gentleman. IV. Examination of the Caſe of the Quakers concerning Oaths propounded by them, ann. 1673, to the Conſideration of the King and both Houſes of Parliament, &c. London 1675 in 4to. IV. Ichnographia Doctrinæ de Juſtificatione ſecundum Typum in Monte. London 1681 in 4to. Our Author wrote likewiſe ſome Animadverſions on Mr. Bull's Harmonia Apoſtolica, which Mr. Gataker, concealing his name, communicated to ſeveral Biſhops, ſtirring them up by Letter to make uſe of their authority in thundering out their Anathema's againſt the Doctrines maintained by Mr. Bull, as pernicious and heretical, and contrary to the Decrees of the Church of England, and of all other Reformed Churches (3). Theſe Animadverſions, which are commonly cited by Mr. Bull under the name of Cenſura, were communicated to him in the year 1670 by Dr. William Nicholſon, Biſhop of Glouceſter ; and in 1671 they were diſcovered to Mr. Bull to have been written by Mr. Charles Gataker, who in theſe Animadverſions, of which Mr. Nelſon has given us the ſubſtance (4), endeavours to reconcile St. Paul with St. James by the diſtinction of a twofold Juſtification, as reſpecting a twofold accuſation, according to the different conditions of the covenant of works and the covenant of grace. For he maintains, that we are accuſed before God, either as ſinners or as unbelievers ; and that we are juſtified againſt the firſt accuſation by Faith alone, laying hold on the grace and righteouſneſs of Chriſt ; and againſt the ſecond by Works, and not by Faith only, as theſe are the ſigns and evidences of our being true believers. Mr.

(1) Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 669, 670.

(2) Afterwards Biſhop of St. David's. His Harmonia was publiſhed in 1669.

(3) Life of Dr. George Bull Biſhop of St. David's. By Robert Nelſon Eſq; pag. 401. edit. London 1714 in 8vo.

(4) Ibid. pag. 140, & ſeqq.

He was always firm to the Calviniſtical principles in point of Doctrine (c).

(c) Idem, Ath. Oxon. col. 669, 670.

(5) Ibid. pag. 145.

Mr. Nelſon obſerves (5), that Mr. Gataker "appears "to have been a perſon of great violence in his tem- "per, but one well intentioned, and a very zealous "Proteſtant; and had he had but more coolneſs of "thought, and had he withal read more of the An- "tients, and fewer of the Moderns, he would, I be- "lieve, have made no inconſiderable Writer. But "he not allowing himſelf time to think ſedately, or "even to examine ſufficiently the ſenſe of an Author, "who pleaſed him not; being fired with a zeal for "what he took for truth, from the ſyſtems, which "he had greedily ſucked in, as authentic explications, "entirely loſt himſelf hereby, and expoſed the very "cauſe he undertook to defend. However in this "he is to be commended, that he was content to "have his thoughts communicated to his Superiors in "the Church, and to the Author of the Book, which "he attacked, without making them more public "by the preſs. And Biſhop Nicholſon was alſo cer- "tainly in the right not to preſs Mr. Bull to publiſh "the Anſwer which he had prepared, notwithſtanding "all the foul language and provocation, that was "given him." Mr. Bull wrote an Anſwer to theſe Animadverſions, which he intitled Examen Cenſuræ, in which (6) he reflects ſeverely on Mr. Charles Gataker for publiſhing his father's poſthumous Tract abovemen- tioned, ſince he had not thereby conſulted the reputa- tion of a parent, who by his great critical knowledge and other learning had made himſelf more conſiderable, than to deſerve that ſuch crudities ſhould be publiſhed under his name, at leaſt by a ſon. T.

(6) Reſp. ad Animadver. 7. n. 8.

☞GAY (JOHN), an excellent Engliſh Poet in the eighteenth Century, was born of an antient family in Devonſhire, and educated at the Free-School of Barnſtaple in the ſame County under the care of Mr. William Rayner, an excellent maſter, who from his education at Weſtminſter, had formed himſelf upon an imitation of the method of that ſchool. Our Author had a ſmall fortune at his diſpoſal, but far from ſufficient to ſupport him in that independent condition of life, to which the freedom of his ſpirit adapted his deſires. About the year 1712 he was made Secretary to the Ducheſs of Monmouth, and continued ſo till he went over to Hanover in the beginning of the year 1714 with the Earl of Clarendon, who was ſent thither by Queen Anne; upon whoſe death he returned to England [A], and lived in the higheſt eſteem and friendſhip with perſons of the firſt quality and genius. In 1724 his Tragedy intitled, The Captives, which he had the ho- nour of reading in manuſcript to her preſent Majeſty, then Princeſs of Wales, was acted at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. In 1726 he publiſhed his Fables, dedicated to the Duke of Cumberland. In 1727 he was offered the place of Gentleman Uſher to one of the youngeſt Princeſſes, which he thought not proper to accept of. He wrote ſeveral works of humour with great ſucceſs, particularly the Shepherd's Week, Trivia, the What d'ye call it, Fables, and the Beggars Opera [B], which was acted at the Theatre in Lincoln's-

[A] Upon whoſe death he returned to England.] Among Mr. Pope's Letters there is one dated September the 23d 1714 (1) which begins thus: "Dear Mr. "Gay, welcome to your native ſoil! welcome to "your friends! thrice welcome to me! whether re- "turned in glory, bleſt with Court-Intereſt, the love "and familiarity of the Great, and filled with agreea- "ble hopes; or melancholy with dejection, contem- "plative of the changes of fortune, and doubtful for "the future. Whether returned a triumphant Whig, "or a deſponding Tory, equally all hail! equally "beloved and welcome to me! If happy, I am to "ſhare in your elevation; if unhappy, you have "ſtill a warm corner in my heart, and a retreat at "Binfield in the worſt of times at your ſervice. If "you are a Tory, or thought ſo by any man, I know "it can proceed from nothing but your gratitude to "a few people who endeavoured to ſerve you, and "whoſe Politics were never your concern. If you "are a Whig, as I rather hope, and as I think your "principles and mine, (as Brother Poets) had ever a "biaſs to the ſide of liberty, I know you will be an "honeſt man and an inoffenſive one. Upon the whole, "I know you are incapable of being ſo much of either "party, as to be good for nothing. Therefore once "more, whatever you are, or in whatever ſtate you "are, all hail!"

(1) See Letters of Mr. Pope and ſeveral eminent Perſons from the year 1705 to 1735, pag. 313. edit. London 1735 in 12mo.

[B] The Beggars Opera.] The Author of the Notes on this line of the Dunciad, Book III. V. 326.

Gay dies unpenſion'd with a hundred Friends; obſerves, that this Opera was a piece of Satire, which hit all taſtes and degrees of men, from thoſe of the higheſt quality to the very rabble. That Verſe of Horace,

Primores populi arripuit populumque tributim, could never be ſo juſtly applied as to this. The vaſt ſucceſs of it was unprecedented, and almoſt incredible. What is related of the wonderful effects of the ancient Muſic or Tragedy hardly came up to it. Sophocles and Euripides were leſs followed and famous. It was acted in London ſixty three days, uninterrupted; and renewed the next ſeaſon with equal applauſes. It ſpread into all the great towns of England, was played in many places to the 30*th and* 40*th time, at Bath and Briſtol* 50, &c. It made its progreſs into Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, where it was performed 24 days together. It was laſtly acted in Minorca. The fame of it was not confined to the Author only; the Ladies carried about with them the favourite ſongs of it in fans; and houſes were furniſhed with it in ſcreens. The perſon, who acted Polly, till then obſcure, became all at once the favourite of the town; her pictures were ingraved and ſold in great numbers; her Life written; Books of Letters and Verſes to her publiſhed; and Pamphlets made even of her ſayings and jeſts. Furthermore it drove out of England for that ſeaſon the Italian Opera, which had carried all before it for ten years. That Idol of the Nobility and the People, which the great Critic Mr. Dennis by the labours and outcries of a whole life could not overthrow, was demoliſhed by a ſingle ſtroke of this Gentleman's pen. This remarkable period happened in the year 1728. Yet ſo great was his modeſty, that he conſtantly prefixed to all the Editions of it this Motto, Nos hæc novimus eſſe nihil. Dr. Swift, Dean of St. Patrick's, in his Intelligencer N° III. has given us a Vindication of Mr. Gay and the Beggars Opera. He obſerves (2), "that tho' an "evil taſte be very apt to prevail, both (3) here and in "London; yet there is a point, which whoever can "rightly touch, will never fail of pleaſing a very great "majority; ſo great, that the diſſikers out of dul- "neſs or affectation will be ſilent and forced to fall "in with the herd: The point I mean is what we call "Humour, which in its perfection is allowed to be "much preferable to Wit, if it be not rather the moſt "uſeful and agreeable ſpecies of it..... Now I take "the Comedy or Farce, (or whatever name the Critics "will allow it) called the Beggars Opera, to excel in "this article of Humour, and upon that merit to have "met with ſuch prodigious ſucceſs both here and in "England." The Dean afterwards remarks (4), that an opinion obtained, that in this Opera there appears to be ſome reflection upon Courtiers and Stateſmen. It is true indeed, ſays he, that Mr. Gay hath been ſomewhat

(2) Pag. 18, 19.

(3) At Dublin.

(4) Pag. 23.

Lincoln's-Inn-Fields in 1728. His Opera intitled, Polly, which was deſigned as a ſequel of the former, was prohibited by the Lord Chamberlain from being repreſented on the ſtage, when every thing was ready for the rehearſal of it [C], but was ſoon after printed at London in 4to. Beſides the works abovementioned he wrote ſeveral Poems, printed at London in two volumes in 12mo, a Comedy called The Wife of Bath, firſt acted in 1715, and afterwards reviſed and altered, and repreſented at the Theatre Royal in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields; Three Hours after Marriage, a Comedy acted at the Theatre Royal, in which he had the aſſiſtance of two of his friends; and Achilles, an Opera, acted at the Theatre in Covent Garden. He died at the Duke of Queenſberry's houſe in Burlington Gardens of a violent inflammatory fever in December 1732, and was interred in Weſtminſter Abbey, where a monument is erected to his memory by the Duke and Ducheſs of Queenſberry, with an epitaph written by Mr. Pope [D], who had the warmeſt ſingular in the courſe of his fortunes, attending the Court with a large ſtock of real merit, a modeſt and agreeable converſation, a hundred promiſes and five hundred friends, hath failed of preferment, and upon a very weighty reaſon. He lay under the ſuſpicion of having written a Libel or Lampoon againſt a great M——. It is true that great M—— was demonſtratively convinced, and publicly owned his conviction, that Mr. Gay was not the Author; but having laid under the ſuſpicion, it ſeemed very juſt, that he ſhould ſuffer the puniſhment, becauſe in this moſt reformed age the virtues of a great M—— are no more to be ſuſpected, than the chaſtity of Cæſar's wife. It muſt be allowed that the Beggars Opera is not the firſt of Mr. Gay's Works, wherein he hath been faulty with regard to Courtiers and Stateſmen. For to omit his other pieces, even in his Fables, publiſh'd within two years paſt, and dedicated to the Duke of Cumberland, for which he was promiſed a reward, he hath been thought ſomewhat too bold upon Courtiers. And although it is highly probable he meant only Courtiers of former times, yet he acted unwarily, by not conſidering that the malignity of ſome people might miſinterpret what he ſaid to the diſadvantage of preſent perſons and affairs. The Dean then tells us (5), that our Author in this piece "hath by a turn of humour entirely new placed vices "of all kinds in the ſtrongeſt and moſt odious light, "and thereby done eminent ſervice both to Religion "and Morality. This appears from the unparallel'd "ſucceſs he hath met with. All ranks, parties, and "denominations of men either crowding to ſee his O-"pera, or reading with delight in their cloſets, even "Miniſters of State, whom he is thought moſt to "have offended (next to thoſe, whom the Actors more "immediately repreſent) appearing frequently at the "Theatre, from a conſciouſneſs of their own inno-"cence, and to convince the World how unjuſt a pa-"rallel malice, envy, and diſaffection to the Govern-"ment have made. . . . . In this happy performance "of Mr. Gay's all the characters are juſt, and none "of them carried beyond nature, or hardly beyond "practice. It diſcovers the whole ſyſtem of that "Commonwealth, or that Imperium in Imperio of ini-"quity eſtabliſhed among us, by which neither our "lives nor our properties are ſecure, either in the high-"ways or in public aſſemblies, or even in our own hou-"ſes. It ſhews the miſerable lives and the conſtant fate of "thoſe abandoned Wretches; for how little they ſell "their lives and ſouls; betrayed by their whores, their "comrades, and the receivers and purchaſers of theſe "thefts and robberies. This Comedy contains like-"wiſe a Satyr, which though it doth by no means "affect the preſent age, yet might have been uſeful "in the former, and may poſſibly be ſo in ages to "come; I mean, where the Author takes occaſion of "comparing thoſe common robbers of the Public, and "their ſeveral ſtratagems of betraying, undermining, "and hanging each other, to the ſeveral arts of Po-"liticians in times of corruption. This Comedy like-"wiſe expoſeth with great juſtice that unnatural taſte "for Italian Muſic among us, which is wholly un-"ſuitable to our Northern climate and the genius of "the people, whereby we are overrun with Italian ef-"feminacy and Italian non-ſenſe. An old Gentle-"man ſaid to me many years ago, when the practice "of an unnatural vice grew ſo frequent in London, "that many were proſecuted for it; he was ſure it "would be the fore-runner of Italian Opera's and "Singers; and then we ſhould want nothing but ſtab-"bing or poiſoning to make us perfect Italians. Up-"on the whole I deliver my judgment, that nothing "but ſervile attachment to a party, affectation of ſin-"gularity, lamentable dulneſs, miſtaken zeal, or ſtu-"died hypocriſy, can have the leaſt reaſonable objec-"tion againſt this excellent moral performance of the "celebrated Mr. Gay."

(5) Pag. 24, 25, & ſeqq.

[C] His Opera, intitled, Polly . . . was prohibited by the Lord Chamberlain from being repreſented on the ſtage, when every thing was ready for the rehearſal of it.] In the Preface (6) to the Edition of this Opera, printed at London 1729 in 4to by a very large ſubſcription, he gives a particular account of the whole affair, and tells us, that on Thurſday December 12th 1728 he received this anſwer from his Grace, that it was not allowed to be acted, but commanded to be ſuppreſt. This was told me in general, ſays he, without any reaſons aſſigned, or any charge againſt me of my having given any particular offence. Since this prohibition I have been told, that I am accuſed, in general terms, of having written many diſaffected Libels and ſeditious Pamphlets. As it hath ever been my utmoſt ambition (if that word may be uſed upon this occaſion) to lead a quiet and inoffenſive life, I thought my innocence in this particular would never have required a juſtification; and as this kind of writing is, what I have ever deteſted and never practiſed, I am perſuaded ſo groundleſs a calumny can never be believed but by thoſe, who do not know me. But when general aſperſions of this ſort have been caſt upon me, I think my ſelf called upon to declare my principles, and I do with the ſtricteſt truth affirm, that I am as loyal a ſubject and as firmly attached to the preſent happy Eſtabliſhment, as any of thoſe, who have the greateſt places or penſions. I have been informed too, that in the following Play I have been charged with writing immoralities; that it is filled with ſlander and calumny againſt particular great perſons; and that Majeſty itſelf is endeavoured to be brought into ridicule and contempt. "As I knew that every one of "theſe charges was in every point abſolutely falſe "and without the leaſt grounds, at firſt I was not at "all affected by them. But when I found they were "ſtill inſiſted upon, and that particular paſſages, "which were not in the Play, were quoted and pro-"pagated to ſupport what had been ſuggeſted, I "could no longer bear to lie under theſe falſe accu-"ſations. So by printing it, I have ſubmitted and "given up all preſent views of profit, which might "accrue from the Stage, which undoubtedly will be "ſome ſatisfaction to the worthy Gentlemen, who "have treated me with ſo much candour and "humanity, and repreſented me in ſuch favoura-"ble colours. But as I am conſcious to my ſelf, that "my only intention was to laſh in general the reign-"ing and faſhionable vices, and to recommend and "ſet virtue in as amiable a light as I could; to juſtify "and vindicate my own character, I thought my ſelf "obliged to print the Opera without delay in the man-"ner I have done."

(6) Dated March 25, 1729.

[D] A Monument is erected to his memory by the Duke and Ducheſs of Queensberry, with an Epitaph by Mr. Pope.] The Epitaph by Mr. Pope is as follows:

"Of manners gentle, of affections mild;
"In wit, a man, ſimplicity a child;
"Above temptation in a low eſtate,
"And uncorrupted ev'n among the Great;
"A ſafe companion and an eaſy Friend,
"Unblam'd thro' life, lamented in thy end.

"Theſe

warmeſt friendſhip for him on account of his amiable qualifications (a).

(a) For ſeveral particulars in this Article we are obliged to two very ingenious Gentlemen, Aaron Hill Eſq; and Richard Savage Eſq; the latter of whom procured this Article to be reviſed by Alexander Pope Eſq;

" Theſe are thy honours! not that here thy buſt
" Is mix'd with Heroes, or with Kings thy Duſt;
" But that the worthy and the good ſhall ſay,
" Striking their penſive Boſoms. — Here lies Gay."

Then follows this further Inſcription:

" Here lie the Aſhes of Mr. JOHN GAY;
" The warmeſt Friend;
" The moſt benevolent man:
" Who maintain'd
" Independency
" In low circumſtances of Fortune;
" Integrity
" In the midſt of a corrupt age;
" And that equal ſerenity of mind,
" Which conſcious goodneſs alone can give,
" Thro' the whole courſe of his life.
" Favourite of the Muſes,
" He was led by them to every elegant Art;
" Refin'd in taſte,
" And fraught with Graces all his own:
" In various kinds of Poetry
" Superior to many
" Inferior to none.
" His Works continue to inſpire
" What his Example taught,
" Contempt of Folly, however adorn'd;
" Deteſtation of Vice, however dignified;
" Reverence of Virtue, however diſgrac'd.

" Charles and Catherine, Duke and Ducheſs of Queensberry, who loved this excellent perſon living, and regret him dead, have cauſed this Monument to be erected to his Memory." T

GEDICCUS (SIMON), Doctor of Divinity, and Miniſter at Magdeburg, is known to me only by the Anſwer which he publiſhed in the year 1595 to a little Book, wherein the Author undertook to prove that women do not belong to the human ſpecies, mulieres non eſſe homines [A]. This is more happily expreſſed in Latin than in French [or in Engliſh]; for it is equally ridiculous to maintain in our tongue that women are men, as it is to maintain in Latin mulieres non eſſe homines. This little book has been reprinted ſeveral times [B]; and ſome have maintained the Theſis in the title page in earneſt [C]. I do

[A] The Author undertook to prove . . . mulieres non eſſe homines.] I have elſewhere (1) ſpoken of the noiſe and ſtorms raiſed againſt poor Acidalius, who had given his Bookſeller a copy of this Diſſertation; and I have there given my Reader notice that I intended to ſpeak of that little Book in this place. I very much queſtion whether Gediccus has penetrated the true meaning of the Author. He has ſpent his time and labour in making a formal apology for the fair ſex; and conſequently he thought he was refuting a Work the principal intent whereof was to abuſe the women. Methinks this argues no great penetration. The Author of the Diſſertation does not principally aim at the women; it is but by accident, and very indirectly, that he treats them ill: his principal deſign is to ridicule the Syſtem of the Socinians, and their way of playing with the moſt expreſs texts of the Word of God concerning the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt. A Journaliſt has obſerved this long ago. Here are his words (2): " Why ſhould not all the world be permitted to " convince themſelves that the beſt arguments of the " Socinians are ſuch wretched cavils, that it has been " ſhewn that by their gloſſes one might elude all the " paſſages of Scripture which prove that women are " human creatures, I mean, of the ſame ſpecies with " men. This was the ſubject of a little Book pub- " liſhed towards the end of the laſt Century, mulieres " non eſſe homines, to which one Simon Gediccus, a Mi- " niſter in the country of Brandenburg, compoſed a " very ſerious anſwer, not being aware of the Au- " thor's deſign, which was to write a violent Satire " againſt the Socinians: for in reality, what can be " thought of to turn them into ridicule, or to mortify " them, more effectually, than to let them ſee that " the gloſſes with which they attack the conſubſtan- " tiality of the Son of God, are equally proper to " prevent our proving from Scripture that women are " human creatures?" Cochleus made uſe of the ſame invention, but to very little purpoſe, againſt Luther: he wrote ſome Books wherein, after the Lutheran method, he undertook to prove, by paſſages of Scripture, that Jeſus Chriſt is not God, that God ought to obey the Devil, and that the Bleſſed Virgin did not preſerve her virginity. Cùm Lutherani Scripturis ad ſuas nugas aptatis luderent, Cocherus (3) in actis Lutheri anno 1527 ſe librum ex Scripturis malè conſertis conſarcinaſſe teſtatur, ad probandum, quòd Chriſtus non ſit Deus; additque anno 1528 ſe item ſimili arte ac ſcopo, ſcripſiſſe de obedientia Diabolo debita à Deo, & de B. Virginis integritate violata. Unde liquere volebat, nihil eſſe adeò ſanctum, ad quod impugnandum non poſſent obtorqueri Scripturæ (4). The Author from whom I borrow theſe words, had juſt before given an extraordinary inſtance of the power of cavil: he had ſhewn that by adopting the principles of certain Critics, the Apoſtles Creed would not contain one article which might not be condemned. He complains that Petrus Aurelius had lately inveighed againſt this example of chicanery (5); but I cannot approve his complaint, after reading in Monſr. Baillet what I am going to copy. " Father Theophilus Raynaud . . . . ſhews that there " is no Book, how pious and perfect ſoever it may be, " wherein a man may not find ſomething or other to " cenſure, right or wrong, when once he takes it into " his head to pervert and find fault with every thing. " But it was not very neceſſary for him to give ſuch " ſenſible and efficacious proofs, by endeavouring to " perſuade us that he knew the art of tricking and " cavilling as well as another; when he publiſhed a " licentious and impious cenſure of the Apoſtles " Creed, wherein either he himſelf or the perſon to " whom he aſcribes it, and whom he calls a moſt ca- " tholic and moſt learned man, wreſts, and perverts, in " effect, all the words of that Creed, to ſhew that there " are none but what may be ſuſpicious, dangerous, " captious, impious, and heretical, in ſome ſenſe. " This, to ſay the truth, is a ſpecimen of what curſ- " ed cavilling may produce. But I do not well ſee " what game that moſt Catholic Author intended to " play, by making ſport in this manner of our pro- " feſſion of Faith. I do not know whether he wrote " this piece for the ſimple, and ſuch as are eaſily " ſcandalized, or for the Free-thinkers; or whether " he deſigned to do ſome ſervice to the Socinians or " Deiſts (6)." Conſult the Article POZA.

[B] This little Book has been reprinted ſeveral times.] The Edition I make uſe of is that of the Hague, 1638, in 12mo; I do not ſpecify the others. I cannot well tell whether the Work condemned by the Congregation of the Index at Rome, on the 18th of June 1651, is a Tranſlation of this. That work is intitled, Che le donne non ſiano della ſpecie de gl'huomini: Diſcorſo piacevole, tradotto da Horatio Plata, Romano (7).

[C] Some have maintained the Theſis in the title page in earneſt.] The proof of it will be ſeen in this Remark: but all the inſtances which I ſhall mention are not ſufficient to demonſtrate that the affirmative was maintained ſeriouſly. I believe, with Voſſius, that Cujacius aſſerted it only to divert himſelf (8): Eoque cum Cujacius contenderet, mulieres non eſſe homines, credo à ſeriis animum remittens (prope amittens in tali negotio dixerim) pauxillum voluit nugari, quod poſt magnum virum aliis etiam nugandi præbuit occaſionem. This

(1) Above, in the Remark [G] of the Article ACIDALIUS.

(2) Nouvelles de la R.publ. des Lettres, for July 1685, pag. 802.

(3) This is a fault of the preſs, which is taken notice of in the Errata. We muſt read Cocleus, or Cochleus. Mr. Baillet, Jugemens des Savans, tom. 1. pag. 103, not having perceived this typographical error, ſuppoſed Theophilus Raynaud had cited one Cocher.

(4) Theoph. Raynaudus, de bonis ac malis Libris, Partit. 3. Erotem. 3. num. 528. m. 299.

(5) Non me latet nuper Petrum Aurelium in hanc ſcriptionem vomuiſſe pleraque virulenta, quaſi id ſit illudere verbo Dei. Sed hæc eſt planè fatua criminatio, hujuſmodi enim ad hominem recriminationes à viris piis in non diſſimili materia ſunt adhibitæ. Sic cum Lutherani &c. i. e. " I am not ignorant that Petrus Aurelius has uttered many virulent cenſures againſt this paſſage, as if it were ſcoffing at the Word of God. But this is a very frivolous charge; for ſuch recriminations ad hominem have been made uſe of by pious men on the like occaſions, &c. The ſequel is in the body of this Remark.

(6) Jugemens des Savans, tom. 1. pag. 102, 103.

(7) See the Index of Alexander VII, num. 55. pag. 255.

(8) Voſſius, de Origin. Idololatr. lib. 3. pag. m. 984.

I do not find Queen Elizabeth is there brought on the ſtage [D].

There are ſome who believe that the Author of Eccleſiaſticus has oppoſed the paradox that women have no ſouls. If they were in the right, we muſt conclude that the Italian Author, who has maintained that paradox, has revived a very antiquated chimæra [E]. To make an old decrepit young again, in that ſenſe, is no very difficult taſk; and requires not the ſkill of a Medea. However, as this new Author could not make uſe of the arguments of thoſe who are refuted in Eccleſiaſticus, he may, in ſome reſpects, claim the glory of the invention. You will ſee below (a) a paſſage of the Mélanges d'Hiſtoire & de Literature collected by Mr. de Vigneul-Marville.

(a) In the Remark [E].

GELDENHAUR

point was very much diſputed in Holland, while Sorbiere lived there: Mr. Beverwick, ſays he, has written "a Book on the Excellency of Women, occaſioned by "a diſputation on a Theſis advanced by way of Paradox, by a Scholar who had a mind to exerciſe his "wit; mulieres non eſſe homines. This diſpute paſſed "from the Schools into the converſation of the beſt "companies, and there is already a great deal written "pro and con. At length Mr. Beverwick has entred "the liſts, and given us as gallant and learned a "Work as can be written on that ſubject. He has "omitted nothing which might be of advantage to the "fair ſex, and has verified, by a thouſand examples, "what he has endeavoured to prove methodically and "by good reaſons, that women were not inferior to men "in any qualifications of body or mind (9)." I wiſh Voſſius had made as ſound a judgment of Ariſtotle's opinion as of that which Cujacius undertook to maintain: but this was not to be expected of him; Ariſtotle's authority was too much reſpected as yet. That great Philoſoper maintained a ſtrange doctrine: he thought nature did not form women, but when, by reaſon of the imperfection of the matter, ſhe could not attain to the ſex which is perfect. Voſſius (10) commends Cajetan for having acknowledged this with regard to particular nature, but denied it with regard to univerſal Nature. So that, according to theſe two Doctors, human nature does not deſign to procreate women, her aim being always to produce men; but becauſe if ſhe always compaſſed that deſign, the World would thereby be too great a ſufferer, there is an univerſal nature which provides againſt it. What wretched jargon! What a whimſical idea of wiſdom is here, and what ſtrange Philoſophy! Human nature would work in order to preſerve itſelf, and yet would not aim at producing that being, without which it cannot poſſibly be preſerved. This is the greateſt of all abſurdities; and yet there is an infinite number of Phyſicians and Philoſophers, who have maintained that nature never forms females but when ſhe loſes her way, and ſo produces them only by chance, by accident, by force. Let us hear this impertinence in Italian. Huomini ſapientiſſimi hanno laſciato ſcritto, che la natura, percio che ſempre intende, & diſegna far le coſe piu perfette, ſe poteſſe, produrria continuamente huomini: & quando naſce una Donna, è difetto, o error della natura, & contra quello, ch'eſſa vorrebe fare: come ſi vede ancor d'uno, che naſce cieco, zoppo, o con qualche altro mancamento, & ne gli arbori molti frutti, che non maturano mai. Coſi la Donna ſi puo dire animal produtto à ſorte, & per caſo (11). i. e. "Very wiſe men have left in writing, that na"ture, becauſe ſhe always aims and deſigns to form "the moſt perfect things, would continually produce "men, if ſhe could: and when a woman is born, it "is a defect or error of nature, and contrary to her "intention; as is the caſe when a perſon is born blind, "or lame, or with any other natural defect, and as "we frequently ſee happen in the fruit of trees, which "never ripens. In like manner a woman may be "called a fortuitous animal, and produced by acci"dent." What I think yet more ſtrange is, to find that in a Council (12) it has been gravely propoſed as a queſtion whether women were human creatures, and that it was not determined in the affirmative till after a long debate.

(9) Sorbiere, in a Letter to Guy Patin written from Leyden, about the year 1650, It is the LXIII; ſee page 417 of his Letters in 4*to*.

(10) De Origin. Idololatr. pag. 984.

(11) Count Balthaſar Caſtiglione, in his Compleat Courtier, Book 3. pag. m. 382.

(12) Held at Mâcon. See Polygamia triumphatrix, pag. 123. where theſe words are to be read: Cum inter tot ſanctos Patres Epiſcopus quidam . . . ſtatueret non poſſe nec debere mulieres vocari homines, res tanti eſt habita ut in timore Dei publice ibi ventilaretur, & tandem poſt multas vexatæ hujus quæſtionis diſceptationes concluderetur quod mulieres ſint homines.

(13) Tom. 1. pag. 6.

[D] I do not find Queen Elizabeth is there brought on the Stage.] Here is what I find in the Life of that Queen publiſhed by Signor Leti. I have always looked with horror, ſays he (13), on a ſorry Book intitled, that women are of a different ſpecies from men, wherein the Author has had the boldneſs to alledge the example of that Queen, in ridicule of thoſe who have praiſed her capacity in the adminiſtration of affairs, and to aſſert, that during her reign, her favourites, her Council, and the Parliament did all the buſineſs, and that ſhe had no hand therein, but only lent them her name. As it is probable there are ſome other Diſſertations on the Theſis, mulieres non eſſe homines, beſides the Treatiſe which Gedicus has taken the pains to refute, I ſhould be very raſh if I denied what Signor Leti writes; for I confeſs I have read nothing on that ſubject except the Book Gedicus has refuted. I ſhall only ſay, that Signor Leti would have obliged his Readers, if he had given a more particular deſcription of the Book (14) wherein he had read this calumny againſt Queen Elizabeth.

(14) He ſhould have ſet down in what language, in what country, and at what time, that Book was printed.

[E] That the Italian Author who has maintained that Paradox, has revived a very antiquated chimæra.] "A Spaniard has aſſerted that brute animals have no "ſoul. A Frenchman has aſſerted the ſame thing; "but an Italian has gone farther, and taken it in his "head to maintain that women have no ſouls: Che le "donne non habbino anima, & che non ſino della ſpe"cie de gli huomini, e vienne comprobato da molti luoghi "della Scrittura ſanta: and this the Author endeavours "to prove by ſeveral paſſages of the holy Scripture, "which he accommodates to his own notions. So "long as this Book appeared only in Latin, the In"quiſition took no notice of it; but as ſoon as it was "tranſlated into Italian, the Inquiſitors cenſured and "prohibited it. The Ladies of Italy took this Syſtem "very differently: ſome were vexed to have no ſouls, "and to ſee themſelves ſo much debaſed below the men, "who, for the future, would treat them as apes: o"thers were pretty indifferent about the matter, and "looking on themſelves as mere machines, hoped to "ſet their ſprings ſo well a going as to make the men "ſtark mad. It was very proper to ſtop the courſe "of this hereſy, which is ancient, and ſo ancient that "it ſeems to have been attacked in Eccleſiaſticus, "where the Author ſays that God had created for "Adam a conſort like unto himſelf; and that he had "given them both a tongue, eyes, ears, and above all "a ſoul to think and conduct themſelves †. The Au"thor of the Commentary on the Epiſtles of St. Paul, "falſly attributed to St. Ambroſe, ſays plainly, on the "eleventh chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corin"thians, that women are not made after the image "and likeneſs of God: Fœminas ad imaginem Dei "factas non eſſe (15)." Concerning this laſt queſtion ſee Giſbert Voetius, in the IIId volume of his Politica Eccleſiaſtica (16). He proves in few words, by three reaſons, that the woman was made after the image of God; and he anſwers the objection which might be grounded on a paſſage of St. Paul (17). He alſo refutes (18), with the ſame brevity, the falſe Theſis mulieres non eſſe homines, and obſerves that the opinion of Ariſtotle mentioned above (19) has been adopted by Thomas Aquinas, and by ſeveral other School-men, with the ſame modification as we have ſeen (20) inſerted by Cajetan. An mulier ſit ἀμαρτημα erratum naturæ & mas occaſionatus, & per accidens generetur, atque adeo ſit monſtrum? Reſp. Tale quid excidit Ariſtoteli lib. 2. de generat. animalium cap. 3. & lib. 4. cap. 2. Hanc opinionem adoptavit Thomas part 1. qu. 92. art. & lib. 3. c. Gentes cap. 94. Ejuſque ſequaces, Viguerius Inſtitut. cap. 21. §. 2. v. 4. Et Commentatores ad Thomæ Summam Cajetanus, Medices, Alagona, & Ferrarienſis ad 3. c. Gentes cap. 94. Inſuper ex ſententiariis Bonaventura, Ægidius, Richardus ad 2. diſt. 20. Sed panacæâ diſtinctionis emolliri putant crudam hanc opinionem, quod fœmina ſit occaſionativè, non per ſe, reſpectu agentis particularis . . . . ſed quod . . . . ſit per ſe ex intentione agentis univerſalis, & naturæ (21).

† See Ecclus 17: 5, in the Vulgate Tranſlation.

(15) Mélanges d'Hiſt. & de Literat. recueillis par Monſieur de Vigneul-Marville, pag. 16, & ſeq. of the Roan Edition, 1699.

(16) Giſb. Voetius, Politicæ Eccleſiaſt. Part. 2. lib. 1. pag. 185, 186.

(17) 1 Cor. xi. 7.

(18) Voetius, Polit. Eccleſiaſt. Part. 2. pag. 179, 180.

(19) In the Remark [C].

(20) Ibid.

(21) Voetius, Polit. Eccleſ. Part 2. pag. 181.

GELDENHAUR (GERARD) in Latin Geldenhaurius, a native of Nimeguen [A], held a conſiderable rank among the learned men of the ſixteenth Century. He ſtudied claſſical Learning at Deventer, under very good maſters (a), and went through his Courſe of Philoſophy at Louvain with ſuch ſucceſs, that he rendred himſelf qualified to teach that Science there. It was in that illuſtrious Univerſity that he contracted a very ſtrict friendſhip with ſeveral learned men, and in particular with Eraſmus. He made ſome ſtay at Antwerp, from whence he was invited to the Court of Charles of Auſtria, to be Reader and Hiſtorian to that Prince (b); but as he did not love to change his abode often, and did not think proper to attend him to Spain, he diſengaged himſelf from his ſervice, and entered into that of Philip of Burgundy, Biſhop of Utrecht. He was his Reader and Secretary twelve years [B], that is, till 1524, which was the year of that Prelate's death; after which he executed the ſame functions at the Court of Maximilian of Burgundy. He was ſent to Wittemberg in the year 1526, in order to inquire into the ſtate of the ſchools there, and of the Church. He faithfully reported what he had obſerved in that City, and confeſſed he could not diſapprove a doctrine ſo conformable to the Prophets and Apoſtles as that which he had heard there. Wherefore he forſook the Popiſh Religion, and retired towards the upper Rhine. He married at Worms, and taught youth there for ſome time. Afterwards he was invited to Augſburg [C], to undertake the ſame employment; and at length, in the year 1534, he went thence to Marpurg, where he taught Hiſtory for two years, and afterwards Divinity till his death. He died of the plague, the 10th of January 1542, at the age of threeſcore (c). He had been a Monk (d). His changing his Religion, and ſome Writings which he publiſhed againſt the Church of Rome, occaſioned a quarrel between him and Eraſmus [D], who

(a) Alexander Hegius, and John Oſtendorp.

(b) See the Remark [B], at the end.

(c) Extracted from Paul Freherus's Theatrum, pag. 114. where he cites Manuſcripts of the Univerſity of Marpurg.

(d) See the Remark [B].

[A] A native of Nimeguen.] He was better known by the name of his country, than by that of his family, for he was uſually called Gerardus Noviomagus; and Eraſmus gives him no other appellation in the Letters he wrote him. Konig (1) ſpeaks of him only under the word Noviomagus. Some other Bibliographers (2), for want of due care, have ſplit one Author into two; and have diſtinguiſhed Gerardus Geldenhaurius from Gerardus Noviomagus. The miſtake of la Popeliniere is not leſs groſs: Gerard of Noyon Noviomagun, ſays he (3), has compiled the Hiſtory of Holland, 1530. Does he not ſeem to take Noviomagun for the name of his family? Is it not certain, at leaſt, that he ſuppoſes him to be born at Noyon in Picardy? We find a like miſtake in the firſt Volume of the Bibliotheque Univerſelle. Mr. Matthæus ſhews that Eligius had already preached the Goſpel to the Frieſlanders . . . . and that he was the firſt Biſhop of Nimeguen (4). Here are three faults in theſe words. The Latin word Eligius ſhould have been tranſlated by that of Eloi, and the word Noviomagus by that of Noyon: for St. Eloi was Biſhop of Noyon. Nimeguen was never an Epiſcopal See.

(1) In Bibliotheca veteri & nova.

(2) The Abbreviators of Geſner, and Draudius.

(3) Hiſtoire des Hiſtoires, liv. 9. pag. 483.

(4) Biblioth. Univerſelle, tom. 1. pag. 89.

[B] His Reader and Secretary twelve years.] Here are the words of the Author who has ſupplied me with this Article (5); Se ad Philippum Ultrajectinum Præſulem contulit, eique à Secretis in Latina lingua, & in cubiculo à lectionibus fuit per annos XII. I wonder Paul Freherus does not ſay that Geldenhaur was employed in religious functions while he lived with that Biſhop, and we are aſſured by Valerius Andreas (6); Philippo Burgundo, Epiſcopo Ultrajectino, à ſacris. This is the expreſſion of Valerius Andreas, which Moreri has tranſlated Almoner or Chaplain to Philip of Burgundy. There is no doubt but Geldenhaur, who was a Monk, aſſiſted his Prelate in his devotions. Valerius Andreas is not the only Writer who informs me of this perſon's monaſtical profeſſion (7): I find it alſo in one of Eraſmus's Letters. Quod ſi vera prædicas, mea ſententia nec aula dignus es, nec cuculla (8), that is, If it be true that you are naturally ſo baſhful (9), you are fit neither for the court, nor for the cowl. Note, that this Monk ſerved alſo as Chaplain to Charles of Auſtria, if we believe Voſſius (10).

(5) Paul. Freher. in Theatro, pag. 114.

(6) Valer. And. in Bibliotheca Belgica, pag. 273.

(7) Ordinis Cruciferorum Monachus. Idem, ibid.

(8) Eraſm. Epiſt. 43. lib. 3.

(9) Eraſmus had juſt before ſaid, Sed heus tu, rem oppido novam ex tuis literis accipio. Neſciebam te tam virgineo pudore præditum ut ad me non auſis ſcribere. i. e. "I learn a piece "of news from "your Letter. I "did not know "you were ſo ex- "tremely baſhful "that you durſt "not write to "me."

(10) Cæſari Carolo V à ſacris fuit. Voſſius, de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 654.

[C] He was invited to Augſburg.] Melchior Adam (11) relates that, in 1531, the Magiſtrates of that City having erected a School which they called St. Ann's, ſent for Geldenhaur to be Rector of it. See what I quote from Eraſmus, at the end of the following Remark.

(11) In Vitis Theologor. Germanorum, pag. 92.

[D] His changing his Religion, and ſome Writings . . . . occaſioned a quarrel between him and Eraſmus.] Read Eraſmus's Letter in Pſeudevangelicos (12): he wrote it to Geldenhaur, whoſe name he metamorphoſed into that of Vulturius. He blames him for having publiſhed ſcoffing Books, which only irritated Princes againſt Luther's followers. Parum erat evulgaſſe Epiſtolam ad Spirenſe Concilium, non magno intervallo proſiliit nobis ridiculus ille Cometes Carolo Cæſari dicatus. Quum iterum te meis ſcriptis admoniiſſem, ut à talibus jocis temperares, qui & Principum animos ad ſævitiam irritarent, & adeo nihil juvarent cauſam, à cujus victoria veſtra pendet incolumitas, ut etiam graviſſimè lædant, placidè quidem reſpondiſti: ſed perinde quaſi te fuiſſem hortatus, ut ſimile quiddam iterum deſignares, ita rurſus ad Concilium Spirenſe, cui tum Rex Ferdinandus præſidebat, miſſus eſt libellus, nomen Eraſmi literis bene magnis præferens (13). i. e. "It was not e- "nough to publiſh the Letter to the Council of Spires; "in a ſhort time after came out that ridiculous Comet, "dedicated to the Emperor Charles. When I had a- "gain admoniſhed you, by Letters, to abſtain from "ſuch jeſts, which might irritate the minds of Princes "to cruelty, and conſequently would be ſo far from "being of ſervice to the cauſe on the ſucceſs whereof "your ſafety depends, that it would greatly injure it; "you returned me, indeed, a civil anſwer, but juſt "as if I had exhorted you to attempt the like again: "ſo another Writing was ſent to the Council of Spires, at "which K. Ferdinand then preſided, having the name "of Eraſmus ſet to it in large characters." He blames him alſo for having prefixed the name and ſome notes of Eraſmus to ſome Letters, the intent of which was to ſhew that Heretics ought not to be puniſhed. This was expoſing Eraſmus to the hatred of the Court of Rome, and the indignation of the Powers who perſecuted Lutheraniſm; it was ſaying that Eraſmus furniſhed the Innovators with weapons to attack their enemies. That learned man did not like to have ſuch ill offices done him: age had made him a coward in that reſpect. His complaints of Geldenhaur's conduct, and that of the Lutherans, are very bitter, and were anſwered by writings which he thought extremely violent. He believed Geldenhaur had been the chief occaſion of them, and he makes no ſcruple to compare him to the traitor Judas (14). Sed nondum commigrârat Argentoratum ille (15) mirabilis concitandæ ſeditionis, & mox turbatis rebus, alioque profugiendi artifex, ille qui loca ex omnibus Epiſtolis meis ad calumniam idonea enotaret, moxque fingeret ſibi librum à fratribus clam ereptum. Qui adeò flagrabat impotenti odio, ut bono librum è mendaciis & conviciis non aliter contextum, quàm cento contexitur ex pannis, non potuerit expectare, ſed furtim emiſit inſulſiſſima ſcholia, & interim mihi ſcribebat blandas Epiſtolas: Eram Dominus ac Præceptor, à quo libenter admoneretur, qui ſine imagine mei non poterat vivere, qui proximis ad me literis etiam conſulatus eſt me, hortans ut læto eſſem animo, contemnens rabulas loquaces & ſcribaces: denique jamdudum editâ Epiſtolâ meâ, quòd me facturum ſcripſeram, in ſuis ad amanuenſem meum literis volebat mihi commendari, & interim hæc parabantur tantâ arte mordacia, ut magis lædar

(12) It is in the 47th of the 31ſt Book; and dated the 4th of November 1529.

(13) Eraſm. Epiſtolâ XLVII l. 31.

(14) Idem, Epiſt. ultima Libri ultimi, pag. 2137. dated the 1ſt of Auguſt 1530.

(15) The following words ſufficiently ſhew that he ſpeaks of Geldenhaur; which is confirmed by this paſſage of the 52d Letter of the 30th Book. Quidam G. N. è Brabantia profugus & ex amiciſſimo ſubito factus capitalis hoſtis novam tragœdiam movit Argentorati, nebulo ſeditioni natus. Is eſt fictò nomine Vulturius. He ſpeaks of him again in the 56th Letter of the ſame Book: Jam & Evangelici quidam, quorum magiſter ſceleroſus ille Gelrius, miris technis hoc agunt ut Cæſaris at Ferdinandi animum in me irritent.

who ſpeaks very ill of him, and inſtead of aſſiſting him in his neceſſity, put him off with raillery [E], and called him a ſeditious fellow: a reproach which merits no leſs attention than the care Eraſmus took to deny that he condemned the putting of Heretics to death [F]. Moreri ædar laudatus, quàm convitiis affectus. Et hi ſe cum Apoſtolorum ſanctimonia conferunt, quum hoc Vulturii factum propius accedat ad exemplum Judæ proditoris, quàm Chriſti. i. e. "But this wondrous Artiſt at raiſ-"ing ſeditions, and diſturbances, and then running "away to ſome other place, was not yet gone to Straſ-"burg: he, I mean, who extracted out of my Let-"ters all the paſſages which might give a handle for "calumny, and then pretended the Book was privately "ſtolen from him by his brethren; who was ſo mali-"cious an enemy that he could not wait for this Book, "made up of lies and ſlanders, as a piece of patch-"work is of rags, but clandeſtinely publiſhed moſt "ſilly notes, and in the mean time, wrote me com-"plaiſant Letters. He called me his Maſter and "Teacher, whoſe admonitions were very acceptable "to him: he would not live without my picture; "and in his next Letter comforted me, exhorting me "to be chearful, and deſpiſe loquacious and ſcribbling "brawlers: laſtly, after my Letter had been ſome-"time publiſhed, he wrote to my Amanuenſis, deſir-"ing him to recommend to me what I had declared "in writing I deſigned to do; and yet at the ſame "time theſe things preparing, ſo artfully malicious, "that I am more injured by praiſes, than affected by "calumnies. Theſe are the men who pretend to apo-"ſtolical ſanctity; whereas this action of Vulturius "approaches nearer to the example of the traitor Ju-"das, than of CHRIST." From hence we learn that Geldenhaur was at Straſburg in the year 1530, where he ſhewed a very turbulent ſpirit. But of this neither Melchior Adam nor Paul Freherus take any notice. Eraſmus ſays in another place, that nobody in Straſburg attempted any thing againſt him till Geldenhaur went thither. He wrote this when Geldenhaur was already Profeſſor of Poetry at Augſpurg: Argentorati nemo quicquam in mea molitus eſt, priuſquam eò commigrâſſet Noviomagus, qui nunc agit Auguſtæ, profiteturque Poeticam ſalario, ut aiunt, ſexaginta florenorum (16).

(16) Eraſm. Epiſt. 56. lib. 30. pag. 1941, dated the 14th of Dec. 1531.

[E] .... who .... put him off with raillery.] After having repreſented to him ſeveral conſiderations which prevented him from aſſiſting his friends in their indigence, he tells him that poverty is no great hardſhip to thoſe who devote themſelves to the purity of the Goſpel; that they ought to relieve one another; and that by contenting themſelves with little, and reducing themſelves to bread and water, they may always find wherewithal to live. Porrò, quod ſignificas tibi moleſtam egeſtatem, equidem nec tam ſum inops, ut non poſſim; nec tam parcus, ut graver aniculo aureos aliquot impartiri: ſed hæc benignitas quantulum haberet momenti ad tuam egeſtatem ſublevandam? Res mihi ſanè mediocris eſt, minimumque ſupereſt meis neceſſitatibus; multum impendii requirit hoc corpuſculum .... jam bona pars mihi deciditur in famulos, &c. .... Verùm poſtquam, mi Vulturi, induxiſti in animum Evangelicam vitam profiteri, miror paupertatem eſſe moleſtam, quum beatus Hilarion, ubi non inveniret quod pro naulo ſolveret, gloriandum duxerit, quòd inſciens ad tantam Evangelii perfectionem perveniſſet. Gloriatur & Paulus, quod ſciat abundare, & penuriam pati, quod nihil habens omnia poſſideat. Idem collaudat Hebræos quoſdam Evangelium amplexos, quod rapinam bonorum ſuorum cum gaudio ſuſcepiſſent..... Adde ſi Judæi non patiuntur inter ipſos eſſe pauperes, quanto magis convenit ut qui jactant Evangelium, fratrum inopiam mutua benignitate ſublevent: præſertim cum Evangelica frugalitas minimo ſit contenta. Si panis cibarius adſit & aqua, non deſiderant Attica bellaria qui ſpiritu vivunt. Neſciunt luxum, jejunio paſcuntur. Ipſi Apoſtoli confrictis manu ariſtis famem ſedâſſe leguntur .... Fortaſſis hic tibi videbor cavillis ludere, at aliis non idem videtur (17). i. e. "As to "what you intimate, that poverty is uneaſy to you, "truly I am neither ſo poor that I cannot, nor ſo "ſtingy that ſhould grudge to beſtow a few pieces of "gold on an old friend; but how far would ſuch a "bounty go towards relieving your wants? My cir-"cumſtances are but moderate, and I have little more "than will ſupply my own occaſions: this body of "mine requires no ſmall expence .... and a good "part goes in ſervants wages, &c. .... But, my dear "Vulturius, ſince you have taken the reſolution to "profeſs an evangelical life, I wonder you find po-"verty uneaſy; when St. Hilarion, not having mo-"ney enough to pay his boat-hire, thought he had "reaſon to glory that he had, undeſignedly, arrived "at ſuch Goſpel perfection. St. Paul alſo glories that "he knew how to abound, and how to ſuffer need, "and that having nothing, he poſſeſſed all things. "The ſame Apoſtle commends certain Hebrews who "had received the Goſpel, that they took the ſpoiling "of their goods joyfully .... Add that if the "Jews ſuffer none to be poor among them, how much "more does it become thoſe who boaſt of the Goſpel, "to relieve the wants of their brethren by mutual "charity; eſpecially ſince evangelical frugality is con-"tented with very little. Thoſe who live by the "ſpirit want no delicacies, if they have but bread "and water: they are ſtrangers to luxury, and feed "on faſting. We read that Apoſtles themſelves ſatis-"fied their hunger with ears of corn rubbed in their "hands. .... Perhaps you may imagine I am jeſting "all this while, but others will not think ſo."

(17) Idem, Epiſt. 47. lib. 31. pag. 2049, 2050.

[F] A Reproach which merits no leſs attention than the care Eraſmus took to deny that he condemned the putting of Hereties to death.] Eraſmus's diſpute with Geldenhaur has made me take notice of two things with ſome kind of ſurprize.

The Iſt is, that, according to Eraſmus, it was talking very ſeditiouſly and outrageouſly, to exhort Princes to take from the Monks the great poſſeſſions they enjoyed, and not to reſiſt the Goſpel. Niſi forte non videtur ſeditioſum hortari Principes, ut facultates Sacerdotibus ac Monachis adimant, & in bonos veſtri ſimiles conferant; aut non offenduntur illorum animi, quum audiunt, Noli occidere innocentes, Noli tuo periculo recalcitrare Evangelio, Sine verbum Dei in tua ditione prædicari. Hæc quid aliud ſunt quàm atrociſſima convitia nondum perſuaſis; imò in diverſum perſuaſis. Quos tu vocas innocentes, illi habent pro ſeditioſis & hæreticis; & quod tu vocas Evangelium, illis perſuaſum eſt eſſe doctrinam Satanæ. Prius igitur erat illis perſuadendum: Quod ſi non potes; aliis rationibus tractandus erat illorum animus (18). i. e. "Unleſs, per-"haps, you do not think it ſeditious to exhort Prin-"ces to ſtrip the Prieſts and Monks of their poſſeſſi-"ons, and to beſtow them on good men like your-"ſelves; or if they are not offended when they hear, "Do not kill the innocent; Spurn not at the Goſpel at "your peril; Suffer the Word of God to be preached in "your dominion. What are theſe but the moſt out-"ragious abuſes againſt perſons who are not yet per-"ſuaded you are in the right, nay, who are perſuaded "of the contrary. Thoſe whom you call innocent, "they deem to be ſeditious and heretical: and what "you call the Goſpel, they are perſuaded is the doc-"trine of Satan. The firſt thing therefore, to be "done, ſhould have been to convince them: which "if you cannot do, they ought to have been treated "in a different manner." This is his remonſtrance to Geldenhaur, who had publiſhed Letters addreſſed to Princes, and written in the ſtrain which is here cenſured. This diſcourſe of Eraſmus is a true Janus, having a double face: it is reaſonable in ſome reſpects, but it ſeems unreaſonable when conſidered in a certain light. They who believe it their duty to convert the world to a new doctrine, and to deſtroy reigning falſhoods, muſt neceſſarily demand to be heard, and to have no violence offered them: they are unjuſt therefore, if they demand that violence be offered to thoſe who are of a different opinion, and require them to be ſtripped of their goods, and forbidden to ſpeak or to appear. It ſeems, therefore, that Geldenhaur went too faſt when he demanded the goods of the Monks, and that Eraſmus was not in the wrong to reproach him with that precipitation. We muſt allow that to be granted to others, which we aſk for our ſelves; for every body boaſts that he maintains the truth. Moreover, to tell Princes who perſecute us, that they oppreſs the Kingdom of God, is abuſing them in a very outragious manner. Wherefore it ſeems to be the better way to ſoften one's ſtyle, and not ſo poſitively to take for granted the very thing which is in queſtion. Above all things we ſhould endeavour to make (18) Idem, Epiſtola in Pſeudevangelicos, pag. 2051. See alſo Epiſt. 59. lib. 31. pag. 2107.

(e) Celebris Poeta, celebrior Orator, celeberrimus Theologus (Lovanii) ſalutatus. Reinh. Lorichius, Scholijs in Aphthon. pag. m. 302.

Moreri has committed ſome conſiderable miſtakes [G]. Paul Freherus has not been ſo exact as he ought [H]. I ſhall give the Titles of ſome of Geldenhaur's Works [I]. He was a man well ſkilled in Poetry and Rhetoric (e).

The

our maxims and our proofs reliſhed, and if we ſucceeded in that, we might then fix characters on our opinions, and the opinions of our adverſaries, according to ſtrict juſtice. In this light the Obſervations of Eraſmus appear very judicious; but when we conſider, on the other hand, that unleſs we repreſent to the World that they are irrecoverably loſt, except they reform, and ceaſe to wage war againſt God by oppoſing the Reformers, we ſhall make no great progreſs, nor ſufficiently excite the attention of the public: when we conſider this, I ſay, it ſeems that Eraſmus carried his Philoſophy too far; and knew not how little power reaſon has, when not aſſiſted by the paſſions. However it be, it does not appear to be very poſſible to bring about great Revolutions in Religion, without firſt demanding a toleration for our ſelves, which we are ready to refuſe our neighbours ſo ſoon as we are in a condition to conſtrain them. Non aliter hæc ſacra conſtant.

REFLECTION on the putting of Heretics to death.

The IId thing which ſurprized me was to find that Eraſmus looked on it as a black and odious calumny, to be charged with having taught that Heretics ought not to be put to death. He owns, indeed, that he had exhorted Princes not lightly to give ear to the complaints of all ſorts of Divines, or of Monks (19), and to diſtinguiſh errors from one another; but he denies he ever maintained that Heretics ought not to be puniſhed with death, and complains (20) that they who accuſe him of that falſe doctrine expoſe him to the reſentment of Princes, as though he intended to take from them the Sword which God had put into their hands (21). Hoc atrocius eſt, quod nuſquam id doceo, non eſſe ſumendum capitis ſupplicium de hæreticis, nec uſquam adimo gladii jus Principibus, quod illis non ademit Chriſtus nec Apoſtoli . . . . (22) ut peccant qui ob quemvis errorem pertrahunt homines ad ignem: ita peccant qui in nullos hæreticos arbitrantur prophano magiſtratui jus eſſe occidendi . . . . nec ulla res erat quæ poterat illos magis alienare, quàm ſi illis gladium excutiam è manibus, eaſque ſectas defendam, quas illi velut execrabiles radicitùs evulſas cupiunt, & facerent, niſi rerum motus aliò vocaret illorum animos. i. e. "This is "the more injurious, in that I no where teach that "Heretics are not to be capitally puniſhed, nor do I "any where deprive Princes of the right of the "ſword, which neither Chriſt nor his Apoſtles have "taken from them . . . . As they ſin who drag men "to the flames for every error; neither are they guilt"leſs who think a prophane Magiſtrate has no power "to put any kind of Heretics to death . . . . . Nor "could any thing incenſe them more againſt me, "than my ſtriking the ſword out of their hands, "and defending thoſe Sects which they wiſh to extir"pate as execrable, and effectually would, did not "the tumultuous ſtate of affairs call off their atten"tion." I am amazed that Eraſmus, who had read the Fathers ſo much, ſhould be ignorant that during the three firſt centuries they openly maintained the very doctrine which he takes ſo much pains to clear himſelf from. They did not pretend thereby to deprive Princes of the right of the ſword which they hold from God; they only meant that that right does not extend to errors of the conſcience, and that Sovereigns have received no power to perſecute Religions. This is the true ſtate of the queſtion. All the Princes would acknowledge that they have not the power of the ſword againſt the true ſervants of God, or againſt Orthodoxy; they only pretend to it againſt the enemies of truth. It was on this ground that the Pagan Emperors puniſhed the primitive Chriſtians, and that the Inquiſition puts Proteſtants to death at this day. So that it is utterly needleſs to prove to perſecutors that they ought not to put the faithful to death; for they did not pretend to that, nor are they mad enough to believe that by depriving them of that power, they are robbed of any thing which belongs to them. The only point, therefore, in queſtion, is to know whether they can puniſh thoſe who ſerve God according to the light of their conſcience. The Fathers of the three firſt Centuries denied it; whence comes it that Eraſmus dares not imitate them? And what is yet more aſtoniſhing (23), whence comes it that within theſe few years a Miniſter of Holland has endeavoured to make thoſe who plead for toleration odious, becauſe they ſtrip Sovereigns of one of their choiceſt prerogatives (24)? Is not this being more malicious and unjuſt than the Pagans were againſt the Fathers of the primitive Church, whom they did not reproach with this ſuppoſed attempt on the rights of Sovereigns, or this pretended crime againſt the State? But to ſhew the illuſion of that Miniſter, it is ſufficient to aſk him why he takes from the Catholic Kings the power of the ſword with regard to the Proteſtants? Why does he think that it is allowable in him, which he condemns in others as high-treaſon? I ſpeak in behalf of the truth, will he ſay; but this is the pretence of all the world.

(23) We muſt ſuppoſe that in Eraſmus's time people were not ſo well acquainted, as they have been ſince, with the force of the proofs againſt perſecution.

(24) See the Tableau du Socinianiſme, Lettre 8.

[G] Moreri has committed ſome conſiderable miſtakes.] I. He ought not to have given Philip of Burgundy the title of Archbiſhop of Utrecht, but that of Biſhop: for Utrecht was not yet an Archbiſhopric. II. Marpurg was not the firſt City of Germany where Geldenhaur taught. III. He never taught at Wittemberg. IV. Neither was he murdered by robbers in 1542. Valerius Andreas has furniſhed Moreri with one half of theſe falſhoods: here is what he ſays. Turpi Apoſtaſia à Catholicis Belgis ad Germanos Marpurgenſes transfugit: ubi poſtquam annos aliquot Hiſtoriam explanaſſet, dum Wittembergam verſus iter inſtituit à latronibus fiſſo ſecuri capite miſere periit an. ſalutis CIↃ. IↃ. XLII. die X. Januarii, ut refert Reinhardus Lorichius Hadamarius, ſcholiis ad Aphthonii Progymnaſmata. i. e. "By a vile apoſtaſy he went over "from the Catholics of Holland to the Germans at "Marpurg; where after he had explained Hiſtory "for ſome years, as he was on the road to Wittem"berg, he was miſerably murdered by robbers, hav"ing his ſkull ſplit with an ax, on the 10th of Ja"nuary 1542, as we are informed by Reinhardus "Lorichius Hadamarius, in his Scholia on the Pro"gymnaſmata of Aphthonius." There are ſeveral faults in theſe words. 1. Geldenhaur did not retire to Marpurg when he abjured the Romiſh Religion; he did not go to Marpurg till after he had reſided at Worms, Straſburg, and Augſburg. Nevertheleſs ſee the Remark [M]. 2. He did not take a journey to Wittemberg after having taught Hiſtory for ſome years at Marpurg. He went thither in the year 1526, while he was a Catholic, and in the ſervice of Maximilian of Burgundy. 3. He did not die of the wounds he received from the Aſſaſſins; it was the plague which carried him off ſixteen years after that aſſaſſination. 4. The Author quoted by Valerius Andreas expreſly takes notice that Geldenhaur recovered of his wounds. If Andreas had known what terms he makes uſe of (25), he would not have fallen into theſe miſtakes; which ſhews of what importance it is to conſult the Authors one intends to cite. Swertius (26) relates this falſhood only; that Geldenhaur going from Marpurg to Wittemberg was killed by robbers, the 10th of January 1542.

(25) Quænam verba Gerhardus Noviomagus ex lipothymia ad ſeſe rediens, olim potuiſſet dicere, cujus Witebergam profecturi caput latrones ſecuri diffiderant, ipſum apud Brunonis vicum humi ſtratum ſpoliaverant, & fugitivi mortuum credentes in ſylva reliquerant. R. Lorich. Scholiis in Aphthon. pag. m. 300.

[H] Freherus has not been ſo exact as he ought.] He ſhould not have ſaid that Geldenhaur withdrew from the Imperial Court, relictâ imperatoriâ aulâ, and entered into the ſervice of Philip of Burgundy in the year 1512; for the Court of Charles of Auſtria, which he quitted, was not yet an Imperial Court. It is a groſs error in calculation, to ſay a man who goes to Marpurg in the year 1534, and died there the 10th of January 1542, taught Hiſtory there two years, and afterwards Divinity nine years. Hiſtoriæ primùm biennium, ac poſtmodum novennium ſacras literas . . . . interpretatus eſt. This would be falſe though we ſhould ſuppoſe that he began to teach Divinity the very firſt year.

(26) Athen. Belg. pag. 279.

[I] I ſhall give the Titles of ſome of Geldenhaur's Works.] I take them from Valerius Andreas. Hiſtoria Batavica, cum appendice de vetuſta Batavorum nobilitate, at Straſburg, 1533; but Voſſius mentions an Edition of the year 1520 (27). De Batavorum Inſula. Germaniæ Inferioris Hiſtoriæ, at Straſburg, 1532. Vita Philippi à Burgundia, Epiſcopi Ultrajectenſis.

(27) Voſſius, de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 654.

(19) Tantum admoneo locis aliquot, ne ſit hic præceps Principum ſeveritas, nec facile præbeant aures quorumlibet Theologorum aut Monachorum delationibus. Eraſmus, Epiſt. 47. lib. 31. pag. 2051.

(20) Ut lector parum attentus exiſtimaret meam eſſe ſententiam, non eſſe fas in quenquam hæreticum pœna capitis animadvertere: eaque res Cæſarem Ferdinandum, aliosque Principes, atque etiam Romanum Pontificem in meum caput irritaret. Idem, ibid.

(21) Idem, ibid.

(22) Ibid. pag. 2052.

The Emperor Maximilian judged him worthy of the Bays in the year 1517. It was after he had attentively read a ſcore of Latin Verſes written in his praiſe by Geldenhaur (f). Note, this Writer ſuppreſſed a truth in one of his Hiſtories [K]. The conditions on which the employment of Hiſtorian was conferred on him, may ſometimes occaſion the advancing of a falſhood [L].

(f) Geldenhaur, in Vita Philippi à Burgundia, circa fin. You will there find that little Poem.

There is in Freherus's Theatre a ſmall contradiction which I ought not to paſs over in ſilence. I have ſaid, indeed, that we there find that Geldenhaur was not invited to Marpurg till the year 1534; but I have not ſaid that we find in another paſſage of that Work, that he taught at Marpurg ſo early as the year 1526 [M].

tenſis. See the following Remark. Catalogus Epiſcoporum Ultrajectinorum. Epiſtola ad Guilielmum Geldriæ Principem gratulatoria de Principatuum ſuorum adoptione. Epiſtola de Zelandia. Satiræ octo, printed at Louvain, in 1515 (28).

(28) Taken from Val. Andreas, Biblioth. Belg. pag. 273, 274.

[K] He ſuppreſſed a truth in one of his Hiſtories.] It was in the Hiſtory of Philip of Burgundy, natural ſon of Duke Philip the Good. He did not forget to ſay that this Baſtard was ſo handſome in his youth, and ſo capable of inflaming the women with love, that ſome of them were laſcivious enough impudently to run afrer him, but inſtead of adding that ſome of the ſex found him not inſenſible, and had even three baſtards by him, he repreſents him ſo maidenly modeſt, that it had like to have coſt him his life. Moribus & converſatione ita compoſitus ut magis Parthenius quam Philippus adpellari potuiſſet. Quare non tam amabat quam amabatur, laſciviores enim quædam matronæ in tantum eum, ſepoſita omni verecundia, deperibant ut harum cauſa fere in vitæ periculum incidiſſet, niſi is qui ei mortem intentaturus putabatur, occiſus fuiſſet (29). i. e. "He was ſo modeſt in his behavi- "our and converſation, that he might rather have "been named Parthenius than Philip. For which "reaſon he was not ſo much a lover as an object of "love; for ſome luſtful matrons, laying aſide all "ſhame, were ſo enamoured with him, that on their "account he was in danger of loſing his life, had "not the perſon who it was thought deſigned to "murder him, been killed." Here is the Note which Mr. Matthæus makes thereon. Nec exemplo deſtitutus, præſertim patris Philippi, ſuſcepit ſpurios non paucos. Tres etiam ex una Philippum, Joannem, & Oliverium, ut obſervavi ex adverſariis Giſberti Lappi à Waveren (30). i. e. "As he wanted not examples, par- "ticularly that of his father Philip, he had ſeveral "natural children: three he had by one woman, "Philip, John, and Oliver; as I have obſerved "from the Adverſaria of Gisbert Lappus à Wave- "ren." Let this teach us to diſtruſt Hiſtories written by Domeſtics loaded with favours. They ſuppreſs what does no honour to the memory of their maſters. However, it muſt be allowed that Geldenhaur does not pretend Philip's chaſtity was of any long duration: he owns that Biſhop of Utrecht loved the fair ſex, and that drunken Prieſts met with more rigorous treatment from him than lewd ones (31). Note, that he openly profeſſed the Proteſtant Religion when he publiſhed this Hiſtory (32), and that it is entirely Heretical if we believe Valerius Andreas (23). Note alſo that Suffridus Petri, who has taken thence the Life of Philip of Burgundy which he has inſerted in his Appendix to Beka, has omitted all that was not favourable to the Church of Rome. Mr. Matthæus (34) makes this obſervation in the Notes he had added to the new Edition of this little Book of Geldenhaur, inſerted in his Veteris ævi Analecta (35).

(29) Geldenhaur, in Philippo Burgundo, pag. m. 220. I make uſe of Matthæus's Edition.

(30) Antonius Matthæus, Veteris ævi Analect. pag. 243, 244.

(31) Ebrioſos præſertim qui cereviſia ſe ingurgitare ſolent, deteſtabatur, ſcortationibus minus infeſtus. Ipſe enim in Venerem propenſior inque adoleſcentularum amoribus ardentior erat. Geldenh. in Philippo Burgundo, pag. 230.

(32) At Straſburg, 1529.

(33) Libellus hic totus hæreticus eſt, Val. And. Bibl. Belg. pag. 273.

(34) Matthæus, Vet. ævi Analect. pag. 247.

[L] The conditions on which the employment of Hiſtorian was conferred on him, may ſometimes occaſion the advancing of a falſhood.] Philip of Burgundy charged Geldenhaur to make a Collection of all the memorable things which ſhould happen, either in the Dioceſe of Utrecht, or in the neighbouring Countries, and to read his Collections to him and his Council every month. Geldenhaur complied with this Order, and was directed to alter what might be by him related amiſs. This regarded not only falſe facts, but alſo indiſcretions; that is to ſay, if he chanced to ſpeak in a manner which that Prince's Council judged imprudent, he was commanded to alter it. How many truths are comprehended in this claſs of things! It muſt be granted, indeed, that an Hiſtorian may rectify a great many narratives when Stateſmen examine and correct his Work; but, however, there are ſome facts, the publication whereof they condemn for no other reaſon but becauſe they are true. Voluit ille (Philippus Burgundus) per me notari ſi quid in ſua ditione aut in finitimis regionibus memoratu dignum actum eſſet, ſed ea conditione ut ſingulis menſibus quæ annotaram, ipſi & à conſiliis prælegerem: quod cum facerem, admonebant, ſi quid perperam, ſi quid parum conſiderate ſcriptum audiſſent, id mutarem (36).

(35) Printed at Leyden, in the year 1697, tho' the Title page bears the date of 1698.

(36) Geldenhaur, in Præfat. Opuſculor. illuſtratæ Germaniæ, apud Voſſium, de Hiſt. Latin. pag. 658.

[M] Freherus . . . . . ſays he taught at Marpurg ſo early as the year 1526.] That Author tells us (37) the Univerſity of Marpurg was opened the firſt of July 1526; that Profeſſor John Ferrarius Montanus was made the firſt Rector of it; and that Francis Lambert and Gerardus Noviomagus were, among others, appointed his Collegues. Francis Lambert died in the year 1530, as I have ſaid in his Article. This circumſtance alone would be ſufficient to the contradiction of Freherus; for Geldenhaur could not be Profeſſor at Marpurg at the ſame time with Lambert, if he had not been ſo before the year 1534: but which of Freherus's narratives ſhall we truſt? I think we ſhould ſay that Geldenhaur was Profeſſor at Marpurg in the year 1526; that he quitted his employment to go to Worms; that he went thence to Straſburg, and afterwards to Augſburg; and that at laſt, through that inconſtancy ſo common in Profeſſors, which I have ſpoken of elſewhere (38), he returned to Marpurg in the year 1534. On this foot, my firſt Critical Animadverſion (39) on Valerius Andreas Deſſelius will not hold good; but who could have imagined it would not, when I grounded it on a Writer (40) who has quoted the Manuſcript Regiſters of the Univerſity of Marpurg? He has likewiſe quoted them when he ſays, in another paſſage, that Geldenhaur was Profeſſor at Marpurg in the year 1526. Is this knowing how to make uſe of a Book? Note that Melchior Adam was a ſtranger to this firſt Profeſſorſhip of Geldenhaur.

(37) Freher. in Theatro, pag. 104.

(38) See the Remark [G] of the Article ALCIATUS (Andrew).

(39) See the Remark [G].

(40) That is, Paul Freherus.

GELENIUS (SIGISMUND), born of a good family at Prague [A], was one of the learned men of the ſixteenth Century. He began very early to travel through Germany,

[A] He was of a good family.] Let us hear what Curio ſays concerning it. Gelenia familia antiqua & honeſta, à cervis nomen traxit, quos ipſi Gelenos vocant, ita ut Latina lingua cervina dici poſſit. Patrem habuit ſummo apud regem loco & honore, hominem minimè illiteratum, nam & Moriam Eraſmi in patriam linguam convertit, & lepidum ſalſumque opus cum ſuis communicavit. Matre ejus fœmina primaria & nobili, propter mulieres prudentiam, & probatos mores, regina plurimùm & familiariter utebatur. Talibus parentibus ortus Gelenius, parem quoque, hoc eſt, ingenuam & liberalem habuit educationem (1). i. e. "The Gelenian "family, an ancient and reputable one, took its name "from Stags, which they call Geleni (Jelenn); ſo that "in Latin it may be called Cervina. His father was "in a high and honourable poſt under the King, and "did not want learning; for he tranſlated Eraſmus's "Praiſe of Folly into his native language, and com- "municated to his countrymen that witty and diverting "piece. His mother, a Lady of noble birth, was "very intimate with the Queen, on account of her "prudence and excellent behaviour. Gelenius, ſprung "from ſuch parents, had likewiſe a ſuitable, that is, "an ingenuous liberal education."

(1) Cœlius Secundus Curio, Præfat. in Appian. Alexandr.

many, France, and Italy; and eaſily made himſelf maſter of the languages of thoſe three Countries. In Italy he confirmed himſelf in the knowledge of the Latin tongue, and learned the Greek there under Marcus Muſurus. In his return to Germany he went through Baſil, and became acquainted with Eraſmus, who conceived an eſteem for him, and recommended him to John Frobenius for Corrector of his Printing-houſe. Gelenius accepted of that charge, as laborious as it was; for he had a great number of Hebrew, Greek, and Latin Books, which Frobenius was printing, to correct. He acquitted himſelf well of this employment till his death, that is, for thirty years together: and he was not contented with correcting the Preſs, but ſet up for a Tranſlator and Critic. Few learned men have tranſlated ſo many Works from Greek into Latin as he has done [B]. He was a tall man, and very corpulent. He had an excellent memory, and a ready ſharp wit: he was ſcarce ever in a paſſion [C], and cared neither for honours nor riches [D]. The employments which were offered him in other places, could not tempt him

[B] Few learned men have tranſlated ſo many Works from Greek into Latin as he has done.] Having publiſhed a Dictionary in four languages (2), he began to write Notes on Pliny and Livy, and printed them. He tranſlated Joſephus's Jewiſh Antiquities, and corrected the other Works of that Author, by collating ſeveral Manuſcripts with one another. Afterwards he turned into Latin ſome Homilies of St. Chryſoſtom, and then the Roman Hiſtory of Dionyſius Halicarnaſſus, the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Evagrius, Origen's Work againſt Celſus, the Works of Philo, and thoſe of Appian. After this he undertook the Tranſlation of the Works of Juſtin Martyr, and had tranſlated the greateſt part of them before he died. This is what I find in Curio's Preface to Appian. I do not find any mention there of what Gelenius had done on Ammianus Marcellinus; a work which Henry Valeſius has greatly commended. Here is what he ſays of it (3): Erat quidem in utroque horum virorum (4) magna doctrina, ut ſcripta utriuſque teſtantur. Sed in Gelenio major quædam ingenii vis, & judicium acrius fuit. Quod cum multi præclari labores illius viri teſtantur, tum maximè interpretationes Latinæ Dionyſii Halicarnaſſenſis, Appiani, Philonis item, ac Joſephi, Origenis, & aliorum. Ex quibus apparet eum excellenti ingenio & ſingulari doctrina præditum fuiſſe. Sed & Ammiani Marcellini hiſtoriæ ab eo editæ id ipſum abunde teſtantur. In quibus plurima acutè & ingeniosè emendavit; & inſignem paginarum tranſpoſitionem, quæ in Mſſ. omnibus codicibus reperitur, & in Editione extat Accurſii, mira dexteritate reſtituit. Quamobrem ejus viri nomini libenter hoc laudis teſtimonium impertimus, neminem adhuc exſtitiſſe, qui de hiſtoria Marcellini melius meritus ſit. i. e. "Both theſe (4) were "men of very great learning, as their writings teſtify. "But Gelenius had a greater ſtrength of genius, and "a more diſcerning judgment. This appears from "many valuable works of his, and particularly his "Latin Tranſlations of Dionyſius Halicarnaſſenſis, Appian, Philo, Joſephus, Origen, and others. All "which ſhew him to have been a man of excellent "parts, and ſingular learning: as likewiſe does his "Edition of Ammianus Marcellinus's Hiſtory; where-"in he has made a great number of judicious and in-"genious emendations, and, with admirable dexteri-"ty, reſtored the ſtrange tranſpoſition of pages which "is to be found in all the manuſcript copies, and ap-"pears in Accurſius's Edition. Wherefore I willingly "give him this public teſtimony of applauſe, that no "one has as yet deſerved better of Ammianus Mar-"cellinus than he." Eraſmus does not ſpeak ſo advantageouſly of Gelenius's performance on Pliny; on the contrary, he gives a very bad character of it. Sigiſmundus Gelenius tuo nomini (5) dicavit Annotationes in Plinium jam tertiò ab ipſo caſtigatum. Sed mire impoſuit illi codex manu deſcriptus, in quo ſciolus aliquis è ſuo capite mutavit quicquid libuit, & quodam modo novum Plinium nobis dedit. Admonui, nè fideret illi exemplari, ſed auditus non ſum. Hermolaus non auſus eſt mutare lectionem Plinianam. Gelenius ſe putavit rem mirificam præſtitiſſe; ego cenſeo crimen eſſe inexpiabile (6). i. e. "Sigiſmund Gelenius dedicated to you his "Annotations on Pliny, which Author he has now the "third time corrected. But he was ſtrangely impoſed "on by a manuſcript copy, wherein ſome ſmatterer "had altered whatever he thought fit out of his own "head, and given us, as it were, a new Pliny. I "adviſed him not to truſt to that copy; but he would "not hearken to me. Hermolaus Barbarus would not "venture to alter Pliny's text. Gelenius fancied he "had done a wonderful thing; but I take it to be an "unpardonable crime." Here follows the judgment of Monſr. Huet (7): In iis quoque numeratur Sigiſmundus Gelenius Bohemus, quo vix quiſquam pluribus hanc artem monumentis ditavit: diſertus imprimis habitus eſt & elegans; audax in conſtringendis pluribus in unum periodis, vel disjungendis, ſenſus ſibi non ſemper intellectos ad libitum recoquit. i. e. "Among theſe likewiſe "may be reckoned Sigiſmund Gelenius, a Bohemian, "who has left more monuments of his ſkill in this "art than almoſt any one elſe: he is in particular "eſteemed copious and elegant; bold in bringing ſe-"veral periods into one, or breaking them into more, "he gives a new turn to the ſenſe of paſſages he does "not always comprehend."

(2) Linguarum quatuor Symphonum Lexicum, Græcis videlicet, Latinis, Germanicis, & Dalmaticis vocibus ordine diſpoſitis concinnavit. Idem, ibid.

(3) Henricus Valeſius, in Præfat. Amm. Marcellini.

(4) That is, Mariangelus Accurſius, and Sigiſmund Gelenius.

(5) That is, to Damian de Goes.

(6) Eraſmus, Epiſt. 69. lib. 30. pag. 1957, dated the 21ſt of May 1535.

(7) Huetius, de Claris Interpretat. pag. m. 225.

[C] He was ſcarce ever in a paſſion.] Curio expreſſes this in the following terms (8): Erat in eo animi lenitas mira, naturæque bonitas quædam, ut vix iraſci poſſet etiam irritatus . . . . cum nemine unquam ſimultatem geſſit: rerum alienarum minime curioſus, minime ſuſpicax: ſed antiqua non tamen ſtulta ſimplicitate præditus. i. e. "He was wonderfully mild and good "natured, ſo that he could ſcarce ever be put in a paſ-"ſion, tho' provoked. . . . . He never bore any man "a grudge; was neither curious to pry into other peo-"ple's affairs, nor at all miſtruſtful; but endowed "with primitive, yet not weak ſimplicity." This is the true character of a good man; as will farther appear in the following Remark.

(8) Curio, in Præfat. in Appian. Alexand.

[D] He cared neither for honours, nor riches.] I make uſe of Curio's words (9). Quanta vero continentia atque abſtinentia fuerit, quarum illa in iis quæ abſunt non expetendis, altera in iis quæ adſunt, in noſtraque poteſtate ſunt abſtinendo, illa declarant, quod cùm per tot annos tantopere in re literaria elaboraverit, ex quo magnorum virorum gratiam eſt conſecutus, nullas tamen divitias congeſſit: nullas reliquit, ſuppellectile domeſtica, victuque contentus. Bonis & doctis, ſi quos egere animadvertebat, largiebatur: felicibus & fortunatis non invidebat: calamitatibus aliorum afficiebatur: neminem contemnebat. Illud vero maximum continentiæ ſignum fuit: quod in Regis Bohemiæ aulam magnis præmiis, & honoribus, quibuſque vel cupidus & ambitioſus aliquis contentus eſſe poteſt, allectus renuit, hanc quietam & moderatam vitam ambitioſis illis & turbulentis dignitatibus anteponens. Omitto provincias bonas & literas & artes profitendi oblatas, quas nunquam ut ſuſciperet adduci potuit, adeo tenax propoſiti, vitæque generis ſemel honeſte ſuſcepti, ſemper fuit. i. e. "How "great his continency and abſtinence were, the "former of which virtues conſiſts in not coveting "what we have not, and the latter in abſtaining "from what we have in our power, appears from this; "that notwithſtanding his literary labours, painfully "continued for ſo many years, by which he gained "the favour of ſeveral great men, yet he heaped up "no riches, nor left any behind him, being contented "with the ordinary neceſſaries and conveniencies of "life. If he obſerved any good and learned men to "be in want, he relieved them: he envied not the "rich and fortunate: he was affected by the misfor-"tunes of others; and deſpiſed no man. But the "moſt ſignal proof of his continence was his declin-"ing the great rewards and honours, ſufficient to ſa-"tisfy avarice and ambition, by which he was invit-"ed to the King of Bohemia's Court; preferring this "quiet and humble life to thoſe ſplendid and trouble-"ſome dignities. I omit the lucrative Profeſſorſhips "which he could never be prevailed on to accept; ſo "tenacious him to quit the peaceful place he had at Basil (a), where he died [E] like a good Christian, being fifty seven years old. He had married in that City, and left behind him two sons and a daughter (b), of whose destiny I am ignorant. Some place his death in the year 1554 (c), others in 1555 (d). His Edition of Arnobius has been much condemned [F].

(9) Idem, ibid.

(a) See the Remark [D].
(b) Extracted from the Preface which Cælius Secundus Curio prefixed to his Translation of Appian.
(c) Thuanus, Bucholcerus.
(d) Pantal. apud Buchol. Ind. Chron.

" tenacious was he of his purpose, and the way of life " he had once made choice of." Tho' Erasmus judged Gelenius worthy of a better fortune, yet he durst not wish to see him rich; he was apprehensive lest wealth and ease should abate the ardour with which he laboured for the advancement of learning. Gelenius pro sua doctrina non vulgari, proque morum sinceritate dignus est lautiore fortunâ, divitias vix ausim illi optare. Quid periculi inquis? Ne segnior fiat ad provehendam rem literariam. Multos πενία ad industriam stimulat (10). Gelenius, according to Thuanus, struggled with poverty all his life (11).

(10) Erasmus, Epist. 38. lib. 27. pag. 1555.
(11) Cum egestate tota vita conflictatus. Thuan. lib. 13. pag. 271. ad ann. 1554.

FAULTS of Moreri.

[E] He died at Basil.] Moreri has here made an egregious transposition. He makes Thuanus speak thus: Sigismund de Ghelen, a native of Basil, died in Bohemia; whereas that Historian says he was born in Bohemia, and died at Basil (12). Moreri is in the wrong to say Gelenius has translated some Homilies of Origen: he should have said, of S. Chrysostom. Mr. Teissier is likewise in the wrong for not saying it: he has suffered himself to be led into a mistake by those who have abridged Gesner (13). He has also corrected several Homilies of S. Chrysostom: these are Mr. Teissier's word's (14): which seem to deny that Gelenius translated any. Look only into Father Labbe (15), and you will there find several Homilies of S. Chrysostom reckoned up, which were turned into Latin by Gelenius.

(12) In Boëmia natus, Basileæ decessit. Idem, ibid.
(13) Chrysostomi Homilias aliquot cum manuscriptis Græcis exemplaribus contulit, emendavit, supplevit. Epit. Biblioth. Gesner, pag. 753.
(14) Teissier, Elog. tom. 1. pag. 90. Sir Thomas Pope-Blount, Censura Autorum, pag. 459. has fallen into the same error.
(15) De Scriptor. Ecclesiastic. tom. 1. p. 531, & seq.

[F] His Edition of Arnobius has been much condemned.] Here is what Barthius says of it (16): Ingeniosissimus sed audacissimus, & nil prorsus sibi negans, Arnobii corrector Sigismundus Gelenius in eam editionem, quam totam ad suum captum reformavit, aut transformavit potius, testatus neminem sibi unquam auctorem tantum negotii exhibuisse. i. e. " Sigismund Gelenius, the Cor- " rector of Arnobius, a most ingenious, but most bold, " man, and one who takes unbounded liberties, in " his Edition of that Writer, which he has reformed, " or rather transformed, according to his own fancy, " assures us that no Author had ever given him so " much trouble." To this passage add that in the Preface to the Arnobius of the Leyden Edition, 1651. Arnobium quidem hunc primus Romæ vulgaverat Franciscus Priscianensis Florentinus, sed unà cum veteris manuscripti, quo usus fuerat, fœdis admodum erroribus. Sigismundus postea Gelenius Editionem hanc corruptam solo ingenio, uti potuit restituit. Sed ingenii ille fiducia malo exemplo usus, conjecturas suas textui inseruit, antiquas lectiones suo imperio ejecit, & Arnobium nobis effinxit, qui Arnobii speciem non referret. Hanc audaciam merito reprehendit Canterus. i. e. " Franciscus Priscianensis, " of Florence, first published Arnobius at Rome, but " with the foul errors of the old manuscript which he " made use of. Afterwards Sigismund Gelenius re- " stored this corrupt edition as well as he could, " merely by his own genius: but trusting too much " to his abilities, he has inserted his conjectures in the " text, rejected the ancient readings on his own single " authority, and dressed us up an Arnobius which has " no resemblance of the true one. This boldness has " been justly censured by Canterus."

(16) Adversar. lib. 44. cap. 1. apud Pope-Blount, Censura celebr. Autor. pag. 460.

☞GELLIBRAND (HENRY), an eminent Mathematician in the seventeenth Century, was born in the parish of St. Botolph near Aldersgate November the 17th 1597, and became a Commoner of Trinity College in the University of Oxford (a), where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts November the 25th 1619 (b). At this time he did not distinguish himself to any advantage; but upon hearing one of Sir Henry Savile's Mathematical Lectures, by accident, says Mr. Wood (c), or rather to save the sconce of a groat, if he had been absent, he was so extremely pleased with it, that he immediately applied himself to the study of the Mathematics, and made a vast progress in it, before he proceeded Master of Arts, which was on the 26th of May 1623 (d). Upon the decease of Mr. Edmund Gunter, who died in December 1626, he was chosen Professor of Astronomy in Gresham College in London, where he became celebrated on account of his Lectures and Writings [A]. Mr. Wood informs us that he was a Puritan, and that private

(a) Wood, Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 296. and Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 612. 2d edit. London 1721.
(b) Idem, Fasti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 212.
(c) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 612.
(d) Idem, Fasti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 225.

[A] Became celebrated on account of his . . . Writings.] He published Mr. Henry Briggs's Trigonometria Britannica (1) at Gouda in Holland in 1633, in fol. under the following title: Trigonometria Britannica, sive de Doctrinâ Triangulorum Libri duo; quorum prior continet Constructionem Canonis sinuum, tangentium, & secantium, una cum Logarithmis sinuum & tangentium ad gradus & graduum centesimas, & ad minuta & secunda centesimis respondentia. A clarissimo, doctissimo, integerrimoque Viro D. Henrico Briggio, Geometriæ in celeberrimâ Academiâ Oxonienſi Professore Saviliano dignissimo, paulo ante inopinatam ipsius e terris emigrationem compositus. Posterior verò usum sive applicationem Canonis in resolutione triangulorum tam planorum quam sphæricorum, è Geometricis fundamentis petita, calculo facillimo eximiisque compendiis exhibet. Ab Henrico Gellibrando, Astronomiæ in Collegio Greshamensi apud Londinenses Professore constructus. Mr. Gellibrand's Preface is dated at Gresham College October the 30th 1633. Our Author likewise wrote an Appendix concerning Longitude, subjoined to Captain Thomas James's Strange and dangerous Voyage in his intended Discovery of his North-West Passage into the South-Sea, in the years 1631 and 1632. London 1633 in 4to. In the Appendix Mr. Gellibrand observes, that " Latitude and Longitude are two primary affec- " tions of the earth. By the help of these two doth " the Geographer strive to represent the parts of the " earth, that they may keep symmetry and harmony " with the whole. Latitude then is an Arch of the " Meridian, comprehended between the Æquator and " a Parallel; but Longitude is an Arch of the Æ- " quator intercepted between the prime Meridian " and the Meridian of a place, the difference of Lon- " gitudes being the difference of two Meridians. The " measure of the former is the Meridian; the Æqua- " tor of this latter. For the exact settling of Lati- " tudes we have many and absolute helps; so that " the error, if any happen, ought to be imputed to " the imperfect handling of the Artist. But the " Longitude of a Meridian is that which hath and " still wearieth the greatest masters of Geography. " Nevertheless hath not the wise Creator left man " unfurnished of many excellent helps to attain his " desire. For besides Eclipses, especially of the " Moon, (whose leisure we must often wait, and " perhaps go without, if the Heavens be not propi- " tious to us,) we have the concourse of quick-paced " inferior Planets, with superior slow ones, or their " appulses with some fixed Star of known place, or " else some other artifice derived from their motions " and positions. As for the magnetical Needle, to " argue a Longitude from its variation, is altogether " without ground. And though well furnished sea- " men are able by their dead reckonings (as they " term them) to determine the difference of Meridi- " ans somewhat near, yet by reason of the unknown " quantity of a degree in a given measure, (which is " the rule of the ship's way) varieties of adverse winds, " different sets of tides, and other involved incum- " brances, they come often wide of the mark they " aim at. The best way yet known to the world is " that

(1) See the Article of BRIGGS (Henry) Remark [C], vol. 3. pag. 591.

private assemblies of that party were held in his lodgings at Gresham College. His Almanac for the year 1631, published under the name of his servant William Beale, occasioned

" that which is deduced from the cœlestial appearances, which being performed by judicious artists may " in short time rectify our geographical and hydrographical charts hitherto in most places foully distorted." He wrote also the following Treatise, A Discourse mathematical of the Variation of the magneticall Needle: together with its admirable Diminution lately discovered. London 1635 in 4to. In this Tract, which is dated at Gresham-College, 5 Cal. August. 1634, our Author observes (2), that his principal aim in this piece, is to treat of the Deflection of the Needle from the terrestrial Meridian, together with that abstruse and admirable Variation of the Variation lately discovered to the World. The Variation then is the Deflection of the Magnetical Meridian from the Terrestrial, the Horizon determining its quantity and quality. These Meridians sometimes are coincident, and in such places there can be no variation; sometimes again they are different, and then that Hemisphere, wherein either extremity of the needle lies, denominates its quality; for if it be the Eastern Hemisphere, it is called Easterly Variation; if the Western, Westerly. And the Horizon supposed (as all great circles are) to be divided into 360 parts, and each part subdivided into Centesmes or Millesms, defines the quantity as 10, 20, 30, &c. parts of Variation. He then remarks (3), that for the more distinct proceeding, and to give some satisfaction to those, who are not altogether mathematical, it will not be impertinent to the present purpose to give some probable reason for this variation or swerving of the Needle from the Meridians of most places. Take a vigorous magnet, convert it into a spherical body, and having found its poles, delineate the same with Meridians, the Æquinoctial, and Parallels. Then take a fine sewing needle, and applying it to the intersection of a Meridian and the Æquinoctial; it will be found precisely to point out the poles of the stone; and if the needle be moved towards either pole, according to its own direction, it will trace out a circle over the said magnetic pole. But if this spherical magnet shall have a part of it excavated, as admit about the forty fifth parallel and forty fifth meridian or degree of longitude, the needle moved forwards from the aforesaid intersection, as soon as it shall draw near to the limb of this excavation, will forthwith leave its former position, as lying in the plane of the prime meridian, and incline to the other solid side, not respecting at all the aforesaid poles; and this deflection we call the Variation of the Needle. And the greater will this Variation be, the nearer it approacheth to the poles. For whereas before the excavation each side being a like potent, the needle like an upright and indifferent arbiter inclined to neither part; after the excavation it will convert itself to the more solid side, rejecting the imperfect and defective, and so much the more powerfully, by how much the other side shall be found to have lost more of its magnetic vigorous substance. The like will fall out, if the needle be so placed, as that it shall bisect the excavated part; for then will it accurately point out the true poles of the stone formerly found, but suddenly swerve from them after any little dislocation, strongly applying itself to the more solid one. As it is with this little, so likewise with the greater Magnet of the Earth, whose solid magnetic parts are great continents; the defective and excavated the deep and vast channel of the Sea. For if there were observations made in the mid-way between the Easterly Coast of China and this Western of Europe, it is very probable there would be found no variation at all, the Terrestrial and Magnetical Meridians being congrual. But if we shall incline to either side, as admit to the Westward, the needle will in like manner move itself to the Eastern continent, as the more prevalent side, the channel of the Sea being a part deficient of the spherical body of the earth, and the needle finding no encouragement to apply itself thereto. And so likewise for the Ocean, which palliates the imperfect parts of the earth, it is evident, that if the needle shall equally divide the marine distance between two continents, there will be found no variation, as having both the meridians united, the needle equally disposing itself to either continent. But if we shall swerve from this mediety, it will preponderate with the next continent. Mr. Gellibrand afterwards remarks (4), that " hitherto (according to the tenets of all our magnetical Philosophers) we have supposed the variations of " all particular places to continue one and the same; " so that when a Seaman shall haply return to a place, " where formerly he found the same variation, he may " hence conclude, he is in the same former longitude; " for it is the assertion of Master Doctor Gilbert, Variatio uniuscujusque loci constans est, that is to say, " the same place doth always retain the same variation. Neither hath this assertion, (for ought I ever " heard) been questioned by any man. But most diligent magnetical observations have plainly offered " violence to the same, and proved the contrary, " namely, that the variation is accompanied with a " variation." This he proves by observations made by Mr. Burrows at Lime-house near London in 1580, who found the variation there to be 11 degrees 15 minutes, or near one point of the compass; whereas in 1622 Mr. Gunter, Professor of Astronomy at Gresham College, found the variation in the same place to be but 6 degrees 13 minutes; and our Author in 1634 with some friends had recourse to Deptford (where Mr. Gunter had before made the same observations with those at Limehouse) and found it not much to exceed 4 degrees. At the close of this Tract Mr. Gellibrand writes thus (5). " I will not here enter 'into a dispute " concerning the cause of this sensible diminution, " whether it may be imputed to the magnet, or the " earth, or both. It is not unknown to the world, " how the greatest Masters of Astronomy, which this " age hath afforded, for the more easy salving the apparent anomalar motions of the fixed and erratique " celestial lights, and avoiding that supervacaneous " furniture of the ancients, do with all alacrity embrace that admirable Copernican Hypothesis of the " diurnal, annual, and secular motions of the earth; " insomuch as conferring with that great Astronomer " D. Phil. Lansberg in Zeeland about astronomical " matters, he did most seriously affirm unto me, he " should never be dissuaded from that truth. This, " which he was pleased to style a truth, I should readily receive as an Hypothesis, and so be easily led on " to the consideration of the imbecillity of man's apprehension, as not able righly to conceive of this " admirable opifice of God or frame of the world, " without falling foul on so great an absurdity. Yet " sure I am, it is a probable inducement to shake a " wavering understanding. And, which adds somewhat more, I understand by Galilæus, a Florentine, " and most acute and learned Mathematician, that an " Italian Gentleman of the family of the Marsilii " hath lately found the mutation of the Terrestrial " Meridians, and penned a Treatise thereof not yet " published, which the said Galilæus hath seen and " read con stupore, not without amazement. His words " are these: Surge di presente una quinta Novita, &c. " Which in English runs thus: Now there ariseth a " fifth Novelty, from which we may argue the mobility " of the terrestrial Globe, by the means of that which most " subtilely the most illustrious Gentleman Sign. Cæsar of " the most noble family of the Marsilii of Bologna, a Lyncean Academic also, hath discovered, who in a most " learned Tract plainly sheweth how he hath observed a " continual mutation, although very slow, in the meridian line; which discourse, which with wonder I " lately saw, I hope he will impart to all those, who " are studious of the wonders of nature. Surely if it be " so, the due consideration of the premises doth, as I " conceive, lay open a fair way for the salving of that " irregular motion imputed to the axis of the earth; I " mean the alterable obliquity of the ecliptic, which to " deny (as some yet do, not without great violence offered to the antients) I shall hardly, without very strong " arguments, be persuaded. I pretermit likewise a " supposition, which might be made of the correspondent motion of the pole of the magnet with those of " some of the planets; and divers other conceits, " which must be all left to future times to discover, " this invention being but newly presented to the world " in its infancy." Our Author wrote likewise The

(2) Pag. 1.

(3) Pag. 2.

(4) Pag. 6, 7.

(5) Pag. 20.

caſioned them both to be called in queſtion by the High-Commiſſion-Court [B]. He deſigned ſeveral other works for the public, beſides thoſe which he had favoured us with, when he was cut off by death in February 1637, and was interred in the Church of St. Peter le Poore in Broad Street London. His funeral Sermon was preached by Dr. Hannibal Potter, who had been his Tutor in Trinity College. His memory is preſerved in that College by a dial ſet up by him, while he was a ſtudent there, on the Eaſt-ſide of the Old Quadrangle (e).

(e) Idem, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. ubi ſupra, and Athen. Oxon. col. 612, 613.

Inſtitution Trigonometrical, explaining the Doctrine of Dimenſion of plain and ſpherical Triangles, &c. in 8vo. Epitome of Navigation &c. London 1674 &c. in 8vo. Several neceſſary Tables pertaining to Navigation. A Triangular Canon Logarithmical; or a Table of artificial Sines and Tangents, &c. Two Chiliads; or the Logarithms of abſolute Numbers from an unite to 2000. Appendix containing the uſe of the Foreſtaff, Quadrant, and Nocturnal in Navigation. Theſe laſt four Tracts are printed with the Epitome of Navigation. A Treatiſe of building of Ships; in manuſcript, which, after the Author's death, came into the hands of Edward Lord Conway. Almanac for the year 1631, publiſhed under the name of his ſervant William Beale. He wrote alſo a Preface to and publiſhed Sciographia, or the Art of Shadows, London 1635 in 8vo, written by John Wells of Brembridge in Hampſhire Eſq;.

[B] His Almanac for the year 1631, publiſhed under the name of his ſervant William Beale, occaſioned them both to be called in queſtion by the High-Commiſſion Court.] We are informed of this by William Prynne Eſq; in his Canterbury's Doom: or the firſt part of a compleat Hiſtory of the Commitment, Charge, Tryal, Condemnation, Execution of William Laud, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, London 1646 in fol. who tells us (6), that our Author was charged with inſerting in his Almanac the names of the Martyrs mentioned by Mr. John Fox in his Acts and Monuments of the Church, and omitting divers of the Apoſtles and Saints allowed by the Church of England, as alſo the Epiphany, the Annunciation of our Lady, &c. But Mr. Wood obſerves (7), that Mr. Prynne "endeavouring all the ways imagin- "able to bring envy on Dr. Laud, then Biſhop of Lon- "don, who did diſcountenance that Almanac very "much, the Reader therefore is not to believe every "matter, which that implacable perſon doth there "ſet down." T.

(6) Pag. 184.

(7) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 613.

GENTILIS DE BECHIS, a native of Urbino, and Canon of Florence, was promoted to the Biſhopric of Arezzo the 21ſt of October 1473. The Florentines were very glad of it, and ſent him frequently on embaſſies to the Courts of Princes: they made choice of him to go and make their compliments of condolence to Charles VIII, King of France, on the death of the King his father, and to congratulate him on his acceſſion to the throne (a). He gained a reputation by his eloquence, which he diſplayed in the Latin Orations he pronounced in ſeveral places of Italy. He had a ſhare in the education of Leo X. He applied himſelf likewiſe to Poetry. Some Critics mention his productions with a good deal of contempt, and cannot forgive him the barbarous Latin terms which crept into his Works, or bear that the beſt of his Pieces ſhould have in it the phraſe præſtare obedientiam. We ſhall ſee the proof of all this in a paſſage of Alcyonius [A]. The ſpeech wherein this phraſe is to be met with, was that which he made to Pope Alexander VI, on the Embaſſy of obedience. It is pretended that the earneſt deſire he had to harangue on that occaſion, was one of the reaſons which induced Peter de Medicis to hinder the States of Italy from paying that duty to the new Pope all together, and by a ſingle Deputation [B]. Gentilis was ſent Embaſſador to Charles VIII (b) at the time of

(a) Taken from the firſt Volume of Ughelli's Italia Sacra, pag. 479.

(b) Ughelli, ibid.

[A] We ſhall ſee the proof of all this in a paſſage of Alcyonius.] I take it from a Dialogue wherein Julius de Medicis, one of the Interlocutors, ſpeaks in this manner to the Legate, John de Medicis, who was afterwards Pope Leo X. Memini etiam operam te dare Gentili præſuli Aretino homini, ut ſuis temporibus politioris humanitatis laude florentiſſimo. Sed nihil etiam melior ille fuit quàm Politianus: id quod cum ex aliis monumentis ejus perſpici poteſt, cum ex orationibus quas in diverſis Italiæ locis complures habuit, in illis enim multa verba ex trivio arrepta viſuntur, multæ quoque elocutiones barbaræ & agreſtes occurrunt, ſententiæ autem multæ pueriles ac imprudentes ſunt. Nonnulli tamen eam in primis orationem honorifica laude proſequuntur, quam habuit apud Alexandrum VI. Pontif. Max. Legatus populi Florentini paulo poſt quam ille ſacris Chriſtianis publice præfectus eſt. Verum hanc quoque non ſatis dignam video quæ iterum legatur; in ea enim minus eleganter expreſſit id quod homini exprimendum erat elegantiſſime, hoc eſt cauſſam cur Romam veniſſet, quæ erat ut per illum populus Florentinus ſe conferret ad auctoritatem Pontificis Maximi. Ille autem in hoc ſenſu reddendo plebeiam elocutionem uſurpavit, quæ eſt obedientiam præſtare; quam ob rem id genus orationis tempus, ut alias multorum oblivione obruet. Feruntur quoque ejuſdem verſiculi faciliore quidem muſa facti, ſed ſine cultu & Latinæ puritatis nitore (1). i. e. "I recollect alſo that you ſtudy Gen- "tilis, Biſhop of Arezzo, a man very famous in his "time for polite learning. But he was not a whit "better than Politian, as may be ſeen both by his "other remains, and by the ſeveral Orations which "he pronounced in divers parts of Italy: for therein "we meet with many vulgar words, many barbarous "and clowniſh phraſes, and many childiſh imprudent "thoughts. Yet ſome particularly extol the Oration "which he pronounced, when Embaſſador from the "Florentines, before Pope Alexander VI, a little af- "ter his election. But even that, in my opinion, "ſcarce deſerves a ſecond reading; for therein he has "very inelegantly expreſſed what ought to have been "expreſſed with the greateſt elegance, that is, the oc- "caſion of his coming to Rome, which was to ac- "knowledge the Pope's authority, in the name of the "people of Florence. In repreſenting this ſenſe, he "has made uſe of the vulgar phraſe, obedientiam præ- "ſtare; for which reaſon ſuch Orations as theſe, as "well as many others, time will bury in oblivion. "Some verſes of his are alſo handed about, written "in an eaſy way, but not in a polite or pure Latin "ſtyle." This paſſage contains a prediction, which time has verified: for the Orations of our Gentilis are now no more talked of, than if they had never exiſted.

(1) Petrus Alcyonius, in Medice Legato poſteriore, circa fin.

[B] The earneſt deſire he had to harangue, on occaſion of the Embaſſy of obedience to Alexander VI, . . . was one reaſon why that duty was not paid . . . . by a ſingle deputation.] Lewis Sforza had cauſed a reſolution to be taken that the States of Italy ſhould ſend to the Pope only one Embaſſy of obedience, wherein the Deputies of each Prince and Republic ſhould join, ſhould march in their reſpective ranks, ſhould have but one ſpokeſman, and ſhould concert their meaſures ſo well, that if the new Pope had purpoſed to divide them, he might loſe all hopes of ſucceeding . . . . . (2). But Peter de Medicis, who had not dared to oppoſe that reſolution, becauſe he was the only perſon of a contrary opinion, left no ſtone unturned to prevent the execution of it. He had of the expedition of Naples, and ſettled the conditions which the Florentines were to obſerve in that nice ſituation of the affairs of Italy.

(2) Varillas, Hiſt. de Charles VIII, liv. 2 pag. 162. of the Dutch Edition.

had cauſed himſelf to be appointed chief of the Deputation of the Florentines: his equipage was almoſt quite ready; and as none in Italy, except the Republic of Venice, had more money than he, and he ſpared for no expence on ſuch pompous occaſions, he was ſure of making a better appearance alone than all the other Embaſſadors and Deputies together. . . . He conſidered that if his train marched with that of the other Embaſſadors, it would be eclipſed by the great number of them, and that none but the ſharpeſt eyes would diſtinguiſh it in the confuſion; whereas if he made his entry into Rome, and went to audience alone, both the good judges, and thoſe who were but indifferent ones, would do him equal juſtice. Notwithſtanding it would not have been impoſſible to cure him of this prepoſſeſſion, if his friends had endeavoured it: but he among them who was moſt intimate with him, out of a caprice of another kind, confirmed him in his error, inſtead of convincing him of it. This was Scipio Gentilis, a Florentine Gentleman (3), and Biſhop of Arezzo, who had made himſelf very famous by his ſkill in polite literature, and the charms of his converſation. His birth and great riches did not make him the leſs affable, and his exceſſive paſſion for eloquence was almoſt the only fault he had. He was no extraordinary Orator; and yet he had ſo good an opinion of himſelf in that reſpect, that he would hardly yield to the incomparable Savanarola. He had, by his intereſt, obtained of the Republic of Florence, that he ſhould harangue the Pope in their behalf; and had afterwards compoſed his ſpeech with the utmoſt application he was capable of. He had communicated it to Picus of Mirandula, Angelus Politianus, Marcellus Ficinus, and the other Wits of Italy, who having approved of it, had confirmed him in the conceit that it was a maſter-piece: ſo that nothing could diſoblige him more, than to prevent his ſpeaking it; which yet would neceſſarily happen, if there was but one Orator for all Italy: becauſe the King of Naples, as the firſt dignity of all the Princes, would have the right to name him. That Prince, who had in his Capital the moſt flouriſhing Univerſity in Europe for polite learning, of which the celebrated Sannazarius was the Director, would never chooſe a perſon who was not of that body to make a ſpeech to his Holineſs. Gentilis, therefore, animated by his own intereſt, excited Peter de Medicis to that degree that he made him ſollicit the King of Naples for the revival of the cuſtom, that every State in Italy ſhould pay their reſpects to the new Pope ſingly (4). This ſucceeded: The ceremony of obedience was performed by each Prince, and by each Republic of Italy ſeparately; and the two Florentines found their account in it. The equipage of Peter de Medicis ſurpaſſed all the others in magnificence; and the ſpeech of Scipio Gentile was ſo highly eſteemed, that it was placed at the head of the Collection of Pieces of that kind (5).

(3) Ugbelli does not give him this Chriſtian Name: he only calls him Gentilis de Becbis: he makes him a native of Urbino, and not a Gentleman of Florence.

(4) Varillas, Hiſt. de Charles VIII, pag. 163.

(5) Ibid. pag. 165, 166.

Some may think this quotation too long; but I doubt not that ſeveral others will be glad to find here a complete account of ſo curious a fact.

GENTILIS (JOHN VALENTINE) (a), a native of Coſenza [A], in the Kingdom of Naples, left his country on account of Religion about the middle of the ſixteenth Century, and retired to Geneva, where ſeveral Italian families had already formed a Church. Among thoſe Italian Refugees there were ſome who would needs ſubtilize with regard to the myſtery of the Trinity, and the words Eſſence, Perſon, Coeſſential, &c. George Blandrata, a Phyſician, and John Paul Alciatus, a Milaneſe, were the chief of theſe Innovators, with an Advocate named Matthew Gribaud. The ſubject was treated without noiſe, and by private Writings. Gentilis engaged in theſe Diſputes, and contributed not a little to encourage thoſe new Arians. This occaſioned the Articles of Faith, which were drawn up in the Italian Conſiſtory, the 18th of May 1558 [B], and contained the moſt pure and orthodox doctrine with relation to that Myſtery, and by which they promiſed in preciſe terms, and on pain of being reputed perjured and perfidious, to do nothing directly or indirectly, which might wound it. Gentilis ſubſcribed theſe Articles, and notwithſtanding propagated his errors clandeſtinely. Thereupon the Magiſtrates took cognizance of the affair, and put him in priſon. He was convicted of having violated his ſubſcription; which he endeavoured to excuſe by pleading the inſtincts

(a) See the Remark [D] of the Article GENTILIS (Scipio) towards the end.

[A] He was a native of Coſenza.] Some (1) ſay he was not born in that City; others (2) make him a Neapolitan. Nicodemo invincibly refutes them by the teſtimony of ſeveral grave Authors, and by the very ſubſcription of Valentine Gentilis; but he is miſtaken in attributing to Theodore Beza the Hiſtory of that Heretic's execution. To be entirely in the right he ſhould have aſcribed that Work to Benedictus Aretius, after cenſuring Quatromani who had made Calvin the Author of it.

(1) Sertorio Quatromani, in Epiſt. ad Celſum Mollum, apud Leonardum Nicodemum, Addizioni alla Biblioteca Napolitana, pag. 243.

(2) Lindanus, in Dubitantio, Dial. 2. pag. 149, & ex eo Prateolus, in Elench. Hæret. pag. 510. apud Nicodemum, ibid. pag. 244.

[B] This occaſioned the Articles of Faith, which were drawn up in the Italian Conſiſtory the 18th of May 1558.] The Author (3) of the Italian Book which I have quoted, and Calvin againſt Gentilis, ſpeak only of the Articles of the Italian Conſiſtory, and name but five perſons who ſigned them; and ſay, indeed, that Gentilis and five others, having refuſed to ſign immediately, did ſign afterwards when they were ſent for in private (4); but they do not ſay he was one of the ſeven who choſe rather to quit Geneva than to ſubſcribe, till the earneſt ſollicitations of their countrymen obliged them to come back and ſign. It is Signor Leti (5) who, without mentioning the Articles drawn up by the Italian Conſiſtory, gives an account of a much longer ſet, which he ſays was propoſed to be ſigned before the Council. Theſe Articles were nothing more than the Confeſſion of Faith which Calvin had lately drawn up, and which the Miniſters, the Syndics, the Council of twenty five, the Council of two hundred, and the general Aſſembly of the people had approved. He names ſeveral people who ſigned them; and, among others, Galeazzo Caracciolo, Celſo Conte Martinengo, Maſſimiliano ſuo fratello, Miniſtro della Chieſa. But as to the firſt, the Account of his Life informs us that he was not in Geneva from the ſeventh of March, till the fourth of October, 1558; and it was in this interval that the Articles were ſubſcribed, and Gentilis was impriſoned, &c. As to the other two, the ſame Account informs us that we muſt reduce them to one, that is the Miniſter. Now this Martinengo was dead before the Subſcriptions were thought of. See the 262d Letter of Calvin. Signor Leti adds, that ſeven perſons, three of whom were Andrew Oſſellani, Mark Pizzi, and Valentine Gentilis, refuſed to ſet their hands, and left the City; Che in fatti ſi ritirarono della Citta e tra queſti Andrea Oſſellani, Marco Pizzi, e Valentino Gentile: quali vinti poi in breve dalle perſuaſive de loro compatrioti, ſi riduſſero à ſotto ſcrivere (6). What he ſays may be true; but if it be, how much are the Authors of the other Relations to blame, for having ſuppreſſed facts ſo eſſential to this piece of Hiſtory? Dr. Spon (7) agrees with them but in part: he ſays the Council cauſed the general Confeſſion of the Church to be ſigned by the ſuſpected Italians; he owns ſome of them left the city, but not that they returned thither to ſubſcribe; nor does he reckon Gentilis among thoſe who left the city. Why muſt Hiſtory be ſo full of variations? Is it becauſe Writers take a delight in falſifying the Memoirs they copy? Or is it becauſe they do not perceive the alterations they make therein?

(3) Benedictus Aretius. As to his Book ſee below, the Citation (b) in the Margin of the Text of this Article.

(4) See Beza, in the Life of Calvin.

(5) Hiſtor. Genevrina, tom. 3. pag. 104.

(6) Ibid. pag. 117.

(7) Hiſt. de Geneve, ad ann. 1558.

ſtincts of his conſcience. He preſented ſeveral Writings, at firſt to try to palliate and maintain his opinions, and afterwards to appeaſe Calvin, and to confeſs and abjure his errors: in conſideration whereof the Magiſtrates of Geneva ſentenced him only to undergo the Amende honorable, to throw his writings into the fire with his own hands, and to engage not to ſtir out of the City without permiſſion. This ſentence was executed the ſecond of September 1558. He was diſcharged from priſon a few days after; and on the petition which he preſented, alledging his inability to give bail, he was excuſed from it; but they obliged him to ſwear that he would not go out of Geneva without the conſent of the Magiſtrates. Notwithſtanding he ſoon fled, and retired into the country to Matthew Gribaud [C], his Brother Heretic. He then went to Lyons, and afterwards wandred about from place to place in Dauphiné and Savoy; and being no where ſafe, he returned to the village whither he firſt retired, in the territory of the Canton of Bern. He was quickly known there and put in priſon; but he was ſet at liberty in a few days, and publiſhed a Confeſſion of faith ſupported by ſome proofs, and ſome invectives againſt St. Athanaſius. He dedicated it to the Bailiff who had committed him to priſon, and made him very uneaſy by ſuch a dedication [D]. About the ſame time he was impriſoned at Lyons for his doctrine; but being artful enough to perſuade them that his deſign was againſt Calvin, and not againſt the myſtery of the Trinity, he was diſcharged. Blandrata and Alciatus, who uſed their utmoſt efforts in Poland to eſtabliſh their Hereſies, invited him to come to them, and aſſiſt them in their work. They would have done a great deal more miſchief than they did, if they had not been divided among themſelves, and if the King of Poland had not, in 1566, publiſhed an Edict for the baniſhing of all ſtrangers who ſhould teach their new doctrines [E]. Gentilis retired into Moravia, from whence he went to Vienna in Auſtria, and then reſolved to return to Savoy, where he hoped again to find his friend Gribaud; death having alſo delivered him from the moſt formidable enemy he had to fear in thoſe parts, I mean Calvin: but he brought himſelf into a ſnare: for the Bailiff of the Canton of Bern, who had formerly committed him, happened to be ſtill in office, and failed not to ſeize him the eleventh of June 1566 [F]. The cauſe was carried to Bern, where it was under examination from the fifth of Auguſt to the ninth of September. Gentilis, being duly convicted of having obſtinately, and contrary to his oath, attacked the myſtery of the Trinity, was condemned to loſe his head. He gloried in ſuffering, as he pretended, for the honour of God the Father.

[C] He retired into the Country to Matthew Gribaud.] Aretius ſays he retired in pagam Fargiarum; and that the ſaid village is in the country of Gex, in præfectura Gajenſi. This makes me believe there is a fault in the paſſage of Lubieniecius (8), where it is ſaid that Matthæus Gribaldus, celeberrimus Juriſconſultus Patavinus, was pagi Turgiarum Dominus. I ſhould ſay Fargiarum. The country of Gex was then in poſſeſſion of the Canton of Bern.

(8) Hiſt. Reform. Polonicæ, pag. 108.

[D] He dedicated to the Bailiff of Gex a Confeſſion of Faith . . . and made him very uneaſy by ſuch a Dedication.] This Bailiff of Gex had demanded of Gentilis a Confeſſion of Faith, in order to get it examined by the Miniſters, and to ſend it to Bern: thereupon Gentilis cauſed it to be printed, as by the Bailiff's order, and dedicated it to him (9). The Bibliotheca Anti-Trinitariorum tells us (10) that this Bailiff, who had diſcharged Gentilis out of priſon at the requeſt of John Paul Alciatus, became ſuſpected of Hereſy at Bern, becauſe that Confeſſion was dedicated to him; and that he therefore ſecured Gentilis as ſoon as he had an opportunity. This he did to remove ſuſpicions. Whether this be true or no, it is very certain at leaſt that there is ſcarce any machine, which more powerfully moves thoſe who would preſerve or increaſe their dignities, than the deſire of not paſſing for Heretics. If the Hiſtory of all the unjuſt and hypocritical actions which ſpring from this ſource was to be written, what ſtrange things would be brought to light! The Confeſſion of Gentilis, and the pieces joined to it, were printed at Lyons; yet the Title bears Antwerp, and the Bookſeller is made to ſpeak in the Preface under the name of Theophilus ad filios Eccleſiæ. In the proceedings againſt Gentilis, his lies were placed at the head of his impoſtures (11). Some other Works of his own writing were found upon him when he was ſeized; but they were not printed. Aretius (12) and the Bibliotheca Anti-Trinitariorum (13) mention them.

(9) Aretius, pag. 9, & 46.

(10) Pag. 27. Vide etiam Hiſtoriam Reformat. Polonicæ, pag. 107.

(11) Aretius, pag. 46.

(12) Ibid. pag. 11, 12.

(13) Pag. 26, 27.

[E] The King of Poland . . . . in 1566 publiſhed an Edict for the baniſhing of all ſtrangers who ſhould teach new doctrines.] Moreri has here been guilty of ſeveral faults. I. He pretends that Valentine Gentilis was driven out of Poland about the year 1562. In the IId place, that the Edict then publiſhed by King Sigiſmund Auguſtus baniſhed all Heretics. The whole of this is falſe. The Edict was publiſhed in a Diet called on the 5th of March 1566 (14), and did not concern the Calviniſts. Aretius would not have beſtowed ſuch commendations on the King of Poland as he has done, if the Reformed had been comprized in that Edict; and they were ſo far from being ſo, that they were accuſed of having contributed to the publiſhing of it. Inſtigantibus adverſariis Romano & Lemano ſpiritu ductis Rex Auguſtus in Comitio Lublinenſi anno 1566 legem horrendi carminis in Anabaptiſtas, & Trideitas latam promulgari curavit, qua ii intra menſem regni finibus excedere juſſi. i. e. "At the inſtigation of their "adverſaries, moved by the ſpirit of Rome and Ge- "neva, King Auguſtus, in the Diet of Lublin, in "the year 1566, cauſed a very ſevere Edict to be paſ- "ſed againſt the Anabaptiſts and Tritheiſts, by which "they were commanded to quit the Kingdom within "a month." Theſe are the words of Lubieniecius, in the 194th page of his Reformation of Poland. III. Laſtly, he is not at all exact in ſaying ſo generally that Gentilis, going to Bern, had his head ſtruck off there about the year 1565. Father Maimbourg (15) has not entirely avoided an Anachroniſm with regard to Gentilis: he makes him diſpute at the Conference of Petricow in 1566, whereas it was held in 1565.

(14) In Comitiis Pinſovienſibus, anno 1566, 5 Martij celebratis. Aretius, pag. 10. The Hiſtory of the Reformation of Poland, pag. 195. ſays it was in Comitio Lublinenſi, anno 1566.

(15) Hiſt. de l'Arianiſme, tom. 3. pag. 356. of the Dutch Edition.

[F] The Bailiff . . . . who had formerly committed him, happened to be ſtill in office, and failed not to ſeize him, the 11*th of June* 1566.] It was at Gex that Gentilis was arreſted, and not at Bern. He went thither to (16) wait on the Bailiff, to demand his leave for a public diſputation, the plan and conditions whereof were found among the fugitive's papers. He deſired the Bailiff to let the neighbouring Miniſters and Conſiſtories know, that if any one had a mind to maintain Calvin's doctrine againſt Gentilis, he ſhould come to Gex within eight days, to diſpute with him on this condition, that he who could not prove his opinion by the pure word of God, ſhould be put to death as an impoſtor, and a defender of a falſe Religion; and that if no body accepted the challenge, the Bailiff and the whole Council of the Town ſhould declare that Gentilis had orthodox and pious ſentiments of the moſt High God, and his Son Jeſus Chriſt. The anſwer which was given to the firſt overture of this diſpute, was the committing the Heretic to priſon (17).

(16) Aretius, pag. 47, 48.

(17) Ab præfecto Gaienſi petit publicam diſputationem: reſpondit ille, fiat quod juſtum eſt, & ad carceres duci juſſit. Idem, pag. 10.

FAULTS of Moreri.

Father [G], and accuſed the others of Sabellianiſm (b). His opinion was very particular: he believed that in the extent of Eternity God had created a moſt excellent Spirit; which became incarnate when the fulneſs of time was come (c). I do not think this is being a Tritheiſt (d); but without doubt he held ſeveral opinions at different times.

(b) This Article is extracted from a Latin Book printed at Geneva by Francis Perrin, in 1567, in 4to. It contains, beſides divers dogmatical Treatiſes, the Hiſtory of the Condemnation of Gentilis, by Benedictus Aretius, a Divine of Bern. (c) See the Remark [G] at the end. (d) He is called ſo in the Dutch Moreri, in the Article of John Paul Alciatus.

[G] He gloried in ſuffering, as he pretended, for the Honour of God the Father.] Aretius does not tell us that he ſaid any thing more in particular on the day of his execution: but in another place (18) he gives us the detail which I am going to tranſcribe. Gentilis de ſe ita & ſcripſit & loquutus eſt quod eſſet patronus ſummi patris eminentiæ, & aſſertor gloriæ patris. Nec dubitavit etiam dicere, neminem adhuc (quod ipſe quidem ſciret) pro gloria & eminentia patris mortuum eſſe; Prophetas, Apoſtolos, pioſque Martyres, pro Filii gloria perſecutiones, mortem, & extrema quæque paſſos eſſe; eminentiam autem Dei Patris nullos adhuc martyres habere. That is, "Gentilis wrote and ſpoke of himſelf as the patron "of the preeminence of the ſupreme Father, and of "his glory. Nor did he ſtick to ſay, that no one as "yet (that he knew of) had died for the glory and ſu- "periority of the Father; that the Prophets, Apo- "ſtles, and pious Martyrs, had ſuffered perſecutions, "death, and the moſt extreme tortures for the glory "of the Son; but that the ſupremacy of God the "Father had as yet no Martyrs." Let us here ſet down the opinion he profeſſed in a Synod of Poland. Sententia ejus quam in Polonia in Synodo Pinczoviæ ann. 1562, die 4 Novembris celebrata propoſuerat, hæc fuit, Deum creaviſſe in latitudine æternitatis Spiritum quendam excellentiſſimum, qui poſtea in plenitudine temporis incarnatus eſt (19). i. e. "The opinion which he had "propoſed in Poland at the Synod of Pinczow held the "4th of Nov. 1562, was this; That God had in the "extent of eternity, created a moſt excellent Spirit, which "afterwards, in the fulneſs of time, became incarnate."

(18) Pag. 27.

(19) Biblioth. Anti-Trinitarior. pag. 26. Hiſt. Ref. Polon. pag. 107.

GENTILIS (ALBERICUS), Profeſſor of Civil Law at Oxford, was ſon of Matthew Gentilis, an Italian Phyſician [A], deſcended of an ancient and noble family in the March of Ancona. This Phyſician, being perſuaded there were abuſes in the Romiſh Communion, and reliſhing the good ſeed of the Reformation, forſook his country and retired into Carniola with Alberic, his eldeſt ſon, and Scipio, the youngeſt but one, of his ſeven children. Alberic was ſent into England, where his great capacity procured him a good ſettlement, I mean the poſt of Profeſſor of Civil Law in the Univerſity of Oxford, in the year 1582. He had taken his degree of Doctor at Perugia, at the age of one and twenty, and ſhortly after he had been made a Judge in the city of Aſcoli, which preferment he quitted to go into baniſhment with his father, through a ſincere motive of conſcience. He wrote ſeveral Works [B], which got him great reputation. In ſome of them he does not wholly come into the Hypotheſes of the Proteſtants [C]; for his Diſſertation on the firſt Book of the Maccabees wants but very little of being an indirect Apology for thoſe who hold it to be Canonical. Almoſt the ſame judgment may be made of the Treatiſe which he compoſed againſt thoſe who find fault with the Latin of the Vulgate. See the Remark [C]. He died at London the 19th of June 1608, being fifty

[A] He was ſon of Matthew Gentilis, an Italian Phyſician.] I have met with ſomething relating to him in a Work of Scipio Gentilis. An vero Dæmones morborum cauſſa ſint, hanc quæſtionem cum parens meus Matthæus Gentilis optimus & clariſſimus, Matth. Duraſtanti, Med. & Philoſ. præſtantiſſimo propoſuiſſet, edito libro ei reſpondit (1). i. e. "When my father Mat- "thew Gentilis, a very good and learned man, had "propoſed to Matthew Duraſtantes, an excellent Phy- "ſician and Philoſopher, the following queſtion, Whe- "ther Dæmons are the cauſe of diſeaſes; he anſwered "him by a Book which he publiſhed on that ſubject." Note, by the way, that the Phyſician who anſwered that queſtion was here miſcalled, by Konig, Duraſtanes. His true name was Duraſtantes (2).

(1) Scipio Gentilis, in Comment. in Apolog. Apuleij, pag. 260.

(2) See Lindenius renovatus, pag. 504.

[B] He wrote ſeveral Works.] He compoſed three Books de Jure Belli, which have not been unſerviceable to Grotius. He alſo wrote three others de Legationibus. His Diſcourſes concerning the abſolute Power of Kings, the Union of the Kingdoms of Great Britain, and the Injuſtice inſeparable from the reſiſtance of Kings, de vi civium in Regem ſemper injuſta, yet more clearly ſhew that he was not for republican principles, than the ten Diſſertations which he made a preſent of to his ſon, that he might dedicate them, in the year 1607, to the Earl of Pembroke, his patron. They are on the Titles of the Code, Si quis Imperatori maledixerit, ad legem Juliam de majeſtate. His Books de Juris Interpretibus, and de Advocatione Hiſpanica (3), are not the leaſt conſiderable of his Works. I omit the Titles of ſeveral others.

(3) To comprehend the reaſon of this Title, you are to know that Alberic Gentilis was appointed perpetual Advocate in all the Cauſes which the King of Spain's ſubjects ſhould have depending in England. See his Epitaph in Konig's Bibliotheca vetus & nova.

[C] . . . . In ſome of them he does not wholly come into the Hypotheſes of the Proteſtants.] Voetius plainly perceived it. He relates that John Howſon, a Divine of Oxford, maintained in a public Diſputation the opinion of the Roman Catholics concerning the Indiſſolubility of marriage; that is, that adultery may, indeed, be a lawful reaſon to ſeparate from a wife, but not a ſufficient reaſon to juſtify the marrying of another. An Engliſh Divine, named Thomas Pye, wrote againſt this poſition of John Howſon: the latter defended himſelf, and wrote an Apology which was printed at Oxford, in 4to, in the year 1606, with the Theſis and two Letters, one from John Reynolds to Thomas Pye, and the other from Alberic Gentilis to John Howſon. Note, that Reynolds cenſured Pye for having advanced certain things which were not exact; but he perſiſted in the doctrine he had already maintained againſt Bellarmin, in an Engliſh Book concerning Divorce. Gentilis evaded the queſtion, and ſeemed as if he knew not what to think of it. And yet, in his Work de Nuptiis he had declared for the common doctrine of the Proteſtants. Voetius, having related all this, concludes with a Reflection which deſerves to be tranſcribed. Iſte (Alb. Gentilis) in hac Epiſtola haud obſcurè fatetur ſe fluctuare, quamvis antea in libro de Nuptiis affirmantem ſententiam tradidiſſet. Sed neſcio quomodo Albericus Gentilis vaſtæ eruditionis Raynoldianæ, & theologiæ ipſius tanquam nimis puræ & reformatæ in dogmatibus & in practicis, ſi non æmulum (de quo quidem ex ſingularium factorum gnaris aliquid audiſſe memini) ſe oſtendere, ſaltem ſuſpectum ſe reddidiſſe videatur diatribis ſuis de vulgata verſione, de actoribus fabularum, de abuſu mendacii, &c. In quibus tam longè ac diſciplinæ reformata, à moribus antiquis Academiæ Peruſinæ, ubi antea Jus profeſſus erat, non abibat. Sed hæc in tantâ omnium imperfectione miſeriæ humanæ pars non minima (4). i. e. "In this Letter Gentilis pretty plainly "confeſſes himſelf to be in doubt; tho' he had before "delivered his opinion in the affirmative in his Book "concerning Marriage. But Alberic Gentilis, for "ſome reaſon or other, ſeems openly to emulate the "vaſt erudition of Reynolds, and his Divinity, as too "pure and reformed both in practice (of which I re- "member to have heard ſomething from thoſe who "were acquainted with the particular facts,) at leaſt fifty eight years old. He was ſo deſirous of improving in the Sciences, that he ſought to inſtruct himſelf no leſs by converſation than by reading; and he has himſelf declared that his Collections were filled with a thouſand things which he had heard in familiar diſcourſe with people who never imagined what they ſaid would be honoured ſo far. The paſſage wherein he mentions this deſerves a place in our Remarks [D]. See Konig's Bibliotheca, and the funeral Oration of Scipio Gentilis.

(4) Gisbert. Voetius, Politica Eccleſ. tom. 2. pag. 171.

" he has made himſelf ſuſpected of ſo doing, in his " Diſſertations concerning the Vulgate Verſion, Stage- " Players, the abuſe of lying, &c. Wherein he did " not depart, ſo much as the reformed diſcipline does, " from the ancient uſages of the Univerſity of Peru- " gia, where he had formerly profeſſed the Civil Law. " This is not the leaſt inſtance, among ſo many, of " human weakneſs and imperfection."

[D] The paſſage wherein he mentions this deſerves a place in our Remarks.] Here is what we read in one of his Books (5): Quid de Oxonienſibus meis? vel repertoria mea teſtantur ſatis, quantum ego capiam fructus ex eorum virorum & juvenum colloquiis, nam in illis ego deſcripſi non pauca, quæ dum minus id ipſi cogitant, diſco tamen & aſſervo ex ſermonibus familiaribus. i. e. " What ſhall I ſay of my acquaintance at Oxford? " The profit I reap from the converſation as well of " the younger men there, as of thoſe of maturer years, " ſufficiently appears from my Repertories; wherein " I have ſet down many particulars, which I learned " from their familiar diſcourſe, they, at the ſame " time, ſuſpecting nothing of the matter." He adds what had been told him by his father, who had ſtudied the Civil Law under Profeſſor Argenterius. That Profeſſor let nothing drop that he learned in converſation; and had blank Books wherein he carefully wrote down whatever he heard even from the ordinary ſort of people. Tu non audiſti aliquando à Patre de illuſtri præceptore ſuo Argenterio, qui ab uniuſcujuſque ore ſolebat pendere ſi forte aliud agendo excidiſſet homini aliud quod ipſe diſceret, nam & dicta homuncionum curabat reponi in ſua quædam volumina, ſi quæ audiſſet non inepta? Laſtly, our Gentilis relates that Alciatus learned from the action of a peaſant the ſenſe of a paſſage in Plautus, which had been till then unintelligible to him. Refert Alciatus (*) ex facto ſui cujuſdam villici ſe locum Plauti intellexiſſe quem non potuerat antea. God preſerve us from ſuch hearers! they would be the peſt of all companies, were they diſcovered: for a perſon who boldly advances in converſation whatever his memory ſuggeſts to him, would be very cautious and reſerved if he thought, that, at parting, any of the company ſhould go and write down in their Collections all they heard him ſay. A man muſt find frequent miſtakes, both as to proper names, and circumſtances of time and place, when he compares the converſation of perſons who have the happieſt memory, and ſpeak without a premeditated deſign, with the Books in his cloſet (6). Every one may have experienced this, and conſequently muſt wiſh that what he ſays in familiar diſcourſe may not be written down. Thoſe who wiſh the contrary ought never to ſpeak unprepared.

(5) Dial. III, de Variis Interpret. folio 36.

* Lib. 1. Parerg. cap. 21.

THOSE who write down what is ſaid in converſation are dangerous people.

(6) The Scaligerana, the Menagiana, &c. to ſay nothing of Guy Patin's Letters, confirm this truth.

GENTILIS (SCIPIO), brother to Alberic, and as celebrated a Civilian as he, was born at Caſtello di Sangeneſio in Italy, in the year 1563. He was yet a child when his father forſook his native country and his wife, to go elſewhere, that he might openly profeſs the Proteſtant Religion. He did not go out of the houſe with his father; but, ſoon after, means were found to ſteal him from his mother, and, under pretence of a walk, to carry him to his father, who had ſtopped to wait for him ſo ſoon as he got to a place of ſafety. We have already ſaid that he retired to Carniola, and that he ſent his eldeſt ſon to England. As to Scipio, whom he loved very tenderly, he ſent him to ſtudy at the Univerſity of Tubingen. He had wherewith to anſwer that expence; for he enjoyed in Carniola the title of Phyſician of the Province, with a ſalary (a). The young man made great progreſs at Tubingen. He learned the Greek tongue under the famous Martin Cruſius; and found his Genius ſo turned to Poetry, that Meliſſus, who was one of the beſt Poets in Germany, acknowledged himſelf to be his inferior. He afterwards went to ſtudy at Wittemberg, and then at Leyden, that he might be nearer his father, who having been conſtrained to leave Carniola on account of his Religion, had retired into England to his eldeſt ſon. Scipio Gentilis improved very much at Leyden, under Hugo Donellus and Juſtus Lipſius; after which he went to Baſil, and was there created Doctor of the Civil Law, in the year 1689. Some time after he went thence to Heidelberg, where Julius Pacius, an Italian as well as himſelf, taught the Civil Law. There aroſe a ſort of emulation between them, which made Scipio have a mind to leave that City and go to Altdorf, where, by the intereſt of Donellus, who was Profeſſor of Civil Law there, he became his Collegue in the year 1590; and when Peter Weſenbecius was invited into Saxony, our Gentilis was advanced to his poſt of firſt Profeſſor. He was alſo made a Counſellor of the City of Nuremberg. He diſcharged all theſe employments worthily till his death, which happened in the year 1616. His method of teaching clearly and briefly at the ſame time, and of mixing the flowers of polite Learning with the thorns of the Law (for he was a great Humaniſt;) this method, I ſay, being known, as well by his Lectures as by the Books he publiſhed, drew on him invitations from ſeveral famous Univerſities [A]; but he preferred the ſtation he enjoyed in the Univerſity of Altdorf to all the offers which were made him. He had lived a batchelor till the year 1612; but he was at laſt obliged to ſubmit to the conjugal yoke. The beauty and merit of a gentlewoman originally of Lucca, the daughter of Cæſar Calandrini, having captivated his liberty, he aſked her in marriage, and obtained her; and had by her a ſon

(a) Provinciæ proceres . . . conſtituerunt illum Archiatron propoſitis iis conditionibus, & ea erga ipſum munificentia uſi quam ipſe nec aſpernari vellet, nec repudiare ulla ratione poſſet. Orat. funebr. Scipion. Gentil. See alſo Alberic. Gentilis, lib. 3. de Jure Belli, cap. 13. & lib. 3. de Legatis, cap. 14.

[A] His method of teaching . . . . drew on him invitations from ſeveral famous Univerſities.] He was offered a Profeſſorſhip in France, at Heidelberg, and at Leyden; and what is much more remarkable and extraordinary, Pope Clement VIII, to induce him to accept of a Profeſſor's Chair at Bologna, promiſed to allow him liberty of conſcience (1).

(1) Piccart. in Orat. funebri Scip. Gentilis.

ſon [B] and a daughter (b). I ſhall give the Titles of his principal Works [C]. He is mentioned in the Letters of Bongars [D].

(b) Extracted from his Funeral Oration, pronounced by Michael Piccart, Profeſſor of Logic and Metaphyſics at Altdorf. It is in the Collection of the Sieur Witte.

[B] He had . . . a ſon.] We find in a Letter from Voſſius (2) to William Laud Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that this boy's mother, not being in a condition to maintain him at any Univerſity, by reaſon of the loſſes ſhe had ſuffered during the Wars of Germany, endeavoured to get him into ſome College at Oxford or Cambridge. Her friends were to preſent a petition for that purpoſe, and they hoped the memory of Alberic Gentilis would be of ſervice to his nephew. Voſſius prepared the way for this petition: I do not know what was done upon it, or what became of that only ſon of Scipio Gentilis. I obſerve that it is extremely difficult to trace the deſcendants of moſt of the Hero's of the Republic of Letters. Frequently things go well enough for the firſt generation. The ſecond begins to grow obſcure; but the third or fourth are ſo confounded in the crowd, that they are no more to be diſtinguiſhed. So that the ſame could not be ſaid of the poſterity of thoſe great men, that a Roman Satyriſt has ſaid of his own anceſtors, and ſuppoſes ſeveral of the Nobility might ſay of theirs:

(2) It is the 266th; and was written in the year 1635.

REFLECTION on the deſcendants of learned men.

> . . . . Quære ex me quis mihi quartus
> Sit pater, haud prompte, dicam tamen: adde etiam unum,
> Unum etiam, terræ eſt jam filius (3).

(3) Perſ. Sat. 6. ver. 57.

> " . . . . Why prythee what am I? I know
> " My Father, Grandſire, and great Grandſire too;
> " If farther I derive my pedigree,
> " I can but gueſs beyond the fourth degree.
> " The reſt of my forgotten Anceſtors
> " Were ſons of Earth." Dryden.

The fourth degree downwards is already in the dark. What ſhall I ſay of ſo many men rendred illuſtrious by their learning, whoſe families are as obſcure in the firſt degree below them, as in the firſt degree above them? Should we not ſay that they are lights which we ſee ſhine afar off in the midſt of a dark night, without diſcovering any thing around them, by reaſon of the obſcurity which ſurrounds them on every ſide? See the Remark [B] of the Article BENSERADE.

[C] I ſhall give the Titles of his principal Works.] Here they are: De Jure publico populi Romani. De Conjurationibus libri duo. De Donationibus inter virum & uxorem libri IV. De Bonis maternis & ſecundis Nuptiis libri duo. In Apulei Apologiam Commentarius. De Juriſdictione libri tres. Commentarius in Pauli Epiſtolam ad Philemonem. De Erroribus Teſtamentorum. His funeral Oration with a Catalogue of his Works is in the Collection of Sieur Witte; but it muſt be obſerved that ſome Writings are aſcribed to him in that Liſt which belong to his brother; as the Treatiſe de Jure Belli, and that de Legationibus; and that no mention is there made of his Book de antiquis Italiæ Linguis, or of his Notes on Tacitus, or his Quæſtiones ad Africanum Juriſconſultum. Theſe are three Works which he takes notice of in his Commentary on Apuleius's Apology.

[D] He is mentioned in the Letters of Bongars.] If I remember well, he is almoſt always denoted by the words Scipio noſter, or the like. The Latin Tongue allows and approves this expreſſion; but the French Tranſlator is much in the wrong to render it by Monſieur Scipion. This is mere ignorance; for if he had known that the perſon meant was Scipio Gentilis, he would have ſaid Monſieur Gentilis, and not Monſieur Scipion (4).

(4) This fault is in the Hague Edition, 1695.

Note that this cuſtom of calling people in Latin, as well by their Chriſtian name as by the ſurname of their family, occaſions a great many miſtakes; and I fancy it has led Konig into an error with reſpect to Gentilis the Arian. He ſpeaks of him twice, without perceiving him ſtill to be the ſame Heretic. He ſpeaks of him under the word Gentilis, and under the word Valentinus. In the firſt place (5) he gives him the Chriſtian name of Johannes only; and ſuppoſes Valentinus to be a ſurname taken from the place where he was born. In the ſecond place (6) he gives him the ſurname of Valentinus, as that of his family, and the Chriſtian name of Johannes. The original ſource of this miſtake proceeded probably from ſome Books, wherein that perſon is ſimply named Valentinus, without any other addition; which was giving him only one half of his prænomen or Chriſtian name.

(5) Konig, Bibliotb. pag. 341.

(6) Idem, ibid. pag. 826.

GENTILLET (INNOCENT), a native of Vienne in Dauphiné (a), flouriſhed in the ſixteenth Century. He publiſhed ſome Books of Controverſy, which made him eſteemed by the Proteſtant Party [A]: for he diſplayed his learning, and ſhewed a great deal of zeal againſt Popery. He was a Civilian by profeſſion; and it is ſaid he was an Advocate in the Parliament of Toulouſe (b). I have ſeen in the Title page of one

(a) Allard, Bibliotb. de Dauphiné, pag. 114.

(b) See the Remark [B].

[A] He publiſhed ſome Books of Controverſy, which made him eſteemed by the Proteſtant party.] He did for them what Quadratus, Ariſtides, Juſtin Martyr, Melito, Tertullian, and ſome others had done for the primitive Chriſtians; I mean he wrote an Apology for them. He dedicated it to the King of Navarre, afterwards King of France. The Epiſtle Dedicatory is dated the 15th of February 1578. The Edition he publiſhed of it ten years after was very much enlarged, and well corrected. And note, that he publiſhed this Work in Latin and French. Here is the Latin Title: Apologia pro Chriſtianis Gallis Religionis Evangelicæ ſeu Reformatæ, qua docetur hujus Religionis fundamenta in ſacra Scriptura jacta eſſe, ipſamque tum ratione, tum antiquis Canonibus, comprobari. The Edition I make uſe of is the ſecond, and was printed at Geneva by James Stoer, 1588, in 8vo. The ſtyle there given him is, Authore INNOCENTIO GENTILLETO Juriſconſulto clariſſimo, & ampliſſimi Senatus Provinciæ Delphinenſis præſide. The work which he intitled Le Bureau du Concile de Trente: auquel eſt monſtré qu'en pluſieurs poincts iceluy Concile eſt contraire aux anciens Conciles & Canons, & à l'autorité du ROY. i. e. " The Trial of the " Council of Trent; wherein the ſaid Council is " proved in many points to be contrary to the anci- " ent Councils and Canons, and to the King's autho- " rity," was printed in the year 1586, in 8vo. He dedicated it to the ſame King of Navarre, and dated the Epiſtle Dedicatory the 12th of July 1586. He ſtiles himſelf ſimply Innocent Gentillet, a Civilian of Dauphiné. He publiſhed the ſame Book in Latin, the ſame year, under the Title of Examen Concilii Tridentini: in quo demonſtratur, &c. There have been ſeveral Editions of this Work: the laſt, if I am not miſtaken, is that of Gorcum in Holland, printed in 1678. Obſerve theſe words in the Epiſtle Dedicatory (1): Seeing therefore, SIR, that thoſe who find fault with your Declaration ground their opinion wholly on the Council of Trent, I thought my duty for your ſervice, and my country, ſufficiently commanded me to employ the leiſure which by the Edict of Reunion, as it is called, I enjoy in my exile, in ſapping that foundation. The Declaration he ſpeaks of is that which the King of Navarre had cauſed to be every where publiſhed, that he would abide by the deciſion of a free Council, as to the differences of Religion in France. This Declaration was publiſhed in the year 1585; the Edict of Reunion was made the ſame year. We may conclude, therefore, that Gentillet did not ſet about the work we are ſpeaking of before that year, and conſequently that Voetius is miſtaken when he ſays (3) that Book was publiſhed in Latin in the year 1556, under the Title of Hiſtorica Relatio & Nullitas Concilii Tridentini. He adds that it was printed at Amberg in 1615. Note that in 1556 the Council of Trent was not yet concluded.

(1) Gentillet, Epitre Dedicat. du Bureau du Concile du Trente.

(2) Idem, ibid.

(3) Voetius, Politic. Eccleſ. tom. 4. pag. 271.

(e) See the Remark [A].

one of his Books, that he ſtiles himſelf Preſident in the Parliament of Grenoble (c). He informs us, in a preface (d), that he was in baniſhment by reaſon of the Edicts which had been publiſhed in France againſt thoſe of the Reformed Religion. Some aſſert that he was Syndic of the Republic of Geneva, and that he concealed himſelf under the name of Joachimus Urſinus Anti-Jeſuita [B], in the Titles of ſeveral Books which he preſented to the public. I believe Mr. Allard is miſtaken, when he affirms (e) that VINCENT GENTILLET, his ſon, Counſellor, and afterwards Preſident in the Chamber of the Edict of Grenoble, wrote the Antimachiavel in 1573, a Remonſtrance to King Henry III, ſeveral Rules concerning Government, and tranſlated Joſias Simler's Book of the Republic of Switzerland. I wonder ſo few particulars are to be found of the Life of a man who diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his Writings, and his employments; and I cannot ſufficiently admire that even they who have compiled an Account of the Authors of his Province, could not fill up ſix lines concerning him, without committing ſeveral blunders.

(d) See the ſame Remark.

(e) Allard, ubi ſupra, pag. 115.

GERGENTI,

[B] Some aſſert that he was Syndic of the Republic of Geneva, and that he concealed himſelf under the name of Joachimus Urſinus Anti-Jeſuita.] Pray conſider theſe words of Placcius (4): ANTIMACHIAVELLI nomine vulgo inſigniuntur commentariorum de regno . . . . libri tres . . . . qui citantur ſub nomine Innocentii GENTILETI JCti Delphinatis olim Toloſanæ curiæ Advocati, dein Genevenſis Reip. Syndici. i. e. "The three Books "of Commentaries de Regno, ... which are cited "under the name of Innocent GENTILLET, a Civi- "lian of Dauphiné, formerly Advocate in the Parlia- "ment of Toulouſe, and afterwards Syndic of the "Republic of Geneva, uſually bear the Title of AN- "TIMACHIAVEL." To prove this he quotes Draudius, page 1169 and 1144 of his Bibliotheca Claſſica; Voetius, page 124, 209, 211, 218, of the firſt Volume of his Theological Theſes; Pellerus, page 505 of his Politicus ſceleratus impugnatus; Conringius, in the Preface to his Edition of Machiavel's Prince; and Kerkerman, in the firſt Chapter of his Conſilium de locis communibus. Here are five Authors whom he cites; I have been able to conſult only the three firſt, and I find nothing in any of them which intimates that Gentillet ever pleaded in the Parliament of Toulouſe, or bore any office in the Republic of Geneva. It is even to be obſerved that Pellerus ſtiles him Juriſconſultus Delphenſis; which would make one apt to believe that Gentillet was of Holland, and not of Dauphiné. Monſr. Baillet takes notice (5) that, according to the common opinion, the Author of the Antimachiavel was a Huguenot of Dauphiné, named Innocent Gentillet, who was firſt an Advocate in the Parliament of Toulouſe, and afterwards Syndic of the Republic of Geneva (α).

(4) Placcius, de Anonymis, pag. 60.

(5) Baillet, tom. 2. des Anti, pag. 131.

(§ α) In the 43d page of the Citadin de Geneve, among the famous Lawyers who have delivered their Oracles in Geneva, we meet with Innocent Gentillet, but it is not there ſaid that he had born any office there. REM. CRIT.]

With reſpect to Joachimus Urſinus Anti-Jeſuita, Placcius (6) ſets down five Works which have appeared under that fictitious name. The firſt is intitled Concilii Tridentini Hiſtorica Relatio, & nullitas ſolidè & ex fundamento demonſtrata, and was printed at Amberg in the year 1615, in 8vo. The ſecond bears the title of Apologia pro Chriſtianis Gallis Religionis Reformatæ, at Geneva, 1598, in 8vo. The third is intitled Stupenda Templi Jeſuitici: it is divided into three parts, and was printed at Francfort, and at Amberg, in the year 1610, in 8vo. The title of the fourth is Floſculi blaſphemiarum Jeſuiticarum, ex tribus Concionibus ſuper beatificatione Ignatii Loyolæ habitis decerpti, unà cum Sorbonæ Pariſienſis Cenſura. This Work was printed in 1612, in 4to. The fifth was printed at Amberg, in the year 1611, in 8vo, and is intitled, Hiſpanicæ Inquiſitionis, & carnificinæ ſecretiora, ubi præter illius originem . . . . exemplis illuſtrioribus tum Martyrum, tum articulorum, & regularum inquiſitoriarum in fine adjectis per Joachimum Urſinum Anti-Jeſuitam de Jeſuitis qui Inquiſitionem Hiſpanicam in Germaniam & Bohemiam vicinam introducere moliuntur, præfantem. Vincent Mollerus, Burgomaſter of Hamburgh, and great grandfather to Placcius, had with his own hand ſet the name of Innocent Gentillet to the firſt of theſe five Works; which, with ſome other reaſons, induced Placcius to believe it was the true name of the pretended Joachim Urſinus (7). Mr. Baillet (8) has followed this opinion, and has attributed (9) to the ſame Gentillet a Work printed at Francfort, in the year 1612, under the Title of Anti-Socinus, hoc eſt, Solida confutatio errorum quos olim Arriani, &c. I have not Books enough to clear all this.

(6) Placcius, de Pſeudonymis, pag. 275.

(7) Idem, ibid. pag. 276.

(8) Baillet, ut tome 1 des Anti, pag. 197.

(9) Ibid. tom. 2. pag. 11.

[C] I believe Mr. Allard is miſtaken, when he tells us that VINCENT GENTILLET, &c.] He obſerves (10) in the firſt place that the Examination of the Council of Trent is a Work of Innocent Gentillet, an Author, ſays he, who lived in the reign of Henry III; and then he adds that Vincent Gentillet his ſon . . . . . wrote the Antimachiavel in the year 1573. This is running counter to the uſage of Chronology: for when they ſet down the ages of illuſtrious men, they allow ſome diſtance between the fathers and the ſons, the maſters and the ſcholars: tho' it pretty frequently happens that the time the former continue in reputation concurs with the flouriſhing ſtate of the latter. The Author of the Bibliotheque de Dauphiné has not followed this rule: he places the father under Henry III, and fixes the writing of the principal Work of the ſon higher, under Charles IX. This is a leſs miſtake than that which I am going to take notice of. He ſhould have ſaid, according to the general opinion, that the Antimachiavel was the production of Innocent Gentillet, and not the production of his ſon. I have not met with any Bibliographer who mentions this Vincent Gentillet, ſon of Innocent; and it is certain that la Croix du Maine (11) aſcribes to Innocent Gentillet all the Works which Mr. Allard ſpecifies as the Writings of Vincent. It is true, la Croix du Maine is miſtaken with regard to the Chriſtian name; for he has put Francis inſtead of Innocent (12). The poſt of Preſident in the Chamber of the Edict of Grenoble, which he beſtows on that Writer, confirms me in the opinion that he had our Innocent Gentillet in view, who, as we have ſeen (13), ſtiles himſelf, in the Title to the Apology for the Reformed, ampliſſimi Senatus Provinciæ Delphinenſis Præſes. I gueſs he was made Preſident of the Chamber of the Edict at Grenoble, when that kind of Tribunal was granted the Huguenots in each Parliament, in the year 1576 (14). This intitled him to the quality of Preſident in the Parliament of his Province. We have ſeen (15) that the Edict of Reunion was the cauſe of his baniſhment; and I add here, that Poſſevin (16) has obſerved that the Calviniſt Author who had written againſt Machiavel, had taken refuge at Geneva. This is a freſh proof that Mr. Allard has been miſtaken in attributing the Work againſt Machiavel not to the father, but to the ſon. The Preface which the French Tranſlator has prefixed to Joſias Simler's Treatiſe on the Republic of Switzerland, has nothing in it which may induce us to conjecture that our Gentillet was the man; and yet I am apt to believe him to be the Author of that Verſion. Some actually aſcribed it to him, as we are told by la Croix du Maine. It was printed at Paris, in the year 1578 (17) (β), and at Antwerp, in the year 1580, in 8vo. Simler had publiſhed that Work in Latin, in the year 1576, and died ſome months after (18).

(10) Allard, Biblioth. de Dauphiné, pag. 114, 115.

(11) In the Bibliotheq. Françoiſe, pag. 97.

(12) Kecker-man, apud Placcium de Pſeudonymis, has committed the ſame fault.

(13) In the Remark [A].

(14) Mezerai, Abrégé Chron. tom. 5. pag. 212.

(15) In the Remark [A].

(16) Poſſevin. Biblioth. lib. 16. cap. 5.

(17) For James du Puys; the King's Licence is dated the 16th of Auguſt 1577.

(18) See the Tranſlator's Preface.

I ſhall ſpeak more fully elſewhere (19) of Gentillet's Anti-Machiavel.

(19) In the Remark [E] of the Article MACHIAVEL.

(§ β) From an Edition in 8vo of the year 1577, without any name of the place, for Antony Chupin and Francis le Preux. REM. CRIT.]

GERGENTI, a city of Sicily, formerly called Agrigentum, or Acragas. I ſpeak of it only to correct the faults of Moreri [A]. His omiſſions would require a long diſcourſe; for he has forgotten the moſt curious things which might be ſaid of Agrigentum [B].

GIFANIUS

[A] I ſpeak of it only to correct the faults of Moreri.] 1. It is not true that this city took its name from the mountain Agragas. Stephanus Byzantinus, who ſets down three other etymologies, takes no notice of that. Several towns in Sicily bore the names of their rivers (1); and this was one of the number, according to the firſt (2) of the three opinions mentioned by that Author. It is certain that it was built on the river Acragas (3); but, according to the third opinion (4), both the river and the town were ſo called from the goodneſs of the ſoil. I omit the ſecond opinion, according to which the city owed its name to Acragas, the ſon of Jupiter and Aſterope. II. It is not true that Virgil mentions the mountain Acragas; for the two Verſes (5) quoted by Moreri plainly ſignify no more than a town ſituate on an eminence. III. It was neceſſary for him to have named the Author who ſays that the Ionians, led by Gellus, or Gelo, laid the firſt foundation of Agrigentum; for that Author muſt be a very apocryphal one, ſince Cluverius knew nothing of him, or did not think him worth quoting. It would have been better to have ſaid nothing of that Gellus, or Gelo, and to have told us, from Thucydides, that the inhabitants of Gela ſent a colony to Acragas, 108 years after the founding of Gela (6). Now ſince Gela was built jointly by Antiphemus, leader of a company of Rhodians, and Entimus, leader of a company of Cretans, who eſtabliſhed there the Laws of the Dorians (7), I ſhould rather take Agrigentum for a Dorian, than for an Ionian colony. Thucydides, who ſets down the time and names of the founders, deſerves a little more credit in this particular than Strabo, who has contented himſelf with ſaying, in a vague manner, that Agrigentum belonged to the Ionians (8). I do not think he has ſaid it more than once, and I am ſure he has mentioned that town but ſeldom: wherefore I reckon for the IVth fault the following words of Moreri: it is on this account that Strabo uſually gives Agrigentum the epithet of Ionian. Before I go any farther, I ſay Polybius ſpeaks of Agrigentum as a Colony of the Rhodians (9). A groſs error has crept into Cluverius, which his Abbreviator has not corrected. We read there (10) that the inhabitants of Gela founded Agrigentum in the 99th Olympiad. It ſhould be the 49th; for here is the computation of Cluverius: he places the founding of Syracuſe in the ſecond year of the eleventh Olympiad; forty five years after which, according to Thucydides (11), Gela was founded by the Rhodians and Cretans, and according to the ſame Author, thoſe of Gela ſent a Colony to Agrigentum 108 years after their own city had been founded: they ſent it, therefore, in the 49th Olympiad. V. He ſhould not have quoted Ælian as to the luxury of the Agrigentines in their houſes and at their meals, without mentioning what he quotes from Plato; for a ſtroke of wit coming from Plato (12) has incomparably more force than if it came from Ælian. VI. It is not true that Diodorus Siculus acquaints us that Alcamon bore rule in Agrigentum after Phalaris, and that Alcander, Theron, and Thraſideus were the ſucceſſors of Alcamon. VII. Nothing is more oppoſite to the rules of exact Narration than to join together the time when the town of Agrigentum was taken by the Carthaginians, and the time when it became a part of the Roman Commonwealth: for the ſtate of the Agrigentines ſuffered many conſiderable changes between their being plundered by the Carthaginians, in the fourth year of the 93d Olympiad, and their becoming ſubject to the Romans. The latter made themſelves maſters of Agrigentum during the ſecond Punic War, but were not poſſeſſed of it when they took Syracuſe; for even after the taking of that city, the Carthaginians, who were maſters of Agrigentum, cut them out a good deal of Work (13). VIII. He ſhould not have applied to the time when it was ſubject to the Roman yoke, the magnificent deſcription which Diodorus Siculus has left us of it. This deſcription relates to the flouriſhing ſtate of the Agrigentines when the Carthaginians attacked them in the 93d Olympiad. The city recovered itſelf from the dreadful condition to which that war had reduced it: we even find that its forces were very formidable at divers times (14) after the ſacking it underwent, when it fell into the power of the Carthaginians, the year I have mentioned; but it is confounding times to ſay with Moreri, that it was one of the moſt flouriſhing cities of the Roman Empire, large, beautiful, and extremely well peopled, when the Romans drove the Carthaginians thence and eſtabliſhed themſelves there. IX. Empedocles the Philoſopher, and Empedocles the Poet are one and the ſame man; wherefore Moreri ſhould not have ſplit him into two illuſtrious Agrigentines. X. Cicero does not ſpeak of the temple and ſtatue of Hercules at Agrigentum, as one of the fineſt works of Antiquity. At moſt he ſpeaks ſo of the ſtatue only, and contents himſelf with ſaying of the Temple that the Agrigentines looked on it as a very holy place: Herculis templum eſt apud Agrigentinos non longè à foro ſane ſanctum apud illos & religioſum (15). As to the ſtatue he ſays it was one of the fineſt he ever ſaw in his life; but he confeſſes he was not a proper judge, and that in ſuch matters he had made more uſe of his eyes than he had acquired ſkill (16). If Moreri had had any diſcernment with regard to thoſe things which ſtrike a Reader moſt, he would have added a very ſingular circumſtance concerning this ſtatue; that the lips and chin of it had been worn away by being ſo often kiſſed out of devotion. Rictus ejus ac mentum paulo ſit attritius, quod in precibus & gratulationibus non ſolum id venerari, verum etiam oſculari ſolent (17). XI. Pliny has not ſaid of the Salt of Agrigentum what Moreri imputes to him; but only that it bears the fire, and leaps out of the water. Of theſe two properties Moreri has omitted the laſt, and given a bad account of the firſt; for he tells us Pliny ſays that Salt melted in the fire. If he had a mind to tell us this, he ſhould have quoted other Authors than Pliny; for the words of that Writer (18), Agrigentinus (ſal) ignium patiens (19) ex aqua exilit, ſignify only that that ſalt crackled in the water, and leaped out of it, but that it bore the fire without crackling. By citing Solinus, or St. Auguſtin, Moreri would have had no cenſure to fear. Here are the words of Solinus: Salem Agrigentinum ſi igni junxeris, diſſolvitur uſtione: cui ſi liquor aquæ proximaverit, crepitat veluti torreatur (20). i. e. "If you throw Agrigentine Salt into the fire, it diſſolves by the heat; but "if into water, it crackles as if it were burning." St. Auguſtin alledges this phænomenon as an argument againſt the incredulous, who rejected all miracles in Religion, whenever the Divines could not explain them. He offers to the conſideration of thoſe unbelievers ſeveral natural things which the Philoſopher could not account for: and he begins with the ſingular properties of the Salt of Agrigentum. Agrigentinum Siciliæ ſalem perhibens cum fuerit admotus igni velut in aqua flueſcere; cum vero aquæ, velut in igne crepitare (21). i. e. "It is ſaid that the Salt of "Agrigentum in Sicily when held to the fire melts "as if in water; but when put into water, crackles "as if in the fire." Note, in anſwer to thoſe who would excuſe Moreri, that there is a vaſt difference between melting in the fire, and bearing fire without cracking, I ſay nothing of his falſe quotations (22). I only obſerve, to conclude this Remark, that there are a great many Articles in Moreri's Dictionary, which have no leſs a number of faults than this.

[B] . . . . He has forgotten the moſt curious things which might be ſaid of Agrigentum.] I have already cenſured him for having mentioned neither the devout kiſſes which had worn the lips of the brazen Hercules of the Agrigentines, nor one of the wonderful properties of the ſalt of Agrigentum. He deſerves no leſs blame for having ſaid nothing of the properties of the lakes which were near the city. The water of them was ſalt like that of the ſea, but men did not ſink in it; and

(1) Duris, apud Steph. Byzant.

(2) Thucydides, lib. 5. & Ariſtarchus, apud Scholiaſten Pindari in Od. II Olymp. are of this opinion.

(3) See Polybius, lib. 9. cap. 7; Ælian, Var. Hiſt. lib. 2. cap. 33; the Scholiaſt on Pindar ex Ariſtarcho, ubi ſupra; & Thucydides, ibid.

(4) Polybius, apud Stephanum Byzantinum.

(5) Arduus inde Acragas, oſtentat maxima longe Mœnia, magnanimûm quondam generator equorum. i. e. "Then lofty "Acragas appear "from far, "With mighty "walls begirt; "renown'd of old "For breeding "horſes generous "and bold." Virgil. Æneid. 3. ver. 704.

(6) Thucyd. lib. 6. circa init.

(7) Idem, ibid.

(8) Strabo, lib. 6. pag. 187.

(9) Polyb. lib. 9. cap. 7.

(10) Sicil. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 15. pag. m. 108.

(11) Thucyd. lib. 6. circa init.

(12) Diogenes Laertius, lib. 8. in Empedocle, attributes to Empedocles what Ælian aſcribes to Plato.

(13) See Cluverius, Sicil. Antiq. pag. 112. quoting Livy, lib. 24, & 25.

(14) See Cluverius, ibid. citing Diodorus Siculus, lib. 16 & 19.

(15) Cicero, in Verrem, Orat. 6. cap. 43.

(16) Ibi eſt ex ære ſimulacrum ipſius Herculis quo non facile quicquam dixerim me vidiſſe pulcrius: tametſi non tam multum in iſtis rebus intelligo quam multa vidi. Idem, ibid.

(17) Idem, ibid.

(18) Plin. lib. 31. cap. 7. pag. m. 807.

(19) Meurſius, in Antigon. pag. 188. gueſſes we ſhould read impatiens. Father Hardouin, in hunc locum Plinii, abſolutely rejects this conjecture.

(20) Solin. cap. 5.

(21) Auguſt. de Civitate Dei, lib. 21. cap. 5. See alſo cap. 7.

(22) He quotes Pliny, lib. 31. c. He ſhould have ſaid chap. 7. He ſhould have cited Thucydides in the 6th Book, and not l. 5; and Cluverius in Sicilia Antiqua, and not in Deſcr. Ital.

GIFANIUS (OBERTUS) was a learned Humaniſt, and a great Civilian. He was of Buren in Gelderland. He ſtudied at Louvain, and at Paris, and was the firſt who erected the Library of the German Nation at Orleans. He took his degree of Doctor of the Civil Law in that City, in the year 1567, and went thence to Italy in the retinue of the French Embaſſador; after which he removed to Germany, where he taught the Civil Law with ſo much capacity that he acquired a very great reputation. He taught it firſt at Straſburgh, where he was likewiſe Profeſſor of Philoſophy: then he taught in the Univerſity of Altdorf, and at laſt at Ingolſtadt. He forſook the Proteſtant Religion to embrace the Roman Catholic. He was invited to the Imperial Court, and honoured with the office of Counſellor and Referendary to the Emperor Rodolph. He died at Prague, the 26th of July 1609 [A], being above ſeventy (a) years old (b), if we believe certain Authors; but ſome others, who had better information, place his death in the year 1604 (c). He had ſcraped up a good deal of money; for he was a good Oeconomiſt [B]. He has been accuſed of a notorious breach of truſt with regard to the Manuſcripts of Fruterius [C]: and he was put into the Liſt of Plagiaries.

(a) Sixty five, according to Witte, in Diario Biograph.

(b) Extracted from Val. Andreas, Biblioth. Belg. pag. 703.

(c) Thuanus does ſo, lib. 131, pag. m. 1041.

and even thoſe who could not ſwim floated on it like wood. Περὶ Ἀκράγαντα δὲ λίμναι, τὴν μὲν γεῦσιν ἔχουσι θαλάττης, τὴν δὲ φύσιν διάφορον· ὕδὲ γὰρ τοῖς ἀκολύμβοις βαπτίζεσθ συμβαίνει, ξύλων τρόπον ἐπιπολάζουσιν. Apud Agrigentum lacus ſunt guſtu marino, natura planè diverſa: nam & natandi inſcii in iis lignorum in morem ſupernatant (23). How many ſingular things might he not have taken out of the XIIIth Book of Diodorus Siculus, concerning the luxury of the Agrigentines, their riches, and the expence one of them was at to entertain ſtrangers? He ought not to have omitted that that part of the city which ſerved as a fortreſs, was built before the taking of Troy; that it was built, I ſay, by Dædalus, the moſt ſkilful Engineer of Antiquity. He fortified the place ſo well that three or four men might defend it. This determined King Cocalus to make it his reſidence, and to lodge all his treaſures there (24). I would not have omitted the ardent zeal of the Agrigentines againſt thoſe whom the Prætor Verres ſent to the Temple of Hercules with orders to take away the ſtatue. They forced the guards of the Temple, and were a whole hour endeavouring to move the Hercules by ſtrength of arms, and by engines. But notwithſtanding the darkneſs of the night the Agrigentines had time to arm themſelves, and drive the Satellites of Verres out of the Temple. So ſoon as the alarm was given, every body got up: the old men and the infirm found vigour enough to go to the aſſiſtance of Hercules, with ſuch weapons as came firſt to hand. Ex clamore fama tota urbe percrebuit, expugnari Deos patrios, non hoſtium adventu, neque repentino prædonum impetu: ſed ex domo atque cohorte prætoria manum fugitivorum inſtructam, armatamque veniſſe. Nemo Agrigenti neque ætate tam affecta, neque viribus tam infirmis fuit, qui non illa nocte eo nuncio excitatus, ſurrexerit, telumque, quod cuique ſors offerebat, arripuerit (25). This great zeal did not hinder the inhabitants from turning the adventure into a jeſt: they ſaid it ought to be added to the other labours of the God, and that Verres was as great a monſter as the boar of Erymanthus. Nunquam tantum mali eſt Siculis quin aliquid facete & commode dicant, velut in hac re: ajebant in labores Herculis non minus hunc immaniſſimum Verrem, quam illum aprum Erymanthium inferri oportere (26).

(23) Strabo, lib. 6, pag. 189.

(24) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 4.

(25) Cicero, in Verrem, Orat. 6. cap. 43.

(26) Idem, ibid.

[A] He died at Prague, the 26th (1) of July 1609.] Swertius (2) and Valerius Andreas (3) ſay ſo; but I do not know how to reconcile this with the Scaligerana, where mention is made of the death of Gifanius. An Italian Jeſuit was preſent at his death, and has plundered a great many of his papers, and is gone away to Rome (4). Could Scaliger ſay this, who died the 21ſt of January 1609? To remove the difficulty, you have my leave to ſuppoſe that a falſe report was ſpread of Gifanius's death, which was the ground Scaliger went on, or that the Compilers of the Scaligerana have inſerted many things therein which they never heard from Scaliger's mouth. This may be obſerved in other paſſages of that compilation. But the ſureſt method is to ſay that Swertius and Valerius Andreas are miſtaken, by not having followed Thuanus, who has placed the death of Gifanius in the year 1604.

(1) The 25th, according to Witte's Diar. Bibliograph.

(2) Athen. Belg. pag. 587.

(3) Biblioth. Belg. pag. 703.

(4) Scaligerana, pag. m. 94.

[B] He was a good œconomiſt.] I have no other proof of it than theſe words of Scaliger (5). He was Counſellor to the Emperor; and becauſe a married man muſt keep houſe, he ſent away his wife to Nuremberg. He was worth 25000 ducats; yet he lived in a garret, and made his children do the offices of ſervants. Liberis utebatur ut ſervis. This goes beyond good huſbandry: it is ſordid avarice.

(5) Ibid.

[C] He has been accuſed of a notorious breach of truſt with regard to the Manuſcripts of Fruterius.] Fruterius, one of the greateſt genius's of his age, was at Paris in the year 1566, with ſome other Flemings, Janus Douza, Obertus Giſanius, Janus Lernutius, &c. and died there the ſame year, at the age of twenty five (6). He had already collected a conſiderable number of critical obſervations, which, at his death, he recommended to Gifanius. The latter acted fraudulently, and ſuppreſſed them as far as he was able; nor was he without difficulty prevailed upon to reſtore part of what he had been entruſted with, by the complaints of Janus Douza. Read theſe words of Thuanus (7). Is (Fruterius) in puriore literatura cum excelleret, & jam multa commentatus eſſet, properata morte præpeditus omnia ea Gifanii judicio ac fidei commiſit (8), qui pari fide minime uſus creditur, vixque lite à Jano Duza mota exorari potuit, ut paucula quæ ex tanta jactura, velut ex magno naufragio exiguæ tabulæ ſupererant, ſint publicata. Douza deſcribes the laſt tranſaction between Fruterius and Gifanius in the following verſes:

(6) Thuan. Hiſt. lib. 28. ad ann. 1566.

(7) Idem, ibid.

Adfuit ille quidem, fateor, lectique reſedit
Ante pedes: ſed non ut amici impendere, verum
Vulturis officium valido male poſſet amico:
Ut vel continuo patuit, cùm Fruterius jam
Deficiens, illi manuum monumenta ſuarum
Subjicienda operis prælorum traderet, atque
Hæc mea ſint Fanni tibi, diceret, ut tua curæ (8).

(8) Douza, Satire 2. pag. 339. Edit. 1609.

" Preſent he was, 'tis true, and by the bed
" Demurely ſat; but with conceal'd intent
" To act the Vultur's, not the friendly part:
" As ſoon appear'd, when to his faithleſs hands
" Fruterius, fainting, did his Writings truſt;
" Saying, To publiſh theſe be yours the care;
" Protect theſe labours, Fannius, as your own."

Douza was ſo angry with Gifanius for his treachery, that he omitted no means to bring him to reaſon. He even implored the aid of Giſelinus, that by their joint efforts they might oblige the thief to reſtore the manuſcripts.

Quid tamen hæc Giſeline juvant, ſi Fannius hæres
Se premere æterna tot bona nocte cupit?
Ille cupit: ſed tu genio communis amici
Aſſertor venias, injiciaſque manus.
Tunc ego damnatus voti de more ſacrabo
Prima quidem Nemeſi dona, ſecunda tibi.
Scis etenim quàm me mendaci læſerit ore,
Dum pia pro caris Manibus arma gero (9).

(9) Ibid. Epiſt. 34. pag. 412.

" Yet what avails, my Giſelin, our care,
" If Fannius, faithleſs Fannius, be his heir?
" Who fain would bury in eternal night
" Works worthy of the day, and everlaſting light.
" But thou prevent ſo undeſerv'd an end,
" And from oblivion ſnatch our common friend.

" My

Plagiaries [D]. His quarrels with Lambin made ſome noiſe in the Republic of Letters [E]. The occaſion of his falling out with the terrible Scioppius was a ſort of retaliation.

" My ſolemn vow perform'd ſhall ſet me free,
" And altars riſe to Nemeſis, and thee:
" His ſlanderous tongue no longer ſhall prevail,
" Nor, in our friend's defence, our pious warfare fail.

The tamen of the firſt line relates to a paſſage, where Douza ſays Giſelinus was the firſt who exclaimed againſt the treachery of Gifanius.

At quota virtutum pars eſt tamen iſta tuarum?
Majus opus Fannî non tacuiſſe dolos,
Verbaque Fruterícæ prima injeciſſe favillæ,
Nec dubiam factis exhibuiſſe fidem.
Non mihi Fruterium reddendo plura dediſſes:
Hoc quoque Fruterium reddere pæne fuit (10).

(10) Idem, ibid. pag. 411.

" Small credit from ſuch acts to virtue ſprings;
" Fannius expos'd more laſting honour brings.
" Scarce had you merited a nobler prize,
" (Such glory in detecting falſhood lies)
" Reſtoring loſt Fruterius to our eyes."

In his ſecond Satire he relates what he had done for the memory of the deceaſed, and againſt Gifanius.

Suſpectum ex illo cœpi obſervare, quid eſſet
Demum acturus, at ille vafer malè diſſimulare,
Nec de ſe quicquam promittere, donec aperto
Spes mutata metu nos extorquere ſubegit
Editionis opus. Mirum, quas perfidus hîc ſe
Verterit in facies, primùm civilia jura
Cauſſari: mox commentaria ſeſquipedali
Cæſaris ingeminare ſono, & cui nomen Agelli
Ipſe adeo primus vult reſtituiſſe videri.
Poſtremò, ipſe meas poſtponere res alienis
Nec volo, nec poſſum, nec debeo, dicere. quid te Longa ambage moror? ceſſi inde, nec ulterius mî
Ceſſandum ratus, Haud falles tamen, improbe, dixi.
Nec mora, & archetypum exemplar nactus, & apta
Tempora, dum ſeſe miratur Fannius, & ſpe
Creſcentem tumida inflat utrem, præeunte fideli
Verba Syro, à capite ad calcem loca quæque notando
Deſcripſi ſapiens, hinc tempeſtatis origo.
Hinc illæ lacrymæ (11).

(11) Idem, Satire 2. pag. 339.

" Suſpected once, I kept him in my eye;
" But he nor promiſe made, nor would deny.
" What ſhapes he, Proteus-like, at firſt put on,
" The publication of the Work to ſhun!
" He quoted Codes, the Comment, and the Text,
" With lofty tone; th' Imperial Edicts next,
" And laſt Agellius: ſo he would reſtore
" The name which Aulus Gellius was before.
" Shall I neglect my own affairs, he cry'd?
" Then, peremptory, our requeſt deny'd.
" What's to be done? Repuls'd I took my leave,
" Reſolv'd he ſhould not thus our hopes deceive;
" And whilſt, elate with pride he ſwell'd, I brib'd
" His ſervant and the manuſcript tranſcrib'd.
" Hence roſe the ſtorm, and hence thoſe ſad complaints.

[D] He was put into the liſt of Plagiaries.] See the Collection of the learned Thomaſius concerning thoſe Gentlemen; where you will find (12) Gifanius loaded with all the reproaches you have juſt read, and with ſeveral others. You will there meet with the following Verſes of Douza.

(12) Numero 445, & ſeq.

Tu præter omnes alpha leguleiorum
Burene quem inter buſtuarios Verres,
Plumis adornatum & colore furtivo,
Autumnitas Pontana nobilem fecit,
Notiſque Tranſrhenana inuſta frons Gallis (13).

(13) Douza, Ode in Feles literarias, pag. 619.

You will meet with them, I ſay, accompanied by this note: Autumnitas Pontana idem eſt quod Fruteriana; ſumebat enim Fruterius nomen Pontani, ut ſe Brugis (Pont, Brucke) natum ſignificaret: vide Reliquias ejus p. 134. Notæ autem Gallæ ſunt quas Dionyſius Lambinus Gallus Giphanio quamquam ſuam potius quàm Fruterii cauſam agens, tum initio coram auditoribus ſuis, tum poſtea in præfat. ad lectorem Lucretii tertium editi inuſſit. i. e. " The Autumnitas Pontana is the ſame " as Fruteriana; for Fruterius took the name of Pon- " tanus to ſignify that he was born at Bruges: See his " Remains, page 134. The Notæ Gallæ are the notes " of infamy, with which Lambinus, a Frenchman, " tho' it was rather in vindication of himſelf than Fru- " terius, branded Giphanius, as well firſt among his " auditors, as afterwards in the Preface to his third " Edition of Lucretius." You will likewiſe find there that Giſelinus came off very ill for having lent his Prudentius to Gifanius: for he ſtole from him the beſt things in it.

Atque utinam tantùm ſcires mea vulnera, nec te Luſiſſet plagiis improbus ille ſuis.
Illa dies nocuit, qua te ſibi credere primùm
Nobile Prudenti nomine ſuaſit opus.
Te quoque tunc animos vafra ſub vulpe latentes
Suſpicor, & Geldram perdidiciſſe fidem (14).

(14) Douza, Epit. 3. pag. 432.

This ſignifies, that Gifanius had ſtolen from Gelenius what he thought moſt valuable.

When Douza writes in proſe, he is not ſo angry, and even ſpares the name of his enemy; but he declares notwithſtanding that Gifanius had adorned his Lucretius with the ſpoils of Fruterius: Nec dubium quin de Giphanio intelligendum ſit; quod lego apud Valer. Andræam, pag. 629 Bibl. Belg. notaviſſe Janum Douſam ad Triumviros amoris, quæ in Lucretium adfecta Fruterius habuerit, iis non parùm adjutos fuiſſe, qui poſt Lambinum auctorem illum Collectaneis illuſtrârunt. Utique enim in Lucretium habentur collectanea Giphanii (15). i. e. " Nor is it to be doubted that it is to be " underſtood of Giphanius what we read in Valerius " Andreas, page 629 of the Bibliotheca Belgica, that " Janus Douza took notice in his notes on the Trium- " viri Amoris, that thoſe who illuſtrated that Author " with Annotations, after Lambin, were not a little " aſſiſted by the Obſervations of Fruterius. For we " have Giphanius's Annotations on Lucretius."

(15) Thomaſius, de Plagio Literario, pag. 196.

[E] His quarrels with Lambin made ſome noiſe in the Republic of Letters.] Lambin was not ſatisfied with complaining in his public Lectures that Gifanius had robbed him; he ſhewed his indignation in his Preface to Lucretius, when he printed it the third time. Here are ſome Verſes which relate to the invectives which he uttered from the chair (16).

(16) Douza, Sat. 1. pag. 336.

Nec libet antiquam plagii renovare querelam:
Quod te, felicem quondam, Lambine, cerebri,
Et vidi & pleno memini poſuiſſe theatro
Pariſiis, tunc cùm miſerandus & hoſtibus ipſis
Fannius introrſum detractâ pelle pateret.
Indignum ſcelus, & nullo ſatis igne piandum (17).

(17) See alſo the Verſes of the 2d Satire. Non ut ineptus Fannius hic Fidentini genus, & plagii olim Convictus Lambine tibi, cùm fronte retecta Furtivis riſum movit cornicula plumis. Idem, pag. 338.

" I have no mind to renew the old complaint of his " Plagiariſm, which I remember to have ſeen you, " O learned Lambinus, expoſe publicly in the Uni- " verſity of Paris, when Fannius was ſtripped of his " borrowed feathers in a manner pitiable even by his " enemies. His crime was ſhocking, and ſuch as even " fire would not expiate."

Giphanius, without being named in the Preface (18), is there treated like a dog: the moſt virulent abuſes ſhower down upon him. P. XXVI, ipſi Giphanius eſt quidam omnium mortalium, qui unquam fuerunt, qui ſunt, qui erunt injuſtiſſimus, audaciſſimus, impudentiſſimus. p. XXX audacem vocat, arrogantem, impudentem, ingratum, petulantem, inſidioſum, fallacem, infidum, nigrum. p. ſeq. unum ex omnibus mortalibus nulla re magis, quàm feritate, importunitate, contumacia, ſuperbia, audacia, confidentia, & impudentia excellentem (19). i. e. " In the 26th page he calls " Giphanius the moſt unjuſt, bold, and impudent of " all men, who ever were, or are, or ſhall be ſeen. " In page 30 he calls him bold, arrogant, impudent, " ungrateful, petulant, treacherous, deceitful, unfaith- " ful, (18) Ego autem nunquam abducar ut eum nominatim deſcribam. Lambinus, Præf. tertiæ Edit. Lucretii, pag. 28. apud Thomaſium, pag. 197.

(19) Thomaſius, ibid.

retaliation [F]. The affair is curious enough. You will find the Titles of moſt of his Works

" ful, black. In the following page he ſtiles him a " man diſtinguiſhed above all others for fierceneſs, " impertinence, obſtinacy, pride, boldneſs, confidence, " and impudence." The ground of theſe horrid reproaches, is that Gifanius had plundered from Dionyſius Lambinus's Lucretius what he thought proper, and cenſured the reſt, without acknowledging to whom he was obliged for what he had valuable. Omnia fere, quæ in eo Lucretio recta ſunt, mea ſunt: quæ tamen iſte aut ſilentio prætermittit, aut maligne laudat, aut ſibi impudenter arrogat. Sic unde reprehendendi anſam arripere poteſt, ibi mihi petulantiſſimè inſultat, in eo me improbiſſimè inſectatur (20). i. e. " Almoſt every " thing, which is good in that Lucretius, is mine; " tho' he either paſſes it over in ſilence, or commends " it in an invidious manner, or impudently aſſumes it " to himſelf. Thus where he can take occaſion to " cenſure me, he inſults me with the utmoſt petulance, " and inveighs againſt me with the greateſt injuſtice." It is certain however, that he owns in his Preface, that Lambinus's Commentary had been of great uſe to him. Dionyſio autem Lambino & Adriano Turnebo duobus Franciæ ornamentis quantum debeatur præmii, quippe qui de hoc graviſſimo ſcriptore optime ſint meriti, oratione mea quidem nequeam adſequi. Neque ſanè viri illi præſtantiſſimi à me id ut faciam expectant aut volunt; ſatis inclaruit eorum induſtria & eruditio incredibilis. Hoc tantum vereque teſtatum relinquere poſſum ac debeo, illorum maxime laboribus & ſolertia adjutum eſſe in his cujuſquemodi Emendationibus ac Notis comparandis (21). i. e. " I have not language to expreſs what thanks are due " to Dionyſius Lambinus and Adrian Turnebus, the " two ornaments of France, for the great ſervice, " which they have done to this moſt valuable Writer. " Nor will thoſe excellent perſons expect or deſire this " of me, ſince their own induſtry and incredible learn- " ing are ſufficiently conſpicuous. But this I can and " ought to declare, that I have been particularly aſ- " ſiſted by their labours and diligence in theſe Emenda- " tions and Notes, whatever they are." Here are commendations enough; but they came too late, and could not heal the wound made by the preceding page, where he had ſaid, that he publiſh'd an Edition of Lucretius much ſuperior to that of Lambinus; and that Lambinus with all his learning was not able to give the world the true Lucretius. Gild the pill as much as you pleaſe with praiſe, you will never take away the bitterneſs of it: it will ſtill retain its bad taſte, and excite the bile and other ill humours. Here is the paſſage intire: upon the whole it is diſobliging. Tandem Dionyſius Lambinus libros manu deſcriptos complures feliciſſimè nactus, adjutus etiam doctiſſ. virorum, in iis præcipuè Adriani Turnebi, & Joh. etiam Aurati opera, ipſe incredibili diligentia & eruditione præditus, à pluribus iiſque turpiſſimis mendis Lucretium liberavit. Sed quia tam fœdè eſſet contaminatus, uti adhuc præſtantiſſimus Poeta nomine tantùm fuerit notus; illi recuſantibus medicinam adhibere eruditis viris, ut ſi deſperatus eſſet ac depoſitus: efficere ille quamvis doctus & diligens (quod pace viri doctiſſ. dictum velim) non potuit, ut purum ac merum haberemus Titum. Nos igitur, etſi id quoque præſtare non potuimus, ſpero tamen id nos conſecutos, ut multis jam partibus melior & emendatior in hominum manibus eſſe poſſit optimus Romani ſermonis auctor (22). i. e. " At laſt Dionyſius Lambinus having fortunately met " with ſeveral manuſcripts, and being aſſiſted by divers " learned men, eſpecially Hadrian Turnebus and John " Auratus, and being himſelf a man of incredible in- " duſtry and learning, cleared Lucretius from a great " many and thoſe very groſs errors. But as that ex- " cellent Poet was ſo extremely corrupted, that he was " hitherto known only by name, learned men " having refuſed to undertake the correction of him, " as if it were in vain to attempt it; Lambinus, tho' " a man of learning and diligence, was not able (I hope " to ſpeak this without offence to that excellent Scho- " lar) to give us Lucretius pure and uncorrupt. And " tho' we have not been capable of effecting this, yet " I hope, that we have procured an Edition of this " moſt valuable Maſter of the Roman Language much " more correct and exact than any of the former." I cannot tell any more than Thomaſius, whether Gifanius defended himſelf againſt Lambinus (23): I only know that he complained to Muretus (24), and undertook to recriminate. He pretended that his corrections upon Cicero and Cornelius Nepos had been conſidered as a good booty by Lambinus, and in another place accuſes him of a villanous lie. Lambinus, ſays he, boaſted of the friendſhip of all the Low-Country-men who ſtudied at Paris except Gifanius, and names a dozen of them, whoſe names he would not even have known, if he had not made uſe of an artifice. Here are Gifanius's words. De Lambino, φεῦ τῆς ἀνειδείας! in quem ut omnia pulchrè conveniant, accipe & aliud ejus ſtratagema. Cùm Lutetiæ thyrſum, non Lucretianum illud, ſed ſuum in me quærere inſtituiſſet, (ego interim domi virgam tam puerilitèr peccanti minitabar,) primâ concione dixit, cum Belgis omnibus familiaritatem ſibi eſſe, me unum ſibi malè cupere: protulitque duodecim ferè Belgarum nomina, qui tum ibi agerent ſtudiorum cauſa, (conferenda ſunt cum his, quæ ſcribit Lambin. ad Lect. tertiæ ed. Lucret. p. xxxi, xxxii.) Multi ex his admirari hanc publicam teſtationem & citationem, quod illum ne ſalutaſſent quidem, me autem uterentur familiariſſimè; imo eo ipſo tempore epigrammata in illum partim proſcripſiſſent, ad me accurrerunt, & acumen Lambini, arteſque ejus oratorias mihi expoſuerunt. Mirantibus omnibus, unde eorum nomina collegiſſet, intervenit mox ejus convictor Bruxellenſis, qui ſcrupulum illum nobis exemit: ſe namque rogatum & coactum fuiſſe Lambino petenti domi aliquot Belgarum nomina dictare, cauſæ ignarum. Atque ita res in riſum abiit (25). i. e. " With regard to Lambinus, (Oh the impudence of " the man!) that his whole conduct may be conſiſ- " tent, hear another trick of him. When he was " ſeeking at Paris againſt me a Thyrſus, not that of " Lucretius, but his own, (while I only threatned him " with a rod for his childiſh miſtakes) in his firſt Lec- " ture he ſaid that he had a friendſhip with all the Low- " Countrymen, and that I alone was an enemy to him; " and he mentioned the names of about twelve Gen- " tlemen of the Low-Countries, who then reſided there " for their ſtudies, (theſe particulars are to be compared " with what Lambinus writes in his Preface to the " third Edition of Lucretius p. 31, 32.) Several of " theſe Gentlemen were ſurprized at being thus pub- " licly mentioned, becauſe they had never ſo much " as ſpoken to him, tho' they were very intimate with " me, and even at that time had written Epigrams " againſt him. Upon this they came to me, and re- " preſented to me the genius and oratorial arts of " Lambinus. While they were all admiring, how he " procured their names, one of his boarders, who was " a native of Bruſſels, came in, and cleared our doubt, " informing us, that at Lambinus's importunate deſire, " and not knowing the deſign of it, he had been pre- " vailed upon to give him at his houſe the names of " ſeveral Gentlemen of the Low-Countries. And " thus the affair went off with a laugh." It is a very melancholy thing, that polite learning cannot reſtrain the Profeſſors of it from the diſorder of their paſſions.

Muretus was not the only perſon to whom Gifanius complained. There has juſt been publiſhed a Letter which the latter wrote to Theodorus Canterus in 1587, in which we meet with theſe words (26). Præterea noſti quemadmodum mea compilarit, meque tractarit Lambinus in Æmilium Probum, cujus rei teſtes habeo epiſtolas Mureti, quas & tu jam divulgatas videre potuiſti, & Puteani cujus auctoritate Lambinus abutitur inviti, &c. i. e. " Beſides you know how " Lambinus in his Notes upon Æmilius Probus has " ſtollen my obſervations, and uſed me; in proof " of which I have the Letters of Muretus, which " you might have ſeen publiſhed, and thoſe of Pute- " anus, whoſe authority Lambinus makes uſe of " contrary to his mind, &c." Gifanius wrote to the ſame Canterus in 1567 what follows (27). Ille qui ea fulmina in me jacit anne ut divinavi eſt Ludovicus Carrion, quem mihi nomen amiciſſimum putavi? Certe eum eſſe indicavit Dn. Bombergus. Sic Lucretiana mea ubique vapulant, ſed tua & tui ſimilium amicitia fretus vana illa fulmina eſſe judico. i. e. " Is it Ludovicus " Carrio, as I gueſſed, who has fallen upon me, and " whom I thought to be very much my friend? " Bomberg has aſſured me, that it is he. Thus my " Notes on Lucretius are every where attacked; but

(20) Lambinus, pag. 29. apud Thomaſ. ibid. Note that I have verified the Quotations in the Preface of Lambinus cited by Thomaſius.

(21) Gifan. Præf. in Lucret. folio m.  2.

(22) Idem, ibid. folio  verſo.

(23) Quid Douzæ, quid Lambino ipſi, ad iſtas accuſationes reſponderit Giphanius, fateor ignorare me. Thomaſius, pag. 198.

(24) Thomaſius, pag. 199, 200. cites all the paſſages of the Letters of Gifanius to Muretus, and the Anſwers of Muretus.

(25) Gifan. ad Muretum, Epiſt. 78. lib. 1. inter Epiſtolas Mureti, apud Thomaſium, pag. 200.

(26) See the Letters which Mr. Matthæus, Profeſſor of Law at Leyden, publiſhed there in 1695, pag. 97.

(27) Ibid.

Works in Moreri's Dictionary, where Hubert Giphani, and Obertus Giphanius, are ridiculouſly given as two perſons.

" in confidence of your friendſhip and that of others " of your character, I conſider thoſe cenſures as in- " ſignificant."

I ſhall obſerve by the bye, that Scaliger is no very proper perſon to perſuade us, that Gifanius was not a plagiary. " Gifanius, ſays he (28), was learned; " his Lucretius is a very good one. I have ſent him " ſince ſome excellent Remarks, which he has kept, " and declares that he did not receive them, and intends " to make uſe of them himſelf. . . . . He ſtole from " L. Fruterius his Agellius, when it was ready for " the preſs."

(28) Scaligerana, pag. 93.

[F] The occaſion of his falling out with the terrible Scioppius was a ſort of retaliation.] Scioppius having obtained from Conrade Ritterhuſius, with whom he lodged at Altorf, a Letter of recommendation to Obert Gifanius Profeſſor at Ingolſtad, inſinuated himſelf into the eſteem of that Profeſſor, and having procured a very free acceſs to him, found an opportunity one day to viſit his Library in the abſence of the owner, and took away a manuſcript of Symmachus. He copied likewiſe what he thought proper from a manuſcript work of Gifanius, and found there materials to ſet up for a Critic; and when Gifanius loudly complained of this fraud, the plagiary caſt an hundred reproaches upon him. This is what Scaliger's friends relate againſt Scioppius. In ædes primum, mox in animum, poſtea in bibliothecam abſentis penetravit Giphanii, cui MS. Symmachi codicem ſubduxit: libros vero Obſervationum linguæ Latinæ invito domino percurrit, & ex iis quæ voluit furtim ſublegit. E quibus partim, partim emendationibus Plautinis, quas è Camerarii membranis deſcriptas in ſuo Ritterſhuſius codice adnotarat, partim etiam reliquiis ſchedarum Modii, quas ab ampliſſimo Velſero, ſummo literarum patrono, acceperat; duos illos, quibus primum innotuit, libellos corraſit. . . . Quod quidem plagium cum paſſim voce paſſim literis teſtaretur Giphanius, in præceptorem ſuum & doctiſſimum hominem erupit hæc vipera, & quæcunque undique poterat convitia in eum contorſit (29). i. e. " He firſt introduced himſelf into the houſe, then " into the friendſhip of Gifanius, and afterwards " into his Library during his abſence, and ſtole a ma- " nuſcript of Symmachus. He peruſed likewiſe, " without Gifanius's conſent, his Obſervations on " the Latin tongue, and tranſcribed from thence what " he thought proper. Partly from theſe, and partly " from the Emendations upon Plautus, which Rit- " terhuſius had noted in his Book from Camerarius's " manuſcripts, and partly from the papers of Modius, " which he had received from the noble Velſerus, " that great patron of learning, he patched up the " two Books, which firſt made him known. . . . . " Gifanius complaining every where in his Letters " of this piece of plagiariſm, this viper broke out " violently againſt his very learned maſter, and caſt " upon him all the calumnies which he could any " where pick up." Scioppius returned this anſwer. I. He cites two paſſages of his works (30), in which he owns the obligations which he had to Gifanius for communicating the manuſcript of Symmachus. II. He confeſſes, that theſe two paſſages were only raillery (31); for, adds he, Gifanius let me ſee the manuſcript but once, and when I deſired a ſight of it again, he anſwered: " Sir, to deſire my Symmachus " is the ſame thing as to deſire to lie with my wife." Symmachum à me petere perinde eſt atque uxorem meam utendam poſtulare (32). III. That Gifanius, who had ſtolen this manuſcript at Venice from the Library of Cardinal Beſſarion, would not publiſh it himſelf, nor ſuffer any other perſon to do it. Erat autem liber ille Symmachi ex Beſſarionis Bibliotheca Venetiis furto Gifanii ſublatus (velut Wolfgangus Zundelinus indicium Scioppio fecit) quem ille neque ut ederet, neque ut Ritterſhuſio id petenti edendum daret, ullis precibus aut muneribus induci potuit (33). i. e. " That manuſcript " of Symmachus was ſtolen by Gifanius from Beſſa- " rion's Library at Venice, as Wolfgang Zundelinus " informed Scioppius; and he could not be prevailed " upon by intreaties or rewards to publiſh it himſelf, " nor to ſuffer Ritterſhuſius to publiſh it, though " the latter ſollicited him for that favour." IV. That he (Scioppius) being deſirous, that the public might not be deprived ſo long of this treaſure, ſhewed a thouſand civilities to Gifanius, and deſired him frequently to ſup with him; but that all was to no purpoſe, though this Profeſſor was well enough pleaſed to ſup at his friends houſes. Scioppius ne literarum ſtudioſis liber ejuſmodi diutius deberetur, Giphanium creberrime ad cœnam vocando demulcere (vix enim ullam diem toto anno elabi ſibi Gifanius ſinebat, quin foris cœnaret, ac plerumque Menelai Homerici exemplo invocatus amicis conditceret) & Symmachi copiam ab eo impetrare ſtuduit, ſed fruſtra (34). V. That ſeeing this obſtinacy he joined with three Civilians to convey this manuſcript ſecretly away, and having made uſe of it he reſtored it to its place the next day. VI. That the ſubtilty, by which he gueſſed where this manuſcript was, exceeded all the acuteneſs of the Critics, who commented on Symmachus. Unica illa conjectura ſua quo loco Symmachi codex in Gifanii Bibliotheca ſitus foret, omnium Criticorum quotquot ei ſcriptori operam navarunt ingenium & acumen longè ſuperavit (35). VII. That it is falſe that he ſtole this manuſcript, ſince he kept it only one night, in order that others might make uſe of it. Rem quoque malo furto acquiſitam poſſeſſori ſuo nequaquam ſubduxerit (velut tu mentiris) ſed uſum ejus unius noctis lucubratione cum aliis communicavit (36). VIII. With regard to the other manuſcript, he owns that he had it in his hands by means of the Amanuenſis of Gifanius, and that he extracted what was moſt valuable in it, but not with a view to aſſume it to himſelf, ſince he had ſuffered divers perſons, who had a taſte for polite Latin, to take a copy of it. Cum ei Giphanii amanuenſis librum illum obſervationum attuliſſet, cum iiſdem Juriſconſultis amicis ſuis, operas partitus intra paucos dies quicquid in eo minus pervulgatum eſſe videretur, deſcripſit, & paſſim poſtea aliis linguæ Latinæ ſtudioſis, etiam ſacrilego illi Guldinaſto deſcribendi copiam fecit (37). i. e. " Gifanius's Ama- " nuenſis bringing to him that volume of Obſerva- " tions, Scioppius with the three Civilians, his friends, " dividing the work between them, copied what was " moſt uncommon in it within a few days, and af- " terwards permitted ſeveral others, who were curi- " ous in elegant Latin, and amongſt the reſt the vil- " lainous Guldinaſt, to take a copy of this piece." IX. He pretends, that he had publicly owned the advantage which he had made of this work. De Obſervationibus Grammaticis fateri puta Scioppium cum præfatione diſputationis de injuriis ita Giphanium alloquitur, Ego multa ex te quamvis inſcio & invito didici. i. e. " You may ſuppoſe, that Scioppius " ſpeaks of the Obſervations on the Latin tongue, " when in the preface to the Diſpute concerning the " Calumnies he thus addreſſes himſelf to Gifanius: " I have learned a great many things of you, though " without your conſent or knowledge." I am not ſurprized that Gifanius ſhould be extremely incenſed; for who could bear with patience ſuch ill uſage? Scioppius confeſſes enough to perſuade his readers that he was not a man of probity. The greateſt misfortune of Gifanius was, that his reſentment was laughed at. Hoc ut reſcivit Giphanius, tantum non in furorem redactus eſt, omnibuſque viris doctis etiam amicis ſuis deridiculo fuit (38). i. e. " As ſoon as Gifanius diſ- " covered this, he was almoſt mad with rage, and " was expoſed to the ridicule of all learned men, " even his friends."

(29) See the Satire, Hercules tuam fidem, in which there is an Appendix intitled, Vita & Parentes Gaſpar. Scioppii, pag. 145, 146.

(30) The Preface to his Verifimilia, and the 15*th Letter* of his Suſpectæ Lectiones.

(31) Iſta Scioppium non ſerio ſed joco tantum ſcripſiſſe. Oporinus Grubinius, Amphot. Scioppian. pag. 159.

(32) Oporinus Grubinius, Amphot. Scioppian. pag. 139.

(33) Ibid.

(34) Ibid. pag. 140.

(35) Ibid.

(36) Ibid. pag. 141.

(37) Ibid.

(38) Ibid.

I have heard the famous Mr. Grævius mention, that he had ſeen in the hands of Frederic Gronovius a Letter of Philip Pareus, in which he informed Gronovius, that Gifanius's Manuſcript of Obſervations on the Latin tongue had been found again, and that it would be eaſy to diſcover by it the plagiariſm of Scioppius.

☞ GILBERT (Dr. WILLIAM), an eminent Engliſh Philoſopher and Phyſician in the ſixteenth Century, was born at Colcheſter [A] in Eſſex (a), and ſon of Jerom Gilbert

(a) Fuller's Worthies, in Eſſex.

[A] Born at Colcheſter.] Joſeph Scaliger, in a Letter of his to David Rivaldus à Flurentia dated at Leyden the 16th of April 1604 (1) erroneouſly ſtiles him Gloceſtrenſis, i. e. of Glouceſter.

(1) Vide Joſephi Scalig. Epiſt. lib. 2. Epiſt. 200. p. 410. edit. Franc. 1628, in 8vo.

(b) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 321. 2d edit. London 1721.

(c) Idem, ibid.

(d) Idem, ibid.

Gilbert of that town (b). He was educated in both the Univerſities, but whether in Oxford or Cambridge firſt, is not certain (c). After he paſſed through his ſtudies, he travelled into foreign countries, where he is ſuppoſed to have had the Degree of Doctor of Phyſic conferred on him; and at his return being famed for his learning, and his profound ſkill in Philoſophy and Chemiſtry (d), and his book de Magnete [B], he became Fellow of the College of Phyſicians at London, and Phyſician in ordinary to Queen Elizabeth, who had ſo high an eſteem for him, that ſhe allowed him an annual penſion to encourage him in his ſtudies. Beſides the work abovementioned he wrote De Mundo noſtro ſublunari Philoſophia nova, printed at Amſterdam 1651 in 4to from a manuſcript in the Library of Sir William Boſwell Knt. There is a manuſcript of this work in the King's Library (e). He died in the ſummer of the year 1603, having always lived a ſingle life (f). His body was interred in Trinity Church at Colcheſter (g), in which pariſh he was born. By his laſt will and teſtament he gave all his Library, Globes, Inſtruments, and Cabinet of Minerals to the College of Phyſicians; which part of his will was exactly performed by his brothers, William (ſo he is written in his will) a Proctor in the Arches, Jerom, Ambroſe, and George, who inherited his eſtate (h). His picture in the ſchool-gallery at Oxford ſhews him to have been tall of ſtature, and of a chearful countenance. He was the firſt who invented the two inſtruments for ſeamen to find out the Latitude of any place, without ſeeing of the Sun, Moon, or Stars, as appears from Mr. Thomas Blondeville's book printed at London 1602 in 4to, under the title of, Theoriques of the Planets, together with the making of two Inſtruments for Seamen to find out the Latitude without ſeeing of Sun, Moon, or Stars, invented by Dr. Gilbert. Sir Kenelm Digby (i) ſtiles our Author "an admirable ſearcher into the nature of the "Load-ſtone;" and tells us, "that by means of him and Dr. Harvey, our Nation "may

(e) See The Catalogue of the Manuſcripts of the King's Library. By David Caſley. 12 F. xi. pag. 212. edit. London 1734 in 4to.

(f) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(g) Fuller, ubi ſupra.

(h) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(i) Treatiſe of Bodies, c. 20.

[B] His Book de Magnete.] It was printed at London 1600 in fol. under the following title, De Magnete, magneticiſq; Corporibus, & de magno Magnete Tellure. To this Book the Author added an Appendix of ſix or eight ſheets; but whether printed or not, Mr. Wood (2) is uncertain. The Lord Bacon (3) ſtiles this a painful and experimental Work; and highly applauds it in ſeveral parts of his Writings. Nath. Carpenter obſerves (4), that "we had not any certain or ſatisfactory "knowledge of magnetical properties, until ſuch time "as it pleaſed God to raiſe up one of our country-"men, Dr. Gilbert, who to his everlaſting praiſe hath "trodden out a new path to Philoſophy, and on the "load-ſtone erected a large trophy to commend him to "poſterity." F. Rapin (5) remarks, that Dr. Gilbert has explained the Phænomena of the Loadſtone better than other Writers. Joſeph Scaliger in the Letter above quoted refers to our Author with relation to the Magnet, and obſerves, that in his Book de Magnete he ſhewed his own learning rather than the nature of the load-ſtone, and left Scaliger more uncertain than before. Conſulendi ſunt, qui de Magnete ſcripſerunt, præſertim Guilielmus Gilbertus Gloceſtrenſis, Philoſophus & Medicus Londinenſis, qui ante triennium tres ampliſſimos Commentarios de eâ re edidit, quibus magis mihi probavit doctrinam ſuam quam Magnetis Naturam. Nam incertior ſum, quam dudum. In another likewiſe addreſſed to Iſaac Caſaubon, and dated at Leyden 1604 (6), he writes thus: Quidam Anglus ante triennium libro de Magnete edito nihil expectatione eâ, quam excitârat, protulit: "A certain Engliſhman, who three "years ago publiſh'd a Treatiſe on the Load-ſtone, "performed nothing worthy of the expectation, which "he had raiſed." Dr. George Hakewill (7) ſtiles Dr. Gilbert's Book a learned one, and remarks, that "he "ſeems to be of opinion, that Paulus Venetus brought "the Invention of the uſe of the Loadſtone from the "Chineſes. Oſorius in his Diſcourſe of the Acts of King "Emanuel refers it to Gama and his countrymen the "Portugals, who, as he pretends, took it from certain "barbarous Pirates roving upon the ſea about the Cape "of Good Hope. Goropius Becanus likewiſe thinks "he hath greater reaſon to intitle it upon his country-"men the Germans, in as much as the xxxii points "of the wind upon the Compaſs borrow the name "from the Dutch in all languages. But Blondus, who "is therein followed by Pancirollus, both Italians, will "not have Italy loſe the praiſe thereof, telling us, that "about 300 years ago it was found out at Malphis or "Melphis, a city in the Kingdom of Naples in the "Province of Campania, now called Terra di Lovorador. But for the Author of it the one names him not; "and the other aſſures us, he is not known: yet Salmuth out of Ciezus and Gomara confidently chriſtens "him with the name of Flavius, and ſo doth Du Bartas." Mr. Wood tells us (8), that Mr. William Barlow (9), M. A. Prebendary of Wincheſter, Rector of Eaſton near that city, and Archdeacon of Saliſbury (10), and ſon of Dr. William Barlow, Biſhop of St. David's, and afterwards of Chicheſter, was the perſon, who had the knowledge of the Magnet twenty years before Dr. Wm. Gilbert publiſhed his Book of that ſubject; and therefore by thoſe that knew him, he was accounted ſuperior, or at leaſt equal to that Doctor for an induſtrious and happy ſearcher and finder out of many rare and magnetical ſecrets. "He was the firſt, that made the in-"clinatory inſtrument tranſparent, and to be uſed "pendant, with a glaſs on both ſides, and ring on "the top; whereas Dr. Gilbert's hath it but of one "ſide, and to be ſet on a foot. And moreover he "hanged it in a compaſs-box, where with two ounces "weight it was made fit for uſe at ſea. Secondly, he "was the firſt, that found out, and ſhewed the dif-"ference between iron and ſteel, and their tempers for "magnetical uſes, which hath given life and quicken-"ing univerſally to all magnetical inſtruments whatſo-"ever. Thirdly he was the firſt, that ſhewed the "piecing and cementing of load-ſtones. And laſtly, "the firſt, that ſhewed the reaſons why a load-ſtone "being double capp'd, muſt take up ſo great weight." Mr. Barlow publiſh'd Magnetical Advertiſement or diverſ pertinent Obſervations and approved Experiments concerning the Nature and Properties of the Load ſtone, &c. London 1616 in 4to. This work being animadverted upon by Dr. Mark Ridley, ſometime Phyſician to the Engliſh Merchants in Ruſſia, afterwards chief Phyſician to the Emperor of that Country, and at laſt one of the Elects of the College of Phyſicians of London, Mr. Barlow publiſh'd A brief Diſcovery of the idle Animadverſions of Mark Ridley, Doctor in Phyſic, upon a Treatiſe intitled, Magnetical Advertiſement. London 1618 in 4to. He wrote likewiſe The Navigator's Supply; containing many things of principal importance belonging to Navigation, with the Deſcription and Uſe of divers Inſtruments framed chiefly for that purpoſe, &c. London 1597 in 4to dedicated to Robert Earl of Eſſex. Mr. Wood informs us (11), that ſeven years before the Magnetical Advertiſement was publiſhed, Mr. Barlow ſent a copy of it in manuſcript to Sir Thomas Chaloner, "which he miſlaying or embezzling, he ſent "him, upon his deſire, another copy; and that being "imparted to others, the Author afterwards, before its "publication, met with many portraitures of his mag-"netical Implements, and divers of his Propoſitions "publiſhed in print in another man's name, and yet "ſome of them not rightly underſtood by the party "uſurping them." T.

(2) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 321.

(3) Advancement of Learning, lib. 2. cap. 13.

(4) Geography delineated forth in two Books, containing the Sphærical and Topical Parts thereof. B. 1. c. 3.

(5) Reflex. ſur la Phyſique, §. 9.

(6) Joſeph. Scaliger. Epiſtol. l. 1. Epiſt. 90. pag. 232.

(7) Apologie or Declaration of the Power and Providence of God in the Government of the World, l. 3. c. x. Sect. 4. pag. 284. edit. London 1630, in fol.

(8) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 495.

(9) He died May 25, 1625, as appears from his Epitaph in the Chancel of the Church of Eaſton near Wincheſter.

(10) He was collated to that Archdeaconry March the 12th 1614, on the death of Dr. Ralph Pickover.

(11) Ubi ſupra.

" may claim, even in this later age, as deſerved a Crown for ſolid philoſophical learning, " as for many ages together it hath done formerly for acute and ſubtle ſpeculations in " Divinity." Peireſkius uſed to lament, that when he was in England, he was not acquainted with Dr. Gilbert or Mr. Thomas Lydiat, the Mathematician and Chronologer (k). And Dr. Iſaac Barrow (l) repreſents him, together with Galileo, Gaſſendus, Merſennus, and Des Cartes, as men reſembling the Antients in ſagacity and acuteneſs of genius, and almoſt equal to them in thoſe reſpects.

(k) Gaſſendus in Vitâ Peireskii, lib. 2. pag. 52. edit. Hagæ-Comitum 1655, in 4to.

(l) Opuſcul. pag. 87.

GILLES (PETER), Paſtor of the Reformed Church at la Tour in the Valley of Luſerne, wrote by order of his Superiors an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of the Churches of the Vaudois, which he publiſhed at Geneva in 1644 in 4to. He was then in the ſeventy third year of his age. He had already publiſhed other works [A].

[A] He had already publiſhed other Works.] I have obſerved in another place (1), that the Prior Marco Aurelio Rorenco publiſhed in 1634 an Apology for a piece which he had written in 1632. Our Peter Gilles refuted this Apology in a Work intitled, Conſiderations ſur les Lettres Apologetiques des Sieurs Marc Aurele Rorenc Prieur de Luſerne, & Theodore Belvedere Prefect des Moines (2). The latter replied in a Latin Treatiſe intitled, Turris contra Damaſcum, id eſt Tutela Eccleſiæ Romanæ contra Calviniſtarum incurſiones objecta conſiderationibus cujuſdam Miniſtri P. Gillio ſubſcripti ædificata cum propugnaculis à Fr. Theodoro Belvederenſi, &c. This was printed at Turin in 1636, and refuted ſoon after by the Sieur Gilles, who anſwered likewiſe another book publiſhed by the ſame Monk in Italian under the title of Lucerna della Chriſtiana Verita per conoſcer la vera Chieſa e la falſa preteſa Reformata; he anſwered it, I ſay, in an Italian Treatiſe intitled, Torre Evangelica, divided into forty eight chapters, the ſummary of which he gives in his Hiſtory of the Vaudois (3). He did the ſame with reſpect to his Anſwer to another Italian Book dedicated by Belvedere to the Congregation de propaganda fide to inform them of the ſtate of the Reformed Churches among the Vaudois, and of their Order, Doctrine, and Ceremonies, concluding obliquely that they ought to be exterminated (4).

(1) In the Article RORENCO.

(2) See his Hiſtoire des Egliſes Vaudoiſes, pag. 540.

(3) Hiſt. des Egliſes Vaudoiſ. pag. 542, & ſeq.

(4) Ibid. pag. 545, & ſeq.

GIOACHINO GRECO, known by the name of the Calabrian, was ſo excellent a player at cheſs, that it cannot be thought ſtrange that I ſhould give a ſhort Article of him. All who excel in their profeſſion to a certain degree deſerve this diſtinction. He never had any equal to him at this game in any part of the world. He viſited all the Courts of Europe, and ſignalized himſelf by playing at cheſs in a ſurprizing manner. At the Court of France he met with famous players, the Duke of Nemours, Arnaud le Carabin, Chaumont, and la Salle; but though they valued themſelves upon their ſuperior ſkill, not one of them was able to engage him: all of them together were not a match for him. He was in the game of cheſs an hero, who ſought out in every Nation ſome famous Knight, with whom he might engage and break a lance, and he could not meet with one, whom he did not conquer. A man of wit wrote a copy of verſes upon this ſubject (a) [A]. See above the Article BOI.

(a) Extracted from a Letter inſerted in the Mercure Galant of Dec. 1693.

[A] A man of wit wrote a copy of verſes upon this ſubject.] The greateſt part of my Readers would be diſpleaſed, if I were to inform them of this, without preſenting them with the verſes themſelves. I ſhall therefore ſet them down.

A peine dans la carriere
Contre moi tu fais un pas
Que par ta demarche fiere
Tous mes projets ſont à bas.
Je vois dès que tu t'avances
Ceder toutes mes defenſes,
Tomber tous mes champions,
Dans ma reſiſtance vaine
Roi, Chevalier, Roc, & Reine
Sont moindres que des Pions (1).

i. e. " You ſcarce make one ſtep againſt me in the " game, but all my ſchemes prove abortive. When " you advance, all my defence fails, my champions " give way; and King, Knight, Rook, and Queen, " are more inſignificant than even Pawns."

(1) From the Letter inſerted in the Mercure Galant, Dec. 1693.

GIRAC (PAUL THOMAS Sieur de). See THOMAS.

☞GLANVILL (JOSEPH), a very learned and ingenious Writer in the ſeventeenth Century, was born at Plymouth in the year 1636, and on the 19th of April 1652 entered a Batler of Exeter College in the Univerſity of Oxford under the tuition of Mr. Samuel Conant (a). October the 11th 1655 he took the Degree of Bachelor of Arts (b), and in the beginning of July 1656 removed to Lincoln College (c), where taking the Degree of Maſter of Arts June the 29th 1658 (d), he was about that time made Chaplain to Francis Rous, one of Oliver Cromwell's Lords, and Provoſt of Eaton College. But he dying ſoon after, Mr. Glanvill returned to Oxford, continued in Lincoln-College for ſome time, and " became a great admirer of Mr. Richard Baxter, and a zealous per- " ſon for a Commonwealth (e)." After the Reſtoration he turned about, ſays Mr. Wood (f), and became a Latitudinarian; and in 1661 publiſhed a book intitled, The Vanity of Dogmatizing [A]. He was choſen a Fellow of the Royal Society;

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 662. 2d edit. London 1721.

(b) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 107.

(c) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(d) Idem, Faſti Oxon. col. 122.

(e) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(f) Idem, ibid. col. 663.

[A] A Book intitled The Vanity of Dogmatizing.] The whole title is as follows: The Vanity of Dogmatizing; or Confidence in opinions; manifeſted in a Diſcourſe of the Shortneſs and Uncertainty of our Knowledge and its Cauſes; with ſome Reflections on Peripateticiſm; and an Apology for Philoſophy. By Joſ. Glanvill, M. A. London 1661 in 12mo. In the Epiſtle Dedicatory to Mr. Joſeph Maynard, B. D. dated at Cecil-Houſe in the Strand March 1ſt 1660, he obſerves that this Treatiſe was " a fortuitous, undeſigned abortive, and an e- " quivocal effect of a very diverſe intention. For having writ, ſays he, a Diſcourſe, which I formerly " let you know of, of the Soul's Immortality, I deſigned a Preface to it, as a correction of Enthuſiaſm, " in a vindication of the Uſe of Reaſon in matters of " Religion; and my conſiderations on that ſubject, " which I thought a ſheet would have compriſed, grew " ſo voluminous as to fill fourteen; which being too " much for a Preface, I was adviſed to print apart. " And therefore reaſſuming my pen to annex ſome ad- " ditional enlargements to the beginning, where I had " been moſt curt and ſparing, my thoughts ran out in- " to Society; and taking Orders in the Church of England, was preſented by Sir James Thynne in the beginning of November 1662 to the Vicarage of Frome-Selwood in Somerſetſhire, in the room of Mr. John Humphrey ejected for Nonconformity (g). The ſame year he publiſhed his Lux Orientalis [B]; and in 1665 his Scepſis Scientifica [C]; and in the year following his Some Philoſophical Conſiderations touching the being

(g) Idem, ibid.

" to this diſcourſe, which now begs your patronage, " while the two former were remanded into the ob- " ſcurity of my private papers; the latter being ren- " dered leſs neceſſary by his Majeſty's much deſired " and ſeaſonable arrival; and the former by the ma- " turer undertakings of the accompliſh'd Dr. H. More." In this Diſcourſe he aſſigns ſeveral Reaſons for the Shortneſs of human Knowledge; 1. That knowledge lies deep, and is therefore difficult: 2. Becauſe we can perceive nothing but by proportion to our ſenſes (1): 3. The impoſtures and deceits of our ſenſes (2): 4. The fallacy of our imaginations (3): 5. The precipitancy of our underſtandings (4): 6. The intereſt, which our affections have in our dijudications (5). He afterwards makes ſeveral Reflections on the Peripatetic Philoſophy, and obſerves, that it is litigious, and hath no ſettled conſtant ſignification of words; that it gives no account of the phænomena; and is unfit for new diſcoveries, and hath been the author of no one invention; that it is in many things impious and ſelf-contradictory. For proof of this he tells us (6), that Ariſtotle held, that the Reſurrection is impoſſible; that God underſtands all things; that the world was from eternity; that there is no ſubſtantial form but moves ſome orb; that the firſt Mover moves by an eternal, immutable neceſſity; that if the world and motion were not from eternity, then God was idle. Of the Ariſtotelian contradictions Gaſſendus hath preſented us with a Catalogue; we ſhall inſtance in a few. Ariſtotle in one place ſaith, that the ſcintillation of the Planets is not ſeen, becauſe of their propinquity, but that of the riſing and ſetting Sun is, becauſe of its diſtance; and yet in another place he makes the Sun nearer us than they are. He aſſerts, that the elements are not eternal, and endeavours to prove it; and yet makes the world ſo, and the elements its parts. In his Meteors he ſays, that no dew is produced in the wind, and yet afterwards admits it under the South, and none under the North. In one place he defines a vapour humid and cold; and in another humid and hot. He affirms the faculty of ſpeaking to be a ſenſe, and yet before he allowed but five. In one place that nature doth all things beſt; and in another, that it makes more evil than good. And ſomewhere he contradicts himſelf within one line, ſaying, that an immoveable Mover hath no principle of Motion. Mr. Glanvill then proceeds to ſhew (7), that Dogmatizing is, 1. The effect of ignorance: 2. Inhabits with untamed paſſions, and an ungoverned ſpirit: 3. Is a great diſturber in the world: 4. Is ill manners and immodeſty: 5. Holds men captive in error: 6. Betrays a narrowneſs of ſpirit. In the laſt chapter he gives us an Apology for Philoſophy, and vindicates it from the imputation of irreligion; and aſſerts (8), that next after the divine Word, it is one of the beſt friends to piety. Neither is it any more juſtly accountable for the impious irregularities of ſome, that have paid an homage to its ſhrine, than Religion itſelf for the ſinful extravagancies both opinionative and practical of high pretenders to it. It is a vulgar conceit, that Philoſophy holds a confederacy with Atheiſm itſelf; but moſt injurious; for nothing can better antidote us againſt it; and they may as well ſay, that Phyſicians are only murtherers. A Philoſophick Atheiſt is as good ſenſe as a Divine one. All or moſt of this Book is contained in his Scepſis Scientifica, printed in 1665 in 4to. It was anſwered by Thomas Anglus ex Albiis Eaſt-Saxonum in his Book intitled Sciri, ſive Sceptices & Scepticorum à jure Diſputationis Excluſio. London 1663 in 12mo.

(1) Cap. 7.
(2) Cap. 8.
(3) Cap. 11.
(4) Cap. 12.
(5) Cap. 13.
(6) C. 19. pag. 183, 184, 185.
(7) C. 23. pag. 224, & ſeqq.
(8) Pag. 248.

[B] His Lux Orientalis.] The whole title is: Lux Orientalis: or an Enquiry into the opinion of the Eaſtern Sages concerning the Præ-exiſtence of Souls: being a Key to unlock the grand myſteries of Providence in relation to man's ſin and miſery. London 1662 in 12mo. His name is not prefixed to it. It is dedicated to Francis Willoughby Eſq; In this Treatiſe he propoſes the ſeveral opinions concerning the Original of Souls (9), and obſerves that the daily creation of them is inconſiſtent with the divine Attributes (10); that the traduction of them is impoſſible, and the reaſons for it weak and frivolous (11). He then calls us (12) from the modern Diſputants to look towards the antient Sages, thoſe Eaſtern Sophi, who have filled the world with the fame of their wiſdom; and tells us that it was the opinion of the Indian Brachmans, the Perſian Magi, the Egyptian Gymnoſophiſts, the Jewiſh Rabbins, ſome of the Grecian Philoſophers, and Chriſtian Fathers, that the ſouls of men were created all at firſt, and at ſeveral times and occaſions, upon forfeiture of their better life and condition, dropt down into theſe terreſtrial bodies. This the learned among the Jews made a part of their Cabbala, and pretend to have received it from their great Lawgiver Moſes. Our Author then obſerves, that the Scripture ſaith nothing againſt it; that its ſilence is no prejudice to this doctrine, but rather an argument for it, as the caſe ſtands; that Præexiſtence was the common opinion in our Saviour's time (13); that our forgetting the former ſtate is no argument to diſprove it; that the proof of the Poſſibility of Præ-exiſtence would be ſufficient, all other Hypotheſes being abſurd and contradictory; but that it is proved alſo by poſitive arguments (14); that an argument for it may be drawn from the conſideration of the divine goodneſs, which always doth what is beſt (15); that another argument may be drawn from the great variety of men's ſpeculative inclinations, and the diverſity of our genius's (16). He then ſhews what countenance it hath from the Old and New Teſtament (17); and afterwards ſtates a philoſophical Hypotheſis of the ſoul's Pre-exiſtence (18). In the Preface he remarks, that his deſign in this Book is only an innocent repreſentation of an antient and probable opinion, which I conceive, ſays he, may contribute ſomewhat towards the clearing and vindicating the divine Attributes, and ſo repreſenting the ever bleſſed Deity as a more fit object of love and adoration than the opinions of the world make him..... For there is nothing more for the intereſt of Religion, than that God be repreſented to his creatures as amiable and lovely, which cannot be better done than by clearing up his providences and dealings with the ſons of men, and diſcovering them to be full of equity, ſweetneſs, and benignity. He afterwards obviates the objection, which might be made to this Hypotheſis, as inconſiſtent with the Frame of orthodox Divinity, and tells us, that " it is but ſuppoſing that God created all " ſouls together, as he did the Angels; that ſome of " them ſinned and fell with the other apoſtate ſpirits, " and for their diſobedience were thruſt into a ſtate of " ſilence and inſenſibility; that the divine Goodneſs " ſo provided for them, that they ſhould act a part " again in terreſtrial bodies, when they ſhould fitly be " prepared for them; and that Adam was ſet up as " our great Protoplaſt and Repreſentative, who had he " continued in innocence and integrity, we had then " been ſharers in that happineſs, which he at firſt was " inſtated in; but by his unhappy defection and diſ- " obedience we loſt it, and becauſe thus miſerable in " our new life in theſe earthly bodies: I ſay, the " doctrine of Præ-exiſtence thus ſtated, is in nothing " that I know of an enemy to common Theology; all " things hence proceeding as in our ordinary ſyſtems, " with this only difference, that this Hypotheſis clears " the divine Attributes from any ſhadow of harſhneſs " and inequality, ſince it ſuppoſes us to have ſinned " and deſerved all the miſery we ſuffer in this condi- " tion before we come hither; whereas the other, " which teacheth that we become both guilty and mi- " ſerable by the ſingle and ſole offence of Adam, when " as we were not then in being, or as to our ſouls, as " much as potentially in our great Progenitour, bears " ſomewhat hardly upon the repute of the divine per- " fections."

(9) Cap. 1.
(10) Cap. 2.
(11) Cap. 3.
(12) Pag. 34.
(13) Cap. 4.
(14) Cap. 5.
(15) Cap. 6.
(16) Cap. 10.
(17) Cap. 11.
(18) Cap. 14.

[C] His Scepſis Scientifica.] The whole title is: Scepſis Scientifica: or confeſt ignorance the way to ſcience, in an Eſſay on the Vanity of Dogmatizing and confident Opinion. London 1665 in 4to. To this Work are ſubjoined, being of Witches and Witchcraft [D]. June the 23d 1666 he was inducted into the Rec(l) Idem, ibid. tory of the Church of St. Peter and St. Paul at Bath (h). In 1668 he publiſhed his Plus ultra; or the Progreſs and Advancement of Knowledge ſince the days of Ariſtotle [E]; in ſubjoined, A Reply to the Exceptions of the learned Tho. Albius &c. or, Scire tuum nihil eſt; or the Author's Defence of the Vanity of Dogmatizing &c. and A Letter to a Friend concerning Ariſtotle.

[D] His Some Philoſophical Conſiderations touching the being of Witches and Witchcraft.] It is a Letter to Robert Hunt Eſq; printed at London 1666 in 4to. But all or moſt of the impreſſion of this Book being burnt in the great fire at London in the beginning of September the ſame year, it was reprinted there again 1667 in 4to
(19) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 665. (19). We ſhall give an account of the reſt of his Books relating to this ſubject. A Blow at modern Saduciſm, in ſome Philoſophical conſiderations about Witchcraft. London 1668 in 4to. To this Book are ſubjoined, A Relation of the famed Diſturbance at the Houſe of Mr. Mumpeſſon; and Reflections on Drollery and Atheiſm. In 1668 he publiſhed Palpable Evidence of Spirits and Witchcraft, in an account of the famed diſturbance by a Drummer in the Houſe of Mr. Mumpeſſon.
(20) Col. 666. London 1668. This, according to Mr. Wood (20), is moſt, if not all, the ſame with the Relation abovementioned, only the title altered. A Whip for the Droll, Fiddler to the Atheiſt; being Reflections on Drollery and Atheiſm. London 1668. This is likewiſe moſtly the ſame with the Reflections on Drollery &c. abovementioned. It is reprinted, as a new piece, by Dr. Henry More, among the Additions to the ſecond Edition of Saduciſmus Triumphatus. Saduciſmus Triumphatus: or full and plain Evidence concerning Witches and Apparitions, in two parts. London 1681 in 8vo, and there again in 1682 with large Additions by Dr. Henry More, the Editor of both Editions. The firſt part treats of the Poſſibility, the ſecond of the real Exiſtence of Witches; with a Letter to Dr. Henry More upon the ſame ſubject. The firſt part conſiſts of his Conſiderations touching the Being of Witchcraft, reprinted here the fifth time. The ſecond part contains an anſwer to part of the Diſplay of ſuppoſed Witchcraft &c. by Mr. John Webſter, Practitioner in Phyſic and Chirurgery in the Weſt-Riding of Yorkſhire, printed at London 1667 in fol. and Mr. Glanvill's former Relation of the famed Diſturbance at the Houſe of Mr. Mumpeſſon, and a ſecond Narrative of it inlarged, with a Collection of twenty ſix modern Relations. The Author's imperfect Preface to the ſecond part gives an account of the ſeveral Editions of his former Treatiſe of Witches, and relates the many motives, which induced him to make thoſe large Additions in the Edition. The perſon, who peruſed his papers after his death, digeſteſt his materials, which were left ſomewhat imperfect, and ſupplied what was wanting by Advertiſements thro' the whole Work. The laſt advertiſement is the moſt conſiderable; and as an Appendix to the firſt part concerning the Poſſibility of Apparitions, &c. is added an Account of the Nature of a Spirit, tranſlated out of the two laſt Chapters of Dr. More's Enchiridion Metaphyſicum.

[E] His Plus Ultra: or the Progreſs and Advancement of knowledge ſince the days of Ariſtotle.] The whole title is as follows: Plus Ultra: or the Progreſs and Advancement of Knowledge ſince the days of Ariſtotle. In an Account of ſome of the moſt remarkable late Improvements of practical, uſeful Learning: to encourage philoſophical Endeavours. Occaſioned by a conference with one of the Notional Way. By Joſ. Glanvill. London 1668 in 12mo. The Imprimatur is dated May 2d 1668. This Book was written upon the following occaſion (21): After Mr. Glanvill had ſettled at Bath, and written ſome things againſt Ariſtotle, he was deſired to pay a viſit to Mr. Robert Croſſe, Vicar of Great Chew near Pensford in Somerſetſhire, a great zealot for the old Philoſophy. In the year 1667 therefore our Author was introduced to Mr. Croſſe, who had been ſpeaking before he came about Ariſtotle and his Philoſophy. After their firſt civilities were over, he renewed the diſcourſe, and applied it all to Mr. Glanvill, and treated the Royal Society and modern Philoſophers with ſome contempt. Mr. Glanvill being ſurprized at this behaviour did not then much oppoſe him, but afterwards by letters and diſcourſe attacked Mr. Croſſe's Hypotheſis, "that Ariſtotle had

(21) See Plus Ultra, cap. 1. pag. 2, & ſeqq. and Wood, col. 753.

"more advantages for knowledge than the Royal So- "ciety or all the preſent Age had, or could have, be-
"cauſe he did totam peragrare Aſiam." Our Author therefore drew up his Plus Ultra; in which he ſhews, that the two chief ways of promoting knowledge, are, 1. By inlarging the Hiſtory of things: 2. By improving Intercourſe and Communications; and that this Age hath great advantages from the advancement of Chemiſtry and Anatomy (22); and the improvements of (22) Cap. 2.
Mathematics, particularly of Arithmetic, Algebra and (23) Cap. 3, 4.
Geometry (23), Aſtronomy (24), Optics and Geography (25). He then obſerves, that uſeful knowledge is aſſiſt- (24) Cap. 5.
ed by the inſtruments lately invented, as the Teleſcope Microſcope, Thermometer, Barometer, and Air-Pump (25) Cap. 6.
(26); and by the modern improvements of natural Hiſtory (27). That the latter Ages have great advantages for (26) Cap. 7, 8.
ſpreading and communicating knowledge, particularly by Printing, Compaſs, and the Royal Society (28). (27) Cap. 10.
Our Author ſhews the reaſons of the inſtitution of that Society, and their deſigns (29), and gives an account of (28) Cap. 11.
what Mr. Boyle had then done for the promotion of uſeful knowledge, and what he had by him not then (29) Cap. 12.
publiſhed; and points out the reaſons for the world to expect greater things of the Royal Society (30). "It (30) Cap. 13,
"is eaſy, ſays he, to ſee in the very frame of this 14.
"Aſſembly, that they are fitted with opportunities to (31) Pag. 108,
"amaſs together all the conſiderable notices, obſerva- 109, 110.
"tions, and experiments, that are ſcattered up and "down in the wide world; and ſo to make a bank
"of all the uſeful knowledge that is among men.
"For either by their whole body or ſome other of "their particular members, they hold a learned cor-
"reſpondence with the greateſt Virtuoſi of all the "known univerſe, and have ſeveral of their own Fel-
"lows abroad in foreign parts, by reaſon of whoſe
"communications they know moſt of the valuable
"rarities and phænomena obſerved by the curious in "nature, and all conſiderable attempts and perform"ances of art, ingenuity, and experiment. To which "conſideration if you add the inquiſitiveneſs of their "genius, and the way of their procedure by particu-
"lar and cautious obſervations; the coldneſs and ſhi-
"neſs of their aſſent; and the numbers of judicious
"men, that carefully examine their reports; I ſay,
"if theſe particulars be weighed, it will appear to the "unprejudiced, that the world had never ſuch an ad"vantage for the cumulating a treaſure of ſubſtantial
"knowledge, as it hath by this conſtitution. For "ſingle inquiſitors can receive but ſcant and narrow
"informations either from their own experience or
"converſes; and thoſe they have are frequently very "imperfect, or very miſtaken. There is often either
"vanity or credulity, ignorance or deſign in their Re"lations, which therefore are many times falſe in the "main matter, and oftner in the circumſtance. So "that the Hiſtories of Nature we have hitherto had,
"have but an heap and amaſſment of truth and falſ-
"hood, vulgar tales and romantic accounts; and it is
"not in the power of particular unaſſociated endea"vours to afford us better. But now the Frame of "this Society ſuggeſts excellent ground to hope from "them ſincere and univerſal relations, and the beſt
"grounded and moſt uſeful collection of the affairs of "art and nature, that ever yet was extant. And as "they have peculiar privileges for the gathering the "materials of knowledge; ſo they have the ſame for
"the impartment, and diffuſion of them." Our Author next ſhews the abſurdity of making compariſon between the advantages, which Ariſtotle had for knowledge, and thoſe of later Ages (32); and concludes (32) Cap. 15.
with certain obſervations about the cenſure of Atheiſm applied to philoſophical men, and an apology for the Royal Society and other generous Philoſophers (33); (33) Pag. 137, and with regard to himſelf, he gives us the following & ſeqq.
account (34). In his firſt education he was continually (34) Pag. 142 inſtructed into a religious and faſt adherence to every 143, 144.
thing, which he was taught, and a dread of diſſenting in the leaſt article. This diſcipline he underwent in his younger days, and thought very ſtrangely of thoſe, who believe any thing different from the opinions of their inſtructors. But advancing in years, and coming to a freer exerciſe of his own mind, he began to make reflections upon the vaſt diverſity and variety of apprehenſions and religions in the world. He conſidered, that they were all as confident in their way, as he was in that, wherein he was inſtructed; and the greateſt part had nothing but their education for their inducement. He thought how eaſy we are in our firſt age; and that tho' children muſt believe, yet men, eſpecially thoſe bred in the way of ſtudy, muſt try. He conſidered what he ſhould firſt adviſe an Heathen or Mahometan to do, who had been brought up to idolatry and fables; and upon the conſultation with himſelf concluded, that it ſhould be to look about him, and to examine other Religions, regarding his own with the ſame eye of indifferency and ſuſpenſion, as if he had never been born under that Faith, which was a thing extrinſic and accidental, and therefore not fit to make an argument to engage a reaſonable belief; and when he had ſo thought, he turned the tables, and took the ſame counſel himſelf. He therefore bent his chief ſtudies and endeavours to know the truth of the Chriſtian Faith; and after the foundations laid in the ſettling the grand article, The Being of a God, and the conſequent doctrines of Natural Theology, he ſate down to inquire about the Authority of the holy Scriptures; not that he poſitively doubted or diſtruſted their veracity, but that he might have a firm bottom, and be able to give an account of his faith and hope. In his inquiry, the firſt diſcourſes he met with on the ſubject did not at all ſatisfy, but ſeemed weak and greatly obnoxious. But in the progreſs of his ſearch, he lighted upon thoſe grounds, which, I thank God, ſays he, quieted my mind, and gave me the moſt demonſtrative aſſurance, that the nature of the thing could bear, of the truth and certainty of thoſe ſacred Writings, which undoubtedly contain the fulleſt diſcoveries of the divine wiſdom and perfections, which I infinitely admire, and ſhall eternally adore that Goodneſs, that bleſt the ſons of men, with ſuch clear diſcoveries of his will. And though I perceive that the follies and ſuperſtitions of Sects, who have the holy Oracles always in their mouths, and preſs them for the ſervice of their conceits, have prejudiced ſome of the pretenders to reaſon againſt them; yet this I ſee, that the wiſer, freer, better, and more reaſonable any man is, the greater ſtill is his veneration of thoſe holy Records, and the reliſh of them increaſeth with our improvements in virtue and goodneſs. Mr. Croſſe abovementioned wrote a piece againſt this Treatiſe, which Mr. Glanvill (35) ſtiles a Fardel, and tells us, it was rejected by the Licenſers both at Oxford and London for its incomparable railing and impertinence. However our Author procuring an account of the contents of it, ſent it in a private Letter to Dr. Ingelo, which Letter afterwards coming into a friend's hands in London was printed at London, and called the Chue Gazette; but there were not an hundred copies of it, and thoſe all given into private hands. In this Letter Mr. Glanvill preſented a collection of ſome of the ſcurrilous names, which Mr. Croſſe had called him; recited about ſixteen of his groſs falſhoods; diſcovered the contemptible impertinency of the Book; and gave a ſpecimen of the learning, which Mr. Croſſe ſhewed in ſchool-ſcraps, little ends of verſe, and children's phraſes; "which "are, ſays our Author (36), all the reading he diſco- "vers. Theſe things are in brief repreſented in the "Gazette, and much more largely in a Latin account "of his performance, which I have ready by me." After this Letter was abroad, Mr. Croſſe wrote Ballads againſt our Author; and engaged Mr. Henry Stubbe, the Phyſician of Warwick, in his Defence, who publiſh'd at London 1670 in 4to a Book intitled, The Plus Ultra reduced to a Non Plus: Or a Specimen of ſome Animadverſions upon the Plus Ultra of Mr. Joſ. Glanvill, &c. with divers Enquiries made about ſeveral matters. This occaſioned our Author to publiſh A Præfatory Anſwer to Mr. Henry Stubbe, the Doctor of Warwick. Wherein the malignity of his temper, the hypocriſy of his pretences, the falſhood of his reports, and the impertinency of his arguings and quotations in his Animadverſions on Plus Ultra are diſcovered. By. Joſ. Glanvill. London 1671 in 12mo. This piece is addreſſed to his much honoured Friend Francis Godolphin, Eſq; Upon this Mr. Stubbe wrote a Preface againſt Ecebolius Glanvill, Fellow of the Royal Society, ſubjoined to his Reply unto a Letter written to Mr. Henry Stubbe in defence of The Hiſtory of the Royal Society. Oxford 1671 in 4to. He fell upon him likewiſe in his Epiſtolary Diſcourſe concerning Phlebotomy, in oppoſition to George Thomſon, Pſeudo-Chymiſt, a pretended Diſciple to the Lord Verulam. London 1671 in 4to. Mr. Glanvill immediately publiſhed A further Diſcovery of Mr. Stubbe, in a brief Reply to the laſt Pamphlet againſt Joſeph Glanvill. London 1671 in 8vo. To this Tract is ſubjoined Ad Clerum Somerſetenſem Epiſtola ΠΡΟΣΦΩΝΗΣΙΣ. Dr. Meric Caſaubon alſo made ſome Reflections upon our Author's Plus Ultra, in a Letter to Peter du Moulin, D. D. &c. concerning natural experimental Philoſophie, and ſome Books lately ſet out about it (37). In this Letter Dr. Caſaubon vindicates Ariſtotle from the imputations thrown upon him by Mr. Glanvill; who, he obſerves (38), doth not want words to ſet out his matter to the beſt advantage; and remarks (39), that "whereas a long "Inventory is given by our Author of things lately "diſcovered, that were not known to the ancients, "it would have been the part of an impartial man to "have told us at the ſame time, that we have loſt "ſome things alſo known to the ancients, and what "they are, which happily might deſerve as much re- "ſpect; ſo much at leaſt as not to be paſſed in ſilence. "Many ſuch things (beſides what is collected by Pan- "cirollus in a Treatiſe of that argument) have been "obſerved by more than one, Phyſicians and others, "all which I cannot call to mind ſuddenly. One "thing may be cutting for the ſtone in the kidneys, "which in Hippocrates's time was practiſed (I have "read it in more than one,) with good ſucceſs; but "now, and ever ſince Galen's time (for which ſome "blame him) loſt and forgotten. To this divers o- "ther things are added by learned Phyſicians, as that "which they call Diſſectio in Empyematibus; Exuſtio "in jecoris humoribus; Cranii perforatio in aquâ cere- "bri; Sectio ſupra oculum in ſuffuſionibus; Extractio "aquæ intercutis; which laſt, tho' ſome venture upon "in theſe days alſo, yet it is obſerved that few or none "eſcape for want of the right way. To theſe I make "no queſtion many more might be added; and I am "ſure I have met with more in their Books, which "I do not at this time remember." Whether Galen had any knowledge of the Venæ lacteæ, and the like, I know not; but I am confident he had that knowledge of all the muſcles, ſinews, arteries, fibres, and the like, and their proper uſe in every part of the body, (as doth appear by thoſe admirable Books he hath written on that ſubject) as I think few Phyſicians have at this day . . . It is my opinion, that there is ſcarce any art or faculty, wherein we do not come ſhort of the ancients. Indeed their induſtry, much provoked by the greatneſs of rewards, was greater generally; that cannot be denied. Painting, Carving, the Statuaria, are in a manner loſt, in compariſon of what they had attained to. So is the art of coining of money, as uſed in the beſt times of the Roman Empire. The beſt Writers and artificers of theſe days acknowledge it. So is Muſick. Ludovicus Vives (beſides Pancirollus before named) was of that opinion, I am ſure; and there is ſo much to be ſaid, that it is ſo, that I do not ſee how it can be doubted or denied by any man. The ſecret of thoſe eternal lamps, as we may call them, found in divers ancient graves, though ſo much by more than one hath been written of them, continues a ſecret to this day; and I doubt whether modern Chymiſtry, ſo much admired by ſome men, afford any thing that deſerves more admiration. Doth any body pretend in theſe days to underſtand the Mathematicks, as Archimedes did? What would not men, Kings, and Princes give for one of his inventions? Dr. Caſaubon having made ſome animadverſions upon Mr. Glanvill's Book has theſe words (40): "What I had to except againſt the Book you brought "me, I have told you: I muſt now thank you for it. "For in very truth, his Divinity at the end, which is "ſomewhat myſtical (I hope I do not underſtand it) "and thoſe two particulars, his contempt of Ariſtotle, "and his cenſuring all other learning beſides Experi- "mental Philoſophy, and what tendeth to it, as uſeleſs "and mere wrangling and diſputing, excepted; I have "read the reſt, wherein he doth give us an exact account "of late diſcoveries, with much pleaſure. For though "I think many Ages may paſs before the uſe of many "of thoſe particulars is known; yet Ariſtotle hath "taught me, (and he proves it excellently) that no- "thing

(35) Præfatory Anſwer to Mr. Henry Stubbe, pag. 2.

(36) Ibid. pag. 188.

(37) It was printed at Cambridge 1669 in 4to, pagg. 36.

(38) Ibid. pag. 20.

(39) Ibid. pag. 27, 28, 29.

(40) Pag. 35, 36.

in 1670 his Seaſonable Recommendation and Defence of Reaſon &c [F]; and in 1671 his Philoſophia Pia: or, A Diſcourſe of the religious Temper and Tendencies of the Experimental Philoſophy

" thing can be in nature ſo mean, or ſo vile, but de-
" ſerves to be taken notice of, and will afford to an in" genious ſpeculative man matter of pleaſure and de-
" light." Mr. Glanvill mentions this piece of Dr. Caſaubon at the end of the Preface to his Præfatory Anſwer to Mr. Henry Stubbe, and tells us, that he had anſwered the Strictures of that reverend Man in a particular diſcourſe, which I think, ſays he, to publiſh when I next reckon with Mr. Stubbe.

[F] His Seaſonable Recommendation and Defence of Reaſon &c.] The whole title is: Λόγε Θρησκεία: or a ſeaſonable Recommendation and Defence of Reaſon in the Affairs of Religion, againſt Infidelity, Scepticiſm, and Fanaticiſm of all ſorts. London 1670 in 4to, pagg. 36. The running title is, A friendly Agreement between Reaſon and Religion. Our Author's name is not prefixed to it. As this Pamphlet is very ſcarce, we ſhall give ſome account of it. It is a Diſcourſe on Rom. xii. the latter part of verſe 1. addreſſed ad Clerum. Mr.
(41) Pag. 1. Glanvill begins with obſerving (41), that there is nothing which hath done ſo much miſchief to Chriſtianity, as the diſparagement of Reaſon, under pretence of reſpect and favour to Religion; ſince hereby the very foundations of the Chriſtian Faith have been undermined, and the world prepared for Atheiſm. Whereas to repreſent the fair agreement that is between Reaſon and Religion, is the moſt ſeaſonable ſervice that can be done unto both, ſince hereby Religion will be reſcued from the impious accuſation of its being groundleſs and imaginary; and Reaſon alſo defended againſt the unjuſt charge of thoſe that would make this beam of God
(42) Pag. 2. prophane and irreligious (42). Our Author's deſign is to ſhew, that Religion is a reaſonable thing, in treating of which propoſition he, I. States what he means by Religion, and what by Reaſon. II. Demonſtrates their harmony and agreement. III. Diſables the main objections which are alledged againſt the uſe of Reaſon in the affairs of Faith. IV. Improves all by ſome inferences and advices. With regard to the firſt par-
(43) Pag. 4. ticular he obſerves (43), that the name of Religion ſignifies binding, and ſo imports Duty; and all Duty is compriſed under theſe two generals, Worſhip and Virtue. Worſhip comprehends all our duties to God; Virtue all thoſe which relate to our neighbour or our ſelves. Religion then primarily conſiſts in theſe. But Duty cannot be performed without Knowledge; and ſome principles there muſt be, which muſt direct theſe practices; and thoſe which diſcover and direct them in thoſe actions of duty, are called Principles of Religion. Theſe are of two ſorts: ſome are, 1. Fundamental and Eſſential; others, 2. Acceſſory and Aſſiſting. Fundamental Principles are ſuch as are ſuppoſed to the duties of Religion, one or more, and ſuch as are abſolutely neceſſary to the performance of them reſpectively. Of this ſort our Author mentions four: 1. That there is a God of infinite Perfection. 2. That we are ſinners, and expoſed to his diſpleaſure. This is neceſſary to confeſſion of ſins, and repentance; parts of worſhip. 3. That God is our Maker, and the Author of all our bleſſings. This is neceſſary to the duties of prayer, praiſe, and adoration. 4. That there is moral good and evil. Without this there can be no charity, humility, juſtice, purity, or the reſt. The Acceſſory and Aſſiſting Principles are, 1. That God will pardon us, if we repent. 2. That he will aſſiſt us, if we endeavour. 3. That he will accept of ſervices, that are imperfect, if they are ſincere. 4. That he will reward or puniſh, in another world, according to what
(44) Pag. 5. we have done in this. This Mr. Glanvill (44) eſteems to be the ſum of Religion in general; and that Chriſtianity takes in all thoſe Duties, and all the Principles; advancing the Duties to nobler meaſures, and encouraging them by new motives and aſſiſtances, and ſuperadding two other inſtances, Baptiſm, and the Lord's Supper. And for the Principles, it confirms thoſe of natural Religion, and explains them further, and diſcovers ſome few new ones. " And all theſe, ſays
(45) Pag. 5, 6. " our Author (45), both of the former and latter ſort, " are contained in the Creed. Here are all the Fun- " damentals of Religion, and the main aſſiſting prin- " ciples alſo. And I call nothing elſe Religion but " plain Duties and theſe acknowledged Principles. " And though our Church require our aſſent to more " propoſitions, yet thoſe are only Articles of Commu- " nion, not doctrines abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation. " And if we go beyond the Creed for the Eſſentials of " Faith, who can tell where we ſhall ſtop? The ſumm " is, Religion primarily is Duty; and Duty is all that " which God hath commanded to be done by his " Word or our Reaſons; and we have the ſubſtance " of theſe in the Commandments. Religion alſo in a " ſecondary ſenſe conſiſts in ſome principles relating " to the worſhip of God and of his Son, in the ways " of devout and virtuous living; and theſe are com- " priſed in that ſummary of Belief called the Apoſtles " Creed. This I take to be Religion; and this Re- " ligion I ſhall prove to be reaſonable. But I can- " not undertake for all the opinions ſome men are " pleaſed to call Orthodox; nor for all thoſe that by " many private perſons and ſome Churches are count- " ed eſſential Articles of Faith and Salvation." Mr.
(46) Pag. 6. Glanvill (46) then proceeds to fix the proper notion of Reaſon; which is ſometimes taken for Reaſon in the Faculty, which is the Underſtanding; and at other times for Reaſon in the Object, which conſiſts in thoſe principles and concluſions, by which the underſtanding is informed. This latter is meant in the diſpute concerning the agreement or diſagreement of Reaſon and Religion. Having premiſed this, our Author goes on to his ſecond point, to ſhew, that Religion is reaſonable; which implies two things, viz. That Reaſon is a friend to Religion, and that Religion is ſo to Reaſon. From theſe two reſults their Correſpondence and Agreement. Under the firſt branch he obſerves (47), that with regard to the principles of Religion, which are called Faith, Reaſon greatly befriends them, 1. By proving ſome of thoſe principles; (47) Pag. 7, &
2. By defending all. Having ſhewn how ſerviceable ſeqq.
Reaſon is to Religion, he next proves, that Religion befriends Reaſon (48); for which purpoſe he offers (48) Pag. 14.
ſome teſtimonies of Scripture, in which God himſelf, and Chriſt, and his Apoſtles own and acknowledge Reaſon. From this Diſcourſe he draws the following inferences (49); 1. Reaſon is certain and infallible. (49) Pag. 23, &
2. Reaſon is, in a ſenſe, the Word of God. 3. The ſeqq.
belief of our Reaſon is an exerciſe of Faith, and Faith is an act of Reaſon. 4. No principle of Reaſon contradicts any article of Faith. 5. When any thing is pretended from Reaſon againſt any article of Faith, we ought not to cut the knot by denying Reaſon: but endeavour to unty it by anſwering the argument; and it is certain it may be fairly anſwered. 6. When any thing is offered us for an article of Faith, that ſeems to contradict Reaſon, we ought to ſee that there be good cauſe to believe that this is divinely revealed, and in the ſenſe propounded. 7. There is nothing that God hath revealed to oblige our Faith, but he hath given us Reaſon to believe that he hath revealed it. 8. A man may hold an erroneous opinion from a miſtaken ſenſe of Scripture, and deny what is the truth of the propoſition, and what is the right meaning of the text; and yet not err in Faith. 9. In ſearching after the ſenſe of Scripture we ought to conſult the principles of Reaſon as we do other Scriptures. 10. The eſſentials of Religion are ſo plainly revealed, that no man can miſs them that hath not a mighty corrupt biaſs in his will and affections to infatuate and blind his underſtanding.
" Theſe are ſome propoſitions, ſays Mr. Glanville
" (50), that follow from my diſcourſe, and from one (50) Pag. 28, 29
" another. The better they are conſidered, the more
" their force will be perceived; and I think they " may ſerve for many very conſiderable purpoſes of
" Religion, Charity, and the Peace of Mankind."
He then addreſſes himſelf to his Brethren of the Clergy in the following reflections. 1. To diſclaim Reaſon, as an enemy to Religion, tends to the introduction of Atheiſm, Infidelity, and Scepticiſm; and hath already brought in a flood of theſe upon us. 2. The denial of Reaſon in Religion hath been the principal engine that Heretics and Enthuſiaſts have uſed againſt the Faith; and that which lays us open to infinite follies and impoſtures. 3. By the ſame way great advantage is given to the Church of Rome. If Reaſon, ſays losophy which is professed by the Royal Society [G]. In July 1672 he exchanged the Vicarage of Frome for the Rectory of Streat, with the Chapel of Walton annexed, in Somersetshire, with Mr. Richard Jenkins, M. A. About the same time he was appointed one of the Chaplains in ordinary to King Charles II; and by the interest of Henry Marquis of Worcester, (to whom our Author's wife claimed some alliance) was installed on the 22d of June 1678 one of the Prebendaries of Worcester (i). Besides the works abovementioned, he wrote several others, which we shall give an account of in the Note [H]. Mr. Henry Stubbe, the Physician of Warwick, in his Epistolary Discourse concerning Phlebotomy has treated Mr. Glanvill in a very abusive manner; and tells us, that he was the most impudent liar in the world, and so ignorant and illiterate a fellow, that he was not fit to come into any learned Company (k); that he did not understand Greek (l); that he could not construe Aristotle (m); that he was a renegado Presbyterian, Latitudinarian, a proud and conceited person; and he charges him with impiety and indiscretion (n). But these reproaches are of little weight, since they come from a person of the most virulent disposition; and Mr. Richard Baxter declares (o), that Mr. Glanvill was a "man of more than ordinary ingenuity, and famous for his great wit;" and Thomas de Albiis (p) applauds him for his excellent genius. Mr. Wood likewise assures us (q), that he was "a person of more than ordinary parts, of a quick, warm, spruce, and gay "fancy, and was more lucky, (at least in his own judgment,) in his first hints and "thoughts of things, than in his after-notions, examined and digested by longer and more

(i) Idem, ibid.

(k) Epistolary Discourse, pag. 14, 15.

(l) Ibid. pag. 22.

(m) Ibid. pag. 25.

(n) Ibid. pag. 6, 7.

(o) Second true Defence of the meer Nonconformists, &c. London 1681, pag. 174, 175.

(p) In Epist. dedicat. Juvioribus Britannic. Scholarum Academicis, ad Libr. cui titul. est Sciri.

(q) Athen. Oxon. col. 663.

(51) Pag. 33, 34. Mr. Glanvill (51), be renounced in matters of Religion, with what face can we use it against the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, or any other points of the Roman Creed? Would it not be blameless and irreproachable for us to give up our understandings implicitly to the dictates and declarations of that Church? .... How easily may they rejoin, when we dispute against them; "You argue from Reason, and by Consequences. "But Reason is dull and carnal, and an enemy to the "things of the Spirit, and not to be heard in the high "matters of Religion." And what can we say next, if we consent to the accusation? I say, by this way we perfectly disable, or grossly contradict our selves in most of our disputes against the Romanists. And we are very disingenuous in our dealings, while we use Reason against them, and deny it, when it is urged against our selves by another sort of adversaries; which implies, that when we say, Reason is not to be heard, we mean, It is not to be heard against us; but it must against the Church of Rome, or any others we can oppugn by it. Thus, I say, our denying Reason in Religion is either very humoursome and partial; or it is a direct yielding up our selves to our enemies, and doing that our selves, which is the only thing they desire, to undo us, and to promote their own interests upon our ruins.

[G] His Philosophia Pia, &c.] It was printed at London in 8vo, and dedicated to Dr Seth Ward, Bishop of Sarum. In this Discourse he shews, "I. That "God is to be praised for his works. II. That his "works are to be studied by those that would praise "him for them. III. That the study of nature and "God's works is very serviceable to Religion. IV. "That the Ministers and Professors of Religion ought "not to discourage, but promote the knowledge of "nature and the works of its Author." To this Discourse is subjoined his Seasonable Recommendation and Defence of Reason in the affairs of Religion against Infidelity, Scepticism, and Fanaticisms of all sorts; which in the Preface he observes to have been a Visitation Sermon.

[H] He wrote several other Works, which we shall give an account of in the Note.] Several Sermons, as, 1. A Fast Sermon on King Charles I's Martyrdom, on Rom. xiii. 2. London 1667. 2. Catholick Charity recommended in a Sermon before the Lord Mayor of London, on 1 Peter i. part of the 22d verse, in order to the abating the animosities among Christians, that have been occasioned by differences in Religion. London 1669 in 4to. An earnest Invitation to the Lord's Supper. London 1673, 1674, 1677, in 12mo. Seasonable Reflections and Discourses in order to the conviction and cure of the scoffing infidelity of a degenerate age. London 1676 in 8vo. This consists of four Sermons, viz. 1. The sin and danger of scoffing at Religion, on 2 Peter iii. 3. 2. The Church's Contempts from profane and fanatic enemies, on Psalm cxxiii. 3, 4. 3. Moral Evidence of a Life to come, on Matth. xxii. 32. 4. The serious Considerations of a future Judgment, on Acts xvii. 31. Essays on several important subjects in Philosophy and Religion. London 1676 in 4to. These Essays, which are seven in number, were all, except the last, published before singly by the Author; who in his Preface gives an account of his revising and collecting them into a body. An Essay concerning Preaching; written for the direction of a young Divine, and useful also for the people, in order to profitable hearing. London 1678 in 12mo. Our Author's name is not prefix'd to it. The Imprimatur is dated December 6th 1677. This Essay is addressed to Mr. Charles Fountain. Mr. Glanvill tells us (53), that he purposely kept himself from reading any other Writers on this subject, that he might freely, without bias, give his own apprehensions; but that since the papers were written and transcribed, he had look'd over two or three of the chief of those discourses, and was exceedingly encouraged by finding, that his conceptions, as to the main, are not only consistent, but very agreeable with theirs. At the end of this Essay is a Letter to a Member of Parliament concerning the State of Ministers in Corporations and great Towers. With this Essay is likewise printed A seasonable Defence of Preaching and the plain Way of it. London 1678 in 12mo. It is written by way of Dialogue. Some Discourses, Sermons, and Remains. London 1681 in 4to. with our Author's picture before them. These Sermons, which were in number eleven, were most of them printed before separately. Dr. Anthony Horneck was the Editor of this Collection. The zealous and impartial Protestant, shewing some great, but less heeded dangers of Popery, &c. in a Letter to a Member of Parliament. London 1681 in 4to. This Book being published a little before our Author's death, was so displeasing to some Parliament-Men, that they would have called him to an account for it, if he had lived a little longer (54). Mr. Richard Baxter hath made some animadversions upon this piece in his Second true Defence of the meer Non-Conconformist, &c. Printed at London 1681 in 4to. Letters to the Duchess of Newcastle. A Letter to the Earl of Bristol, with another to a Friend, of the Usefulness of the universal character, with the way of learning it. This was never printed (55). Mr. Glanvill likewise published Two Discourses, viz. A Discourse of Truth by Dr. George Rust Bishop of Dromore in Ireland; and The Way to Happiness and Salvation. London 1677 in 12mo. These Discourses were printed in 1683 in 8vo with this title; Two choice and useful Treatises: the one Lux Orientalis, &c. The other a Discourse of Truth. By the late Reverend Dr. George Rust, Lord Bishop of Dromore in Ireland; with Annotations on them by Dr. Henry More (56). These Annotations are full as large as the Discourses themselves. The title to the latter Annotations on Dr. Rust's Discourse runs thus; Annotations upon the Discourse of Truth: in which is inserted by way of digression, A brief Return to Mr. Baxter's Reply, which he calls A placid Collation with the learned Dr. Henry More, occasioned by the Doctor's Answer to a Letter of the learned Pythophorist (57). Whereunto is annexed a devotional Hymn, translated for the use of the sincere lovers of true piety. Dr. Rust's Discourse of Truth was afterwards printed in his Remains collected and published by Henry Hallywell, London 1686 in 4to.

(53) Pag. 3.

(54) Wood, col. 667.

(35) Idem, ibid.

(56) Idem, ibid.

(57) Dr. More means by this Mr. Baxter whose Letter to the Doctor was published by the latter, without Mr. Baxter's knowledge in the second edition of Mr. Glanvill's Saducismus triumphatus.

" more mature deliberation. He had a very tenacious memory, and was a great maſter " of the Engliſh Language, expreſſing himſelf therein with eaſe and fluency, and in a " manly, yet withall a ſmooth ſtile." He reflected upon his Univerſity education with regret and diſſatisfaction, declaring often in common diſcourſe, that his being trained up in that trite and beaten road was one of his greateſt unhappineſſes that had ever befallen him (r). Dr. Anthony Horneck has given him a very great character [I]. He died at his houſe at Bath on the 4th of October 1680, and was interred in his Church there on the 9th of the ſame month (s). His funeral Sermon was preached by Mr. Joſeph Pleydell, Archdeacon of Chicheſter, and afterwards publiſhed.

(r) Ibid. col. 664.

(s) Ibid. col. 668.

[I] Dr. Anthony Horneck has given him a great character.] In his Preface to Some Diſcourſes, Sermons, and Remains by our Author, printed at London 1681 in 4to he tells us, that Mr. Glanvill's Wit lay out of the common road; that death ſnatched him away when the learned world expected ſome of his greateſt attempts and enterprizes. " As he valued no notions " that were mean and trivial, ſo thoſe he hath ſent " abroad ſavour of more than an ordinary genius. " His ſoul ſeemed to be ſpun of a finer thread than " thoſe of other mortals, and things looked with an- " other face, when they paſſed through the quicker " fire of his Laboratory.... Even the moſt obvious " truths coming from our Author received a greater " luſtre; and that meat, which familiarity made in " a manner nauſeous to ſome nicer palates, when " dreſſed with his ſauce, became more poignant, and " conſequently more acceptable. His Diſcourſes from " the pulpit, as they were ſolid, ſo they were (which " is the grace and life of them) pathetic; and by his " zeal and fervor one might gueſs how big his deſire " unto God for Iſrael was, that they might be ſaved. " Though he met with diſappointments ſometimes, " yet he remembered he was a Chriſtian; and as he " was not without his croſſes, ſo he carried himſelf " under them like a true Philoſopher. His mind " ſeemed to be ſerene, when things went moſt con- " trary to his wiſhes. And whatever ſtorm the in- " conſtancy and fickleneſs of ſublunary objects threw " upon him, within ſtill he felt a calm beyond that " of Socrates, when the ungrateful Athenians ſent " him the fatal draught to drink, his death and ruin. " He had a mind fitted for contemplation; and his " thoughts could dwell on a divine object till he had " ſucked out the cream and marrow. His Divinity, " as well as Philoſophy, was free from dogmatizing; " and while he tied himſelf to no αὐτὸς ἔφη, he ar- " rived to a clearer apprehenſion of truth and error. " The divine Plato was ſomewhat dearer to him, " than the ſubtiler Ariſtotle; and it cannot be other- " wiſe where ſouls long to be transformed into the " image of the Deity. Nothing ſeemed to engroſs " his deſire ſo much, as the reformation of an unbe- " lieving world; and indeed there were few men " fitter for that enterprize, God having bleſſed him " with a conſiderable ſtock both of Reaſon and Elo- " quence." To a clarified mind, the groſs atheiſtical ſurmiſes of modern wits muſt needs be exceeding fulſome; and no marvel, if ſouls ſo fine break forth ſometimes into very ſevere Satyrs to laſh this petulant humour. If any thing could raiſe his paſſion, it was the nonſenſical diſcourſes of Deiſts and Chriſtian Infidels; and he thought he might be juſtly angry with ſuch wretches, that, like the giants of old, durſt make new wars with tremendous omnipotence. He loved not to invelope theological doctrines in myſterious phraſe; and ever thought that Divinity beſt agreed with the mind of the Holy Ghoſt, that was ever expreſſed in rational and intelligible propoſitions. He was never any great admirer of our modern Illuminati, and he accounted that diſcourſe but little better than nonſenſe, which affected to recommend itſelf to the admiration of the hearers by its not being underſtood. Where his Reaſon tired, and could give him no direction, he was willing to take Faith for his guide. And though he confeſſed, that not a few things in Scripture were altogether unaccountable to his underſtanding; yet he doubted not but they would all be made clear in that ſtate, where we ſhall know even as we are known. T

GLAPHYRA, wife of Archelaus, High Prieſt of Bellona at Comana in Cappadocia, procured Kingdoms to her two ſons by her beauty. She flouriſhed at the ſame time with Marc Anthony. There are ſome Hiſtorians who do not formally aſſert, that her behaviour was irregular; they only inſinuate it [A], by mentioning what Marc Anthony did out of affection for her. But Dion without any ceremony treats her as a woman of ſcandalous character [B]. It is in reality very probable, conſidering the diſpoſition of Marc Anthony, that he did not beſtow crowns out of regard to Glaphyra, merely for the ſatisfaction of obliging a fine Lady, but that he received from her all the marks of gratitude, which a man of pleaſure is capable of wiſhing and preſcribing. The report of this intrigue reached as far as Rome; and Fulvia the wife of Anthony would have engaged Auguſtus to take vengeance of her huſband on account of this infidelity of his towards her. Her deſires were ſo ſtrong in this point, that ſhe threatened Auguſtus with a declaration of war, if he would not treat her in the ſame manner as Anthony had treated Glaphyra. Auguſtus contemned this threat, and choſe to expoſe himſelf to a war rather than be the gallant of Fulvia. This at leaſt is what he would have [A] There are ſome Hiſtorians, who do not formally aſſert, that her behaviour was irregular; they only inſinuate it.] Appian is the perſon, whom I point at. Here is what he ſays, when he mentions what Marc Anthony did in Aſia after the defeat of Brutus and Caſſius. Diſceptationes quoque civitatum ac regum ex arbitrio ſuo compoſuit, Siſinnæ Ariarathiſque in Cappadocia, prælato Siſinna in Glaphyræ matris formoſæ gratiam (1). i. e. " He ſettled, as he thought proper, the conteſts " of Cities and Kings, particularly of Siſinna and A- " riarathes in Cappadocia, preferring Siſinna out of " regard to his mother Glaphyra, who a woman of " great beauty." It was in the year of Rome 713 that Siſinna was eſtabliſhed King of Cappadocia to the Excluſion of Ariarathes. He did not enjoy this Crown long; for we ſhall ſee preſently, that in the year 718 Ariarathes reigned in Cappadocia.

(1) Appian. lib. 1. d. Bell. Civil. pag. m. 392.

[B] Dion .... treats her as a woman of ſcandalous character.] It is where he ſpeaks of the change of Government made by Marc Anthony in ſeveral Provinces of Aſia in the year 718. Amyntas, who had been Secretary to Dejotarus, was put in poſſeſſion of Galatia and ſome parts of Lycaonia and Pamphylia, Ariarathes was baniſhed from Cappadocia, and Archelaus ſubſtituted in his room; Archelaus, I ſay, who was deſcended from that Archelaus, who had made war againſt the Romans, and ſon of the Courtezan Glaphyra. Ὁ δ' Ἀρχέλαος οὗτος, πρὸς μὲν πατρὸς, ἐκ τῶν Ἀρχελάων ἐκείνων τῶν τοῖς Ῥωμαίοις ἀντιπολεμησάντων ἦν, ἐκ δὲ μητρὸς ἑταίρας Γλαφύρας ἐγεγένητο. Archelai vero hujus genus paternum deducebatur ab Archelais qui contra Romanos belligeraverant; mater autem ei erat ſcortum Glaphyra (2).

(2) Dio, lib. 49i pag. 469, D.

have us think of him; for he wrote an Epigram upon this ſubject, which Martial has inſerted in his Poems [C]. I cannot tell by what fatality the huſband of Glaphyra had not the ſame ſupport from Cæſar, as her ſons had from Anthony. I have already obſerved, that he was High-Prieſt of Bellona; this was an office of great dignity. Cæſar gave it to a Nobleman named Lycomedes [D], who founded his pretenſions upon good titles. Where was Glaphyra then? If ſhe had pleaded her huſband's cauſe before Cæſar, ſhe would undoubtedly have ſhewn, that the pretenſions of Lycomedes were ill grounded: the Judge would have been too gallant not to declare in favour of a Prieſt, who had a beautiful wife. I ſhould be glad to know upon what grounds a man of wit has aſſerted (a), that Glaphyra mentioned in Auguſtus's Epigram was the Actreſs Citheris. We ſhall ſee in the following Article, that Glaphyra pretended to be deſcended from the Kings of Perſia.

(a) Nouv. Dialog. des Morts, Part. 2. Dial. 4. pag. m. 28.

[C] Auguſtus wrote an Epigram upon this ſubject, which Martial has inſerted in his Poems.] If I cite it, it ſhall be after I have ſuppreſſed thoſe words, which are too groſs (3).

(3) Martial. Epigr. 21. lib. 11. See the Remark [F] of the Article LYCORIS.

Cæſaris Auguſti laſcivos livide verſus
Sex lege, qui triſtis verba Latina legis.
Quod . . . Glaphyram Antonius, hanc mihi pœnam
Fulvia conſtituit, ſe quoque uti . . .
Fulviam ego ut . . . quid ſi me Manius oret
Pædicem, faciam? non puto ſi ſapiam.
Aut . . . aut pugnemus ait. Quid quæ mihi vita
Carior eſt ipſa mentula? ſigna canant.
Abſolvis lepidos nimirum Auguſte libellos
Qui ſcis Romana ſimplicitate loqui.

Father Noris imagined, that Auguſtus wrote this Epigram againſt Marc Anthony, with a view to reproach him with this criminal converſation (4). But it was not at all levelled againſt Anthony, but againſt Fulvia his wife, and it is the ſevereſt ſatire that can be imagined againſt a woman. I am the leſs ſcrupulous in taking the liberty of animadverting upon this ſlight miſtake of the learned Keeper of the Vatican Library, as he will be highly pleaſed to alledge, that he has not examined this kind of verſes, and will eſteem it an honour to be miſtaken. His error is infinitely leſs than that of Farnaby, who thought, that theſe verſes contained a proteſtation of Auguſtus, that chaſtity was dearer to him than life. We ſhall ſee in the Article LYCORIS, that there are ſome, who ſuppoſe, that it was the Courtezan Cytheris, who is ſpoken of in this Epigram.

(4) Hinc (that is, from what is cited from Appian) argumentum obſcœni Epigrammatis Auguſtus poſtea ſumpſit: quod Antonio objecit apud Martialem. Noris, Cenotaph. Piſan. 225.

[D] Cæſar gave it to a Nobleman named Lycomedes.] I have obſerved in another place (5), that Hirtius calls him Nicomedes. I ſhall give his own words; Id (Bellonæ templum) homini nobiliſſimo Nicomedi Bithynio adjudicavit, qui regio Cappadocum genere ortus propter adverſam fortunam majorum ſuorum mutationemque generis, jure minime dubio, vetuſtate tamen intermiſſo, Sacerdotium id repetebat. i. e. "He adjudged it (the Temple of Bellona) to Nicomedes of Bithynia, a man of "great quality, who was deſcended from the Family "of the Kings of Cappadocia, and claim'd that Prieſthood by an undoubted right, tho' it had been long "interrupted by the misfortunes of his Family and the "revolutions in it." We ſee by this paſſage that there had been ſome diſputes before Cæſar concerning the poſſeſſion of this Prieſthood. Now as Strabo affirms, that Lycomedes poſſeſſed it after Archelaus, it appears that the conteſt was between them two. Father Noris is likewiſe of this opinion; for he does not ſcruple to aſſert (7), that Archelaus enjoyed the Prieſthood of Bellona till Cæſar diveſted him of it in the year 707 to confer it upon Lycomedes. Upon this ſuppoſition we have reaſon to aſk, where were then the charms of Glaphyra, and why did not ſhe make uſe of them in oppoſition to the claim of Lycomedes? They muſt have been more potent than in 713. This is not a fruit, which is the better for time. Would her huſband have conceal'd her? Would he have choſen to loſe his Prieſthood, rather than to have expoſed his wife to the known Gallantry of Cæſar? This is what I know nothing of.

(5) In the Remark [D] of the article ARCHELAUS King of Cappadocia.

(6) Hirtius, de Bello Alexandr.

(7) In Cenotaph. Piſan. pag. 225.

GLAPHYRA, grand-daughter of the preceding, was daughter of Archelaus King of Cappadocia. She was firſt married to Alexander ſon of Herod and Mariamne; and being haughty and infatuated with her Nobility, ſhe did not at all maintain concord in the family, into which ſhe entered; a family, whoſe diviſions made Herod the moſt unhappy and moſt criminal of all fathers. Glaphyra boaſted upon every occaſion, that her father was deſcended from Temenus (a); that her mother was of the race of Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes; and that therefore ſhe infinitely ſurpaſſed all the Ladies of the Court in point of Nobility. She treated Herod's ſiſter and wives with contempt, and upbraided them, that their beauty alone, and not their quality had raiſed them to the rank which they enjoyed. Nothing was more proper than ſuch talk to excite a flame in Herod's family; and it is certain, that the haughtineſs of Glaphyra was one of the firſt cauſes of her huſband's death. She made him odious, and added new force to the deſign, which had been laid to deſtroy him by calumnies and artifices (b). During the criminal proſecution which Herod carried on againſt Alexander, he ordered Glaphyra to be put to the queſtion. The anſwer, which ſhe gave, deſerves to be mentioned [A]. After Herod had put Alexander to death, he ſent back Glaphyra to her father Archelaus, and kept the two ſons, whom the deceaſed had by this Lady (c). Joſephus affirms, that ſhe was married again to Juba King of Libya, and that having loſt this ſecond huſband ſhe returned to her father; but it is eaſy to prove this to be falſe [B], if he means Juba King of Mauritania.

(a) She meant probably him, who was one of the three Chiefs of the Heraclides upon their return to Peloponneſus; ſo that ſhe pretended that her father Archelaus was deſcended from Hercules.

(b) Ex Joſepho de Bello Judaico, lib. 1. cap. 17.

(c) Idem, ibid. cap. 18. & Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 1.

[A] The anſwer, which ſhe gave, deſerves to be mentioned.] She underwent the rack in the preſence of her huſband, who was bound in chains as a ſon, who had conſpired againſt his father's life. The ſight of this ſtruck her with horror, and made her ſigh in the moſt moving manner. Her huſband being urged to declare whether his wife was an accomplice of his crime, anſwered, that he was not a man, who could conceal any thing from a woman, by whom he had children, and who was dearer to him than life. Upon this ſhe proteſted her innocence, and declared, that ſhe would not ſcruple to tell a falſity, if it would contribute to ſave her huſband's life, tho' ſhe ſhould loſe her own; but that otherwiſe ſhe would confeſs all. Her huſband immediately made his confeſſion, and ſaid, that himſelf and his wife had no other deſign than to go to Archelaus's Court, and thence to Rome (1).

(1) Ex Joſepho, Antiq. lib. 16. cap. 16.

[B] It is eaſy to prove this to be falſe.] Joſephus ſpeaks of this marriage of Glaphyra with Juba King of Libya, as of a thing certain (2): he adds, that Juba

(2) Idem, ibid. lib. 17. cap. 15. De Bello Judaico, lib. 2. cap. 11.

Mauritania. It is certain that Archelaus the ſon of Herod was ſo deeply in love with her, that he divorced his wife in order to marry her (d). It is ſaid that Glaphyra lived not long after her return to Judea on account of a marriage ſo oppoſite to the Jewiſh Laws; and we have an account of a dream which ſhe had, and which was a preſage of her death [C]. The two ſons whom ſhe had by Alexander her firſt huſband ſoon abandoned the Jewiſh Religion (e), probably becauſe Archelaus their grandfather by the mother's ſide ſent for them into his Kingdom, and took care of their fortune. One of them was named Alexander, and the other Tigranes. We ſhall give ſome account of their adventures in the Remarks [D]. If the Chronology of ſome moderns were true [E], we (d) Ex Joſepho, Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 15. & de Bello Judaico, lib. 2. cap. 11.

(e) Idem, Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 7.

Juba was dead, when Glaphyra married Archelaus. Here is the way, by which it may be demonſtrated, that this is not to be underſtood of the King of Mauritania. Juba, King of Mauritania, was not dead (3), when Strabo wrote his VIth Book. Now Strabo wrote it under the Emperor Tiberius (4). Juba was not dead therefore, when Archelaus the ſon of Herod married Glaphyra, ſince he married her during his proſperity, and conſequently before the year of Rome 759, which was that of his diſgrace; for it was then that Auguſtus baniſh'd him to Vienne. Auguſtus lived ſeven or eight years longer. We may prove that Strabo wrote his VIth Book about the 5th year of Tiberius; for in the IVth Book (5) he obſerves, that it was about 33 years ſince Tiberius and Druſus had ſubdued the Norici (6). It would be ſuperfluous to remark after this, that Dion (7) ſpeaks of Juba as a Prince alive the ſame year, under which he places the baniſhment of Archelaus. We may collect from the IVth Book of the Annals of Tacitus, that Juba died about the 10th year of Tiberius. This Hiſtorian ſpeaks (8) of him as a man living under the year of Rome 776; but under the following year he ſpeaks of the reign of Ptolomy ſon of Juba (9). The XVIIth Book of Strabo was written ſoon after the death of the ſame Juba (10). It is a clear caſe therefore, that Joſephus would be groſly miſtaken, if by the King of Libya, whom he repreſents as the ſecond huſband of Glaphyra, he meant the King of Mauritania. Father Noris (11) would acquit Joſephus of but part of his error, if he had reaſon for conjecturing, that Glaphyra was divorced by Juba. What Joſephus relates concerning the death of the ſecond huſband prior to the marriage of Archelaus and Glaphyra, would be ſtill falſe; but this ſuppoſition of a divorce is founded upon mere arbitrary conjecture. Noldius (12) ſuppoſes a fact, which perhaps is leſs uncertain; that Joſephus meant by the King of Libya a King, who had no relation to the Romans, and whoſe widow Glaphyra was, when Archelaus became her lover. This Author affirms (13), that Libya is taken for all Africa in general, or certain parts of Africa in particular; but that in this latter ſignification it never comprehends Mauritania; whence he takes occaſion to cenſure (14) Sigiſmond Gelenius, who tranſlated by Regem Mauritaniæ the words, which Joſephus makes uſe of in ſpeaking of Juba King of Libya, τῶν Λιβύων. He is ſtill ſeverer in criticizing upon Father Salian, who thought that Juba had been killed in the battle, which Dion (15) mentions in his IVth Book. It was the battle, in which the Getulians gained the victory, and had taken arms, becauſe they would not obey Juba. This Jeſuit obſerves in ſupport of his opinion, that Juba was dead at that time; that his widow was returned to her father; and that ſhe married for her third huſband Archelaus Ethnarch of Judæa. He cites Joſephus; but he ſhould have recollected, that in the year when the Getulians gained the victory mentioned by Dion, Archelaus was baniſhed by Auguſtus. It is certain therefore that Juba was living in the year, when Archelaus was baniſhed beyond the Alps: it is not therefore true, that his widow was the wife of Archelaus; for it would be abſurd to ſuppoſe that he married her but a few days before his diſgrace, which happened in the 9th or 10th year of his Ethnarchate. So that the ſingle paſſage of Dion, which Father Salian has made uſe of, is ſufficient to convict him of a miſtake.

(3) Strabo, lib. 6. pag. 198.

(4) Ibid. p. 199. quæ eſt ultima lib. 6.

(5) Pag. 142, ſub fin.

(6) Calviſius places this expedition under the year 738 of Rome, and the death of Auguſtus under 766.

(7) Dio, lib. 15. ad ann. 759.

(8) Tacit. Ann. lib. 5. cap. 5.

(9) Ibid. cap. 23.

(10) See Strabo, lib. 17. pag. 570.

(11) Cenotaph. Piſan. pag. 238.

(12) Noldius, de Vita & Geſtis Herodum, pag. 190.

(13) Pag. 185, & ſeqq.

(14) Pag. 185.

(15) Ad annum 759.

[C] We have an account of a dream, which ſhe had, and which was a preſage of her death.] I ſhall cite the ſtory with the reflections of the Hiſtorian (16): I make uſe of Genebrard's Tranſlation, for my principal deſign is to compile facts; it is enough for me that they are to be found in this Book, for the obſolete ſtyle is of no conſequence. While ſhe lived with her laſt huſband Archelaus, ſhe had a dream to this purpoſe. She fancied that ſhe ſaw Alexander coming towards her, and that ſhe embraced him with great tenderneſs; when Alexander reproached her after the following manner: Glaphyra, ſays he, thou haſt made good the old ſaying, that women are not to be truſted. I was the huſband of thy virginity. I have had children by thee. But thou haſt forgot our loves ſo far as to enter into a ſecond marriage, and after that into a third; nay to take for thy huſband a man, who has ſo ſhamefully crept into the bed of his brother. However for the ſake of our paſt loves I ſhall reſcue thee from thy preſent reproach, and make thee mine, as thou waſt once. Glaphyra told this dream to ſeveral women of her acquaintance, and died ſoon after. I thought this ſtory might not be impertinent in this place, wherein I ſpeak of thoſe Kings; beſides that the example deſerves to be taken notice of, as it contains a moſt certain proof of the immortality of the ſoul and of divine Providence. If any man thinks theſe facts incredible, let him enjoy his opinion to himſelf; but let him not endeavour to diſturb the belief of others, who by inſtances of this nature are excited to the ſtudy of virtue.

(16) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 17. cap. ult. See likewiſe de Bello Judaico, lib. 2. cap. 11.

[D] We ſhall give ſome account of their adventures in the Remarks.] Tigranes was King of Armenia, and died without children (17). Joſephus only ſays, that the Romans accuſed him: he ſhould have added, that Tiberius ordered him to be puniſhed capitally (18). Alexander, the brother of Tigranes, had a ſon named Tigranes, upon whom Nero conferred the Kingdom of Armenia. This Tigranes had a ſon named Alexander, who married Jotapa daughter of Antiochus King of the Comagenians, and obtained of Veſpaſian a Kingdom in Cilicia. Let us add to this account of Joſephus this Supplement, which Tacitus furniſhes us with. Advenit Tigranes à Nerone ad capeſſendum imperium delectus, Cappadocum ex nobilitate, regis Archelai nepos, ſed quod diu obſes apud urbem fuerat uſque ad ſervilem patientiam demiſſus (19). i. e. "Tigranes came thither, who was choſen out of the Cappadocian Nobility to that Kingdom, being grandſon to Archelaus, but having been a long time an hoſtage at Rome, he was ſunk into a ſervile ſubmiſſion and behaviour." There is reaſon to think, that the Romans did not ſupport Tigranes againſt the Parthians, who endeavour'd to procure Armenia for Tiridates. Tacitus does not exactly enough mention the degree of relation between this Tigranes and Archelaus King of Cappadocia (20). This Archelaus was not his grandfather, but his great grandfather, ſince this Tigranes was the ſon of an Alexander, whoſe father was another Alexander, and whoſe mother was Glaphyra daughter of Archelaus.

(17) Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 7.

(18) Ne Tigranes quidem Armeniæ quondam potitus, ac tunc reus nomine regio ſuppliciæ civium effugit. Tacit. Annal. lib. 6. cap. 40. ad ann. 788.

(19) Idem, ibid. lib. 14. cap. 26.

(20) See remark [E].

[E] If the Chronology of ſome moderns were true.] Noldius proves in oppoſition to Tacitus, that Archelaus was not grandfather, but great grandfather of this Tigranes, to whom Nero gave the Kingdom of Armenia; he proves it (21), I ſay, firſt by the teſtimony of Joſephus, and ſecondly by the great age, which this Tigranes muſt have been of, if he had been the grandſon of Archelaus; for in this caſe he would have been the ſon of Alexander. Now Herod put his ſon Alexander to death ſoon after the battle of Actium; Tigranes muſt therefore have been born about the year of Rome 724; and conſequently he would have been almoſt 90 years old when he was ſent into Armenia. This is the inference, which Noldius ſhould have drawn from his Hypotheſis; however he has not done ſo, but choſen to reaſon thus: ſince the father of Tigranes was put to death ſoon after the battle of Actium, it follows that Tigranes was born about the middle of the age of Auguſtus; he could not therefore be in a condition to act under the Emperor Nero. The firſt concluſion is not

(21) Eum pronepotem fuiſſe præter Joſephum, Ant. XIIX. c. 7. ipſa rerum ſeries oſtendit. Quo pacto enim Tigranes nepos circa tempus medium Auguſti natus (pater non multo poſt victoriam ad Actium ab Herode interfectus) ſub Nerone agere aut pati potuit? quo profecto tempore natura eum aut morte aut ſenio ita multavérat, ut rebus gerendis aptus tum haud eſſe potuerit, nedum ita arduis & perturbatis. Noldius, de Vita & Geſtis Herodum, pag. 367.

we ought to rank the two Glaphyra's among thoſe women, who retained their beauty in old age.

not agreeable to exact Chronology. Auguſtus died in the year 766 of Rome, aged 76 years: the middle of his age was therefore in the year 728. Now can an exact Chronologer aſſert, that a man born about the year 728 is the ſon of a father, who was put to death after the battle at Actium? The other conſequence is much better: Armenia was given to Tigranes by Nero in 813; if Tigranes therefore was born in 728, he muſt have gone to Armenia at 85 years of age. But let us ſhew, that Noldius has built upon a falſe Hypotheſis. The death of Alexander the ſon of Herod could not be ſoon after the battle of Actium; for this unfortunate Prince left two ſons. We may therefore ſuppoſe, that his wife was twenty years old when he died; ſhe muſt then have been born about the year of Rome 704; Archelaus her father therefore would have been born about the year 684; and conſequently he muſt have been 85 years old at his death. Now this is not at all probable, ſince the Hiſtorians, who mention his death, have done it in a manner very odious with regard to Tiberius, and yet have not remark'd the circumſtance of his advanced age, a circumſtance, which was extremely proper to render the cruelty of that Emperor much more ſhocking. Add to this, that if Archelaus was born in the year 684, his mother muſt have been almoſt fifty years, when her beauty inſpired Marc Anthony with ſuch affection. The proof is obvious. Archelaus was not the eldeſt ſon; we may therefore reaſonably ſuppoſe, that ſhe had him when ſhe was about twenty years of age. Now it was in 713 that Marc Anthony gave the Kingdom of Cappadocia to Siſinna the ſon of Glaphyra. It would have been an extraordinary thing to ſee a grandmother, whoſe grand-daughter was then nine or ten years old, detain in her chains by the charms of her perſon the diſpoſer of ſceptres and crowns (22). Auguſtus would have had a fine ſubject to make ſatyrical Epigrams upon Marc Anthony, and to expoſe him to ridicule. On the other hand as Glaphyra the daughter of Archelaus did not marry Archelaus the ſon of Herod till after Herod's death, ſhe might inſpire an ardent affection at the age of fifty years. Let us therefore correct the Chronology of Noldius, and obſerve with Father Noris (23), that Alexander the huſband of the latter Glaphyra was not put to death till after the year 742 of Rome.

(22) The Reader will ſee in this Dictionary Remark [G] of the article ARAGON (Joan of) and Remark [F] of the article of CYRUS ſome inſtances of women, whoſe beauty continued long. However we ought not to draw conſequences from thence to ſupport Chronological Hypotheſes, which are in other reſpects uncertain.

(23) Cenotaph. Piſan. pag. 153, & ſeq.

GLEICHEN. There is related a very remarkable adventure of a German Count of this name. He was taken in a battle againſt the Turks, and carried into Turkey. He ſuffered there a ſevere and long captivity; he was obliged to till the earth, &c. but he was delivered in this manner. He was one day accoſted by the daughter of the King his maſter (a), who aſked a great many queſtions, while ſhe was taking the pleaſure of a walk. His good mien and ſkill in his buſineſs were ſo highly agreeable to the Princeſs, that ſhe promiſed to procure his liberty, and follow him, if he would marry her. I have a wife and children, ſaid he. This ſignifies nothing, anſwered ſhe; it is the cuſtom in Turky for a man to have ſeveral wives. The Count was not obſtinate; he ſubmitted to theſe reaſons, and engaged his promiſe. The Princeſs uſed her endeavours immediately with ſuch ſucceſs in order to reſcue him from captivity, that they were ſoon ready to embark. They arrived ſafely at Venice. The Count met there one of his ſervants, who roamed about every where to enquire after him. He was informed by him, that his wife and children were well; and he immediately went to Rome, and having made an ingenuous repreſentation of the whole affair, obtained of the Pope a ſolemn licence to keep both his wives (b). If the Court of Rome ſhewed itſelf compliant on this occaſion, the Count's wife was no leſs ſo; for ſhe careſſed in the moſt tender manner the Turkiſh Lady, who had been the means of reſtoring her beloved huſband, and entertained a particular affection for this concubine (c). The Turkiſh Princeſs returned all her civilities with a very good grace. She had no children of her own, and yet ſhe loved extremely the children which the other wife had ſtore of. A monument of this is ſtill extant at Erford (d) [A]. A very ingenious Gentleman (e), who pointed out to me this ſtory in 1697, ſeemed to me ſurprized, that the Proteſtant Writers, who were obliged to anſwer the reproaches caſt upon the Reformers on account of the permiſſion given to a Landgrave of Heſſe, ſhould not alledge the licence granted by the Pope to the Count of Gleichen; and he deſired to know my opinion upon this point [B]. He informed me that du Val has ſpoken of this adventure in his deſcription of Germany (f). In the year 1227, ſays du Val, a Count of Gleichen obtained of the Pope a permiſſion to have two wives at the ſame time. If this Hiſtory be true, we have here a very eminent triumph

(a) Filia Regis ſub quo ſerviebat Comes. Hondorf. Theatr. Exempl. pag. 535.

(b) Re ordine narrata literas à Pontifice impetrat quibus ei concederetur utramque fovere conjugem. Idem, ibid.

(c) Summo amore pellicem, cujus opera cariſſimum maritum recepiſſet, proſequitur. Idem, ibid.

(d) Extracted from the Hiſtorical Theatre of Andrew Hondorf, pag. 535. of the 5th edition Francfort 1633 in 8vo.

(e) Monſ. Pallardy, a French Miniſter at Delft.

(f) Pag. 205. of the Paris edition 1668. The Author of Polygamia triumphatrix, pag. 556, ſays that this Count de Gleichen was in the Croiſade of Frederic II in the year 1217; but the expedition of that Emperor was in 1228.

[A] A monument of this is ſtill extant at Erford.] Here are Horndorf's words: Hujus rei monumentum Erfordiæ etiamnum exſtat: in quo ex utroque latere Comiti uxores adſtant. Regina marmorea coronâ ornata: Comitiſſa ſculpta eſt nuda & infantes ad ejus pedes reptantes (1). i. e. "A monument of this fact is ſtill extant at "Erford, in which the Count's two wives ſtand on "each ſide of him. The Queen is adorned with a "marble crown; the Counteſs's ſtatue is naked, and "her children lie at her feet."

[B] He deſired to know my opinion upon this point.] If I remember right, my anſwer was to this purpoſe: In the firſt place, that the fact is very obſcure; and ſecondly that it would ſignify nothing to alledge it, unleſs we could produce the Pope's Letters, or the teſtimony of ſome contemporary Author, or the Confeſſion of the Catholic Writers. Horndorf is almoſt the only Author, who is cited (2): he quotes no authority; he is a compiler little eſteemed by learned men; and as he is a Proteſtant, the Roman Catholics would not fail to reject his teſtimony. They would demand the Records or Annaliſts, from whence he took this fact; and ſince he appeals to none, they would pretend, that he only built upon report and uncertain traditions. They would ſay that a great many noble families have propagated uncertain and even fabulous traditions concerning the manner, in which their anceſtors were delivered from priſon in the time of the Croiſades. In ſhort if they ſhould deny the fact, what anſwer could be given them? The monument at Erford cannot prove any thing; does a ſtatue of a man between two ſtatues of women plainly ſignify polygamy? May not it ſignify among other things two ſucceſſive marriages, or two marriages contracted between an huſband and two living wives, the latter of which was annulled? How many abſurd ſtories are there, which are endeavoured to be proved by monuments of ſtone? It is in this manner that they attempt to prove that a Counteſs of Holland had 365 children at a birth, a ſtory laugh'd at by good Hiſtorians, and ſhewn to be abſolutely falſe.

(1) Horndorf. Theat. Exempl. pag. 535. edit. 1633.

(2) Simon Goulart, who has inſerted this ſtory in his Tranſlation of Camerarius's Hiſtorical Meditations, tom. 2. lib. 2. cap. 14. pag. m. 152. cites only Horndorf's Theatrum. I know that the Author of Polygamia triumphatrix, pag. 556. has quoted Dreſſer. Millen. 6. Zeiller. Contin. Itiner. German. Peccenſteinius, in Theatr. Saxon. But theſe Authors and an hundred others of the ſame ſtamp cannot give any weight to this ſtory.

triumph of love [C]. An Abbé, who held a correſpondence by letters with Count de Buſſi, had heard ſomething of this ſtory; but he knew not the true ſtate of the queſtion [D]. To conclude, the Author of the Fifteen Pleaſures of Matrimony ſeems to ſuppoſe, that it often happens, that a woman marries again upon the falſe ſuppoſition of her huſband's death [E]. The Journal of Hamburg will furniſh me with a good Supplement to this Article [F].

☞ GLISSON

[C] We have here a very eminent triumph of love.] Here is a King's daughter not only ready to renounce the noble advantages of her ſtate to follow a ſlave about the world, but actually flying away with him after having deſpiſed all the dangers, to which her deſign expoſed her own life and that of the priſoner, whom ſhe was in love with. She does not engage by degrees in a flight ſo full of danger, ſo prejudicial, and diſhonourable; ſhe reſolves abſolutely the very firſt time ſhe ſaw the ſlave: Ut vidi ut perii, ut me malus abſtulit error (3), might ſhe cry out as well as a great many others. It is juſtly ſaid in an Opera;

(3) Virgil. Eclog. 8. ver. 41.

Bacchus revient vainqueur des climats de l'Aurore,
Il traîne après ſon char mille peuples vaincus:
Il mepriſoit l'amour, mais l'amour eſt encore
Un vainqueur mille fois plus puiſſant que Bacchus.

i. e. "Bacchus returning conqueror from the Eaſt drags "after his chariot a thouſand vanquiſh'd Nations: He "deſpiſed love, but love is ſtill a conqueror a thou- "ſand times more potent than Bacchus."

I cannot tell whether Madam de Ville-Dieu has given us a romance upon the ſtory of our Count de Gleichen. It would have been a fine ſubject for her pen, and how dry ſoever Horndorff's narration might be, ſhe would have made a beautiful piece of it. We may obſerve, that the triumph of love regards here only the fair ſex, for certainly the Count did not become a Polygamiſt as a lover, but only as a Gentleman, who was weary of being a ſlave and tilling the ground. But we may remark likewiſe, that the conduct of this Turkiſh Princeſs is not near ſo criminal as that of the daughter of Niſus, or of the daughter of Pterelaus (4). Perhaps it is more excuſable than that of Minos's daughter. And her treachery was much more ſucceſsful than that of theſe three Princeſſes, and ſeveral other ſuch victims of love, who adorned the triumphal Car of Venus. However we muſt not aſcribe the advantage to the male-ſex; for certainly there are a great many more men, who marry their maids, than women, who marry their ſervants.

(4) See the article AMPHITRYON, in the text between the quotations (c) and (d).

[D] An Abbé . . . had heard ſomething of this ſtory; but he knew not the true ſtate of the queſtion.] Here is what he wrote to Count de Buſſi Rabutin June 12, 1674 (5). "I met the other day Madam de . . . and the "converſation turning upon Monſr. de . . . . who had "preſented a petition to the Pope, for a licence to "marry another wife, it was ſaid, that the Holy See "had granted this favour once to a German Count, "whoſe wife not being ſufficient for him, he was al- "lowed for the health of his ſoul to keep a ſecond "wife with his former. Madam de . . . . who was "ſleeping before, awak'd at this paſſage, and ſaid ſigh- "ing, that there were no ſuch huſbands to be met with "now-a-days." We ſee plainly, that he confounds two things, and that of two adventures he makes but one. He confounds what relates to Count de Gleichen with what regards a Landgrave of Heſſe, and knows not the circumſtances of either of theſe two ſtories. The Licence, which it is pretended the Holy See granted to a German Count, was not founded on the inſufficiency of the wife; nor was that granted to a Landgrave founded upon ſuch a reaſon (6), tho' Thuanus aſſerts it. I would not affirm, that this Abbé has more ſtrictly obſerved the laws of Hiſtory with regard to the ſmart ſaying and ſigh of Madam de . . . . than in the reſt of the ſtory. He invented perhaps this reflection himſelf, and yet wrote it as a piece of Hiſtory to Count de Rabutin in order to conclude his Letter by a ſtroke of humour. However that be, I met t'other day a Gentleman, who has been married five or ſix years, and I obſerved, that after he was told of all that this part of the Abbe's Letter, he ſaid almoſt ſighing, if there are ſcarce any huſbands now to be met with like him, there are ſtill fewer wives like her. I wiſh that he had made another reflection, that the Lady ſuppoſed very wrongly, that our Age is inferior to the former times. This is falſe: Huſbands of that caſt have been always very rare, and as rare in former Ages as the preſent.

(5) Lettres du Comte de Buſſi Rabutin, tom. 4. pag. 114, 115. Dutch edition.

(6) See remark [Q] of the article LUTHER.

[E] The Author of the Fifteen Pleaſures of Matrimony ſeems to ſuppoſe, that it often happens that a woman marries again upon the falſe ſuppoſition of her huſband's death.] Here is his Thirteenth Pleaſure of Matrimony. A Gentleman, ſays he (7), who lived with his wife in great delight and pleaſure five, or ſix, or eight years or leſs, had a mind to gain honour by his valour. . . . He went beyond ſea into the army in queſt of honour and knighthood. . . . . He takes leave of his wife with great regret, who ſhews all the ſorrow ſhe can; but he is a man, who is ambitious of honour, and nothing can detain him. . . . . He goes away, and recommends his wife and children, whom he loves above all things, except his honour, to his particular friends. Now it happens that he paſſes the ſea, is taken by the enemy, where by chance or otherwiſe he continues three or four years or more without being able to return. His Lady is in great affliction; ſhe hears at laſt that he is dead, upon which ſhe laments him in the tendereſt manner; but ſhe cannot weep for ever, and comforts herſelf through God's mercy ſo far as to marry another huſband, in whom ſhe takes pleaſure, and forgets her former huſband, whom ſhe had uſed to love, and her affection for his children is worn off; the careſſes, kiſſes, and other fondneſs, which ſhe had ſhewn to him, are all paſt and forgot; and whoever had ſeen her careſs her ſecond huſband, would ſay, that ſhe loved him more than ever ſhe had done the former, who is a priſoner, or in ſome other diſtreſs in purſuit of honour. The children, whom the good man loved, are thruſt aſide and neglected; thus the married pair play and ſpend their time in jollity. But it happens that the good man her huſband returns, being grown old and altered for the worſe in his perſon; for he was ill uſed the two or three years which he was in priſon; and when he comes near his own country, he inquires for his wife and children, for he is greatly anxious leſt they ſhould be dead, or be involved in ſome misfortune. And think you how often the good man thought of them in the midſt of the pains of his confinement, and how much ſolicitude he ſuffered, while his wife was enjoying herſelf; and perhaps at the very hour when he was thinking of her, and praying God to preſerve her, her laſt huſband was embracing her, and had no thought of danger. He then heard that ſhe was married; judge what ſorrow he felt upon this news. . . . . Now he arrives in his own country, and knows the thing certainly; if he is a man of honour he will never take her to himſelf; the other, who had married her, and enjoyed her, will leave her. Thus ſhe entirely loſes her reputation, and perhaps is ruined abſolutely. The good man will ſuffer a perpetual uneaſineſs; his children will be in ſome meaſure diſgraced by their mother's fault, and neither of them can marry again during the other's life.

(7) Les quinze joies de Mariage, pag. 154, & ſeqq. edit. de Rouen 1596. The title ſhews that this Book was extracted from an old Manuſcript written four hundred years before.

[F] The Journal of Hamburg will furniſh me with a good Supplement to this Article.] Mr. Dartis ſpeaking (8) of a Novel of Monſieur le Noble intitled, Zulima ou l'Amour pur, obſerves, that the firſt idea of this Romance was taken from a Memoir extracted from the Archives of the Houſe of Gleichen, which was deſcended from the Prince of Weſtphalia, a principal Hero of this hiſtorical Novel. He was named Eberard, and having been taken at the battle of Joppa, which Sultan Noradin gained over the Chriſtians in the Croiſade, he was ſo fortunate as to inſpire the Sultan's daughter with love. She aſſiſted him in breaking off his fetters, and went with him into Europe, and was his ſecond wife after the death of her, whom he had married ſome time before the Croiſade. Monſieur le Noble alledges as an inconteſtable evidence of the truth of this ſtory the monument, in which are interred the aſhes of that Prince and his two wives. It is ſeen, ſays he, at Herford in Weſtphalia, where he lived. It is upon this foundation that

(8) Hambourg Journal of the 26th of Auguſt 1695, pag. 142.

☞GLISSON (FRANCIS), a learned Engliſh Phyſician in the ſeventeenth Century, was ſecond ſon of Mr. William Gliſſon of Rampiſham in Dorſetſhire, ſecond ſon of Mr. Walter Gliſſon of the City of Briſtol (a). He was educated in Gonvil and Caius College in the Univerſity of Cambridge where he took the Degrees of Bachelor and Maſter of Arts, and became Fellow of his College. October the 25th 1627 he was incorporated Maſter of Arts in the Univerſity of Oxford. He was afterwards appointed Regius Profeſſor of Phyſic in Cambridge in the room of Ralph Winterton, M. D. Auguſt the 1ſt 1634 he became Candidate of the College of Phyſicians, and September the 30th the year following was admitted Fellow thereof. In 1639 he was choſen Lecturer of Anatomy in that College (b). During the civil wars he practiſed Phyſic at Colcheſter, where he reſided while that town was beſieged in 1648, and afterwards. In 1655 he was choſen one of the Elects of the College of Phyſicians, and afterwards Preſident thereof, in which poſt he continued for ſeveral years (c). He publiſhed ſeveral works [A]. The world is obliged to him for the diſcovery of the Capſula communis or Vagina Portæ; and he has furniſhed us with certain Notes for the more eaſy diſtinguiſhing of the Vena Cavâ, Porta, and Vaſa Fellea, in excarnating the liver; and given ſuch an excellent account of ſanguification (diſcharging the liver from that office) and proved it by ſuch ſtrong arguments and clear experiments, that few have ſince doubted the truth thereof (d). He died in the pariſh of St. Bride in London in October or November 1677.

(a) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 238. 2d edit. London 1721.

(b) From the Regiſter of the College of Phyſicians.

(c) Dr. Charles Goodall's Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Hiſtorical Account of the College of Phyſicians Proceedings againſt Empiricks and unlicenſed Practiſers &c. edit. London 1684 in 4to.

(d) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory to Dr. Charles Goodall's Book, intitled, The Royal College of Phyſicians of London founded and eſtabliſhed by Law, &c. London 1686 in 4to.

that he has built the Adventures of a pious love, which iſſued firſt in the converſion of the Sultaneſs, and afterwards in her marriage with the Weſtphalian Prince. He ſays in another place (9), that the Writers of Romance are obliged to follow Hiſtory, when they lay down in their Preface a foundation for their ſtories. This is however, continues he, what Monſ. Le Noble has not done in the Advertiſement, which he has prefixed to his Zulima, as will appear from the Extract of a Letter which I received from a good hand on this ſubject. It is as follows: "It appears plainly from what you "mention of Monſieur Le Noble's little piece, that "he has confounded the whole thing. Eberhard Duke "of Weſtphalia is a perſon abſolutely unknown to "Hiſtory; and if he lived in the time of Noradin a "Saracen Prince in the twelfth Century, how could "he be the firſt of the Counts of Gleichen who pre"tend to have received their Earldom from Charle"magne, and who at leaſt are more antient than the "wars beyond ſea? The Houſe of the Counts of "Gleichen is extinct, and I believe, that what is "pretended to be taken from their Archives, is as fa"bulous as the reſt of the Novel. It is true how"ever, that there is a tradition, confirmed by ſome "modern Chronicles, which informs us, that a Count "of Gleichen bringing the Lady, who had delivered "him, from beyond ſea, and meeting with his former "wife, found means to keep them both in good har"mony with each other, and this with the conſent, "as it is ſaid, of the Church; in which there is "ſome little probability. We may be aſſured, that "there is no monument of Duke Eberhard of Weſt"phalia either at Erford or Hervorde. The Counts "of Gleichen were ſeated near Erford in Thuringia, "and had no relation to Hervorde in Weſtphalia."

(2) Journal de Hambourg, of the 30th of Sept. 1695, pag. 219, 220, 221.

[A] He wrote ſeveral Works.] I. Prolegomena Anatomica (1). II. Anatomia Hepatis. London 1654. In this Book he hath given a more exact deſcription of the liver and its ſeveral veſſels than any Anatomiſt before him. And beſides his diſcovery of the Capſula communis, or Vagina portæ, and an excellent account of Sanguification, he acquaints us, how by the continual concoction of the blood the Bilis is neceſſarily produced and ſeparated from the blood, and gives the reaſons of its bitter taſte. III. De Lymphæductibus nuper repertis In this Book he gives an admirable account of the Lympheducts, and the Succus nutritius, with the manner of its conveyance; and offers his Conjectures about the uſe of the Spleen and other Glands, &c. All theſe Treatiſes were printed at Amſterdam 1659 in 12mo. IV. Tractatus de Naturæ ſubſtantiâ energeticâ, ſeu de Viâ Vitæ Naturæ ejuſque tribus primis facultatibus, &c. London 1672 in 4to. with his picture before it. V. Tractatus de Ventriculo & Inteſtinis. Cui præmittitur alius de partibus continentibus in genere, & in ſpecie de iis Abdominis. Amſterdam 1677 in 4to, dedicated to the Univerſity of Cambridge and the College of Phyſicians, as was his Anatomia Hepatis. In this Treatiſe he diſcourſes of the Cutis and Cuticula, with the ſeveral Colours, which are obſervable in hair; and there delivers ſeveral ingenious Problems. He diſcuſſes many conſiderable queſtions concerning Rumination, and why ſome animals have more ſtomachs than one, as likewiſe concerning the Structure, Tenacity, and various Uſes of Fibres. He acquaints us with his thoughts, that the ſtomach and guts are not wholly made up of membranes (as moſt have formerly ſuppoſed) but have a conſiderable quantity of Parenchyma, which he conjectures to be glandulous. He examines the Nature of Hunger and Thirſt, and ſhews wherein they ſpecifically differ from the other five ſenſes. He proceeds to ſhew the manner of Deglutition, Concoction, Diſtribution of the Chyle, Secretion, &c. concluding with an Appendix concerning Fermentation. Throughout the whole Book there are abundance of ingenious queſtions diſcourſed of, ſome of which relate to Diſeaſes; as the differences, cauſes and ſigns of Flatus's; what are the moſt proper diſcutients of them; of hypochondriac Flatus's; of the parts affected in a Rheumatiſm, as alſo of febrile and malignant Ferments, &c. He publiſh'd likewiſe, in conjunction with Dr. George Bate and Dr. Ahaſuerus Regemorter, the Treatiſe De Rachitide, ſive Morbo puerili, qui vulgo the Rickets dicitur. London 1650 in 8vo. In this Book we have not only the original, cauſes, ſymptoms, and method of curing that diſeaſe delivered, but alſo a moſt admirable Collection of many anatomical Obſervations, diſcovering how the ſeveral Viſcera of thoſe that died of this diſeaſe, were affected. The Authors of this Treatiſe obſerve, that this diſeaſe was firſt diſcovered in the Weſt-parts of England, viz. in the Counties of Dorſet and Somerſet about fifteen years before the publication of their Book; from whence it ſoon found its way to London, and ſo ſpread thro' all parts of England. This agrees with what Capt. John Graunt remarks (2), that we find no mention of the Rickets in the Bills of Mortality till the year 1634. T.

(1) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 238.

(2) Natural and Political Obſervations made upon the Bills of Mortality, pag. 46. 3d edit.

☞GODOLPHIN (JOHN), an eminent Engliſh Civilian in the ſeventeenth Century, third ſon of John Godolphin Eſq; of the antient family of Godolphin in Cornwall, was born in the iſland of Scilly, in the Caſtle which belonged to his family, November the 29th 1617. He became a Commoner of Glouceſter Hall in the Univerſity of Oxford in Michaelmas Term 1632, under the tuition of Mr. William Sandbrooke, and made a great progreſs in Logic, Philoſophy, and Civil Law (a), in the laſt of which he took the Degree of Bachelor July the 3d 1636 (b). In March 164$\frac{2}{3}$ he was created Doctor of (a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 610. 2d edit.

(b) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 267.

of Civil Law (c), being then puritannically inclined (d); and removing afterwards to London, he took the Engagement, and on the 30th of July 1653 he with William Clerke, Dr. of the Civil Law, and Charles George Cocke Esq; were appointed Judges of the Admiralty (e); and in the middle of July (f) 1659 (Dr. Clerke being then dead) he and Mr. Cocke were again constituted, but limited not to exercise the said office longer than the 10th of December. At the Restoration he was appointed one of his Majesty's Advocates. He was esteemed a man of considerable learning, and as great a Master of Divinity as of his own Faculty (g). He published several works [A]. He died in or near Fleetstreet April the 4th 1678, and was interred in the North Isle of the Church of St. James's Clerkenwell (h).

(c) Idem, ibid. vol. 2. col. 27.

(d) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi supra.

(e) Idem, ibid.

(f) Idem, ibid. Whitelocke in his Memorials of the English Affairs, pag. 681. edit. Lond. 1732. tells us, that the Parliament were employ'd on the 19th of that month in appointing Judges of the Admiralty.

(g) Wood, Ath. Oxon ubi supra.

(h) Idem, ibid.

[A] He publish'd several Books.] I. The holy Limbec: or an Extraction of the Spirit from the Letter of certain eminent places in the holy Scripture. London 1650 in 12mo. Other copies have this title; The holy Limbec; or a Semicentury of spiritual Extractions, &c. II. The holy Arbour, containing the whole Body of Divinity; or the Sum and Substance of Christian Religion. London 1651 in a thin folio. III. A View of the Admiral Jurisdiction, wherein the most material points concerning that Jurisdiction are fairly and submissively discussed, &c. London 1661 in 8vo. To this is subjoined A Catalogue of such that have been dignified with the office of Lord High Admiral in this Kingdom, &c. This is for the greatest part taken from Sir Henry Spelman's Glossary in the word Admiralius. IV. The Orphan's Legacy; or a Testimentary Abridgment in three parts: 1. Of last Wills and Testaments. 2. Executors and Administrators. 3. Of Legacies and Devises. Wherein the most material points of Law relating to that subject are succinctly treated, as well according to the Common and Temporal, as Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws of this Realm. Illustrated with a great variety of select Cases in the Law of both Professions, as well delightful in Theory, as useful for the practice of all such as study the one, or are either active or passive in the other. London 1674 in 4to. V. Repertorium Canonicum: or, An Abridgment of the Ecclesiastical Laws of this Realm, consistent with the Temporal: wherein the most material points relating to such persons and things, as come within the cognizance thereof, are succinctly treated. London 1678, 1680, &c. in 4to. In the Introduction (1) he observes, with regard to the King's Supremacy, that the question, which Henry VIII put to both the Universities of this Realm, An aliquid Authoritatis in hoc regno Angliæ Pontifici Romano de jure competat, plusquam alii cuicunque Episcopo Extero? being resolved in the negative, and that resolution ratified in the Convocation Anno 1534, an Act of Parliament passed two years after for the extinguishing of that Papal Authority in this Realm. This succeeded so well in consequence of what the Convocation Anno 1530 had before acknowledg'd him, viz. The supreme Head on Earth of the Church of England, that that Supremacy was likewise after confirmed by Act of Parliament to him, his heirs, and successors. "This is that Supremacy, says Dr. "Godolphin, here tenderly touch'd at in the first "chapter of the ensuing Abridgment, and without "which all that follows would but be insignificant and "disfigur'd cyphers." Our Author then remarks, that when Henry VIII was thus both Parliamentarily and Synodically invested with this Supremacy, altho' it was with all the privileges and preheminences incident thereto, yet no more accrued to the Crown thereby, than was legally inherent in it before. Yet in regard of the usurpations, that in divers Kings reigns had successively invaded the rights thereof, another Convocation Anno 1532, to give the King, as it were, Livery and Seisin of the said Supremacy, promised him in verbo Sacerdotis, that they would not from henceforth assemble in any Convocation or Synod without his Majesty's Writ, nor make any Canons or Constitutions without his licence and consent, nor execute the same until they were ratified under the Great Seal of England. "All which was done without the least di- "minution of any Archiepiscopal or Episcopal Power "or Privileges in the free exercise of that Ecclesiasti- "cal Jurisdiction, which they antiently enjoyed; the "whole of this design being only to eject the Roman "Pontifex, and annul his usurpation in a matter of "that weighty consequence, to which the Crown was "so undoubtedly intitled; and this only in a way "consonant to that allegiance, which every subject "without dissimulation owes to his lawful Sovereign "in all matters, as well ecclesiastical as civil, within "his Majesty's Realms and Dominions; whereby the "Clergy as well as Laity, being all subjects alike, "might be reduced not only to their primitive obe- "dience unto, but also to their dependence on their "Sovereign in preference to any foreign Potentate "whatever." That the supreme civil Power is also supreme Governour over all persons, and in all cases, is a rule, says Bishop Taylor (2), of such great necessity for the conduct of conscience, as that it is the measure of determining all questions concerning the Sanction of Obedience to all Ecclesiastical Laws, the Duty of Bishops and Priests to their Princes, the Necessity of their paying Tribute, and discharging the burdens and relieving the necessities of the Republic. In another place the same Author writes thus (3): It was never known in the primitive Church, that ever any Ecclesiastical Law did oblige the Catholic Church, unless the secular Prince did establish it. Upon which Dr. Godolphin observes, that the Nicene Canons became Laws by the Rescript of the Emperor Constantine, according to Sozomen. When the Council of Constantinople was finished, the Fathers wrote to the Emperor Theodosius, and petitioned, ut Edicto Pietatis tuæ confirmetur Synodi sententia. The confirmation of the Canon and Decrees of the great Council at Ephesus by the Emperor is to be seen at the end of the Acts of the Synod. And Marcian the Emperor wrote to Palladius his Prefect a Letter, in which he testifies, that he made the Decrees of the Council of Chalcedon to become Laws, Ea quæ de Christianâ fide a Sacerdotibus, qui Chalcedone convenerunt, per nostra præcepta statuta sunt, &c. Thus also the Fathers of the fifth general Synod petitioned Justinian to confirm and establish their Canons into a Law. The same Prince also published a Novel, in which he commands Vim Legum obtinere Ecclesiasticos Canones à quatuor Synodis, Nicenâ, Constantinopolitanâ primâ, Ephesinâ primâ, & Chalcedonensi expositos & confirmatos, Vide Concil. Tolet. "All which, says Dr. Godolphin (4), confirms it for "a truth, that even in the Primitive Church the Su- "premacy in matters ecclesiastical was in the supreme "secular Princes." In the first Chapter of the Abridgment our Author asserts, that the King is Dei Vicarius within his own Territories and Dominions; that he is, next under God, supreme Governor of the Church of England; that he hath here in matters ecclesiastical the same power de jure, which the Pope heretofore claimed and exercised in this Kingdom by way of usurpation; that the Kings of this Kingdom antiently made their own Canons and Ecclesiastical Constitutions without the Pope's Authority; that the King is Lex viva, and in some cases may dispense with some Canons; and that no Canons or Ecclesiastical Constitutions can be made without his Majesty's consent, nor be of force to oblige the subject without his Royal Assent and Confirmation. Dr. Godolphin, besides the Books abovementioned written by him, translated into English out of Garsias or Ferrand, An Extract of the ancient Laws of Oleron, printed with his View of the Admiral Jurisdiction, at London 1661 in 8vo. T

(1) Pag. 1.

(2) Ductor Dubitantium, lib. 3. cap. 3. Rule 4. pag. 160. edit. London 1660, in fol.

(3) Ibid. cap. 4.

(4) Introduct. pag. 3.

Vide Heylin's Cyprianus Anglic. pag. 1.

☞GODWIN (FRANCIS), a learned English Writer and Bishop, was son of Dr. Thomas Godwin, Bishop of Bath and Wells (a) [A], and born at Hannington in Northamptonshire

(a) Wood, Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 154. & 272.

[A] Son of Thomas Godwin, Bishop of Bath and Wells.] This Bishop was born at Okingham in Berkshire, sent to Oxford about the year 1538, elected a Probationer of Magdalen College in 1544, and the year after perpetual Fellow, being then Bachelor of Arts. In 1547 he took the Degree of Maſter of Arts; and two years after, on account of the oppoſition, which he met with from the Papiſts there, reſigned his Fellowſhip, and accepted from the College the Maſterſhip of their School at Brackly in Northamptonſhire. He afterwards married, and applied himſelf to Divinity at his leiſure hours; but upon the acceſſion of Queen Mary to the Crown he was reduced to great neceſſity; upon which ſtudying Phyſic, he was admitted to the reading of any of the Books of Hippocrates, or of the Aphoriſms of that Author, that is, to the Degree of Bachelor of Phyſic June 17, 1555. After Queen Elizabeth came to the Throne, he received holy Orders, from Dr. Bullingham Biſhop of Lincoln, who made him his Chaplain (1), and in June 1565 he was appointed Dean of Chriſt-Church (2), and the year following Dean of Canterbury. In 1584 he was nominated Biſhop of Bath and Wells, after that See had been vacant three years, and being conſecrated to it in September the ſame year, he ſate there to his death. Sir John Harrington (3) tells us, that he came to the place as well qualified for a Biſhop as might be, unreprovable, without ſimony, given to good hoſpitality, quiet, kind, affable, a widower, and in the Queen's good opinion. But he had the misfortune afterwards to loſe her Majeſty's favour; for being aged, diſeaſed, and lame of the gout, he married (as ſome thought for ſake of wealth) a widow of London, which was his ſecond wife at leaſt. A chief favourite at that time, Sir Walter Raleigh, had laboured to get the Manor of Banwell from his Biſhopric; but meeting with a repulſe, upon hearing of the Biſhop's marriage he informed the Queen of it, (who extremely diſliked ſuch matches;) and immediately preſſed him with Letters and Mandates for the Manor for an hundred years. The Biſhop not expecting ſuch a ſtorm was greatly perplexed; yet held out for a while, and endured many ſharp meſſages from the Queen, of which Sir John Harrington carried one, being delivered to him by Robert Earl of Leiceſter, who ſeemed to favour the Biſhop, and miſlike Sir Walter Raleigh for moleſting him. But they were ſoon agreed like Pilate and Herod to condemn Chriſt. Never was harmleſs man ſo traduced to his Sovereign, that he had married a girl of twenty years of age with a great portion; that he had conveyed half the Biſhopric to her; that (becauſe he had the gout) he could not ſtand to his marriage, with ſuch and the like ſcoffs to make him ridiculous to the vulgar, and odious to the Queen. The Earl of Bedford happening to be preſent when theſe tales were told, and knowing the Londoner's widow whom the Biſhop had married, ſaid merrily to the Queen after this manner, Madam, I know not how much the widow is above twenty, but I know a ſon of her's is but a little under forty &c. The concluſion of the premiſes was this, that to pacify his perſecutors, and to ſave Banwell, he was fain to part with Wyvelſcomb or Wilſcomb for ninety nine years, and ſo purchaſed his peace. He was a man of great learning, a ſound judgment, and exemplary charity (4). He died at Okingham Nov. 19th 1590, and was interred on the South ſide of the chancel of the church there, where a monument was erected to him by his ſon Dr. Francis Godwin (5).

Northamptonſhire in the year 1561, elected Student of Chriſt Church in the Univerſity of Oxford in 1577, where he took the Degrees of Maſter of Arts March 16, 1584 (b), and entering into holy Orders became Rector of Samford-Orcais in Somerſetſhire, Prebendary of S. Decuman in the Church of Wells, Reſidentiary there, and Vicar of Weſton in Zoyland in the ſame county; which laſt he reſigning, became Vicar of Biſhops Lidiard in 1595, being then Sub-dean of Exeter, and about that time Doctor of Divinity. In the year 1601 he publiſhed his Catalogue of the Biſhops of England [B]; upon the account of which (c) he was the ſame year nominated to the See of Landaff by Queen

(b) Faſt. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 125.

(c) Idem, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 581. 2d edit. London 1721 in fol.

(1) Franc. Godwin. Comment. de Præſul. Anglic. inter Epiſc. Bath. & Well. p. 444. and Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 709.

(2) Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 254.

(3) Brief View of the State of the Church of England &c. London 1653. pag. 111.

(4) Wood, Ath. Oxon. col. 710.

(5) Godwin. Comm. de Præſul. Angl. ubi ſupra.

[B] In the year 1601 he publiſh'd his Catalogue of the Biſhops of England.] The title is as follows: A Catalogue of the Biſhops of England, ſince the firſt planting of the Chriſtian Religion in this Iſland; together with a briefe Hiſtory of their Lives and memorable actions ſo neere as can be gathered out of antiquity. By F. G. Subdeane of Exeter. London 1601 in 4to. It is dedicated to the Right Honourable Sir Thomas Sackvyll, Baron of Buckhurſt, Knight of the moſt noble Order of the Garter, Lord High Treaſurer of England, and Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford. In the Preface Dr. Godwin tells us, that his delight in the ſtudy of Hiſtory and Antiquities had been ſomewhat greater than was needful for a man, who had dedicated himſelf and his labours unto the ſervice of God's Church in the Miniſtry; which fault he had long before in ſome ſort reformed by reſtraining himſelf within the compaſs of ſuch antiquities, as ſeemed to concern only eccleſiaſtical cauſes or perſons. That his collections with regard to matters eccleſiaſtical could add nothing unto Mr. Foxe's large and painful work; but that in the other kind relating to eccleſiaſtical perſons, what many years reading and obſervation could yield unto him, he had ſeven or eight years before compriſed into a volume; which with ſome additions he was now induced to publiſh. The principal reaſon, ſays he, that moved me thereunto is in effect but that, which Tacitus ſaith every Hiſtoriographer ſhould propoſe unto himſelfe, Ne virtutes ſileantur, utque pravis dictis factiſque ex poſteritate & infamiâ metus ſit. In the latter of theſe (the faults of thoſe men of whom I am to write) I need not greatly to paine myſelf. For it is not to be denied, that the moſt part of the Chroniclers and Hiſtoriographers of our age have borne hard enough at leaſt upon the Prelates and Clergy of former times, every where like Cham's diſcovering the nakedneſs of theſe Fathers; but ſeldom or never indevouring with Sem to hide the ſame, much leſſe affording unto them any honourable mention never ſo well deſerved. This kinde of dealing though happily intended to good purpoſes, might not expect that ſucceſſe and bleſſing at God's hand, that the plaine and ſincere truth is wont to finde. . . . . Theſe men impugning ſomewhat too furiouſly the ſuperſtition and errors, which the Clergy of former times (much deal of ignorance) did teach and defend; whileſt that the rather to diſcredit their doctrine, they depraved their perſons; it hath pleaſed God, that this uncharitable courſe ſhould ſort to ſome other effect then was intended, and that ſuch, as without his great mercy was like to have cauſed an inconvenience of little leſſe importance (I will not ſay greater) then that which our late Reformation had redreſſed.

" For in the vulgar ſort (which diſtinguiſh not ſo eaſily betweene perſons and things) it bred a conceit,
" not onely that the men were wicked, and ſo their doctrine corrupt (although I know the conſequence to
" be weake) but alſo their functions and callings to
" be utterly unlawful and antichriſtian; which opinion once received in the minds of the multitude " gave occaſion of divers plots, coloured with the " plauſible ſhew of reformation, but indeed princi" pally ayming at the goods and revenues of the " Church, the temporal rewards of learning, which " being once taken away, what confuſion is like to " follow we may eaſily ſee by the effects it bringeth
" foorth elſewhere. Thoſe countries that heretofore
" have yielded great plenty of able worke-folkes
" for the Lord's vineyard, now that brood is ſpent,
" which attayned learning, the rewards yet ſtanding
" whole, they hardly can ſhew a man able to ſet
" pen to paper in defence of the truth. Yea even
" amongſt us, although the godly and excellent care
" of her Majeſtie hath preſerved the ſtate of this our " Church in ſuch ſort, as I thinke no other reformed
" Church of Chriſtendom any thing neere comparable
" unto it; yet the example of other, the knowen
" greedines of ſo many ſacrilegious cormorants as " await daily the deſtruction of the ſame, and the " doubt leaſt it will decay, for that we cannot hope
" for the like piety in all ſucceeding Princes, it ſo far
" foorth diſcourageth men from the ſtudy of Divinity,
" as the beſt wits dayly refuſe the Univerſities (or
" Divinity at the leaſt, which in ſome other countries
" is accounted the ſureſt way to advancement) and
" rather betake themſelves to any other kind of life.
" Hereof it cometh to paſſe, that every age bringeth
" forth leſſe plenty of learned men then other amongſt
" us." He afterwards obſerves, that the reader is not to

Queen Elizabeth; to which being conſecrated on the 22d of November, he ſate there about ſixteen years, "being a Biſhopric, ſays Mr. Wood (d), rather proportioned to his "modeſty than merits, becauſe much impaired by one of his predeceſſors named Anth. "Kitchen alias Dunſtan; and therefore he had liberty allowed to him to keep one of his "dignities in commendam with it, and to take upon him the Rectory of Kingſton-"Seymour in the Dioceſe of Wells." King James afterwards, out of reſpect to his great learning, gave him the Biſhopric of Hereford, to which he was tranſlated the 10th and confirmed the 28th of November 1617. He wrote ſome other works beſides his Catalogue of Biſhops [C]. He died in the latter end of April 1633, and was interred in the Chancel of his Church of Whitborne, which with the manor thereof belongs to the (d) Idem, ibid. col. 581.

to expect any ample diſcourſe of the lives and actions of the Biſhops of his own time or near to it, ſince he had purpoſely avoided to ſet down any thing of them, but what either he found written by others, or elſe remaineth to be ſeen in public record. And that he hath taken this courſe, becauſe he judged it neither ſeemly to praiſe, nor ſafe to reprehend (how juſtly ſoever) thoſe men, who either by themſelves, their near friends, or poſterity then living, might ſeem either to have allured him to flatter, or deterred him from diſcloſing that truth, which otherwiſe he would have uttered. Neither did he think it needful to ſay much of them, who being either preſent in action, or freſh in memory, were ſufficiently known. And whereas he has paſſed over in ſilence two Sees, he was obliged to it by want of ſome neceſſary inſtructions, which by reaſon of the diſtance of his dwelling from them, he had not means to attain, although he had endeavoured it. He therefore deſired all men, who were able, to yield him help for the ſupplying of whatſoever might ſeem wanting either in thoſe Sees or any other. The two Sees omitted are thoſe of Bangor and St. Aſaph. Our Author therefore in 1615 publiſhed at London in 4to another edition of this book with many additions; to which he prefixed, A Diſcourſe concerning the firſt Converſion of this Iſland of Britain unto the Chriſtian Religion; and ſubjoined A Diſcourſe concerning ſuch Engliſhmen, as have either been, or in our Hiſtories reputed, Cardinals of the Church of Rome. But this edition, with the two additional Diſcourſes, "being very full of faults, ſays Mr. Wood "(6), and not to be endured by any ordinary reader," he immediately publiſhed them in Latin under the title of De Præſulibus Angliæ Commentarius, London 1616 in 4to. In 1621 he added an Appendix ad Commentarium de Præſulibus Angliæ. London 1621 in two ſheets in 4to. Mr. Wood tells us (7), that this book made him famous both at home and abroad; but that "as he hath in thoſe his infinite "labours endeavoured out of a puritannical pique, to "bring a ſcandal on the antient Catholic Biſhops, "and to advance the credit of thoſe that were mar-"ried ſince the Reformation (he being one of that "number) for the credit of the Proteſtant cauſe; ſo "comes one afterwards, by name W. Prynne, a "crop ear'd and ſtigmatiz'd Preſbyterian, the moſt "inveterate enemy to the Biſhops that ever appeared "in our horizon, who thence (from his labours) takes "all (o) advantages, whether truth or not truth, to "raiſe arguments againſt, or bring a ſcandal upon "the prelatical function."

(6) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 581.

(7) Ibid. See likewiſe Hiſt. & Antiq. lib. 2. pag. 272.

(o) In his Antipathy of the Engliſh Lordly Prelacy, &c. London 1641 in 4to.

[C] He wrote ſome other works, beſides his Catalogue of Biſhops.] I. Concio Latina in Luc. cap. v. ver. 3. 1601 in 4to. II. Rerum Anglicarum, Henrico VIII, Edwardo VI, & Maria regnantibus, Annales, London 1616 in fol. Ib. 1628 and 1630 in 4to. and fol. Theſe Annals were tranſlated into Engliſh by his ſon Morgan Godwin, Bachelor of Arts of Chriſt Church, afterwards Bachelor of the Civil Law of Pembroke College, Maſter of the Free-ſchool at Newland in Glouceſterſhire, Canon of Hereford, and Doctor of Divinity. This Tranſlation was printed ſeveral times, and particularly at London 1630 in fol. under the following title: Annales of England: containing the Reignes of Henry the Eight, Edward the Sixt, Queene Mary. Written in Latin by the Right Honourable and Right Reverend Father in God, Francis, Lord Biſhop of Hereford. Thus Engliſhed, corrected, and inlarged with the Author's conſent by Morgan Godwyn. The Biſhop in his Preface obſerves, that he had undertaken this work when he was paſſed fifty years of age with a view to excite others of greater abilities to write the hiſtory of thoſe reigns, and to ſatisfy the deſires of foreigners, who not without cauſe complain, that thoſe times, than which for a thouſand years there have not been any more memorable with regard to remarkable Revolutions, were not deſcribed by any perſon except in a ſlight manner, and as if the writer had not intended any ſuch thing. He tells us therefore he had written in ſuch a way, that though many things proper to an Hiſtorian might be wanting in him, yet he is confident his endeavour would find acceptance with many. Other Writers may have here as it were a ſtore-houſe, from whence they may ſupply themſelves with ſome materials, which help to raiſe an everlaſting monument. Foreigners likewiſe ignorant of the Engliſh tongue may have ſome knowledge of thoſe times, till ſome other ſhould ariſe, who ſhall compile an Hiſtory of our Nation worthy the Majeſty of the Britiſh name. He aſſures us, that he has in this work been ſo obſervant of impartiality, ſincerity, and truth, that he feared nothing ſo much as a domeſtic anger for not being pious enough, becauſe he would not be over-pious. Many contend that a good Prince ſhould be μὴ πονηρὸς, ἀλλ' ἡμιπονηρὸς. This, he thinks, no man will affirm of an Hiſtorian, tho' ſome ſeem to be of that opinion; ſo that he will be thought to fail of his duty either to God or his country, who in writing Hiſtory will not be at leaſt ἡμιπονηρὸς, and who by affirming uncertainties and known truths ſhall not yield much to his affections, if they be but joined with the love of Religion and his Country. "But how much do they injure truth, ſays "our Author, who from lies and falſhood deſire help "to ſupport her? But we have no need of them; "and if we had, yet it would not do us much ſervice "to rely on ſuch weak advantages, ſince one pious "lie detected proves more hurtful, than a thouſand "others, although ſo artfully contrived as to eſcape "diſcovery, can prove profitable. For an example "of this we need ſeek no further than the Papiſts, "whoſe feigned miracles, impoſtures, and legends "have made even what is true ſuſpected. Where-"fore I am well content, that truth, which in ſpite "of all oppoſition will at length be every where "victorious, ſhould prevail with me. I have done "to my power. Politely, eloquently, politicly, I "could not write. Truly and ſide Atticâ, I could. "If I have done amiſs, in any point, it is not out "of malice, but error." Degory Whear (8) tells us, that theſe Annals are written non magis ſuccinctâ quam laudabili Brevitate; which Dr. Nicholſon obſerves (9) to be our Author's juſt character, and that he was a perfect maſter of the Latin tongue. The Biſhop in the Dedication of his ſecond edition to King Charles I, remarks that the errors of the preſs in the firſt had extremely deformed it, but that they were corrected in the preſent. His ſon in the Preface to his Tranſlation tells us, that he hopes the reader will not object againſt the omiſſion of ſome things in it, "the know-"ledge whereof is to our natives ſo innate, that now "to inſert them, were as bad as to farce with tauto-"logies, and make this little volume nauſeous. Yet "hath it loſt nothing of its bulke, whatſoever it hath "of its ſplendor, thoſe defalcations being here and there "in the courſe of this Hiſtory ſupplied with not "unneceſſary additions, whereto the Author's appro-"bation and conſent was not wanting." III. The Man in the Moone; or a Diſcourſe of a Voyage thither. By Domingo Gonſales. London 1638 and 1657 in 8vo. This was written while our Author was a Student of Chriſt Church, and publiſhed ſome years after his death by E. M. of Chriſt Church, who in the Preface tells us, that this piece is an "Eſſay of fancy,

(8) Relationes Hyemales de ratione & methodo legendi utraſque Hiſtorias, Civiles & Eccleſiaſticas, Sect. 30. pag. 144. edit. Oxon. 1637.

(9) Engliſh Hiſtorical Library, Part 1. pag. 225. ed. London 1696.

(e) Wood, Hiſt. & Antiq. ubi ſupra.

the Biſhops of Hereford, and in about fourteen miles diſtant from that City (e). Mr. Wood tells us (f) that he was a good man, and grave Divine, ſkilful Mathematician, excellent Philoſopher, pure Latiniſt, and incomparable Hiſtorian, "being no leſs critical "in Hiſtories than the learned Selden. . . . He was eſteemed a good Preacher and a "ſtrict Liver, but ſo much employed in his ſtudies and matters of Religion, that he "was as it were a ſtranger to the world and the things thereof." He had a ſon, Morgan, who was Bachelor of Arts of Chriſt Church in Oxford; and afterwards Bachelor of Laws of Pembroke College, Maſter of the Free-School at Newland in Glouceſterſhire, Canon of Hereford, and Doctor of Laws. He tranſlated into Engliſh his Father's Annals, printed at London 1630 in fol. The Biſhop had another ſon, Charles,

(f) Athen. Oxon. col. 58. and Hiſt. & Antiq. ubi ſupra.

"where invention is ſhewed with judgment; and it "was not the Author's intention, ſays he, to diſcourſe "thee into a belief of each particular circumſtance. "It is fit thou allow him a liberty of conceit, where "thou takeſt to thy ſelf a liberty of judgment. In "ſubſtance thou haſt here a new diſcovery of a new "world, which perchance may find little better entertain-"ment in thy opinion, than that of Columbus at firſt "in the eſteem of all men. Yet his then but poor "Eſpial of America betrayed unto knowledge ſo "much as hath ſince encreaſed into a vaſt plantation; "and the then unknown to be now of as large ex-"tent as all the other known world. That there "ſhould be Antipodes was once thought as great a "paradox, as now that the Moon ſhould be habitable. "But the knowledge of this may ſeem more proper "for this our diſcovering age; in which our Gali-"læus's can by advantage of their ſpectacles gaze "the Sun into ſpots, and deſcry mountains in the "Moon. But this and more in the enſuing Diſcourſe "I leave to thy candid cenſure, and the faithful rela-"tion of the little eye-witneſs, our great diſcoverer." There was a French Tranſlation of it printed at the Hague 1651 in 12mo, with this title; L'Homme dans la Lune, ou le Voyage Chimerique fait au Monde de la Lune découvert par Dominique Gonzales, Avantariur Eſpagnol. IV. Nuntius inanimatus. Utopia 1629 in 8vo. There was an edition printed at London 1657 in 8vo under this title: Nuncius inanimatus. By F. G. B. of H. It was tranſlated into Engliſh, and printed at London 1657 in 8vo under this title: Nuncius inanimatus: or the Myſterious Meſſenger, unlocking the ſecrets of Mens Hearts. By F. G. B. of H. In this piece, which contains but two ſheets, he treats of a method, by which two perſons at a diſtance may communicate their thoughts to each other without writing. It is ſaid, that Biſhop Godwin made the experiment with ſucceſs before King James I (10). He gives an account in this Tract of the inventions for this purpoſe related in the Antients; and afterwards obſerves (11), that he dares confidently affirm, that a man ſkilful in the art he propoſes, may tell whatever he pleaſes or thinks conducive to his good, to another perſon at a diſtance, who is alike ſkilful, if he be within a quarter of a mile, though beſieged, or lying hid, or perchance detained in any place, which is not directly known to him, that ſends the tidings, and, if known, yet not acceſſible. "Let no body "come near him, ſays he, ſecure the body in a pri-"ſon, let the hands be bound, hoodwink the face; "but be not troubleſome any other way; and he "ſhall underſtand the words of his abſent friends, if "this liberty be not taken away from him, that he "may be able to do thoſe things which are wont "ſometimes to be done by freemen, or may do them "without fear or danger. I ſay moreover, that if "the place be known where a friend reſides, to whom "our meſſage ſhould be brought, and if both enjoy "a full liberty, the cauſes being before agreed upon, "which conduce to the diſpoſition of the means, any "thing may be told ſuch a friend without any meſ-"ſenger going between each, or any living creature, "though he be a hundred, nay perchance a thou-"ſand miles off, and that in a ſhort ſpace of time, "perchance an hour, or it may be ſomewhat leſs. "Theſe things ſome whiſperingly ſay are ſtrange and "wonderful, but they are not ſo ſoon to be believed. "But what doth ſeem ſo wonderful and incredible? "You have yet but this only in the genus and ſpe-"cies; behold an individual is preſented to thy eyes, "which thou wilt leſs believe. Tell unto this my "Nuncio at London in as few words as may be what "you deſire may be told to me dwelling at Briſtol, "Wells, or, if you will rather, at Exeter, for I do "not much regard the length of the way, ſo it is "but paſſable; I ſay, tell him at London, and that juſt "about noon, any one whole verſe of the ſacred Scrip-"ture, I will ſee that he ſhall perform our com-"mands in the deſigned place (mark what I ſay) be-"fore the high noon of the ſame day. Do not raſhly "pronounce this propoſal impoſſible; for the courſe "of the Sun makes the noon later by ſome minutes at "Briſtol than at London. This it is that you wonder "at, that this meſſenger ſhould exceed the heavenly "motion thereof in ſwiftneſs. This he will do, will do "it, I ſay, if there be need, or elſe I am the vaineſt per-"ſon of all that know, how either to ſpeak or write. "What ſpeak I of towers or cities, that are beſieged? "Our inanimate Nuncio, not fearing any thing, will "paſs through whole troops of enemies. A trench "digg'd almoſt as low as hell, or a wall, though "higher than thoſe of Babylon, ſhall not hinder his "journey, but he will faithfully perform the meſſage, "(ſo it be in as conciſe terms as may be,) of him that "ſent him, though beſieged, or whether he would "have it told to him that is beſieged, and that with "ſuch incredible ſwiftneſs, if he be to be found with-"in 5 or 7 miles, though I doubt not but it may be "done effectually within 20 miles." You have here three promiſes of this my Nuncio preſented to your conſideration; perchance it will be worth our while to ſhew how they differ among themſelves, for perſpicuity's ſake. In the firſt I ſet forth the ſubtlety of deceiving; in the ſecond the ſwiftneſs of its paſſage; in the third its unconquered power and ſtrength in penetrating all things. That in the firſt place will eaſily be performed without any coſt or labour of any one, ſave him, that ſends; but it hath this inconvenience, that its frequent uſe will not free us from ſuſpicion. That in the ſecond place is very often effected without any help from others, and in ſome places almoſt without any charge, but for the moſt part it will do little or nothing without preparation, and that ſuch that for each mile it will coſt five pounds more or leſs, if it be deſigned for perpetual uſe; and nothing can be done without the countenance and authority of the Magiſtrate, who can eaſily, if he pleaſe, hinder our Nuncio's journey. As concerning the third, truly it requireth no great charge; but it muſt be obſerved, that he that doth act, be ſettled in a place without danger, where he may reſiſt his enemies force, until he hath perfected his work; and here we muſt not deny, that the condition of him that ſends in, is worſe than that of him that ſends out. "You "ſeem to me, O Reader, to aſk by what ſenſe a friend "may perceive thoſe things, that are to be told; for "the ſenſes are the guard, interpreters, and meſſengers "of the underſtanding (ſo Cicero *) by which alone I "come to underſtand. I anſwer; ſometimes by hear-"ing, and ſometimes by ſight. You aſk a reaſon "how? You will have it in few terms, and perchance "not ſo clearly, but that you require examples. If "you deſire to repreſent any thing to the eyes of your "abſent friend, I ſay abſent, and at a great diſtance, "ſooner than any ſublunary body can come to the "place, that is ſeparated by ſo long an interval, (for "I undertake that,) we muſt ſee that the ideas or vi-"ſible forms be increaſed in quantity, multiplied in "number, and be varied according to the variety of "the things to be ſignified, in quality, quantity, po-"ſition, or order. There is none but knows, that "nothing can be perceived by the ears without a "ſound;

(10) See Niceron, Mémoires pour ſervir a l'Hiſtoire des Hommes illuſtres. tom. 22. pag. 170. edit. Paris 1733.

(11) § 19, & ſeqq. We make uſe of the Engliſh Tranſlation.

* De Leg. 1. De Nat. Deor. lib. 2.

(g) Idem, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 581, 582.

Charles, who was Maſter of Arts, and Miniſter of Monmouth (g). Sir Henry Saville in a Letter to Camden dated February the 26th 1617 (h) animadverts upon a miſtake of our Author in the following words. "I find in the Biſhop of Hereford's Book of "Biſhops a babble of one William Sever Biſhop of Dureſme, ſon, as he ſaith, of a "Sieve-maker, Warden of Merton College, and Provoſt of Eton, made Biſhop of "Carlile 1496, and tranſlated to Durham (ut videtur) 1502, and died anno 1505. "True it is, that Henry Sever was firſt Provoſt, and ſo named in the Act of Parliament of Eton foundation; and the ſame man was afterwards Warden of Merton "College, where he had his breeding, as kinſman to our Founder, and, as our Regiſter ſays, penè alter Fundator. He lies buried in that Church as Warden there, and "never Biſhop, as I remember, though he had twelve or fourteen Eccleſiaſtical promotions, as by a pardon in Edward IV's time to the College, I find him ſtiled. "Beſides the times cannot agree: Eton College was founded 1440; ſo that in 1505 he "muſt live ſixty five years afterwards, to the latter end of Henry VII; whereas in "Merton College we had two or three Wardens in the mean time, Cigur, and "Fitz-James."

(b) Vide G. Camdeni & illuſtrium Viror. ad G. Camdenum Epiſtolæ, pag. 219, 220. edit. London 1691, in 4to.

"found; it is therefore neceſſary that he, to whom "any thing is to be declared by the mediation of "hearing, ſhould hear thoſe ſounds; and thoſe muſt "be diſtinguiſhed according to the number of the "things to be heard, which becauſe they are infinite, "the variety of ſounds, that are to be ecchoed forth, "muſt be infinite alſo. Nevertheleſs it will be ſufficient, that they be diſtinguiſhed either in the kind, "or time, manner and number. He that ſhall rightly "underſtand, (and by examples they are more clear "than the Sun in its meridian ſplendor) how ſounds "of this nature are reported to a place far diſtant, "will never queſtion the verity hereof. And here "leſt any one ſhould timorouſly ſuſpect theſe things to "be effected by unlawful and condemned arts, in the "preſence of that God, who is both the greateſt and "beſt, I proteſt and openly denounce, that this diſcipline contains in it nothing that it is unlawful or "contrary to the laws either of God or man; and that "many things are done by the help of Arithmetic, "Geometry, and Muſic; the reſt, if not by uſual, "yet by lawful means, and that at a very ſmall coſt, "I had almoſt ſaid none at all; for certainly many "things may be performed in this kind without the "leaſt expence or loſs that can be imagined. And ſeeing that it is ſo, I leave it to the judgment of thoſe "that are judicious, to conſider how much and how "far theſe our inventions may be profitable to the "Commonwealth for the future. If they are defective, let them die, and like an untimely birth let them "not ſee the light; or if they chance to ſee the light, let "them not enjoy it ever ſo little, but forthwith vaniſh "into nothing. Yet I my ſelf think the uſe of this art to "be very great, as well in times of peace as war; "and I thought it my duty to beſtow ſome pains in "the delivery thereof, which I will not do ſo willingly, "leſt that when it ſhall be made known to many, we "cannot uſe or practiſe theſe things in their due time." There is a paſſage in our Author's Man in the Moone: or a Diſcourſe of a Voyage thither, which may perhaps give ſome light into this project of his. It is where he tells us (12), that Domingo Gonſales and his Negroe Diego being obliged to live in different parts of the Iſland of St. Helena on account of procuring proviſion; whenever Domingo had any occaſion to confer with Diego, whoſe habitation was upon a promontory or cape on the North-Weſt part of the Iſland, about a league off, tho' within ſight of Domingo's chapel, they could at all times by ſignals declare their minds to each other in an inſtant. If in the night-ſeaſon, ſays Domingo, I would ſignify any thing to him, I uſed to ſet up a light in the tower or place where our bell hung. It is a pretty large room, having a fair window well glazed, and the walls within being plaſtered, were exceeding white; by reaſon thereof, tho the light were but ſmall, it gave a great ſhew, as alſo it would have done much further off, if need had been. This light after I had let ſtand ſome half hour, I uſed to cover; and then if I ſaw any ſignal of light again from my companion at the cape, I knew that he waited for my notice, which perceiving by hiding and ſhewing my light, according to a certain rule and agreement between us, I certified him at pleaſure what I liſt. The like courſe I took in the day to advertiſe of my pleaſure, ſometimes by ſmoke, ſometimes by a more refined and more effectual way. But this art containeth more myſteries than are to be ſet down in few words. Hereafter I will perhaps afford a diſcourſe for it of purpoſe, aſſuring my ſelf, that it may prove exceedingly profitable unto mankind, being rightly uſed and well employed; for that which a meſſenger cannot perform in many days, this may diſpatch in a piece of an hour. Dr. George Hakewill † tells us, "that among the rare in- "ventions, which this preſent Age hath afforded, "Nuntius inanimatus may juſtly challenge a place; "and it were to be wiſhed, that being an experiment "of ſo great conſequence, greater notice were taken "of it by the higher powers, than hitherto hath been." V. A computation of the value of the Roman Seſterce and Attic Talent, printed at the end of the ſecond Edition of Dr. George Hakewill's Apologie or Declaration of the Power and Providence of God in the Government of the World. Oxford 1630. in fol. In this piece he obſerves, that unus Seſtertius in maſculino genere, ſive unus Nummus, valebat noſtræ monetæ Anglicanæ ferè 2 d. nimirum ut 10 valeant 19 d. With regard to the Talent he writes thus: Talentorum apud antiquos multa fuere genera, Atticum, Euboicum, Æginenſe, Hebraicum, Babylonicum, & alia. Sed hoc obſervandum eſt, Scriptores, ubi Talenti mentionem faciunt abſque ulla adjectione, vix unquam aliud intelligere quam Atticum, quod valebat noſtræ monetæ Anglicanæ Libras 190.

(12) Pag. 19, & ſeqq.

† Advertiſements at the end of his Apologie or Declaration of the Power and Providence of God, edit. Oxon. 1630 in fol.

T.

☞GODWIN (Dr. THOMAS), a learned Engliſh Writer in the ſeventeenth Century, was ſecond ſon of Anthony Godwin of Wookey in Somerſetſhire, ſecond ſon of William Godwin of the City of Wells (a). He was born in that County, and became a Student of Magdalen Hall in Oxford in the year 1602, and in that of his age fifteen. Four years after he was made a Demy of Magdalen College (b), and took the degree of Bachelor of Arts January the 24th 1606 (c), and that of Maſter October the 11th 1609 (d). He was afterwards choſen chief Maſter of the Free-School at Abingdon in Berkſhire, where he educated a great many youths, who became eminent both in Church and State. He was Chaplain likewiſe to Dr. James Mountague, Biſhop of Bath and Wells (e). June the 4th 1616 he took the degree of Bachelor of Divinity (f); and November the 18th 1636 that of Doctor of Divinity (g). But before this time being weary of the fatigue of his ſchool, he had the Rectory of Brightwell near Wallingford in Berkſhire conferred upon him, which he held to his death. His works ſhew him to have

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 27. 2d ed. London 1721.

(b) Idem, ibid.

(c) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 174.

(d) Idem, ibid. col. 183.

(e) Idem, Athen. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(f) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 201.

(g) Idem, ibid. col. 268.

have been a man of great learning [A]. He died March the 20th 164$\frac{2}{3}$, and was interred in the Chancel of the Church of Brightwell, where his widow, Philippa, cauſed a marble ſtone to be laid over his grave, with an inſcription in Latin [B].

[A] His Works ſhew him to have been a man of great learning.] They are as follow: I. Romanæ Hiſtoriæ Anthologia. An Engliſh Expoſition of the Roman Antiquities, wherein many Roman and Engliſh Offices are parallel'd, and divers obſcure phraſes explained. Oxford 1613 in 4to. The ſecond Edition, publiſh'd in 1623, was conſiderably enlarged, and dedicated to Dr. John Young, Dean of Wincheſter. The Dedication is dated at Abingdon Novem. 18th 1622. In 1658 there was publiſhed an Edition under this title: Romanæ Hiſtoriæ Anthologia recognita & aucta. An Engliſh Expoſition of the Roman Antiquities &c. For the uſe of Abingdon School. Newly reviſed and inlarged by the Author. London 1658 in 4to. But this Edition could not then be newly reviſed and enlarged by the Author, who died about ſixteen years before. In the Preface, Dr. Godwin vindicates himſelf for publiſhing ſuch a trivial work, and repreſents the miſeries of the employment of teaching a School; and obſerves, that this Book was occaſioned by the perpetual queſtions of his Scholars, at the ſame time that his own inclinations led him to the ſtudy of Divinity. Miraris forſan & redarguis, quod nondum deſtituerim ab his elementaribus, quaſi Vita mihi vitalis foret, in his minutiis integram meam ætatem eludere, & votum unicum in his prævviis ſtudiis ſenium contrahere. Qui ſic ſentis, nec me ſatis noris, nec Ludi Literarii (pone Lenocinium minimis, moletrinæ dices) iniquas leges aut miſerias quotidianas & omnigenas. Sentio me in piſtrinum damnatum; & cogita tu hanc Anthologiam è piſtrino prodeuntem. Si minus placeat, illud dabis puerorum circumſtrepentium ſuſurris, inter quos nata eſt. Si placeat, illud debes puerorum crebris interrogatiunculis, quorum Enodationes me vel invitum indies reducunt ad hæc ſtudia, quæ aliàs quamdudum juſſiſſem ſuas ſibi res habere. Sic me amet Theologia, ſacratior mihi pagina in votis, cum hæc in manibus, ludo cogente. Interim te monitum velim, quæ acceſſere, non vulgaria aut obvia, nec quæ vulgus hominum aut docuit aut didicit. II. Synopſis Antiquitatum Hebraicarum ad Explicationem utriuſque Teſtamenti valde neceſſaria, &c. Lib. III. Oxford 1616 &c. in 4to. Dedicated to Dr. James Montague, Biſhop of Bath and Wells, and Dean of his Majeſty's Chapel. III. Moſes and Aaron. Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Rites uſed by the ancient Hebrews, obſerved, and at large opened, for the clearing of many obſcure Texts throughout the whole Scripture. London 1625 in 4to. The ſeventh Edition was publiſhed at London 1655 in 4to under this title: Moſes and Aaron. Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Rites uſed by the ancient Hebrews, obſerved, and at large opened, for the clearing of many obſcure Texts thorowout the whole Scripture. Which Texts are now added in the end of the Book. Herein likewiſe is ſhewed what cuſtomes the Hebrews borrowed from Heathen people; and that many Heathenish cuſtomes originally have been unwarrantable imitations of the Hebrews. By Thomas Godwyn, B. D. The Dedication to William Earl of Pembroke, is dated at Kenſington February 21ſt 1624. In it our Author obſerves, that the reaſon why "many have no "better acquaintance with Chriſt and his Apoſtles, is, "becauſe they are ſuch ſtrangers with Moſes and Aaron. "Were cuſtoms antiquated thoroughly known, many "difficulties in Scripture would appear elegancies, and "the places, which now, thro' obſcurity, diſhearten "the Reader, would then become ſweet invitements "to an unwearied aſſiduity in peruſing thoſe ſacred "Oracles. If my preſent labour ſhall give ſuch light "to ſome obſcure paſſages, that hereby God's people "ſhall be drawn on with the greater delight to exer-"ciſe themſelves in reading of holy Writ, it ſhall not "repent me of my tedious travels in theſe rites and cu-"ſtoms of generations long ſince paſt, which whoſoe-"ver undertaketh, ſhall find the way long and thorny, "the path over-grown and hardly diſcernible, the "guides few to direct, and thoſe ſpeaking in ſtrange "languages, and many apt to diſcourage him, becauſe "themſelves are either lazy and will not, or lame and "cannot walk the ſame way." * IV. Florilegium Phraſicon: or, A Survey of the Latin Tongue. V. Three Arguments to prove Election upon Foreſight of Faith. This coming into the hands of Dr. William Twiſſe, he wrote an Anſwer to it, upon which Dr. Godwin made a Reply, which occaſioned a Rejoynder by Dr. Twiſſe. Mr. George Kendal (1), who allows our Author to be a man well ſkilled in Roman, Greek, and Jewiſh Antiquities, yet repreſents him as inferior to Dr. Twiſſe in this controverſy. And Mr. Samuel Clarke has expreſſed himſelf to the ſame purpoſe in very harſh terms: After Maſon, ſays he (2), there aroſe one Thomas Godwin, a very learned man both in the Antiquities of the Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans, but indeed fitter to inſtruct Grammarians than to deal with Logicians, and who had more power as Maſter of the School at Abingdon than as Doctor of Divinity. And our Dr. Twiſſe quickly whipt this old Schoolmaſter; and that Ferula, which he had uſed with pride enough, he wreſted out of his hand, and expoſed him to be derided by his boys.

* The third edition of a Latin Tranſlation of this Book was printed at Utrecht 1690 in 8vo.

(1) In Twiſſii Vitâ & Victoriâ, pag. 78. edit. 1657.

(2) Lives of ſundry eminent Perſons in this laſt Age. In two Parts. Part 1. pag. 16. edit. London 1683.

[B] An Inſcription in Latin.] It is as follows: Depoſitum Thomæ Godwyn, S. T. P. Viri integerrimi, pietate, literaturâ, morum ſuavitate ſpectabilis, Rectoris hujus Eccleſiæ vigilantiſſimi; cujus merita melius poſteris tranſmittant Scripta quam Marmor. Hunc Lapidem uxor ejus Philippa Godwyn Amoris ergo mœrens poſuit. Obiit Martii 20. Anno Dom. 1642. T.

GOLDAST (a) (MELCHIOR HAIMINSFIELD) born at Biſchoffsel (b) in Swiſſerland, and a Proteſtant of the Confeſſion of Geneva, was a very learned man in the ſeventeenth Century. His family was not rich [A], and he never made a fortune, ſo

(a) By the Latin Letters written to him it appears that he was called indifferently Goldaſtus or Goldinaſtus, or Guldinaſtus. His ſurnames were Latiniz'd, Melchior, or Melior Heimensfeldius, or Haiminsfeldius, or Hamenveltus, or Hamenvelto, or Hamenevelto.

(b) In Latin Epiſcopocella. Moreri is miſtaken in repreſenting him as a native of Heminsfeldt.

[A] His Family was not rich.] This appears from ſome Letters of Conrad Ritterſhuſius, at whoſe houſe Goldaſt boarded. Goldaſt went away, without paying his Landlord, and after he return'd to his own country, it was a conſiderable time before he diſcharged the debt. Ritterſhuſius complains of this (1), and repreſents that the Butchers, Bakers, and Brewers had preſſed him ſo much, that he was obliged to borrow money upon intereſt in order to put a ſtop to their dunning. He adds, that he hoped, that Goldaſt would let him have the principal and intereſt, and that it was thus Taurellus and others treated their Boarders, who had occaſion for credit. His Letter is dated Auguſt 24th 1598. The year following Stuckius (2) wrote to Goldaſt, that Ritterſhuſius complained, that he had not received the 52 florins of gold due to him; and therefore urged the debtor to pay the money, and told him, that if he failed, it ſhould be complained of to his mother. A Letter of Ritterſhuſius (3) dated Septemb. 8th 1599 informs us, that he had been paid, and had diſcharged the intereſt; but that as Goldaſt had left ſeveral debts at Altorf, divers ill reports were ſpread of him. This is not a proof, which can be oppoſed to his pretenſions of being of a noble Family. We learn from Scaliger, that Goldaſt pretended to be a Gentleman (4). He might be ſo without being able to pay for his board. Scioppius remarks, that Goldaſt inſerted in his name a particle, which was only ſuitable to Nobility: Fratribus quidem certo hoc uno nomine nobilior, quod ille ſe tantum Heiminsfeld, hic autem Heros noſter pro conſuetudine pleræque nobilitatis ab Heiminsfeld cognominat (5). i. e. "He is certainly more "noble than his brethren on this ſingle account, that "the former ſtiles himſelf only Heiminsfeld, whereas our "Hero,

(1) His Letter is the 3d in the Collection printed in 1688.

(2) His Letter is the 9th of that Collection.

(3) It is the 11th of that Collection.

(4) Goldaſtus ſays, that he is of a noble family, and obſerves, that his family has an eſtate about St. Gal. Scaligerana, pag. m. 95.

(5) Oporini Grubinii Amphot. Scioppius, pag. 111.

I

ſo that he became more known by the number of the books which he wrote or publiſhed, than by his public employments. A Collection of Letters printed in the year 1688 [B] ſhews that in 1598 he was at Biſchoffsel. That the year following he lived at St. Gal at the houſe of a Gentleman, who declared himſelf his patron, and whoſe name was Schobinger. That the ſame year he was at Geneva, and lived there at the houſe of Lectius [C] with the ſons of Vaſſan, whoſe Preceptor he was: that he was ſtill at Geneva in 1602, and complained of his diſtreſs. That the ſame year he went to Lauſanne, becauſe he could live cheaper there than at Geneva. That he returned ſoon after to Geneva. That upon the recommendation of Lectius he was appointed Secretary to the Duke of Bouillon. That he did not keep this place long, for he was at Francfort in February 1603. That he had a ſettlement at Forſteg in 1604. That in the year 1605 he lived at Biſchoffsel, where he complained that he was not ſafe [D] on account of his Religion, which rendered him very odious even to his relations. That he was at Francfort in 1606. That he married and continued there till the year 1610 in bad circumſtances [E], and ſeeing the diſappointment of his friends deſigns to procure him ſome good ſettlement [F]. The Collection, which I ſpeak of, ends here. Goldaſt had already publiſhed a great many books, and continued to do ſo till his death [G], that is, till

" Hero, according to the cuſtom of moſt perſons of qua" lity, calls himſelf ab Heiminsfeld." But here follows a plain inſtance of the poverty of Goldaſt. When he publiſhed Books, he ſent copies of them to the Magiſtrates of Cities and Conſiſtories, with a view to obtain ſome preſent. They ſent him ſomewhat more than the Book coſt, and his friends thought that they did him a great deal of ſervice by procuring for him thoſe little rewards. This wretched traffic help'd to ſupport him. A Miniſter named David Lange wrote to him from Memmingen, that the Magiſtrates of that place ſent to him incloſed unum nummum aureum, and the Conſiſtory another, for the copy of his Book (6).

(6) See the 131ſt Letter of this Collection.

[B] A Collection of Letters.] The title is as follows: Virorum clariſſimorum & doctorum ad Melchiorem Goldaſtum Epiſtolæ, ex Bibliotheca Henrici Guntheri Thulemarii J. C. editæ. Francofurti & Spiræ 1688 in 4to.

[C] Lived at Geneva at the houſe of Lectius.] He was one of the Profeſſors of the Univerſity. The Collection of Letters, which I mentioned, contains one (7), which is exceſſively ſevere upon him. He complains, that when Goldaſt and his Scholars left him, they had not made him an handſome preſent. But Goldaſt on his part complains, that they had been obliged to pay for an hundred things unjuſtly, as ſtoves, benches, locks, keys, &c. It muſt be owned, that thoſe, who keep Boarders in Univerſities, ſhew too often a ſordid avarice. Though they were no Profeſſors, the crime would be very great; but what a ſcandal is it to learning, what a diſhonour to their character, when Profeſſors apply themſelves ſo wretchedly to lucre!

(7) It is the 56th.

[D] In 1605 he lived at Biſchoffsel, where he complained (8), that he was not ſafe.] Scioppius informs us, that the Sieur Jodocus Mezlerus, Vicar of the Abbey of St. Gal, had told him, that Goldaſt was put into priſon at St. Gal for ſtealing. He adds, that Goldaſt had deſired leave to purchaſe a ſmall eſtate near St. Gal, where the Lutheran woman, whom he deſigned to marry, might have liberty of conſcience; but as for himſelf, he would readily become a Catholic. Commodum eas literas legeram cum officii cauſa viſum ad me venit D. Jodocus Mezlerus illuſtriſſimi Principis & Abbatis S. Galli vicarius, iſtumque Melchiorem adhuc vivum probeque ſibi notum eſſe affirmavit. Idque ut credibilius faceret præter alia hoc quoque de eodem narravit, expoſuiſſe eum ſibi in ſermone, in quanto apud Sangallenſes periculo ſemel verſatus fuerit, cum illi furti nomine in carcerem ſe compegiſſent: petiiſſe etiam ut prædioli cujuſdam in Sangallenſi territorio emendi ab Abbate poteſtas ſibi fieret, ita tamen ut uxori, quam ducere in animo haberet, Lutheranæ Religionis libertas ſalva eſſet: nam ſeipſum quidem Catholicum facilè futurum. His ego auditis cœpi de ipſo non deſperare futurum ut fato aliquando fratris utatur, & ſublime potius quàm humi putiſcat, cum præſertim nemo, qui faciem ejus viderit, non confeſtim patibulo dignum judicet. Interim nos velut Ciceronem Vatinii morte nunciata, cujus parum certus dicebatur auctor, reſpondiſſe legimus, uſura fruemur (9). i. e. " I had juſt read thoſe Letters, when Jodocus " Mezlerus, Vicar of the moſt illuſtrious Prince and " Abbot of St. Gal, came to viſit me, and aſſured me " that this Melchior was living and well known to " him. And to make this the more credible, he told " me among other things, that Melchior had inform- " ed him in what danger he had once been at St. Gal, " when he was thrown into priſon on pretence of ſtealing; " and that he deſired leave of the Abbot to purchaſe a " little eſtate in the territory of St. Gal, and that the " woman, whom he intended to marry, might be al- " lowed the liberty of the Lutheran Religion; but " that for his own part, he would readily become a " Catholic. When I heard this, I began to be in " hopes, that he would ſome time or other ſuffer his " brother's fate, and rot on high rather than on the " ground, eſpecially ſince no perſon, who ever ſaw " his face, did not immediately judge him worthy of " a gibbet. In the mean time I remember that I an- " ſwered as Cicero did upon the news of the death " of Vatinius, which was related by a perſon of no " great credit, Let us enjoy the ſuppoſition of it." Scioppius is here to be ſuſpected, as well becauſe he was very abuſive, as becauſe he conſidered Goldaſt as a man who had furniſhed Scaliger with materials for compiling the Satyr intitled, Munſterus Hypobolimæus (10). Apply this to the Remark [H].

(8) See the 109th Letter of the Collection.

(9) Sciopp. in Oper. Grabin. Amphot. Sciopp. pag. 108.

(10) Hem qui tibi omnium illorum, quæ de Scioppii natalibus, vita, ſtudiis, ac fortuna in Satyram & Confutationem tuam conjecisti, auctor fuit. Idem, ibid. pag. 111. See alſo pag. 332.

[E] He continued there till 1610 in bad circumſtances.] This appears from a Letter (11) which was written to him by Quirinus Reuterus, Director of the College of Wiſdom at Heidelberg. He adviſes him to come and board in that College.

(11) It is the 278th of the Collection.

[F] . . . . and ſeeing the diſappointment of his friends deſigns to procure him ſome good ſettlement.] They endeavoured at the Court of the Elector Palatine to obtain for him the place of Counſellor to his Electoral Highneſs in the year 1608. The 191ſt Letter ſpeaks of it as a thing concluded; but in the 194th Lingelſheim declares, that this affair began to decline; and in the 209th he ſhews, that it was intirely at an end. The Elector of Mentz offered then an employment to our Goldaſt. The latter aſked the advice of Lingelſheim (12), who durſt not abſolutely diſſuade him from accepting of theſe offers, knowing the diſtreſs of his circumſtances, and that he had nothing offered to him. He only repreſented to him the ſlavery, which was unavoidable in a place, where the Jeſuits had the aſcendant.

(12) See the 214th and 217th Letter of the Collection.

[G] He continued to publiſh books till his death.] We ſhall give a Catalogue of his principal Works. Alamannicarum Rerum Scriptores vetuſti, three volumes in folio. Monarchia Imperii Romani, ſeu de Juriſdictione & Poteſtate Imperatoris & Papæ per varios Autores, three volumes in folio. Conſtitutionum Imperialium tomi quatuor, in folio. Suevicarum Rerum Scriptores veteres, Francfort 1605, in 4to. De Juribus ac Privilegiis Regni Bohemiæ, & hereditariâ regiæ Familiæ ſucceſſione Libri VI cum Appendice, in fol. Conſultatio de officio & jure Electoris Bohemiæ in Conventibus Electorum Romani Imperii. Rationale Conſtitutionum Imperialium. Statuta & Reſcripta Imperialia. Politica Imperialia. Catholicon rei monetariæ, ſeu Leges monarchicæ generales de rebus nummariis & pecuniariis. Digeſta regia ſeu Conſtitutiones Imperiales de SS. Euchariſtia. Apologiæ Principum Germaniæ pro Henrico IV Imperatore contra criminationes Gregorii VII. Replicatio pro Cæſarea & Regia Francorum Majeſtate & Ordinibus Imperii contra Gretſerum.

till the 11th of Auguſt 1635 (e). Scioppius had given orders for publiſhing in his Scaliger Hypobolimæus, that Goldaſt had been broken on the wheel; but underſtanding the falſity of this ſtory, he procured it to be corrected. We ſhall ſee in the Remarks how he extricated himſelf out of the affair [H]; it was not without abuſing Goldaſt in an exceſſive manner. It is not poſſible to approve of the conduct of the latter with regard to Juſtus Lipſius, rum (13). Imperialia Decreta de cultu Imaginum. Paradoxon de honore Medicorum, & obiter de honore Theologorum & Jureconſultorum. Sibylla Francica, ſeu de admirabili Puella Joanna Lotharinga exercitus Francorum ductrice ſub Carolo VII. Dialogi duo de querelis Franciæ & Angliæ, & de jure ſucceſſionis utrorumque Regum in regno Franciæ. Centuria Epiſtolarum Philologicarum diverſorum hominum, à Francfort 1610 in 8vo. Emendationes in Petronium Arbitrum. Notæ ad paræneticos Scriptores veteres.

(e) Witte, in Diario Biographico.

(13) A German Jeſuit, who wrote divers books againſt Goldaſt.

This laſt work was not much eſteemed by Scaliger. He cites old Writers in his Parenetics, ſays he ſpeaking of Goldaſt (14). He is too much amuſed with theſe old words. There is nothing valuable in Melchior's Paræneticks. It would be right for him to publiſh theſe old inſtruments; we ſhould always be informed of ſomething new with regard to the families of Gentlemen. Melchior has manuſcripts, but of the loweſt age. I demeaned my ſelf in writing to Melchior, ſince he is ſuch a man (15). There is no occaſion to obſerve, that the greateſt part of the Works publiſhed by Goldaſt, are productions not written by him. The titles ſhew plainly enough, that he only reduced them into a body, or publiſhed them from manuſcripts in Libraries. In this way he proved himſelf one of the moſt indefatigable men in the world. Conringius gives him a great character. Vir, ſays he (16), editis antiquis Germaniæ monumentis tam bene de patria meritus, ut abſque dubio Athenienſes illum in Prytanæo aluiſſent, ſi quidem illud in ævum incidiſſet. Cum (17) in Germania certius meliuſque hoc ſtudiorum genus (de Jure publico Imp. Germ. agit) incenſum fuit initio hujus ſæculi auctore MELCHIORE GOLDASTO, cui nemo Germaniæ rebus illuſtrandis par fuit, nec forte erit quiſpiam, & vero illius ductu paulatim cœpit apud nos ſolito exquiſitior Reip. cognitio. i. e. "He is a perſon, who has ſo well deſerved "of his Country by publiſhing the antient monuments "of Germany, that undoubtedly the Athenians would "have maintained him in the Prytanæum, if he had "lived in thoſe times. When this more valuable and "certain kind of learning (he ſpeaks of the public Law "of the German Empire) was promoted in Germany in "the beginning of this Century by Melchior Goldaſt, "who had no equal, nor perhaps ever will have in "illuſtrating the affairs of Germany; and by his "guidance a more exact knowledge of the Empire "began by degrees to prevail among us." However he treats him as a man of no great ſincerity in ſome points (18). Sunt hæc omnia (examinat nonnulla ex libro III. Conſtitutionum Imperialium) illaudabili facinore perquam tamen GOLDASTO familiari efficta quo nomine eum ex merito acerrime increpavit Wendelinus c. 2. de l. Salica. i. e. "All theſe particulars (he examines "ſome points in the third Book of the Conſtitutiones Imperiales) by a very diſhoneſt but frequent cuſtom "with Goldaſt are forged by him; on which account "he is ſeverely chaſtiſed by Windelinus, c. 2. de L. "Salica." He is not the only perſon, who complains of Goldaſt on this account. Qui noverit quam multas ſuſpectæ fidei merces pro veris erudito orbi obtruſerit GOLDASTUS, cui cæteroquin diligentiæ laudem non negamus, in re cui aliunde fides fieri non poteſt, vix ejus ſolius auctoritate ſibi aliquid plane perſuaderi patietur (19). i. e. "Whoever knows how many ſuſpected things have "been obtruded for truth upon the learned World by "Goldaſt, whom in other reſpects we allow to be a "learned man, will ſcarce depend on his authority "alone in a point otherwiſe doubtful."

(14) Scaligerana, pag. 95.

(15) Ibid. pag. 154. under the word Melchior.

(16) In Præfat. ad Tacitum de Moribus Germanorum, apud Magirum Eponymolog. pag. 393.

(17) Idem in Dedicat. Exercitationibus de Rep. Imp. Germ. præmiſſ. apud eundem Magirum, ibid.

(18) Idem, cap. 7. de O. J. G. apud eundem ibid. pag. 394.

(19) Er. Maurit. de matricula Imperii, num. 12. apud eundem Magirum, ibid.

[H] We ſhall ſee in the Remarks how Scioppius extricated himſelf out of the affair.] Two Gentlemen of Franconia, who had lodg'd with him at Conrad Ritterſhuſius's houſe at Altorf, paid him a viſit during their ſtay at Rome. He aſked them news concerning their common friends, and among the reſt concerning Goldaſt, who had boarded with them at Altorf. They informed him that this wretched man had been broken on the wheel, and afterwards burnt for an horrible murther. Eum videlicet ſuperiori anno cum Bullionio Duce, cui interpretis operam dederit, Geneva in Germaniam profectum, cum Argentinæ in familiaritatem Centurionis cujuſdam perveniſſet, qui in contubernio ſuo puellam nobilem, domo paterna abductam pro ſecutuleia muliere & concubina circumducebat, audito eum jam ſatietate illius captum mille aureos ei, qui ab illa ſe liberaret, polliceri, avide conditionem, quod pretio inhiaret, arripuiſſe, & ita digreſſo Centurione non procul ab urbe in ipſa via regia . . miſellam obtruncaſſe (20). He had contracted a friendſhip, they ſaid, with a certain Captain, who began to be weary of a girl, whom he had ſtolen, and promiſed a thouſand crowns to any one, who would rid him of her. Goldaſt accepted the terms; but ſoon after murdered the woman in the middle of the high way near Straſbourg, and ſtripp'd her, and return'd to the city. He was ſeized at his inn as he was opening the woman's cloaths, and committed to priſon, and within ſeven days condemned to be broken on the wheel and burnt. Septimo tandem poſt die capitis condemnatum & ſummo ſupplicio, tanquam parricidam affectum, hoc eſt membratim pæne rota contuſum & comminutum, & inde lignis infelicibus uſtulatum conflagraſſe (21). Scioppius wrote down this ſtory immediately, in order that it might be inſerted in a Book, which he was then printing in Germany againſt Scaliger. He thought that he had no occaſion for any other apology or revenge againſt Goldaſt (22) on account of the ill office, which he imagined he had received from him. He pretended, that Goldaſt had publiſhed under the name of Scioppius a Commentary on the Priapeia, of which Scioppius was not the Author. The Letter which he wrote concerning this pretended tragical end of Goldaſt, was followed by another five months after (23), in which he informs his friend, that the ſtory told by the two German Gentlemen related to a brother of Melchior Goldaſt. Charles Fugger, Preſident of the Imperial Chamber at Spire, had informed Scioppius of this barbarous action, and the puniſhment of Goldaſt's brother. Here is what he wrote. Sebaſtianus Heiminsfeld, dictus Guldenaſt, natus Cellæ Epiſcopi in Turgoviæ die ſexta Junii anno 1603 propterea in carcerem conjectus fuit, quod pridie feminam quandam, Dorotheam de Gries, Bambergæ aut Herbipoli, quemadmodum ipſe retulit, natam, quam diebus aliquot hac illac circumduxerat, bene mane non longe ab hac civitate priuſquam patefactæ eſſent portæ, Satanæ inſtinctu cultro immaniter obtruncaſſet, & omni veſtitu uſque ad lineam interulam ſpoliaſſet, ac poſtquam aliquantum de via regia eam provolverat, in civitatem portis commodum apertis ingreſſus in hoſpitium publicum divertiſſet, ubi & captus mox, factumque quæſtioni ſubjectus, & ſponte etiam ſua, confeſſus die 10 ejuſdem menſis Rotæ ſupplicio affectus fuit (23). i. e. "Sebaſtian Heiminsfeld, called Guldenaſt, "born at Cella Epiſcopi in Tergovia, on the 6th of "June 1603 was caſt into priſon for murthering in a "cruel manner with a knife, at the inſtigation of the "Devil, Dorothy de Gries, born at Bamberg or "Wurtzburg, as he relates, which woman he had car-"ried about ſome days before. He killed her early "in the morning before the gates were opened, not far "from this city, and ſtripp'd her of all her cloaths "even to her ſhift, and having removed her a little "out of the high way, he went into the city juſt at "the opening of the gates, and returned to his inn, "where he was ſoon after taken, and being put to the "queſtion, readily confeſſed the fact, and was broken "on the wheel on the 10th of the ſame month." Scioppius was informed ſoon after by Jodocus Mezlerus, Vicar of the Abbot of St. Gal (25), that Melchior Goldaſt was then living: he wrote therefore to his friend that he ſhould not print what had been ſent to him concerning Goldaſt's puniſhment. Hoc à te pro amicitia noſtra peto, ut ſi adhuc eſſet integrum illa ſupplicii de monſtro iſto ſumpti mentio ex Scaligero meo Hypobolymæo circumſcribatur. Sin autem, quod vereor, hæc ipſa mea epiſtola ad calcem libri illius adjuncta totius geſtæ rei ordinem palam omnibus declarari cupio (26). i. e. "I deſire you by our friendſhip, that if there be any "opportunity

(20) Oporinus Grubinius, in Amphotidibus Scioppian. pag. 104.

(21) Idem, ibid.

(22) Ibid. pag. 106.

(23) Ibid.

(24) Ibid. pag. 109, 110.

(25) See the Remark [D].

(26) Opor. Grubin. Amphot. Sciopp. pag. 109.

Lipſius [I], under whoſe name he publiſhed an Oration, of which himſelf was the Author. It appears that his capricious temper [K], and his want of integrity (d) were complained of.

(d) See Remark [G], quotations (18) and (19).

" opportunity the whole account of the puniſhment of " that monſter may be ſuppreſſed in my Scaliger Hypo- " bolimæus. But if, as I fear, it be too late, I intreat " you, that by ſubjoining this Letter of mine at the " end of that Book the whole ſtate of the affair may " be exactly repreſented." This ſecond Letter is dated March 3d 1607; and by this one might ſhew, that the two Gentlemen were miſtaken in the circumſtance of the time; for in the beginning of November 1606 Scioppius wrote to his friend, that they had informed him, that Goldaſt was executed the year before, ſuperiori Anno. Now Goldaſt's brother was broken on the wheel June 10th 1603 (28). They ſaid likewiſe, that when Goldaſt murthered the woman near Straſbourg, he was travelling through Germany with the Duke of Bouillon, whoſe Secretary he was. This does not agree with a Letter written by Goldaſt to Schobinger his patron in February 1603 (29). He was then no longer with the Duke of Bouillon, and yet the murtherer of the woman being aſked by the Judges in June 1603 declared, that Melchior Goldaſt his brother was in the ſervice of the Duke of Bouillon (30).

(27) Scioppius's 2d Letter was written five months after the firſt. Ibid. pag. 106.

(28) Sebaſtianus Melchioris frater germanus, is fuerit qui Argentinæ anno 1603 a. d. 10 Junii ob crudeliſſimum homicidium & latrocinium affectus, nunc quoque ſuperbus & celſus in rota, velut in radiato diſco, quotidiano prandio aſſo, inquam, bene ad ſolem toſto corvos accipiat. Ib. pag. 107. See above quotation (24).

[I] It is not poſſible to approve of the conduct of the latter with regard to Juſtus Lipſius.] Scioppius, who had a great talent at exaggerating, made no ſcruple to ſay at the time, when he imagined that Goldaſt had been broken on the wheel, that the principal crime, which had expoſed him to this dreadful puniſhment, was having forged a ſpeech in the name of Lipſius. Hujus ego non minus facti, quam ſupplicii atrocitatem cum animo meo recogitans, nullius magis ſceleris, quam quod orationem illam, de qua Lipſius Cent. IV. Epiſt. LXVIII ad conſules ac ſenatum Imperialis oppidi Francofurtenſis ſcribit, ejuſdem Lipſii nomine præſcriptam minime Helvetica ſimplicitate, ſed actu pluſquam Punico & vere Genevenſi malitia Tiguri edendam curaſſet, pœnas ab eo expeditas & ſumptas eſſe judicavi (31). i. e. " When I reflect- " ed upon the ſhocking nature of the fact as well as of " the puniſhment, I thought that he was puniſhed for " no crime more than for publiſhing at Zurich not " with an Helvetian ſimplicity, but with a more than " Punic and a true Geneva treachery, under Lipſius's " name, that Oration, which Lipſius mentions in his 68th " Letter of the 4th Century addreſſed to the Magiſtrates " and Senate of the Imperial City of Francfort." This Oration was intitled, De duplici Concordia Literarum & Religionis, and was publiſhed in 1600. It was pretended, that Lipſius had pronounced it at Jena July 31ſt 1574. It was not printed at Leyden, as the title intimates, but at Zurich by John James Friſius (32). An hundred copies were ſent to Francfort-fair, which were all bought up by Plantin, who denied this piece to be Lipſius's, and threatned that the Printer and real Author ſhould repent of it (33). The Bookſeller of Zurich informed Goldaſt of this, and deſired him to ſhew, that this Oration was really written by the perſon, whoſe name it bore. A Profeſſor of Zurich acquainted Goldaſt of the threats of Lipſius, and obſerved, that the whole thread of the Oration ſhewed it to be written by Lipſius. Nos quidem ex filo orationis conjicimus omnino ejus eſſe (34). In this manner judged the learned men of Zurich: but the judgment of thoſe of Paris was quite different; they could not diſcover Lipſius's ſtyle in it. Lipſii oratio nova nobis viſa eſt, nec in eâ Lipſii ſtylum ſine monitione tuâ unquam agnoviſſemus (35). i. e. " We have ſeen the new Oration " of Lipſius; but ſhould not have known it to be his " ſtyle without your informing us of it." Lipſius's threats were not in vain; he applied himſelf to the Magiſtrates of Francfort, who ordered, that this Oration ſhould be ſtruck out of the Catalogue of their Fair (36). He returned them his thanks, and demonſtrated to them by a great many reaſons the impoſture of thoſe, who had forged the Oration. He aſſerted among other things, that he was not at Jena July 31ſt 1574, and that he departed thence on the 1ſt of March (37). Goldaſt deſerved all the ſhame imaginable; there was ſcarce any man of honour but was convinc'd of Lipſius's innocence in this point. Inſulſam illam & vix Latialem orationem de duplici concordia literarum & religionis Jenæ, ut volunt habitam, jam olim falſimoniam eſſe meram, edita epiſtola ipſe oſtendit, & nuper ſuppoſititii iſtius fœtus parens Melchior Heiminsfeldus Goldaſtus ſe prodidit (38). i. e. " With reſpect to the in- " ſipid and ſcarce Latin Oration De duplici Concordiâ " Literarum & Religionis, pronounced, as it was pre- " tended, at Jena, he ſhewed by a Letter, which he " publiſhed, that it was a mere forgery; and Melchior " Heiminsfeldius Goldaſtus has lately diſcovered himſelf " to be the Author of that ſpurious piece." But there are ſome people ſo obſtinate in their prejudices, that they will not part with any opinion, and are inflexible to the cleareſt reaſons. There were ſome, who perſiſted in maintaining, that Lipſius had made exactly ſuch a ſpeech as Goldaſt had forged. Read the following paſſage (39). Juſti Lipſii nomine de duplici concordia literarum & religionis, editas Orationes (40), non eſſe ipſius, ſed Melchioris Goldaſti, Miræus in Vita Lipſii pag. m. 67 refert. Carolus etiam Scribanius Jeſuita, cap. ult. defenſionis poſthumæ, Lipſii operibus in folio præfixæ, aliquot jam ante menſibus, quam Orationes iſtæ habitæ perhibentur, Lipſium Jena diſceſſiſſe, audacter ſcribit: ſed vide refutationem hujuſce mendacii factam à Sagittario in Lipſio Proteo, Francofurti 1614 edito. i. e. " Miræus in the Life of Juſtus Lipſius re- " lates, that the Orations publiſh'd under Lipſius's " name De duplici Concordia Literarum & Religionis, " were not written by him, but by Melchior Goldaſt. " And Charles Scribanius the Jeſuit in the laſt chap- " ter of the poſthumous defence prefixed to Lipſius's " Works in folio, confidently aſſerts, that Lipſius left " Jena ſeveral months before thoſe Orations are ſaid to " have been pronounced. But the Reader may ſee a " confutation of this falſity by Sagittarius in his Lip- " ſius Proteus publiſhed at Francfort in 1614." I do not pretend to deny Lipſius's inconſtancy in the point of Religion.

(29) See the Collection of Letters to Goldaſt, printed in Germany 1688.

(30) Amphotides Scioppian. pag. 110.

(31) Ibid. pag. 105.

(32) See Stuckius's Letter to Goldaſt in the Collection quoted above quotation (29). It is the 18th. See Lipſius, Epiſt. 68. Cent. ad German. & Gallos.

(33) John James Friſius informed Goldaſt of all this. His Letter is in the Collection.

(34) Waſerus, Epiſt. ad Goldaſt. It is the 38th of the Collection,

(35) Vaſſan in the 31ſt Letter of this Collection, written to Goldaſt from Paris Sept. 23, 1600.

(36) See the 68th Letter of Lipſius, Centur. ad Germanos & Gallos, pag. m. 700.

(37) Lipſius, Ep. 68. Centur. ad German. p. 702.

(38) Miræus in Vitâ Lipſii, circa finem, pag. m. 35.

(39) Placcius, de Pſeudonymis, pag. 219.

(40) The plural number ſhould not be uſed here, ſince there was but one Oration.

[K] His capricious temper . . . . was complained of.] When his Patron Schobinger adviſed him to go to Lauſanne, if the charge of living there was leſs than at Geneva, he adds this reſtriction: Modo à crebris migrationibus in poſterum abſtineas, quæ neque è re neque pro exiſtimatione tua moroſitatis neſcio cujus ſuſpectum te apud nonnullos fecere, qui id mihi Tiguri nuper objecerunt (41). i. e. " So that you refrain hereafter from your frequent " removals, which are not for your advantage or cre- " dit, and have made you ſuſpected of an odd turn of " temper among ſome perſons, who lately complained " of it to me at Zurich."

(41) See the 5th Letter of the Collection printed in 1688. It is dated at St. Gal in Feb. 1602.

GOLIUS (JAMES) Profeſſor of the Mathematics and Arabic in the Univerſity of Leyden, was born at the Hague in the year 1596, of an ancient and conſiderable family [A]. He had a ſtrong inclination for learning, and a very extenſive genius; for he was not contented with ſtudying the Languages, Philoſophy, the Grecian and Roman

[A] He was of an ancient and conſiderable family.] It was originally of Leyden, where FRANCIS GOLIUS, the great-great grandfather of him we are ſpeaking of, was Echevin, about the year 1458. CORNELIUS and GILBERT GOLIUS, his grandſons, were Senators of the ſame City. They were ſons of THEODORIC GOLIUS, who being twice or thrice married, procured to his deſcendants divers degrees of relation to a great many good families. Another THEODORIC GOLIUS deſcended from this latter was the father of our James. He poſſeſſed a conſiderable imployment (1), and was one of the citizens of Leyden who contributed the moſt to ſave the town, during the ſiege ſo much ſpoken of in Hiſtory. His wife, the mother of our Profeſſor, was named Anne Hemelar (2), and had a brother of whom I deſign to compoſe an Article (3), wherein I ſhall ſay ſomething of PETER GOLIUS, the brother of James.

(1) Feudorum Hollandiæ actuarius. Gronovius, in Orat. funebri Jacobi Golii, pag. 6.

(2) Ex Oratione funebri Golii, habitâ a Gronovio.

(3) See HEMELAR (John.)

man Antiquities, Divinity, and Phyſic; but he applied himſelf alſo to the Mathematics with the utmoſt ardour. At the age of twenty he left the Univerſity of Leyden, where he had made great progreſs, and retired to a houſe in the country (a), with a reſolution of ſpending two years there in no other occupation than that of his ſtudies; but by too great attention to his ſtudy he ſoon fell ſick, and was forced to interrupt his deſign. He was ſo charmed with the Labours and Lectures of the learned Erpenius (b), that he attached himſelf entirely to him. He took a journey to France with the Dutcheſs de la Trimouille, which occaſioned his being invited to Rochelle to teach Greek there. He did not exerciſe that office long (c), becauſe the civil wars, which ended at length by the taking of that city, made Golius deſirous of returning to Holland. Some time after (d) he attended the Embaſſador ſent by the United Provinces to the King of Morocco, and made extreme good uſe of the advice which Erpenius gave him [B], to attain a perfect ſkill in the Arabic. He appeared ſo curious, and ſo well acquainted with the ſciences and cuſtoms of the Arabs, that he made himſelf very agreeable to the Doctors and Courtiers. He even received ſeveral marks of favour from Muley Zidan King of Morocco [C]. He furniſhed himſelf with many books unknown to the Europeans, and among others the Annals of the ancient Kingdom of Fez and Morocco, which he reſolved to tranſlate. He likewiſe made a great many Collections relating to the Hiſtory of the Sheriffs. By this means he brought Erpenius a thouſand valuable treaſures, which would have rendred great ſervice to that learned Profeſſor, if a contagious diſtemper had not carried him off ſoon after. Golius, without conſidering the danger to which he expoſed himſelf, did all the ſervices in his power to his dear maſter in the courſe of that illneſs, and did not leave him till he ſaw him expire. He was choſen his ſucceſſor in the chair of Arabic Profeſſor (e), conformably to the advice the deceaſed had given them a little before his death; and he acquitted himſelf ſo learnedly in that employment that the incomparable Erpenius was not miſſed (f). But while he contented every body elſe, he was not ſatisfied with himſelf; he thought he wanted many things, which he could not attain without tranſporting himſelf to the places moſt near the fountain-head. He aſked leave,

(a) Situate near Naaldwijk. It belonged to his father.

(b) He was Profeſſor of Arabic at Leyden.

(c) One year only.

(d) In the year 1622.

(e) In the year 1624.

(f) Hæc in Sparta ornanda jam ſatisfaciebat omnibus, haud quaquam ſibi: nemo non renatum in Golio Erpenium, & corpus tantum hominis, non virtutem Profeſſoris mutatam credere: ipſe non credulus illis omnia in ſeſe requirere, & licet haud quaquam arrogaret ſibi magiſtri ſummam, tamen ne hac quidem contentus eſſe. Joh. Frid. Gronovius, in Orat. funebri Jac. Golij, pag. 15.

[B] He made good uſe of the advice which Erpenius gave him.] He charged him, among other things, to inform himſelf of the origin of certain proverbs, and to inquire on what cuſtom, or on what inclination of the people ſeveral Arabic terms or expreſſions were founded, which he underſtood by conjecture only, and concerning which he imagined he could have procured good explications, if he had been in the countries where that tongue is ſpoken. But let us make uſe of the deſcription we find of this matter in the book which I quote. Intellexerat (Erpenius) unum ſibi deeſſe quod terras, in quibus viget atque in uſu habetur Arabiſmus, non incoluiſſet, non acceſſiſſet. Quum enim multa in promptu haberet verba, proverbia, vocabula, quæ quid ſignificarent, divinabat magis & ſuſpicabatur quam noverat, quod de rerum formis, hominum actionibus, locorum habitu, unde & ubi illa nata eſſent nunquam oculis judicaſſet, hoc præcepit, inculcavit, infixit noſtro, ut quicquid ejuſmodi ſive natura illic, ſive ars, ſive conſuetudo nobis ignarum peperiſſet, aut introduxiſſet, diligentiſſime obſervaret, accurate deſcriberet, annotaretque una cum ſignato cujuſque nomine, & ſi noſcerentur, cauſis nominum (4). i. e. "Erpenius knew himſelf to "be deficient in one thing, that he had not lived in "nor viſited the countries where the Arabic language "flouriſhes and is ſpoken. For having met with "many words, proverbs, and terms, the ſignification "of which he rather gueſſed at and ſuſpected, than "really knew, becauſe he had never examined with "his own eyes the forms of things, the actions of "men, and the habit of the places, from whence "and where they took their riſe, he directed, inculcated, and fixed this in our Golius's mind, that "whatever thing of that kind either nature, art, or "cuſtom had there produced or introduced, which "was unknown to us, he ſhould diligently obſerve, "deſcribe, and ſet down, together with the proper "name of each thing, and the reaſons of thoſe names, "if known."

(4) Gronovius, in Orat. funebr. J. Golij, pag. 13, 14.

[C] He received ſeveral marks of favour from Muley Zidan King of Morocco.] He had brought him a letter from Erpenius very well written, and he had happily recommended himſelf to him by his agreeable behaviour (5). This is all that is to be found on this head in his funeral Oration; to which we may join a very curious ſupplement, taken from a manuſcript relation which Colomiés had read, and of which he has publiſhed a ſhort paſſage relating to Golius. I ſhall ſet down the paſſage at length, though I fall into the importunate neceſſity of repeating ſomething of what is to be found in Moreri. "Golius, whom I "ſaw at Leyden, where he was Arabic Profeſſor in "the room of Erpenius, was very ſkilful in the "Languages, and in the Mathematics; but he had "yet more genius than learning. He got a great "deal of honour in the voyage which he made in the "Eaſt in 1622, and eſpecially to Morocco with an "Embaſſador from the States, and an Eſquire of the "Prince of Orange. When they arrived at that city "they went to pay their compliments to the King, "whoſe name was Mouley Zidam, and who received "them and their preſents in a very obliging manner. "He declared particularly his ſatisfaction in the preſent ſent him by Erpenius, which was a Grand "Atlas and a New Teſtament in Arabic, which he "afterwards read frequently. The Embaſſador from "the States growing uneaſy becauſe his affairs were "not diſpatched, was adviſed to preſent to the King a "petition which Mr. Golius wrote in the Arabic cha"racter and language, and in the Chriſtian ſtyle, a "thing very extraordinary in that country. The "King was aſtoniſhed at the beauty of this petition, "with reſpect both to the writing and ſtyle; and "ſending for the Talips or Secretaries, ſhewed them "the petition, which they admired. He ſent immediately for the Embaſſador, and aſked him who had "drawn up that petition. The Embaſſador anſwering, that it was Mr. Golius, a ſcholar of Mr. Erpenius, who had ſent him thither, he deſired to "ſee him, and ſpoke to him in Arabic. Mr. Golius anſwered him in Spaniſh, that he underſtood "very well what he ſaid, but that he could not anſwer him in Arabic, ſince his throat would not "aſſiſt him. The King, who underſtood Spaniſh, "admitted his excuſe, and having granted the Embaſſador what he requeſted, diſpatched him immediately. I owe all theſe particulars to the relation "of Monſieur le Gendre Merchant of Roan, who "was then at Morocco. Monſieur Briot kept a copy, "which he communicated to me at Paris. Let us "add one word concerning Mr. Golius. He was "brother of Peter Golius, who was likewiſe admirably well ſkilled in the Oriental Languages, and "tranſlated from Latin into Arabic Thomas a Kempis's book of the imitation of Jeſus Chriſt, and entering into the Order of the barefooted Carmelites "took the name of Father Celeſtin de St. Lidwine. "Theſe two brothers were nephews of a Canon of "Antwerp, named Hemelar, who wrote an excellent "book of Medals, which is not eaſy to be met "with (6)." I wiſh that Monſieur Colomiés's Mélanges Hiſtoriques were a book in folio.

(5) Nec privata tantum humanitate, ſed & Imperatoris ipſius Mulei Zidani (quam & literis Erpenii puriſſimo ſermone ſcriptis, & ſuo lepore atque honeſtate promeruerat) clementia, cumulatiſſime præſtitit. Gronov. in Orat. fun. J. Golij, pag. 14.

(6) Colomiés, Mêlanges Hiſtoriques, printed at Orange 1675. pag. 75, & ſeqq.

leave, therefore, of his ſuperiors to take a journey to the Levant (g). He ſtaid a year and a half at Aleppo; after which he made ſome excurſions into Arabia, and towards Meſopotamia, and came by land to Conſtantinople. His learning and prudence made him find friends every where, and the neceſſary means to facilitate his profiting by travelling among thoſe barbarous Nations. He met with Turks who permitted him to ſearch ſome fine Libraries [D]. In a word, he left ſo good a name behind him, that it was of great uſe to his brother (b), who ſome time after undertook the ſame journey. Our Golius returned to Leyden at the end of four years, loaden with fine Manuſcripts, and the remembrance of an infinite number of rare things (i). Having reſumed the courſe of his former Lectures, he ſoon ſaw himſelf called to read Lectures of another nature [E]; for he was made Profeſſor of Mathematics in the room of Willibrod Snellius. He very worthily diſcharged the functions of theſe two poſts for about forty years; and though they might take up all the time of a laborious man, he nevertheleſs found leiſure to compoſe ſome excellent Works which have been publiſhed [F], and to undertake others which would not have been inferior to thoſe, if he had lived long enough to put the laſt hand to them [G]. What was moſt commendable in his labours, was that he zealouſly endeavoured to make his ſkill in the Languages ſerviceable to the propagation of the faith among the Infidels [H], and the conſolation of the Chriſtians who groan under the tyranny

(g) The Letters Patents which the Prince of Orange Frederic Henry granted him, are dated the 30th of Nov. 1625.

(b) He was a Monk. See the Article HEMELAR.

(i) Quadriennio circumacto cum inæſtimabili quo bibliotheca publica ſuperbit, rariſſimorum librorum theſauro quem mente ac pectore condiderat, huc regreſſus intermiſſa docendi munia repetiit. Gronov. Orat. fun. J. Golii, pag. 19. The Catalogue of the Manuſcripts which he brought with him has been printed more than once.

[D] He met with ſome Turks, who permitted him to ſearch ſome fine Libraries.] The Turks are not ſo deſtitute of books as is imagined. See what Mr. Spon relates (7), and add to it this paſſage of Gronovius. Simul cum Legato (8) in Aſiam tranſiit (Golius) Præfecto oræ Propontidos amæniſſimos hortos cum ampliſſima Bibliotheca eis cedente: in quo ſeceſſu in Hiſtoricorum & Geographorum Arabum ſcripta aut ignorata adhuc, aut inevoluta ſe ingurgitavit. Ut rediit, & memoriam lectorum per occaſiones in ſermonibus apud Megiſtanas oſtendit, ita obſtupefecit audientes, ut purpuratorum principi dignatione proximus cum eo egerit, Imperatoris diplomate ornatus ac tutus omne Imperium obiret ac ſitus locorum rectius quam vulgo fit in tabulis depingeret: ille gratiam fecit prætexto Sacramento quod Ordinibus dixiſſet, ſed & periculi magnitudinem cogitans (9). i. e. "He went into Aſia with the Embaſſador, the Governor of the Coaſt of the Propontis "allowing him the uſe of his pleaſant Gardens and "copious Library. In this retirement he applied "himſelf wholly to the reading of the Arabian Hiſtorians and Geographers, whoſe writings were till "then unknown or never peruſed by him. Upon "his return, diſcovering occaſionally in converſation "with the great men there a prodigious memory of what "he had read, he ſtruck thoſe, who heard him diſcourſe, with ſuch admiration, that one of the principal Officers of the Empire treated with him, that "he might go with the Grand Seignior's Commiſſion, "and view the whole Empire, and deſcribe the ſituation of the places with more exactneſs than in the "preſent maps. He excuſed himſelf from this employment on pretence of the oath which he had "taken to the States, but in reality on account of "the danger." This paſſage deſerves to be mentioned, ſince it informs the reader of the great regard ſhewn to Golius at Conſtantinople, and the offers made him of an authentic commiſſion to be Geographer of the Grand Seignior. Golius's ſkill in Phyſic, and his furniſhing medicines gratis, procured him a great many preſents and friends. He was offered very conſiderable advantages to engage him to continue in the Eaſt. Philarchi & reguli Arabum admiſerunt eum familiariter, & ob Medicinæ experimenta ſuſpexerunt, quodque mercedes recuſaret donis plurimis & pretioſis affecerunt: majoribus, ut ſecum maneret, ſollicitarunt (10). Theſe are circumſtances very honourable to a Chriſtian.

(7) In the firſt volume of his Travels, pag. 193. of the Dutch edition. See likewiſe Mr. Wheeler's Travels, pag. 162.

(8) He means Cornelius Haga, Embaſſador from Holland at Conſtantinople.

(9) Gronov. in Oratione funebri, pag. 18.

(10) Idem, ibid. pag. 17.

[E] He ſoon ſaw himſelf called to read Lectures of another nature.] I have exactly followed Gronovius's account in order to give my Readers a convincing inſtance, how carefully things are to be obſerved, if we would take in every thing neceſſary to clear up a fact. This is related in the funeral Oration in ſuch a manner, that every body would conclude, that Snellius died after the return of Golius, and that the latter was not made Profeſſor of Mathematics till he had diſcharged for ſome time the functions of his other place, after his return to Leyden. Thoſe who ſhould imagine this would be miſtaken. Snellius died in 1626, and Golius returned from the Eaſt in 1629, and was appointed Snellius's ſucceſſor during his voyage. He was informed at Conſtantinople, that he had been choſen Profeſſor in the room of Snellius.

[F] He found leiſure to compoſe ſome excellent Works, which have been publiſh'd.] He publiſhed the Hiſtory of the Saracens written by Elmacin. This Edition is partly due to Erpenius, who began the Verſion of this Hiſtory. Golius compleated what was wanting. He publiſh'd the Life of Tamerlan written in Arabic by a Writer of great reputation. He publiſhed likewiſe Alferganus's Elements of Aſtronomy, with a new Verſion and learned Commentaries. His Lexicon Arabicum is a very accurate Work (11). He enlarged Erpenius's Arabic Grammar with Notes and Additions, and added ſeveral pieces of poetry extracted from the Arabian Writers, and eſpecially Tograi and Ababolla. Tho' he did not begin ſeriouſly to ſtudy the Perſian Language till he was fifty four years of age, he made himſelf ſo perfect a maſter of it, that he wrote a very large Dictionary of it printed at London (12). He could have done as much for the Turkiſh Language. He had ſo great a natural talent for the ſtudy of Languages, that tho' he began late to learn the Chineſe, he made ſuch a progreſs as to be able to read their Books, and underſtand them. It is no ſlight matter to know only the characters, which the Chineſe make uſe of in writing. They have to the number of eight thouſand (13). The Atlas of China, to which he made ſome Additions, ſhews the progreſs, which he had made in that Language.

(11) Non parvæ molis, ſed immenſæ atque infinitæ curæ & induſtriæ. Gronovii, Orat. fun. J. Golii, pag. 20.

(12) It is inſerted in Caſtellus's Lexicon Heptaglotton.

[G] ... and to undertake others, which would not have been inferior to thoſe, if he had lived long enough to put the laſt hand to them.] He propoſed to publiſh a ſecond Edition of the Life of Tamerlane; and to print the Text with Vowels; and to add a Tranſlation and a Commentary full of Explications with regard to the Eaſtern Hiſtory. This work was almoſt ready to be given to the Printer. He had begun a Geographical and Hiſtorical Dictionary for the Eaſtern Countries, in quo omnia locorum & hominum per Orientem nomina explicarentur. He had long given expectations of a new Edition of the Koran, with a Tranſlation and Confutation of it. He intended to give a Catalogue of all the Perſian Books in Europe, and a Treatiſe of the Dialects of the Perſian Language. He had principally examined that Dialect, which is thought to be the beſt, and obtained that character by one of the moſt authentic Decrees, which can be demanded in ſuch kind of privileges. See the margin (14): you will find there a curious fact: neither the Greeks, Romans, nor any other Nation ever did for their Languages what the Kings of Perſia have done. The Academy della Cruſca and others of that nature, and that founded by Cardinal Richelieu, are nothing compared to that Aſſembly of Sages called together by the Kings of Perſia for the admiſſion or excluſion of words.

(13) Quod rariſſimum, annis jam vergentibus Sinenſi etiam linguæ difficillimæ, & niſi quis inter ipſos ætatem exigat, ingenio humano inexſuperabili attenderat, & ad octo millibus ſignorum quibus pro vocibus utuntur ſatis aſſuerat, ut libros illorum non ægre legere atque intelligere poſſet. Gronovii, Orat. fun. J. Golij, pag. 20.

[H] He zealouſly endeavoured to make his ſkill in the Languages ſerviceable to the propagation of the Faith among the Infidels.] We may reckon as a mark of his zeal the particular care, which he took of publiſhing the New Teſtament in the learned and vulgar Greek. The States of Holland would be at this expence out of regard to the Greeks. Nemo tanto ſtudio, labore, gratia ob conſula-

(14) Et libellus de variis linguæ Perſicæ dialectis, præſertim de omnium puriſſima, quam juſſu magnorum regum omnibus ex partibus regni concilio coacto ſapientes moroſo verborum delectu probarunt, & aula recepit. Ibid. pag. 21.

(k) Gronovius names ſeveral, and among others Mr. Des Cartes. See in the Life of that Philoſopher by Mr. Baillet, the friendſhip Golius had for him.

tyranny of the Mahometans. He correſponded by Letters with the moſt learned men of Europe (k), and was highly eſteemed by his Sovereigns (l). His conſtitution was ſo robuſt [I], that he almoſt always enjoyed a very good ſtate of health. He died the 28th of September 1667, after having paſſed through all the Academical Honours, and made himſelf as much reſpected for his virtue and piety, as for his learning. He made a very ſound judgment of things; for he deplored the method which is followed in the Religious Diſputes [K]. He left two ſons, of whom I ſhall ſpeak in the Remarks [L].

(l) Extracted from his Funeral Oration, pronounced by John Frederic Gronovius. The dates were wanting throughout, and I have been obliged to ſupply them in the margin.

tus & præturas & imperia contendit, omnemque lapidem movit, quam ille ut Novi Fœderis ſacratiſſimæ tabulæ, ſimul uti ſcriptæ ſunt, ſimul ut in ῥωμαικὸν (ut appellant) ſeu Græcam linguam vulgarem traductæ, formis vulgarentur: atque id magnificum atque divinum munus Potentiſſimorum Liberi Belgii Ordinum beneficio, gemens ſub barbariæ intolerabili jugo gens libertatis & elegantiæ inventrix acciperet (15). i. e. "No body ſollicited ſo "ſtrongly for great offices of State, and uſed ſo much "induſtry in the proſecution of their views, as he did "to procure an Edition of the New Teſtament in the "original Language and the vulgar Greek, which is "called Ῥωμαικὸς; which noble preſent was conferred "on that Nation, once the mother of liberty and po"liteneſs, now groaning under the intolerable yoke of "Barbarians, by the munificence of the high and "mighty States of the united Provinces." He took care to ſpread among the Chriſtians of the Eaſt an Arabic Tranſlation of the Confeſſion of the Reformed, and their Catechiſm and Liturgy; for there are ſome Chriſtians in thoſe Countries, who uſe the Arabic Tongue in divine ſervice. He employed in this Tranſlation an Armenian, who underſtood the vulgar Arabic and the Phraſes conſecrated to Religion, and could accommodate Golius's ſtyle to the capacity of every body; for if Golius had laboured at this work alone, it would have been to be feared that his expreſſions would have been too ſublime and abſtruſe. He kept this Armenian two years and an half at his houſe, and promis'd him the ſame penſion that the States had granted to the Archimandrite, who tranſlated the New Teſtament into vulgar Greek. However he did not know whether the States would be at this expence. He did not propoſe the affair to them till the work was finiſhed, and they did not refuſe his propoſal. They likewiſe made an handſome preſent to him in particular (16). I ſhall not refer to any other place what I have to ſay concerning another preſent. He was their Interpreter in ordinary for the Arabic, Turkiſh, Perſian &c. Languages; and for this he had an annual penſion. I believe that the buſineſs of this place did not at all interrupt his other employments; but as often as they had occaſion for him in affairs of this nature, he received a thouſand civilities, and had a preſent of a chain of gold with a very beautiful medal (17).

(15) Ibid.

(16) Gronov. in Orat. fun. Golii, pag. 22, 23.

(17) Idem, ibid.

[I] His conſtitution was . . . robuſt.] He preſerved it by a conſtant temperance and avoiding of pleaſures (18). At the age of ſeventy years he travelled on foot all the way from the Meuſe to the Wahal, which is a journey of fourteen hours (19).

(18) Idem, ibid. pag. 28.

(19) Septuaginta natus annos continenti quatuordecim horarum Vahalim inter & Moſam ambulatione iter pedes confecit. Ibid.

[K] He deplored the method, which is followed in religious diſputes.] The Author of the funeral Oration upon him expreſſes himſelf thus: Religionem, perinde ut rempublicam, factionibus geri dolebat. Speciem quandam externam ſibi circumdediſſe multis ſufficere, quam vita & actiones confutarent. Inter diſſentientes, de mediis quoque rebus atque indifferentibus, nullam turpem rationem vincendi: calumnias, artes malas, pias fraudes vigere. Nuſquam moderata conſilia, zelum, qui furor ſit, vocari. Partim Scripturam S. tractare, potius ut ingenium inde quam ſalutis curam nutriant. Theologicen præferre, ut nomen ſcientiæ atque auctoritatis. Ergo miſſa in diſcrimen veritate, quamvis ſatis & excellenter doctos eſſe conſtet, tam ſecure de illa tranſigere. Hos in Theologia Philoſophari, ad diſputandum modo, atque ut magni & conſpecti ſint, Theologos (20). i. e. "He re"gretted, that Religion was managed, like the State, "by factions. That many perſons were ſatisfied with "aſſuming a ſpecious outward appearance, which they "contradicted by their life and actions. That thoſe who "differed upon things of an indifferent nature, thought "no method of gaining their point to be diſhonoura"ble; and that calumnies, ill arts, and pious frauds "were greatly employed. That moderation was no "where obſerved; but that mere fury was ſtiled zeal. "That the holy Scriptures were handled by ſome in "ſuch a manner as to ſhew their parts rather than their "regard for the ſalvation of men's ſouls. That they "pretend Divinity, as a title of Science and Authority. "And that they therefore expoſing the truth to danger, "tho' they were men of admirable learning, yet acted "without any regard to the intereſts of it: and that theſe "Divines introduce Philoſophy into Divinity merely "for the ſake of diſputing, and to make themſelves "eminent and important." This is one of the five or ſix Reflections, which Gronovius ſelected out of ſeveral others, which he heard Golius make in his laſt ſickneſs (21). All perſons of good ſenſe will allow that this choice is judicious; for there is ſcarce any thing, which deſerves to be lamented, if the abuſes in queſtion do not ſo; and yet we ſee the world ſo hardened and ſo little affected by this diſorder, that one may conclude, that none but perſons of excellent judgment think upon this point like our Profeſſor. The Church divided into factions and cabals exactly like the State; into factions, I ſay, which riſe and fall as in the State, not in proportion as the cauſes are good or not, but as people can more or leſs employ all kinds of artifices (22); ſuch a Church is without doubt an object of compaſſion, a ſubject of regret. Another reflection pitch'd upon by Gronovius is, in my opinion, very ſenſible. Golius, who lived ſo long, and had ſeen and travelled ſo much, had found nothing more rare to meet with than a Chriſtian worthy of that title. Mankind appeared to him plunged in vice, and every where maſked (23). Travellers remark an infinite diverſity among men; from day to day they remove into a new country; they ſee a new language, a new dreſs, new manners; but notwithſtanding theſe infinite variations all people reſemble one another, and reunite in this point, that there are but few honeſt men, and that forbidden pleaſures are their uſual employment.

(20) Gronovius, ibid. pag. 30.

(21) Ibid. pag. 28.

(22) Nullam turpem rationem vincendi: calumnias, artes malas, pias fraudes vigere. Gronov. Orat. fun. J. Golii, pag. 30.

(23) Vana eſſe omnia, & fucata, totumque orbem inundatum & immerſum vitio. Ibid. pag. 29.

[L] He left two ſons, of whom I ſhall ſpeak in the Remarks.] They both ſtudied the Civil Law at Leyden, and were admitted Advocates. The elder's name was THEODORE; he was choſen one of the Council of Leyden in 1669. He was three times Burgomaſter of that city, and enjoyed the office of chief Bailiff there. It is the principal poſt in the Cities of Holland. He was alſo Deputy in the College of Admiralty at Amſterdam. He died in 1679 in the poſt of Burgomaſter. His brother MATTHEW GOLIUS, a man of great probity and ability, Dean of the Court of Holland, died at the Hague in September 1702. Their mother was of a very good family, and well allied (24): ſhe lived four and twenty years with her huſband in the utmoſt harmony (25).

(24) Gronovius, Orat. fun. J. Golii, pag. 24, & ſeq.

(25) Idem, ibid.

GOLIUS (THEOPHILUS) Profeſſor of Ethics at Straſbourg, where he was born in 1528 (a), died in 1600 (b). He wrote in Latin a ſhort ſcheme of morality extracted from the ten books of Ariſtotle ad Nichomachum, and a ſhort ſcheme of Politics taken from the ſame Author. He dedicated the former of theſe two works to Baron de Tanberg September the 1ſt 1592. The edition which I have of both is of Straſbourg typis Joſiæ Rihelii hæredum 1621 in 8vo. I have not ſeen his Greek Grammar. Konig mentions it (c).

(a) Konig. Bibliotb. pag. 352.

(b) Idem, ibid.

(c) Idem, ibid.

GOMARUS

GOMARUS (FRANCIS) Profeſſor of Divinity, was born at Bruges January the 30th 1563. His father and mother who had embraced the Reformed Religion, retired into the Palatinate in 1578, in order to profeſs it without diſturbance, and ſent him to Straſbourg to ſtudy under the celebrated John Sturmius. He was under the diſcipline of this worthy old man about three years, after which he went to proſecute his ſtudies at Neuſtad, whither the Profeſſors of Heidelberg were retired (a). He went over to England about the end of the year 1582, and heard at Oxford the Divinity Lectures of Dr. John Rainolds, and at Cambridge thoſe of Dr. William Whitaker. He took there the degree of Bachelor of Divinity in June 1584. He ſpent the two following years at Heidelberg (b), where the Univerſity had been reſtored. The Flemiſh Church at Francfort deſired him for their Miniſter in 1587, and he performed the functions of his office from that time till the year 1593 when the Church was diſperſed by the perſecution. He was ſent for to Leyden to be Profeſſor of Divinity in 1594. He accepted this poſt, but before he took poſſeſſion of it he went to Heidelberg, where he had the degree of Doctor conferred on him. He diſcharged his place of Profeſſor very peaceably till 1603, when he had for his collegue James Arminius, a man, who ſoon began to ſpread his Pelagian doctrines [A], and to make himſelf the head of a party in the Univerſity. Gomarus appeared againſt him with great zeal, not only in the ſchools of Leyden, but likewiſe in the preſence of the States of the Province. They diſputed twice one againſt the other in the Aſſembly of the States of Holland in 1608, and five againſt five the year following. The ſucceſs of the diſputes was not ſuch as the Churches deſired (c); however it ſerved ſome purpoſe, for it diſcovered the Pelagianiſm of Arminius. This Profeſſor, who was then ſick, made uſe of that excuſe to diſcontinue the Conferences, and died ſome time after. His adverſaries employed all their induſtry to prevent Vorſtius from ſucceeding him; but not being able to ſucceed, it happened that Gomarus, to avoid having ſuch a collegue, left his country, and retired to Middlebourg in 1611. He was Miniſter there, and read public Lectures. This continued till the year 1614, when he was invited by the Univerſity of Saumur to be Profeſſor of Divinity. He diſcharged that poſt for four years; after which he retired to Groningen, to be principal Profeſſor of Divinity and the Hebrew Language. He found here a ſettlement which he conſtantly maintained till his death, which happened January the 11th 1641. If he was abſent twice, it was not for his diverſion, it was only to be one of the Judges of Arminius's cauſe in the Synod of Dort (d), and to reviſe the Tranſlation of the Old Teſtament (e). He was three times married, and had no children but by his ſecond wife [B]. He was a man of great abilities, and eſpecially in the Oriental Languages. His works were printed at Amſterdam in 1645 (f) [C]. If it be true that he gave Barnevelt the anſwer mentioned by Grotius, he cannot be acquitted of a great deal of outrageous zeal [D]. It is eaſy to convince thoſe who are judges of things. Meurſius has miſled

(a) The Elector Palatine had baniſhed them, becauſe they were not Lutherans.

(b) The Elector Lewis, a perſecutor of thoſe of the Reformed Religion, dying in 1583, Prince Caſimir his brother had the adminiſtration of the Electorate, and reſtored the Reformed.

(c) See Remark [A], quotation (1).

(d) In 1618.

(e) At Leyden in 1633.

(f) Taken from his Life in the Collection of the Lives of the Proteſtants of Groningen.

(1) Dogmata Pelagiana clam, palam, voce, ſcripto ſpargere cœpit, ac familiam in Academia ducere. Vita Gomari, inter Profeſſ. Groningenſ. Vitas, pag. 76.

(2) The 19th of the ſecond part.

(3) Succeſſu quidem non eo quem Eccleſiæ optabant, ut profligatis erroribus ac ſchiſmate orthodoxa veritas & concordia in arce collocaretur: non tamen nullo, cum detracta larva Adverſarii Pelagianiſmus palam evictus fuerit. Vita Gomari, pag. 77.

(4) He had married his firſt wife in the ſame city; and he married his third at Middlebourg; ſo that it ſhould not have been ſaid in the firſt tome of the Anti, p g. 128. that he married at Leyden before he went to Middlebourg.

[A] Arminius ſoon began to ſpread his Pelagian Doctrines.] I advance this as a Tranſlator of the Writer of the life of Gomarus (1): but I do not pretend to affirm that he is in the right; for I know that Arminius did not own that his opinions were like thoſe of Pelagius, or even of the Semi-Pelagians. See Grotius's Treatiſe intitled, Diſquiſitio an Pelagiana ſint ea dogmata quæ nunc ſub eo nomine traducuntur? It is in the third volume of his Theological Works. See likewiſe one of his Letters (2). When you read therefore in the Life of Gomarus, that this advantage at leaſt was gained by conferences with the Arminians, that they were plainly convicted of teaching the doctrines of Pelagius (3), do not think, that they were obliged to own this, and that the Judges of the Conference pronounced that they were ſufficiently convicted of it. The expreſſions of that Author ought not to be underſtood in any other ſenſe, than that Gomarus pretended to have produced good proofs of his accuſation againſt Arminius.

[B] He had no children but by his ſecond wife.] Her name was Mary Leremite, and was a Gentlewoman both by her father's and mother's ſide. He married her at Francfort (4). He had one ſon and two daughters. The ſon died before his father, and left children. The younger daughter married David de la Haie, Miniſter of a Walloon Church. This remark and ſeveral others of the ſame kind, which may be found through this Dictionary, are made out of regard to many good people, who are very curious to have an account of the families of Miniſters and learned men. If there are ſome readers, who have no curioſity of this kind, as undoubtedly there are too many, they are deſired to remember, that an Author is not obliged to ſay nothing but what is to their taſte. In a work like this the Author ought to write ſometimes for one ſett of readers, and ſometimes for another. Let this be ſaid once for all.

[C] His Works were printed at Amſterdam in fol. in 1645.] This ſignifies, that many of his Tracts publiſhed at different times were collected into one body. His Anti-Colerus was printed in 1599 and 1600. His Lyra Davidis was publiſhed long before his death. Lewis Capellus wrote againſt this Work. Non ita pridem Vir Clariſſ. & doctiſſ. it is Rivetus who ſays this (5), Franciſcus Gomarus edidit Lyram Davidis, in qua putavit ſe ad metra Horatiana & ſimilia Davidis Pſalmorum verſus ita exegiſſe, ut veram poeſeos Hebraicæ rationem invenerit. Sed Ludovicus Capellus animadverſionum libello totum illud D. Gomari opus obelo transfigere conatus eſt, ut inde lector diſcat vix inter doctos de eo poſſe convenire, neque labore parum utili ſe ultra fatiget. i. e. "Not long ago the very famous and "learned Francis Gomarus publiſhed Lyra Davidis, "in which he thought that he had ſo far reduced the "verſes of David's Pſalms to Horace's Metre and "others of that kind, that he had diſcovered the true "nature of the Hebrew Poetry. But Lewis Capellus "in his Book of Animadverſions has endeavoured to "confute that whole Work of Gomarus, ſo that the "Reader will perceive from thence, that learned men "can ſcarce agree upon the point, and will not trouble himſelf any further with a taſk of little uſe."

(5) Prolegom. in Pſalmos.

[D] If it be true, that he gave Barnevelt the Anſwer mentioned by Grotius, he cannot be acquitted of a great deal of outrageous zeal.] Barnevelt made a ſhort ſpeech to the two antagoniſts before the States of Holland, in which he declared, that he gave thanks to God, that the controverſies did not relate to the fundamental doctrines of the Chriſtian Religion. Upon this Gomarus, having obtained leave to ſpeak, proteſted that he would not appear before the throne of God with the errors of Arminius. This particular is to be found in Grotius's Letters (6). We meet with it likewiſe in the Preface to the Acts of the Synod of Dort. I doubt

(6) Cum D. Oldenbarneveldius, brevi, quam ad Profeſſores habebat, oratione inter alia gratias ſe habere Deo diceret, quod de Chriſtianæ Religionis capitibus nulla eſſet diſputatio; reſpondit Gomarus, poſtulata dicendi venia, ejuſmodi eſſe Collegæ ſui opiniones in articulis inter ipſos controverſis, ut ipſe, ita ſentiens, nolit coram Deo Judice conſiſtere. Grotius, Epiſt. 11. Part 1. pag. 3.

that

Moreri with regard to ſome facts [E] ; but the errors which Moreri has committed of himſelf, are miſerable ones [F]. Almoſt all of them have been marked in the Dutch edition that there are ſtill partizans of Gomarus paſſionate enough, to maintain, that he was in the right in ſaying this. The heat of diſputes and the malignant influence of a profeſſorial emulation, made him carry things to exceſs, and diſturbed his judgment; for at preſent the moſt rigid Calviniſts do not ſcruple to own, that the five articles of the Remonſtrants are not fundamental hereſies ; and they give us to underſtand, that the ſchiſm would be eaſily removed, if the Sect of Arminius had not fallen into new errors a thouſand times more pernicious than thoſe, which divided Gomarus and Arminius. So that thoſe, who have not an head heated by the perſonal conteſts, which inflamed Gomarus, would not be of his opinion, that a perſon, who believes the five Articles of the Arminians, will be eternally damned. We ought therefore to impute to a perſonal animoſity the cruel opinion of this adverſary of Arminius.

